JUDICIAL COMPENDIUM

Hon'ble Mr. Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah,
Judge Supreme Court of Pakistan

JUSTICE (R) SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH

The Trendsetter

This compendium of judgments of Justice (R) Syed Mansoor Ali Shah brings together the work of a judge who has reshaped important parts of Pakistan's constitutional, public law, and institutional landscape. Elevated to the Lahore High Court in 2009, serving as its Chief Justice, and later as a Judge of the Supreme Court of Pakistan from 2018 till his retirement in 2025, his judicial career reflected a combination of doctrinal clarity, reformist energy, and a sustained concern for how the law impacts the daily lives of citizens.

Justice Shah's profile reflects a vast breadth of training and experience. Educated at Aitchison College, Lahore, he obtained law degrees from the University of Cambridge and the University of the Punjab, alongside a Master's in Economics. Before joining the bench, he practiced as a partner at Afridi, Shah & Minallah, developing a corporate and commercial practice while pursuing public interest litigation, particularly in environmental protection and sustainable development. He has been a teacher of law for nearly two decades at institutions including LUMS, Pakistan College of Law and Punjab Law College, and served on the steering committee that established the LUMS law school (now SAHSOL). He is also an accredited mediator from CEDR, London, an Honorary Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, a judicial member of the Global Judicial Institute on Environment (Brazil), a member of the Global Constitutionalism network at Yale University, and a member of the Rhodes Scholarship Committee for Pakistan - connections that situate his work within a wider global conversation on constitutionalism, rights, and environmental adjudication.

These biographical strands are mirrored in his jurisprudence. Justice Shah has consistently foregrounded constitutionalism, judicial independence, and the rule of law, with a particular emphasis on social justice and the protection of fundamental rights. His areas of special interest have included constitutional law, human rights, climate and water justice, environmental sustainability, disability rights, criminology, digital surveillance, privacy, and proportionality. Across these domains, he has treated the Constitution as a living document, attentive both to Islamic principles and to contemporary international and comparative standards and has used proportionality and structured rights analysis to test state action. His opinions display a recurring concern for those at the margins - persons with disabilities, vulnerable workers, victims of environmental harm, and communities affected by climate and water insecurity - insisting that equality, dignity, and access to justice are not abstract ideals but operative constitutional commands.

Equally distinctive is the way his jurisprudence is bound up with a broader project of institutional renewal. As Chief Justice of the Lahore High Court, he spearheaded the establishment of Alternate Dispute Resolution Centres in Punjab, created Criminal and Civil Model Courts, and introduced structured case management and court automation systems to tackle chronic backlog and pendency. He has repeatedly underscored the role of information technology, artificial intelligence, video-linking, and human resource development as engines of judicial governance, with a particular focus on empowering the district judiciary through training, performance-based evaluation, and safer, more enabling work environments, especially for women judges. His work in restructuring the Punjab Judicial Academy's curriculum, founding the Lahore High Court Research Centre, setting up e-courts at the Supreme Court, promoting the Supreme Court's judicial mobile application, and establishing the Supreme Court Research Centre reflects a jurisprudential vision in which rights, procedure, and institutional design are all mutually reinforcing.

This collection situates that jurisprudence within its broader arc: a body of work that is at once doctrinally rigorous and consciously transformative. The volume traces Justice Shah's contributions across constitutional structure and governance; fundamental rights and social welfare; environmental, climate, and water justice; disability and equality law; criminal justice and due process; and the law of technology, surveillance, and privacy. Within each theme, the selected cases illuminate a recurring methodology – a holistic and purposeful reading of the Constitution, principled use of precedent, openness to comparative and international materials, and remedies crafted not only to vindicate rights but to improve institutions, procedure, and judicial accountability.

The purpose of this compendium is not hagiography. It is to provide the bench, the bar, students, and researchers with a structured way of engaging with a consequential judicial record that has already begun to influence how constitutional adjudication is imagined in Pakistan. By placing these judgments side by side, we hope to make visible the internal coherence of Justice Mansoor Ali Shah's approach: that courts must be guardians of rights and stewards of institutional reform; that access to justice, transparency, and efficiency are themselves constitutional values; and that Pakistani constitutionalism can participate in, and contribute to, global legal debates while remaining rooted in local history and social realities. In doing so, this volume aims to encourage sustained and critical engagement - agreement and disagreement alike - with his jurisprudence, and thereby to enrich the ongoing project of building a more just, accessible, and rights-respecting legal order.

JUDGMENT

ASIF SAEED KHAN KHOSA, J.---Mst. Nazia Anwar appellant had allegedly caused multiple injuries to her friend namely Mst. Fahmeeda Bibi with the use of a dagger inside the house of the deceased as well as of her mother namely Mst. Sadiqa Bibi complainant in Line No. 2, Quaid-e-Azam Colony near Dhamial Camp, Rawalpindi in the area of Police Station Saddar Bairooni, District Rawalpindi at about 10.00 a.m. on 12.10.2010 in the backdrop of a motive according to which the appellant had borrowed a sum of Rs. 5,000/- from the deceased and a heated exchange had taken place between them over demand of repayment of that loan. With the said allegations the appellant was booked in case FIR No. 640 registered at the above mentioned Police Station at about mid-day on the same day and after a regular trial the appellant was convicted by the trial court for an offence under section 302(b), P.P.C. and was sentenced to death and to pay compensation which conviction and sentence of the appellant were subsequently upheld and confirmed by the High Court. Hence, the present appeal by leave of this Court granted on 21.04.2016.

2. Leave to appeal had been granted in this case in order to reappraise the evidence and with the assistance of the learned counsel for the parties we have undertaken that exercise.

3. The occurrence in this case had taken place in broad daylight and inside the house of Mst. Sadiqa Bibi complainant. An FIR in respect of the alleged occurrence had been lodged with reasonable promptitude wherein the present appellant was named as the sole perpetrator of the alleged murder. Mst. Sadiqa Bibi complainant (PW2) was a natural witness of the occurrence being an inmate of the house wherein the occurrence had taken place and the time of occurrence was such that the complainant was likely to be present in her house at that time. The complainant had absolutely no reason to falsely implicate the appellant in the murder of the complainant's daughter who was also a friend of the appellant. The record of the case shows, and it is so recorded in the FIR itself, that the appellant had been apprehended at the spot inside the relevant house and was later on handed over to the local police. A blood-stained dagger had also been recovered from the place of occurrence. The medical evidence had provided full support to the ocular account furnished by Mst. Sadiqa Bibi, complainant (PW2). Both the courts below had undertaken an exhaustive analysis of the evidence available on the record and had then concurred in their conclusion regarding guilt of the appellant having been established to the hilt and upon my independent evaluation of the evidence I have not been able to take a view of the matter different from that concurrently taken by the courts below. There can conceivably be many theories as to why the appellant was found inside the house of the complainant with a baby-boy aged about four months but all such theories lie within the realm of conjectures which have no place in the criminal law. There is also little room available for drawing an inference in that regard as some foundational facts necessary for drawing an inference are missing in that respect.

4. I have particularly attended to the sentence of death passed against the appellant and have noticed in that context that the motive set up by the prosecution had remained far from being established. According to the FIR as well as the statement of the complainant the motive was based upon borrowing of a sum of Rs. 5,000/- by the appellant from the deceased and on the issue of repayment of that loan a heated exchange had taken place between the appellant and the deceased. Mst. Sadiqa Bibi complainant (PW2) was the only witness produced by the prosecution regarding the alleged motive but in her deposition made before the trial court the complainant had admitted that the appellant and the deceased were on very good and friendly terms, no date or time of borrowing of the relevant amount by the appellant from the deceased had been specified by the complainant, the complainant was not present when the money had been borrowed by the appellant from the deceased, no date, time or place of the altercation taking place between the appellant and the deceased over repayment of the borrowed amount had been specified by the complainant and admittedly the complainant was not present when the said altercation had taken place. In these circumstances it is quite obvious to me that the motive asserted by the prosecution had remained utterly unproved. The law is settled by now that if the prosecution asserts a motive but fails to prove the same then such failure on the part of the prosecution may react against a sentence of death passed against a convict on the charge of murder and a reference in this respect may be made to the cases of Ahmad Nawaz v. The State (2011 SCMR 593), Iftikhar Mehmood and another v. Qaiser Iftikhar and others (2011 SCMR 1165), Muhammad Mumtaz v. The State and another (2012 SCMR 267), Muhammad Imran alias Asif v. The State (2013 SCMR 782), Sabir Hussain alias Sabri v. The State (2013 SCMR 1554), Zeeshan Afzal alias Shani and another v. The State and another (2013 SCMR 1602), Naveed alias Needu and others v. The State and others (2014 SCMR 1464), Muhammad Nadeem Waqas and another v. The State (2014 SCMR 1658), Muhammad Asif v. Muhammad Akhtar and others (2016 SCMR 2035) and Qaddan and others v. The State (2017 SCMR 148). After going through the entire record of the case from cover to cover and after attending to different aspects of this case I have found that although it is proved beyond doubt that the appellant was responsible for the murder of the deceased yet the story of the prosecution has many inherent obscurities ingrained therein. It is intriguing as to why the appellant would bring her four months old baby-boy to the spot and put the baby-boy on the floor and then start belabouring the deceased with a dagger in order to kill her. I have, thus, entertained no manner of doubt that the real cause of occurrence was something different which had been completely suppressed by both the parties to the case and that real cause of occurrence had remained shrouded in mystery. Such circumstances of this case have put me to caution in the matter of the appellant's sentence and in the peculiar circumstances of the case I have decided to withhold the sentence of death passed against the appellant.

5. For what has been discussed above this appeal is dismissed to the extent of the appellant's conviction for the offence under section 302(b), P.P.C. but the same is partly allowed to the extent of her sentence of death which is reduced to imprisonment for life. The order passed by the trial court regarding payment of compensation by the appellant to the heirs of the deceased as well as the order regarding imprisonment in default of payment of compensation are, however, maintained. The benefit under section 382-B, Cr.P.C. shall be extended to the appellant.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

By a majority of two against one (Dost Muhammad Khan, J. dissenting) this appeal is dismissed to the extent of the appellant's conviction for the offence under section 302(b), P.P.C. but the same is partly allowed to the extent of her sentence of death which is reduced to imprisonment for life. The order passed by the trial court regarding payment of compensation by the appellant to the heirs of the deceased as well as the order regarding imprisonment in default of payment of compensation are, however, maintained. The benefit under section 382-B, Cr.P.C. shall be extended to the appellant. This appeal is disposed of in these terms.

Dissenting Note in Crl. Appeal No.206 of 2016

DOST MUHAMMAD KHAN, J.---After attending to the reasons given by my lord brother Judges, Mr. Justice Asif Saeed Khan Khosa (author Judge) and Mr. Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J., with utmost respect my view is entirely different and in favour of acquittal of the appellant. The reasons for my view are as follows:-

Reasons for Dissent:

1. The facts and evidence of the case is presenting extremely inextricable, highly complexed and much confounded theories about the tragedy.

2. Before us there are two mothers in the field and we have to judicially determine their respective roles during the tragedy and enacting the tragedy.

Before making reappraisal of evidence, I am constrained in citing below certain Quotes of Wisdom about mother-love for her child of any age:-

1. "To describe my mother would be to write about a hurricane in its perfect power. Or the climbing, falling colours of a rainbow."- Maya Angelou
2. "A mother turns lioness when her child is troubled."- Jennie Finch
3. "Mother bird protects until her chicks are grown and can fly free."- Unknown
4. A mother's arms the most secured and sound place for children."- Victor Hugo
5. "The strength of motherhood is greater than natural laws."- Barbara Kingsolver
6. "There is eternal influence and power in motherhood."-unknown
7. Mother's love is limitless, eternal, endless, untiring, unmatched and inexpungible." - unknown

The conduct of the complainant Mst. Sadiqa Bibi (PW-2) the mother of the deceased Mst. Fehmeeda Bibi and the convict appellant Mst. Nazia Anwar who is charged for the murder is also to be judged at the touchstone of Article 129 of the Qanun-e- Shahadat Order, 1984, which is reproduced below:

> "129. Court may presume existence of certain facts.-The Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case."

3. Brief and relevant facts are that on 12.10.2010 at about 10:00 a.m. the appellant entered the crime house in residential colony "Makhan", brought her four months' suckling baby, put it on the ground close to the complainant, entered the room where the deceased was inflicted upon seven injuries of different dimensions and also slit her throat. The motive for the crime was that the deceased had given Rs.5000/- to the appellant as loan and when it was demanded back, the appellant reacted violently.

4. The most vital point in the case attracting the court's attention is the fact of FIR, having been lodged at the crime spot after more than two hours, no reason much less plausible has been given by the prosecution at any stage. The FIR lodged at the crime spot, in a murder case, would create reasonable suspicion that the crime was un-witnessed one, therefore, preliminary investigation are carried out and witnesses are set up.

It is the prosecution case itself that immediately after the occurrence many men reached the crime house and the dead body could be conveniently taken within no time to the police station but instead, the complainant waited for the arrival of the police not taking a single step to shift the dead body. Who informed the police about the crime and crime place, is another begging question, having no answer from the prosecution.

True that in each and every case if FIR is lodged at the crime spot, the entire case of the prosecution cannot be thrown away but there must be some plausible reasons in that regard and when the very reason is absent, many suspicions and doubts would arise and inference against the prosecution has to be drawn in this regard.

5. Adverting back to the story set up by the prosecution, the complainant who was the mother of the deceased acted like silent rather amused character during the tragic incident as according to her claim her daughter was killed in her presence, seven incised wounds were inflicted also slitting of her throat. She did not react motherly to prevent the appellant from causing so much number of injuries in her presence or to make loud-cries for help from the nearby houses.

On the other hand, the appellant brought four months' suckling baby with her when she was having a clear intention to commit murder and the baby was placed within the reach of the complainant, putting to grave risk the life of the baby. One fails to understand the logic and compelling reason for conducting herself in a manner expected only of insane or mentally deranged person. Secondly it is established on record that the deceased and the appellant were intimate friends since long on visiting terms. The motive has been disbelieved by the majority judgments and once the motive disappears then, what was the sudden impulse given to the appellant, blowing her sentiments of anger so high, which could not retake its seat, not a shred of evidence is present on record in that regard. The question thus, arises that without any cause of a grave nature, how the virtuous lady turned a villain ruthlessly slaughtering and stabbing the deceased, her best friend. When the very cause and reason for the violent act is absent then, the entire story becomes susceptible to many interpretations. It is the sacred obligation of the court to uncover the truth and husk out the lies and if this process also fails then the benefit of doubt has to be extended to the appellant as of right entitling her to clean acquittal because century old golden rules of benefit of doubt in the administration of criminal justice never approve lesser sentence rather to acquit the accused. If such course is not adopted this golden principle being old as hills are, would be reduced to naught.

6. Another aspect of the case is, discarding the testimony of Muhammad Zahid (PW-3) alien to the family and an outsider. He has claimed to be the frequent visitor to the complainant house without being needed. This fact speaks very loudly about the objectionable activities going inside the family. The complainant, a middle age lady of about 50 years with sound health is a widow as her husband died earlier. Her source of income has not been brought on record. Wherefrom family was meeting the needs of their daily life, would further re-enforce the view and the necessary inference would be that all was not going well in the crime house.

7. The deceased herself was married but she frequently deserted her husband's house and was staying away in the crime house with the mother (complainant) for no reason much less convincing one. The very access of outsiders including PW Muhammad Zahid due to frequent visits there would definitely disturb every prudent mind, much less a judicial one about the objectionable activities, going on in the family.

It has come in the evidence that the other daughter of the complainant namely Mst. Hafeeza Bibi had gone nearby to a local doctor for check up and treatment accompanied by her own daughter. Being mother, the complainant was supposed to accompany Mst. Hafeeza Bibi to the doctor when she was having no domestic work at home therefore, the deceased alone was left behind at home to look after it. Judged from this angle there is a probability that the husband of the deceased or some close blood relative of him after getting knowledge of such objectionable activities of the family including the deceased got annoyed irretrievably and out of family honour acted so ruthlessly and mercilessly causing multiple stab wounds to the deceased also slitting her throat, which under no circumstances could be the job of a young lady, soft and fragile hand. The autopsy report would show that one thumb of the hand was completely cut including the hard bone of it. Such injury could only be caused with butcher chopper and not the dagger or kitchen knife, planted against the appellant in this case.

8. Another quite intriguing aspect of the case is that the role of the complainant (mother of the deceased) highlighted above is not in conformity with the natural reaction of a mother when her daughter was under a ruthless attack. The prosecution decided to make the court to believe that it was Muhammad Zahid (PW-3) and Muhammad Ameer (not produced), reached the crime house immediately after the occurrence and detained the appellant there with the crime knife and the baby.

9. My lord brothers themselves have kept out of consideration the presence of Muhammad Zahid (PW-3) and his testimony has been discarded being not present on the spot. There are strong reasons favouring that view as Muhammad Zahid was in a sensitive police wing (Special Branch) and on the fateful day he was on V.V.I.Ps duty. He could not convincingly explain as to how he left the place of duty entrusted to him with a highly sensitive job and once these two persons are kept aside then the detention of the appellant in the crime house with the crime knife and her suckling baby becomes absolutely unbelievable as the complainant did nothing but only wept for a moment. There was no earthly reason present that in the absence of any hurdle in her way why the appellant stayed for more than two hours in the crime house with blood stained knife, clothes and her suckling baby after committing such a heinous crime and fell into the hands of the police after its much delayed arrival there. The story so set up deserves to be rejected by the court with strong disapproval being false and tailored made.

10. The fallaciousness of the story does not end here because in the entire episode, during the course of investigation on the crime spot, there is no reference whatsoever as to what happened to the suckling baby of the appellant as no evidence has been brought on record. It is evident from the order sheet of the trial Court that on her first appearance, the appellant appeared with the same suckling baby in her lap duly observed and recorded in the order by the Trial Court but the prosecution had kept intriguing silence on this vital aspect of the case during the course of investigation on the fateful day. The inescapable inference thus would be that the appellant was made a scapegoat to screen out the real culprit because of the highly objectionable family affairs of the complainant party. It is noticeable fact that neither during the investigation nor during the trial proceedings the husband or any relative of the deceased, Mst. Fehmeeda, appeared on the scene or to prosecute the appellant in any manner. Distancing himself from the proceedings by the husband was a loud message to everyone and the necessary inference to be drawn is that either he himself was involved in the crime or his brother or father and why the deceased was killed in a very cruel manner as the murder had taken place inside the house of the complainant so she was required to blame someone else otherwise she herself would have been the suspect for the crime. Another strong reason is the dirty role of Muhammad Zahid (PW-3) who was not otherwise related within the prohibitory degree with the complainant or her daughters but used to visit and stay in the crime house frequently when he was neither feeding them nor it has come on record that his presence was required for genuine reason. His shady role diverting the course of investigation is palpable on record why the investigation commenced too late and the FIR was drawn at the crime spot and the story was manufactured with connivance of the police.

11. Here I am constrained to observe that the learned Judges of the High Court seized of the Murder Reference could not attend to these aspects and the incompleteness of the story besides being fallacious it did not perform its obligatory duty under the provision of section 375, Cr.P.C. and the matter was decided in vacuum and was left to suffer from suspicions/hypothesis. For confirmation of Murder Reference or otherwise it is the duty of the High Court to see as to whether the story set up is doubtful or not upto the mark or it was left incomplete and some crucial aspects of it need further inquiry, it shall have to record evidence to clear all doubts and suspicions and fill up the left out vacuum for doing substantial justice.

12. My lord brothers have equally held that the case of the Prosecution has led to multiple theories and possibilities. The cardinal principle in the criminal justice system in a situation like this, is to extend benefit of doubt to an accused to acquit him/her of capital charge, instead of reducing the sentence. Once doubts about the genuineness of the story lurk into the minds of the Judges, the only permissible course is to acquit the accused and not go for the alternative sentence of life imprisonment. In this regard reference may be made to the following case laws:-

(i) Ayub Masih v. The State (PLD 2002 SC 1048)

(ii) Muhammad Zaman v. The State and others (2014 SCMR 749)

(iii) Hashim Qasim v. The State (2017 SCMR 986)

It is also well entrenched rule and principle of law that on the basis of probabilities, accused person may be extended benefit of doubt acquitting him/her of a capital charge however, such probabilities, high howsoever, could not be made basis for conviction of an accused person and that too on a capital charge.

13. The prosecution is under legal obligation to prove the guilt of an accused person beyond any shadow of doubt through evidence, coming from unimpeachable source which is not only convincing, reliable but also sufficient to satisfy the judicial mind about the guilt of an accused person. With utmost respect, in para 4 of the judgment, my lord brother Judges have acted on high probabilities and also for the reason that the complainant being inmate of the house therefore, her presence could not be lightly brushed aside. If at the fateful time her other daughter and grand daughter were away from the same home and being mother of her ailing daughter in all probabilities she was supposed to have accompanied her to the doctor, also could not be ruled out, why the FIR was delayed and made at the crime spot and it appears that the appellant was either arrested from her own house or being a fast and close friend when there was nobody in the house, after getting the news of her tragic murder she might have rushed to the crime house with the suckling baby and was present there till the arrival of the police and with deliberate intention or otherwise the suspicion fell on her and was at random implicated. The Investigating officer too has acted dishonestly and deprived the court of law by his action in collecting false evidence to reach at a fair and proper conclusion, doing substantial justice in the case.

14. For what has discussed above, I am of the considered view that once the case of the prosecution has been found susceptible to many interpretations and different theories are coming on record sufficient to disturb judicial mind about the guilt of the appellant then, after spending seven years in prison with a suckling baby and also from 20.9.2011 to 22.2.2016 (05 years) in death cell is serious injustice caused to her and on the basis of benefit of doubt she is entitled to clean acquittal. Therefore, this appeal is allowed. The impugned judgment of the High Court maintaining the sentence of death of the appellant with compensation amount is set aside and the appellant is acquitted of the charge/charges leveled against her. She be set free forthwith along with her baby from the jail by the jailor concerned if not required to be detained in any other case.

MWA/N-4/SC Order accordingly.

Thereafter, naqsha jeem was prepared and objections filed by the appellant to the said naqsha jeem were rejected by the Tehsildar on 25.5.2000. Appeal against the same before the D.O (R) was dismissed on 28.5.2003, while revision filed before the EDO (R) was also dismissed on 26.7.2004. However, finally in ROR filed before the Member Board of Revenue, the matter was remanded to the DO(R) vide order dated 31.10.2006. The said remand order was challenged before the High Court and vide impugned order dated 3-7- 2013, the remand order of the MBR was set aside and that of the EDO (R) was upheld.

3. In the above factual matrix, we have noticed that the objections raised by the appellant against naqsha jeem were not attended to through a speaking order. The crux of the objections was that the land sold by the respondents was not excluded while preparing naqsha jeem.

4. Learned counsel on behalf of respondent No.2 submits that the preliminary decree itself clearly mentions that the area sold by the respondents be adjusted while preparing the naqsha jeem. He while referring to the orders of the Revenue Authorities below submits that entire revenue record has been perused before deciding the matter and the required exclusion of land has taken place.

5. We have gone through the record of the case and also examined the orders passed by the Revenue Authorities. The orders of the Tehsildar, the DO(R), as well as, the EDO(R) do not address the objections raised by the appellant regarding adjustment of the land sold by the respondents. It is for this reason that the Member, Board of Revenue remanded the case to the DO(R) to examine the record and pass a speaking order in this regard. We are not satisfied with the orders passed by the Revenue Authorities from Tehsildar to EDO(R) and are in agreement with the decision of the Member, Board of Revenue.

6. Order of remand is not a final order and simply sends the matter for re-examination for the second time. It does not finally determine the claim or the rights of the parties. The forum to which the case is sent for fresh decision is free to re-examine the case and pass a fresh judgment. Against any such subsequent decision or judgment, alternate remedy is available to the parties. Further, Board of Revenue is the highest court of appeal and revision in revenue cases and is a controlling authority in all matters connected with the administration of land, collection of land revenue, preparation of land record and other matters (See section 5 of the Board of Revenue Act, 1957). In this background the courts after having judicially examined the remand order passed by the Board of Revenue have expressed reluctance to interfere and for these reasons have maintained that order of remand would not be amenable to writ jurisdiction (see Ramzan v. Rehabilitation Commissioner (Legal) Sargodha (PLD 1963 Lahore 461), Kaniz Fatima v. Board of Revenue (PLD 1973 Lahore 495) and Ghulam Rasool v. Khudai Dad (PLD 1986 Quetta 130). This is not an absolute rule. An order of remand that is facially perverse or without jurisdiction or otherwise void can be interfered with, like any other order (see Ghulam Rasool (supra)). The constitutional power to judicially review an order of remand passed by the Board of Revenue is not in any manner curtailed or abridged by the precedents cited above. Infact, the principle that emerges from the wisdom of the precedents is that, for reasons narrated above, the constitutional court must approach and examine a remand order passed by the Board of Revenue with care and circumspection, so as to sparingly interfere with it, unless of course, the remand order is facially perverse, without jurisdiction or otherwise void. Amenability of writ jurisdiction against a remand order is in this context and subject to above conditions.

7. In the present facts and circumstances of the case, we agree with the order of remand passed by the Board of Revenue. We, therefore, set aside order dated 03.7.2013, passed by the High Court, and modify order dated 31.10.2006, passed by the Member, Board of Revenue to the extent that the case now stands remanded to the Tehsildar concerned to consider the objections filed by the appellant against naqsha jeem and decide the same through a speaking order, clearly attending to the objection regarding land to be excluded from the share of the respondent, if any.

8. This appeal is allowed and the case is remanded in the above terms.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question before us is whether a pathway or a galli, in an Abadi Deh is a common land for the use of the village community or whether, exclusive usage of the pathway or galli over the years by some residents of Abadi Deh grants them possessory and, as a result, proprietary rights over the said pathway?

2. This question arises out of a suit for declaration and perpetual injunction filed by the respondents against the appellants. The declaration and injunction sought is that the pathway or pukta galli (16 feet wide) (referred to by the respondents as Kocha Khaas) situated in Khasra No.5974, in Abadi Deh of Deh Teri, Tehsil Banda Daud Shah, District Karak, has been used exclusively by the respondents, as a pathway leading to their house, for over two decades, therefore, they are in exclusive possession of the said pathway and, therefore, also maintain proprietary interest in the said pathway. As a consequence, the appellant, cannot open a gate onto the said pathway from their house, a property that abuts the said pathway. Respondents seek a declaration and an injunction to this effect.

3. The trial court decreed the suit in favour of the respondents on 21-2-2014 which was overturned in appeal by the Additional District Judge on 28-6-2014 and was then set aside by the Peshawar High Court through the impugned judgment dated 10-6-2015 holding that the respondents enjoy exclusive possession of the pathway.

4. Learned counsel for the appellant argued that the said pathway is public passage for common usage of the residents of the Abadi Deh, therefore, the appellant is entitled to use the same by opening a gate of his house into the said passage. He submits that there is no evidence on the record to establish that the said land is owned or is in possession of the respondents. He referred to the cross-examination of PW-2 (special attorney of the respondent/plaintiff) wherein he affirmed that the said passage was improved and built up by the local TMA.

5. Learned counsel for the respondent on the other hand submitted that the title in an Abadi Deh follows the possession and for the last 20 years, respondents have been using the said pathway and therefore the said passage belongs to the respondents and the appellant cannot be allowed access to the said pathway by opening the second gate of his house onto the said pathway. He placed reliance on Zarin Gul v. Malik Jan (1995 SCMR 92), Raees Khan v. Samar Ali Shah (1997 CLC 349) and Muhammad Sadiq v. Amir Muhammad (2006 SCMR 702) in support of his contention.

6. We have examined the record. The pathway falls in Khasra No.5974 of Mauza Teri, Tehsil Banda Daud Shah, District Karak, which is described as an Abadi Deh or "inhabited site of a village" as per the Record of Rights i.e., Register Haqdaran-e-Zameen 2007-2008 of Mauza of Deh Teri (see Ex.PW-1/1). The said pathway according to the Khaka Tasweri (see Ex.PW-1/2) is connected to other pathways or gallis in the village and runs along the mosque and other houses (including the house of the appellant) and ends as a cul de sac at the house of the respondents.

7. The principle that title in an Abadi Deh follows possession is well recognized, however, does this principle extend to common pathways in a village or Abadi Deh? Common land or Shamilat in an Abadi Deh includes pathways, lanes, streets, playgrounds, etc used for communal use of the residents of the village. "The whole of the abadi of every village is by presumption shamilat. That is not a proposition for which we need quote any authority, for it is well established. That part of the abadi which is in the exclusive possession of any co-sharer in the shamilat has to remain in his possession but any part not in exclusive possession of any co-sharer is subject to use by all. If at any time, a piece of land in the abadi has been left for use as a land it cannot be appropriated by any particular co-sharer."1

8. In the absence of any proof of exclusive possession of the pathway by the respondents, mere usage of a common pathway by the respondents does not amount to possession. Pathways form part of the commons and are to be used by everyone in the village, unless of course, the residents (or respondents in this case) had through any means denied access of the pathway over the years to other residents of the village, thereby establishing exclusivity of possession. Khaka Tasweeri shows that the pathway is connected to other pathways in the village and is a communal pathway just like the other pathways in the village. Therefore, the argument that the respondents enjoy exclusive possession of the pathway is not supported by any tangible evidence. It is also on the record as per statement of PW-2 (special attorney of respondent) that the said pathway was built up by the TMA, which also underlines the public character of the pathway and affirms that it is part of the commons/shamilat. Case law relied upon by learned counsel for the respondents does not advance his cause.

9. Even otherwise, the opening of the second gate by the appellant into the pathway does not in any manner block or restrict the usage of the passage by the respondents. The passing reference to the right to privacy due to long usage is also incorrect as the said pathway merges into other thoroughfares in the village and maintains a communal and public character.

10. As a sequel of above discussion, we allow this appeal and set aside the judgment of the Peshawar High Court dated 10.06.2015 and uphold the judgment of the lower appellate court dated 28.06.2014.

11. Foregoing are the reasons for our short order dated 12.3.2018.

MWA/M-11/SC Appeal allowed.

Mazhar Sher Awan, Additional Prosecutor-General, Punjab for the State.

Date of hearing: 12th June, 2018.

JUDGMENT

ASIF SAEED KHAN KHOSA, J.---For allegedly kidnapping, sodomizing, raping and murdering a minor girl namely Zainab Amin, aged about 7/8 years, the petitioner was booked in case FIR No. 8 registered at Police Station A-Division, Kasur on 04.01.2018 and after a regular trial he was convicted by the trial court for offences under sections 364-A, 376, 377, 302(b) and 201, P.P.C. and section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and for some of the above mentioned offences he was sentenced to death apart from some other sentences passed against him. The petitioner challenged his convictions and sentences through an appeal which was dismissed by the High Court and all his convictions and sentences recorded by the trial court were upheld and confirmed. Hence, the present petition before this Court.

2. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioner and the learned Additional Prosecutor-General, Punjab appearing for the State and have gone through the record of the case with their assistance.

3. It has straightaway been noticed by us that when the charge was framed by the trial court against the petitioner he had pleaded guilty as charged and on that occasion he had got recorded a detailed confessional statement wherein he had admitted almost every aspect of this case alleged against him. Despite such pleading guilty to the charge and making of a confessional statement by the petitioner the trial court had decided to proceed with recording of evidence and during the trial statements of as many as 32 prosecution witnesses were recorded and many other pieces of evidence were brought on the record. In his statement recorded under section 342, Cr.P.C. the petitioner had once again admitted almost all the vital pieces of evidence produced by the prosecution against him as correct and had once again admitted his guilt unreservedly. We have observed that even in his arguments addressed before the trial court the learned counsel for the petitioner had only prayed for some lenience to be shown to the petitioner in the matter of his sentence and no argument had been advanced before the trial court challenging the merits of the prosecution's case against the petitioner. We have further observed that in his memorandum of appeal filed by the petitioner before the High Court once again only lenience in the matter of sentence had been prayed for by the petitioner without questioning his convictions recorded by the trial court. It was for the first time during the arguments before the High Court that the learned counsel for the petitioner had maintained that admission of guilt by the petitioner before the trial court was a result of coercion but during such arguments he had not provided any detail regarding coercion applied against the petitioner so as to extract a confession. In paragraph No. 4 of the memorandum of the present petition filed before this Court it has been maintained by the petitioner that the confession made by him was a result of duress and inducement but in paragraph No. 10 of this very petition the petitioner has, once again, admitted his involvement in the alleged offences in clear and categorical terms. Apart from pleading guilty to the charge and making a confession by the petitioner there were many pieces of evidence brought on the record by the prosecution which proved every word of the confession to be correct and in that regard we may refer to the CCTV footages, photographs, DNA tests and the medical evidence which had confirmed every aspect of the confession made by the petitioner. All such pieces of evidence have convinced us that the confession made by the petitioner was not only voluntary but also true. After proper assessment and evaluation of the evidence available on the record both the courts below had concurred in their conclusion regarding guilt of the petitioner having been proved to the hilt and upon our own independent evaluation of the evidence available on the record we have found no occasion to take a view of the matter different from that concurrently taken by the courts below. We are also mindful of the provisions of section 412, Cr.P.C. according to which in a case where an accused person pleads guilty to the charge and he is convicted on the basis of such pleading guilty then he can file an appeal only to the extent or legality of the sentence passed against him and he cannot file an appeal challenging his conviction.

4. As regards the sentences passed by the trial court against the petitioner which sentences had subsequently been upheld and confirmed by the High Court we may observe that the crimes committed by the petitioner were absolutely horrendous and barbaric and the same had been committed with a minor and innocent girl aged about 7/8 years. The petitioner had not only deceitfully kidnapped her but had also brutalized her by committing sodomy and rape with her and had then ultimately killed her mercilessly. In his pleading guilty to the charge as well as in his statement recorded under section 342, Cr.P.C. the petitioner had admitted committing similar offences with eight other minor victims and in that backdrop the petitioner did not deserve any sympathy in the matter of his sentences. This petition is, therefore, dismissed and leave to appeal is refused.

MWA/I-8/SC Petition dismissed.

Ahmed Raza Gillani, Additional Prosecutor-General, Punjab for Appellants (in Cr. A. 450 of 2017).

Date of hearing: 1st June, 2018.

JUDGMENT

ASIF SAEED KHAN KHOSA, J.---Qadeer Ahmed respondent and his brother namely Ijaz were statedly present in their house at about 04.30 p.m. on 29.07.2009 in village Mian Rasheeda in the area of Police Station New Airport, Attock when a raiding police party entered their house and in the ensuing firing between the parties one member of the police party namely Muhammad Akram, S.I. and one from the accused party namely Ijaz received bullet injuries leading to their death. In the said episode Qadeer Ahmed respondent had statedly surrendered before the police along with his pistol and upon such surrender the said respondent was arrested at the spot and his pistol was secured as the weapon of offence. With the said allegations the respondent and his deceased co-accused were booked in case FIR No. 74 registered at the above mentioned Police Station during the same evening and after a regular trial the respondent was convicted and sentenced by the trial court for offences under sections 302(b), 353 and 186, P.P.C. read with section 34, P.P.C. and sections 7(a), 7(b) and 7(h) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. For the offences of murder and terrorism the respondent was sentenced by the trial court to death. The respondent challenged his convictions and sentences before the High Court through an appeal which was allowed, his convictions and sentences recorded by the trial court were set aside and he was acquitted of the charge. Hence, the present appeals by leave of this Court granted on 11.01.2017.

2. Leave to appeal had been granted in this case in order to reappraise the evidence and with the assistance of the learned counsel for the parties we have undertaken that exercise.

3. There are certain facts which are not disputed in this case and they include the facts that the place of occurrence was the house of Qadeer Ahmed respondent and his deceased brother Ijaz, it was the police party which had gone to that house to conduct a raid and the said party surprised the respondent and his deceased co-accused who were otherwise peacefully present in their own house, upon seeing the police party it were the respondent and his deceased co-accused who had started firing at the police party which fires had hit Muhammad Akram, S.I. leading to his death and in retaliation of such firing at the police party the police had fired back at Ijaz co-accused who after receipt of firearm injuries at the hands of the police died at the spot. There was a serious infirmity in this story of the prosecution and that was that if, according to the prosecution itself, the initial firing at the police had been resorted to by Qadeer Ahmed respondent and his deceased co-accused namely Ijaz and if through such firing one member of the police force had been critically injured at the spot then what was expected was that the police party would fire back at both the present respondent and his deceased co-accused rather than choosing the said co-accused as the only target of the police response. The places of presence of the accused party and the police party at the spot shown in the site-plan of the place of occurrence clearly established that if the police party wanted to target Qadeer Ahmed respondent as well then there was nothing to stop it from causing injuries to him. This shows that the police party had not fired at Qadeer Ahmed respondent which is a clear indication of a real possibility that it was only the respondent's co-accused namely Ijaz who had fired at the police party and in response the police party had fired back at him and that Qadeer Ahmed respondent had not fired at the deceased at all and that is why he was not hurt by the police party. It may be true that four crime-empties secured from the place of occurrence had matched with the pistol statedly recovered from the custody of Qadeer Ahmed respondent at the time of his surrender before the police party at the spot but it cannot be lost sight of that the said pistol had been recovered at the spot and it was not difficult for the police party to manufacture as many crime-empties from the said recovered pistol as it wanted so as to strengthen its case against Qadeer Ahmed respondent. These factors available on the record of this case cannot be treated as conjectures because they are not purely speculative. We find that such circumstances lead to inferences which can be drawn on the basis of the facts available on the record. It is trite that a conjecture has no place in criminal law whereas an inference plays an important role because the same is based upon a logical deduction from circumstances available on the record. The circumstances becoming clear to us upon a proper appreciation of the evidence available on the record go a long way in convincing us that Qadeer Ahmed respondent had not fired at the police party at all and that is why he was not harmed by the police party at the spot and also that he had surrendered before the police without causing any harm to anybody and after his surrender some engineering had been resorted to by the prosecution so as to cook up a story qua the respondent's role and to bolster the same through contrived circumstances.

4. For what has been discussed above we have found no occasion for interference with the impugned judgment of acquittal of Qadeer Ahmed respondent passed by the High Court. These appeals are, therefore, dismissed. The bail bond and surety of Qadeer Ahmed respondent, if any, shall stand discharged.

----Rr. 5 & 6---Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXV of 1997), S. 9---Possession of narcotics---Report of Government Analyst---Safe custody and transmission of samples of the alleged drug from the spot of recovery till its receipt by the Narcotics Testing Laboratory---Chain of custody began with the recovery of the seized drug by the police and included the separation of the representative sample(s) of the seized drug and their dispatch to the Narcotics Testing Laboratory---Said chain of custody, was pivotal, as the entire construct of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 and the Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001 rested on the report of the Government analyst, which in turn rested on the process of sampling and its safe and secure custody and transmission to the laboratory---Representative samples of the alleged drug must be in safe custody and undergo safe transmission from the stage of recovery till it is received at the Narcotics Testing Laboratory---Prosecution must establish that the chain of custody was unbroken, unsuspicious, indubitable, safe and secure---Any break in the chain of custody or lapse in the control of possession of the sample, would cast doubts on the safe custody and safe transmission of the sample(s) and would impair and vitiate the conclusiveness and reliability of the report of the Government Analyst, thus, rendering it incapable of sustaining conviction.

----'Directory' and 'mandatory' provisions in a statute---Distinction---To distinguish where the directions of the legislature were imperative and where they were directory, the real question was whether a thing had been ordered by the legislature to be done and what was the consequence, if it was not done---Some rules were vital and went to the root of the matter, they could not be broken; others were only directory and a breach of them could be overlooked provided there was substantial compliance---Duty of the court was to try to unravel the real intention of the legislature---Such exercise entailed carefully attending to the scheme of the Act and then highlighting the provisions that actually embodied the real purpose and object of the Act---Provision in a statute was mandatory if the omission to follow it rendered the proceedings to which it related illegal and void, while a provision was directory if its observance was not necessary to the validity of the proceedings---Some parts of a statute, thus, may be mandatory whilst others may be directory---Furthermore certain portion of a provision, obligating something to be done, may be mandatory in nature whilst an other part of the same provision, may be directory, owing to the guiding legislative intent behind it---Even parts of a single provision or rule may be mandatory or directory---In another context, whether a statute or rule be termed mandatory or directory would depend upon larger public interest, nicely balanced with the precious right of the common man.

(c) Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001---

----R. 3---Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXV of 1997), S. 9---Possession of narcotic---Narcotic Testing Laboratories---Qualification of Government Analyst---Supreme Court directed that the Federal Government and the respective Provincial Governments shall ensure that the Government analysts in the Narcotics Testing Laboratories were qualified as per R. 3 of the Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001('the Rules'); that the tests and their protocols were common across the country and as per International guidelines; that the officials of the National and Provincial Narcotics Testing Laboratories shall follow the Rules in the best manner possible so that efficient and meaningful chemical analysis could be achieved, and that in case of failure, disciplinary action shall be taken against the officials, in accordance with law.

(d) Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001---

----Rr. 5 & 6---Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXV of 1997), S. 9---Possession of narcotics---Report of Government Analyst---Rule 5 of the Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001 was directory while R. 6 was mandatory to the extent that the full protocols ought to be mentioned in the report of the Government Analyst---Non-compliance of R. 6, in such context, would render the report of the Government Analyst inconclusive and unreliable.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Through this consolidated judgment we decide these appeals as they raise common questions of law.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 523, 524 and 525 of 2017

2. One Imam Bakhsh (hereinafter referred to as "Respondent No.1") was booked in FIR No. 04/2014, lodged at Police Station Anti-Narcotics Force, Turbat, Balochistan on 06.05.2014 under section 9(c) of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 ("Act"). According to the crime report, Respondent No. 1 was driving a double cabin Vigo Pickup when it was stopped by the raiding party. On Respondent No. 1's pointing out, 10.500 kilograms of opium was recovered from the rear of the Pickup in a bag. Out of the recovered opium, 200 grams was separated as sample for analysis and the remaining opium was sealed and taken into possession. The double door Vigo Pickup vehicle was also taken into possession. After investigation and regular trial, the Special Judge (Control of Narcotic Substances), Quetta convicted Respondent No. 1 through judgment dated 30.3.2016 under section 9(c) of the Act and sentenced him to 14 years' imprisonment along with fine of Rs.60,000/- or in default of payment of fine to further undergo three months' simple imprisonment, with benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C.

3. In Criminal Appeal No. 523/2017 Respondent No. 1 challenged his conviction before the High Court. In Criminal Appeal No. 524/2017, the State sought enhancement of the sentence of Respondent No. 1 to capital punishment or at least imprisonment for life. In Criminal Appeal No. 525 /2017, the State prayed that the assets of Respondent No. 1 be frozen. The High Court through the impugned judgment acquitted Respondent No. 1 on the ground that the report of the Federal Government Analyst, Quetta, Balochistan, dated 13.05.2014 (Ex.P-3/E) did not conform to the requirement of section 36 of the Act, as well as, Rules 5 and 6 of the Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001 ("Rules") and, in particular, protocols of the test applied were not mentioned in the Report. The High Court further held that even safe custody and safe transmission of the drug to the Federal Government Analyst were not established as the alleged recovery was effected on 30.03.2014, whereas the sample was received by the Government Analyst on 09.05.2014 and the intervening period and the mode of transmission were not explained.

Criminal Appeal No. 494/2017

4. One Fida Muhammad (hereinafter referred to as "Respondent No. 2") was booked in FIR No. 55/2014 dated 25.06.2014, Police Station Anti-Narcotics Force, Quetta, under section 9(c) of the Act. According to the crime report, upon raiding a house, a polythene bag was recovered from Respondent No. 2 containing different pieces of dried opium, weighing 45 kilograms. Samples were sent to chemical analyst in sealed parcels. After investigation and regular trial, Respondent No. 2 was convicted vide judgment dated 23.2.2015 by the Special Judge (Control of Narcotic Substances), Quetta under section 9(c) of the Act and was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for life with fine of Rs. 200,000/- or in default thereof to further undergo one year simple imprisonment with benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. On appeal against the judgment of the trial court, the High Court acquitted Respondent No. 2 on the ground that samples were not taken from all the pieces of opium recovered, as a result 1100 grams of opium taken as sample could not be considered as a representative sample and, thus, Respondent No. 2 could only have been convicted for 1100 grams of opium and placed reliance upon Ameer Zeb v. State (PLD 2012 SC 380) and Fareed

Ullah v. State (2013 SCMR 302). In addition to this the High Court also held that the Report of the Government Analyst was not in accordance with section 36 of the Act and Rules 5 and 6 of the Rules. According to the impugned judgment the report of the Government Analyst under the Rules prescribed in Form II stipulates signatures of two officers of the laboratory but the Report bears only one signature of the Federal Government Analyst. The Report is also silent regarding necessary protocols of the test applied.

Criminal Appeal No. 452/2017

5. One Muhammad Yousaf (hereinafter referred to as "Respondent No. 3") was booked in FIR No. 65/2014 dated 29.08.2014 registered at Police Station Anti-Narcotics Force, Quetta. According to the crime report 90 kilograms of charas garda was recovered from Respondent No.3, who was in the driving seat of a Corolla Car, which was intercepted by the Anti-Narcotics Force officials. Samples were taken from the recovered substance and were sent to the Government Analyst. After regular trial Respondent No. 3 was convicted by the Special Judge (Control of Narcotic Substances), Quetta under section 9(c) of the Act and was sentenced to suffer imprisonment for life and to pay fine of Rs.200,000/- or in default to further undergo simple imprisonment for one year, with benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. Respondent No. 3 filed an appeal against the same before the High Court and vide impugned judgment dated 25.04.2016, he was acquitted of the charge on the ground that the Report of the Government Analyst was in violation of section 36 of the Act and Rules 5 and 6 of the Rules, inasmuch as, the report of the Federal Government Analyst bears only one signature of the Government Analyst whereas the Rules stipulate signatures of two officers, and the Report is also silent regarding the necessary protocols of the test applied, therefore, the Report was not considered to be conclusive proof regarding the status of the recovered substance and could not be relied upon for sustaining conviction.

Criminal Appeal No. 22/2018 and Criminal Petition No. 94-Q of 2017

6. One Mohsin (hereinafter referred to as "Respondent No. 4") was booked in FIR No. 2/2014 dated 12.02.2014, Police Station Anti-Narcotics Force, Turbat under section 9(c) of the Act. The Anti-Narcotics Force officials recovered 87 kilograms of heroin from Respondent No. 4 who was driving a Toyota Surf. The samples were separated from each sack of the recovered substance and sent to the chemical analyst. After investigation and regular trial Respondent No. 4 was convicted by the Special Judge, Quetta vide judgment dated 11.08.2015 under section 9(c) of the Act and was sentenced to imprisonment for life with fine of Rs. 200,000/- or in default thereof to further imprisonment of one year with benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. Respondent No. 4 preferred an appeal before the High Court wherein he was acquitted of the charge on the ground that the Report of the chemical examiner was not in accordance with section 36 of the Act and Rules 5 and 6 of the Rules, inasmuch as, the Report of the Federal Government Analyst bears only one signature of the Government Analyst whereas the Rules stipulate signatures of two officers. The Report was also silent about the protocol of the test applied. It was also held that safe transmission of the alleged drug to the laboratory was not established as the police officer who had taken the contraband to the office of the chemical examiner was not produced in court. In the connected petition, i.e. Criminal Petition No.94-Q/2017 the State has prayed for forfeiture of the property of Respondent No. 4.

Criminal Appeal No. 51/2018

7. One Abdul Wahab (hereinafter referred to as "Respondent No.5") was booked in FIR No. 16/2015 dated 26.05.2015, registered at Police Station Anti-Narcotics Force, Quetta. According to the crime report, 9 kilograms of charas (garda) was recovered from Respondent No. 5 from his bag at Sada Bahar Coach Terminal and recovery was also made from his partner, i.e. one Noor-ud-Din. 200 grams were separated as a sample and sent in a sealed packet to the Chemical Analyst for examination, while the remaining recovered substance was sealed. After investigation and trial, Respondent No. 5 was convicted by the Special Judge (Control of Narcotic Substances) Quetta under section 9(c) of the Act vide judgment dated 30.11.2015 and was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 11 years and fine of Rs. 50,000/- or in default thereof to further undergo simple imprisonment for three months, with benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. In appeal before the High Court, Respondent No. 5 was acquitted of the charge vide impugned judgment dated 30.12.2016 on the ground that the Report of the Government Analyst was in violation of section 36 of the Act, therefore, there was no conclusive proof that the recovered substance was charas (garda). Further, the Report also did not refer to any protocol of the test applied.

Opinion of the Court

8. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have gone through the record with their assistance. At the very outset, it is observed, that the controversy in these cases revolves around the consequence of non-compliance of Rules 5 and 6 of the Rules. In other words, whether the said Rules are mandatory or directory and whether non-compliance of these Rules invalidates the Report of the Government Analyst. Another overlapping ground in some cases has been the lack of safe custody and safe transmission of the recovered substance from recovery till its receipt by the Narcotics Testing Laboratory.

Chain of Custody - Safe custody and safe transmission

9. We have noted above that in Criminal Appeals Nos. 523 to 525/2017 and No. 22/2018, safe custody and safe transmission of the alleged drug from the spot of recovery till its receipt by the Narcotics Testing Laboratory are not satisfactorily established. The chain of custody begins with the recovery of the seized drug by the Police and includes the separation of the representative sample(s) of the seized drug and their dispatch to the Narcotics Testing Laboratory. This chain of custody, is pivotal, as the entire construct of the Act and the Rules rests on the Report of the Government Analyst, which in turn rests on the process of sampling and its safe and secure custody and transmission to the laboratory. The prosecution must establish that the chain of custody was unbroken, unsuspicious, indubitable, safe and secure. Any break in the chain of custody or lapse in the control of possession of the sample, will cast doubts on the safe custody and safe transmission of the sample(s) and will impair and vitiate the conclusiveness and reliability of the Report of the Government Analyst, thus, rendering it incapable of sustaining conviction. This Court has already held in Amjad Ali v. State (2012 SCMR 577) and Ikramullah v. State (2015 SCMR 1002) that where safe custody or safe transmission of the alleged drug is not established, the Report of the Government Analyst becomes doubtful and unreliable.

Rules 5 and 6 of the Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001 - whether mandatory or directory?

10. The Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001 operationalizes the purposes of the Act to the extent of test and analysis of the recovered substance. These Rules do not spell out any consequence for their non-compliance, therefore, it needs to be determined whether these Rules are mandatory or directory and whether non-compliance of these Rules invalidates the Report of the Government Analyst or not.

11. To distinguish where the directions of the legislature are imperative and where they are directory, the real question is whether a thing has been ordered by the legislature to be done and what is the consequence, if it is not done. Some rules are vital and go to the root of the matter, they cannot be broken; others are only directory and a breach of them can be overlooked provided there is substantial compliance. The duty of the court is to try to unravel the real intention of the legislature. This exercise entails carefully attending to the scheme of the Act and then highlighting the provisions that actually embody the real purpose and object of the Act. A provision in a statute is mandatory if the omission to follow it renders the proceedings to which it relates illegal and void, while a provision is directory if its observance is not necessary to the validity of the proceedings. Thus, some parts of a statute may be mandatory whilst others may be directory. It can even be the case that a certain portion of a provision, obligating something to be done, is mandatory in nature whilst another part of the same provision, is directory, owing to the guiding legislative intent behind it. Even parts of a single provision or rule may be mandatory or directory. "In each case one must look to the subject matter and consider the importance of the provision disregarded and the relation of that provision to the general object intended to be secured." Crawford opined that "as a general rule, [those provisions that] relate to the essence of the thing to be performed or to matters of substance, are mandatory, and those which do not relate to the essence and whose compliance is merely of convenience rather than of substance, are directory." In another context, whether a statute or rule be termed mandatory or directory would depend upon larger public interest, nicely balanced with the precious right of the common man. According to Maxwell, "Where the prescription of statute relates to the performance of a public duty and where the invalidation of acts done in neglect of them would work serious general inconvenience or injustice to persons who have no control over those entrusted with the duty without promoting the essential aims of the legislature, such prescriptions seem to be generally understood as mere instructions for the guidance and government of those on whom the duty is imposed or in other words as directory only. The neglect of them may be penal indeed, but it does not affect the validity of the act done in disregard of them." Our Court has held while determining the status of a mandatory or directory provision that "perhaps the cleverest indicator is the object and purpose of the statute and the provision in question." And to see the "legislative intent as revealed by the examination of the whole Act."

12. In order to apply the above test, it is essential to understand the legislative intent of the Act and the scope of the Rules framed thereunder. The title of the Act and its objective is to control the production, processing and trafficking of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. The Act substantively provides for prohibition of cultivation of narcotic plants, prohibition of possession of narcotic drugs, etc. providing that "no one shall produce possess, offer for sale, sell, purchase, distribute, deliver, transport, dispatch any narcotic drug or psychotropic substance or controlled substance, prohibition of import and export of narcotic drugs and prohibition of trafficking or financing of narcotic drugs. Punishments for contravention are provided under section 9 which range from imprisonment, extending to two years and moving up to capital punishment of death or imprisonment for life depending on the quantity of the narcotic drug, psychotropic or controlled substance.

13. Sections 34 to 36 of the Act provide for Narcotics Testing Laboratories, the Test Reports of the Government Analyst and their evidentiary value. Section 36 mandates that the Government Analyst after carrying out tests and analysis of the sample of any narcotic drug or psychotropic or controlled substance shall deliver a Report as prescribed under the Rules. This Report under section 36(2) enjoys the benefit of being admissible as evidence of the facts stated therein without formal proof and such evidence, unless rebutted, is conclusive. Credible testing and analysis of the alleged drug is fundamental to actualizing the provisions of the Act as it determines the true nature of the recovered substance or the seized drug. Section 36(2) underlines the importance of such a test Report. Report of the Government Analyst, is therefore, pivotal in realizing the objective and purpose of the Act.

14. The Rules are framed under section 77 of the Act to carry out the purposes of the Act. Rule 5 provides a process for proper examination of the sample in the Narcotics Testing Laboratory. This rule reflects the best practice to be adopted while dealing with examination of the sample. Substantial compliance of this Rule is sufficient as its non-compliance does not offend or upset the statutory regime of the Act. Non-compliance of Rule 5 will not cut so deep as to invalidate the Report of the Government Analyst.

15. Rule 6 on the other hand stands on a different statutory footing. It provides that the Report of the Government Analyst, after the test and analysis, is to furnish the result together with full protocols of the test applied. The accuracy of test and analysis and the correct application of the full protocols alone can determine if the recovered substance is a narcotic drug or a psychotropic or controlled substance. "Protocol" means an explicit, detailed plan of an experiment, procedure or test or a precise step-by-step description of a test, including the listing of all necessary reagents and all criteria and procedures for the evaluation of the test data. Rule 6 requires that full protocols of the test applied be part of the Report of the Government Analyst. Every test has its protocols, which are internationally recognized and a test without the observance of its protocols has no sanctity. "Full Protocols" include a description of each and every step employed by the Government Analyst through the course of conducting a test. Hence, the Report under Rule 6 must specify every test applied for the determination of the seized substances with the full protocols adopted to conduct such tests.

16. Non-compliance of Rule 6 can frustrate the purpose and object of the Act, i.e. control of production, processing and trafficking of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, as conviction cannot be sustained on a Report that is inconclusive or unreliable. The evidentiary assumption attached to a Report of the Government Analyst under section 36(2) of the Act underlines the statutory significance of the Report, therefore details of the test and analysis in the shape of the protocols applied for the test become fundamental and go to the root of the statutory scheme. Rule 6 is, therefore, in the public interest and safeguards the rights of the parties. Any Report (Form-II) failing to give details of the full protocols of the test applied will be inconclusive, unreliable, suspicious and untrustworthy and will not meet the evidentiary assumption attached to a Report of the Government Analyst under section 36(2). Resultantly, it will hopelessly fail to support conviction of the accused. This Court has already emphasized the importance of protocols in Ikramullah's case (supra).

17. Rule 6 also requires the issuance of quadruplicate copies of the Report and the requirement of two signatures on the Report of the Government Analyst in Form-II. Section 36 states that the Report shall be signed by the Government Analyst only, therefore the requirement of two signatures and the issuance of quadruplicate copies, are at best, a good practice, but are merely directory provisions, as their non-compliance does not offend the Act. At this stage it is important to point out that this Court, in a series of judgments, has considered the scope of Rule 4(2) of the Rules, which provides that the samples be dispatched to the Government Analyst not later than 72 hours of its seizure and has held it to be a directory provision. Reliance is placed on Muhammad Sarfraz v. State (2017 SCMR 1874), Gul Alam v. The State (2011 SCMR 624) and Tariq Mehmood v. The State (PLD 2009 SC 39). In Taimoor Khan v. State (2016 SCMR 621) this Court has additionally held that Rules 3, 4 and 6 are mandatory. Deeper examination of this judgment reveals that reference was only being made to Rule 4(1), whereas, Rule 4(2) was not discussed, separately. This understanding falls in line with the consistent view of this Court regarding Rule 4(2) as referred to above.

18. It is important to underline that even if a rule is directory, its substantial compliance as opposed to strict compliance is required. Non-compliance of such a rule might not invalidate the act but as it provides a legislative process based on public interest, transparency and good governance, its substantial compliance is necessary.

Directions to the Federal and Provincial Governments

19. Efficient, credible and proficient Narcotics Testing Laboratories are integral for successful execution of the Act and the Rules. The said laboratories have to be manned by competent analysts having prescribed qualifications. Rule 3 provides for the qualifications of a Government Analyst and it has already been held to be a mandatory provision by this Court. Further, the obligations of the Government Analysts under these Rules must be complied with for ensuring accurate and meaningful chemical analysis. In order to standardize the Narcotics Testing Laboratories across the country, the protocols and tests applied by these laboratories must meet common international standards, e.g. Guidelines issued by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) or Scientific Working Group for the Analysis of Seized Drugs (SWGDRUG) or the International Organization for Standardization (ISO) - 17025:2017. We, therefore, direct the Federal Government and the respective Provincial Governments to ensure that the Government Analysts in the Narcotics Testing Laboratories are qualified as per Rule 3, the tests and their protocols are common across the country are as per International guidelines. The officials of the National and Provincial Narcotics Testing Laboratories shall follow the Rules in the best manner possible so that efficient and meaningful chemical analysis can be achieved. In case of failure, disciplinary action be taken against the officials, in accordance with law.

20. We conclude that Rule 5 of the Rules is directory while Rule 6 is mandatory to the extent that the full protocols ought to be mentioned in the Report of the Government Analyst. Non-compliance of Rule 6, in this context, will render the Report of the Government Analyst inconclusive and unreliable. The representative samples of the alleged drug must be in safe custody and undergo safe transmission from the stage of recovery till it is received at the Narcotics Testing Laboratory.

21. In all the above appeals we have observed that there has been non-compliance of Rule 6 to the extent of absence of the full protocols of the tests applied. Additionally, in Criminal Appeals Nos. 523-525 of 2017 and No. 22 of 2018, safe custody and safe transmission of the seized drugs had also not been established.

22. For the above reasons, the main Appeals Nos. 523, 494, 452 of 2017 and Nos. 22 and 51 of 2018, against acquittal are dismissed. As a consequence, Criminal Appeal No. 524 of 2017 for enhancement of sentence and Criminal Appeal No. 525 of 2017 and Petition No. 94-Q/2017 for forfeiture of property, are also dismissed.

MWA/S-36/SC Appeals dismissed.

Syed Hamid Ali Shah, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellants.

Muhammad Saeed Khan for Respondent.

Date of hearing: 2nd May, 2018.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Leave was granted in this case vide order dated 13.03.2014 to examine whether the ratio of the judgment in the case of Manzoor Ahmed and 4 others v. Mehrban and 5 others (2002 SCMR 1391) relating to non-examination of attesting witnesses of a registered sale deed were applicable to the present case?

2. Brief facts giving rise to the above question are that the respondent (Dilawar Shah) filed a suit for declaration-cum-partition challenging the validity of Gift Deeds Nos. 1704 and 1705 dated 10.11.1996 allegedly executed in favour of appellant No. 1 (alleged donee) by one Syed Maqbool Shah (deceased) (alleged donor). Syed Maqbool Shah died in January, 2003 and was survived by his two brothers namely: Syed Lal Hussain Shah (father of appellant No.1) and Dilawar Shah, the respondent. Appellant No. 1 after the alleged Gift Deeds transferred the property in favour of his wife i.e., Appellant No.2, therefore, the respondent challenged both the transactions through the suit in question.

3. Learned counsel for the appellants argued that the Gift Deeds were registered documents, therefore, under proviso to Article 79 of the Qanun-e-Shandat Order, 1984 ("Order") there was no requirement for the examination of the two attesting witnesses, especially when the executant had not denied the execution of the documents. He further submitted that the possession was handed over to appellant No..1 who thereafter raised construction on the said properly by obtaining loan from the bank and also rented out the said property.

4. Learned counsel for the respondent on the other hand submitted that the said suit was filed in the year 2003 after the death of the donor i.e., Syed Maqbool Shah and that the execution of the Gift Deeds by the deceased has been specifically denied in the plaint. He further submitted that three ingredients of gift had to be independently proved and the appellants have failed to do so.

5. We have heard the parties at some length and have gone through the record of the case. Three questions that require examination are (1) whether two attesting witnesses were required to prove the execution of the registered Gift Deeds, in the present case? (2) whether, denial of execution of the document, under the proviso to Article 79 of the Order, has to be by the executant or can it be by any party to the suit, whose interest is affected by the document? and (3) whether the essential requirements of gift were independently established ?

6. Respondent (plaintiff) has specifically pleaded in the plaint that appellant No. 1 through his chicanery and deceit got the Gift Deeds registered and attested on behalf of Syed Maqbool Shah (alleged donor), hence the Deeds are illegal having no effect on the rights of the respondent. Article 79 of the Order provides as follows;

> 79. PROOF OF EXECUTION OF DOCUMENT REQUIRED BY LAW TO BE ATTESTED.-- If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until two attesting witnesses at least have been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be two attesting witnesses alive, and subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence:
> Provided that it shall not be necessary to call an attesting witness in proof of the execution of any document, not being a will, which has been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Registration Act, 1908 (XVI of 1908), unless its execution by the person by whom it purports to have been executed is specifically denied: (emphasis supplied)

This Article deals with proof of a document. that requires attestation under the law. The proviso to the Article relaxes the requirement of calling the two attesting witnesses to prove the execution of the document, if the document is duly registered in accordance with the provisions of Registration Act, 1908 and its execution is not specifically denied. In other words, the party is relieved of the duty of calling the two witnesses but not from the duty of proving the execution of the registered document. The effect of the proviso is that the due execution and attestation of the gift deed will have to be proved, although it may be proved by calling a person other than an attesting witness. This relaxation is pillared on an important assumption that the execution of the document is not denied. Article 79 is document specific and deals with the proof of documents that require attestation under the law. Therefore, denial of execution is also document specific. The part "unless its execution by the person by whom it purports to have been executed is specifically denied" deals with the denial of the execution of the document and simply elaborates that the denial is to the effect that it has not been executed by the person who purports to have executed it. The words by the person by whom it purports to have been executed go with the word "execution" and not with the words 'specifically denied." What has to be specifically denied is the execution. In other words, the facts constituting denial must show that the purported executant of the document never executed it. The specific denial is by the opposite party, i.e., the party against whom the document is sought to be proved, irrespective of whether he is or is not the executant of the document. The words "specifically denied" evidently mean specifically denied by the party against whom the document is sought to be used and not by the executant alone. The denial, therefore, has to come from the party who is entitled to dispute or is interested in disputing its execution. Thus, the denial of the execution of the document is not limited to the executant alone but is open to any party to the suit that is affected by the said document. For a similar view in. our jurisdiction, see Mst. Saleema Bibi v. Mst. Ramzan Bibi (2007 YLR 910) and Ghulam Bheek and others v. Mst. Salamat Bibi and others (2001 CLC 1078).

7. In this case the plaint slates that the Gift Deeds have not been executed by Syed Maqbool Shah, as they have been fraudulently procured and executed on his behalf by appellant No. 1. Admittedly two attesting witnesses to the Gift Deeds were not produced. The argument of the learned counsel for the appellants that the proviso to Article 79 of the Order applies to the present case, because the Gift Deeds are registered documents and there is no specific denial to the execution of the document by the executant, does not hold ground for the above reasons. The execution of the document, therefore, required the evidence of two attesting witnesses.

8. Secondly, the executant in this case died in January, 2003 before the filing of the suit in February, 2003. In case of death of the executant prior to the suit and in the face of the denial of the execution by the respondent (plaintiff), the requirement of two attesting witnesses cannot be dispensed with. Reliance is placed on Muhammad Iqbal Khan v. Mst. Farhat Nisa (PLD 2017 Lahore 727), Abdul Hameed v. Shamasuddin (PLD 2008 SC 140) and Abdul Ghqfoor v. Mukhtar Ahmad Khan (2006 SCMR 1144).

9. Three ingredients of gift include: (i) declaration/offer by the donor (ii) acceptance of gift by the donee and (iii) delivery of possession under the gift. See Mst. Rasheeda Bibi v. Mukhtar Ahmad (2008 SCMR 1384) and Mst. Nagina Begum v. Mst. Tahzim Akhtar (2009 SCMR 623). The declaration of gift and delivery of possession has to be established through independent evidence. See Islam-ud-Din v. Mst. Noor Jahan (2016 SCMR 986), Mst. Shafqat Parveen v. Muhammad Iftikhar Amjad (2012 SCMR 1602) and the case of Mst. Nagina Begum (supra). In the instant case, the first ingredient of gift, i.e., Declaration of gift, evidenced by the two Gift Deeds, falls to the ground, as the said Gift Deeds were not proved due to the absence of the two attesting witnesses. The second ingredient, i.e., Delivery of possession, means that the donor must deliver and divest the property in favour of the donee and establish the same through independent evidence. It is an admitted position that the donor till his death in 2003 was in possession of the property along with appellant No. 1. There is no evidence on the record to establish that appellant No. 1 took possession of the property, to the total exclusion of the donor. The exclusivity of delivery or the factum of complete divestiture in favour of appellant No.1 is not established. This factual position has been, concurrently, upheld by the courts below.

10. For the above reasons, we find no illegality of approach or infirmity in the appreciation of evidence or in the application of the law by the courts below. This appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

MWA/B-2/S Appeal dismissed.

(b) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 345---Compounding of offence---Principles.

Following are the principles relating to compounding of offence;

(i) A compounding could take place during the trial or during the pendency of an appeal or a revision petition and it could take place even before the case had reached the trial court for trial.

(ii) A complete compounding fulfilling the requirements of sub-section (1) or (2) of section 345,Cr.P.C., as the case may be, could not be withdrawn or resiled from by any party at any later stage because it had already created the effect of an acquittal of the accused person.

(iii) Composition of a compoundable offence not requiring permission of the court deprived the court of its jurisdiction to try the case or ousted the jurisdiction of the court to try the offence and the court had no other option but to acquit the accused person.

(iv) Composition of a compoundable offence not requiring permission of the court and grant of permission or leave to compound by the relevant court in cases where such permission or leave was required resulted in immediate acquittal of the accused person.

(v) In a case where a court had already convicted a person of a compoundable offence and had held him guilty, no compounding of the offence by the victim or his heirs with the convict could take effect or could be said to be successful or complete unless the relevant appellate or revisional court granted leave to compound or allowed the proposed composition---Matter of granting or refusing leave to compound and allowing or disallowing the same laid in the discretion of the relevant court and before taking a decision in that regard the court concerned had to apply its judicial mind to the facts and circumstances of the case in their totality and also to consider desirability or otherwise of granting permission in that respect---Court had to keep in mind the spirit of the law and the requisite permission or leave to compound may ordinarily not be withheld or refused unless the facts and circumstances of the case persuade the relevant court otherwise---Composition of a compoundable offence was a concession extended by the legislature and also by the religion of Islam to the victims and their heirs and the same may not lightly be taken away or whittled down by the courts.

JUDGMENT

ASIF SAEED KHAN KHOSA, J.---One Waheed Ahmad had allegedly murdered a person named Tariq Hussain on 05.06.2007 in a village in the area of Police Station Mangla Cantonment, District Jhelum and for committing the said offence he was booked in case FIR No. 68 registered at the said Police Station on the same day for an offence under section 302 of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 (P.P.C.). After a regular trial the said Waheed Ahmad was convicted by a learned Additional Sessions Judge, Jhelum on 19.02.2009 for an offence under section 302(b), P.P.C. and was sentenced to death as Ta'zir and to pay a sum of Rs. 1,00,000/- to the heirs of the deceased by way of compensation under section 544-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Cr.P.C.) or in default of payment thereof to undergo simple imprisonment for six months. The said Waheed Ahmad challenged his conviction and sentence before the Lahore High Court, Rawalpindi Bench, Rawalpindi through Criminal Appeal No. 75 of 2009 which was heard by a learned Division Bench of the said Court along with Murder Reference No. 20/RWP of 2009 seeking confirmation of the sentence of death and vide judgment dated 22.05.2012 the appeal was dismissed, the conviction and sentence were upheld and the sentence of death was confirmed. The said Waheed Ahmad then filed Criminal Petition for Leave to Appeal No. 216 of 2012 before this Court wherein leave to appeal was granted by this Court on 06.07.2012 in order to reappraise the evidence in the interest of safe administration of criminal justice. As a result of grant of leave to appeal Waheed Ahmad preferred Criminal Appeal No. 328 of 2012 before this Court and during the pendency of that appeal Criminal Miscellaneous Application No. 185 of 2017 was filed seeking acquittal of the convict-appellant on the basis of a compromise with the heirs of Tariq Hussain deceased and the matter of compromise was referred by this Court to the learned District and Sessions Judge, Jhelum for verification. The report dated 27.02.2017 submitted by the learned District and Sessions Judge, Jhelum in that regard confirmed the fact that a genuine, voluntary and complete compromise between the parties had been effected, the heirs of Tariq Hussain deceased had forgiven the convict-appellant, had waived their right of Qisas and had not claimed any Diyat in that respect. After going through the said report a 3-member Bench of this Court comprising of our learned brothers Amir Hani Muslim, Qazi Faez Isa and Sardar Tariq Masood, JJ. unanimously accepted Criminal Miscellaneous Application No. 185 of 2017 on 21.03.2017 and allowed the compromise between the parties but their lordships differed on how the main appeal was to be disposed of upon acceptance of the compromise. Writing for the majority Sardar Tariq Masood, J. disposed of the appeal in the following terms and Amir Hani Muslim, J. agreed with his lordship:

> "In this view of the matter, Criminal Miscellaneous Application No. 185 of 2017 filed under Section 345, Cr.P.C. is accepted and the compromise arrived at between the parties is allowed. As according to subsection (6) of Section 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, the composition of an offence shall have the effect of an acquittal, hence Criminal Appeal No. 328 of 2012 is allowed, the sentence of Waheed Ahmad (appellant) recorded and upheld by the courts below is set aside and he is acquitted of the charges on the basis of the compromise. He shall be released from jail forthwith if not required to be detained in connection with any other case."

Qazi Faez Isa, J., however, wrote a separate note on that occasion and the said note read as follows:

> "Whilst I agree with my learned brother that the application under section 345(6) of the Code of Criminal Procedure ("the Code") be accepted, I most respectfully cannot bring myself to agree that the convict/appellant be "acquitted of the charges on the basis of the compromise". Subsection (6) of section 345 of the Code does not envisage an acquittal, as it provides:
> "(6) The composition of an offence under this section shall have the effect of an acquittal of the accused with whom the offence has been compounded."
> 2. The appellant was convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge, Jhelum, under section 302(b) of the Pakistan Penal Code ("P.P.C.") for the murder of Tariq Hussain, and was sentenced to death. The Trial Court sent the Murder Reference to the Lahore High Court for confirmation under section 374 of the Code whilst the appellant/convict preferred an appeal under section 410 of the Code. The High Court dismissed the appeal of the appellant, confirmed the Murder Reference and the sentence of death awarded to the appellant/convict. The appellant then preferred a criminal petition for leave to appeal before this Court, which granted leave, "to reappraise the evidence available on record in the interest of safe administration of criminal justice". However, during the pendency of this appeal a compromise was effected by the appellant/convict with the legal heirs of the deceased.
> 3. Section 345 of the Code enables compounding of offences and sets out the methodology thereof. It mentions the offences punishable under the P.P.C. which can be compounded either before or after an accused is convicted. The table contained in subsection (1) of section 345 specifies, "persons by whom offences may be compounded". But, subsection (5) of section 345 stipulates that once an accused has been convicted, "no composition for the offence shall be allowed without the leave of the Court before which the appeal is to be heard". Undoubtedly, the prescribed offences can be compounded, but the composition of such offences has to be in terms of subsection (6) of section 345 which stipulates that, "the composition shall have the effect of an acquittal".

4. In my opinion "the effect of an acquittal" is different from an acquittal. The guilt of an accused, that is ascertaining whether the accused has committed the offence for which he is charged, is determined by the Trial Court. Once the guilt of the accused has been determined the judgment is delivered by the Court. The judgment has two components, conviction, which means he is guilty, and the sentence, which is the punishment awarded to him. If the legal heirs of the deceased compound the offence it does not mean that the appellant/convict was not guilty of the murder for which he was convicted, which would be the case if, as a consequence of allowing the composition, he is "acquitted". Subsection (6) of section 345 also avoids creating such a fiction as it provides that the "composition of an offence shall have the effect of an acquittal", which means that the punishment (sentence) part of the judgment is brought to an end; neither this subsection states, nor it could, that the convict is "acquitted of the charges". The verdict of guilt (the conviction part of the judgment) that the Trial Court had recorded could only have been undone by the High Court, failing which by this Court; it cannot be undone by the legal heirs of the murdered person.

5. The law permits the legal heirs of a murdered person to compound the offence with the convict, with or without receiving badal-i-sulh/diyat (sections 310 and 323 P.P.C.). When the legal heirs compounded the offence they elected not to seek retribution or the enforcement of the sentence. The very premise of compounding the offence is the acknowledgment of guilt by the accused who is then forgiven by the legal heirs; the affidavits filed by the legal heirs clearly also state this.

6. Section 338-F of the P.P.C. stipulates that in the interpretation and application of Chapter XVI ("Offences Affecting the Human Body") "and in respect of matters ancillary or akin thereto, the Court shall be guided by the Injunctions of Islam as laid down in the Holy Qur'an and Sunnah". The aforesaid interpretation of subsection (6) of section 345 is in conformity with a number of verses of the Holy Qur'an: surah Al-Baqarah (2) verses 178-9, surah Al-Maidah (5) verse 45, surah Al-Isra (17) verse 33 and surah Ash-Shura (42) verse 40. In these verses our Merciful Creator suggests that forgiveness and reconciliation is preferable to revenge or retaliation. A person can only be forgiven if he is guilty. The cited verses neither state nor imply that the finding of guilt is effaced.

7. Therefore, whilst I agree with the conclusion reached by my learned brother that the application for compounding the offences be accepted, I cannot agree that as a consequence the appellant/convict should be "acquitted of the charges" and thus completely exonerated. However, since section 345(6) of the Code has not been examined and interpreted in the aforesaid manner therefore the Hon'ble Chief Justice is requested to take notice of this matter under Article 184(3) of the Constitution as it is a question of public importance involving the enforcement of Fundamental Rights. The office is directed to place the matter before the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan for appropriate orders."

The matter was thereafter put up before the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan and his lordship was pleased to pass the following order:

"Let the issue raised in the order by my learned brother Justice Qazi Faez Isa be taken up under Art. 184(3) of the Constitution and the matter be fixed before the bench headed by my brother Justice Asif Saeed Khan Khosa."

It is in the above mentioned background that the matter has been fixed for hearing before the present Bench today.

2. We have heard the learned Assistant Attorney-General for Pakistan, the learned Advocate-General for the Islamabad Capital Territory, the learned Additional Advocate-General, Punjab, the learned Additional Advocate-General, Sindh, the learned Additional Advocate-General, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and the learned Additional Advocate-General, Balochistan at some length. They have all submitted in complete unison that in Islamic jurisprudence and in the system of administration of criminal justice in vogue in this country a composition of a compoundable offence leads to and results in acquittal of the accused person or convict concerned. They have also submitted that any confusion created by the words "effect of an acquittal" used in section 345(6), Cr.P.C. now stands removed by the word "acquit" used in the subsequently introduced first proviso to section 338-E(1), P.P.C. and its interpretation by this Court in the case of Chairman Agricultural Development Bank of Pakistan and another v. Mumtaz Khan (PLD 2010 SC 695).

3. The issue before us is as to whether a successful and complete compounding of an offence leads to acquittal of the accused person or convict from the allegation or charge or it is only to have an effect of acquittal which may be something short of or other than acquittal. After hearing the learned Law Officers and going through the relevant legal provisions and the precedent cases available on the subject we have explored and attended to the issue at hand from diverse angles and in the following paragraphs we embark upon an effort to find an answer to this question and to resolve the controversy.

4. Section 345, Cr.P.C. deals with compounding of offences and it provides as follows:

> 345. Compounding offences. (1) The offences punishable under the sections of the Pakistan Penal Code specified in the first two columns of the table next following may be compounded by the persons mentioned in the third column of that table:-
>
> | Offence | Sections of Penal Code applicable | Persons by whom offence may be compounded |
> (2) Subject to subsection (7), the offences punishable under the sections of the Pakistan Penal Code specified in the first two columns of the table next following may, with the permission of the Court before which any prosecution for such offence is pending, be compounded by the persons mentioned in the third column of that table:-
>
> | Offence | Sections of Penal Code applicable | Persons by whom offence may be compounded |
> (2-A) Where an offence under Chapter XVI of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 (Act XLV of 1860), has been committed in the name or on the pretext of karo kari, siyah kari or similar other customs or practices, such offence may be waived or compounded subject to such conditions as the Court may deem fit to impose with the consent of the parties having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case.
>
> (3) Where any offence is compoundable under this section, the abetment of such offence or any attempt to commit such offence (when such attempt is itself an offence) may be compounded in like manner.
> (4) When the person who would otherwise be competent to compound an offence under this section is under the age of eighteen years or is an idiot or a lunatic, any person competent to contract on his behalf may with the permission of the Court compound such offence.

(5) When the accused has been convicted and an appeal is pending, no composition for the offence shall be allowed without the leave of the Court before which the appeal is to be heard.

(5-A) A High Court acting in the exercise of its power of revision under section 439 and a Court of Session so acting under section 439-A, may allow any person to compound any offence which he is competent to compound under this section.

(6) The composition of an offence under this section shall have the effect of an acquittal of the accused with whom the offence has been compounded.

(7) No offence shall be compounded except as provided by this section and section 311 of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 (Act XLV of 1860).

A plain reading of this section shows that compounding of a compoundable offence may be possible before the trial, during the trial or even during the pendency of an appeal or a revision petition and that in some cases compounding of an offence does not require permission of the court whereas in some other cases permission or leave of the relevant court is required for composition. However, the question before us is not as to how a compounding is to take place with or without permission or leave of a court but the controversy before us is about the consequence after a valid compounding has taken place and for resolving the said controversy it is important to appreciate what compounding of an offence actually means.

5. Before we dig deep into the controversy at hand it may be advantageous to mention that there are shorter answers available to the questions involved in this matter and they may be recorded straightaway. Chapter XVI of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 deals with offences affecting human body including murder and causing of hurt and all such offences are compoundable by virtue of the provisions of section 309, P.P.C. (Waiver-Afw), section 310, P.P.C. (Compounding-Sulh) and section 345, Cr.P.C. Section 338-E(1), P.P.C. and the first proviso to the same (falling in Chapter XVI of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860) provide as follows:

338-E. Waiver or compounding of offences. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Chapter and section 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (V of 1898), all offences under this Chapter may be waived or compounded and the provisions of sections 309 and 310 shall, mutatis mutandis, apply to the waiver or compounding of such offences:

Provided that, where an offence has been waived or compounded, the Court may, in its discretion having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, acquit or award ta'zir to the offender according to the nature of the offence. -------

(bold letters have been supplied for emphasis)

These provisions show, and show quite clearly, that all the offences affecting human body including murder and causing of hurt falling in Chapter XVI of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 are capable of being waived or compounded and that in case of waiver or compounding of such offences the court concerned, after granting the discretionary permission or leave to compound where necessary, is to acquit the person accused or convicted if it is a case of Ta'zir but in a case of Qisas it has a discretion either to acquit or to pass a sentence of Ta'zir against the accused person or convict in view of the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case. It has already been clarified by this Court in the case of Zahid Rehman v. The State (PLD 2015 SC 77) that the discretion to punish by way of Ta'zir under section 311, P.P.C. and other similar provisions after waiver or compounding of the right of Qisas is relevant only to cases of Qisas and not to cases of Ta'zir. It is true that section 345(6), Cr.P.C. does not speak of "acquittal" as a consequence of compounding of an offence and it only speaks of the "effect of an acquittal" but it is now clear through the subsequently introduced section 338-E, P.P.C. that a compounding of a compoundable offence in a case of Ta'zir is to lead to acquittal of the accused person or convict. When the law itself, as it stands today, speaks of acquittal as a consequence of compounding of an offence then any ambiguity in that regard created by the previous state of the law may not confound us anymore.

6. Another short answer to the core question involved in this matter is available in the judgment handed down by this Court in the case of Chairman Agricultural Development Bank of Pakistan and another v. Mumtaz Khan (PLD 2010 SC 695) involving the same issue which is under our consideration in the present matter. In that case the respondent was an employee of a Bank and on account of his involvement in and conviction for an offence of murder he was removed from service but later on he was acquitted on the basis of a compromise with the heirs of the deceased and a question arose as to whether a compromise or compounding could validly be treated as acquittal or not for the purposes of his reinstatement in service of the Bank. This Court had categorically held in that case that compounding of an offence through a court in a case of Ta'zir amounted to an acquittal and speaking for the Court on that occasion one of us (Asif Saeed Khan Khosa, J.) had observed as follows:

> "7. ------- After introduction of the Islamic provisions in the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 it has now also become possible for an accused person to seek and obtain his acquittal in a case of murder either through waiver/Afw under section 309, P.P.C. or on the basis of compounding/Sulh under section 310, P.P.C. In the case of waiver/Afw an acquittal can be earned without any monetary payment to the heirs of the deceased but in the case of compounding/Sulh an acquittal may be obtained upon acceptance of Badal-i-Sulh by the heirs of the deceased from the accused person. In the present case the respondent had been acquitted of the charge of murder by the learned Sessions Judge, Lakki Marwat as a result of compounding of the offence and such compounding had come about on the basis of acceptance of Badal-i-Sulh by the heirs of the deceased from the respondent. -------

8. The provisions of the first proviso to subsection (1) of section 338-E, P.P.C. clearly contemplate acquittal of an accused person on the basis of compounding of an offence by invoking the provisions of section 310, P.P.C. and the effect of such compounding has also been clarified in most explicit terms by the provisions of subsection (6) of Section 345, Cr.P.C. in the following words:

> "The composition of an offence under this section shall have the effect of an acquittal of the accused with whom the offence has been compounded."
> 9. The legal provisions mentioned above leave no ambiguity or room for doubt that compounding of an offence of murder upon payment of Badal-i-Sulh -------and that such compounding of the offence leads to nothing but an acquittal of the accused person. It has already been clarified by this Court in the case of Dr. Muhammad Islam v. Government of N-W.F.P. through Secretary Food, Agricultural, Live Stock and Cooperative Department, Peshawar (1998 SCMR 1993) as follows:
> "We are inclined to uphold the above view inasmuch as all acquittals even if these are based on benefit of doubt are honourable for the reason that the prosecution has not succeeded to prove their cases against the accused on the strength of evidence of unimpeachable character. It may be noted that there are cases in which the judgments are recorded on the basis of compromise between the parties and the accused are acquitted in consequence thereof. What shall be the nature of such acquittals? All acquittals are certainly honourable. There can be no acquittals, which may be said to be dishonourable. The law has not drawn any distinction between these types of acquittals."

declared that an acquittal had no shades and there was no concept of honourable or dishonourable acquittals. It had specifically been noted by this Court in that case that there could also be cases involving acquittals on the basis of compromise between the parties and after raising a query regarding the status of such acquittals this Court had hastened to add that "All acquittals are certainly honourable". -------

10. ------- Be that as it may, an ultimate acquittal in a criminal case exonerates the accused person completely for all future purposes vis- -vis the criminal charge against him as is evident from the concept of autrefois acquit embodied in section 403, Cr.P.C. and the protection guaranteed by Article 13(a) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 and, according to our humble understanding of the Islamic jurisprudence, Afw (waiver) or Sulh (compounding) in respect of an offence has the effect of purging the offender of the crime. In this backdrop we have found it difficult as well as imprudent to lay it down as a general rule that compounding of an offence invariably amounts to admission of guilt on the part of the accused person -------."

7. Delving deeper into the issue we note that the concept of compounding of an offence, also termed as composition of an offence, is an old concept recognized not only in the Islamic law and the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 but also in the Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence. In his book An Introduction to the Philosophy of Law (revised edition 1954) Roscoe Pound had observed about the concept of composition of an offence as follows:

"The first theory of liability was in terms of a duty to buy off the vengeance of him to whom an injury had been done whether by oneself or by something in one's power. The idea is put strikingly in the Anglo-Saxon proverb, 'Buy spear from side or bear it', that is, buy off the feud or fight it out. --- As the social interest in peace and order - the general security in its lowest terms - comes to be secured more effectively by regulation and ultimate putting down of feud as a remedy, payment of composition becomes a duty rather than a privilege --- The next step is to measure the composition not in terms of the vengeance to be bought off in terms of the injury. A final step is to put it in terms of reparation."

In Black's Law Dictionary (Ninth Edition) the definition of 'composition' includes "A payment of money or chattels as satisfaction for an injury. In Anglo-Saxon and other early societies, a composition with the injured party was recognized as a way to deter acts of revenge by the injured party." In the same dictionary the definition of 'Compound' includes "To agree for consideration not to prosecute (a crime)". The meaning of the word 'Compound' in The Concise Oxford Dictionary of Current English (Ninth Edition) includes "settle (a debt, dispute, etc.) by concession or special agreement", "condone (a liability or offence) in exchange for money etc.", "forbear from prosecuting (a felony) from private motives" and "come to terms with a person, for forgoing a claim etc. for an offence". In Pakistan the Islamic concepts of Afw and Sulh (two different ways of compounding an offence which is made compoundable by the legislature) are an important part of our criminal law and in cases of murder and causing of hurt sections 309, 310 and 338-E, P.P.C. provide for Waiver-Afw (forgiveness without accepting any compensation) and Compounding-Sulh (compounding on accepting badal-i-sulh/compensation) and section 345, Cr.P.C. provides the mechanism for such compounding. According to Islamic jurisprudence Afw and Sulh are based upon forgiveness and reconciliation and in his lordship's separate note dated 21.03.2017 passed in this very matter our learned brother Qazi Faez Isa, J. had referred to the Verses of the Holy Qur'an [Surah Al-Baqarah (2) Verses 178-9, Surah Al-Maidah (5) Verse 45, Surah Al-Isra (17) Verse 33 and Surah Ash-Shura (42) Verse 40] wherein our Merciful Creator has suggested that forgiveness and reconciliation is preferable to revenge or retaliation. Without burdening this judgment with copious references in that regard it may suffice to state for the present purposes that the Islamic scholars around the globe agree that Afw (forgiveness) means to hide an act, to obliterate, remove and pardon it and to erase and efface it from the record as if it had never been committed and, likewise, Sulh (reconciliation) means that the act or offence is forgiven and forgotten as if it had never happened. In his A Dictionary of Islam (The Unit Printing Press, Lahore, 1964) Thomas Patrick Hughes had recorded as follows:

> "AFU. Lit. "erasing, cancelling." The word is generally used in Muhammadan books for pardon and forgiveness. It occurs eight times in the Qur'an, e.g. Surah ii. 286, "Lord, make us not to carry what we have not strength for, but forgive us and pardon us and have mercy on us." Surah iv. 46, "Verily God pardons and forgives."
> `Al-'Afu is one of the ninety-nine special names of God. It means "one who erases or cancels;" "The Eraser (of sins)." See Qur'an, Surah iv. 51."

8. According to various dictionaries of English language, reference to which may not be necessary here, setting free from guilt, sin or penalty and forgiveness of an offence is also termed as absolution or absolving of the person concerned. As a consequence of Afw or Sulh resulting in obliteration and removal of the offence and its erasing and effacing from the record the accused person or convict stands absolved of what had been done by him or of what was attributed to him and such absolving effect of the act of compounding is recognized in the following treatises:

English Synonymes Explained In Alphabetical Order; with Copious Illustrations by George Crabb, A. M. (published by LEIPSIC, a New Edition, 1839):

"To ABSOLVE, ACQUIT, CLEAR.

ABSOLVE, in Latin absolvo, is compounded of ab from and solvo to loose, signifying to loose from that with which one is bound.

ACQUIT, in French acquitter, is compounded of the intensive syllable ac or ad, and quit, quitter, in Latin quietus quite, signifying to make easy by the removal of a charge.

These 2 words convey an important distinction between the act of the Creator and the creature.

To absolve is the free act of an omnipotent and merciful being towards sinners; to acquit is the act of an earthly tribunal towards supposed offenders.

By absolution, we are released from the bondage of sin and placed in a state of favour with God; by an acquittal we are released from the charge of guilt, and reinstated in the good estimation of our fellow creatures.

One is absolved from an oath, acquitted of a charge, and cleared from actual guilt.

Absolve is also sometimes used in the sense of setting free from a charge, as from an obligation in which sense it comes still nearer to the words acquit and clear; but it is thus used mostly in the grave style, and carries with it the idea of setting one altogether free from the consequences of a charge."

Crabb's English Synonymes by George Crabb, A. M. (published by Grosset & Dunlap Publishers, New York, 1917):

"ABSOLUTION. See FORGIVE.

ABSOLVE, ACQUIT. Absolve, in Latin absolvo, is compounded of ab, from, and solvere, to loose, signifying to loose from that with which one is bound. Acquit, in French acquitter, is compounded of the intensive syllable ac or ad, and quit, quitter, from Latin quietus, quite, signifying to make easy by the removal of a charge.

These terms imply the setting free from guilt or its consequences. Absolving may sometimes be applied to offences against the laws of man, but more frequently to offences against God; acquitting applies solely to offences against man. The conscience is released by absolution; the body, goods, or reputation are set free by an acquittal.

Absolve, Acquit, Clear. - Absolve in this case, as distinguished from the former article, is extended to all matters affecting the conscience generally. Acquit and clear, in the sense of making clear or free from, are applied to everything which may call for blame, or the imputation of what is not right. A person may be absolved from his oath, acquitted or pronounced quit of every charge, and cleared from every imputation."

Webster's New International Dictionary of the English Language by William Allan Neilson, Thomas A. Knott, Paul W. Carhart (published by G. & C. Merriam Company Publishers, 2nd Edition, 1957):

"Ab-solve'

1. To set free, or release, as from some obligation, debt, or responsibility, or from the consequences of guilt or from such ties as it would be guilt to violate; to pronounce free; as, to absolve a subject from his allegiance.

2. To acquit; to adjudge or pronounce not guilty.

Halifax was absolved by a majority of fourteen. Macaulay.

3. To free from a penalty; to pardon; remit (a sin); - said of the sin or guilt.

In his name I absolve your perjury. Gibbon.

4. To finish; accomplish.

The work begun, how soon absolved. Milton.

5. To resolve or explain, as a difficulty. Obs.

Syn. - Exonerate, discharge, forgive.

See EXCULPATE."

The material mentioned above shows that obliteration and removal of the offence and its erasing and effacing from the record as a result of compounding has the effect of absolving the accused person or convict of the act, acquittal from the charge and clearance from the actual guilt and the legislature in 1898, when section 345, Cr.P.C. was introduced, was aware of the fact that in English language as well as in legal literature the word 'absolve' was synonymous with the words 'acquit' and 'clear'. The legislature was cognizant of the legal position at that time that compounding of an offence ipso facto amounted to absolution which automatically had the effect of acquittal from the charge and clearance from guilt and, therefore, there was hardly any occasion for the legislature to provide in section 345, Cr.P.C. that upon a successful composition of an offence the accused person or convict would be acquitted by the court concerned. It was already understood quite well that compounding of an offence would have an automatic "effect of an acquittal" and that was exactly what was legislated through section 345(6), Cr.P.C. and no need was felt to expressly provide for an order of acquittal to be passed by a court on the basis of compounding.

9. A successful and complete composition of a compoundable offence having the "effect of an acquittal" in terms of section 345(6), Cr.P.C. came under discussion in the cases of Kumarasami Chetty v. Kuppusami Chetty and others (AIR 1919 Madras 879(2)), Ram Richpal v. Mata Din and another (AIR 1925 Lahore 159), Jhangtoo Barai and another v. Emperor (AIR 1930 Allahabad 409), Dharichhan Singh and others v. Emperor (AIR 1939 Patna 141), Mt. Rambai wife of Bahadursingh v. Mt. Chandra Kumari Devi (AIR 1940 Nagpur 181), Godfrey Meeus v. Simon Dular (AIR (37) 1950 Nagpur 91) and Prithvi Bhagat and another v. Birju Sada (AIR 1962 Patna 316) and the ratio decidendi of the said cases is summed up as follows:

(i) A compounding can take place during the trial or during the pendency of an appeal or a revision petition and it can take place even before the case has reached the trial court for trial.

(ii) A complete compounding fulfilling the requirements of sub-section (1) or (2) of section 345, Cr.P.C., as the case may be, cannot be withdrawn or resiled from by any party at any later stage because it has already created the effect of an acquittal of the accused person.

(iii) Composition of a compoundable offence not requiring permission of the court deprives the court of its jurisdiction to try the case or ousts the jurisdiction of the court to try the offence and the court has no other option but to acquit the accused person.

(iv) Composition of a compoundable offence not requiring permission of the court and grant of permission or leave to compound by the relevant court in cases where such permission or leave is required result in immediate acquittal of the accused person.

(v) In some of the above mentioned cases acquittal of the accused person was ordered on the basis of successful and complete composition rather than observing that the composition would only have the effect of an acquittal.

All the above mentioned precedent cases had been taken notice of by this Court in the case of Tariq Mehmood v. Naseer Ahmed and others (PLD 2016 SC 347) but the issue relating to compounding of an offence involved in that case was different from the one under discussion here.

10. In the context of the issue at hand it is of critical importance to notice that the heading of section 345, Cr.P.C. is 'Compounding of offences' and the said heading itself says it all that we are trying to find out. A compounding is in respect of the offence regarding which a person has been accused or convicted and it has no direct relevance to his guilt or punishment or even to his conviction or sentence and this is more so because a compounding can take place even before any finding of guilt or conviction is recorded. Through compounding the offence itself is compounded and resultantly the accused person or convict ipso facto stands absolved of the allegation levelled or the charge framed against him regarding commission of that offence and that is why there is no need for recording his acquittal in that connection because through the act of compounding the offence itself has disappeared or vanished. As already mentioned above, in English language the words "absolve", "acquit" and "clear" are synonymous words and can be used interchangeably in the context of criminal law and this was so acknowledged in the treatises referred to hereinbefore.

11. We find that the controversy over "acquittal" and "effect of an acquittal" in the context of section 345(6), Cr.P.C. and drawing a distinction in this regard between guilt and punishment may be quite unnecessary because for all practical purposes an acquittal or any other dispensation having the effect of an acquittal may not make any difference to the parties to the case or the system of administration of justice in the larger context. An acquittal of an accused person or convict from an allegation or charge of committing an offence entails that he cannot again be subjected to investigation in connection with the same allegation, he cannot be arrested, prosecuted or punished again for committing the same offence and the principle of autrefois acquit enshrined in Article 13(a) of the Constitution of Pakistan and also in section 403, Cr.P.C. becomes applicable to him. The acquittal of an accused person or convict also leads to his release from custody if he is in confinement and discharge of his bail bonds and sureties if he is on bail. Such consequences of an acquittal of an accused person or convict can also quite conveniently be called or termed as effects of his acquittal. In this backdrop the only rationale we can decipher as to why the legislature spoke of "effect of an acquittal" in the context of compounding of an offence and did not use the word "acquittal" in section 345(6), Cr.P.C. is that it could not employ or utilize the word acquittal in that context because an acquittal can be ordered in connection with an existing allegation or charge but where the allegation or the charge itself has disappeared, evaporated or vanished or it stands erased or effaced on account of composition of the offence itself there is hardly any occasion for recording an acquittal. In case of such a metamorphosis brought about by a composition of the offence the best that the legislature could do was to extend all the benefits and effects of an acquittal to the concerned person and this is exactly what had been done by it through the provisions of section 345(6), Cr.P.C.

12. The issue regarding compounding being relevant only to punishment and not to guilt of the accused person or convict may also be viewed from the angle of conviction and sentence and we note in that context that in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 the legislature was quite conscious of the distinction between a conviction and a sentence or, in other words, between guilt and punishment. Section 412, Cr.P.C. speaks of conviction and sentence separately and provides for a situation where relief may be extended only in the matter of sentence and not in the matter of conviction. Sections 169 and 249, Cr.P.C. speak only of an accused person's release pending an investigation or trial when he is in custody without making any mention of his guilt. In the same statute the legislature, if it was so minded, could have provided in section 345, Cr.P.C. that as a result of compounding of an offence the person concerned would be released from custody or that he would not be liable to any punishment but his guilt in the matter would stand undisturbed but the legislature did not say that. In that section the legislature did not even provide for release of the accused person or convict from custody or his acquittal as a consequence of compounding and such silence of the legislature in those regards was a silence which said it all when it mentioned that all the effects of acquittal would automatically flow from the compounding. Such effects of acquittal could not be ordered to flow from the compounding unless the compounding itself amounted to, without saying so, nothing but acquittal by operation of the law. It may be appreciated in this context that an acquittal or the effects of it in criminal law are necessarily relevant to guilt of a person and criminal jurisprudence and law do not envisage or contemplate removal of punishment while impliedly maintaining a person's guilt. Such an approach may be debated in theological or sociological contexts and that too only in an academic sense but for importing the same into criminal jurisprudence and law one would have to rewrite the same which exercise we are neither ready nor equipped or qualified to undertake.

13. The stance sometimes taken in favour of keeping the relevant person's guilt intact while doing away with his punishment on the basis of compounding of an offence is premised upon considerations other than legal. According to this stance such a person should be kept away from public offices and civil services, etc. because he is an adjudged criminal who was once found guilty of an offence but he got away with his punishment because of compounding of the relevant offence. In his separate note recorded in the case of Mureed Sultan and others v. The State through P. G. Punjab and another (2018 SCMR 756) our learned brother Qazi Faez Isa, J. had raised similar concerns in this regard as had been voiced by his lordship in his lordship's separate note dated 21.03.2017 recorded in the present matter. In the said case of Mureed Sultan and others our learned brother had observed as under:

> "7. Some may question the significance of the entire discussion, and enquire, if a court has accepted the application under section 345 of the Code and the convict has been released from jail what difference would his acquittal make. There are grave consequences. A man who has committed murder but is "acquitted" merely because the legal heirs of the murdered person compound the offence, would enable the murderer, for instance, to honestly declare on a job application that he is not and has never been a convict; he could thus be eligible to apply for government employment, be employed as a teacher, be inducted into the Armed Forces, enter the judicial service or even be appointed as a judge of the superior courts. There is then the religious aspect to the discussion. The person who has committed the sin of murder if he professes his guilt or is convicted in this world, and serves out his sentence or is released as a consequence of the legal heirs forgiving him, may be spared the agony of punishment in the Hereafter."

While appreciating the intensity and sincerity of the sentiment expressed and also the gravity of the concerns voiced by our learned brother in respect of different ramifications of the issue not only in the context of public life in this world but also regarding the Hereafter we have, with utmost respect, not been able to bring ourselves to agree with his lordship so as to interpret the existing law in the light of some hypothetical possibilities in this world and retribution or redemption in the Hereafter. It is not for us to consider as to how such a person would be dealt with by Almighty Allah in the next world or on the Day of Judgment as our job is only to interpret and apply the law of the land as it exists. Our short response to such stance is that it is based upon nothing but good intentions and pious wishes, it stems from mere possibilities conjured up by a noble and public-spirited mind, it involves public policy and it is for the legislature to amend the relevant laws, etc. to keep such a person out of the public life, if it so desires and decides. Without introducing appropriate amendments in the criminal law in vogue in the country there is little scope for canvasing such collateral or incidental punishments for a person and as long as the law of the land stands as it is all the fruits and effects of acquittal have to be extended to such person on the basis of a complete and lawful compounding of the offence with him. Be that as it may, this Court has already rejected a similar argument based upon this very stance in the above mentioned case of Chairman Agricultural Development Bank of Pakistan and another v. Mumtaz Khan (PLD 2010 SC 695) with the following observations:

> "9. ------- It has already been clarified by this Court in the case of Dr. Muhammad Islam v. Government of N-W.F.P. through Secretary Food, Agricultural, Live Stock and Cooperative Department, Peshawar (1998 SCMR 1993) as follows:
> "We are inclined to uphold the above view inasmuch as all acquittals even if these are based on benefit of doubt are honourable for the reason that the prosecution has not succeeded to prove their cases against the accused on the strength of evidence of unimpeachable character. It may be noted that there are cases in which the judgments are recorded on the basis of compromise between the parties and the accused are acquitted in consequence thereof. What shall be the nature of such acquittals? All acquittals are certainly honourable. There can be no acquittals, which may be said to be dishonourable. The law has not drawn any distinction between these types of acquittals."

The said precedent case also involved a question of reinstatement in service of an accused person implicated in a criminal case who had been acquitted by the criminal court and this Court had declared that an acquittal had no shades and there was no concept of honourable or dishonourable acquittals. It had specifically been noted by this Court in that case that there could also be cases involving acquittals on the basis of compromise between the parties and after raising a query regarding the status of such acquittals this Court had hastened to add that "All acquittals are certainly honourable". If that be the case then the respondent in the present case could not be stigmatized or penalized on account of his acquittal on the basis of a compromise. -------.

> 10. As regards the submission made by the learned counsel for the appellants based upon the issue of propriety of reinstating in service a person who, by virtue of compounding of an offence of murder, is a self-condemned murderer we may observe that we have pondered over the said issue from diverse angles and have not felt persuaded to agree with the learned counsel for the appellants. Experience shows that it is not always that a compromise is entered into by an accused person on the basis of admission of guilt by him and in many cases of false implication or spreading the net wide by the complainant party accused persons compound the offence only to get rid of the case and to save themselves from the hassle or trouble of getting themselves acquitted from courts of law after arduous, expensive and long legal battles. Even in the present case the respondent and his brother were accused of launching a joint assault upon the deceased upon the bidding and command of their father and before the learned trial court the respondent's brother had maintained in unequivocal terms that he alone had murdered the deceased and the respondent and their father had falsely been implicated in this case. Be that as it may, an ultimate acquittal in a criminal case exonerates the accused person completely for all future purposes vis- -vis the criminal charge against him as is evident from the concept of autrefois acquit embodied in section 403, Cr.P.C. and the protection guaranteed by Article 13(a) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 and, according to our humble understanding of the Islamic jurisprudence, Afw (waiver) or Sulh (compounding) in respect of an offence has the effect of purging the offender of the crime. In this backdrop we have found it difficult as well as imprudent to lay it down as a general rule that compounding of an offence invariably amounts to admission of guilt on the part of the accused person or that an acquittal earned through such compounding may have ramifications qua all spheres of activity of the acquitted person's life, including his service or employment, beyond the criminal case against him. We may reiterate that in the case of Dr. Muhammad Islam (supra) this Court had categorically observed that "All acquittals are certainly honourable. There can be no acquittals, which may be said to be dishonourable. The law has not drawn any distinction between these types of acquittals". The sway of those observations made by this Court would surely also encompass an acquittal obtained on the basis of compounding of the offence. It is admitted at all hands that no allegation had been levelled against the respondent in the present case regarding any illegality, irregularity or impropriety committed by him in relation to his service and his acquittal in the case of murder had removed the only blemish cast upon him. His conviction in the case of murder was the only ground on which he had been removed from service and the said ground had subsequently disappeared through his acquittal, making him reemerge as a fit and proper person entitled to continue with his service."

(underlining has been supplied for emphasis)

14. Ordinarily an acquittal recorded by a trial court in a criminal case means that the charge framed against an accused person in respect of committing an offence has not been proved and he is, thus, judicially exonerated from the allegation. In our country in some special circumstances provided for in sections 249-A and 265-K, Cr.P.C. an acquittal can also be recorded by a trial court even before framing of a formal charge where the allegation levelled is found to be groundless or there is no probability of the accused person's conviction even if a trial is conducted. After an accused person is convicted and sentenced by a trial court he can be acquitted by a higher Court through an appeal or a revision petition and upon such acquittal his conviction and sentence are set aside. Compounding or composition of an offence is, however, a distinct dispensation of its own kind and it has to be understood in its own context without mixing or confusing it with concepts of conviction, sentence and acquittal. The references made above to Roscoe Pound's book, Black's Law Dictionary and Concise Oxford Dictionary show that composition of an offence serves a purpose different from that ordinarily served by the judicial process, i.e. retribution through law. Instead of retribution a composition brings about reconciliation between the parties, it buys off the vengeance of him to whom an injury had been done by buying spear from side rather than bearing it, through it vengeance of the victim is bought off through reparation, it achieves satisfaction for an injury rather than punishment for the injury and it deters acts of revenge by the injured party. Likewise, to compound means to agree not to prosecute a crime, to settle a dispute by concession or special agreement, to condone an offence in exchange for money or any other consideration, to forbear from prosecuting a crime and to come to terms with a person for forgoing a claim, etc. for an offence. We understand that the true meanings and objects of the special dispensation of compounding or composition of offences are to be appreciated and recognized in this context rather than in the narrow context of conviction, sentence and acquittal and this is probably why section 345(6), Cr.P.C. speaks of a composition to have the effect of an acquittal and does not speak of setting aside of conviction and sentence and the resultant acquittal from the charge.

15. Any controversy over the issue that a person's guilt already determined judicially cannot be undone by the victim or his heirs on their own has appeared to us to be misconceived as the same overlooks the provisions of subsections (5) and (5-A) of section 345, Cr.P.C. according to which

> (5) When the accused has been convicted and an appeal is pending, no composition for the offence shall be allowed without the leave of the Court before which the appeal is to be heard.
> (5-A) A High Court acting in the exercise of its power of revision under section 439 and a Court of Session so acting under section 439-A, may allow any person to compound any offence which he is competent to compound under this section.
> (bold letters have been supplied for emphasis)

It is, thus, obvious that in a case where a court has already convicted a person of a compoundable offence and has held him guilty there no compounding of the offence by the victim or his heirs with the convict can take effect or can be said to be successful or complete unless the relevant appellate or revisional court grants leave to compound or allows the proposed composition. The law, therefore, clearly envisages not only involvement but also decision of the relevant court in finalization of the proposed composition of offence in such a case and it cannot be said that guilt of the convicted person is undone by the victim or his heirs on their own. It goes without saying that the matter of granting or refusing leave to compound and allowing or disallowing the same lies in the discretion of the relevant court and before taking a decision in that regard the court concerned has to apply its judicial mind to the facts and circumstances of the case in their totality and also to consider desirability or otherwise of granting permission in that respect. This aspect of the matter had been considered by this Court in the case of Naseem Akhtar and another v. The State (PLD 2010 SC 938) and it was observed as under:

> "5. In the above context, the relevant parts of the section 345(5) and (7), Cr.P.C. are reproduced as below.
>
> "When the accused has been convicted and an appeal is pending, no composition for the offence shall be allowed without the leave of the Court before which the appeal is to be heard."
>
> "No offence shall be compounded except as provided by this section".
> Before proceeding to analyze the noted provision, it may be pertinent to mention here that the expressions "an appeal is pending" and "the Court" appearing ibid (section 345(5) for all intents and purposes of the law shall also mean the leave petition pending before this Court. Be that as it may, because of the use of word `No', in both the subsections the command of law is in the negative form, thus, the composition of an offence is prohibited lacking (without) the leave of the Court. As per the Black's Law Dictionary (Fifth Edition 801), the noted expression is defined to mean "Permission obtained from a Court to take some action which, without such permission, would not be allowable." Thus, the object requiring leave from the Court as per the clear intention of the legislature is neither meaningless nor purposeless and it cannot be construed that while considering the compromise plea, even of a compromise which is lawfully entered, by free consent of the legal heirs, the Court, should act in a mechanical manner and allow the same as a matter of course or routine; should sit as a silent spectator or to conduct as a post office simpliciter and affix a judicial stamp upon it. Rather it is the duty and the prerogative of the Court to determine the fitness of the case for the endorsement and sanction of the compromise and in appropriate cases, where the compromiser and offender is directly or indirectly beneficiary of the crime; the offence is committed or is caused thereof, for an obvious object of grabbing the property of the deceased by the compromiser, through his off spring, who may ultimately benefits himself (the offender) as well, the Court may refuse to give an effect to such a deal, especially coupled with the scenario when the offence is gruesome, brutal, cruel, appalling, odious, gross and repulsive which causes terror and sensation in the society."

(underlining has been supplied for emphasis)

There is no dearth of authority in our country where compounding of offences had been refused by the courts in view of some peculiar features of those cases which fact clearly demonstrates that the ultimate decision whether a compounding of an offence (in serious cases requiring permission or leave of the court as opposed to less serious cases involving petty offences not requiring permission of the court for the purpose) is allowed or not lies with the courts and not with the victims or their heirs. The issues highlighted by our learned brother Qazi Faez Isa, J. and mentioned above may be relevant to the concerned court at the time of granting or refusing permission or leave in respect of the proposed composition but after such permission or leave has been granted by the court and the proposed composition is successfully completed the accused person or convict is to be acquitted and such acquittal is to entail all the fruits and effects of a lawful acquittal. This Court has already declared, as referred to above, that an acquittal has no shades and there are no honourable or dishonourable acquittals.

16. It may be appreciated in this context that the law of the land permits compounding of some offences and through the act of compounding the victim or his heirs absolve the accused person or convict of the guilt and if such composition is allowed or permitted by the relevant court, where required, then because of a successful and complete composition the offence itself vanishes leaving no issue about guilt or otherwise alive. An offence is generally against the State and the society at large but the legislature has made some of the offences compoundable which is a recognition that wishes of the victims or their heirs have an important role in prosecution of such offences and adjudication regarding guilt and punishment therein, subject of course to permission or leave of the court for composition where required. In some of the precedent cases referred to above it had categorically been held that once a composition is complete in respect of a compoundable offence not requiring permission of the court the concerned court is divested of its jurisdiction to try the case or the offence. The references made to Black's Law Dictionary and Concise Oxford Dictionary also amply demonstrate that to compound means to agree not to prosecute a crime, to settle a dispute by concession or special agreement, to condone an offence in exchange for money or any other consideration, to forbear from prosecuting a crime and to come to terms with a person for forgoing a claim, etc. for an offence. The decision not to prosecute a person for a compoundable offence allegedly committed by him or the decision to absolve him of his guilt even where it has been judicially determined are decisions which have been given by the legislature in the hands of the victims or their heirs by making the offence compoundable and in cases where permission or leave of a court is required for composition of such offence this spirit of the law is to be kept in view and the requisite permission or leave may ordinarily not be withheld or refused unless the facts and circumstances of the case persuade the relevant court otherwise. Carrying the spirit of composition (forgiveness and reconciliation) forward we may add that grant of the requisite permission or leave by the court in such cases should be a rule and its withholding or refusal an exception. Composition of a compoundable offence is a concession extended by the legislature and also by the religion of Islam to the victims and their heirs and the same may not lightly be taken away or whittled down by the courts.

17. As a result of the discussion made above we declare the legal position as follows:

(i) As provided by the provisions of section 338-E(1), P.P.C. and the first proviso to the same and as already declared by this Court in the case of Chairman Agricultural Development Bank of Pakistan and another v. Mumtaz Khan (PLD 2010 SC 695) as a result of a successful and complete compounding of a compoundable offence in a case of Ta'zir under section 345, Cr.P.C., with permission or leave of the relevant court where required, an accused person or convict is to be acquitted by the relevant court which acquittal shall erase, efface, obliterate and wash away his alleged or already adjudged guilt in the matter apart from leading to setting aside of his sentence or punishment, if any.

(ii) In the context of the provisions of section 345(6), Cr.P.C. the effect of an acquittal recorded by a court on the basis of a successful and complete compounding of a compoundable offence shall include all the benefits and fruits of a lawful acquittal.

MWA/S-27/S Order accordingly.

Date of hearing: 10th September, 2018.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.--This is a case of an un-witnessed murder, where one Muhammad Azhar alias Mithoo ("victim"), nine years of age, was done to death and his body, in advanced stage of putrefaction, was recovered by the Police on 07.9.2010.

2. The Crime Report (FIR No.400, Police Station B-Division, District Okara, registered on 05.9.2010 under sections 365-A and 302, P.P.C.) states that the deceased, son of the complainant, left the house around 2:30 pm on 5-9-2010 and did not return till evening. The complainant along with two others started searching for the victim but could not find him. The same evening, complainant received a call at 7:15 pm, on his mobile, from an unknown person saying that his son has been kidnapped and demanded ransom of Rs.100,000/- against the return of his son. Subsequently, on 7-9-2010 the dead body of victim was recovered from the 'jawar' fields near Darbar Baba Jaddi Satti, Okara, whereupon the offence under section 302 was added.

3. The appellant after undergoing trial was convicted and sentenced to death under sections 365-A, 302(b), P.P.C. and 7(a),(e) Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 by the trial court and the said conviction and sentence were upheld by the High Court through impugned judgment dated 18.11.2014.

4. Leave was granted in this case on 16.2.2017 to reappraise the evidence. With the assistance of learned counsel for the parties, we have examined the record of the case. Being an unseen occurrence, the case set out by the prosecution is based on circumstantial evidence in the form of last seen evidence, corroborated by the recovery of the ransom amount in the sum of Rs.100,000/- from the appellant and finally by the recovery of the body of the deceased.

5. Ocular account forming the last seen evidence is that the appellant was seen by PW-6 (Muhammed Naeem) at his shop with the victim at 2:15 pm on 05.9.2010 where he had come to rent a motorcycle and by PW-7 (Dildar Ahmed) at 2:20 pm on the same day when the appellant purchased petrol from his shop. The theory of last seen together is one where two persons are 'seen together' alive and after an interval of time, one of them is found alive and the other dead. If the period between the two is short, presumption can be drawn that the person alive is the author of the other's death. Time gap between the sighting and the occurrence should be such as to rule out possibility of somebody else committing the crime. The circumstance of the deceased being last seen in the company of the accused is not by itself sufficient to sustain the charge of murder. There must be evidence to link the accused with the murder of his companion, such as incriminating facts as recovery, strong motive and the proximate time when they were last seen together and the time when the deceased was killed. Last seen evidence as circumstantial evidence must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and should be accepted with great caution. It must be scrutinized minutely so that no plausible conclusion should be drawn therefrom except guilt of the accused.

6. The foundation of the "last seen together" theory is based on principles of probability and cause and connection and requires 1. cogent reasons that the deceased in normal and ordinary course was supposed to accompany the accused. 2. proximity of the crime scene. 3. small time gap between the sighting and crime 4. no possibility of third person interference 5. motive. 6. time of death of victim. The circumstance of last seen together does not by itself necessarily lead to the inference that it was the accused who committed the crime. There must be something more establishing connectivity between the accused and the crime.

7. In the instant case we have observed that according to the statement of PW-6, the appellant is last seen with the victim around 2:15 pm on 5-9-2010 while renting a motorcycle from his shop and then according to the same witness the appellant returns the motorcycle at 3:30 pm the same day, this time the victim is not with him. On the same day, he again rents the motorcycle at 5:00 pm to return it at 6:40 pm. The limited window from 2:15 pm to 3:30 pm on 5-9-2010 could be the probable time of crime in order to complete the continuous chain of events, but there is no evidence to establish this. On the contrary, according to the FIR the call received by the complainant was at 7:15 pm on 5-9-2010 demanding ransom in return for the victim and as per statement of the complainant (PW-8) he received a similar call on 7-9-2010, both the calls imply that the victim was alive at the time.

8. The exact time of death is not fully certain. The dead body was recovered on 7-9-2010 and the Post Mortem Report conducted the same night described the external appearance of the dead body to be in "advanced stage of putrefaction. Skin and soft tissues over the head, face, neck completely decomposed (Only skeleton remains) .All viscera of skull, chest and abdomen completely autolysis (decomposed) soft tissues, muscles over the remaining body are in advanced stage of putrefaction." This was also supported by the doctor in his statement as PW-1. According to Modi's Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology. the process of putrefaction and its time frame is described as:

> In three to five days or more, the sutures of the skull, especially of children and young persons, are separated, the bones are loosened, and the liquefied brain runs out. The teeth become loose in their sockets and may fall off.
>
> The next stage of putrefaction is known as colliquative putrefaction, which begins from five to ten days or more after death. During this stage, the walls of the abdomen becomes softened, and burst open, protruding the stomach and intestine. The thorax, especially in children burst. The diaphragm is pushed upwards.
>
> If the putrefactive processes still go on, the tissues become soft, loose and are converted into a thick, semi-fluid, black mass. They ultimately separate from the bones, and fall off. The bones are consequently exposed, and the orbits are empty. The cartilages and ligaments are similarly softened, and ultimately the bones are destroyed, so that after some years no trace of body is left. The time taken up by these changes varies considerably with temperature and the medium in which the body lies.

(emphasis supplied)

The advanced stage of putrefaction as described in the Post Mortem Report begins five to ten days or more after death, therefore, the possibility of death of the victim prior to 5-9-2010 cannot be ruled out. The Inquest Report (Ex. PM) is noticeably dated 7-8-2010, a month before the recovery of the dead body. Column 3 of the said Report does not give any date or time of death. Nothing is on the record to show that the prosecution had moved the trial court or any authority for the correction of this date.

9. The Crime Report, as well as, the Statement of the complainant (PW-8) refers to telephone calls received on 5-9-2010 and 7-9-2010 by an unknown person. There is no evidence on the record to establish that these calls were received by the complainant and were linked to the appellant. The recovery memo of the mobile of the accused (Ex. PK) carries a SIM different from the number of the unknown caller mentioned in the FIR. In the absence of any such evidence, the alleged meeting of the complainant and the appellant for payment of ransom at Chak 49-2-L Dhayas and the pointing out of the victim by the accused seem improbable. It is, however, unimaginable that a person repeatedly demanding ransom has actually already murdered the victim. This also demolishes the motive of kidnapping for ransom. The bank notes of the ransom amount were not marked or signed by any Magistrate, hence its alleged recovery by the Police becomes suspect.

10. The above facts do not draw up a chain of uninterrupted events connecting the accused with the alleged murder. Last seen evidence and its constituents i.e., probability, cause and connection seem to be missing in this case. Appellant is, therefore, entitled to the benefit of doubt. We, therefore, allow this appeal and set aside the conviction and the sentence of the appellant. He is acquitted of the charge in this case and ordered to be released forthwith, if not required to be detained in any other case.

MIAN SAQ1B NISAR, CHAIRMAN.-

C.M.A.No.13/2017:

The applicant is a Judge of the Islamabad High Court. Proceedings in terms of Ardcle 209 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 (the Constitution) are pending against him before the Supreme Judicial Council (SJC). He has moved an application that the proceedings be held in open Court. In this context he has challenged Paragraph 13 of the Supreme Judicial Council Procedure of Inquiry 2005 (the Procedure), which provides that proceedings be conducted in-camera. According to the applicant, despite the aforesaid paragraph, holding proceedings in secret is violative of the fundamental rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution. It is stated in the application and was argued by his counsel Mr. Hamid Khan, learned Sr. ASC, that any adverse recommendation made by the SJC against the applicant will form the basis of his removal from the constitutional office of a Judge, stigmatize the applicant (and his family) for the rest of his life, deprive him of his pensionary benefits and no right of appeal or review is available to him in case of an adverse report which will be final and conclusive for all intents and purposes. It was argued that Paragraph 13 notwithstanding, proceedings conducted in-camera against the applicant would be violative of the provisions of Articles 4, 10-A, 14 and 25 of the Constitution. Given the serious consequences of any adverse finding, the rule of proportionality weighs heavily in favour of open public proceedings. To conduct an open trial is not only a fundamental right of the applicant but a cardinal rule of administration of justice; thus as a matter of right and course the applicant is entitled to an open trial and holding of in-camera proceedings should be an exception. It was submitted that the applicant's case does not fall within any of the exceptions recognized by law for conducting in-camera proceedings, such as in matters pertaining to the rights of lunatics, minors, females or on account of public safety or the security of the country. It was also argued that justice must not only be done but must be seen to be done and this is only possible through an open trial. An open trial in the matter would provide comfort and confidence to the applicant that he had been judged by his peers in open proceedings so that in case there was no adverse finding against the applicant by the SJC, there would remain no doubt in the mind of the public that no case of misconduct was made out against the applicant and he would be able to conduct himself with full confidence. Conversely if there is no report and the proceedings are simply dropped, there would remain an element of doubt in the mind of the public. In support of his contentions, he relied upon on the judgments reported as Zulfikar Ali Bhutto v. The State (PLD 1979 SC 63) and Mrs. Shahida Zahir Abbasi and 4 others v. President of Pakistan and others (PLD 1996 SC 632). Learned counsel for the applicant at the very outset of his submissions, in the presence of his client, stated on his client's behalf and instructions that "I have full confidence in the Council if the proceedings are held in camera or in the open".

2. Heard. In Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto's case (supra), paragraph No.365 at page 179 provides as follows:-

> "365. It will thus be seen that it is an essential and salutary principle of administration of justice that it must not only be done but should also appear to be done. This necessarily carries with it the > right to an open trial in the full gaze of the public, including the Press. This in turn leads to a healthy, fair and objective administration of justice calculated to promote public confidence in the Court and is conducive to dispel all misgivings about it. There can be no two opinions about it. But this rule, on all accounts, is not a rigid and inflexible one, and must not be pressed to its breaking point in defeating the very ends of justice. It admits of exceptions and cases may arise whereby following this rule for an open trial justice may itself be defeated. A Court of law exists for the administration of justice. The primary function and the ultimate goal before a Court is to do justice between the parties. However, as seen, above, there is no dearth of cases in which the very requirement of the administration of justice in itself demands that a trial may be held in private or in camera and an open public trial is likely to result in the stultification of justice. In this category are included cases within the parental jurisdiction of the Court for the safeguard of the interests of the ward or lunatics. But it is, nonetheless, not possible to prepare an exhaustive list of all such cases. In fact each case must be judged on its own facts in this respect. Indeed even the Legislature has also, in its wisdom, expressly provided for the holding of trials in camera under some of the statutes in force in this country."

Mrs. Shahida Zahir Abbasi's case (supra) at page 676 also refers to similar reasons for preferring an open trial "unless there are some very compelling reasons justifying the camera trial of the accused officer". As the case concerned a Court Martial, the eventual decision as to whether the trial ought to be conducted in-camera or open Court was left to the Court Martial itself. The rule which can be culled from the aforesaid judgments is that in cases pertaining to the determination of the civil rights or criminal liabilities of a person, ordinarily a case should be tried in open court, subject to the exceptions provided in these judgments or any other exception which may warrant in-camera proceedings in the specific facts and circumstances of the case or if specifically provided by law. Thus, irrespective of the consequences pointed out by Mr. Hamid Khan, the question is whether the proceedings before the SJC under Article 209 of the Constitution, are in the nature of determination of civil rights and/or criminal liabilities and whether this forum is a court. In this regard, the nature and the scope of the proceedings before the SJC has been succinctly expressed in The President v. Mr. Justice Shaukat Ali (PLD 1971 SC 585 at page 602) in the following words:-

> "Moreover, an inquiry into the conduct of a Judge is neither a criminal indictment nor even a quasi-criminal proceeding but it is, in our opinion, mainly an administrative proceeding conducted by a domestic forum to examine the professional fitness of a Judge. The subject-matter of these proceedings is neither civil rights and duties nor criminal liabilities. It is simply the conduct of a judge which is to be properly reviewed in the interest of the purity and honour of the judiciary. The forum consists of Judges of superior Courts who also belong to the same profession. To be tried by one's peers is a protection because they understand one's difficulties, problems and the situation in which one was. Doctors, architects, accountants and lawyers aim at having and have their domestic tribunals, that is to say, the tribunals which judge their conduct are manned by their own peers".

Mr. Justice Sheikh Shaukat Ali's case (supra) also provides an answer to the remarks made by Mr. Hamid Khan that the Procedure has no force of law because it has neither been framed under the Constitution nor any other law. In this context the judgment, at page 602, ibid provides:-

> "Learned counsel, in putting forward this extreme contention has unfortunately overlooked the fact that no procedure has been provided even for an inquiry into the conduct or capacity of a Judge, and thus the Supreme Judicial Council has been made the so+le judge of its own procedure. It can follow any procedure which is just and equitable."

In the judgment reported as Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan through Secretary and others (PLD 2010 SC 61) while examining the status and the nature of the proceedings before the SJC it was concluded that:--

> "96. The conclusion is thus inevitable that the Supreme Judicial Council is a forum created by the Constitution but the Constitution itself has refused to grant it the status of a court.
> 97. Although, having discovered the verdict of the Constitution itself about the status of the S.J.C., it may no longer be necessary to say anything more on the subject but it may be of some help to mention the further insight provided to us by the Constitution vis-a-vis the said issue. The proceedings which take place before the S.J.C. have been described, by Article 209 of the Constitution, as an inquiry and not a trial. It is too well known by now that an inquiry is only a fact-finding and not a right-determining exercise and further that the courts ordinarily hold trials and finally pronounce upon the rights of the parties if the proceedings were of a civil nature or declare the guilt or innocence of the accused persons if the proceedings were of a criminal or a quasi-criminal nature. The courts of law deliver judgments and pass orders which are final, enforceable and executable and do not submit reports. But according to clause (6) of the abovementioned Article 209, what is produced by the S.J.C. as a result of the proceedings taken by it is only a report which is to be submitted/sent to the President. Although the opinion of the SJC about the fitness of a Judge receives quietus but it has no power to make a final pronouncement which could PROPRIO VIGORE be binding on and create rights and obligations between the parties and consequently could not order removal of a Judge from office who is found unfit by it to hold the said office. In fact, as declared by this Court in the case of KHAN ASFAND YAR WALI (PLD 2001 SC 607) and in the case of MALIK ASAD (PLD 1998 SC 161), the findings of the S.J.C. and its report to the President were only "recommendatory in nature". It may be added that if the intention of the framers of the Constitution was to have the inquiry in question conducted by a court then it would be absurd to expect the Constitution to first create a Council and then to expect us to stretch all limits and confer the status of a court on the said Council for the said purpose when the same object could have been achieved by assigning the said task to an already existing court like it had been done through Article 169 of the 1956 Constitution which had cast this obligation on the Supreme Court itself with respect to the High Court Judges.
> 98. Having thus examined the relevant legal and constitutional provisions and also having surveyed the case law, I am of the opinion that the true status of the Supreme Judicial Council is the one suggested by Syed Sharif-ud-Din Pirzada, the learned Sr. ASC appearing for the President of Paldstan while placing reliance on MR. JUSTICE SHAUKAT ALI'S CASE (PLD 1971 SC 585 at 602) wherein the said status had been determined as under:-
> "Moreover, an inquiry into the conduct of a Judge is neither a criminal indictment nor even a quasi-criminal proceedings, but it is, in our opinion, mainly an ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDINGS conducted by a DOMESTIC FORUM to examine the professional fitness of a Judge. The subject-matter of these proceedings is neither civil rights and duties nor criminal liabilities. It is simply the conduct of a Judge which is to be properly reviewed in the interest of the purity and honour of the judiciary. The forum consists of judges of superior courts who also belong to the same profession. To be tried by one's peers is a protection because they understand one's difficulties, problems and the situation in which one was. DOCTORS, ARCHITECTS, ACCOUNTANTS AND LAWYERS aim at having and have THEIR DOMESTIC TRIBUNALS, that is to say, the tribunals which judge their conduct are manned by their own peers." (Emphasis and underlining has been supplied)

99. Since nothing could be offered by Sahibzada Ahmed Raza Qasuri, ASC or even by Malik Muhammad Qayyum, ASC to come to any conclusion different from the one reached through MR. JUSTICE SHAUKAT ALI'S CASE, therefore, I agree with Syed Sharifud-Din Pirzada, Sr. ASC appearing for the President of Pakistan, with Mr. Makhdoom Ali Khan, the learned Attorney General for Pakistan and Mr. Aitizaz Ahsan, Sr. ASC for the petitioner and hold that while the Supreme Judicial Council may have some attributes and trappings of a court of law but it was neither intended by the Constitution to be a court nor, could any such status be conferred on it in view of the relevant constitutional provisions. It is, at best, a fact-finding domestic forum set up by the Constitution to look into the affairs of the Judges of the Superior Judiciary. 1 may, however, add that the said Council is entitled to the highest of respect because at least three of its members are the most senior Judges of the country. And before parting with this aspect of the matter, it may also be added that only because some holder of some public office or some forum stood blessed with the power to award punishment for contempt, was never by itself, sufficient to constitute such a person or a forum, as a court. Of the umpteen number of examples available in our corpus juris, I shall quote just one. The Federal Ombudsman (the Wafaqi Mohtisib) created under the Establishment of the Office of Wafaqi Mohtisib (Ombudsman) Order No.1 of 1983, has power to punish its contemnors vide Article 16 of the said Order but nobody has ever said that the Ombudsman was a court only because it could impose punishment for its contempt."

The ratio of the afore-quoted judgment(s) settles the issue about the scope and the nature of the proceedings conducted under Article 209 of the Constitution and the status of the SJC. Further, we came across a judgment of the Privy Council {George Meerabus v. The Attorney General of Belize [(2005) 2 AC 513]}, the brief facts of which are that a Judge of the Supreme Court of Belize was removed from office by the Governor-General on the advice of the Belize Advisory Council (BAC). He claimed that his rights under Sections 3(a), 6(1) and 6(8) of the Belize Constitution had been infringed and asked the Court to make a declaration to that effect and award damages. He raised two main pleas: firstly, regarding the bias of the BAC and secondly, that under the Constitution he was entitled to a public hearing of the matter which was denied to him by the BAC during the course of the inquiry conducted against him. Both these pleas were rejected by the Privy Council and the reason cited in the context of the latter plea is relevant for our purposes, that "The BAC is not part of the Judiciary. It is an independent body, uniquely constituted as part of the executive. The functions that are conferred on it are not judicial functions of the kind contemplated by section 6(8)". It was further held that though the Judge was entitled to a fair hearing but "Fairness does not always require such proceedings to be held in public...The question whether the proceedings are fair must be determined by looking at the proceedings as a whole."

3. In the light of the above we are of the view that the SJC is not a court; the proceedings before the SJC do not determine the civil rights or criminal liabilities of a Judge against whom the proceedings are being conducted. Therefore, the request for an open trial of the proceedings on the touchstone of Articles 4, 10-A, 14 and 25 of the Constitution is not well founded. We are also not persuaded to hold that after the inclusion of Article 10-A into the Constitution, the legal position has changed and that the SJC has attained the status of a court and that the proceedings before the SJC should be conducted like a civil or criminal trial. The contention that on account of in-camera proceedings any prejudice would be likely to be caused to the applicant is absolutely unfounded because firstly, full confidence in the SJC has been expressed by the learned counsel for the applicant, as stated above. Besides, at the very beginning of the proceedings it was made clear to the applicant and. to Mr. Makhdoom Ali Khan, learned Sr. ASC representing him earlier, that the proceedings would be conducted in a fair and transparent manner and that the rules of natural justice would be duly observed. In this regard a show cause notice was issued to the applicant along with the information and material against him was also provided to him; he has filed his reply thereto; the statement of allegations has been served upon him and the learned Attorney General for Pakistan has been required to conduct the reference. For the purposes of establishing the allegations contained in the complaint the affidavits of the witnesses who intend to depose in support of the complainant will be filed through the learned Attorney General for Pakistan. The applicant will be entitled to receive an advance copy of the affidavits. He shall have the right to cross-examine the witnesses. All the documentary material brought on the record during the course of inquiry shall also be delivered to the applicant, who will have the right to controvert such material. He will also be entitled to produce oral and documentary material in support of his defence. If the assistance of the SJC is required, the same shall be duly provided to the applicant. All these steps conform to the utmost rules of fairness in proceedings, natural justice, transparency and due process of law. The only reason assigned in the application and propounded before us in support of the notion of an open trial was that only if the proceedings are made public will transparency and fairness be achieved: this, in our considered view is not well-founded. It is on account of the sanctity of the institution and the dignity of the applicant and other Judges whose matters are inquired into by the SJC that in-camera proceedings are expedient. It is in the larger interests of the judiciary that the proceedings are not conducted in open Court, as the issues brought before the SJC and the allegations levelled may ultimately be proved to be false, frivolous, vexatious. Thus, the holding of in-camera proceedings is absolutely in line with the principles laid down in the opinions of this Court in Mr. Justice Shaukat Ali (supra) and Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry (supra). Further, we do not find that Paragraph 13 supra is ultra vires the Constitution or that the proceedings conducted in the present manner would deny the applicant the right to defend himself in a robust and meaningful manner. Therefore we do not find any merit in this application which is accordingly dismissed.

For the petitioners: Mian Arshad Jan, AAG

Respondent: N.R

Date of Hearing: 08.05.2018

JUDGMENT

Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J.- The question before this Court is whether amendment brought about in Rule 7 of the North West Frontier Province Fisheries Rules, 1976 ("the Rules") through sub-rule 1 (vii), is ultra vires the West Pakistan Fisheries Ordinance, 1961 ("the Ordinance")?

2. The matter arises out of writ petition filed by the respondents before the Peshawar High Court, challenging the said amendment on the above score. The petition was allowed and the amendment was set aside through impugned judgment dated 06.08.2013.

3. Challenging the said judgment, learned AAG on behalf of the petitioners, argued that the Provincial Government is empowered under Section 26 of the Ordinance to make Rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the Ordinance. As the Ordinance relates to fisheries, the sale of "cooked or uncooked fish in commercial, market, shop, hotel," etc falls within the domain of the Ordinance, hence the impugned amendment is intra vires the Ordinance.

4. We have examined the question of law raised before us and have gone through the relevant law and the record of the case. The respondents are private individuals, who deal in the sale of cooked and uncooked fish at Ghantaghar Bazaar, Peshawar. However, in order to answer the question raised, we have to first examine the purpose, object and scope of the Ordinance.

5. In common parlance, "Fishery" means a place where fish are reared, or caught in numbers or the occupation or industry of catching or rearing fish[1]. In legal parlance, "fishery" means right or liberty of taking fish.[2] "Right of fishery," generally means the right of persons to fish in public waters, subject to federal and state restrictions and regulations, such as fishing seasons, licensing and catch limits.[3]

6. The Ordinance has been promulgated to regulate fisheries in the public waters in the Province. Under the Ordinance, right to catch fish in any public water can be leased out, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed. It further provides that no person shall use or employ for the capture of any species of fish specified in any water other than private water, or use any net or cage or trap or other contrivance for taking fish or fixed engine[4] except during the period permitted, in respect of such species, through a license issued under the Ordinance (see section 9). Regulating the sector further, the Ordinance prohibits destruction of fish by explosives or destruction of fish by poisoning water and specifies the size of fish which shall not be killed, captured or possessed (see sections 4, 6, 7 and 8). The licenses issued under the Ordinance are subject to the payment of fee as prescribed under the Rules. The Government is also empowered to make Rules under Section 26, inter alia, to prescribe for fees to be charged for any license.

7. The Ordinance provides for regulation of the right of fisheries in "water" as opposed to "private water' which means water which is the exclusive property of any person…" Rules define the term "public water" in the following manner:-

> "2(e) Public water means water other than the private water and includes:
>
> (i) All natural bodies of water, such as rivers and their tributaries creeks, brooks, lakes, channels, canal or lagoons or dug, dredged or blasted canals;
>
> (ii) Any water impounded by the construction of any lake or dam or other impounding device across the channel of navigable stream;
> (iii) Flowing water within which fish are free to move across property limit and which are not by law or customs property of any person;"

From the above it is abundantly clear that the purpose and object of the Ordinance is to regulate fishery or the taking and catching of fish in public water. The Ordinance regulates public domain and deals with public rights and has no concern with private water or any other private activity relating to fish. For reference see: Naseer Muhammad

[4] Defined in section 2(c) of the Ordinance to mean any net, cage, trap, or other contrivance for taking fish, fixed in the soil or made stationery in any other way.

v. Province of Sindh (PLD 2008 Karachi 359) and Jamaluddin v. Shahmurad (PLD 1976 Karachi 174).

8. The amendment brought about in Rule 7 (1) (vii) is as under:-

For the purpose of sale of fish cooked or uncooked in commercial, Market, shop, hotel, motel, tent, hut, Cart or open space etc.

Rs. 2000/-

Per year

The impugned amendment in the Rule deals with the sale of cooked or uncooked fish by private individuals, in commercial, market, shop, hotel, etc. The Ordinance does not deal with sale of cooked or uncooked fish, but simply restricts itself to fishery i.e., taking, catching or rearing of fish in the public domain. The impugned amendment falls outside the scope of the Ordinance and is, therefore, ultra vires the Ordinance and like fish out of water. The Government was not empowered to promulgate such a Rule under Section 26 of the Ordinance. For reference see: Khawaja Ahmad Hassan v. Government of Punjab (2005 SCMR 186).

9. We, therefore, agree with the reasoning of the High Court to this extent only and uphold the striking down of Rule 7(1)(vii) of the Rules for being ultra vires the Ordinance. Leave is, therefore, refused and this petition is dismissed.

JUDGMENT

YAHYA AFRIDI, J.---Through the instant Civil Appeal, Taj Wali Shah, (appellant-plaintiff) has challenged the judgment dated 19.02.201.5 passed by the Peshawar High Court, Peshawar vide which Civil Revision (C.R. No.524-P of 2014) was accepted and the suit of present appellant was declared as not being maintainable.

2. Taj Wali Shah instituted a suit seeking possession by ejectment of Bakhti Zaman (defendant-respondent) from a house measuring 18 marlas situated in Khasra No.1493 Mousia Sher Garh (disputed house) on the basis of being owner vide sale deed No.207 dated 31.03.2010 (sale deed), default in payment of rent vide Karaya-Nama dated 23.06.1982 (rent deed), illegal alteration thereon, and for his personal use; recovery of outstanding rent; and permanent injunction.

3. Bakhti Zaman, in response to the averments made in the plaint, contested the same in his written statement, claiming that the disputed house was the legacy of his predecessor, which has been in their possession as owners for the last 80/90 years. In support of his claim, it was averred that the gas meter installed in the disputed house was under his uncle's name. He also contested the sale deed and further denied ever residing in the disputed house as a tenant.

4. The Trial Court reduced the contested pleadings of the parties into 11 issues, and allowed the parties to adduce their respective evidence. Finally, the Trial Court vide its judgment and decree dated 12.03.2013 decided the suit in favour of Taj Wali Shah in terms that:

> "The upshot of above discussion is that the plaintiff is the owner of the suit house. The defendant is a tenant under the plaintiff. The defendant is a defaulter in the payment of rent so he is liable to eviction and plaintiff is awarded decree as prayed for."

5. Being aggrieved, Bakhti Zaman impugned the decision of the Trial Court in appeal before the Appellate Court, which also met the same fate vide judgment and decree dated 17.05.2014 in the following terms:

> "Plaintiff/respondent has proved his case and the defendant/appellant has failed to prove his stance. Thus, findings of the trial court on all the issues except issues Nos.09 and 10 are based on proper appreciation of evidence. Findings on issues Nos.09 and 10 need trial modification in light of discussion made above. Therefore, judgment and decree of the trial court is upheld with modification to the extent of determination of the amount of rent. Appeal in hand is dismissed to extent of ejection and permanent injunction, being devoid of merit while it is partially allowed to extent of modification of findings regarding the amount of rent."

6. This led Bakhti Zaman to challenge the above decision in Civil Revision before the High Court, which was finally decided in his favour, essentially on the following premise:

> "Any suit under section 8 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, could be filed by any person entitled to the possession of specific immovable property on the basis of his title and where the title is disputed one a suit under section 42, for declaration, under Specific Relief Act, 1877, is to be filed. Where a suit for possession, on the basis of a title which is disputed one, creating a cloud over his title, he must seek a declaration to his right, first."

And finally, after reviewing the evidence on the record, the High Court came to the conclusion that:

> "In view of the above, it can safely be held that both the courts below have ignored the fact by misreading and non-reading of evidence, that respondent/plaintiff is not the absolute owner of the property in dispute and his titled is defected one, therefore, suit under section 8 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, was not maintainable and in such like situation a suit for declaration under section 42 of the Act, ibid was competent, thus, both the impugned judgments of the lower courts are set aside and the suit of the respondent/plaintiff is dismissed being not maintainable in the given circumstances."

7. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and with their valuable assistance have gone through the available record.

8. The entire controversy in the present case revolves around the scope and the true purport of section 8 of Specific Relief Act, 1877 (Act of 1877), which reads as follows:

"8. Recovery of specific immovable property.

A person entitled to the possession of the specific immovable property may recover it in the manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure."

9. On careful reading of the aforementioned section, it is noted that the same provides for two essential elements in a suit for recovery of a specific, immovable property; firstly, it identifies the person, who may seek the remedy under this, section; and secondly, it specifies that said remedy is to be invoked and tried in accordance with the forum and procedure provided under the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

10. The present case deals with the first part of section 8 supra, which relates to the right of a person entitled to possession under the law. This right to seek possession is anchored on the word entitled, and to understand the meaning thereof, we will have to examine the true intent of the legislature in inserting the said word in section, 8 supra. For this purpose, guidance may be sought from Narotam Singh Bindra's Interpretation of Statutes (Tenth Edition), wherein it is explained that:

"The primary and foremost task of a court in interpreting a statute is to ascertain the intention of the legislature, actual or imputed. The words of the statute are to be construed so as to ascertain the mind of the legislature from the natural and grammatical meaning of the words which it has used."

11. Now, the Oxford dictionary meaning of the word entitle is, "often be entitled to give (someone) a legal right or a just claim to receive or do something", while Black's Law Dictionary (Tenth Edition) defines the term to be ".... grant a legal right to or qualify for". It appears that the true intent of the legislature, as gathered from the ordinary meaning of the word entitled coupled with the natural spirit and the very reason of the provision, was to extend the scope of the right to seek possession to those persons who are eligible or qualified under the law to seek possession of an immovable property. This would thus include; an owner, lessor, lessee, mortgagee or mortgagee of immovable property, trustee or beneficiary of a trust.

12. Had the intention been to restrict the scope of the right to seek the possession to only owners, then the legislature would have expressly provided so, which it did not. In fact, any right vested in a person to seek his remedy under the law should be liberally construed, as this would bolster his recognised fundamental right of access to justice. In consonance with the same line of thought, the Indian Supreme Court in Nair Service Society Ltd. v. K.C. Alexander and others (AIR 1968 SC 1165) went on to extend the scope of section 8 supra to a possessor, by enunciating that:

"Section 8 of the Specific Relief Act does not limit the kinds of suit but only lays down that the, procedure laid down by the Code of Civil Procedure must be followed. This is very different from saying that a suit based on possession alone is incompetent after the expiry of 6 months. Under section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure itself all suits of a civil nature are triable excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred."

13. Let us now address the preliminary objection of the learned counsel for the respondent; that Taj Wali Shah could not seek possession under section 8 supra without praying for a declaration of his title over the disputed house. This issue has been aptly commented upon in a recent judgment of this Court passed in the case of Hazratullah and others v. Rahim Gul and others (PLD 2014 SC 380), in terms that:

> "... it may be held that in a suit under section 8 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, the declaration of the entitlement is an inbuilt relief claimed by the plaintiff of such a case. Once the plaintiff is found to be entitled to the possession, it means that he/she has been declared to be entitled, which includes the declaration of title of the plaintiff qua the property."

14. Interestingly, in the present case, the trial Court, in fact, framed two issues relating to the contesting claim of title over the disputed house to the effect:

> "..... 7 Whether the defendant is the owner of the disputed house?
> 8. Whether the plaintiff is the owner of the disputed house vide Iqrar-Nama dated 31.03.2010? "

15. In furtherance to the aforementioned two issues framed by the trial Court, and the evidence adduced by the parties in support of their respective claims to title over the disputed house, the trial Court passed a definite finding in favour of Taj Wali Shah. This finding transcended into an express declaration of title in the decree, when no specific prayer for title of the disputed house was sought by Taj Wali Shah in his plaint. This being so, it reaffirms the ratio of Hazratullah's case supra, that in a suit under section 8 of the Act of 1877, there is ordinarily an inbuilt prayer for the declaration of entitlement to possession, which is sought by the plaintiff. In view of the express declaration of title in the decree passed by the trial Court, the preliminary objection of the respondent and direction of the High Court, for Taj Wali Shah to first seek a declaration of title under section 42 of the Act of 1877 before filing a suit for possession under section 8 supra was not justified, and in the circumstances of the present case it would in fact be an exercise in legal futility.

16. A very crucial admitted position in the present case having serious legal consequences was that the disputed house was situated within the 'Abadi Deh' (village site), and this fact warranted the evidence relating to the transactions of proprietary rights therein to be viewed in the light of the special principles governing the said area. Firstly, the transfer of proprietary rights in favour of Taj Wali Shah vide the sale deed could not be recorded under section 42 of the West Pakistan Land Revenue Act, 1967, as the village site has been, under section 3 supra, expressly excluded from the applicability thereof. Secondly, Bakhti Zaman, despite being in possession of the disputed house, was unable to prove that he was a member of the proprietary body of the village site of Sher Gargh. In fact, his own uncle, Ali Mohammad (DW2) clearly admitted that Bakhti Zaman was from another village in Mauza Qasmi. This being so, Bakhti Zaman could only be put in peaceful possession of any piece of the land in the village site of Sher Gargh through a valid transfer or legacy, which he failed to prove. Thirdly, Salah-ud-Din and Siraj-ud-Din were proved to be members of the proprietary body of the village site of Sher Gargh, being sons of Amir-ud-Din, as reflected in the Pedigree Table (Exp PW4/1). It was also brought on record that Amir-ud-Din had expired and was survived by a widow, four sons including Siraj-ud- Din and Salah-ud-Din, and four daughters. Finally, had Bakht Zaman, even without proving his claimed legacy, established himself to be member of the proprietary body of the village site, he could then have claimed the status of a co-owner of the disputed property, and in such circumstances, the challenge made to his possession by Taj Wali Shah under section 8 of the Act of 1877 would not have been maintainable. The remedy then available to Taj Wali Shah would have been to seek possession of the disputed house through partition only and, not by a suit under section 8 of the Act of 1877.

17. The impugned decision of the High Court reveals that the above crucial principles relating to transfer of immovable property in Abadi Deh; particularly, the legal position of the transfer of proprietary interests of immovable property in Abadi Deh, the legal standing of a member of proprietary body of Abadi Deh vis-a-vis that of an outsider, and finally, the locus standi of a co-owner seeking possession of the property under section 8 of the Act of 1877 were not taken into proper consideration, resulting in an error warranting legal correction.

18. Now to the contested claims of title over the disputed house. To appreciate the evidence produced by the parties, it would be essential to keep in view that Taj Wali Shah had instituted the suit for possession, as owner of the disputed house, which was in the possession of Bakhti Zaman. In such circumstances, the onus to prove the title of the disputed house rested upon Taj Wali Shah's shoulders under the mandate of Articles 117, 118, 119 and most importantly 126 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984 (Order of 1984).

19. This brings us to examine, whether Taj Wali Shah had discharged his onus in proving his said claim or otherwise. In civil cases, facts are to be proved on preponderance of evidence adduced by the parties. The enabling provisions of the Order of 1984 casting the onus of proof upon a party would only become relevant when ago evidence worth its while is produced by the plaintiff or when the Court is unable to decide the issue, as the evidence on the record is so evenly balanced.

20. On combing through the evidence on the record, it is noted that Taj Wali Shah was able to establish the link between Salah-ud-Din and his family and the disputed house through the testimony of two PESCO representatives, who were independent witnesses. It was proved that the electric supply meter in the disputed house was installed in the name of Siraj-ud-Din and that there was also a disconnection order thereof (Exp PW3/1). In addition, the rent deed (Ex PW6/l) was also produced in evidence without protest of Baktai Zaman. In contrast, apart from peaceful possession, Bakhti Zaman was unable to produce any reliable evidence that linked him to the disputed house; the claimed legacy and the gas, and electric meters of the disputed house under his uncle's name were not proved through any reliable evidence.

21. In view of the above, the preponderance of evidence surely tilted in favour of Taj Wali Shah, as he was able to discharge the onus to the extent that he had stepped into the shoes of the original owners. However, to what extent, it is noted that his status as a sole owner of the disputed house was not proved. It is noted that the sale deed, despite its admission in evidence without protest of Bakhti Zaman, was not executed by all the co-owners of the disputed house and, there was no valid power of attorney produced in evidence, vesting in Salah-ud-Din or Siraj-ud-Din the executants thereof, to transfer the same. Thus, the sale deed could not be considered a valid instrument, transferring to Taj Wali Shah, the proprietary rights of all the owners of the disputed house; the siblings and mother of Salah-ud-Din. However, the very fact that Salah-ud-Din appeared in the witness box (PW6), and testified to have sold the entire disputed house to Taj Wali Shah cannot be taken lightly. His testimony would legally suffice to transfer his share in the disputed house to Taj Wali Shah, thereby making Taj Wali Shah a co-sharer of the disputed house.

22. As far as the contention of the worthy counsel of the respondent regarding Bakhti Zaman's peaceful entry into the disputed house and his continuous possession thereof, it is noted that the same cannot be ignored. However, when the peaceful possession of Bakhti Zaman is placed in juxtaposition to rights of a co-owner, Taj Wali Shah, the latter would surely prevail. We have the well recognized legal maxims: possessio contra omnes valet praeter eur cui ius sit possessionis (he that hath possession hath right against all but him that hath the very right); adversus extraneous vitiose possessio prodesse solet (prior possession is a good title of ownership against all who cannot show a better), which has been very precisely described in Pollock and Wright on Possession, in terms that:

> "possession in law is a substantive right or interest which exists and has legal instance and advantages apart from the true owner's title".

23. The above legal position has been well recognized not only in the Common Law, but also in the law as it has developed in the sub continent. In fact, the Privy Council more than a century ago in Perry v. Clissold ([1907] AC 73) maintained the said stance, which has since then been reaffirmed by our courts. The view then expressed by the Privy Council was in terms that:

"It cannot be disputed that a person in possession of land in the assumed character of owner and exercising peaceably by ordinary rights of ownership has a perfectly good title against all the world but the rightful owner."

24. The above principle has now crystallised and, it is legally settled that the person in possession of an immovable property acquires a vested right to possession, which cannot be taken away unless the challenge is made thereto by a person who shows prior or better title through transfer or inheritance. One has to be mindful that this right is subject to legislation, as is witnessed in Abadi Deh in the Province of Punjab under Punjab Conferment of Proprietary Rights on Non-Proprietors in Abadi Deh Act, 1995. We have been informed that no such legislation has been introduced in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa rendering protection to possessory rights in Abadi Deh. Accordingly, the rights of Taj Wali Shah, as a co-owner would prevail over that of Bakhti Zaman, as a possessor.

25. Now that we have settled that the rights of a co-owner of an undivided property in Abadi Deh would prevail over the rights of a mere possessor thereof, let us now address the next crucial issue: whether a co-owner could seek possession of the entire property against a possessor under section 8 of the Act of 1877. This issue has been dealt in Bashir Ahmad and others v. Parshotam and others (AIR 1929 Oudh 337) wherein it has been held as follow:

"I must again point out a well settled rule of law, which has been laid down in numerous cases both by their Lordships of the Privy Council as well as by this court and the other High Court in India. The rule is that if a property belongs to several co-sharers and one co-sharer is in possession of the entire property, his possession cannot be deemed to be adverse to other co-sharers. He must be deemed to be in possession on behalf of other co-sharers and adverse possession cannot be founded on the basis of such exclusive possession, unless there has been an ouster of the other co-sharers. The ouster takes place when the title of the other co-sharers is denied...

...It is a settled rule of law that one co-sharer can maintain a suit for ejectment in respect of the entire property against a trespasser. The mere act that a co-sharer brings such a suit can, therefore, be no evidence that he denied the title of the other co-sharer. It is a question arising out his exclusive possession, but cannot be no evidence of a denial of the title of the other co-sharers. The suit brought by one co-sharer would in the eyes of law be considered for the benefit of the other co-sharers and the latter would be entitled to take advantage of such proceedings."

26. A similar matter later came up before Andhra Pradesh High Court in the case reported as Kanchi Kamamma and others v. Yerramsetti Appanna (AIR 1973 Andhra Pradesh 201), wherein it has been held as under:

"The mere fact that the alienation is not valid to the extent of half share does not take away this right of the purchaser. He can very well maintain the suit for recovery of possession of the entire property as against every person other than the true owner."

27. The views rendered in the above cases appear to be the correct pronouncement of the law on rights of a co-owner to seek possession of the undivided property: the right of a co-owner to seek possession of the entire undivided property; the possession of the co-owner would be considered to be on behalf of all the co-owners; the said suit of the co-sharer cannot be considered as evidence of his denial of the title of the other co-sharers; the suit brought by said co-sharer would be deemed to be for the benefit of the other co-sharers; and that the co-sharer's possession in consequence of the proceedings under section 8 of the Act of 1877 cannot be deemed as adverse to the other co-sharers.

28. In conclusion, it would be appropriate to recapitulate the important issues discussed and decided herein above. The same are that:

i. Section 8 of the Act of 1877 provides for any person who is 'entitled' to possession of immovable property to seek the same before the Civil Court of competent jurisdiction under section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, (C.P.C.), unless the jurisdiction thereof is impliedly or expressly barred by law.

ii. By employing the word 'entitled' in section 8 of the Act of 1877, the legislature has expanded the scope for those who may seek possession of immovable property under the said section. This right is not only restricted to owners, but to all who are entitled to possession under the law.

iii. In a suit under section 8 of the Act of 1877, there is an inbuilt prayer for the declaration for entitlement to possession being sought by the plaintiff. In such circumstances, a prior declaration for the said entitlement under section 42 supra cannot be made a condition precedent for filing a suit for possession under section 8 of the Act of 1877.

iv. In a suit for possession, as owner of the disputed house, which was in the possession of defendant, the onus to prove the title of the disputed house rests upon the plaintiff under the mandate of Articles 117, 118, 119 and most importantly 126 of the Order of 1984.

v. When a co-owner of the disputed property seeks possession from another co-owner, who is in peaceful possession of the disputed undivided property, the remedy is to seek possession through partition, and not by a suit under section 8 of the Act of 1877.

vi. the person in possession of an immovable property acquires a vested right to possession, which cannot be taken away unless the challenge is made thereto by a person who shows prior or better title through transfer or inheritance.

vii. the transfer of proprietary rights in abadi deh are not recorded under section 42 of the West Pakistan Land Revenue Act, 1967, as the said area has been, under section 3 supra, expressly excluded from the applicability thereof.

viii. In an undivided immovable property one of the co-sharers can maintain a suit for ejectment of a possessor in respect of the entire property and in such a case the following may ensue:

firstly, the said suit of the co-sharer cannot be considered as evidence of his-denial of the title of the other co-sharers;

secondly, that the suit brought by said co-sharer would be deemed to be for the benefit of the other co-sharers; and thirdly, when the said co-sharer acquires possession in consequence of the said proceedings, he would be in possession of the entire property, on behalf of all co-sharers and his said possession cannot be deemed as adverse to the other co-sharers.

29. Accordingly, for the reasons stated above, the impugned judgment of the High Court dated 19.02.201 5 is set aside, and the decree passed in favour of Taj Wali Shah passed by the Appellate Court is affirmed with the modification to the extent that the word "owner" be substituted with "entitled to possession as a co-owner of the disputed house".

30. The present appeal is allowed, in the above terms, with no orders as to costs.

MWA/T-4/SC Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question before the Court in the instant appeal and the connected C.P.L.A. No. 3832 of 2016 is, whether marks obtained in the psychological assessment by the candidate in the competitive examination for the post of Deputy Prosecutor General (BS-18) can be rounded off to the next whole number, as are the marks for the interview granted by the Interview Committee under the "Policy Decision"[1] framed by the Punjab Public Service Commission (PPSC)?

2. The facts are that the appellant applied for the post of Deputy Prosecutor General (BS-18) in pursuant to a public advertisement. He secured 103 marks out of 200 in written examination and 62.50 marks out of 100 in the interview, hence obtaining a total of 165.50 marks. The last candidate selected for the post obtained 166 marks, hence the appellant missed the merit and was not selected for the post.

3. The case of the appellant is that if his marks in the psychological assessment i.e., 2.5 out of 5 marks, were to be rounded off to the next whole number i.e., from 2.5 to 3, his total marks would become 166 and he would equal the marks of the last candidate appointed to the post. In case of a tie, he comes out successful under Policy Decision No. 20.11, which gives preference to inter-se seniority on the basis of age. Learned counsel argued that psychological assessment is part of the interview, therefore, the policy of rounding off, applied to the interview, should also apply to the marks awarded for psychological assessment. He further relied on the definition of "interview" under Regulation 3(O) of the Punjab Public Service Commission Regulations, 2000 ("Regulations") to submit that interview includes psychological assessment. He added that under Policy Decision No.19, there is an express provision for rounding off the marks granted in the interview, whereas the Policy is silent as regards the marks obtained in the psychological assessment, hence the rounding off facility be extended to the marks obtained in the psychological assessment.

4. Learned Law Officer on the other hand relied upon Policy Decision No.19 of the PPSC to submit that the concession of rounding off is only available to the marks obtained in the interview and as the psychological assessment is not a part of the interview under Policy Decision No.19.18, its marks cannot be rounded off.

5. The appellant challenged the failure on the part of PPSC to round off his marks in the psychological assessment before the Lahore High Court. The petition was dismissed vide impugned judgment dated 10.12.2014 on the ground that the Policy explicitly provided for rounding off for the average marks obtained in the interview but no such concession was available for the marks obtained in psychological assessment. The appellant preferred a petition, against the said judgment, before this Court. Leave was granted vide order dated 3.3.2016 to consider whether rounding off was possible for the marks obtained in psychological assessment.

6. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the record. As per Policy Decision No.19.16 of the PPSC, psychological assessment is done after a candidate qualifies the written examination. Psychological assessment entails intelligence test, group discussion, psychological test and short essay, etc. The candidates who go through psychological assessment are then called for interview and marks of the psychological assessment are added to the academic qualification in the candidate's award sheet at the time of the interview. Psychological assessment is an assessment carried out prior to the interview but its marks, for the purposes of tabulation of the result are included in the 100 marks allocated for the interview.

7. As per Policy Decision No.19.18(a and b), a candidate is interviewed by the Interview Committee comprising two groups i.e., Members of PPSC and Advisors/Subject Specialist/Departmental Representative in the following manner;

> Policy 19.18
> a. Award of Interview Marks by Members of Punjab Public Service Commission. The Members of Commission award mark as separate group. Their average of marks awarded is also calculated separately. If average comes out to be in fraction, the value of 0.5 and above will he converted to the next whole number while fraction less than 0.5 will be ignored.

b. Award of Marks by Advisors/Subject Specialist/ Departmental Representatives. All other members of interview committee i.e. Advisors/Subject Specialists, Departmental Representative award marks as the second group. The average of the marks given by all of them is calculated separately. If average comes out to be in fraction, the value of 0.5 and above will be converted to the next whole number while fraction less than 0.5 will be ignored."

As per Policy Decision No.19.31 (h), the marks of the interview are tabulated as under:

Deputy Prosecutor General (BS-18)
Interview 100 Marks
(1) Psychological Assessment 05 Marks
(2) Viva Voce
a. Commission 70 Marks
b. Advisor(s)/Departmental Representative 25 Marks

As shown above, the two groups award separate marks, each member of the two groups award marks out of 70 and 25 marks, respectively[2], thereafter, average of the total marks granted by the members of each group are calculated and in case the said average comes out to be in fraction, value of 0.5 and above is converted into next whole number, while fraction less than 0.5 is ignored. The Policy specifically provides for rounding off of the average score awarded by the Interview Committee in the above manner.

8. Policy Decision No. 19 deals with Interviews while Policy Decision No.19.18 specifically provides that average scores of the members of the two groups of the Interview Committee be rounded off (as mentioned above) while, Policy Decision No. 19.16 provides for psychological assessment and does 'not provide for any rounding off of the marks obtained in the said assessment. Therefore, the Policy expressly provides for rounding off of the average marks in the interview but does not extend such concession in the case of psychological assessment. The maxim expressio uni est exclusious alterius i.e., the express mention of one thing implies the exclusion of the other thing, comes in handy to understand the construction of the Policy, which is even otherwise clear. "On a principle of interpretation that what is left unexpressed, was in all probability not intended at all[3]." The express mention of rounding off in case of average marks obtained in the interview and the absence of such a concession for the marks obtained in psychological assessment clearly shows that the Punjab Public Service Commission never intended to extend the benefit rounding off to the marks obtained in psychological assessment, as is their stated position before us.

9. Regulation 3(o) while defining "interview" provides that "where it may be so required, also includes psychological assessment, credit of additional qualifications, distinctions and achievements." In this case, Policy Decision No. 19.16 does not include psychological assessment as part of the interview, except for calculating the total marks of the interview, therefore Regulation 3(o) is not applicable.

10. A number can be round up to the next whole number or round down to the same whole number, depending on the value being 0.5 or more or less. The general purpose of rounding up is sheer convenience and keeps the arithmetic simple and easy for the purposes of calculation. The clear exclusion of rounding off in the case of psychological assessment under the Policy also stands on a logical plane. With total 5 marks allocated for the psychological assessment, rounding off, either up or down by a value of 0.5 amounts to 10% change in the total marks. This is a sizable percentage and can unfairly bridge the well earned distinction between competitive candidates and weaken the credibility of the result. The impact of rounding off is almost negligible i.e., 0.5% if it is allowed where the total marks are 100. So while the rule of rounding off, is a rule of convenience, it must be applied with caution, so as not to give an unfair advantage to a candidate who has scored low or to disadvantage a candidate who has scored high.

11. For what has been discussed above, we are not inclined to interfere in the impugned judgment of the Lahore High Court. Leave is, therefore, declined and this petition is dismissed.

12. Before parting, it is noted with concern that Mr. Mushtaq Mohal, learned ASC appearing on behalf of private respondents Nos. 3 to 5, in the instant case, opposed the case of the appellant and also represented the petitioner in the connected matter, thereby supporting the case of the appellant in the instant case, taking such somersaults is not becoming of an advocate and must be avoided.

MWA/S-41/SC Petition dismissed.

JUDGMENT

MANZOOR AHMAD MALIK, J.---Appellant Altaf Hussain and three of his co-accused Nisar Ahmad, Muhammad Aslam and Mst. Amiran were indicted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Shorkot, District Jhang to face trial in case FIR No. 137 of 2006 dated 19.03.2006 offence under sections 337-F(iv), 336 and 34, P.P.C. (later on added sections 302 and 324, P.P.C.) registered at Police Station City Shorkot, District Jhang. On conclusion of trial, the learned trial court, vide its judgment dated 08.05.2010, convicted the appellant under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced him to imprisonment for life. He was further ordered to pay Rs.2,00,000/- (rupees two lakh only) as compensation under section 544-A, Code of Criminal Procedure to the legal heirs of the deceased and in default of the payment of compensation he had to undergo simple imprisonment for six months. Benefit of section 382-B, Code of Criminal Procedure was extended to the appellant. Through the same judgment, the learned trial Court while extending the benefit of doubt, acquitted Nisar Ahmad, Muhammad Aslam and Mst. Amiran co-accused of the appellant. Aggrieved of his conviction/sentence, the appellant filed a criminal appeal before the learned High Court. The complainant also filed a criminal revision for enhancement of sentence of the appellant. Petition for Special Leave to Appeal was also filed against acquittal of Nisar Ahmad, Muhammad Aslam and Mst. Amiran. The learned High Court through the impugned judgment dismissed the criminal appeal of the appellant as well as the criminal revision and PSLA filed by the complainant. Thereafter, the appellant filed a criminal petition for leave to appeal, wherein leave to appeal was granted by this Court on 09.11.2018 to reappraise the entire evidence available on record for safe administration of criminal justice. Hence, the instant criminal appeal.

2. We have heard counsel for the appellant, learned Additional Prosecutor General for the State as well as mother of the deceased present in person and have also gone through the relevant record.

3. This case was registered under sections 337-F(iv), 336 and 34, P.P.C. at Police Station Shorkot City District Jhang under the orders of the learned Justice of the Peace Jhang on 19.03.2006 regarding an occurrence alleged to have taken place on 09.02.2006 and as such there is a delay of forty days in reporting the crime to the Police without any plausible explanation. While appearing before the learned trial court as PW.3 Saeed Ahmad complainant stated in his examination-in-chief that they reported the matter to the police repeatedly but the case was not registered, however, this assertion was not substantiated by any document. During the cross-examination he stated that he got (Exh.PA) drafted from an Araiz Navees (deed writer) on 18.03.2006 and the case was got registered on the following day. We have also observed that during the course of investigation statement of Sajjad Ahmad (deceased) then injured was recorded by the Police which has been brought on record as Exh.PH but even in the said statement there is no explanation whatsoever regarding the delay in reporting the matter to the Police. Moreover, it has been observed by us that Sajjad Ahmad (deceased) was medically examined in injured condition through police on 09.02.2006 at 1.45 p.m. i.e. the date of occurrence. Therefore, this inordinate delay in setting the machinery of law in motion speaks volumes against the veracity of prosecution version.

4. Ocular account in this case was furnished by Saeed Ahmad complainant "(PW.3) and Khan Muhammad (PW.4). However, perusal of the statement (Exh.PH) of Sajjad Ahmad (deceased) does not disclose the presence of these two witnesses and it was stated by him before the Police that after raising hue and cry, the male members were attracted to the scene, who beseeched the assailants and rescued him. Therefore, it is highly unsafe to rely on the statements of both these witnesses to maintain conviction and sentence of the appellant on a capital charge.

5. It is case of the prosecution that "Sajjad Ahmad injured remained admitted in the Allied Hospital Faisalabad and was medically examined there. His MLC was brought on record as Exh.PE/1 but the doctor who had examined Sajjad Ahmad was not produced before the court.

6. Motive behind the occurrence and alleged recovery of a dagger at the instance of the appellant were not believed by the learned courts below for valid reasons and upon our own independent appreciation of evidence we do not find any reason to differ with the well reasoned findings of the learned courts below qua motive and recovery of dagger.

7. There is another aspect of the case. As stated earlier besides the appellant three other persons were also indicted in this case three of whom namely Nisar Ahmad, Muhammad Aslam and Mst.

Amiran were acquitted by the learned trial court. PSLA No.67 of 2013 filed by the complainant against their acquittal was dismissed by the learned appellate court which was not assailed any further either by the complainant or the State and as such their acquittal attained finality. It is well settled by now that if a set of witnesses is disbelieved to the extent of some accused the same cannot be believed to the extent of remaining accused facing the same trial without there being any independent and strong corroboration. Upon scrutiny of the material available on record we have not been able to find any corroboration to maintain conviction and sentence of the appellant on a capital charge.

8. For what has been discussed above, we have no manner of doubt in our minds that the prosecution has failed to prove its case against the appellant beyond reasonable doubt. The instant criminal appeal is, therefore, allowed. The impugned judgments of the learned courts below to the extent of appellant Altaf Hussain are set aside. He is acquitted of the charge framed against him. He shall be released forthwith, if not required to be detained in any other criminal case.

MWA/A-2/SC Appeal allowed.

(Against the judgment dated 01.04.2013 of the Peshawar High Court, Peshawar passed in R.F.As. Nos. 104-P, 114-P, 116-P and 117-P of 2004)

(a) Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894)---

----Ss. 6, 23 & 48-A---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 24---Land acquired for expansion of a Government college---Delay of more than ten years between declaration and making of award--- Collector made his award and fixed the amount of compensation payable to the owners of the land at the rate of Rs. 1079.37 per marla and fixed an amount of Rs. 21,994 as compensation for the structures standing on the land---Fifteen per cent compulsory acquisition charges and eight per cent simple interest was also awarded from date of notification by the Commissioner for taking over the land---Collector noted that those from whom the land was acquired were left without access to their remaining lands and therefore carved out six approach roads/pathways to access their lands, but excluded the land falling under these approach roads/pathways for payment of compensation---Reference filed before the Judge Land Acquisition against the award was partly accepted and the Judge increased the price of the acquired land to Rs. 4,500 per marla, reduced the interest per annum to six per cent and maintained the fifteen per cent compulsory acquisition charges---High Court maintained the compensation that had been determined by the Judge Land Acquisition, however, it awarded the cost of litigation to the land owners---Held, that there had been an unjustifiable delay in making the Award---Declaration under S. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 ('the Act') was made on 14th January, 1986 and the Award was made ten and a half years later on 4th August, 1996---Said Act envisaged an award to be made within a year---Article 24(2) of the Constitution mandated the payment of compensation for land compulsorily acquired---Depriving a person of property was an exception to the Fundamental Right to hold and enjoy property---Owner must be promptly compensated for the compulsorily acquired property---Designated authority (the Collector) had to determine the compensation payable to the land owners (appellants) within a year but failed to do so and instead took ten and a half years to make the Award---Judge Land Acquisition had noted that the acquired land was situated on the main road and also had commercial value as it was situated in the vicinity of a hospital, a college and the Office of the Forest Officer---Judge had also referred to documents, including the fard jamabandi for the year 1994-95 produced by Patwari Halqa and the mutations of lands in the area showing the price of land to be ten thousand rupees per marla at the relevant time, and a judgment wherein the compensation in respect of land acquired in the same area a few years previously was fixed at Rs. 6,000 (six thousand rupees) per marla---Despite noting such facts, which had remained un-rebutted, the Judge increased the compensation to only Rs. 4,500 per marla---High Court had also disregarded the evidence on record, though it had noted the price had increased and had expressed sympathy with the land owners---Land owners were also entitled to receive compensation for the land used in approach roads/pathways, since the value of such land had diminished because it could only be used as approach roads/pathways---As regards the structures standing on the land the owners had valued the same at Rs. 2,000,000 (two million rupees), however, in the Award these were valued at Rs. 21,994 only---Since the owners of the acquired area had not established that they had suffered damages on account of the delay in making the Award beyond the period of one year, therefore, they were not entitled to receive additional compensation under S. 48-A of the Act---Supreme Court directed that compensation for the acquired land was to be paid at the rate of Rs. 10,000 per marla; that compensation for the reduction in the value of land utilized for the approach roads/pathways, was to be paid at the rate of Rs. 5,000 per marla; that compensation for the value of the construction on the land was to be Rs. 200,000; and the cost of litigation was to be awarded to the land owners---Appeal was disposed of accordingly.

(b) Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894)---

----S. 6---Land acquired for expansion of a Government college---College re-named after the then serving Provincial Governor---Supreme Court raised the question whether the College which was built on Government land and constructed out of public funds and for which land compulsorily acquired had been paid out of public funds could be named after a living person and one who held public office in the country---Supreme Court observed that since decision in respect of the matter of naming the College may affect the naming of public buildings, public parks, public roads and other public places not only in the province in question but also in other parts of the country therefore notices were to be issued to the Advocate Generals of all the provinces, the Federal Capital Territory and the Attorney General, all of whom were to file their respective written submissions within six weeks---Supreme Court directed office to fix the question raised for consideration of the Supreme Court as per the orders of the Chief Justice---Appeal was disposed of in circumstances.

JUDGMENT

Qazi Faez Isa, J. The Government of N.W.F.P. (now Khyber Pakhtunkhwa) acting through the Secretary Education issued notification dated 1st August, 1983 by which the Government Comprehensive High School Mardan was renamed as the Public School Mardan and transferred to it all lands, buildings, properties, assets and liabilities of the former. On 3rd November, 1985 the Secretary Education issued another notification changing the name of the school again and also upgrading it; the Public School Mardan was now named after the incumbent Governor of the Province and made into a college, the "Fazle Haq College Mardan" ("the College").

2. The Government then decided to expand the College. On 24th October, 1985 the Collector, Mardan, District Mardan ("the Collector") issued a notification under section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 ("the Act") identifying fifty five kanals and seventeen marlas of private land lying adjacent to the College which could be used for the College and authorized a preliminary investigation of the land. On 14th January, 1986 the Commissioner Peshawar Division ("the Commissioner") issued a notification under section 17 of the Act taking over the possession of the land and stating that the provisions of sections 5 and 54 of the Act will not be applicable to the land. Nothing further happened for the next ten years. On 23rd January, 1996 the Commissioner issued a notification under section 6 of the Act declaring that the land was required for a public purpose and directed the Collector to make an order for its acquisition under section 7 of the Act.

3. On 4th August, 1996 the Collector made his award ("the Award") pursuant to section 11 of the Act and fixed the amount of compensation payable to the owners of the land at the rate of Rs.1079.37 paisas (one thousand and seventy nine rupees and thirty seven paisas) per marla and fixed an amount of Rs. 21,994 (twenty one thousand, nine hundred and ninety four rupees) as compensation for the structures standing on the land. Fifteen per cent compulsory acquisition charges and eight per cent simple interest was also awarded from 14th January, 1986. The Collector noted that those from whom the land was acquired were left without access to their remaining lands and therefore carved out six approach roads/pathways to access their lands, but excluded the land falling under these approach roads/pathways for payment of compensation. Compensation was ordered to be paid only in respect of the fifty-two kanals and fifteen marlas of land which had been acquired for the College ("the acquired land").

4. The owners (appellants in Civil Appeal No. 79-P/2013, "the private appellants") were dissatisfied with the amount of the compensation fixed by the Collector and filed a reference under section 18 of the Act against the Award. They alleged that the compensation fixed by the Collector was well below the market price of Rs. 25,000 (twenty five thousand rupees) per marla and the value of the construction on two kanals of the acquired land was Rs. 2,000,000 (two million rupees). They however conceded that the law envisaged six per cent interest per annum (instead of eight per cent interest as given in the Award). On 8th June, 2004 the reference was partly accepted by the learned Judge Land Acquisition who increased the price of the acquired land per marla to Rs. 4,500 (four thousand and five hundred rupees) per marla, reduced the interest per annum to six per cent and maintained the fifteen per cent compulsory acquisition charges; the compensation was payable from the date that the possession of the land was taken. Thereafter, both sides filed regular first appeals ("RFAs") in the Peshawar High Court, Peshawar against the judgment of the learned Judge Land Acquisition. In the RFAs the High Court maintained the compensation that had been determined by the learned Judge Land Acquisition, however, the learned Single Judge was pleased to award the cost of litigation to the private appellants. Both sides then appealed to this Court. The private appellants seek enhancement of compensation amount to Rs. 25,000 (twenty five thousand rupees) per marla and Rs.2,000,000 (two million rupees) for the said construction. The official appellants (who have filed Civil Appeals Nos. 143-P to 146-P/2013) state that compensation as determined by the Collector in the Award be reverted to.

5. The learned counsel for the private appellants (in Civil Appeal No. 79-P/2013) submitted as under:

(i) Evidence was produced to show the sale and purchase transactions at the rate of Rs. 10,000 (ten thousand rupees) per marla during the relevant period;

(ii) The acquired land is situated on a main road and has the potential of considerable increase in value;

(iii) The Award was made ten and a half years after the possession of the land was taken over and during this period the price of the land had gone up considerably;

(iv) The owners remained deprived of the use of their land till the Award was made;

(v) For similar land compensation was determined at six thousand rupees per marla by the Collector in the award dated 12th April, 1984 which was maintained by this Court on 17th December, 1992;

(vi) The owners were entitled to additional compensation mentioned in section 48-A of the Act (inserted by the N.W.F.P. Land Acquisition (Amendment) Act, V of 1987) but they were not granted it; and

(vi) The land falling under the approach roads/pathways should not have been excluded from the payment of compensation since it could only be used as approach roads/pathways.

The learned counsel relied upon the cases of Murad Khan v. Land Acquisition Collector (1999 SCMR 1647), Province of Punjab v. Jamil Ahmad Malik (2000 SCMR 870) and Province of Punjab v. Begum Aziza (2014 SCMR 75).

6. Mr. Mujahid Ali Khan, the learned Additional Advocate General ("AAG"), and Mr. Amjad Ali, the learned counsel for the College, opposed the appeal filed by the private appellants and supported the appeals filed by the College. They stated that compensation was determined by the Collector after he had personally visited the acquired land and the Award was made in accordance with the prevailing market price and the law. Therefore, the learned Judge Land Acquisition was not justified to increase the compensation amount. As regards the delay in making the Award, they stated that the additional six per cent interest per annum payable to the owners sufficiently compensates them, therefore, the delay in making the Award is inconsequential.

7. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and with their able assistance examined the record. Section 23 of the Act stipulates the matters to be considered in determining compensation. In the Province of Khyber Pukhtunkhwa section 48-A of the Act has been added which states that the owner of land will also be entitled to damages suffered if the award is not made within a year of the declaration under section 6 of the Act. Section 48-A is reproduced hereunder:

"Compensation to be awarded when land not acquired within one year: (1) If within a period of one year from the date of publication of declaration under Section 6 in respect of any land, the Collector has not made an award under Section 11 in respect to such land, the owner of the land shall, unless he has been to a material extent responsible for the delay, be entitled to receive compensation for the damage suffered by him in consequence of the delay.

(2) The provisions of Part II of this Act shall apply, so far as may be possible, to the determination of the compensation payable under this section."

8. There has been an unjustifiable delay in making the Award. The declaration (under section 6 of the Act) was made on 14th January, 1986 and the Award was made ten and a half years later on 4th August, 1996. The Act envisages an award to be made within a year. Article 24 (1) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ("the Constitution") stipulates that, "No person shall be deprived of his property save in accordance with law." And, Article 24(2) of the Constitution mandates the payment of compensation for land compulsorily acquired. Depriving a person of property is an exception to the fundamental right to hold and enjoy property. The owner must be promptly compensated for the compulsorily acquired property. The designated authority (the Collector) had to determine the compensation payable to the private appellants within a year but failed to do so and instead took ten and a half years to make the Award. The learned High Court Judge had noted that the price of the land had increased on account of the depreciation - devaluation of the rupee and further that the owners could not utilize their land during the time it took to make the Award. However, he did not increase the compensation amount despite also having observed that, "the affectees are required to be compensated to some reasonable extent, deemed appropriate and justiciable in the circumstances of the case."

9. The learned Judge Land Acquisition, in deciding whether the owners were entitled to be compensated as sought by the owners (Issue No. 5), had noted that the acquired land was situated on the main road and also had commercial value as it was situated in the vicinity of Haroon Surgical Hospital, the Government Commerce College, Mardan and the Office of the Forest Officer, Mardan. He had also referred to evidence and the exhibited documents, including the fard jamabandi for the year 1994-95 produced by Patwari Halqa and the mutations of lands in the area showing the price of land to be ten thousand rupees per marla at the relevant time. He had also referred to the judgment wherein the compensation in respect of land acquired in the same area a few years previously was fixed at Rs. 6,000 (six thousand rupees) per marla. However, despite noting these facts, which had remained un-rebutted, he increased the compensation to only Rs. 4,500 per marla. The learned Judge of the High Court had also disregarded the evidence on record, though he had noted the price had increased and had expressed his sympathy with the private appellants.

10. To get a better understanding of the location of the acquired land and of the said approach roads/pathways we had directed the College, "to file photographs of the land that was acquired and the access to the remaining land of the persons from whom it was acquired." The photographs filed by the College confirm that the land falling under the approach roads/pathways cannot be used for any other purpose. When the use of such land is restricted in this manner then the value of such land stands diminished, but no compensation has been awarded for such land.

11. This Court in the case of Murad Khan v Land Acquisition Collector (1999 SCMR 1647) with regard to determining the compensation of land had considered the matters mentioned in section 23 of the Act and the scope of the expression market-value mentioned therein. Muhammad Bashir Jehangiri, J writing for a three-member Bench of this Court reviewed the case law comprehensively and derived the principles therefrom (paragraph 13, pages 1654-1657). This seminal judgment has been continuously followed by this Court, including in the cited cases of Province of Punjab v. Jamil Ahmad Malik (2000 SCMR 870) and Province of Punjab v Begum Aziza (2014 SCMR 75). Applying section 23 of the Act and the principles expounded in the case of Murad Khan the compensation payable to the private appellants needs to be revised.

12. The market-value of the acquired land at the relevant time as per the evidence on record was Rs. 10,000 (ten thousand rupees) per marla. The owners of the acquired land therefore had to be compensated at the rate of Rs. 10,000 (ten thousand rupees) per marla together with fifteen per cent compulsory acquisition charges and six per cent interest per annum from the date of taking possession of the acquired land, that is from 14th January, 1986.

The private appellants will also be entitled to receive compensation for the land used in approach roads/pathways, measuring 2 kanals, 9 marlas and 7 sersais (as mentioned in the Award) since the value of such land had diminished because it could only be used as approach roads/pathways. However, evidence with regard to the reduction in the value of such land is not available. It has been decades since the land was acquired and the approach roads/pathways were created, therefore, it would not now be appropriate to remand the matter for the determination in the reduction in the value of such land. This land also constitutes a very small portion of the acquired land. Accordingly, we fix the compensation for the reduction in the value of the land used in the approach roads/pathways at Rs. 5,000 (five thousand rupees), which is half the compensation payable for the acquired land.

As regards the "abad houses on an area of 2 kanals of land" the owners had valued the same at Rs. 2,000,000 (two million rupees), however, in the Award these are valued at Rs. 21,994 (twenty one thousand, nine hundred and ninety four rupees). The Award doesn't mention the nature of such construction nor how its price was determined, instead the Collector relied on the value as determined by the Patwari. Taking into account the value of the land, the area on which the construction was raised and when it must have been raised (that is before the possession of the land was taken over) we think that it would be valued at Rs. 200,000 (two hundred thousand rupees) at the relevant time.

13. Since the owners of the acquired area had not established that they had suffered damages on account of the delay in making the Award beyond the period of one year, therefore, they are not entitled to receive additional compensation under section 48-A of the Act.

14. The compensation therefore payable by the College/Collector/ Government of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa to the owners of the land (the private appellants herein) is as under:

(a) Compensation for the acquired land at the rate of Rs.10,000 (ten thousand rupees) per marla;

(b) The reduction in the value of 2 kanal, 9 marlas and 7 sersais of land utilized for the approach roads/pathways, being at the rate of Rs. 5,000 (five thousand rupees) per marla;

(c) Compensation for the value of the construction to be Rs.200,000 (two hundred thousand rupees); and

(d) The cost of litigation granted by the High Court.

15. For the reasons mentioned above Civil Appeal No. 79-P of 2013 is partly allowed in the aforesaid terms and Civil Appeal Nos.143-P to 146-P of 2013 are dismissed. The order whereby judgment in these appeals was reserved had concluded as under:

" After the announcement of the judgment in these appeals the office is directed to send the files to the principal seat of this Court at Islamabad for determination of the question noted in the following paragraph.

2. The learned counsel for the College informed us that previously the College was known as the Government Comprehensive School and the land on which it stood was owned by the Government, however, subsequently the said School was converted into the College and was named after General Fazal Haq, the then Governor of the Province, when he was in office. The question arises whether the College which was built on Government land and constructed out of public funds and for which land compulsorily acquired had been paid out of public funds can be named after a living person and one who held public office in Pakistan. The learned counsel for the College is directed to submit concise statement in this regard and attach therein all documents pertaining to the naming of the College. The learned Advocate General, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa seeks time to take instructions and to formulate his views on the noted question. Since our decision in respect of the matter of naming the College may affect the naming of public buildings, public parks, public roads and other public places not only in the province of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa but also in other parts of Pakistan notices be issued to the Advocate Generals of all the four provinces, the Islamabad Capital Territory and the Attorney General for Pakistan, all of whom are directed to file their respective written submissions within six weeks, whereafter the matter be fixed in Court for hearing."

16. After the announcement of this judgment the office is directed to fix the aforenoted question for consideration of this Court as per the orders of the Hon'ble Chief Justice.

MWA/S-8/SC Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT

MANZOOR AHMAD MALIK, J.---The appellant-Muhammad Akram @ Akrai and his co-accused Imtiaz Ahmad faced trial in case FIR No.245 dated 11.05.2001, offence under sections 302, 324, 34, P.P.C., registered at Police Station Shahdara Town, Lahore. On conclusion of trial, the learned trial Court, vide its judgment dated 09.03.2004, convicted the appellant under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced him to death for the murder of Muhammad Riaz. He was also directed to pay compensation of Rs. 1,00,000/- to the legal heirs of deceased, in terms of section 544-A, Code of Criminal Procedure, in default whereof to undergo six months' S.I. Aggrieved of his conviction and sentence, the appellant filed a criminal appeal before the learned Lahore High Court, Lahore. A Murder Reference was sent by the learned trial Court for confirmation of sentence of death of the appellant or otherwise. A criminal appeal was also filed by the complainant against the acquittal of co-accused Imtiaz Ahmad. Through the impugned judgment, the learned Appellate Court while maintaining the conviction and sentence of appellant dismissed his criminal appeal and answered the Murder Reference in the affirmative. The criminal appeal filed by the complainant against acquittal of co-accused was also dismissed by the learned High Court through the impugned judgment. Thereafter, the appellant filed a jail petition before this Court, whereas the complainant filed a criminal petition against the acquittal of co-accused Imtiaz Ali. This Court, vide order dated 26.03.2013, dismissed the criminal petition filed by the complainant and granted leave in the jail petition filed by the appellant. Hence, the instant criminal appeal.

2. Facts of the case have been summarized by the learned High Court in para.3 of its judgment, which read as under:-

"3. The prosecution story, in brief as narrated in the FIR Ex.P.A/1 by Fiaz Ali, complainant PW.1 is that on 10.05.2001 at 10.30 p.m. his brother Muhammad Riaz along with his friend Muhammad Shafique went outside the house towards "Band" for a walk. After a while the complainant along with Muhammad Ilyas (given up) also went towards "Band". In the meantime Muhammad Akram, appellant and his brother-in-law Imtiaz Ahmad co-accused armed with pistols came towards the "Band". Imtiaz Ahmad raised a lalkara that Riaz should not be let alive upon which Muhammad Akram fired a shot from his revolver hitting Muhammad Riaz on the back of his head who fell down. Thereafter, Muhammad Akram appellant fired at Riaz hitting him on his umbilicus, left thigh, left shin and left shoulder. It was further alleged that the complainant, Ilyas and Shafique stepped forward to save Muhammad Riaz but they were also fired at by Imtiaz Ahmad and Muhammad Akram who were luckily saved. Thereafter Akram and Imtiaz fled from the spot while firing in the air. Muhammad Riaz was immediately taken to Mayo Hospital, Lahore where he was admitted but he could not survive. Hence, the FIR."

3. We have heard learned counsel for the appellant, learned counsel for the complainant and learned Additional Prosecutor General at length and have perused the available record with their assistance.

4. The occurrence in this case, as per prosecution, took place on 10.05.2001 at 10.30 p.m. The matter was reported to police by the complainant Fiaz Ali from Myo Hospital, Lahore at 12.30 hours (night), as a result whereof formal FIR was registered at 1.00 hours (night). The prosecution has produced Dr. Muhammad Aslam Awan (PW7) who provided medical aid to deceased Muhammad Riaz as the latter at that time was in injured condition in the emergency of Myo Hospital, Lahore. The doctor has stated before the trial court that injured (later on deceased) was brought to hospital by complainant Fiaz Ali, real brother of deceased. In these circumstances, it has been observed by us that there is no conscious or deliberate delay in reporting the matter to police.

5. The prosecution in order to prove its case against the appellant produced complainant Fiaz Ali (PW1) and Muhammad Shafique (PW2). The complainant Fiaz Ali (PW1) is the real brother of the deceased Muhammad Riaz, whereas Muhammad Shafique (PW2) is the friend of deceased. He is an independent witness and the resident of the vicinity. In his statement recorded before the trial court, he stated that he had friendship with deceased for the last about 18/20 years; that the distance between his house and the house of the deceased is about 250 meters and that he was residing in the vicinity for the last 20 years. He has given plausible explanation for his presence at the spot at the relevant time. As earlier discussed, the doctor (PW7) who medically examined Muhammad Riaz (deceased) in injured condition stated that the deceased Muhammad Riaz was brought to hospital by Fiaz Ali (PW1), the complainant of the case. In these circumstances, the presence of both the eye-witnesses at the place of occurrence is established beyond doubt. The complainant Fiaz Ali (PW1) and Muhammad Shafique (PW2) while appearing before the trial court remained consistent on all the material aspects of the case. They in a straightforward manner held the appellant responsible for the murder of Muhammad Riaz. The main argument of learned counsel for the appellant is that it was a night time occurrence and no source of light has been mentioned by the complainant in the FIR. It has been observed by us that in the site plan which was prepared on the instructions and pointation of the witnesses, the availability of 1000 watt rod and 200 watt bulb at points E and F respectively has been shown to be lit. Even otherwise, the parties are closely related to each other and identification of a close relative even in low light is not a big deal. Dr. Muhammad Aslam Awan (PW7) medically examined Muhammad Riaz in injured condition, whereas Dr. Muhammad Nazir (PW11) conducted post-mortem examination on the dead body of Muhammad Riaz and observed five entry wounds on the person of deceased. According to doctor (PW11), injuries Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5 and 6 were caused by firearm weapon. The probable time between death and postmortem as noted by doctor coincides with the ocular account. It has been observed by us that the learned appellate court has excluded recovery of revolver from the appellant and positive report of FSL from consideration due to the reason that the empties and the revolver were sent to the office of FSL on the same day after the arrest of appellant. Even if the recovery is excluded from consideration being legally inconsequential, it has been observed by us that the direct evidence in the form of ocular account furnished by complainant Fiaz Ali (PW1) and Muhammad Shafique (PW2) is confidence inspiring which has the support of medical evidence. In these circumstances, we have no hesitation to hold that the prosecution has been successful in proving its case against the appellant beyond reasonable doubt. Having concluded so, it has been observed by us that a specific motive was set out by the complainant in the FIR and in his statement recorded before the trial court inasmuch as four days prior to the occurrence, appellant along with his vagabond friends had come and stood in front of the house of the complainant.

Muhammad Riaz (deceased) had reprimanded the appellant, whereupon an altercation took place between the two. The appellant had threatened the deceased Muhammad Riaz of dire consequences and on account of this grudge, the appellant committed the crime. In his cross-examination, the complainant Fiaz Ali admitted that he had never reported to police that appellant along with his vagabond friends used to come and stand in front of their house. There is also nothing on record to prove that the incidence of altercation between appellant and deceased was ever reported to police. The complainant also did not disclose the names of vagabond friends of the appellant who used to come and stand in front of the house of the complainant. It appears that the real cause of the occurrence has not been disclosed by either of the sides. In these circumstances, we are of the view that the motive set out by the prosecution remained far from being proved. It is well settled that when prosecution alleges something against an accused person and then fails to prove the same, the premium of such failure must go to an accused person. In this case as well, prosecution's failure to prove the motive set out by it certainly benefits the appellant.

6. For what has been discussed above, the instant criminal appeal is partly allowed. The conviction of the appellant under section 302(b), P.P.C. is maintained but his sentence of death is converted into imprisonment for life. The amount of compensation and sentence in its default are maintained. Benefit of section 382-B, Code of Criminal Procedure is extended to the appellant. The impugned judgments of the learned Courts below are modified accordingly.

JUDGMENT

MANZOOR AHMAD MALIK, J.---Muhammad Arif (appellant) along with his co-accused namely Muhammad Javaid and Babar Irfan faced trial before a learned Additional Sessions Judge Faisalabad in case FIR No.336/2002 dated 01.08.2002 offence under sections 302, 324, 427 and 34, P.P.C. registered at Police Station Gulberg, Faisalabad. After regular trial, he was convicted under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced to death. He was also directed to pay Rs.1,00,000/- (rupees one hundred thousand only) as compensation to the legal heirs of the deceased. He was also convicted under section 324, P.P.C. and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for ten years with fine of Rs.50,000/-. In default of fine the appellant had to undergo simple imprisonment of six months. Co-accused of the appellant namely Muhammad Javaid was also convicted under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced to imprisonment for life. He was also directed to pay Rs.1,00,000/- (rupees one hundred thousand only) as compensation to the legal heirs of the deceased. In default of payment of compensation amount he had to further undergo simple imprisonment for six months. He was also convicted under section 324, P.P.C. and sentenced ten years imprisonment with fine of Rs.50,000/-. In default of payment of fine he had to undergo simple imprisonment of six months. Muhammad Arif (appellant) and his co-accused Muhammad Javaid were also convicted under section 337-A(i), P.P.C. and sentenced to two years' R.I. and Daman of Rs.10,000/- (rupees ten thousand only) each. The substantive sentences were ordered to run concurrently and benefit of section 382-B, Code of Criminal Procedure was extended to both of them. Through the same judgment, Baber Arfan, co-accused of the appellant was acquitted of the charge. Aggrieved of their conviction and sentence Muhammad Arif (appellant) and his co-convict Muhammad Javaid filed Criminal Appeal No.1530 of 2004 whereas the learned trial court transmitted Murder Reference No.647 of 2004 for confirmation or otherwise of the sentence of death awarded to Muhammad Arif (appellant). Both these matters were taken up together by the learned appellate court. A learned Division Bench of the Lahore High Court through impugned judgment dated 12.03.2010 allowed the appeal to the extent of Muhammad Javaid and he was acquitted of the charges framed against him. To the extent of Muhammad Arif (appellant) the appeal was dismissed, however, his death sentenced was converted into imprisonment for life. It was observed by the learned appellate court that Muhammad Arif (appellant) shall pay the compensation on the same terms and conditions as ordained by the learned trial court. Feeling dissatisfied with the verdict of the learned appellate court Muhammad Arif preferred Jail Petition No.569/2010 wherein leave was granted vide order dated 21.02.2013 to consider whether the conclusions reached by the Lahore High Court, Lahore out to have resulted in the petitioner's acquittal or not. Hence this appeal with the leave of the Court. Before proceeding further in the matter, it is pertinent to note here that through the same order, Criminal Petition No.977-L of 2010 filed by Hamid Hussain complainant was dismissed and leave to appeal to that extent was refused.

2. Brief facts of the case as divulged from the complaint (Ex:PT) and (FIR Ex:PT/1) are that the complainant along with his father and brother were going towards his business on 01.08.2002 at about 05:30 a.m. early in the morning. When their car reached near the graveyard, Muhammad Arif (appellant) and Muhammad Javaid (co-accused of the appellant since acquitted by the learned appellate court) along with two other unknown persons armed with deadly weapons were available in another car without any registration number. When the car of complainant's side reached near the car of the appellant's side, Muhammad Arif (appellant) started firing with his rifle. One of the bullets hit the back side of neck of Javaid Hussain, father of the complainant. Then all the assailants made indiscriminate firing. It was further alleged in the FIR by the complainant that Muhammad Javaid fired with his pump action which hit the brother of the complainant namely Aamer Javed on the left side of his head. The motive behind the occurrence as stated in the FIR was to the effect that father of Muhammad Arif (appellant) was murdered, and in that, father of the complainant was implicated but subsequently acquitted. Due to that grudge, Muhammad Arif (appellant) etc attempted to murder Javaid Hussain (deceased) about six years back. In that case Muhammad Arif (appellant) was a proclaimed offender whereas father of Muhammad Javaid had been convicted and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. Due to this grudge an assault was made upon the complainant's side.

3. We have heard learned counsel for the appellant, learned Additional Prosecutor General Punjab for the State and with their able assistance have also gone through the relevant record.

4. Car of the complainant's side was assaulted allegedly by Muhammad Arif and three others on 01.08.2002 at about 05:30 a.m. and the crime was reported to the Police at 05:45 a.m. i.e. within fifteen minutes. This over promptitude shown by the complainant as well as the Police was exposed by the defence. Dr Muhammad Akram (PW.11) stated during his examination in chief that he had examined Javaid Hussain (deceased) in injured condition at 05:50 a.m. He further stated that he had medically examined Aamar Javaid injured at 06:15 a.m. Zafar Iqbal 2656/HC (PW.16) who had formally recorded the FIR was cross-examined on this aspect of the case. After perusing entry No.25 in register No.2 he narrated that he had written therein that an application along with MLR No.23950 had been received on behalf of Hamid Hussain complainant. He further stated that the application was with medical certificate. He went on to state that FIR and rapt were simultaneously written down. He further clarified the situation by stating that, firstly, he had written rapat and then the FIR was lodged. This part of the cross-examination of Zafar Iqbal (PW.6) when juxtaposed with statement of Dr. Muhammad Akram (PW.11) clearly suggests that the crime was not reported to the Police at the time mentioned in the FIR, which makes the prosecution case doubtful in nature from its inception.

6. Ocular account was furnished by Hamad Hussain complainant (PW.9) and Aamar Javaid injured (PW.10). Both these witnesses while appearing before the learned trial court made material improvements. They were confronted with their statements recorded by the Police and the improvements were brought on record. Relevant extract from the cross-examination of the complainant is reproduced hereunder:-

"I did not record in my statement before the police that Akbar PW is my Mamoon and Arif, Javaid and Babar accused are relatives inter se. I stated before the police that I was travelling with my father in the car TOYOTA COROLLA FDU25. Confronted with Exh.PT only car has been mentioned sans any number or make. I had got recorded in my statement under section 154 of Cr.P.C. that I was driving the car, while my father was sitting in the front seat and my brother Aamar Javaid was sitting in the rear seat behind the deceased. Confronted with Exh.PT where not so recorded. I do not remember as to whether I have mentioned in statement about Alto car without bearing registration number. Confronted with Exh.PT the word Alto is not recorded. I have narrated in my statement Exh.PT that Javaid son of Bashir was armed with pump action .12 bore. Confronted with Exh.PT where armed with .12 bore is not mentioned. Volunteered that rifle was got recorded as a mistake, which was subsequently corrected in the same statement. It is incorrect that my volunteered statement is false. It is incorrect that just to make my statement true, I am deliberately converted the word rifle into .12 bore pump action. I did not mention in my statement Exh.PT that two unidentified people were armed with .222 bore rifle and .12 bore gun. I had got recorded that Arif opened the fire with 222 rifle which hit my father on the back side of neck. Confronted with Exh.PT the word "222"-is not mentioned. It is true that I have got recorded that Arif started firing with his rifle as soon as he saw our car. It is incorrect that I have improved my statement with mala fide intention as tutored to me in order to bring it in line with medical evidence. I have mentioned that Javaid opened fire with his pump action gun. I did not mention in my complaint Exh.PT that we were medically(sic.) and medical certificates were issued. Confronted with Exh.PT only going to hospital is mentioned. I did not mention about pendency of any appeal of father of accused Javaid. I did not specifically mention that my father remained unconscious as a result of injuries sustained by firearm, made by the accused. I did not make any statement to the Police in respect of my statement in chief that on 8.8.2002 besides me PW Akbar and Aamar Javaid were present on the place of occurrence when Aurang Zaib Draftsman inspected the same and prepared scaled site plan. I did not make statement before the police that Magistrate had got recorded my statement on 23.11.2002. It is incorrect that I have deliberately improved my statement as tutored to me."

Following improvements were brought on record through cross-examination of Aamer Javaid injured PW.10:-

"My statement was recorded by the police. I did not state before the police that I was running a commission shop.

However, I have stated that when we reached graveyeard chowk, an Alto car without registration number was parked there. Confronted with Exh.DA, make of the car Alto is not mentioned. I had got recorded that Arif was armed with 222, Babar Irfan who was identified by me later on in the jail was armed with 222 and Javaid was armed with 12 bore pump action. Confronted with DA, the 222 and 12 bore are not recorded. I had also stated that Arif fired at my father, which hit him on the back side of his neck. Confronted with Exh.DA where is recorded. I also stated that Javaid made a fire with his weapon which after pearcing through window pane hit on my left side of head and a pellet of the same is still available in my head. Confronted with Exh.DA not recorded in same dictation. I had also stated that one fire hit the door and upper part of the door (Gola of door). Confronted with Exh.DA word "Gola" is not recorded."

It is well established by now that when a witness improves his statement and moment it is observed that the said improvement was made dishonestly to strengthen the prosecution, such portion of his statement is to be discarded out of consideration. Having observed the improvements in the statements of both the witnesses of ocular account, we hold that it is not safe to rely on their testimony to maintain conviction and sentence of Muhammad Arif (appellant) on a capital charge. Moreover, Muhammad Javaid co-accused of the appellant who was attributed a firearm injury on the person of Aamer Javaid injured (PW.10) was acquitted by the learned appellate court. Criminal Petition filed by the complainant challenging his acquittal was dismissed, therefore, if testimony of Aamer Javaid was not believed to the extent of the injuries on his person, the same deserves to be discarded out of consideration to the extent of the role assigned to Muhammad Arif (appellant).

6. The ocular account is not fully supported by the medical because in the FIR as well as before the learned trial court only one injury on the person of Javaid Hussain (deceased) was attributed to Muhammad Arif (appellant). Even as per MLC of Javaid Hussain issued in his favour by Dr. Muhammad Akram (PW11), who medically examined him, there was only one entry wound on the person of deceased. During his cross-examination, he (PW11) stated that he did not observe any other injury on the person of deceased. Dr. Iftikhar Ahmad (PW2) conducted postmortem examination on the dead body of deceased Javaid Hussain. He (PW2) stated in his cross-examination stated that there was only one injury in the MLC; that it was only the entry wound and that no exit wound was observed. However, in the post-mortem examination report two firearm injuries (injury No.1 4 cm x 2 cm and injury No.1 cm x 1/2 cm) were observed. There is no explanation whatsoever as to how the second injury was inflicted on the person of Javaid Hussain (deceased).

7. Recovery of the weapons of offence along with live bullets allegedly effected at the instance of the appellant is not of much help to the prosecution because report of the Forensic Science Laboratory (Exh.PHH) is simply to the effect that rifle 222 bore was in working order.

8. It is case of the prosecution that the appellant and his accomplices reached at the place of occurrence in a car, chased the car of the complainant's side and decamped from the place of occurrence in the same car. In the FIR, model, make or registration number of the car was not disclosed. It was claimed by prosecution witnesses that they had identified an Alto car in the warehouse of bank and the same was taken into possession but the said recovery was not effected upon the disclosure or pointation of the present appellant. Babar Irfan on whose disclosure the said car was taken into possession was acquitted by the learned trial court and his acquittal was not assailed any further either by the complainant or by the State, therefore, the said recovery cannot be used against the appellant.

9. The occurrence took place on 01.08.2002. Muhammad Akram S.I. arrested Muhammad Arif (appellant) whereas Muhammad Arif (appellant) was arrested by Abdul Rauf S.I. (PW.17) on 11.11.2002. In order to prove abscondance of the appellant for a period of three months and ten days the prosecution produced Muhammad Irshad 4106/C (PW.3) who stated during his cross-examination that the address given in the warrants of arrest did not specify street, house number and other conspicuous place. He further stated that the report on the warrants of arrest did not contain name of any person from the neghbourhood or any respectable person of the locality. He further stated that the report on the warrants of arrest and proclamation were bereft of any evidence. Therefore, no corroboration can be sought from such absconcion which, even otherwise, is only for a period of three months and ten days.

10. Having gone through the evidence produced by the prosecution, we have also gone through the impugned judgment of the learned Lahore High Court. Case of the present appellant has been discussed in paras 18 and 19, which read as under:-

"As far as the case of Muhammad Arif is concerned, admittedly the occurrence in this case had taken place at 5:30 a.m. on 1.8.2002. The time of occurrence is certainly of odd hours and presence of independent witness at the relevant time and place is out of question. The manner of occurrence in this case is highly criminal as far as the prosecution case is concerned. The prosecution has not brought quality evidence to persuade us to reach the conclusion that whatever the prosecution witnesses had stated is natural and inspire confidence. As per the contents of FIR 4 persons with sophisticated weapon resorted to indiscriminate firing at a place where there was no scope of interception or retaliation and nothing was recovered in the shape of crime empty from the place of occurrence. It is the prosecution case that the appellants also chased them when they accelerated their vehicle to escape from the place of occurrence but in such trial not a single empty was recovered. We are conscious of the fact that although the deceased and other persons present in the vehicle were at the mercy of the appellant but one pellet was recovered from the injury of prosecution witness, which was declared being superficial by the Doctor. The injury ascribed to the deceased though was caused by fire arm, but nothing in the shape of pellet or bullet was recovered from there except a Led bullet, which was found lying in the car, was sent to the office of Forensic Science Laboratory, but of not avail to the prosecution. This version of the prosecution that the deceased sustained only one injury on the back of neck is contradicted by the Doctor, who conducted the post mortem examination (PW2), who gave his opinion that there are two injuries on the person of the deceased, for which the ocular account is silent. According to the contents of the FIR, appellant Arif was armed with rifle but recovery of rifle from the possession of Arif appellant is also not of much importance because no empty of rifle was recovered from the place of occurrence. Recovery of Led Bullet from the Car FDU 25 belonging to the complainant party do not advance prosecution case because the report of Forensic Science Laboratory does not coincide with the prosecution case. We also cannot loose sight of the fact that the fact that the deceased of this case Javaid Hassain sustained on 1.8.2002, while he succumbed to the injuries after 7 days of the occurrence i.e. on 7.8.2002 after the lapse of 7 days of the occurrence i.e. 7.8.2002 after the lapse of 7 days and according to the report of Doctor PW-11 the death in this case had occurred due to cardio respiratory arrest, which could not direct affect of the injury caused. If so, then the injury caused to the deceased by the appellant had not contributed towards his death, rather it could be due to slackness of the Doctor or so many other medical complications, which are not brought on the record. Previous enmity between the parties is admitted that there was cordial relations between the parties since many years, if so, the prosecution is silent on the immediate motive to commit the crime in hand.

19. What has been stated above, we cannot escape from the fact that the deceased had already 60 criminal cases to his credit, which shows his desperate character. In such like situation the judgment referred by the learned counsel for the appellant of the august Supreme Court report above, lends guidance to us, therefore, following the judgment reported above, we consider it a mitigating circumstance in favour of the appellant. Therefore, following the principle of abundant caution we do not find any independent corroboration qua the case of Arif appellant keeping in view the admitted enmity between the parties and non-mentioning of source of at the relevant time..."

11. As a sequel of the reappraisal of evidence in paras 4 to 9 and particularly the observations recorded by the learned appellate court in the impugned judgment there was no justification for the learned appellate court to award imprisonment for life and it was an open and shut case of acquittal. Therefore, the appeal in hand is allowed. Conviction and sentence recorded against the appellant by the learned courts below are set aside and appellant Muhammad Arif is acquitted of the charges framed against him. He is in jail and ordered to be released forthwith if not required to be detained any other case.

MWA/M-11/SC Appeal allowed.

Date of hearing: 28th February, 2019.

JUDGMENT

YAHYA AFRIDI, J.---Education Department, Government of Punjab, Lahore ("the Petitioners") seeks leave of this Court challenging the judgment of the Lahore High Court, Lahore in the case titled: Hafeez Ahmed v. The Government of the Punjab and others (W.P. No.19283 of 2011) decided on 18.10.2016, which has been subsequently followed by the Lahore High Court in all the above-mentioned petitions vide common judgment dated 24.04.2018.

2. The essential facts leading to the present petitions have been aptly recapitulated by the High Court in its impugned judgment in Hafeez Ahmed's case (supra), in terms that:

"Unnecessary details apart, the facts, relevant for the disposal of the instant petition, are that petitioners Nos.1 to 95 were appointed as Lecturers in Education Department on contract basis in the year 2002 whereas petitioners Nos.96 to 145 joined the department as such in the year 2005. Later on Government of Punjab, through Notifications issued in the years, 2009 and 2010 regularized the services of the petitioners and they were held entitled for the protection of the pay drawn by them at the relevant time excluding the amount of social security benefit. After regularization of their services the petitioners started drawing their salary, however, later on, the District Accounts Officer on account of some clarification issued by the Accountant General Punjab started recovery of the amount already received by them on account of various Ad hoc Relief Allowance; hence this petition".

3. At the very outset of the proceeding, Mr. Imtiaz Ahmad Kaif, learned Additional Advocate General, Punjab was confronted as to whether the impugned allowance was paid to the Private-respondents by sanction of the competent authority, his response was in the negative, and he explained that the payment thereof to the private respondents lacked the requisite approval of the finance department under the applicable rules. He further explained that, the provincial government has constituted an Anomaly Committee to decide, whether the regularized civil servants were entitled to the impugned allowance or otherwise, and thus the private respondents had the alternate remedy to seek redressal of their said grievance. He was then confronted as to whether the private respondents had misrepresented, committed any fraud or concealment of facts in obtaining the impugned allowance, his response was in negative. He was further confronted, as to whether any proceedings were initiated against any government official responsible for allowing the inadmissible allowance to be paid to the private-respondents, his response was again in the negative.

4. In essence, the grievance of the private respondents in their writ petitions before the High Court was not the stoppage of payment of the impugned allowance, but the recovery thereof by the provincial government. This being so, the High Court was correct in holding that approaching the Anomaly Committee would not be of any avail to the private respondents, as far as the recovery of the already received impugned allowances.

5. The jurisdictional contours of an authority to recall its orders was considered in detail in Pakistan through the Secretary, Ministry of Finance v. Muhammad Himayatullah Farukhi (PLD 1969 SC 407), wherein an earlier order of the President of Pakistan made in favour of a government servant fixing his basic salary at a certain rate was withdrawn. This Court by a majority decision declared the withdrawal of the order to be without lawful authority in terms that:

"The authority that has the power to make an order has also the power to undo it. But this is subject to the exception that where the order has taken legal effect, and in pursuance, thereof certain rights have been created in favour of any individual, such an order cannot be withdrawn or rescinded to the detriment of those rights."

6. The ratio of the decision in the aforementioned case evolved with time. It was in Engineer-in-Chief Branch v. Jalaluddin (PLD 1992 SC 207) that this Court further refined the scope of the jurisdictional limits of the authority to withdraw its decisions, observing that:

"Locus poenitentiae is the power of receding till a decisive step is taken. But it is not a principle of law that orders once passed becomes irrevocable and it is past and closed transaction. If the order is illegal then perpetual rights cannot be gained on the basis of an illegal order... However, as the respondent had received the amount on the bona fide belief, the appellant is not entitled to recover the amount drawn by the respondent during the period when the latter remained in the field... We consider that as far as the recovery of the amount in question is concerned, the principle of locus poenitentiae would be applicable and the appellants are not entitled to recover the amount."

7. The principle laid down in the above-stated case was echoed in Shahid Masood Nadeem v. DY. C.A.A.F., Lahore Cantt. (2003 PLC (C.S.) 1262), wherein the Court reiterated that:

"It is settled proposition of law that no right can be claimed on the basis of an illegal order and such an order despite having taken effect, neither would change its status nor create any right enforceable in law and in the light of principle that the authority which possesses the power of passing an order is also empowered to vary, amend or rescind, the said order can be undone with no legal bar."

8. Following the above principle, this Court in the case of Shaukat Ali v. District Government through Nazim/Chairman Selection Committee and 4 others (2005 PLC (C.S.) 790) dilated upon the jurisdictional mandate of the authority to order the recovery the amount wrongly received by a government servant by observing that:

"It appears that the respondents did not send an officer/official to verify the documents of the petitioner from the concerned University and did not even use the modern technology of Computer E-Mail, U.M.S. This fact brings the case in the year that the petitioner had performed the duties of the respondents as a teacher on account of contributory negligence of the respondents... the action of the respondents is without lawful authority."

9. In a similar matter, regarding recovery of the received amount by a government servant, this Court in Mst. Sajida Javed v. Director of Secondary Education, Lahore Division and others (2007 PLC (C.S.) 364), after dilating upon the precedent cases, concluded that:

"This Court has consistently declared in a large number of cases that the payment made to a civil servant in the course of employment, due to inadvertence on the part of the employer, cannot be allowed to be recovered as arrears of salary wrongly paid. In our view, petitioner cannot be legally asked to refund the differential of salary drawn by her of the post against which she had been serving under a valid order. Reservation/allocation of vacancies for a particular District and utilization in another District has no nexus with the case of the petitioner."

10. Keeping in view the above deliberation, it is noted that there is a judicial consensus on the issues in hand in terms that;

I) The Authority which can pass order is entitled to vary, amend, add to or to rescind the same under section 21 of the General Clauses Act, 1897.

II) The jurisdiction to recall an earlier older is based on the principle of locus poenitentiae.

III) There is an exception to the principle of locus poenitentiae vesting power in an authority to recall its earlier order: if in pursuance of the order passed by the authority, an aggrieved person takes decisive steps, and changes his position.

IV) None can retain the benefits of a withdrawn order, claiming the protection of having taken a decisive step, when the very order passed by the authority is illegal, void or without lawful authority. In such circumstances, it would not matter, even if decisive steps have been taken by the person in pursuance of the illegal order passed by the authority. However, the pecuniary benefit accrued and already received by a person in pursuance of an illegal order passed by the competent authority cannot be recovered from him unless the benefiting order was obtained by the person through fraud, misrepresentation or concealment of material facts.

11. In the present case, it is an admitted position that the private respondents performed their duties during the interregnum period, and that the impugned allowances were not allowed or disbursed to them on their overt act of fraud, misrepresentation or even any concealment of fact. As the conditions precedent for recovery of an unauthorized payment is wanting in the present cases, the impugned recovery of allowances is thus not in accord with the law, and any amount so recovered from the private respondents warrants to be returned.

12. Accordingly, for the reasons stated hereinabove, the impugned decision of the High Court being in accord with the settled principle of safe administration of justice.

The instant petitions being bereft of merit are dismissed, and the leave so sought is refused.

MWA/G-4/SC Petitions dismissed.

Mian Muhammad Ilyas, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellant.

Date of hearing: 7th March, 2019.

JUDGMENT

MANZOOR AHMAD MALIK, J.---Being dissatisfied with the investigation of case by local police in case FIR No. 548 dated 24.12.2001, offence under sections 302, 324, 337-F(iii), 148, 149, P.P.C. registered on his statement at Police Station Raiwind Saddar, District Kasur, the complainant Sultan Ahmad instituted a private complaint, wherein appellant Muhammad Ashraf @ Acchu and co-accused Saeed Ahmad were summoned to face trial. On conclusion of trial, the learned trial Court, vide its judgment dated 26.11.2004, convicted the appellant under section 302(b)/34, P.P.C. and sentenced him to death. Co-accused Saeed Ahmad was also convicted under section 302(b)/34, P.P.C. and awarded imprisonment for life. Both the convicts were directed to pay compensation of Rs.50,000/- each to the legal heirs of deceased, in terms of section 544-A, Code of Criminal Procedure, in default whereof to undergo SI for six months each. Benefit of section 382-B, Code of Criminal Procedure was extended to co-convict Saeed Ahmad. The trial Court through the same judgment acquitted the appellant and his co-convict Saeed Ahmad of the charges of committing intentional murder of Mst. Vakeelan Bibi and causing injuries to Musarrat Shaheen. Co-accused Labba, Naveed Ahmad and Amanat Ali were declared proclaimed offenders and perpetual warrant of their arrest were issued. It has come on record that co-accused of appellant Muhammad Ashraf son of Ishaq was murdered before trial.

2. Aggrieved of their convictions and sentences, the appellant and his co-convict Saeed Ahmad filed a joint criminal appeal before the Lahore High Court, Lahore. A murder reference was sent by the trial court for confirmation of sentence of death of appellant or otherwise. Through the impugned judgment, the learned appellate court, allowed the criminal appeal to the extent of co-convict Saeed Ahmad and by extending benefit of doubt acquitted him of the charge. The criminal appeal to the extent of appellant was dismissed with the modification that by maintaining his conviction under section 302(b), P.P.C., his sentence of death was converted into imprisonment for life. Murder reference was answered in the negative. Benefit of section 382-B, Code of Criminal Procedure was extended to the appellant. Thereafter, the appellant filed a criminal petition before this Court, whereas the complainant also filed a criminal petition against acquittal of co-accused Saeed Ahmad and for enhancement of sentence of the appellant. The said criminal petition was dismissed by this Court vide order dated 20.02.2013. Through the same order, leave to appeal was granted by this Court in the criminal petition filed by the appellant. Hence, the instant criminal appeal.

3. We have heard learned counsel for the appellant, complainant present in person and learned Additional Prosecutor General at length and have perused the available record with their assistance.

4. The incident in this case as per the facts narrated by the complainant Sultan Ahmad in the FIR and in the private complaint has three episodes. In the first episode, it is the case the complainant Sultan Ahmad that he was employed in Punjab Police; that he was on leave; that he had gone to Raiwind to purchase household articles; that after purchase of said articles, when he returned to Adda Basti Bhail, he saw his son Liaqat Ali standing in front of a shop of Milk Shake; that at 4.30 p.m. appellant Muhammad Ashraf @ Achhu son of Muhammad Ali armed with pistol .30 bore, Saeed Ahmad, armed with pistol .30 bore and Muhammad Ashraf son of Ishaq (since dead) armed with pistol .30 bore came at the Adda; that a lalkara was raised by the appellant, whereupon he himself fired with his pistol 30 bore which fire hit Liaqat Ali on his forehead on the right side; that second fire was shot by Saeed Ahmad, which hit Liaqat Ali on his abdomen; that third fire was shot by Muhammad Ashraf son of Ishaq which hit Liaqat Ali on left side of his buttock. Liaqat Ali succumbed to injuries at the spot. The complainant further alleged that when Liaqat Ali had fallen on the ground, all the three accused persons made firing on him, which hit on different parts of his body. According to complainant, the occurrence was witnessed by Aman Ullah and Abdul Shakoor PWs as well. The second and third episodes of the incident as narrated by the complainant in the FIR and in the private complaint do not relate to the appellant and his co-accused as in those episodes they did not participate and they have already been acquitted by the trial court of the charges of committing intentional murder of Mst. Vakeelan Bibi and causing injuries to Musarrat Shaheen. The said acquittal was not challenged by the complainant or the State any further. Therefore, we are not discussing that part of the case lest it may prejudice the case of either side after arrest of absconding co-accused.

5. The occurrence in this case, as per prosecution, took place on 24.12.2001 at 4.30 p.m. The matter was reported to police on the same day at 5.45 p.m., as a result whereof formal FIR was registered at 6.45 p.m. The apparent promptitude in reporting the matter to police and registration of FIR is hardly of any avail to the prosecution because the postmortem on the dead body of Liaqat Ali was conducted on 25.12.2001 at 4.15 p.m. i.e. after delay of more than 23 hours of reporting the matter to police. Dr. Zulfiqar Ahmad (PW4) who conducted autopsy on the dead body of Liaqat Ali (deceased) categorically stated in his cross-examination that he had received dead body of Liaqat Ali few minutes prior to autopsy. He further stated that neither from the application for postmortem (Ex.PE) nor from other record it is indicated that any application was submitted for depositing the dead body in the mortuary of hospital on 24.12.2001. He asserted that in routine it is necessary that whenever dead body is required to be deposited in mortuary then application in this respect is essential. Muhammad Saleem, 728-C (PW5) is the policeman who escorted dead body of Liaqat Ali to the hospital. In his statement during trial, he stated that he escorted the dead body of Liaqat Ali from place of occurrence to DHQ Hospital, Kasur for postmortem examination on 24.12.2001. In his cross-examination, he stated that he had escorted the dead body of Liaqat Ali to the hospital after one hour of reaching at the place of occurrence. The investigating officer of the case Javed Raza, SI appeared before the trial court as PW14. According to him, after report of crime, he reached at the place where Liaqat Ali was murdered at about 7.00 p.m. and the dead body of Liaqat Ali was available there. He further stated that application (Ex.PE) for autopsy of Liaqat Ali was handed over to constable for its onward transmission to DSP on 25.12.2001. It has further been observed by us that it is the case of complainant Sultan Ahmad (PW9) that during the days of occurrence, he was posted in District Mianwali and that he had gone to Village Bhail on leave. In his cross-examination, he claimed that he had produced proof of leave before the investigating officer Javed Raza (PW14). In turn, Javed Raza, investigating officer (PW14) denied this assertion of complainant and stated before the trial court that the complainant never provided any documentary proof regarding his leave. The complainant further claimed in his statement recorded during trial that he still had the proof of his leave with him but on record no such proof is available. It is the claim of the complainant Sultan Ahmad (PW9) that police reached at the place of occurrence where murder of Liaqat Ali took place firstly. But the investigating officer Javed Raza (PW14) stated that the police party including him reached at the place of occurrence where Mst. Vakeelan Bibi was murdered at first and they reached at the place where murder of Liaqat Ali had taken place at 7.00 p.m. The complainant Sultan Ahmad (PW9) stated before the trial court that during the days of occurrence, Aman Ullah PW (not produced) and Abdul Shakoor (PW11) were jobless. He volunteered that in those days they were working as labour in a factory. He further stated that Aman Ullah had his shop at Adda Basti Bhail and during the days of occurrence said shop was not being run by anybody as the same was being repaired. Abdul Shakoor (PW 11), however, stated in his examination in chief that he along with Aman Ullah was proceeding to their houses from their shops. In his cross-examination, he stated that he was not doing anything to earn his livelihood during the days of occurrence but was getting constructed his shops. In the same breath he stated that he was not the owner of shops but his brother Aman Ullah was the owner of shops. Abdul Shakoor (PW 11) admitted in his cross-examination that he had now shown to the investigating officer the shops being constructed by them. All these circumstances cast serious doubts regarding the presence of eye-witnesses at the place of occurrence at the relevant time and their claim of witnessing the occurrence.

6. Sequel to above discussion, it has been observed by us that it is the consistent stance of complainant Sultan Ahmad (PW9) in the FIR, in the private complaint and before the trial Court that the fire so shot by co-accused Saeed Ahmad hit Liaqat Ali on the front of his abdomen. Dr. Zulfiqar Ahmad (PW4), who conducted autopsy on the dead body of Liaqat Ali did not observe any entry wound on the abdomen of Liaqat Ali. The complainant Sultan Ahmad further alleged that after his son Liaqat Ali fell on the ground, the appellant, co-accused Saeed Ahmad and co-accused Muhammad Ashraf son of Ishaq (since dead) made firing at the deceased. Saeed Ahmad was acquitted by the learned appellate court. His acquittal was challenged before this Court but said petition of complainant was dismissed at leave granting stage. In these circumstances, when the direct evidence of Sultan Ahmad (PW9) and Abdul Shakoor (PW11) has been disbelieved up to this Court to the extent of co-accused Saeed Ahmad, it is of paramount importance to see as to what independent corroboration is available on record to distinguish the case of appellant from that of his acquitted co-accused. After scrutiny of evidence, it has been observed by us that no such corroboration is available on record because the empties secured from the spot and the .30 bore pistol allegedly recovered from the possession of appellant at the time of his arrest were sent to the office of FSL on the same day i.e. on 21.03.2002 after the arrest of appellant on 23.01.2002. In these circumstances, the report of FSL cannot be relied and is legally inconsequential.

7. The motive is always a double-edged weapon. The complainant Sultan Ahmad (PW9) has admitted murder enmity between the parties and has also given details of the same in his statement recorded before the trial court. No doubt, previous enmity can be a reason for the appellant to commit the alleged crime, but it can equally be a reason for the complainant side to falsely implicate the appellant in this case for previous grouse.

8. After evaluating the case from all possible angles, it has been observed by us that the learned appellate court, on reappraisal of evidence available on record, has given following observations while dealing with the case of co-accused Saeed Ahmad (since acquitted) and the appellant:-

"13..... In the first occurrence regarding murder of Liaqat Ali, deceased the witnesses are the complainant and Abdul Shakoor, his close relative. Sultan, complainant is the father of the deceased. The presence of both these witnesses at the place of occurrence is advertently per chance. Sultan Ahmad, complainant has come at the shop from Raiwind, thereafter he saw the occurrence whereas Abdul Shakoor PW was coming from his job at home when he statedly saw the occurrence. Both of them were only per chance available at the site from where they saw the occurrence..... So it is clear that the injuries attributed to Muhammad Saeed, appellant are non-existent on the dead body of Liaqat Ali. It also indicates that the witnesses were not there and that's why later on after seeing the injuries they have got registered the FIR. There is a possibility that they have not seen the occurrence ....."

14..... This situation further creates doubt regarding the witnesses who had implicated the innocent persons by concocting the whole new story. The complainant is a police employee and was on duty and as per chance he was available at the time of occurrence at the place of occurrence. It appears that the occurrence has taken place in a different manner and he being the police official concocted and created different story just to implicate maximum persons and to conceal the murder of Mst. Vakeelan Bibi."

9. After recording such observations, the learned appellate court has gone on to render findings of guilt against the appellant. This approach of learned appellate court is totally misplaced. It is well settled that benefit of slightest doubt must go to an accused and in a case where the Court reaches a conclusion that eye-witnesses were chance witnesses; they had not witnessed the occurrence and the prosecution story is concocted by the PWs, then the case of the accused merits plain acquittal.

10. For what has been discussed above, the instant criminal appeal is allowed. The conviction and sentence of appellant Muhammad Ashraf @ Acchu are set aside. He is acquitted of the charge framed against him. He is on bail. His sureties are ordered to be discharged.

MWA/M-10/SC Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT

Civil Appeals Nos.805 and 1438 to 1445 of 2017 and Civil Petitions Nos.3446 and 3447 of 2016:

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The Prime Minister in his speech to the nation on 23.2.1997 announced ad hoc relief for the government employees including an increase of Rs.300/- per month in their salaries w.e.f. 01.03.1997 and an increase in the pension by 10% (ten percent). This announcement was officialized through Office Memoranda Nos. F.1(17) Imp./97 and Nos.F.4(3)-Reg.6/97 dated 5.03.1997 and 11.3.1997 respectively, issued by the Finance Division (Regulations Wing), Government of Pakistan, while clarificatory Office Memorandum Nos. F.4(3)-Reg.6/97 dated 29.3.1997 issued by the Finance Division provided as follows:

> "2(ii). The benefit of an increase in pension is admissible to those Government servants who were retired prior to 1st March, 1997."

The respondents in these connected cases, who admittedly retired after 01.03.1997, claim that they are entitled to 10% increase in the pension after they have availed the benefit of increase in monthly salary of Rs.300/- under the above Office Memoranda, while they were in service. Their reliance is primarily on a series of orders passed by this Court in related matters arising out of the relief package announced by the Prime Minister. The matter was taken up by the Tribunal and benefit of 10% increase in pension was extended to the respondents on the ground that earlier orders of this Court have granted such relief, hence these appeals with leave of the Court.

2. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties. Ad hoc relief was extended by the then Prime Minister by granting an increase of Rs.300/- in the salary of government employees and an increase of 10% in the pension of the employees who retired prior to the said date i.e., 01.3.1997. The Office Memoranda show that two distinct reliefs were granted, one for the employees in service through increase in salary and the other for retired employees through increase in pension. Retired employees are those who retired prior to 01.03.1997, as has been clarified in Office Memorandum dated 29.03.1997. Therefore, the respondents cannot claim both the benefits; one of increase in the monthly salary by Rs.300/- while in service; and the other of increase in pension after retirement. The cutoff date of 01.03.1997 is critical and has relevance. It splits the employees into two broad categories of in service employees on the cutoff date and retired employees on the cutoff date for the purposes of the ad hoc relief Extending 10% increase in pension to the employees who were in service on 01.03.1997 goes against the scheme of the ad hoc relief as it creates an imbalance between the two classes of employees by extending unjust advantage to one class of employees i.e., the in service employees on the cutoff date, who would walk away with two distinct ad hoc reliefs (i.e., increase in salary and increase to pension after retirement when they have been promised only one.

3. We have also gone through the various orders referred to by the learned counsel for the respondents passed by this Court and upon examination we have noticed that through some of these orders leave was refused against the judgment of the Tribunal on various grounds, which does not form a binding precedent, while in other cases, the question raised before us has not been considered. Therefore, reference to earlier orders of this Court does not advance the case of the respondents.

4. For the above reasons, we set aside the impugned judgment passed by the Federal Service Tribunal, Islamabad and hold that ad hoc relief of 10% increase in pension is only admissible to employees who stood retired prior to 01.3.1997. The listed appeals are, therefore, allowed, whereas Civil Petitions Nos.3446 and 3447 of 2016 are converted into appeals and allowed.

Civil Petitions Nos.124 to 128, 269 to 271 of 2017

5. These petitions filed by the employees against an interim order of the Tribunal are disposed of in light of the above judgment.

MWA/F-3/SC Order accordingly.

(a) Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001---

----R.6---Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXV of 1997), S. 36(1)---Narcotics---Government analyst report, preparation of---Mandatory requirements---Report of the Government Analyst, prepared in consequence of R. 6 of the Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001, must provide for, firstly, tests and analysis of the alleged drug; secondly, the results of the test(s) carried out, and, thirdly the test protocols applied to carry out these tests---Said three elements formed the fundamental and the core elements of a valid Report prepared by a Government Analyst---Non-compliance of R. 6 and absence of any of the said mandatory elements/requirements frustrated the purpose and object of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 ('the Act'), thereby diminishing the reliability and evidentiary value of the Report---Under S. 36 of the Act, the report of the Government Analyst, whilst being admissible in evidence without formal proof, was rebuttable and could be questioned by the accused, inter alia, on the ground of non-compliance of the information required under R. 6 of the Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001---Judgment reported as State v. Imam Bakhsh (2018 SCMR 2039) purposively interpreted the Act and (rightly) found R. 6 to be a mandatory provision regarding information to be reflected in the Report of the Analysts.

State v. Imam Bakhsh 2018 SCMR 2039 affirmed.

(b) Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001---

----R.6---Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXV of 1997), S. 36(1)---Narcotics--- Government analyst report--- Deficiencies--- Whether prosecution should be allowed re-testing of samples in case of a deficient report prepared by the Government analyst---Held, that re-testing of the drug, in case of a deficient report would amount to giving a premium to the prosecution for its mistakes and lapses---Any flaw in the case of the prosecution must only benefit the accused---Sending the alleged drugs for re-testing would be giving another chance to the prosecution to build its case, which was not the role or business of the court---Besides there was a likelihood that the chain of custody of the alleged drug was compromised with the passage of time.

(c) Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001---

----R. 3---Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXV of 1997), S. 35---Narcotics---Government analyst---Qualifications---Concept of testing under the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 ('the Act'), the establishment of the testing laboratories, tests and analysis and the report of the Government Analyst were premised on the assumption that the Government Analyst possessed the prescribed qualifications provided under S. 35 of the Act read with R. 3 of the Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001 ('the Rules') which provided that the Government Analyst shall be a person who has a degree in Pharmacy or Pharmaceutical Chemistry or Medicine from a recognized University or of any other institution recognized by the Federal Government for such purpose and had not less than three years postgraduate experience in the test and analysis of drugs---Analysts who meet the said qualifications provided under the Act and the Rules must prepare these reports.

Ahsan Hameed Lilla, Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Appellant.

Muhammad Jaffar, DPG for the State.

Date of hearing: 8th April, 2019.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The appellant was stopped by the Police while driving a Suzuki van and upon searching the van, the Police allegedly recovered 1500 grams of heroin wrapped in black shopping bag stacked under the driving seat. With this allegation the appellant was booked in FIR No.18 dated 15.01.2016 under section 9(c) of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 ("Act") at Police Station Westridge, Rawalpindi. After regular trial, the appellant was convicted under section 9(c) of the Act vide judgment dated 07.12.2016 and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six years with a fine of Rs.30,000/-. The appeal filed by the appellant before the High Court was dismissed. Hence this appeal with the leave of the Court granted on 04.02.2019.

2. At the very outset we have noticed that the Report of the Punjab Forensic Agency dated 18.02.2016 is deficient in material particulars, i.e. while it mentions the names of the three tests performed, it does not provide results of these tests (except a consolidated result) and there is no mention of the test protocols applied in carrying out the said tests. In State v. Imam Bakhsh (2018 SCMR 2039) while discussing Rule 6 of the Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001 ("Rules") this Court held that the information required under the said Rule is mandatory. Hence, the Report of the Government Analyst, prepared in consequence of Rule 6, must provide for (i) tests and analysis of the alleged drug (ii) the results of the test(s) carried out and (iii) the test protocols applied to carry out these tests. These three elements form the fundamental and the core elements of a valid Report prepared by a Government Analyst. Non-compliance of Rule 6 and absence of any of these mandatory elements/requirements frustrates the purpose and object of the Act thereby diminishing the reliability and evidentiary value of the Report. Rule 6, inter alia, requires that the Government Analysts must specify the test protocols applied and, therefore, the Report must signify (by name) the protocols applied to carry out the test(s)/analysis, which would certify that full protocols have been followed while conducting the tests/analysis. In case the veracity of the Report is challenged by the accused or is being examined by the Court, compliance of full protocols can be called for from the Government Analyst and verified.

3. Recent judgment of this Court in Minhaj Khan v. The State (2019 SCMR 326) handed down after Imam Bakhsh, was pointed out to us to highlight certain objections raised by the prosecution against Imam Bakhsh. These objections were recorded in Minhaj Khan, as argued by the APG in that case, but were not addressed as the case was decided on merits. These objections have been raised before us through reference. DPG, relying on the objections raised in Minhaj Khan pointed out that Imam Baksh is per incuriam on the ground that it goes against the clear provision of the statute as the requirement of protocols is not mentioned in sections 34, 35 and 36 of the Act or FORM II under the Rules, therefore, the same could not have been read into the Report of the Analyst as that would fall in the domain of the legislature; Rule 6 contradicts section 36(1) of the Act and, therefore, must yield to the Act; Protocols being a technical matter in respect whereof the courts do not have the requisite expertise and is not a matter of legal determination; Thousand of cases have been decided and convictions maintained even though protocols were not mentioned in the Report; Non-mentioning of the protocols does not prejudice the prosecution as they can always request for re-testing.

4. It appears that the import of Imam Bakhsh has not been fully understood. In Imam Bakhsh the question before this Court, other than the chain of custody of the drugs, was whether Rules 4, 5 and 6 of the Rules were mandatory or directory. This determination was important because these Rules dealt with the Report of the Government Analyst which is the pivotal evidence for awarding conviction under the Act. This Court in Imam Bakhsh, while discussing the nature of Rule 6 of the Rules held that "some rules are vital and go to the root of the matter, they cannot be broken; others are only directory and a breach of them can be overlooked provided there is substantial compliance. The duty of the court is to try to unravel the real intention of the legislature. This exercise entails carefully attending to the scheme of the Act and then highlighting the provisions that actually embody the real purpose and object of the Act In each case one must look to the subject matter and consider the importance of the provision disregarded and the relation o that provision to the general object intended to be secured. Crawford opined that 'as a general rule, [those provisions that] related to the essence of the thing to be performed or matters of substance, are mandatory, and those which do not relate to the essence and whose compliance is merely of convenience rather than substance, are directory .perhaps the cleverest indicator is the object and purpose of the statute and the provision in question." After examining the entire scheme of the Act, it was held that "credible testing and analysis of the alleged drug is fundamental to actualizing the provisions of the Act as it determines the true nature of the recovered substance or the seized drug Report of the Government Analyst is, therefore, pivotal in realizing the objective and purpose of the Act." And "Report under Rule 6 must specify every test applied for the determination of the seized substances with the full protocols adopted to conduct such tests." Thus, holding that tests and analysis, results and test protocols to be a mandatory requirement under Rule 6 and the same must be reflected in the Report.

5. Section 36(1) of the Act also mandates that the Report must be in the prescribed form. This Court, in Ikramullah,[1] while discussing the scope of Rule 6 of the Rules held that " a complete mechanism is to be adopted by the Chemical Examiner upon receipt of samples and a report is then to be submitted by him referring to the necessary protocols and mentioning the tests applied and their results Section 36 of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 requires a Government Analyst to whom a sample of recovered substance is sent for examination to deliver to the person submitting the sample a signed report in quadruplicate in "the prescribed form" and, thus if the report prepared by him is not prepared in the prescribed manner then it may not qualify to be called a report in the context of section 36 of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 so as to be treated as a "conclusive" proof of recovery of narcotic substance from an accused person.[2]" A signed report in the prescribed form under section 36(1) of the Act does not refer to FORM-II, as argued by the DPG, but to the form, structure, design and content of the Report provided in the Rules. This is also so because the Act was promulgated[3] on 11.07.1997 while the Rules were framed and gazetted on 28.11.2001 under the title of Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001, almost after four years. Therefore, FORM-II was not known to the legislature at the time of the promulgation of the Act, hence section 36(1) simply required that the structure and content (form) of the Report must be as provided in the Rules. FORM II, hereunder, is a manifestation of Rule 6 but does not have a stand alone existence.

FORM II (See rule 6) CERTIFICATION OF THE TEST OR ANALYSIS BY FEDERAL NARCOTIC TESTING LABORATORY GOVERNMENT ANALYST 1. Certified that the sample bearing on _____ purporting to be sample of _____ received on _____ with memorandum No._____ dated _____ from _____ has been test/analyzed and the result of each test/analysis is stated below: 2. That the condition of the seal on the packet on receipt was as follows; Satisfactory/Unsatisfactory/None. 3. In the opinion of the undersigned the sample is _____ as defined in the Section 2 of the CNS Act, 1997. 4. DETAILS OF THE RESULTS OF TESTS/ANALYSIS: Sample No._____ Gross Wt : _____ Net Wt:_____ FIR No. _____ Dated _____ Accused_____ Physical Ex amination _____ Conclusion _____ NOTE: In case of mixture the %age of each

| Alkaloids, Opium derivatives, Opiates, Cannabis, Drugs of abuse and the synthetic compounds are as follows: The sample identified as _____ and contain % Signature of Government Analyst Federal Narcotics Testing Laboratory Signature of any other authorized officer of Laboratory |

The general head of DETAILS OF THE RESULTS OF TESTS/ANALYSIS provides only for Physical Examination and Conclusion, and does not mention of tests or their results. This would hardly be of any significance unless the Report provides the information required under Rule 6 in order to establish the culpability of the accused. Hence, for the Report to serve the purposes of the Act and the Rules, it must contain (i) the tests and analysis of the alleged drug (ii) the result of each test(s) carried out and (iii) the test protocols applied (the name(s) of protocols applied) to carry out these tests. It is important to underline that protocols are an intrinsic part of the tests and analysis. A test conducted without following the protocols does not pass for a test or meet the requirement of Rule 6.

6. Re-testing of the drug, as argued by the DPG, in case of a deficient report would amount to giving a premium to the prosecution for its mistakes and lapses. In any case any flaw in the case of the prosecution must only benefit the accused. Sending the alleged drugs for re-testing would be giving another chance to the prosecution to build its case, which is not the role or business of the court. Besides there is a likelihood that the chain of custody of the alleged drug is compromised with the passage of time. Regarding the objection that Imam Bakhsh may overturn hundreds of convictions, it is pointed out that the sole purpose of this Court is to dispense justice in accordance with law and it matters less if one or many convictions are overturned because of the correct interpretation and application of the law. Imam Bakhsh purposively interprets the Act and finds Rule 6 to be a mandatory provision regarding information to be reflected in the Report of the Analysts. Hence, the argument that Imam Bakhsh is per incuriam, is hopelessly misconceived and rejected. For completion of record it is pointed out that review filed[4] in Imam Bakhsh was also dismissed vide an earlier order dated 06.02.2019.

7. It is also important to underline that the Government Analysts while giving the details of tests/analysis, the results for each test and the test protocols applied in the Report, must remember that under section 36 of the Act, the report of the Government Analyst, whilst being admissible in evidence without formal proof, is rebuttable and can be questioned by the accused, inter alia, on the ground of non-compliance of the above information required under Rule 6. Further more, the admissibility of the Report in evidence under section 36(2) of the Act does not per se vouch for its evidentiary value. The court is free to examine the Report and to assess whether it meets the requirements of the Report under the Act and the Rules, even if the Report is not rebutted by the accused. The concept of testing under the Act, the establishment of the testing laboratories, tests and analysis and the report of the Government Analyst are premised on the assumption that the Government Analyst possesses the prescribed qualifications provided under section 35 of the Act read with Rule 3 of the Rules which provides that the Government Analyst shall be a person who has a degree in Pharmacy or Pharmaceutical Chemistry or Medicine from a recognized University or of any other institution recognized by the Federal Government for this purpose and has not less than three years postgraduate experience in the test and analysis of drugs. Analysts who meet the qualifications provided under the Act and the Rules must prepare these reports. This was echoed in Imam Bakhsh in the following words:

> 19. Efficient, credible and proficient Narcotics Testing Laboratories are integral for successful execution of the Act and the Rules. The said laboratories have to be manned by competent analysts having prescribed qualifications. Rule 3 provides for the qualifications of a Government Analyst and it has already been held to be a mandatory provision by this Court.[5] Further, the obligations of the Government Analysts under these Rules must be complied with for ensuring accurate and meaningful chemical analysis. In order to standardize the Narcotics Testing Laboratories across the country, the protocols and tests applied by these laboratories must meet common international standards, e.g. Guidelines issued by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) or Scientific Working Group for the Analysis of Seized Drugs (SWGDRUG) or the International Organization for Standardization (ISO) - 17025:2017. We, therefore, direct the Federal Government and the respective Provincial Governments to ensure that the Government Analysts in the Narcotics Testing Laboratories are qualified as per Rule 3, the tests and their protocols are common across the country are as per International guidelines. The officials of the National and Provincial Narcotics Testing Laboratories shall follow the Rules in the best manner possible so that efficient and meaningful chemical analysis can be achieved. In case of failure, disciplinary action be taken against the officials, in accordance with law. (emphasis supplied)

8. The emphasis that the Report of the Government Analyst must carry the information required in Rule 6 is to ensure that convictions under the Act are based on reliable and credible reports. Courts can apply purposive interpretation of the statute to bridge the gap between the law and the safe administration of criminal justice system based on prudence, caution, circumspection and judiciousness. We cannot deny that the "the aim of interpretation in law is to realize the purpose of the law, the aim in interpreting a legal text is to realize the purpose the text serves. Law is, thus, a tool designed to realize a social goal. It is intended to ensure the social life of the community, on the one hand, and human rights, equality, and justice on the other.[6]" Professor Barak has argued that there is a subjective and an objective purpose of a statute. Subjective purpose reflects the actual intention of the legislature, in contrast to the intention of the legislature when applied to the times of the day. Mere focusing on the legislative intent alone fails to regard the statute as a living organism in a changing environment making it insensitive to the existence of the system in which the statute operates. "It is not capable of integrating the individual statute into the framework of the whole legal system. It makes it difficult to bridge the gap between law and society. Thus, it does not allow the meaning of the statute to be developed as the legal system develops. Rather, it freezes the meaning of the statute at the historical moment of its legislation, which may no longer be relevant to the meaning of the statute .If a judge relies too much on legislative intent, the statute ceases to fulfill its objective. As a result the judge becomes merely a historian and an archaeologist and cannot fulfill his role as a judge. Instead of looking forward, the judge looks backward. The judge becomes sterile and frozen, creating stagnation instead of progress . The objective purpose of the statute means the interests, values, objectives, policy, and functions that the law should realize The judge should not narrow interpretation to the exclusive search for subjective legislative intent. He must also consider the "intention" of the legal system for the statute is always wiser than the legislature. By doing so the judge gives the statute a dynamic meaning and thus bridges the gap between law and society.[7]"

9. Not so far back this Court required taking of separate samples from every packet of the substance recovered, proof of safe custody and safe transmission of the samples of the recovered substance and proof of conscious possession on the part of a passenger of a vehicle. Apart from that, safeguards were insisted upon in holding of a test identification parade and in recording of a confessional statement under section 164, Cr.P.C. In Ameer Zeb case[8] this Court held that for "safe administration of criminal justice some minimum standards of safety are to be laid down so as to strike a balance between the prosecution and the defence and to obviate the chances of miscarriage of justice Such minimum standards of safety are even otherwise necessary for safeguarding the Fundamental Rights of the citizens regarding life and liberty which cannot be left at the mercy of verbal assertions of police officers which assertions are not supported by independent evidence provided by a Chemical Examiner." Purposive interpretation of the Act and the Rules promotes the protection of constitutional and fundamental rights under Articles 4, 9 and 10A of the Constitution. Employing prudence, practice and caution as interpretive tools to help actualize and operationalize the purpose of the statute, we realize its objective purpose and ensure safe administration of justice so that the convictions under the Act are based on Reports of the Government Analyst that are technically sound and credible.

10. In the present case examination of the report of the Government Analyst mentions the tests applied but does not provide their results except a concluding result, presumably of all the tests, which is not sufficient. The Report also does not signify the test protocols that were applied to carry out these tests. Hence, the mandatory requirement of law provided under Rule 6 has not been complied with and, thus, it is not safe to rely on the Report of the Government Analyst dated 18.02.2016. As a conclusion, it is reiterated, that the Report of the Government Analyst must mention (i) all the tests and analysis of the alleged drug (ii) the result of the each test(s) carried out along with the consolidated result and (iii) the name of all the protocols applied to carry out these tests.

11. For what has been discussed above, we extend the benefit of doubt to the appellant and set aside his conviction and sentence under the section 9(c) of the Act. He is ordered to be released from custody forthwith if not required in any other case. This appeal is allowed accordingly.

MWA/K-3/SC Appeal allowed.

(a) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 324, 392, 411 & 34---Qatl-i-amd, attempt to commit qatl-i-amd, robbery, dishonestly receiving stolen property, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Benefit of doubt---Belated post-mortem examination---Deceased and complainant were in their car, when the accused and the co-accused allegedly tried to rob them---During the incident the deceased was shot and murdered---Accused persons were sentenced to death, however on appeal the sentence of one of the accused was reduced to imprisonment for life---Held, that case of the prosecution rested on the ocular account of two eye-witnesses---Testimony of one of the said witnesses and his presence at the scene of the crime had been rightly disbelieved by the High Court---According to the doctor at the hospital the post-mortem examination took place 15 hours after the body of the deceased was brought to the hospital---Such delay in the post-mortem examination, when the occurrence was promptly reported and formal FIR was registered within 15 minutes gave rise to an inference that the incident was not reported as stated by the prosecution---Complainant, who claimed to be on the passenger seat, must have single-handedly moved the deceased, who was on the driving seat, to another seat in the car, and in the process soiled other seats and his clothes with blood; however, there was no evidence on the record to support such fact---Convictions and sentences of accused persons were set aside and they were acquitted of the charge by extending the benefit of doubt to them---Appeals were allowed accordingly.

(b) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 324, 392, 411 & 34---Qatl-i-amd, attempt to commit qatl-i-amd, robbery, dishonestly receiving stolen property, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Benefit of doubt---Medical evidence---Nature of bullet wound---Site-plan showed one of the accused to be standing next to the driving seat of the car at a distance of 4 feet---Fire-shot from such short distance was likely to cause blackening but the medical evidence did not support this, raising suspicion that the events may have unfolded differently than as reported---Convictions and sentences of accused persons were set aside and they were acquitted of the charge by extending the benefit of doubt to them---Appeals were allowed accordingly.

(c) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 324, 392, 411 & 34---Qatl-i-amd, attempt to commit qatl-i-amd, robbery, dishonestly receiving stolen property, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Benefit of doubt---Presence of deceased at the site of occurrence doubtful---Deceased and complainant were in a car outside a godown, where the accused persons allegedly tried to rob them and in the process shot and murdered the deceased---In the absence of any supporting evidence, the presence of the deceased at the site of occurrence was highly improbable considering that the deceased was a doctor, employed with the social security department of the Government, having no evident interest in the business of the complainant or any convincing evidence to show that the godown, where the incident took place, fell in the way to his residence---Convictions and sentences of accused persons were set aside and they were acquitted of the charge by extending the benefit of doubt---Appeals were allowed accordingly.

(d) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 324, 392, 411 & 34---Qatl-i-amd, attempt to commit qatl-i-amd, robbery, dishonestly receiving stolen property, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Benefit of doubt---Recovery of weapon doubtful---Investigation Officer deposed that the recovery of pistol was effected from a house whose ownership he failed to ascertain---According to the investigating officer it was a double storied house and recovery was effected from the ground floor where other family members also resided--- Memorandum of recovery showed that the pistol was recovered from an open room lying under rough clothes, therefore, it would be unsafe to rely on such recovery for a conviction on a capital charge---Convictions and sentences of accused persons were set aside and they were acquitted of the charge by extending the benefit of doubt to them---Appeals were allowed accordingly.

(i) Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984)---

----Art. 22---Test identification parade---Capacity and ability of the eye-witness to identify the accused---"Estimator variables" negatively affecting the memory of a witness---Capacity and ability of the eye-witness should be assessed independently as a sequel or step two to the test identification proceedings---Such assessment also formed part of the identification evidence along with the test identification proceedings---After the test identification parade, the court must verify the credibility of the eye-witness by assessing the evidence on the basis of the factors or "estimator variables"---"Estimator variables" were factors related to the witness, like distance, lighting, or stress, over which the legal system had no control---Identification of an accused, therefore, became a two-step process; first, the suspects underwent a test identification parade and second, the credibility of the eye-witness was assessed by weighing the evidence in the light of the "estimator variables"---Non-exhaustive list of "estimator variables" provided.

Following is the non-exhaustive list of "estimator variables" that negatively affected the memory process of a witness:

i. Stress: Even under the best viewing conditions, high levels of stress could diminish an eye-witness' ability to recall and make an accurate identification. While moderate levels of stress improved cognitive processing and might improve accuracy, an eyewitness under high stress was less likely to make a reliable identification of the perpetrator.

ii. Weapon focus: When a visible weapon was used during a crime, it could distract a witness and draw his or her attention away from the culprit. Weapon focus could thus impair a witness' ability to make a reliable identification and describe what the culprit looked like if the crime was of short duration.

iii. Duration: The amount of time an eyewitness had to observe an event may affect the reliability of an identification. There was no minimum time required to make an accurate identification, however, a brief or fleeting contact was less likely to produce an accurate identification than a more prolonged exposure.

iv. Distance and lighting: A person was easier to recognize when close by, and that clarity decreased with distance. Poor lighting made it harder to see well. Thus, greater distance between a witness and a perpetrator and poor lighting conditions could diminish the reliability of an identification.

v. Witness characteristics: Characteristics like a witness' age and level of intoxication could affect the reliability of an identification. Children between the ages of nine and thirteen who viewed target-absent lineups were more likely to make incorrect identifications than adults.

vi. Characteristics of perpetrator: Disguises and changes in facial features altered between the time of the event and the identification procedure affected the accuracy of an identification.

vii. Memory decay: Memories faded with time and memory decay was irreversible; memories never improved. As a result, delays between the commission of a crime and the time an identification was made could affect reliability.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Dr. Tofeeq Ahmed was robbed and shot dead in the driving seat of his car at 8:30 p.m. on the fateful night of 31st August, 2006. According to the story of the prosecution, the complainant (PW-8) along with his brother (the deceased) came out of their office-cum-godown, carrying cash in a shopping bag. As the deceased sat in the driving seat of his car while the complainant was still on his way to the car, they were taken by surprise by two unknown persons (later on identified as the appellants). One of them threatened the deceased to hand over the cash to him, as the complainant tried to resist, one of the appellants fired at him but missed and then ended up killing Dr. Tofeeq Ahmed, in the driving seat of his car. The assailant was driven away by his partner, who all this while remained watchfully seated on his motorcycle. In this background case FIR No. 935 was registered against two unknown persons, at Police Station North Cantonment, Lahore under sections 392 and 203, P.P.C. on 30.8.2006. In the investigation that ensued, the appellants were arrested and after verifying their identity in an identification parade, were sent up for trial. They were convicted and sentenced by the trial Court for multiple offences under sections 302(b), 392, 324 and 411 read with section 34, P.P.C. including death under section 302(b), P.P.C. along with compensation and imprisonment for various terms under sections 392, 324 and 411, P.P.C. while extending them the benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. Upon appeal the convictions and sentences of the appellants were maintained to the extent that the sentence of death in the case of Abdur Rashid (appellant) was converted into imprisonment for life. Hence, these appeals with the leave of the Court granted on 6.12.2012.

2. Examining the record with the assistance of the learned counsel for the parties we observe that the case of the prosecution rests on the ocular account of two eye-witnesses namely Mian Suhail Ahmed (Complainant/PW-8) and Sheikh Khalid Saeed (PW-11). Testimony of PW-11 has been disbelieved and his presence at the scene of the crime held doubtful by the High Court, which has been found by us, on our own independent evaluation of the evidence to be convincing and correct. In this background, we observe that the complainant drove the deceased to the hospital in the same car in which he was shot and filed the complaint with the police at Combined Military Hospital ("CMH") at 8:45 p.m., the same night, within 15 minutes of the occurrence. The name of the complainant does not find mention in the Inquest Report prepared at the hospital. There is no evidence on the record to support that the deceased was brought to CMH or death certificate was issued by the hospital as narrated in the ocular account of PWs 8 and 11. According to the Doctor (PW-10), who did the post-mortem examination, the dead-body of the deceased was brought to the mortuary at 11:15 a.m. on 01.9.2006 and the post-mortem examination took place at 12 noon after a delay of 15 hours. This delay in the post-mortem examination, when the occurrence was promptly reported at 8:45 p.m. and formal FIR was registered at 9.00 p.m. on 31.8.2006 gives rise to an inference that the incident was not reported as stated by the prosecution. The complainant must have single-handedly moved the injured deceased (see Ex-PA - memo of blood stained clothes of the deceased) to another seat in the car, having soiled other seats and his clothes with blood. However, there is no evidence on the record to support this. The story as narrated by the prosecution casts a ring of suspicion around its probability and credence.

3. Site-plan (Ex-PL) shows one of the appellants to be standing next to the driving seat of the car at a distance of 4 feet. A fire-shot from this distance is likely to cause blackening but the medical evidence (Post-mortem examination reports Ex-PM and Ex-PM/1 and the statement of PW-10) does not support this, once again raising a suspicion that the events may have unfolded differently than as reported. In the absence of any supporting evidence, the presence of the deceased at the site of occurrence is highly improbable considering that the deceased was a doctor, employed with the social security department of the Government having no evident interest in the business of the complainant or any convincing evidence to show that the godown fell in the way to his residence.

4. The Investigation Officer (PW-15) deposed that the recovery of pistol was effected from a house whose ownership he failed to ascertain. According to him it was a double storied house and recovery was effected from the ground floor where other family members also resided. The memorandum of recovery (Ex-PG) shows that the pistol was recovered from an open room lying under rough clothes. It would be unsafe to rely on this recovery for a conviction on a capital charge. The ocular account of the sole eye-witness (PW-8) does not inspire confidence in the absence of any corroboration from the identification evidence or the recovery.

5. The Test Identification Parade ("TIP") (Ex/PN) which was conducted by the Special Judicial Magistrate (PW-13) on 13.6.2006 is fraught with several infirmities diminishing its probative and evidentiary value. Brief description of the two unknown persons (later on identified as the appellants) in the first information report mentions their height, bodily size and colour of the skin. TIP proceedings are silent regarding the description of the unknown accused given by the complainant in the report. TIP can only commence, once suspects matching the description in the crime report or in the statements of the witnesses under section 161, Cr.P.C. have been arrested. Matching the description in the first information report is the starting point towards identification of the unknown accused. It is, therefore, uncertain how the appellants were hurled and lined-up for the identification parade without the Magistrate first matching the description given by the complainant. Selection of the suspects, without any correlation with description of the accused in the first information report, raises doubts and makes the identification proceedings unsafe and doubtful rendering the identification evidence inconsequential. This is just a shade apart from cases where there is no description of the accused in the FIR, the effect being the same, casting doubts on the credibility of the test identification parade. See State/Government of Sindh v. Sobharo (1993 SCMR 585), Muhammad Afzal alias Abdullah v. State (2009 SCMR 436), Sabir Ali alias Foji v. State (2011 SCMR 563) and Muhammad Abdul Hafeez v. State of A.P. (AIR 1983 SC 367).

6. Both the appellants were jointly seated in the lineup. The idea of identification parade or lineup is to stand or seat the suspect in a group of persons (dummies or fillers) that closely resemble the characteristics of the suspect, in order to test the recognition, memory, perception and observation of the witness and thus verify the testimony of the witness. Placing two or more suspects jointly in an identification parade (or joint parade), tarnishes the homogeneity, sameness and identicalness of the members of the parade and defeats the very purpose of having a test identification parade. Joint parade passes for suggestive and indicative identification, compromising the reliability of the witness and opening doors to misidentification, rendering TIP unsafe and untrustworthy. See: In the matter of Kanwar Anwaar Ali (PLD 2019 SC 488) on joint identification parade.

7. No role was assigned to the suspects by the witnesses, especially when the first information report clearly describes two different roles to the appellants; one that of an assailant, while the other of a driver of a motorcycle who drove the assailant away. If a witness fails to give the description of the part played by the suspect in the crime, the credibility of the witness stands questioned as he fails to complete the picture of the crime scene, thus inviting caution and circumspection in assessing the evidentiary value of the identification evidence. This Court over the years has placed little reliance on such identification evidence. Even in the subsequent identification by the complainant in court, which has little evidentiary value, he failed to point an accusing finger at the appellants to say who did what, therefore the parts played by the appellants in the crime remain a mystery. See: In the matter of Kanwar Anwaar Ali (PLD 2019 SC 488) on the absence of a role assigned by the witness in an identification parade.

8. According to the complainant one of the appellants was his employee at the godown and the Investigation Officer (PW-15) admits in the cross-examination that he took the appellants to the godown after they were arrested and the employees at the godown confirmed that both of them worked as employees at the godown of the complainant. This is also indicated from the statements of the appellants under section 342, Cr.P.C. Police is to guard the identity of the suspects from the witness till TIP takes place. Visiting the godown of the complainant with the suspects unravels the identity of the suspects, tarnishing the secrecy required. This once again is suggestive and is also referred to as "impermissible suggestiveness[1]" at the hands of the police, therefore the probability of the witnesses knowing the identity of the appellants prior to the identification parade cannot be ruled out. Additionally, the identification of the appellants by PW-11, whose testimony and presence at the scene of the crime has been disbelieved further weakens the credibility of TIP and supports the view that the witnesses knew the identity of the suspects before TIP was held.

9. Identification evidence has so far been examined on the basis of the guidelines of test identification parade based on executive instructions and judicial pronouncements, which have been eloquently and elaborately discussed in Muhammed Yaqoob[2] and recently echoed In the matter of Kanwar Anwaar Ali.[3] These guidelines deal with the test identification parade and have also come to be known as "system variables," discussed later.

10. Other than the test identification parade, our courts have, now and then, independently examined the conditions under which the eye-witness saw the accused at the time of the crime, to assess whether the eye-witness had a good look at the accused so as to rely on his testimony. This assessment has been based on general principles of judiciousness and caution and is not necessarily based on scientific research. See Alim v. State (PLD 1967 SC 307) and Majeed alias Majeedi v. State (2019 SCMR 301). The evaluation of the witness on the basis of his ability to remember or recall the accused has not been mainstreamed in our criminal jurisprudence as an essential element while appreciating the identification evidence, i.e. identification proceedings and the rest of the evidence on the record especially the statement and location of the witness during the occurrence. Thus, the veracity of the testimony of the eye-witness is largely determined through the identification parade and not independent of the identification parade by examining the capacity and ability of the eye-witness to identify the accused.

11. In 1989, Lahore High Court in Muhammed Yaqoob[4] observed that "such-like identification proceedings are not the testimony of a witness but the testimony of the senses of the witness. It is essentially a test of his power of observation and perception, a test of his power to recognize strangers and a test of his memory. These gifts of God may vary from man to man. A witness may be honest, independent and truthful but then his memory may be faulty. And then the tricks of memory and its conscious and unconscious activity could wrap the vision of a man. When mistakes are possible in the recognition of a man known from before, then the possibility of such mistakes in identifying strangers is definitely greater. And more so when the witnesses have been the offender for the first time during the occurrence and that also briefly and not with a calm but in an excited, confused and terrorized state of mind." Lahore High Court raised an important point regarding power of observation, perception, recognition and memory of an eye-witness identifying an accused. However, this approach remained restricted to the role played by the accused in the crime as per the requirement of the guidelines of the test identification parade discussed above. The capacity and ability of the eye-witness was not assessed independently as a sequel or step two to the test identification proceedings. In 1981 Doral Patel, J. in Lal Pasand's case[5] cautioned the courts to beware of the dangers inherent in the identification of strangers and quoting from the Criminal Law Revision Committee Report (1972) observed that mistakes in identifications were " by far the greatest cause of actual or possible wrong convictions ." This underlines the importance of assessing the ability and capacity of the eye-witness, separately, to identify the accused in the circumstances of the case. This assessment also forms part of the identification evidence along with the test identification proceedings.

12. As time passed, international scientific surveys revealed that eye-witness testimony has been the most popular topic in psychological research. By 1995 alone there were over 2000 publications in psychology concerned with eye-witness reliability.[6] The single most important observation from the research on eye-witness identification is that it is substantially less accurate than generally believed. Overall, data from real-life cases show that just under 45 percent of witnesses pick the suspect, about 35 percent decline to make a choice, and about 20 percent pick innocent fillers.[7] The over reliance on visual identification evidence has led to numerous mistaken identifications of innocent suspects and consequently wrongful convictions.[8] In approximately 75 % of DNA exonerations in the United States, mistaken identification was the principal cause of wrongful conviction.[9] Furthermore, in 80 to 90 per cent of all DNA exonerations at least one eye-witness made a mistaken identification.[10] A wrongful conviction results in two injustices. The first tragedy is to the innocent person. The second is to the victim of the offence and to society, because the real offender is not brought to justice.[11] Wrongful convictions undermine the credibility of the legal system. Whenever witnesses are mistaken, it is rarely because they lie or misrepresent facts, but mostly because they misidentify people.

13. In the late 1960s, the courts around the world[12], began to set the standard for reviewing eyewitness identification evidence.[13] Reliability and credibility of the witness was termed as the linchpin in determining the admissibility of identification testimony.[14] US Supreme Court in the case of Manson v Brathwaite[15], UK Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) in Regina v. Turnbull and Another,[16] New Jersey Supreme Court in State v Madison[17] and Oregon Supreme Court in State v. Classen[18] settled the following factors for assessing the reliability of the witness:

(1) the opportunity of the witness to view the suspect at the time of the crime;

(2) the witness's degree of attention;

(3) the accuracy of the witness's prior description of the suspect;

(4) the level of certainty demonstrated at the confrontation (seeing the accused in court); and

(5) the time between the crime and the confrontation (seeing the accused in court).

It is interesting to note that these factors were drawn from earlier judicial rulings and not from scientific research.[19] The scientific research refutes the notion that memory is like a video recording, and that a witness needs only to replay the tape to remember what happened. Human memory is far more complex. The memory is a constructive, dynamic, and selective process. The process of remembering consists of three stages: acquisition-"the perception of the original event"; retention-"the period of time that passes between the event and the eventual recollection of a particular piece of information"; and retrieval-the "stage during which a person recalls stored information".[20] The process of memory retention and retrieval may be affected by a number of factors. The scientific literature divides those variables into two categories: system and estimator variables.[21] System variables are factors like lineup procedures which are within the control of the criminal justice system and in our jurisprudence are referred to as the Test Identification Parade. Whereas Estimator variables are factors related to the witness - like distance, lighting, or stress - over which the legal system has no control.[22] Our courts have marginally attended to this aspect of witness reliability before placing reliance on the identification evidence (see above). The scientific research[23] establishes that the following non-exhaustive list of "estimator variables" negatively affect the memory process:-

i. Stress: Even under the best viewing conditions, high levels of stress can diminish an eye-witness' ability to recall and make an accurate identification. It may be noted "while moderate levels of stress improve cognitive processing and might improve accuracy, an eye-witness under high stress is less likely to make a reliable identification of the perpetrator."[24]

ii. Weapon Focus: When a visible weapon is used during a crime, it can distract a witness and draw his or her attention away from the culprit. "Weapon focus" can thus impair a witness' ability to make a reliable identification and describe what the culprit looks like if the crime is of short duration.[25]

iii. Duration: The amount of time an eye-witness has to observe an event may affect the reliability of an identification. There is no minimum time required to make an accurate identification, however, a brief or fleeting contact is less likely to produce an accurate identification than a more prolonged exposure."[26]

iv. Distance and Lighting: A person is easier to recognize when close by, and that clarity decreases with distance. We also know that poor lighting makes it harder to see well. Thus, greater distance between a witness and a perpetrator and poor lighting conditions can diminish the reliability of an identification.[27]

v. Witness Characteristics: Characteristics like a witness' age and level of intoxication can affect the reliability of an identification. Children between the ages of nine and thirteen who view target-absent lineups are more likely to make incorrect identifications than adults.[28]

vi. Characteristics of Perpetrator: Disguises and changes in facial features altered between the time of the event and the identification procedure affects the accuracy of an identification.[29]

vii. Memory Decay: Memories fade with time and memory decay "is irreversible"; memories never improve. As a result, delays between the commission of a crime and the time an identification is made can affect reliability.[30]

The scientific research referred to above has not only appeared in the peer reviewed journals but also has been considered "credible" by various courts in different jurisdictions.[31] New Jersey Supreme Court in State v. Henderson[32] observed that "virtually all of the scientific evidence" that had emerged in recent decades "reveals that an array of variables can affect and dilute memory and lead to misidentifications." Also see State v. Lawson[33].

14. The laws of evidence maintain that in order for the court to take judicial notice of scientific facts they must be part of the general knowledge of men or must be agreed upon by reputable men in a particular field of science beyond reasonable dispute.[34] For judges to determine the degree of consensus on a particular scientific fact they may refer to any reputable and recognized reference sources.[35] The House of Lords in Regina (Quintavalle) v. Secretary of State for Health[36] held that the laws have to be construed in the light of contemporary scientific knowledge and in order to give effect to a plain parliamentary purpose, the statute may be held to cover a scientific development not known when the statute was passed. This Court can take judicial notice of the credible scientific development under Article 112, Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984. The question is can we shut our eyes to credible scientific research and development, which has already been recognized and acknowledged by the courts in various other jurisdictions. If scientific research can help and assist the court in understanding and appreciating evidence more fully and more meaningfully, the risk of miscarriage of justice stands minimized. Therefore, the courts don't shy away from scientific developments but instead reach out and embrace them. Reliance on scientific research and the factors evolved by science to assess the reliability and credibility of the eye-witness can improve the quality of identification evidence and as a consequence the quality of justice. Our jurisprudence had already travelled in this direction and now credible scientific research by providing us additional factors or "estimator variables" (which are not exhaustive) has provided additional factors to certify the credibility and reliability of the eye-witness and as a result the veracity and probative value of the identification evidence.

15. After the test identification parade, the court must verify the credibility of the eye-witness by assessing the evidence on the basis of the factors or estimator variables discussed above. Identification of an accused, therefore, becomes a two-step process. First, the suspects undergo a test identification parade and second, the credibility of the eye-witness is assessed by weighing the evidence in the light of the estimator variables.

16. Applying the "estimator variables" to the instant case we see that the site-plan shows that the appellants were at a distance of 15 to 30 feet from the complainant in the empty space of the godowns abutting a road with no light. The source of light in the empty area behind the godowns has not been secured as evidence during the investigation. The witness was fired at first and then the deceased was shot dead, we notice that factors like weapon focus and distance and lighting are visible in this case. The duration of the event has not been specified in the crime report. In this background, it cannot be said with certainty that the visual recognition of the appellants by the complainant on the fateful night was unhindered and unhampered especially when he was fired at first and allegedly saw the occurrence under stress of a threat. Based on the above "estimator variables," possibility of misidentification cannot be ruled out, thereby making it unsafe to place reliance on the identification evidence.

17. For the above reasons, appellants stand acquitted of the charge by extending them benefit of the doubt. These are the reasons for our short order dated 20.2.2019 which is reproduced hereunder for convenience and completion of record:

> "For reasons to be recorded later Criminal Appeals Nos. 307-L of 2012 and 308-L of 2012 are allowed, the convictions and sentences of Abdul Rashid and Rashid Aziz Rana appellants are set aside and they are acquitted of the charge by extending the benefit of doubt to them. They shall be released from the jail forthwith if not required to be detained in connection with any other case. Criminal Appeal No. 306-L of 2012 seeking enhancement of the sentence of Abdul Rashid respondent is dismissed."

MWA/S-15/SC Appeals allowed.

(Against the judgment dated 01.12.2016 of the Federal Service Tribunal, Islamabad in Appeal No. 72(P)CS/2015)

Civil service---

----Seniority---Civil servant transferred to another department after making a request for mutual transfer with another civil servant---Whether seniority of such civil servant was to be reckoned from date of his absorption in the new department or date of his initial appointment in his original department---Respondent was appointed as Preventive Officer (BS-11) in Customs House, whereas civil servant 'S' was working as Inspector (BS-11) in Collectorate of Customs and Central Excise---Both being in the Customs department holding posts in equal grade made a request for mutual transfer, which was accepted and the respondent was permanently absorbed as Inspector Customs, while "S" was absorbed as Preventive Officer---Held, that paragraph 6 of instructions contained in Serial No. 30, Chapter III, Part II of Estacode (1989 edition) clearly provided that where a person was transferred to another office in a situation where it was open to him to accept or refuse such transfer, his seniority was to be reckoned from the date of his transfer to the new office---Only exception to such rule was contained in paragraph 6(i)(b), which stated that where a person was compulsorily transferred to another office then he was allowed to count his service in the previous office towards his seniority in his new office---In the present case, the respondent sought his transfer to his new office on his own volition on the basis of mutual consent with another officer of the same grade; he was not compulsorily transferred at the instance of the department, hence the recognized practice contained in paragraph 6(i)(a) of Serial No. 30, Chapter III, Part II of Estacode (1989 edition) clearly disentitled him to count his previous service towards seniority in the new office---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed and impugned judgment of the Service Tribunal was set aside.

Date of hearing: 26th April, 2019.

JUDGMENT

FAISAL ARAB, J.---The respondent was appointed as Preventive Officer (BS-11) on 19.07.1988 and was posted in Customs House, Karachi. One Sultan Naeem Akhtar was working as Inspector (BS-11) in Collectorate of Customs and Central Excise, Peshawar. They being in the Customs department holding posts in equal grade made a request for mutual transfer, which was accepted in 1991 and the respondent was permanently absorbed as Inspector Customs in Peshawar, while Sultan Naeem Akhtar was absorbed as Preventive Officer and posted in Karachi.

2. In 2011 when FBR circulated the seniority list of the Inspectors of Customs department who were appointed upto the year 1990, the respondent found his name missing. He made representation claiming that as he was appointed as Preventive Officer in the year 1988 he be given seniority in the list of Inspectors from the date when he was initially appointed in 1988 and not from the date of his transfer in 1991. When the FBR issued the final seniority list of Inspectors in 2014, respondent was not given seniority from the date of his initial appointment i.e. from 1988 but from the date of his absorption as Inspector in 1991. He again made a departmental representation seeking his seniority to be reckoned from the date of his initial appointment i.e. 19.07.1988 which was not responded. He then preferred appeal in the Service Tribunal and succeeded in his endeavor by securing declaration that his seniority in the array of Inspectors be reckoned from the date when he was initially appointed in 1988. In granting such declaration, the reason which prevailed with the Service Tribunal was that when the seniority of four Valuation Officers, who were later absorbed in service as Appraisers was reckoned from the date of their initial appointment as Valuation Officer (the posts of Appraisers and Valuation Officers being of the same grade), on the same analogy the respondent could not be discriminated and ought to have been given the same treatment. Against such decision, the Customs department has preferred this petition seeking leave to appeal.

3. Learned counsel for the petitioner argued that the respondent who was working as Preventive Officer in Karachi since 1988 was transferred to Peshawar in 1991 and absorbed on the post of Inspectors on the basis of mutual transfer with one Sultan Naeem Akhtar and not compulsorily transferred at the instance of the department, therefore, the respondent cannot claim seniority in the list of Inspectors from the date of his initial appointment and is entitled to claim seniority only from the date when he was transferred to Peshawar as Inspector.

4. Learned counsel for the respondent, on the other hand, argued that it is a clear case of discrimination as in the case of transfer of four officers of equal grade to another post i.e. from Valuation Officers to Appraisers, their seniority was reckoned from the date of their initial appointment and not from the date of transfer to the new post. When we called upon the counsel for the respondent that keeping aside the plea of discrimination for a moment on what principle of service law respondent claims that his seniority be reckoned from the date when he was initially appointed and not from the date of his transfer, learned counsel referred to paragraph 6 of instructions contained in Serial No. 30, Chapter III Part II of Estacode (1989 edition), which reads as follows:-

"6. Seniority on transfer from one office to another.---(i) The instructions in the foregoing paragraphs regulate the position of a deputationist in his parent office. As regards his seniority in the office to which he is transferred, it should be determined in the following manner:-

(a) When it is open to the person concerned to accept or refuse an offer of appointment in another office, he should count his seniority in the new office from the date of his transfer to that office.

(b) When a person is compulsorily transferred to another office as a result of conscription, or along with the post and his work, he should be allowed to count his previous continuous service in the grade towards seniority in that grade in the new office."

5. The import of paragraph 6(i)(a) above appears to be quite contrary to what respondent's counsel intend to advance before us. It clearly provides that where a person is transferred to another office in a situation where it was open to him to accept or refuse such transfer, his seniority was to be reckoned from the date of his transfer to the new office. The only exception to this rule is contained in paragraph 6(i)(b). It states that where a person is compulsorily transferred to another office then he is allowed to count his service in the previous office towards his seniority in his new office. In the case of transfer of four other officers of the department, example of which has been quoted as precedent in the present case, their seniority may have been reckoned from the date of their initial appointment but nothing was brought on the record as to the circumstances in which such transfers had taken place. In the present case, one thing is clear that the respondent sought his transfer to his new office on his own volition on the basis of mutual consent with another officer of the same grade. He was not compulsorily transferred at the instance of the department, hence the recognized practice contained in paragraph 6(i)(a) of Serial No. 30, Chapter III Part II of Estacode (1989 edition) clearly disentitles him to count his previous service towards seniority in the new office. When on a principle of law one upon his transfer is not entitled to seek seniority from the date of his initial appointment then if someone else has been granted seniority in violation of such principle, which too is not clear, the same cannot be made a ground to raise the plea of discrimination.

6. In the circumstances, we are of the view that the Service Tribunal committed error when it accepted the plea of discrimination and granted seniority to the respondent from the date of his initial appointment in violation of the principle laid down in paragraph 6 of Serial No. 30 of Estacode for the simple reason that he could only be allowed to count his previous service towards seniority had he been compulsorily transferred at the instance of the department and not at his own. This petition is, therefore, converted into appeal and allowed and the impugned judgment is set aside.

7. As the main petition has been converted into appeal and allowed, this C.M.A. for stay has become infructuous and is disposed of accordingly.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.--On 07.3.2019, learned counsel for the petitioner informed this Court that trial of General (Retd.) Pervez Musharraf (accused/respondent No.1) before the Special Court, constituted under the Criminal Law (Special Court) Act, 1976 ("Act"), for the charge of high treason, stands stalled on account of absence of the accused from Pakistan. Report from the Registrar of Special Court was called for, to furnish reasons for the delay in the trial. More importantly, parties were put to notice to appear before the Court so as to determine as to how the Special Court may proceed further if the respondent deliberately and persistently fails to appear before it. Report of the Registrar, Special Court dated 20.3.2019, submitted before this Court, reveals that the complaint was filed against the accused on 12.12.2013, while formal charge was framed on 31.3.2014. The prosecution evidence stood recorded on 18.09.2014 and the accused was declared as a proclaimed offender on 12.7.2016. Since then the trial is at the stage of recording of statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C. We took up the matter on 25.3.2019 and before determining the course of action regarding persistent absence of the accused from appearing before the Special Court, we thought it best to leave it to the Special Court to first decide on the future course of action. On 28.3.2019, learned counsel for the accused made a statement before the Special Court that the accused will appear before the Special Court for his examination under section 342, Cr.P.C. on 13.5.2019, but the Special Court directed the accused to appear on 02.5.2019 and the trial has been adjourned to the said date.

2. Learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that keeping in view the history of the case and the conduct of the accused, it is not likely that he will appear before the Special Court on the next date of hearing. They submitted that under section 9 of the Act, the Special Court can proceed against the accused if he fails to appear before the Court and prayed that directions be given to the Special Court to proceed and conclude the trial in the absence of the accused.

3. Learned counsel for the accused on the other hand referred to section 6 of the Act to submit that powers and procedure of the Special Court require presence of the accused, while section 9 deals with adjournments and cannot be interpreted to derail the procedure provided under section 6 of the Act. Order dated 19.07.2016 of the Special Court was also referred to where the Special Court was of the view that presence of the accused was required to proceed further in the matter.

4. We have heard the learned counsel of the parties at some length. This Court on 24.2.2016, in Abdul Hameed Dogar v. Federal Government through Secretary, Ministry of Interior and 2 others (PLD 2016 SC 454) directed the Special Court to proceed with the trial of the accused with all convenient dispatch and without any unnecessary delay. Looking at the progress of the trial, we note with concern that complaint against the accused was filed on 12.12.2013 before the Special Court, the charge was framed on 31.3.2014 and the prosecution evidence was closed on 18.9.2014 and since then the matter is dragging on due to absence of the accused. The report of the Registrar, Special Court cuts a sorry picture of the long delay in the trial. There cannot be a more grave an offence than high treason and more solemn a proceedings than the trial for high treason case before a Special Court. High treason is a constitutional offence. Article 6 provides that if a person abrogates or subverts or suspends or holds in abeyance, or attempts or conspires to abrogate or subvert or suspend or hold in abeyance, the Constitution by use of force or show of force or by any other unconstitutional means, is guilty of high treason. Constitution is the fundamental law of the land which people of Pakistan through their representatives in the National Assembly have adopted, enacted and have given to themselves. Obedience to the Constitution under Article 5 of the Constitution is the inviolable obligation of every citizen where ever he may be. The significance, gravity and solemnity of the proceedings before the Special Court cannot be undermined by delaying the trial due to non-appearance of the accused. The parliamentary debate on the bill of this Act suggested that "the accused are charged with serious offences involving security and sovereignty of the State, therefore, it is in their interest that the cases, if they are proved innocent, if their innocence is proved should be decided as speedily and as quickly as possible[1]? Section 9 of the Act prevents this and ensures that the trial must proceed without any adjournment. Section 9 of the Act provides as under:-

> "9. Restriction of adjournments. No trial before the Special Court shall be adjourned for any purpose unless the Special Court is of opinion that the adjournment is necessary in the interests of justice and, in particular, no trial shall be adjourned by reason of the absence of any accused person due to illness, or if the absence of the accused or his counsel has been brought about by the accused person himself, or if the behavior of the accused person prior to such absence has been, in the opinion of the Special Court, such as to impede the course of justice but, in any such case, the Special Court shall proceed with the trial after taking necessary steps to appoint an advocate to defend any such accused person."

The above section envisages that once the trial has begun, the trial shall not be adjourned by reason of absence of any accused person due to illness, or if the absence of the accused or his counsel has been brought about by the accused person himself, or if the behavior of the accused person prior to such absence has been, in the opinion of the Special Court, such as to impede the course of justice. Section 9 mandates that the Special Court shall proceed with the trial after taking necessary steps to appoint an advocate to defend any such accused person. Section 9 is, therefore, an extension of the procedure for trial provided under section 6 of the Act and supports the purpose of the special law. Within the scope of this Act, if the accused voluntarily chooses not to exercise his right to appear and to be present at trial, it does not infringe the fairness of the trial nor does it violate the right to fair trial under Article 10A of the Constitution. To stop further proceedings of the trial, in this situation, would amount to putting a premium on the fault of the absconder. Besides the control over the proceedings of the trial cannot be allowed to vest in the accused.

5. In the present circumstances of the case, the accused is not merely absenting himself from attending the Special Court, he has also been declared a proclaimed offender on 12.7.2016. Being a fugitive from the law, the accused loses his right to audience [see Ikramullah v. State (2015 SCMR 1002); Dr. Mobashir Hassan v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2010 SC 265); Hayat Bakhsh v. The State (PLD 1981 SC 265)] as a consequence the accused has lost the right to have an advocate appointed to defend him unless and until the accused surrenders before the court.

6. We conclude that while section 342, Cr.P.C. enables the accused to explain any circumstances appearing against him in the evidence, however, in the context of this Act, if he voluntarily chooses not to appear or join the proceedings, he loses his right to such an explanation. Similarly, the accused being a proclaimed offender loses his right to audience and forfeits his right to put up a defence.

7. For the above reasons, the Special Court shall proceed with the trial on the next date of hearing. In case the accused surrenders and appears before the Court he would be entitled to record his statement under section 342, Cr.P.C. and lead any other defence under the law. However, in case the accused fails to appear on the next date of hearing, being a proclaimed offender, the Special Court is empowered to proceed against the accused even in his absence under section 9 of the Act.

8. Adjourned to a date to be fixed later on.

MWA/L-3/SC Order accordingly.

Date of hearing: 8th May, 2019.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Through this consolidated judgment, the titled cases are decided as they raise common question of law and facts.

2. Respondents (Market Committees) challenged the demand of tax raised by the petitioners (Department) under the Punjab Urban Immovable Property Tax Act, 1958 ("Act") for a period, before and after, the year 2002. Respondents have argued that as a "Market Committee" they stand exempt from tax under section 4(b)(ii) of the Act and placed reliance on Province of Punjab v. Market Committee (2011 SCMR 1856). While the case of the Petitioners is limited to the period after the amendment brought about in section 4 of the Act through Punjab Finance Ordinance, 2002 ("Ordinance") when the said exemption was no more available.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the law. Section 4 before the amendment in 2002 stood as follows:

"4. Exemptions.-The tax shall not be leviable in respect of the following properties, namely:-

(a) …

(b) buildings and lands other than those leased in perpetuity;

(i) vesting in Government of West Pakistan and not administered by a local authority.

(ii) owned or administered by a local authority when used exclusively for public purposes and not used or intended to be used for purposes of profit,"

Market committees enjoy exemption from tax under the above unamended section 4(b)(ii) of the Act as has already been settled by this Court vide judgment dated 21.7.2011 in the case of Province of Punjab v. Market Committee (2011 SCMR 1856), wherein it was held that the Market Committee falls within the definition of "Local Authority," and is, therefore, exempt from tax under section 4(b)(ii) of the Act. The impugned judgment correctly follows that judgment of this Court cited above to hold that the market committee is exempt from the chargeability of tax prior to the amendment brought through the Ordinance. The impugned judgment, however, does not discuss the liability of tax after the said amendment.

3(sic.) The Ordinance amended section 4(b) of the Act and replaced it in the following manner:

"4. Exemptions.-The tax shall not be leviable in respect of the following properties, namely:-

(a) …

(b) buildings cafe/lands other than those leased in perpetuity, owned and administered by the Government of the Punjab or a local government as defined in section 2 clause (xvi) of the Punjab Local Government Ordinance, 2002 (XIII of 2001)." (emphasis supplied)

After the amendment the term "local authority" has been deleted and exemption is only available to Government of the Punjab or to a local government as defined under the Local Government Ordinance, 2001. Market committee does not fall into either of the two. Therefore, respondents are liable to pay tax under the Act after the amendment in section 4(b) of the Act brought about through the Ordinance on 25.6.2002.

4. Faced with this situation, learned counsel for the respondents submits that the petitioners should have filed an intra court appeal before the High Court under section 3 of the Law Reforms Ordinance, 1972 instead of approaching this Court directly. This argument has little force in the light of section 10 of the Act, which provides for an appeal before the authority, especially when the name of the respondents is wrongly included in the valuation list, prepared for the purposes of collection of tax.

5. For the above reasons we hold that the respondents are liable to pay tax under the Act after the amendment in section 4(b) of the Act w.e.f 25.06.2002, therefore, both these petitions are converted into appeals and partially allowed.

MWA/D-3/SC Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Adnan Aslam, deceased was being tried for committing qatl-i-amd of one Mehtab; on fateful day i.e. 11.03.2011 at about 09:30 a.m. he alongside co-accused appeared before a learned Additional Sessions Judge at Gujranwala; after hearing he was being escorted back when Muhammad Bilal, appellant, brother of Mehtab deceased, armed with .30 caliber pistol, confronted him to avenge the earlier incident; he targeted three fire shots on different parts of his body as a result whereof, he succumbed to the injuries at the spot. Present in the precincts, Mukhatar Ahmad, S.I. PW-13, with assistance of his colleagues subdued the appellant at the spot. Incident was reported on the complaint of the deceased's father Muhammad Aslam, PW-9 wherein he arrayed, besides the appellant, Manzoor Ahmad and Shahzad Ahmad, alongside two unknown companions as accused for the crime; they were indicted before an Anti-Terrorism Court at Gujranwala; learned trial Judge while extending benefit of the doubt to Manzoor Ahmad and Shahzad Ahmad, co-accused, convicted the appellant under clause (b) of section 302 of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 read with clause (a) of section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and sentenced him to death on both counts along with compensation and fine in the sum of Rs.100,000/- respectively vide judgment dated 12.06.2012; his appeal met with no better fate; a learned Division Bench of the Lahore High Court affirmed the Capital Sentence Reference vide impugned judgment dated 12.01.2015 vires whereof are being disputed through leave of the Court.

2. Previous bad blood in the aftermaths of murder of appellant's brother at deceased's hands and fixation of case before the Court on the fateful day are common grounds. However, according to the defence the deceased was shot while attempting to flee by a police contingent. In this backdrop, prosecution has primarily relied upon the statements of Ghanafar Khalid, PW-8, Muhammad Aslam, PW-9, Muhammad Zaman, PW-10 and Mukhtar Ahmad, SI, PW-13; of them Ghanafar Khalid, PW-8, escorted the deceased in custody after court hearing. Muhammad Aslam, PW was a co-accused required to appear in the same case; Mukhtar Ahmad, SI, was also present in the premises. Presence of these witnesses cannot be doubted at the spot; they are in a comfortable unison on all the details of the occurrence, salient as well as collateral. Embarrassingly lengthy cross-examination remained inconsequential throughout. Defence's edifice is structured upon bald suggestions alone, denied by the witnesses with vehemence. Appellant's arrest at the crime scene shortly after the occurrence with a .30 caliber pistol subsequently found wedded with two out of three casings secured form the spot goes a long way to exclude hypothesis of his innocence. Acquittal of co-accused, tried for being in the community of intention, out of abundant caution, does not adversely impact upon prosecution's case. Responsibility for the crime, unambiguously, revolves around the appellant alone. A most stringent and cautious analysis irresistibly leads to the conclusion of appellant's guilt; he has been rightly returned a guilty verdict, however in so far as his conviction under clause (a) of section 7 of the Act ibid is concerned, it is found by us as inconsistent with the law declared by this Court in the cases of Amjad Ali and others v. The State (PLD 2017 SC 661) and Farooq Ahmed v. State and another (PLJ 2017 SC 408). Clause (iii) of Section 4 of the Third Schedule to the Act ibid provides an Anti-Terrorism Court as a forum for trial of offences involving, inter alia, "firing or use of explosives by any device, including bomb blast in the Court premises". Therefore the learned Special Judge was well within remit of law to try the appellant, however his conviction under section 7(a) of the Act ibid has to be essentially consequent upon a nexus between his act and situations provided in section 6 thereof. Aftermaths of appellant's conduct were certainly far from being benign; he choose a venue most guarded by law to settle the score, nonetheless, he was undoubtedly actuated to quench a personal vendetta. Every act of violence triggers fear and panic with collateral impact on the surroundings; this by itself would not bring even a most violent act to fall within the mischief of terrorism as contemplated by law. Therefore, appellant's conviction and sentence under section 7(a) of the Act ibid is set aside, however his conviction under clause (b) of section 302 of the Code ibid and sentence consequent thereupon is upheld. With the above modification, Criminal Appeal 104-L/2017 is dismissed.

MWA/M-27/SC Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Through leave of the Court, impugned herein is High Court's judgment dated 26.11.2014 whereby conviction of Ahad Shah, appellant, returned by the trial Court was upheld with modification of death penalty into imprisonment for life; he was indicted alongside Shahbaz Ali, Adal Shah, Sattar Shah and Mst. Kousar alias pathano for committing qatl-i-amd of Saqib Shah within the precincts of office of Superintendent of Police, Laylpur Town, Faisalabad at 3.45 p.m. on 2.5.2011. On the fateful day, investigation in a criminal case brought both the factions face-to-face at the venue; from amongst the array of accused, Adal Shah and Sattar Shah, blamed for abetment, were acquitted by the trial Court whereas Mst. Kousar alias Pathano has been let off by the High Court; Shahbaz Ali, co-accused slipped away before announcement of the judgment.

In the backdrop of a longstanding enmity, on the fateful day, the appellant, armed with a .30 caliber pistol, targeted the deceased with multiple fire shots; apprehended at the spot alongside the weapon, wedded with six casings secured from the spot, he was tried by an Anti-Terrorism Court, to receive a guilty verdict.

2. Arch rivalry with string of criminal cases between the two sides is a common ground; appellant's arrest with the weapon shortly after the occurrence statedly from the precincts of office of Superintendent of Police are circumstances, at first sight, pointed inexorably towards his culpability, however, on a closer scrutiny of prosecution's case, a number of factors san plausible explanations; his arrest from the office of Superintendent of Police does not find mention in the crime report; prosecution's claim that Nazakat Ali, SI, PW-9 arrested the appellant from first floor of the office has to be taken with a pinch of salt; according to his narrative, he first went to Allied Hospital, Faisalabad to draw up preliminary proceedings, a process essentially time intensive, and thereafter upon his return apprehended the appellant at the spot with weapon. It is mind boggling as to why in the heavily guarded premises no one else attempted to arrest the appellant; mute response in a heightened situation is somewhat intriguing; genesis of the script is inherently suspect. Acquittal of Mst. Kousar alias Pathano by the High Court is yet another devastating blow to the prosecution; she is a lady constable, indicted for being privy to the crime; it is alleged that clad in a sheet, she took aside the appellant shortly before the incident; logistical support is suggested though with reticence; her acquittal tremors down the very foundation of the case. No less intriguing is belated autopsy conducted the following day i.e. 3.5.2011 at 9.40 a.m. The deceased was shifted dead in the mortuary on 2.5.2011 where complaint was recorded at 4.20 p.m.; Allied Hospital, Faisalabad is a tertiary hospital; holding in abeyance of postmortem examination for such a long period is mind boggling to say the least; it reasonably spaces the hypothesis of consultations and deliberations. Findings recorded by the medial officer further add to the prosecution's predicament; use of a .30 caliber pistol is unequivocally alleged as the only weapon employed by the appellant, however, according to the autopsy report, the medical officer noted "A complex of 22 firearms wounds of entries of different shape and sizes (2 mm x 2 mm to 1 cm x 1 cm) in an area of 23 cm x 7 cm on lower chest and abdomen. Left part". The High Court itself viewed the above injury with suspicion for being incompatible/inconsistent with the weapon, seized with appellant's arrest. It casts away the hypothesis of appellant's arrest soon after the occurrence alongside the weapon of offence. Witnesses do not appear to have come forward with the whole truth and given the formidable past hounding both sides, patent discrepancies cannot be viewed as trivial, particularly after prosecution's failure qua three of the co-accused albeit with somewhat different roles. It would be unsafe to maintain the conviction. Criminal Appeal No. 299-L/2017 is allowed; impugned judgment is set aside; the appellant is acquitted from the charge and shall be released forthwith, if not required in any other case. As a natural corollary, Criminal Appeal No.298-L/2017 is dismissed.

Date of hearing: 24th June, 2019.

JUDGMENT

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Through leave of the Court, impugned herein is High Court's judgment dated 17.2.2015 whereby appellants' convictions recorded by the trial Court have been affirmed, albeit with alternation of death penalties into imprisonment for life.

2. Appellants, namely, Tariq Shah, Makhdoom Hussain and Fayyaz Shah have been arrayed as accused alongside Saqib Shah, Husnain Shah, Abbas Shah, Aoun Shah, Ali Hassan, and Ali Hussain on the complaint of Syed Ahad Haider Shah for committing qatl-e-amd of Ghulam Abbas Lak, Sammar Ali Shah and Qamar Ali Shah besides murderous assault upon Muhammad Naveed, Muhammad Ashiq, Muhammad Adil and Shahzad, PWs at 8.45 a.m. on 12.10.2009 within the remit of Police Station Civil Lines, Faisalabad. According to the prosecution, on the fateful day, arrived at the scene in two vehicles, armed with Kalashnikovs, they confronted the deceased and the injured in front of Anti-Terrorism Court, Faisalabad; Saqib Shah accused is assigned a burst to Ghulam Abbas Lak deceased; Makhdoom Shah fired upon Sammar Ali Shah and Ghulam Abbas Lak whereas Husnain Shah and Tariq Shah targeted Qamar Ali Shah and Sammar Ali Shah deceased; Tariq Shah joined the co-accused while hitting Sammar Ali Shah; Abbass Shah once again targeted Ghulam Abbas Lak while Ali Hussain Shah shot Sammar Ali Shah; fire shots by Ali Hassan hit Qamar Ali Shah; Fayyaz Hussain Shah resorted to indiscriminate firing on Muhammad Naveed whereas Aoun Shah targeted Ashiq and Muhammad Adil. A police constable on duty, namely, Muhammad Shahzad, was also caught in the line of fire; motive for the crime is previous enmity.

During spot inspection, the Investigating Officer secured nine casings ejected from two types of weapons i.e. Kalashnikov and .222 caliber gun besides a .30 caliber pistol with six live bullets.

3. Before appellants' indictment, through separate trial, Saqib Shah, Husnain Raza, Ali Hassan and Ali Hussain, were acquitted from the charge. It is a common ground that Abbas Ali Shah and Aoun Shah, accused tried subsequently, were also issued a clean chit. Acquittal of the identically placed co-accused notwithstanding and despite exoneration, the appellants, however were convicted by the learned trial Court with ultimate penalty, altered into imprisonment for life vires whereof are being assailed before us.

4. An internecine feud is long raging between the two sides facing each other in and outside the courts and in this backdrop, appellants' culpability, warrants a cautious judicial scrutiny. Huge loss of lives and receipt of multiple injuries by the witnesses are confirmed by those who miraculously endured the assault; their presence at the crime scene cannot be doubted, nonetheless, whether they are telling the whole truth is an issue altogether different; while the assailants certainly desired to eliminate old adversaries, the former may not have qualms to utilize the incident to see that some heads roll. Seen from this angle, participation of a large number of accused, each armed with automatic weapon, to take the victims by surprise is really intriguing; with formidable lethality of the weapons used in first strike, every single of them could conveniently engage the intended targets; wholesale participation is an uncalled for imprudence, certainly avoidable; investigative conclusions and earlier adjudications reinforce the hypothesis of a wider net and once such a possibility is reasonably contemplated, participation of each nominee would inherently be fraught with suspicion. Seizure of two types of empties during spot inspection unmistakably suggests number of assailants much less than mentioned in the crime report. There is yet another predicament facing the prosecution in the totality of circumstances; those acquitted from the charge are inexorably placed in an identical position with the present appellants. The witnesses were found unworthy of reliance; there is nothing to improve upon their credence; injuries suffered by them are not passports into the realm of truth; once rejected, evidence of prosecution's witnesses cannot be pressed into service to sustain the charge, similar on all fours. Prosecution is also failing on investigative and forensic sides. It would be unsafe to maintain the convictions without potential risk of error, therefore, by extending benefit of doubt, Criminal Appeal is allowed; impugned judgment is set aside; the appellants are acquitted from the charge and shall be released forthwith, if not required in any other case.

JUDGMENT

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Criminal Appeal No.67-L/2017 by Safdar Baloch alias Ali and Criminal Appeal No.68-L/2017 by Aziz Khan, through leave of the Court, arisen out of incident dated 15.12.2005 are bound by a common thread; these are being decided through this single judgment.

2. Prosecution case is structured upon statement of Iftikhar Khan, PW-1; on the eventful day at about 7.30 a.m. he was about to leave home to drop his son namely Shahrayar Khan at the school when the appellants along with Nazir Ahmed, co-accused, differently armed, confronted him. Safdar Baloch alias Ali and Nazir Ahmad shot him with .12 caliber guns on his left leg; as he felled on the ground Aziz Khan, appellant took Shahryar, aged 7/8, and whisked away in a car while demanding a sum of Rs.500,000/- as ransom. The complainant was rushed to Jinnah Hospital, Lahore; examined at 8.35 a.m., he was noted with two entry wounds on left leg with corresponding exits. Incident was reported to the police at 11:40 a.m. In hot pursuit of the culprits, Sardar Ali, ASI, intercepted car bearing No.LZV-9611 on a police picket; the person on wheel decamped from the scene by scaling over an adjoining wall, while Nazir Ahmad co-accused was subdued alongside the child. The appellants stayed away from law; they were arrested on 8.7.2008 and 18.3.2009 respectively; Nazir Ahmad, co-accused had already faced trial with failures of his appeals throughout. It is in this backdrop that the appellants were convicted under section 365-A of Pakistan Penal Code, 1860, section 7(e) of Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and section 324 read with section 34 of the Code ibid; they are sentenced to death alongside collateral sentences for murderous assault. Their appeals met with no better fate with capital sentence reference, returned in affirmative.

3. First glance cannot escape preponderance of prosecution's evidence; Iftikhar Khan, PW undoubtedly endured the assault; he was medially examined, noted to have injuries extensive in nature and consistent with the weapons allegedly used in the crime. First Information Report was recorded with a remarkable promptitude with accused prominently named therein; vehicle mentioned in the crime report was intercepted same day at police picket alongside Nazir Ahmed, co-accused with the child; later appeared as a witness to point out his finger upon the appellants. However, certain intriguing aspects of the case warrant an independent and careful scrutiny of evidence. The fate of the present appellants is not linked with the outcome of trial of Nazir Ahmad, co-accused, for a variety of reasons. The foremost question is as to how the complainant nominated the accused merely after having their momentary glimpses in a marriage ceremony few days before the occurrence. They were not with the child when the vehicle was intercepted, nor can it be held with certainty that the one who took to heels was one of them and this leaves Nazir Ahmad, co-accused alone in the field. Statement of the child, statedly of 7/8 years of age at the relevant time, certainly requires a very cautious scrutiny; he is reticent on important details of the episode, relating to the present appellants; being of an impressionable age, having experienced the nightmare his susceptibility to tuition cannot be ruled out. Argument that crime report was recorded after arrest of Nazir Ahmed, co-accused and the appellants were named therein on the basis of information other than purportedly laid by the complainant is not entirely beside the mark. While the occurrence cannot possibly be denied, nonetheless, nomination of the appellants on complainant's knowledge is a circumstance fraught with doubts. A crowded ceremony would provide little space/opportunity to the complainant to remember the faces and names of the participants and thus once the source of information about appellants' participation in the crime is found suspect it would be unsafe to rely upon the testimony of a vulnerable witness alone, particularly when the appellants were not arrested alongside the co-accused. Criminal liability is to be essentially settled on evidentiary certainty and not on moral satisfaction or factualities incompatible with evidence based upon truth. Prosecution's case against the appellants cannot be viewed as beyond reasonable doubt and thus conviction cannot be maintained without potential risk of error. Resultantly, criminal appeals are allowed, impugned judgment is set aside. The appellants shall be released forthwith, if not required in any other case.

Astaghfirullah, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellant.

Nemo for Respondent No.1.

Barrister Qasim Wadud, Additional Advocate-General, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa for the State.

Date of hearing: 29th April, 2019.

ORDER

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Through leave of the Court, impugned herein is judgment dated 14.5.2009, whereby a learned division bench of the Peshawar High Court altered respondents' conviction from clause (b) of section 302 of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 into clause (c) thereof. The issue has arisen out of incident dated 10.8.2006 within the remit of Police Station Lund Khwar, District Mardan reported by Alamgir, appellant herein; he arrayed the respondents as well as one Umar Din in the crime report for committing qatl-i-amd of his father Gul Mehmood, who surprised them while cutting branches of keekar tree and excavating stones from his area. The appellant endured the assault, however his father succumbed to the injuries. While Umar Rehman co-accused stayed away from law, indicted by a learned Additional Sessions Judge, the respondents were returned a guilty verdict on multiple counts; for qatl-i-amd of Gul Mehmood deceased they were convicted under clause (b) of the Section ibid and sentenced to imprisonment for life along with direction to collectively pay diyat to the tune of Rs.3,65,921/-, to be apportioned amongst the legal heirs. In appeal the learned High Court set aside diyat amount and instead directed payment of compensation in the sum of Rs.50,000/- each; respondents' conviction was altered from clause (b) into clause (c) of the Section ibid.

2. Learned counsel for the appellant has primarily assailed modification in conviction and sentences consequent thereupon on the ground that there was no occasion for the learned High Court, to modify conviction and sentences, rightly settled by the learned trial Court. It is further argued that the respondents with available weapons took the life of an innocent person 'massom-ud-dum', without provocation and thus were liable to be visited with the penalty commensurate with the crime believed to have been committed at their hands by both the Courts below. The learned Law Officer has defended the impugned judgment.

3. It is prosecution's own case that occurrence took place in a sudden encounter with no previous bad blood; weapons used in the occurrence though formidable in circumstances were nonetheless not choice selection to mount an assault. Accused side also suffered injuries, conspicuously omitted in the crime report. Spot inspection sans presence of tree branches or excavated stones. Scenario spells out a situation that no one anticipated; once started it aggravated, resulting into injuries to the both, with a heavier toll on the complainant's side. In circumstances respondents' liability more aptly falls within the mischief of clause (c) of Section ibid. The view taken by the learned High Court is in consonance with the law declared in the case titled Ali Muhammad v. Ali Muhammad and another (PLD 1996 SC 274), reaffirmed in the case titled v. The State (sic.). It is by now well settled that situations earlier covered by erstwhile provisions of section 304 of the Code ibid are not catered by clause (c) of aforesaid section of law. Impugned view being well within the remit of law calls for no interference. Appeal is dismissed.

JUDGMENT

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Criminal Appeal by Bashir Ahmad, convict and Criminal Petition for leave to appeal by Mst. Kaneez Fatima, sister of Talib Hussain deceased, arisen out of incident dated 29.5.2003, with a common thread are being decided through this singe judgment.

2. Prosecution case is structured upon statement of Ghulam Hussain, PW-2. According to him, on the fateful day his daughter Mst. Kaneez Mai was on her way to fetch grocery items when Naseer Bakhsh accused held her by hair, while his brother Ahmed dealt her club blow; upon receipt of information, the complainant with a pistol rushed to the spot; Naseer Bakhsh hit him with the club; the pistol felled, picked by Naseer Bakhsh accused. In the meantime, Talib Hussain deceased with.12 caliber gun is attracted to the spot. Rehmat Ali accused engaged the deceased with a hatchet blow on his right ear, later fell on the ground when Naseer Bakhsh, Ahmed Khan, Rehmat Ali, Bashir Ahmad and Muhammad Zaman caused injuries; the deceased succumbed to the injuries at the spot. Manhandling of Mst. Kaneez Mai, PW by Naseer Bakhsh is cited as motive for the crime.

Dissatisfied with police investigation, the complainant preferred to prosecute the accused through a private complaint; he blamed that crime report was not faithfully recorded by the investigating officer, otherwise biased in favour of the accused. Indictment resulted into conviction vide judgment dated 18.12.2008. For homicide, the appellant was sentenced to death besides being held in the community of intention qua the injuries suffered by the witnesses. Naseer Bakhsh, Muhammad Zaman and Ahmed Khan were convicted and sentenced for injuries to the witnesses. Appeal filed by the convict met with no better fate. A learned division bench of the Lahore High Court at Multan vide impugned judgment dated 27.3.2014 upheld the convictions albeit with alteration of death penalty into imprisonment for life; sentences awarded to the co-accused were reduced to already undergone by them. Petition for Special Leave to Appeal by the complainant was dismissed vide the same judgment; they are in contest once again before us.

3. Well orchestrated narrative by the witnesses that includes the injured, notwithstanding, we have noticed inherent shortcomings casting their shadow on the prosecution case. Naseer Bakhsh and Bashir Ahmad are real brothers, Ahmed Khan accused is former's son. Muhammad Zaman and Rehmat Ali also hail from the same clan; the entire household is in the array and in this backdrop argument that it is a case of wider net is not entirely beside the mark. Similarly, a pistol and shotgun, admittedly with the deceased and the complainant, lend credence to hypothesis of aggression; renunciation of crime report by the complainant goes a long way to tremor the very basis of his case. Suppression of injuries of an opponent is yet another intriguing circumstance. While the complainant was well within the remit of law to pursue his case through a private complaint, nonetheless, non-examination of investigating officer alongside some other witnesses cannot be countenanced without exposing the accused to a grievous prejudice. Prosecution case is not free from doubt and thus it would be unsafe to maintain the conviction. Resultantly, Criminal Appeal is allowed, the impugned judgment is set aside. The appellant shall be at set at liberty forthwith, if not required in any other case. As a natural corollary criminal petition for leave to appeal is dismissed. These are the reasons of our short order of even date which is reproduced as under:-

> "For reasons to be recorded later, the instant criminal appeal is allowed. The conviction and sentence of the appellant Bashir Ahmad is set aside. He is acquitted of the charge framed against him. The appellant is present in person as he is on bail after suspension of his sentence by the learned High Court. Therefore, his sureties are ordered to be discharged. JUDGMENT

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Muhammad Akbar and his three sons, namely Qasim Ali, Mubashir Hussain and Nazeer Hussain were done to death at 9.30 p.m. on 20.6.2004 within the remit of Police Station Kunjha, District Gujrat. Incident was reported by Amjad Ali, PW who escaped assailant's wrath as according to him he alongside his mother and maternal uncles arrived at the scene just when the family was being given blood bath. It is prosecution's case that the complainant and his mother had visited Muhammad Anwar and Muhammad Akbar, later's real brothers to settle certain family differences and it was after reconciliation that the witnesses returned home together.

Shewaiz Rasool, the present appellant, alongside Shahid Afzaal and Muhammad Rafi co-accused, armed with automatic weapons, were blamed to have targeted the deceased with multiple shots. Khawar Ali, Qamar-uz-Zaman, Muhammad Luqman, Muhammad Boota and Asad Ullah, differently armed were also alleged to have resorted to firing. The witnesses viewed the occurrence in electric bulb light; motive is conspicuously absent in the crime report.

2. The appellant stayed away from law, while remainder were tried by an Anti-Terrorism Court. Convicted on multiple counts, Shahid Afzaal and Muhammad Rafi were sentenced to death, whereas Khawar Ali, Muhammad Boota, Qamar-uz-Zaman, Asad Ullah and Muhammad Luqman, to imprisonment for life. In the wake of remand for re-writing of the judgment, the case came up before the learned High Court when vide judgment dated 18.11.2008 it maintained convictions and sentences of Shahid Afzaal and Muhammad Rafi while acquitting the remainder from the charge; appeal filed by them was allowed by this Court. It was a posthumous success for Shahid Afzaal, died during the pendency of his appeal. The appellant has been subsequently tried in the above backdrop; he was convicted on multiple counts and sentenced to death by the learned trial Court vide judgment dated 22.4.2010, affirmed by the learned High Court vide impugned judgment dated 11.2.2015 vires whereof are being challenged through leave of the Court.

3. The appellant is identically placed, on all fours, with Muhammad Rafi and Shahid Afzaal, co-accused; they had been assigned joint firing on the deceased; in the absence of any specific motive no distinction can be possibly drawn so as to distinguish, even obliquely appellant's case from his co-accused. Though not assigned any harm to the deceased or the witnesses, acquittal of Khawar Ali, Muhammad Boota, Qamar-uz-Zaman, Asad Ullah and Muhammad Luqman stated to be in the company and community of intention with the appellant and acquitted co-accused, firing side by side, does cast a dark shadow upon prosecution's case. This Court for a variety of reasons, each valid, acquitted Muhammad Rafi, co-accused from the charge; these include issue of identity of assailants during the fateful night; improbability of witnesses' detour preceding assault and arrival exactly at a point of time when firing commenced; human incapacity to capture minor details in an extreme crises situation involving no less than eight persons and lack of motive etc.; these are squarely applicable to the case of present appellant as well and thus we have not been able either to draw any distinction or take a different view. Sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. Resultantly, Criminal Appeal No.135-L/2017 is allowed, impugned judgment is set aside. The appellant shall be set at liberty, if not required in any other case.

ORDER

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Touheed Begum met homicidal death in her home; Wajahat, appellant herein, was blamed for the crime by Gul Daraz, PW, no other than his father-in-law; domestic differences were cited as motive for the crime. The learned trial Court returned guilty verdict to the appellant; he was convicted under clause (b) of Section 302 of Pakistan Penal Code and sentenced to imprisonment for life along side direction for payment of diyat to the tune of rupees six lacs to the legal heirs with benefit of section 382-B of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 vide impugned judgment dated 28.1.2010 affirmed by the learned Peshawar High Court vide judgment dated 13.2.2013, albeit with conversion of diyat into compensation.

2. Learned counsel for the appellant contends that judgments of the Courts below are erroneously premised on misconception of law inasmuch as in the absence of positive proof, the appellant could not have been convicted on the basis of presumptions or his failure to satisfactorily explain circumstances leading towards his wife's death. Similarly, appellant's absence from law cannot be equated with his guilt, complained the learned counsel, positions vehemently contested by the learned Law Officer.

3. The complainant, though seemingly with no axe to grind, nonetheless has not himself witnessed the occurrence; crime report, is structured upon his strong belief that no one else other than the appellant could be the possible assassin, a conviction based upon hearsay queries, most important being one furnished by his second daughter Nazakat PW married in the same household; she appeared as PW-5 and in the witness box pleaded ignorance about the culprit, responsible for her sister's death. She merely deposed about crime without reference to the assailant. Her evidence is not of much benefit to the prosecution leaving in the field suspicion alone to sustain the charge. Appellant's belated plea of the suicide even if rejected outrightly by itself would not absolve the prosecution to drive home the charge, on its own strength and same goes for appellant's absconsion; people avoid to face process of law or their adversaries for a variety of reasons, not necessarily inclusive of their guilt; Appellant's reticence to satisfactorily explain as to what befell upon his better half under the same roof, though somewhat intriguing, however cannot be equated to qualify as evidentiary certainty, essentially required in order to saddle him with formidable corporal consequences; his failure would not give rise to an adverse presumption within the contemplation of Article 121 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984 and thus it would be grievously unsafe to maintain the conviction, without potential risk of error as well as diametrical departure from adversarial nature of criminal trial. The appeal is allowed, the impugned judgment is set aside and the appellant shall be set at liberty forthwith, if not required in any other case.

MWA/W-2/SC Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Surprised on 21.1.2015 by a contingent of Police Station A-Division Okara, Qari Muhammad Ishaq Ghazi, appellant herein, was found in possession of pamphlets, fraught with incendiary contents, calculated to incite hatred towards a particular sect; indicted before an Anti-Terrorism Court at Lahore, he was convicted under section 9 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and sentenced to 5-years' RI with fine of Rs.100,000/-, to be recovered as arrears of land revenue with benefit of section 382-B of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 vide judgment dated 24-3-2015; his appeal in the High Court met with no better fate on 26-10-2016 vires whereof are being impugned through leave of the Court. The appeal came up before the Court after appellant's release in the wake of completion of sentence, however, the learned counsel has opted to argue the case at full length with a view to vindicate his position.

2. A multipronged tirade includes submissions, both on factual as well as legal aspects of the case; it ranges from denial, non-association of public witnesses as well as prosecution's failure to establish distribution of impugned material in the public, a sine qua non, according to the learned counsel to attract the mischief of section 9 ibid.

3. Contents of the impugned pamphlets are repugnant and abhorrent to say the least; too nauseatic to be reproduced; capable of causing most grievous offence; these contravene all the limits of decency, an obligation sanctimoniously upheld by every faith. The argument that mere possession of the impugned material by itself would not attract the mischief of the section ibid, without actual distribution, is naively beside the mark. A plain reading of section 9, unambiguously, suggests that possession of the inflammatory material by itself is an offence even before it is distributed; the legislature intended to nip the evil in the bud and rightly so given the inflammatory potential of the crime. Arrested red-handed, objection over non-association of public witnesses to confirm the possession does not hold water either. Police officials, being functionaries of the State, are no less credible witnesses to drive home the charge in a milieu of pervasive apathy towards civic responsibilities; people prefer to recuse behind safety instead of coming forward in aid of justice. The officials who testified in the witness-box had seemingly no axe to grind, otherwise, found by us in a comfortable unison with one another. Police officials are as good witnesses as any other and their evidence is subject to same standard of proof and principles of scrutiny as applicable to any other category of witnesses; in the absence of any animus, infirmity or flaw in their depositions, their statements can be relied without demur. View taken by the Courts below, well within the remit of law, calls for no interference. Criminal Appeal fails. Dismissed.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---I have seen the order passed by my learned brother Qazi Faez Isa, J. in the instant case dated 09.05.2018 (the "Order"). This Order was passed when the three-member bench, of which he was a member, was abruptly reconstituted, ousting him as member of the bench. The relevant extracts from the Order of my learned brother are as under:

> "3. Article 184(3) of the Constitution grants to the Supreme Court the power to make an order of the nature mentioned in Article 199 of the Constitution if "the Supreme Court... considers that a question of public importance with reference to the enforcement of any of Fundamental Rights conferred by Chapter I Part-II is involved". Once the Supreme Court is satisfied that these two conditions (public importance and Fundamental Rights) are involved then the question of enforcement of the relevant Fundamental Rights arises. Needless to state the powers that the Constitution has granted to the Supreme Court cannot be assumed by the said Director. The approval of the Hon'ble Chief Justice is also not a substitute for an order of the Supreme Court.

4. The Director had written similar notes, also dated April 12, 2018, in the cases at serial numbers 3, 4 and 5 of the List (HRC Nos.14960-K of 2018, 14962-K of 2018 and 14964-K of 2018 respectively). The files of these cases and of those listed at serial numbers 6, 7 and 8 of the List (HRC Nos.16549- K/2018, 18200-K/2018 and 18879-K/2018) also did not indicate that the Supreme Court had satisfied itself that the abovementioned two conditions had been met.
5. However, before Article 184(3) could be read the Hon'ble Chief Justice intervened and said that he will be reconstituting the Bench and suddenly rose up. The Bench was then presumably reconstituted, I say presumably because no order was sent to me to this effect. However, a two member Bench did assemble later, from which I was excluded. This for me is a matter of grave concern. In my humble opinion it is unwarranted and unprecedented to reconstitute a Bench, in such a manner, whilst hearing a case. To do so undermines the integrity of the system, and may have serious repercussions.
6. Before exercising its original jurisdiction the Supreme Court must satisfy itself that the jurisdiction it is assuming accords with the Constitution. However, even before any opinion could be expressed thereon the matter was cut short as mentioned above.
7. I am constrained to write this as not doing so would weigh heavily on my conscience and I would be abdicating my responsibility as a judge."

2. Since then I waited for the senior member of the Bench (the Hon'ble Chief Justice) to pass an appropriate order in the case and also respond to the Order passed by my learned brother Qazi Faez Isa, J in order to explain the reconstitution of the bench that day. However, no such order has been passed till date and the case has been incorrectly reflected in the "Bench Disposal Statement" of the said date as an "adjourned case." The Hon'ble Chief Justice is retiring on 17th January, 2019, therefore, I feel constitutionally obligated, as a member of the bench, to express my views regarding the Order of my learned brother and to pass my order in this case for 19.05.2018, when it came up for hearing before the bench.

3. As a matter of background, a special three member bench, was constituted to hear the under-mentioned cases on 09.5.2018 at 3:00 pm as per Supplementary Cause List No.6-P of 2018, dated 8th May, 2018 at the Peshawar Registry of the Supreme Court of Pakistan, including the instant case. This Bench was to assemble after the conclusion of work by the regular two member bench already working at Peshawar comprising Qazi Faez Isa, J. and myself.

| | Case No. |

| 8. | H.R.C.18879-K/2018 |

4. The special three member bench heard the first case i.e., Constitution Petition No.74/2013 titled Professor Muhammed Ibrahim Khan and others v. ERRA through its Chairman and others and connected HRC No.25684-K/2017 Application by Sheraz Mehmood Qureshi and passed a verbal order constituting a Commission.[1] When the titled case (second case on the Cause List) came up for hearing, my learned brother Qazi Faez Isa J., member of the bench, inquired from the counsel as to how the case was initiated by the Human Rights Cell, under Article 184(3) of the Constitution (The Order passed by my brother, relevant extracts reproduced above, is self-explanatory). At this juncture I felt a certain unease amongst the other two members of the bench over the issue of Article 184(3) and in order to avoid any further escalation, I proposed to the Hon'ble Chief Justice to take a brief recess so that the members of the Bench can discuss this matter in chambers to avoid embarrassment in open court. However, the Chief Justice, instead, announced in open court that the Bench stands reconstituted and that the new two-member bench will re-assemble soon.

5. The Bench was reconstituted and the new two-member bench, comprising the Hon'ble Chief Justice and myself, assembled and resumed the hearing of the instant case, which was being heard earlier by the three-member bench. We also heard the other cases from the same Cause List. However, after court, I had a chance to read the Order of my learned brother (reproduced above). This necessitated the examination of the legal scope of reconstitution of benches under the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules"). Upon examining the legal position, I declined to sign the orders of the newly re-constituted two-member bench unless the Order of my learned brother was responded to.[2] Here are my reasons:

6. Under Order XI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules") the Chief Justice has the prerogative to constitute benches. The Order is reproduced for ready reference:

ORDER XI

CONSTITUTION OF BENCHES

Save as otherwise provided by law or by these Rules every cause, appeal or matter shall be heard and disposed of by a Bench consisting of not less than three Judges to be nominated by the Chief Justice:

Provided that

(i) all petitions for leave to,

(ii) appeals from appellate and revisional judgments, and orders made by a Single Judge in the High Court, and

(iii) appeals from judgments/orders of the Service Tribunals or Administrative Courts, and appeals involving grant of bail/cancellation of bail, may be heard and disposed of by a bench of two Judges, but the Chief Justice may, in a fit case, refer any cause or appeal as aforesaid to a larger Bench.

Provided further that if the Judges hearing a petition or an appeal are equally divided in opinion, the petition or appeal, as the case may be, shall, in the discretion of the Chief Justice, be placed for hearing and disposal either before another Judge or before a larger Bench to be nominated by the Chief Justice.

The above Rule provides for administrative powers of the Chief Justice to constitute benches. However, once the bench is constituted, cause list is issued and the bench starts hearing the cases, the matter regarding constitution of the bench goes outside the pale of administrative powers of the Chief Justice and rest on the judicial side, with the bench. Any member of the bench may, however, recuse to hear a case for personal reasons or may not be available to sit on the bench due to prior commitments or due to illness. The bench may also be reconstituted if it is against the Rules and requires a three-member bench instead of two. In such eventualities the bench passes an order to place the matter before the Chief Justice to nominate a new bench. Therefore, once a bench has been constituted, cause list issued and the bench is assembled for hearing cases, the Chief Justice cannot reconstitute the bench, except in the manner discussed above.

7. In the absence of a recusal by a member of the Bench, any amount of disagreement amongst the members of the Bench, on an issue before them, cannot form a valid ground for reconstitution of the Bench. Any reconstitution of the Bench on this ground would impinge on the constitutional value of independence of judiciary. The construct of judicial system is pillared on the assumption that every judge besides being fair and impartial is fiercely independent and is free to uphold his judicial view. This judicial freedom is foundational to the concept of Rule of Law. Reconstitution of a bench while hearing a case, in the absence of any recusal from any member on the bench or due to any other reason described above, would amount to stifling the independent view of the judge. Any effort to muffle disagreement or to silence dissent or to dampen an alternative viewpoint of a member on the bench, would shake the foundations of a free and impartial justice system, thereby eroding the public confidence on which the entire edifice of judicature stands. Public confidence is the most precious asset that this branch of the State has. It is also one of the most precious assets of the nation.

8. Professor Ahraon Barack points out that a judge ought to be aware of his power and the limits thereof. Naturally, the judge knows the law and the power it grants to the judge, but he must also learn the limits imposed on him as a judge. Second, a judge must recognize his mistakes. Like all mortals, judges err. A judge must admit this. According to the well-known statement of Justice Jackson, 'We are not final because we are infallible, but we are infallible only because we are final.' In one opinion, citing Justice Jackson's statement, it was added, 'I think that the learned judge erred. The finality of our decision is based on our ability to admit our mistakes, and our willingness to do so in appropriate cases.' McLachlim Beverly in 'The Charter of Rights and Freedom: A Judicial Perspective' notes, 'I hope that if we admit our mistake, we will strengthen public confidence in the judiciary.' Third, in our writing and our thinking, judges must display modesty and an absence of arrogance. Statements such as those of Chief Justice Hughes that 'we are under the Constitution, but the Constitution is what the judges say it is' are not merely incorrect but also perniciously arrogant.[3] I must admit that my sitting on the reconstituted two-member bench was a mistake and having realized that after examining the legal position, I did not sign the orders passed by the reconstituted two-member bench and as a junior member of the Bench, awaited for the Hon'ble Chief Justice to pass an appropriate order in response to the Order of my learned brother Qazi Faez Isa, J.

9. In my opinion, a bench, once it is constituted and is seized of a matter on the judicial side, cannot be reconstituted by the Chief Justice in exercise of his administrative powers, unless a member(s) of the bench recuses or for reasons discussed above. Therefore, the reconstitution of the two-member bench and the proceedings before the said bench on 9th May, 2018 in all the cases fixed before it are void and non-est. I agree with my learned brother Qazi Faez Isa, J. that the reconstitution of the Bench by the Hon'ble Chief Justice in the present case is unwarranted and unprecedented and undermines the integrity of the system.

10. This order may be read into other cases fixed before the three member bench on that day i.e. from serial Nos.2 to 8 of the cause list (reproduced in paragraph 3 above), and which were again fixed before the reconstituted two-member bench. All those cases are to be put up for rehearing before an appropriate bench to be constituted by the Hon'ble Chief Justice and record of the court must reflect the correct status of these cases.

For the above reasons, I concur with my learned brother Qazi Faez Isa, J.

relevant misconduct---Administrative measure must not be more drastic than necessary---Standards of proportionality and unreasonableness were inextricably intertwined---Unreasonableness contained two elements of proportionality when it required the weight of relevant considerations to be fairly balanced and when it forbade unduly oppressive decisions---Under the first element, proportionality was a test requiring the decision maker to maintain a fair balance, and under this category the courts evaluated whether manifestly disproportionate weight had been attached to one or other considerations relevant to the decision---Second element was that the courts considered whether there had been a disproportionate interference with the claimants rights or interests---More sophisticated version of proportionality provided for a structured test, where under the courts asked first whether the measure, which was being challenged, was suitable to attaining the identified ends (the test of suitability)---Suitability here included the notion of "rational connection" between the means and ends---Next step asked whether the measure was necessary and whether a less restrictive or onerous method could have been adopted (the test of necessity - requiring minimum impairment of the rights or interest in question).

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner was appointed as Mali (gardener) in BPS-01 vide office order dated 30.04.2009 in the Cantonment Board, Peshawar. Thereafter, he was absorbed against the permanent post of Telephone Operator in BPS-02 vide office order dated 23.08.2010. During his service as a Telephone Operator, the petitioner absented himself from duty on 07.02.2011. The department initiated disciplinary proceedings against the petitioner and appointed an inquiry officer, who recommended in his report dated 10.05.2011 that 1/4th amount from the monthly salary of the petitioner be deducted as fine and he be also given last/final chance and in case he does not improve his behavior in future he be punished strictly. However, the authorized officer removed the petitioner from service vide office order dated 21.05.2011. Thereafter, the petitioner preferred

The petitioner challenged the same through writ petition before the Peshawar High Court which was dismissed vide impugned order dated 15.05.2013.

2. Learned counsel for the petitioner submits that petitioner was removed from service just because he absented himself from service for one day i.e., on 07.02.2011. He further submits that if the authorized officer was to disagree with the findings of the inquiry officer, he should have given reasons and granted fresh opportunity of hearing to the petitioner. In this regard he referred to Rule 7(a) of the Government Servants (Efficiency and Discipline) Rules, 1973 and placed reliance on the case of Habibullah Bhutto v. Collector of Customs (2011 SCMR 1504).

3. Learned counsel representing the respondents submitted that the petitioner had been absenting himself in the past and considering his record the penalty of removal is commensurate. He further submitted that petitioner has been removed from service in terms of the Pakistan Cantonment Servants Rules, 1954 ("Cantonment Rules")

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the record. The petitioner, during his service as Telephone Operator, earlier absented himself from duty on 21.11.2010. As a result he was fined a sum of Rs.2000/-. He then absented himself on 07.02.2011, which resulted in his removal from service, which is the subject matter of this petition. Under Rule 50 of the Cantonment Rules, the Authority of the petitioner is the President, Cantonment Board and the Authorized Officer is the Cantonment Executive Officer[1]. The procedure of inquiry under the said Rule is that if a major penalty is to be imposed the Authorized Officer is required to forward the case to the Authority along with charge and statement of allegations. In the instant case, the impugned order has been passed by the authorized officer and has not been forwarded to the Authority. Additionally, the inquiry officer had recommended deduction of salary (1/4th amount from his monthly salary) as a fine for absence from duty on 07.02.2011 and giving him last chance to improve himself. The Authorized Officer, if disagreeing with the inquiry officer, should have issued fresh notice to the petitioner and given reasons for his disagreement and justification for visiting the petitioner with a graver penalty. Reliance is placed on Habibullah Bhutto v. Collector of Customs (2011 SCMR 1504). Learned counsel appearing for the respondent Cantonment Board candidly conceded to both these omissions. With these legal infirmities in the disciplinary proceedings, the order of removal of the petitioner was totally without jurisdiction, therefore, the question of the departmental appeal being barred by time pales into insignificance. It is also noticed that earlier absence of the petitioner from duty, while working as a Mali, weighed with the High Court in upholding his removal order. The petitioner had absented himself from work on 25.01.2010, 08.05.2010 and 10.05.2010. According to the record, the petitioner has already been penalized for absenting himself on the said dates and more importantly inspite of this background, he on the basis of his "satisfactory performance," was absorbed against a permanent higher post i.e., Telephone Operator in BPS-02, on 23.08.2010.

5. There is yet another dimension of the case. The court can examine and judicially review the executive discretion exercised by the authorized officer on the ground of proportionality. Alongside reasonableness, proportionality is now a central standard directing the action of the executive branch. The point of departure is that a disproportionate act that infringes upon a human right is an illegal act. The court, which guards the legality of the acts of the executive branch, performs judicial review over these acts and examines whether they fulfill the tests of proportionality. Proportionality is a standard that examines the relationship between the objective the executive branch wishes to achieve, which has the potential of infringing upon a human right, and the means it has chosen in order to achieve that infringing objective. The fiduciary duty, from which the administrative duty of fairness and administrative reasonableness are derived, demands administrative proportionality as well.[2] "The courts will quash exercises of discretionary powers in which there is not a reasonable relationship between the objective which is sought to be achieved and the means used to that end, or where punishments imposed by administrative bodies or inferior courts are wholly out of proportion to the relevant misconduct[3]. An administrative measure must not be more drastic than necessary or to sum up in a phrase - not taking a sledgehammer to crack a nut[4]. According to De Smith's Judicial Review[5], the standards of proportionality and unreasonableness are inextricably intertwined. Unreasonableness contains two elements of proportionality when it requires the weight of relevant considerations to be fairly balanced and when it forbids unduly oppressive decisions. Under the first element, proportionality is a test requiring the decision- maker to maintain a fair balance. Under this category the courts evaluate whether manifestly disproportionate weight has been attached to one or other considerations relevant to the decision. The second element is that the courts consider whether there has been a disproportionate interference with the claimants rights or interests. A more sophisticated version of proportionality provides for a structured test. Here the courts ask first whether the measure, which is being challenged, is suitable to attaining the identified ends (the test of suitability). Suitability here includes the notion of "rational connection" between the means and ends. The next step asks whether the measure is necessary and whether a less restrictive or onerous method could have been adopted (the test of necessity - requiring minimum impairment of the rights or interest in question).

6. Applying the test of proportionality to the executive discretion exercised in the instant case, the order of the authorized officer, other than the legal infirmities discussed above, fails to maintain fair balance by removing a person from service because he absented himself from duty for a day. The executive discretion also fails the structured test of proportionality including the test of suitability and test of necessary requiring minimum impairment of the right of the petitioner.

7. For the above reasons, this petition is converted into an appeal and allowed. The order of removal of the petitioner from service and the impugned order passed by the High Court, upholding the removal of the petitioner from service is set aside and the petitioner reinstated into service without back benefits, as the petitioner has categorically stated in court that he does not wish to seek back benefits.

8. These are the reasons for short order dated 11-12-2018, which is reproduced hereunder:-

"The learned counsel for the petitioner does not claim back benefits and only seeks his reinstatement in service.

2. We have heard the learned counsel. For reasons to be recorded later, this petition is converted into an appeal and is allowed by reinstating the petitioner to the same position that was held by him when he was removed from service, however, he shall not be entitled to back benefits."

MWA/S-1/S Petition allowed.

victim, even if such heirs of the heir of the victim did not themselves inherit from the victim directly---In cases of Ta'zir the law had conferred the capacity to compound only upon the heirs of the victim and had not provided for devolving of the capacity to compound upon an heir of an heir of the victim as had been provided in cases of Qisas---Difference between devolving of a right of Qisas and devolving of the status of an heir also had to be kept in mind---Section 307, P.P.C. recognized that the right of Qisas devolved on an heir of an heir of the victim and because of devolving of the right of Qisas on him an heir of an heir of the victim also became a wali of the victim and in that devolved capacity of wali such heir of an heir of the victim could also waive or compound the relevant offence---Section 307, P.P.C. however, did not provide or recognize that through such devolving of the right of Qisas on him an heir of an heir of the victim also became or was recognized as an heir of the victim---Such distinction between devolving of the right of Qisas and devolving of a right to inherit from the victim had to be clearly understood because the first was relevant to the concept of Qisas whereas the second was relevant to the concept of Ta'zir---In Qisas the tie of blood with the victim was the governing consideration even if a wali in his devolved capacity was not in a position to directly inherit from the victim whereas in Ta'zir the sole consideration for the capacity to compound was the capacity to inherit directly from the victim. ----Ss. 302, 324 & 34---Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S.345(2)---Qatl-i-amd, attempt to commit qatl-i-amd, common intention---'Ta'azir'---Compounding of offence---Inheriting the right to compound offence---Scope---Accused and co-accused were alleged to have murdered the deceased-victim---Accused was sentenced to death by the Trial Court whereas the co-accused was sentenced to imprisonment for life---During pendency of appeal before the High Court, the accused and co-accused filed an application before the Court seeking their acquittal on the basis of a compromise with the legal heirs of the victim, which included the victim's father, widow and son---Widow and son of victim confirmed entering into the compromise, however the victim's father denied factum of any such compromise---During pendency of such application before the High Court the victim's father died, leaving behind four sons---Said sons, who were also brothers of the victim, claimed that after their father's death, the right to compound the offence had devolved upon them, and since they were not agreeable to the compromise, the accused and co-accused should not be acquitted on the basis of a compromise with the victim's surviving heirs i.e. widow and son of victim---[Per Asif Saeed Khan Khosa, CJ (Majority view): Present case was one of Ta'zir, therefore, the offence of murder of victim could be compounded only by his heirs---Concept of devolving of the right of Qisas upon an heir of an heir/wali of the victim relevant to a case of Qisas was not applicable to cases of Ta'zir---In the absence of any devolving of the capacity to compound in a case of Ta'zir the capacity to compound possessed by an heir of the victim at the time of murder of the victim stood exhausted upon the subsequent death of that heir---Being the father and an heir of the victim, the father had a capacity to compound the relevant offence but he had not compounded the offence during his own lifetime and upon his death his capacity to compound stood exhausted and the same was not heritable as father's heirs were not heirs of the victim because they did not, and could not, inherit from him---After father's death his heirs could not be treated as heirs of the victim and the only heirs of victim left in the field at such stage were those surviving heirs of victim who could inherit directly from him and they could compound the offence throughout their lifetime irrespective of timing of the father's death---High Court was, therefore, correct in holding that the victim's brothers, who were heirs of a subsequently dying heir of the victim, were not relevant to the matter of compounding of the offence]---[Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J, agreeing with his own reasons (Minority view): Applying the principles of the Islamic Law of inheritance to the present case, in the presence of the victim's son and widow, his brothers stood excluded from the line of succession---Available heirs at the time of compromise were the son and the widow of the victim---Brothers of victim were excluded not because they were the heirs of the heirs of the victim but because they were not the heirs of the victim under the Islamic Law of inheritance---Even if the present case was one of Qisas, under Islamic Law of inheritance, the brothers of the victim would have stood ousted in the presence of the son of the victim and could not pass as wali of the victim even though they were the heirs of the deceased father---Any embargo on the exercise of the right to compound under S.345(2), Cr.P.C. by the subsequent heirs of the victim might not be in consonance with Islamic Law of Inheritance---Appeal was dismissed in circumstances.

----S. 345(2)---Penal Code (XLV of 1860), S. 302(b)---Qatl-i-amd---'Ta'azir'---Compounding of offence---Inheritable right---Heirs of the victim, determination of---Under the regime of Ta'zir, the heirs of the victim could compound the offence of qatl-i-amd under S.345(2), Cr.P.C. with the permission of the Court---Right vested in the "heirs of the victim" made the right of compoundability under Ta'zir inheritable---Such right was also an actionable claim, hence inheritable---Section 345(2) Cr.P.C. had no time limit and could be invoked by the accused party at any stage after the offense was committed and before the sentence was executed---Purpose of said provision was understandably to encourage settlements between warring parties in order to protect family life and ensure a peaceful community---Heirs of the deceased victim could exercise such right---First heirs of the victim were those who survived him immediately at the time of his death---Heirship of the victim continued in time and at any given time, when the heirs who survived at the time of death of the deceased were no more, there would still be heirs of the victim under the Islamic law of inheritance in the shape of sharers, residuaries or distant kindred---Heirship was based on blood and marriage and continued as the families evolved---Available heirship was to be determined afresh when the right to compound was to be exercised irrespective of the time of death of the victim---Available heirs of the victim and not heirs of the heirs were to be determined during such exercise. [Minority view].

(j) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 299(m), 302(b), 305(a) & 307(c)---Qatl-i-amd---Waiver and compounding in cases of 'Qisas'---'Wali'---Right of Qisas devolving onto heirs of wali---Principles---Wali by definition was an heir of the victim---Right to Qisas was akin to an actionable claim and was, therefore, inheritable under the Islamic Law of inheritance---Right of Qisas held by the wali of the victim devolved on to the next wali of the victim, who was of course an heir of the victim and not necessarily an heir of the heir or heir of the wali---Section 307, P.P.C. did not provide a scheme of inheritance that helped identify the next wali of the victim. Muhammad Akram Qureshi, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellant.

Rana Abdul Majeed, Additional Prosecutor-General Punjab for the State.

Rashid Mehmood Sindhu, Advocate Supreme Court, Syed Rafaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record with Respondents Nos. 2 and 3 in person.

Date of hearing: 25th October, 2018.

JUDGMENT

ASIF SAEED KHAN KHOSA, C J.--One Muhammad Aslam was murdered and another namely Ijaz Ahmad was injured in an occurrence taking place on 02.02.2005 in Chak No. 93/WB in the area of Police Station Thingi, District Vehari and in that regard respondents Nos.2 and 3, brothers inter se, were booked in case FIR No.19 registered at the said Police Station on the same day at the instance of the present appellant/complainant. After a regular trial respondents Nos.2 and 3 were convicted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Vehari on 19.07.2005 for the offences under sections 302(b) and 324 of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 (P.P.C.) read with section 34, P.P.C. For the offence under section 302(b), P.P.C. read with section 34, P.P.C. respondent No. 2 was sentenced to death and respondent No. 3 was sentenced to imprisonment for life whereas for the offence under section 324, P.P.C. read with section 34, P.P.C. both the said respondents were sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 10 years each. The said respondents were also ordered to pay a sum of Rs. 1,00,000/- each to the heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased by way of compensation under section 544-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Cr.P.C.), to pay a sum of Rs.1,75,000/- jointly to the injured victim namely Ijaz Ahmad by way of Arsh being half of the amount of Diyat and to pay a sum of Rs. 50,000/- jointly to the said Ijaz Ahmad by way of Daman. It was ordered that in case of default in payment of the said amounts respondents Nos.2 and 3 would undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of 6 months each. The benefit under section 382-B, Cr.P.C. was extended to the said respondents.

2. Respondents Nos.2 and 3 jointly challenged their convictions and sentences before the Lahore High Court, Multan Bench, Multan through Criminal Appeal No.534 of 2005 which was to be heard by a learned Division Bench of the said Court along with Murder Reference No. 547 of 2005 seeking confirmation of the sentence of death passed by the trial court against respondent No.2. During the pendency of that appeal Criminal Miscellaneous No.102 of 2009 was filed before the High Court seeking acquittal of respondents Nos.2 and 3 from the charge under section 302(b), P.P.C. read with section 34, P.P.C. on the basis of a compromise between the said respondents and the heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased which matter was referred by the High Court to the learned District and Sessions Judge, Vehari for its verification. The report dated 25.02.2009 submitted in that regard by the learned District and Sessions Judge, Vehari showed that Muhammad Aslam deceased was survived by his father namely Waryam, his widow namely Mst. Razia Bibi and his son namely Muhammad Akmal out of whom the father of the deceased had denied entering into any compromise with respondents Nos.2 and 3 whereas the widow and the son of the deceased had confirmed that they had entered into a compromise with respondents Nos.2 and 3, they had forgiven the said respondents in the name of Almighty Allah and they had no objection to acquittal of the said respondents from the charge of murder on the basis of the compromise. During the pendency of Criminal Miscellaneous No. 102 of 2009 Waryam, the father of Muhammad Aslam deceased, died and thereafter Criminal Miscellaneous No. 431-M of 2010 was filed before the High Court seeking acquittal of respondents Nos.2 and 3 from the charge of murder because all the surviving heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased were agreeable to a compromise with the said respondents. The matter of compromise was again referred by the High Court to the learned District and Sessions Judge, Vehari for its verification. The report dated 12.05.2010 submitted by the learned District and Sessions Judge, Vehari in that regard confirmed that the surviving heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased, i.e. his widow and son had acknowledged their compromise with respondents Nos.2 and 3, they had forgiven the said respondents in the name of Almighty Allah and they had no objection to the respondents' acquittal from the charge of murder on the basis of the compromise. The learned District and Sessions Judge, Vehari had, however, pointed out in that report that on an earlier occasion the father of Muhammad Aslam deceased, an heir of the said deceased, had denied entering into any compromise with respondents Nos.2 and 3 and after his subsequent death his four sons namely Muhammad Yousaf, Muhammad Ashraf, Atta Ullah and Noor Ahmad, brothers of Muhammad Aslam deceased, were not agreeable to a compromise with respondents Nos.2 and 3. The learned District and Sessions Judge, Vehari was of the opinion that the said sons of Waryam and brothers of Muhammad Aslam deceased were not heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased and, thus, their refusal to enter into a compromise with respondents Nos.2 and 3 was irrelevant to the compromise voluntarily entered into by the surviving heirs of the deceased with respondents Nos.2 and 3. According to the learned District and Sessions Judge, Vehari the acclaimed compromise between the surviving heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased and respondents Nos.2 and 3 was voluntary and complete. After perusal of the said report and after finding the compromise between the surviving heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased and respondents Nos.2 and 3 to be voluntary and complete a learned Division Bench of the Lahore High Court, Multan Bench, Multan accepted the compromise vide judgment dated 06.10.2010, partially allowed Criminal Appeal No. 534 of 2005 filed by respondents Nos.2 and 3, acquitted the said respondents of the charge under section 302(b), P.P.C. read with section 34, P.P.C. on the basis of the compromise and dismissed the said appeal to the extent of the convictions and sentences of the said respondents for the offence under section 324, P.P.C. read with section 34, P.P.C. while answering the Murder Reference in the negative.

3. Aggrieved of the judgment passed by the Lahore High Court, Multan Bench, Multan on 06.10.2010 the appellant/complainant filed Criminal Petition for Leave to Appeal No. 1091-L of 2010 before this Court and on 24.12.2010 the said petition was allowed by this Court and leave to appeal was granted in the following terms:

> "Inter alia contends that the learned High Court has allowed compromise of the offence of murder on the application of two legal heirs namely Razia Bibi (wife of the deceased) and Muhammad Akmal (son of the deceased) notwithstanding the fact that the father of the deceased namely Waryam who was alive at the time of murder of Sajid [actually Muhammad Aslam] but died when the application for compounding the offence was made, his heirs were 'walis' and the offence could not have been compounded without their concurrence.
> 2. Having heard learned counsel for the petitioner at some length, leave is granted inter alia to consider whether the heir of an heir of the victim could be a 'wali' of the said victim and whether the law laid down by this Court [actually the Lahore High Court, Lahore] in Ahmed Nawaz v. State (PLD 2007 Lahore 121) would be attracted to the facts of the case in hand?"

On 05.06.2018 it was noticed by this Court that the view of the relevant law taken by the Lahore High Court, Lahore in the case of Ahmad Nawaz alias Gogi v. The State (PLD 2007 Lahore 121) was based upon the definition of 'wali' contained in section 305(a), P.P.C. whereas a different view of the same law subsequently taken by a 5-member Bench of this Court in the case of Abdul Rashid alias Teddi v. The State and others (2013 SCMR 1281) did not even refer to the definition of 'wali' contained in section 305(a), P.P.C. In this background it was felt by this Court on that date of hearing that the issue involved in the present case required a fresh look so as to render an authoritative pronouncement on the subject and, thus, the office of this Court was directed to bring the matter to the notice of the then Hon'ble Chief Justice who was requested to consider advisability or otherwise of constitution of a Larger Bench of at least seven Hon'ble Judges of this Court in order to resolve the controversy noted above. It is in this backdrop that the present Larger Bench is now seized of the matter.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at some length and have gone through the record of this case with their assistance besides perusing the precedent cases referred to by them. It has been argued by the learned counsel for the appellant that in the case of Abdul Rashid alias Teddi v. The State and others (2013 SCMR 1281) this Court has already declared that the right to compound an offence is a heritable right and upon the death of a wali of the victim his right devolves upon that wali's heirs and, thus, in the present case upon the death of the appellant's father his capacity of being a wali of Muhammad Aslam deceased had devolved upon the appellant and his brothers and, therefore, compounding of the offence by the surviving heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased with respondents Nos.2 and 3 could not materialize unless the appellant and his brothers had joined the compounding. He has also argued that the case in hand was a case of Ta'zir and by virtue of the law declared by this Court in the case of Sh. Muhammad Aslam and another v. Shaukat Ali @ Shauka and others (1997 SCMR 1307) compounding of the offence of murder in the present case could not succeed unless all the heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased, including the appellant and his brothers possessing the devolved status of wali upon the death of their father, had consented to the compromise. While referring to the case of Zahid Rehman v. The State (PLD 2015 SC 77) the learned counsel for the appellant has maintained that the concept of compounding of an offence of murder is common to cases of Qisas as well as of Ta'zir and, therefore, the principles applicable to cases of Qisas in the matter of compounding of an offence ought to be read into cases of Ta'zir as well. He has, thus, prayed that the impugned judgment passed by the High Court may be set aside and the High Court may be required to decide the issue of compounding of the offence of Muhammad Aslam's murder afresh in accordance with the law. The learned Additional Prosecutor-General, Punjab appearing for the State has also submitted that the right to claim Qisas is a heritable right in Islamic law and the same stands recognized in the provisions of section 307, P.P.C. and, therefore, the offence of murder of Muhammad Aslam in the present case could not have been compounded by some of the heirs of the victim in the absence of the appellant and his brothers on whom the right to claim Qisas had devolved on account of death of their father after the murder of Muhammad Aslam. The leaned Additional Prosecutor-General has also prayed for setting aside of the impugned judgment passed by the High Court and for remand of the matter to the High Court for a decision of the matter of compounding afresh. As against that the learned counsel for respondents Nos.2 and 3 has contended that the principles applicable to compounding of an offence in cases of Qisas cannot be made applicable to cases of Ta'zir which cases are governed in the matter by the provisions of section 345, Cr.P.C. and in terms of section 345(2), Cr.P.C. the appellant and his brothers were not heirs of the victim and, therefore, they had no recognized role to play in the matter of compounding of the offence of Muhammad Aslam's murder. He has, thus, prayed for upholding of the impugned judgment of the High Court and dismissal of the present appeal.

5. After hearing the learned counsel for the parties, perusing the record of the case with their assistance and going through the precedent cases referred to before us we have found it appropriate to refer to the relevant statutory provisions first and then to discuss the precedent cases on the subject. The Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 (P.P.C.) provides for and recognizes two distinct and separate regimes in the criminal justice system of the country and they pertain to cases of Qisas and cases of Ta'zir depending primarily upon the standard of evidence required and produced in a criminal case. The distinction between the separate regimes of Qisas and Ta'zir cases was clearly elucidated by this Court in many cases including the cases of Sh. Muhammad Aslam and another v Shaukat Ali @ Shauka and others (1997 SCMR 1307) and Zahid Rehman v. The State (PLD 2015 SC 77). It may be advantageous to begin the discussion with the relevant statutory provisions governing waiver (Afw) and compounding (Sulh) in cases of Qisas pertaining to the offence of qatl-i-amd (intentional murder) under section 302, P.P.C.. Section 309(1), P.P.C. provides that in a case of qatl-i-amd an adult sane wali may waive his right of Qisas without any compensation, section 310(1), P.P.C. provides that in a case of qatl-i-amd an adult sane wali may compound his right of Qisas on accepting badal-i-sulh (compensation) and according to section 313(1), P.P.C. the right of Qisas vests in the sole wali if there is only one and in each one of them if there are more than one. Section 305, P.P.C. provides as follows:

"305. Wali.-- In case of qatl, the wali shall be-

(a) the heirs of the victim, according to his personal law but shall not include the accused or the convict in case of qatl-i-amd if committed in the name or on the pretext of honour; and

(b) the Government, if there is no heir."

Section 299(m), P.P.C. defines wali in the following terms:

" "wali" means a person entitled to claim qisas (other than the person who has murdered the victim)."

Section 307(1)(c), P.P.C. provides as follows:

"307. Cases in which qisas for qatl-i-amd shall not be enforced. (1) Qisas for qatl-i-amd shall not be enforced in the following cases, namely:

(a) ----------

(b) ----------

(c) when the right of qisas devolves on the offender as a result of the death of the wali of the victim, or on the person who has no right of qisas against the offender.

(2) ----------

Illustrations

(i) A kills Z the maternal uncle of his son B. Z has no other wali except D the wife of A. D has the right of qisas from A. But if D dies, the right of qisas shall devolve on her son B who is also the son of the offender A. B cannot claim qisas against her father. Therefore, the qisas cannot be enforced.

(ii) D kills Z, the brother of her husband A. Z has no heir except A. Heir A can claim qisas from his wife B. But if A dies, the right of qisas shall devolve on his son D who is also son of B, the qisas cannot be enforced against B."

According to this section the right of Qisas vesting in a wali devolves on his heirs as a result of death of the wali.

6. From the statutory provisions referred to and quoted above it emerges that in cases of Qisas the right of Qisas vests in each wali (section 313, P.P.C.), a wali may waive his right of Qisas (section 309, P.P.C.), a wali may compound his right of Qisas (section 310, P.P.C.), the heirs of the victim are his wali, according to his personal law (section 305(a), P.P.C.), a person entitled to claim Qisas is wali (section 299(m), P.P.C.) and upon death of a wali his right of Qisas devolves on the heirs of the wali (section 307, P.P.C.). It, thus, becomes evident that even an heir of an heir of a victim has a (devolved) right of Qisas and he himself becomes a wali and in that devolved capacity of a wali he too can waive or compound the offence of qatl-i-amd in a case of Qisas. According to section 309(2), P.P.C. and the proviso to the same if a wali (having the original or a devolved right of Qisas) does not waive his right of Qisas but the other wali waive their right of Qisas then the non-waiving wali is entitled to his share of Diyat. Therefore, had the case in hand been a case of Qisas then the appellant and his other brothers (who were not the heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased but the right of Qisas possessed by the victim's father had devolved upon them upon the father's subsequent death and they had not waived their devolved right of Qisas against respondents Nos. 2 and 3) would have been entitled to their share of Diyat whereas the waiver would have been effective to the extent of all the other wali of the victim who had waived their right of Qisas against respondents Nos.2 and 3.

7. It is not disputed that the case in hand is a case of Ta'zir and not of Qisas because the proof required for a case of Qisas in terms of section 304, P.P.C. was not adduced in this case before the trial court. It may be clarified here that a criminal case becomes a case of Qisas when, after the case has reached the trial court, either a confession is made by the accused person before the trial court during the trial or Tazkiya-tul-shahood (scrutiny of the witnesses before trial of the accused person) is undertaken by the trial court and unless either of the said two things happen before the trial court every criminal case is to be treated as a case of Ta'zir at every stage of the case including the stage of investigation. Compounding of offences in cases of Ta'zir is governed by section 345, Cr.P.C. and according to section 345(2), Cr.P.C. (as the said legal provision stood in the year 2005 when the offences in the present case had been committed) the offence of qatl-i-amd under section 302, P.P.C. could be compounded with the permission of the relevant court "By the heirs of the victim other than the accused or the convict if the offence has been committed by him in the name or on the pretext of karo kari, siyah kari or similar other customs or practices". The said legal provision was amended on 21.10.2016 and it presently reads as "By the heirs of the victim subject to the provisions of section 311, P.P.C.." According to the law in this country succession opens at the time of death of a person and upon his death his assets automatically stand devolved upon those who are entitled to inherit from him in specified shares in terms of his personal law and such inheriting persons are called the heirs of the deceased. There is, thus, no confusion in our law that an heir is a person who is entitled to inherit from the deceased at the time of his death. In view of this settled and recognized principle when the law of the land provides that in a case of Ta'zir an offence of qatl-i-amd under section 302, P.P.C. may be compounded by the "heirs of the victim" and when an heir of a victim is only a person who inherits directly from the victim then what is clearly meant by section 345(2), Cr.P.C. is that only a person who can directly inherit from the victim is the person who can compound the offence of qatl-i-amd of the victim and none else.

8. We note that the concept of wali relevant to a case of Qisas is not relevant to a case of Ta'zir which belongs to a different regime of criminal law and is governed by separate and distinct principles. It has to be understood very clearly that in cases of Qisas the term wali means the entire body or group of persons who are entitled to claim Qisas for a qatl-i-amd and such persons include those who are heirs of the victim entitled to inherit from him as well as those on whom the right of Qisas devolves upon death of an heir of the victim even if such heirs of the heir of the victim do not themselves inherit from the victim directly. In cases of Ta'zir the law has conferred the capacity to compound only upon the heirs of the victim and has not provided for devolving of the capacity to compound upon an heir of an heir of the victim as has been provided in cases of Qisas, as discussed above. It has been canvassed before us that for the purposes of harmonious construction the said principle applicable to cases of Qisas may be read into cases of Ta'zir as well but we have not felt persuaded to venture into such an exercise of judicial legislation through the means of interpretation, particularly when this Court has already recognized and declared in some earlier cases that different principles apply to cases of Qisas and Ta'zir in the matter of compounding of an offence and such principles cannot be confused or mixed and, hence, an attempt to harmonize the two concepts or principles may amount to unwholesome judicial engineering offensive to the concepts themselves. In the case of Sh. Muhammad Aslam and another v. Shaukat Ali @ Shauka and others (1997 SCMR 1307) the distinction between the principles applicable to cases of Qisas under sections 309 and 310, P.P.C. and to cases of Ta'zir under section 345, Cr.P.C. had clearly been recognized and acknowledged by this Court. The said case was a case of Ta'zir wherein a partial compromise had been arrived at between the convict and some of the heirs of the victim. This Court had elaborately discussed the issue from diverse angles and had then concluded that a partial compromise was acceptable in a case of Qisas but the same was not acceptable in a case of Ta'zir. In many subsequent cases and particularly in the case of Zahid Rehman v. The State (PLD 2015 SC 77) this Court had reiterated and categorically declared again that the principles regarding compounding of an offence applicable to a case of Qisas are not relevant or applicable to a case of Ta'zir. In that case it was observed by this Court as under:

> "This Court has already declared that section 309, P.P.C. pertaining to waiver (Afw) and section 310, P.P.C. pertaining to compounding (Sulh) in cases of murder are relevant only to cases of Qisas and not to cases of Ta'zir and a reference in this respect may be made to the cases of Sh. Muhammad Aslam and another v. Shaukat Ali alias Shauka and others (1997 SCMR 1307), Niaz Ahmad v. The State (PLD 2003 SC 635) and Abdul Jabbar v. The State and others (2007 SCMR 1496). In the said cases it had also been clarified by this Court that in cases of Ta'zir the matter of compromise between the parties is governed and regulated by the provisions of section 345(2), Cr.P.C. read with section 338-E, P.P.C. In the same cases it had further been explained and clarified by this Court that a partial compromise may be acceptable in cases of Qisas but a partial compromise is not acceptable in cases of Ta'zir. The cases of Manzoor Hussain and 4 others v. The State (1994 SCMR 1327), Muhammad Saleem v. The State (PLD 2003 SC 512), Muhammad Arshad alias Pappu v. Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore and 3 others (PLD 2003 SC 547), Niaz Ahmad v. The State (PLD 2003 SC 635), Riaz Ahmad v. The State (2003 SCMR 1067), Bashir Ahmed v. The State and another (2004 SCMR 236) and Khan Muhammad v. The State (2005 SCMR 599) also throw sufficient light on such aspects relating to the matter of compromise. It may be true that compounding of an offence falling in Chapter XVI of the Pakistan Penal Code is permissible under some conditions both in cases of Qisas as well as Ta'zir but at the same time it is equally true that such compounding is regulated by separate and distinct provisions and that such limited common ground between the two does not obliterate the clear distinction otherwise existing between the two separate legal regimes."

As if this were not enough, section 338-E(1), P.P.C. clinches the issue by providing as follows:

> "338-E. Waiver or compounding of offences. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Chapter and section 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (V of 1898), all offences under this Chapter may be waived or compounded and the provisions of sections 309 and 310 shall, mutatis mutandis, apply to the waiver or compounding of such offences: ----------."

This section makes it abundantly clear that the principles of waiver and compounding contained in sections 309 and 310, P.P.C. and applicable to cases of Qisas are neither applicable to nor do they control the principles contained in section 345, Cr.P.C. pertaining to compounding of offences in cases of Ta'zir. In view of such clear statutory clarification and in view of the above mentioned repeated judicial enunciation there is hardly any scope left for any harmonious construction of the two distinct and separate concepts by us.

9. For the purpose of clarity of understanding we may explain why Qisas and Ta'zir are said to belong to separate legal regimes. To start with, the two concepts have different origins as the concept of Qisas has its origin in divine Islamic law and jurisprudence pertaining to offences in respect of human life and body whereas the origin of the concept of Ta'zir is secular and in our context it is derived mainly from Anglo-Saxon traditions. In the regime of Qisas the offence is committed against the victim whereas in the regime of Ta'zir the offence is committed against the State and the society as a whole. Application of Qisas or Ta'zir to a criminal case requires different standards of proof and entails different punishments. In cases of Qisas the right of Qisas as well as the right to waive or compound the offence vest in the victim or his wali whereas in cases of Ta'zir the serious offences committed in respect of human life or body were originally not compoundable in our law but subsequently only a limited concession was made in that regard by the State by amending the law and providing for compounding of most of such offences by the victim or his heirs. Even while making such concession and providing for composition of such offences no right to compound was conferred on the victim or his heirs and any composition proposed by the parties was made subject to permission or leave of the relevant court which may refuse to grant the requisite permission or leave in the peculiar circumstances of a given case. Partial compromise is permissible in a case of Qisas but is not allowed in a case of Ta'zir. Devolving of a right of Qisas, waiver or compounding on the heir of a dead wali of the victim is recognized in cases of Qisas but is not permitted or recognized in cases of Ta'zir. Claiming Qisas is a right in Islamic dispensation whereas compounding in a case of Ta'zir is a concession subject to permission or leave of the relevant court in serious offences. A right in law ordinarily devolves upon an heir but a concession extended to a particular person is not to devolve on another unless the law expressly provides for the same. We entertain no manner of doubt that while expressly providing for some principles applicable to compounding of offences in cases of Qisas and while omitting to expressly provide for the said principles vis- -vis cases of Ta'zir the legislature was conscious of the difference between the two concepts and their requirements. The silence of the legislature in this regard speaks, and speaks quite loudly, and we as a Court of law cannot ignore it or override it by transposing the principles applicable to one regime of law to the other. We cannot shut our eyes to the clear provisions of section 345(7), Cr.P.C. according to which in a case of Ta'zir "No offence shall be compounded except as provided by this section."

10. In the present case of Ta'zir the offence of murder of Muhammad Aslam could be compounded only by the heirs of the said victim and all the surviving heirs of that victim had voluntarily compounded the said offence with respondents Nos.2 and 3. The High Court was, therefore, quite correct in holding that the appellant and his brothers, who were heirs of a subsequently dying heir of the victim, were not relevant to the matter of compounding of the offence.

11. The argument that in his lifetime Waryam, the father and one of the heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased, had refused to join the compromise between the remaining heirs of the deceased and respondents Nos. 2 and 3 and, therefore, after the death of Waryam any compromise between the remaining heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased and the said respondents could not be complete without the heirs of Waryam joining the same had failed to impress the High Court and we have also not felt persuaded to accept the same. As already observed above, the concept of devolving of the right of Qisas upon an heir of an heir/wali of the victim relevant to a case of Qisas is not applicable to cases of Ta'zir. In the absence of any devolving of the capacity to compound in a case of Ta'zir the capacity to compound possessed by an heir of the victim at the time of murder of the victim stands exhausted upon the subsequent death of that heir. Being the father and an heir of Muhammad Aslam deceased Waryam had a capacity to compound the relevant offence but he had not compounded the offence during his own lifetime and upon Waryam's death his capacity to compound stood exhausted and the same was not heritable as Waryam's heirs were not heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased because they did not, and could not, inherit from him. After Waryam's death his heirs could not be treated as heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased and the only heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased left in the field at such stage were those surviving heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased who could inherit directly from him and they could compound the offence throughout their lifetime irrespective of timing of Waryam's death. In cases of Ta'zir section 345(2), Cr.P.C. does not specify any time when compounding of an offence may take place and the provisions of section 345(2), Cr.P.C. do not place any embargo upon compounding of the relevant offence by the surviving heirs of a victim at a time when one or more of the heirs of the victim has/have already died. Placing an embargo upon the surviving heirs of a victim in such a situation may amount to committing violence upon the provisions of section 345(2), Cr.P.C. which we are not ready to commit.

12. Another thing to be clearly understood in the present context is that there is a difference between devolving of a right of Qisas and devolving of the status of an heir. Section 307, P.P.C. recognizes that the right of Qisas devolves on an heir of an heir of the victim and because of devolving of the right of Qisas on him an heir of an heir of the victim also becomes a wali of the victim and in that devolved capacity of wali such heir of an heir of the victim can also waive or compound the relevant offence. Section 307, P.P.C., however, does not provide or recognize that through such devolving of the right of Qisas on him an heir of an heir of the victim also becomes or is recognized as an heir of the victim. Such distinction between devolving of the right of Qisas and devolving of a right to inherit from the victim has to be clearly understood because the first is relevant to the concept of Qisas whereas the second is relevant to the concept of Ta'zir. It has already been observed by us above that in cases of Qisas the term wali means the entire body or group of persons who are entitled to claim Qisas for a qatl-i-amd and such persons include those who are heirs of the victim entitled to inherit from him as well as those on whom the right of Qisas devolves upon death of an heir of the victim even if such heirs of the heir of the victim do not themselves inherit from the victim directly. In Qisas the tie of blood with the victim is the governing consideration even if a wali in his devolved capacity is not in a position to directly inherit from the victim whereas in Ta'zir the sole consideration for the capacity to compound is the capacity to inherit directly from the victim. The present case offers a classical example of such a distinction because by virtue of section 307, P.P.C. the appellant and his brothers might have become wali of Muhammad Aslam deceased on account of possessing a devolved right of Qisas (relevant to a case of Qisas) but they are not the heirs of Muhammad Aslam deceased for the purposes of compounding of the offence under section 345(2), Cr.P.C. in this case of Ta'zir.

13. In the interim order passed in this case on 05.06.2018 it was noticed by this Court that the view regarding the issue at hand taken by the Lahore High Court, Lahore in the case of Ahmad Nawaz @ Gogi v. The State (PLD 2007 Lahore 121) was in conflict with the view of this Court on the subject taken in the later case of Abdul Rashid alias Teddi v. The State and others (2013 SCMR 1281) but we note that in none of the said cases the all-important distinction between cases of Qisas and those of Ta'zir had come under discussion and the Courts were not properly assisted in those cases in this particular regard. In the case of Ahmad Nawaz @ Gogi (supra) the Lahore High Court, Lahore had observed on the issue as follows:

"At the very outset, we may here reproduce section 305, P.P.C.--

"305. WALI.---In case of a qatl, the wali shall be

(a) the heirs of the victim, according to his personal law but shall not include the accused or the convict in case of Qatl-e-Amd if committed in the name or on the pretext of honour; and

(b) the Government, if there is no heir."

A bare perusal of the above quoted section clearly states that in case of a qatl, the wali shall be the heirs of the victim, according to his personal law and the said provisions do not contemplate that the heirs of an heir of the victim shall also be wali of the victim. An heir of a person is understood to be a person who is entitled to inherit the property of the deceased at the time of his death. In the case in hand the inheritance of the victim automatically opened upon his death and at that time, the only heirs of the victim were his father and mother and thus the property of the deceased automatically devolved upon the said heirs of the victim. After devolving of the property of the victim upon the said heirs the inheritance of the victim had been exhausted and there was nothing left for anybody else to inherit from the victim. Keeping in view the spirit of the provisions of section 305(a) P.P.C. the heirs of a victim are surely different from the heirs of a wali of the victim. In the present case, the consanguine sisters were to inherit from the father of the victim namely Maqbool Ahmad and not from Mohsin Raza victim himself and thus they were the heirs of Maqbool Ahmad not of the victim namely Mohsin Raza. It is not disputed that the said consanguine sisters had not and could not inherit the property of Mohsin Raza as they were not his heirs at the time of his murder. What the consanguine sisters are claiming before us is a right to effect or refuse a compromise with the appellant which right they claim to have inherited from Mohsin Raza's father namely Maqbool Ahmad and they are not claiming any right to inherit the property of Mohsin Raza directly. According to the spirit and rationale of the provisions of section 305(a), P.P.C. a wali of the victim is the person who is entitled to inherit the property of the victim and the interpretation of the said provisions cannot be stretched to include in the definition of wali a person who claims to have inherited the right of compromise possessed by the Wali. No legal provision has been produced nor any reference to the Islamic Jurisprudence has been made before us to support such a stretched interpretation of the provisions of section 305(a), P.P.C. Apart from that the spirit of the Qisas and Diyat laws is to quench the thirst of revenge of the immediate heirs of the victim and thus the right to enter into a compromise or otherwise cannot be extended to any other remote relative of the deceased who may not inherit the property from the deceased at the time of his murder but may at some subsequent stage become entitled to inherit some property from some heir of the deceased upon the death of such heir."

In the later case of Abdul Rashid alias Teddi (supra) this Court had extensively quoted from a judgment passed by the Lahore High Court, Lahore in the case of Muhammad Jabbar v. The State and 10 others (2000 PCr.LJ 1688) and had then concluded as under:

"14. To put it in other words, Islam is a religion of peace and harmony. It has for the first time in the history of mankind introduced and encouraged the concept of afw, darguzar/condoning and compounding of offences, even those relating to heinous crimes. Particularly, the one which relate to disputes between two or more private parties and carry an element of revenge, thus, harming the peace and tranquility in the society at large. For this purpose, through the dictates of various verses from the Holy Qur'an and Sunna of our Holy Prophet Hazrat Muhammad (Peace be upon him), a workable and practicable scheme for compounding of offences has been outlined under the Islamic criminal law. The purpose behind it is to provide a respectable and fair mode, based on the principles of equality of all human beings, to reach some settlement/compromise in the larger interest of the civil society and to bury the hatchet of revenge once for all, so as to save other generations from facing the consequence of enmity amongst different segments of society, aimed for satisfaction of endless personal vendetta. On this account too, such provisions of law relating to compounding of criminal offences are to be interpreted and applied liberally for the benefit of society and the humanity at large, but at the same time as per injunctions of Islam.

15. Thus, after a careful reading of the provisions of section 345, Cr.P.C., other relevant guiding principles of Islamic jurisprudence in this regard and the cases cited at the Bar, we are of the opinion that not only the surviving legal heirs of the victim have legal authority to waive right of qisas and compound the offence with the appellant/convict upon payment of compensation of diyat or without payment in lieu of pleasure of God, but such right is equally inheritable by the successors of any legal heir of the victim, who during his life time had either not entered into compromise with the appellant/convict or refused to enter into such compromise, as despite his earlier refusal he was competent to change his mind and to subsequently enter into such compromise with the appellant/convict, while the principle of estoppel was not attracted in such situation to debar his successor from exercising such right independently at their own free will."

It is obvious that in the said case, due to lack of proper assistance, the Islamic concept of Qisas and the principles applicable thereto in the matter of compounding of an offence were expressly referred to and were simply presumed to be applicable to the secular concept of Ta'zir and compounding of an offence under that concept. Apart from that while holding that "not only the surviving legal heirs of the victim have legal authority to waive right of qisas and compound the offence with the appellant/convict ---------- but such right is equally inheritable by the successors of any legal heir of the victim" no statutory provision or any source of Islamic jurisprudence had been referred to or relied upon by this Court. Both the above-mentioned cases were cases of Ta'zir but on account of lack of proper assistance they were decided on the basis of principles applicable to cases of Qisas. We are, therefore, constrained to observe that the said cases may not to be approved or treated as good precedents on the subject.

14. In India the Islamic regime of Qisas in criminal cases is not recognized and originally the matter of compounding of an offence was governed in India by statutory provisions identical to the original provisions of section 345, Cr.P.C. in Pakistan recognizing no role of an heir of a person in the matter of compromise if the person competent to compound an offence is dead. In Pakistan section 345(2), Cr.P.C. now provides that an offence of qatl-i-amd under section 302, P.P.C. may be compounded by "the heirs of the victim" and does not provide for devolving of such capacity to compound on an heir of an heir of the victim but in India the legislature had introduced section 320(4)(b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 which reads as follows:

> "When the person who would otherwise be competent to compound an offence under this section is dead, the legal representative, as defined in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, of such person may, with the consent of the Court, compound such offence."

Introduction of this legal provision in India is by itself a legislative acknowledgment that the capacity to compound an offence is not automatically devolved upon an heir of a person possessing the capacity to compound unless the law expressly provides for the same. The omission in this respect in the original law was supplied in India by the legislature and we in this country would not like to embark upon judicial legislation by supplying the relevant omission in our law through the means of interpretation. Let this responsibility rest where it lies and we would not like to encroach upon the domain of the legislature in this regard. We, therefore, refer this aspect of the matter to the Secretary, Ministry of Law and Justice, Government of Pakistan, Islamabad so that the Federal Government may consider getting the relevant law amended by the Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament) appropriately, if so advised.

15. As a result of the discussion made above we have not been able to take any legitimate exception to the impugned judgment passed by the Lahore High Court, Multan Bench, Multan. The case in hand was not a case of Qisas but was of Ta'zir. Under the Islamic law of inheritance the brothers of Muhammad Aslam deceased in this case did not inherit from the deceased directly and even when the father of Muhammad Aslam deceased, an heir of the said deceased, subsequently died the brothers of Muhammad Aslam deceased, including the present appellant, did not become Muhammad Aslam deceased's heirs because they stood excluded by a surviving son of Muhammad Aslam deceased who was closer to the deceased in degree in the matter of inheritance. In this case of Ta'zir only the heirs of the deceased could compound the offence of murder and the appellant and his brothers, all brothers of Muhammad Aslam deceased, did not and could not inherit from Muhammad Aslam deceased either directly or through their father and, thus, they never qualified as "heirs of the victim" for the purposes of section 345(2), Cr.P.C. This appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

16. The office is directed to send a copy of this judgment to the Secretary, Ministry of Law and Justice, Government of Pakistan, Islamabad for his information and for appropriate action, if deemed warranted.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---I have gone through the judgment authored by the Hon'ble Chief Justice (hereinafter referred to as the "Judgment"). I concur with the conclusion of the Judgment that the instant appeal merits dismissal. I, however, espouse views different from those expressed in the Judgment, regarding the meaning and determination of the heirs of the victim or the wali of the victim in the context of compoundability of the offence of qatl-i-amd (interchangeably also referred to as compromise between the parties) under the two regimes of Qisas[1] and Ta'zir[2].

2. The precise legal question before the Court is the scope and extent of the term "heirs of the victim" used in section 345 Cr.P.C. in order to determine who on behalf of the deceased victim is entitled to compound the offence of qatl-i-amd punishable as ta'zir under section 302, P.P.C. Additionally, whether the scheme of compoundability is different in case of Qisas where "wali of the victim" is to be determined?

3. In my view, Islamic Law of Inheritance goes to the root of the case and is central to the concept of compounding of the offence of qatl-i-amd under Qisas and Ta'zir, which in turn rests on the meaning of heirs and walis of the victim. It is essential to emphasize that the only law that can determine the heir(s) of a deceased (victim) for Muslims in Pakistan is their personal law i.e., the Islamic Law of Inheritance (similarly for non-Muslims its their personal law). According to Professor Coulson, Islamic Law of Inheritance "is a solid technical achievement, and Muslim scholarship takes a justifiable pride in the mathematical precision with which the rights of the various heirs, in any given situation, can be calculated Nowhere is the fundamental Islamic ideology of law as the manifestation of the divine will more clearly demonstrated than in the laws of the inheritance .From a sociological standpoint, the laws of inheritance reflect the structure of family ties and the accepted social values and responsibilities within the Islamic community[3]." Under Islamic Law of Inheritance, rights of inheritance rest upon two principal grounds of marriage and blood relationship with the deceased and there are three kinds of heirs: Sharers, Residuaries and Distant Kindred. Sharers are those who are entitled to a prescribed share of inheritance. Residuaries are those who take no prescribed shares but succeed to the residue after the claims of the sharers are satisfied. Distant Kindred are all those relations who are neither sharers nor residuaries. After ascertaining which of the heirs or descendants of the deceased (victim) are entitled to succeed, the next step is to distribute the estate among them.[4] It is true that the inheritance opens on the death of the victim and the heirs are identified according to the Islamic Law of Inheritance and the estate of the victim automatically devolves upon the said heirs. While the estate of the deceased devolves on the heirs, the concept of inheritance and heirship does not end. Devolution is neither one time nor does it freeze in time at the time of the death of the victim. As families grow and evolve, moving from generations to generations, the heirs also grow, replacing the earlier heirs yet maintaining their descent and lineage from the ancestors. The heirship or right to inheritance moves downwards, as well as, upwards, hence the term "descendants" and "ascendants." The concept of "how low-so-ever" or "how-high-so-ever" under the Islamic Law of Inheritance marks the downward and upward flowing concept of succession and inheritance, resembling a running chain of blood ties and marriage. As a matter of illustration, if in the instant case it is discovered after say thirty years from the death of the victim that the State has decided to confer certain property on the victim for his meritorious services or some property has been discovered that belongs to the victim, and the surviving heirs at the time of death of the victim being dead by now, who then will inherit the property of the victim? or will the property escheat and revert to the State because the first line of heirs is dead ? Under the Islamic Law of Inheritance, heirship is a living and an evolving concept and therefore the property will vest in the heirs of the victim as they stand today and the meticulous Islamic Law of Inheritance can identify the heirs of the victim even after three decades. Therefore, at any given time, the heirs or descendants or ascendants of the victim can be identified with mathematical precision under the Islamic Law of Inheritance. Restricting the term "heirs of the victim" to only the surviving heirs of the victim at the time of the death of the victim, is an interpretation that might not sit well with the Islamic Law of Inheritance and public policy. The concept of genealogical tree (shajrah nasab) in our Land Revenue law is an example of this successional calculation. At this juncture I cannot lose sight of section 338-F of the P.P.C. which provides that while interpreting the provisions of Chapter XVI (of offences affecting the human body) the court shall be guided by the injunctions of Islam as laid down in the Holy Quran and Sunnah. One of the best showcases of these injunctions is the Islamic Law of Inheritance, itself.

4. Applying the principles of the Islamic Law of Inheritance, as discussed above, to the instant case on merits, I see that in the presence of the son and the widow, the brothers of the victim or sons of the deceased father Waryam stand excluded from the line of succession. Hence the available heirs at the time of compromise are the son and the widow of the victim. The High Court confirmed the view taken in Report of the District and Sessions Judge, Vehari dated 12.05.2010. The relevant extract of the Report is as follows:

> "5. From the statements of Razia Bibi (widow) and Muhammed Akmal (son) legal heirs of the deceased , it is evident that compromise between the parties is genuine as they have no objection if the said convicts are acquitted. The legal heirs of the deceased Waryam who was father of Muhammed Aslam deceased are not now the legal heirs of Muhammed Aslam deceased of this case." (emphasis supplied)

The Appellants were excluded not because they were the heirs of the heirs of the victim but because they were not the heirs of the victim under the Islamic Law of Inheritance. The application for compromise was rightly allowed leading to the acquittal of respondents Nos.2 and 3. The impugned judgment of the High Court upholding this view is, therefore, correct and the present appeal merits dismissal.

5. It is now settled that Qisas and Ta'zir are two separate regimes, having their own sets of rules as laid down in Muhammad Aslam v. Shaukat Ali (1997 SCMR 1307) and Zahid Rehman v. State (PLD 2015 SC 77). However, when it comes to the question of determining the heirs of the victim or walis of the victim, for the purposes of compoundability of the offence of qatl-i-amd, the two regimes converge and both take guidance from the Islamic Law of Inheritance to resolve this question. This is because the Islamic Law of Inheritance is the only law that provides for determination of heirs in the country. Even otherwise, Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 or the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 do not provide a separate mode and manner of determining heirs of the victim and, thus, cannot possibly be considered as a parallel system of inheritance and succession. Reference to the terms "heirs of the victim" and "wali of the victim" under these Codes assumes outsourcing the answer to the Islamic Law of Inheritance, as these Codes have no mechanism to resolve these questions. Therefore, both the regimes of Qisas and Ta'zir rely on the principles of Islamic Law of Inheritance uniformly to determine the heirs of the victim or the wali of the victim for the purposes of compoundability in the cases of qatl-i-amd.

6. Under the regime of Ta'zir, the heirs of the victim can compound the offence of qatl-i-amd under Section 345(2), Cr.P.C. with the permission of the Court. The right vested in the "heirs of the victim" makes the right of compoundability under Ta'zir inheritable. In another sense this right is also an actionable claim,[5] hence inheritable. Section 345(2) Cr.P.C. has no time limit and can be invoked by the accused party at any stage after the offense is committed and before the sentence is executed. The purpose of this provision is understandably to encourage settlements between warring parties in order to protect family life and ensure a peaceful community. The heirs of the deceased victim can exercise this right. The first heirs of the victim are those who survive him immediately at the time of his death, but as explained above, the heirship of the victim continues in time and at any given time, when the heirs who survived at the time of death of the deceased are no more, there will still be heirs of the victim under the Islamic law of inheritance in the shape of sharers, residuaries or distant kindred. The heirship is based on blood and marriage and continues as the families evolve. So the available heirship is to be determined afresh when the right to compound is to be exercised irrespective of the time of death of the victim. It is emphasized that the available heirs of the victim and not heirs of the heirs are to be determined. In the instant case, the appellants are the heirs of the heir but are not the heirs of the victim under the Islamic law of inheritance, as they stand excluded by the son. A five member bench of this Court has upheld this view in Abdul Rashid v. State (2013 SCMR 1281), even though the distinction between the two regimes of Qisas and Ta'zir was somewhat blurred in the said opinion.

7. Qisas means punishment by causing similar hurt to same part of the body of the convict as he has caused to the victim or by causing death if he has committed qatl-i-amd in exercise of the right of the victim or a wali[6]. Under section 299 (m) P.P.C., wali means a person entitled to claim qisas. Under section 305(a) P.P.C., wali in case of qatl means the heirs of the victim, according to his personal law. Section 306(c) provides that qati-i-amd shall not be liable to qisas when any wali of the victim is a direct descendant, how low-so-ever, of the offender. Section 307(c) provides a situation when qisas for qatl-i-amd cannot be enforced i.e., "when" the right of qisas devolves on an offender as a result of the death of the wali of the victim. Section 307(c) P.P.C. is actually about an offender not having a right of qisas and proceeds on an implied assumption that the right of qisas is inheritable. Section 307(c) is, therefore, not a specific provision mandating devolution of the right of qisas. In my view there is no requirement to state the obvious. Wali by definition is an heir of the victim[7]. Right to qisas is also akin to an actionable claim and is, therefore, inheritable under the Islamic Law of Inheritance[8]. The right of qisas held by the wali of the victim devolves on to the next wali of the victim, who is of course an heir of the victim and not necessarily an heir of the heir or heir of the wali. As discussed above, section 307, P.P.C. does not provide a scheme of inheritance that helps to identify the next wali of the victim. Therefore, it is difficult to accept the view propounded in the Judgment that had the instant case been under qisas, the appellants would pass for walis (para 6 of the Judgment), being the heirs of the deceased wali (Waryam). The distinction between heirs of the victim i.e., wali under section 299(m) P.P.C. and heirs of wali (Waryam), needs to be kept in mind. Under Islamic Law of Inheritance, the appellants (brothers of the victim) stand ousted in the presence of the son and cannot pass as wali of the victim even though they are the heirs of Waryam. So even if the instant case was under qisas, only walis would have been the son and the widow or else the principles of Islamic Law of Inheritance would stand violated.

8. Another dimension is sociological and rests on public policy. Why should an interpretation be encouraged that restricts the choice or option of the subsequent heirs of the victim to settle a feud and move towards a more harmonious and peaceful life. Why deprive the heirs of this right? This interpretation supports the protection of the family as envisaged in the Principles of Policy under Article 35 of the Constitution. Any embargo on the exercise of the right to compound under section 345(2) Cr.P.C. by the subsequent heirs of the victim might not be in consonance with the Islamic Law of Inheritance.

9. Section 320 of the Indian Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 does not provide for compounding of an offence in case of murder (qatl-i-amd). Further, in case the person who can compound the offences given under the said section dies a natural death, his or her legal representative, with the consent of the court, may compound the offence. Legal representative supports the purposive interpretation employed in this note, recognizing a more contemporary status of the heir of the victim, who is there at the point of time of compounding and is not frozen in history at the time of the death of the victim.

10. The Judgment has referred the matter to the Federal Government to consider the possibility of amending the law by the Parliament. I am sure these reasons will also assist the Federal Government in bringing about more clarity in the proposed amendment. I, therefore, concur with the said direction.

11. As a conclusion, these are my reasons for concurring with the Judgment to the extent of the dismissal of the instant appeal and the direction to the Federal Government as discussed above.

Criminal Miscellaneous Application No.183 of 2019 in Criminal Appeal No.259 of 2018, decided on 22nd February, 2019..

Notice in compliance with the order dated 12-2-2019 passed in Criminal Appeal No.259 of 2018 to Mr. Kanwar Anwaar Ali, Special Judicial Magistrate on account of dereliction of duty and lack of sufficient legal knowledge.

(a) Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984)---

----Art. 22---Test identification parade---Evidentiary value and object of test identification parade in criminal cases stated.

Following is the evidentiary value and object of a test identification parade:

(i) Test identification parade and correct pointing out of an accused person by an eye-witness therein was not a substantive piece of evidence. Evidence offered through identification proceedings was not a substantive piece of evidence but was only corroborative of the evidence given by the witnesses at the trial. It had no independent value of its own and could not as a rule, form a sufficient basis for conviction though the same may add some weight to the other evidence available on record.

(ii) Identification parade was necessary only where the offender was a complete stranger to the witnesses. Whole object of the identification proceedings was to find out whether the suspect was or was not the real offender. [p. 498] B

----Art. 22---Test identification parade---Guidelines, requirements and safeguards necessary for holding a test identification parade in connection with criminal cases stated.

Following are the guidelines, requirements and safeguards necessary for holding a test identification parade:

(i) Vital factor determinative of the worth and value of test identification proceedings was the effectiveness of the precautions taken, before and during the course of such proceedings which were designed to eliminate the possibility of unjustified convictions.

(ii) Test identification proceedings were not the testimony of a witness but the testimony of the senses of the witness. It was essentially a test of his power of observation and perception, a test of his power to recognize strangers and a test of his memory. Such gifts of God may vary from man to man. A witness may be honest, independent and truthful but then his memory may be faulty. Tricks of memory and its conscious and unconscious activity could also wrap the vision of a man. When mistakes were possible in the recognition of a man known from before, then the possibility of such mistakes in identifying strangers was definitely greater. And more so when the witnesses had seen the offender for the first time during the occurrence and that also briefly and not with a calm but in an excited, confused and terrorised state of mind.

Lal Pasand's case PLD 1981 SC 142 ref.

(iii) Memories faded and visions got blurred with passage of time. Thus, an identification test, where an unexplained and unreasonably long period had intervened between the occurrence and the identification proceedings, should be viewed with suspicion. Therefore, an identification parade, to inspire confidence, must be held at the earliest possible opportunity after the occurrence.

(iv) Test identification, where the possibility of the witness having seen the accused persons after their arrest could not be ruled out, was worth nothing at all. It was, therefore, imperative to eliminate all such possibilities. It should be ensured that, after their arrest, the suspects were put to identification tests as early as possible. Such suspects should preferably, not be remanded to police custody in the first instance and should be kept in judicial custody till the identification proceedings were held. This was to avoid the possibility of overzealous investigating officers showing the suspects to the witnesses while they were in police custody. Even when these accused persons were, of necessity, to be taken to Courts for remand etc. they must be warned to cover their faces if they so choose so that no witness could see them.

(v) Identification of an accused person by eye-witnesses before the trial court during a trial was generally considered to be quite unsafe because before such identification during the trial the eye-witnesses got many opportunities to see the accused persons appearing before the court in connection with their remand, distribution of copies of statement of prosecution witnesses, framing of the charge and recording of statements of other prosecution witnesses.

Asghar Ali alias Sabah and others v. The State and others 1992 SCMR 2088; Muhammad Afzal alias Abdullah and another v. The State and others 2009 SCMR 436; Nazir Ahmad v. Muhammad Iqbal 2011 SCMR 527; Shafqat Mehmood and others v. The State 2011 SCMR 537; Ghulam Shabbir Ahmed and another v. The State 2011 SCMR 683 and Azhar Mehmood and others v. The State 2017 SCMR 135 ref.

(vi) Identification parades should never be held at police stations.

(vii) Magistrate, supervising the identification proceedings, must verify the period, if any, for which the accused persons had remained in police custody after their arrest and before the test identification and must incorporate such fact in his report about the proceedings.

(viii) In order to guard against the possibility of a witness identifying an accused person by chance, the number of persons (dummies) to be intermingled with the accused persons should be as much as possible. But then there was also the need to ensure that the number of such persons was not increased to an extent which could have the effect of confusing the identifying witness. Superior Courts had, through their wisdom and long experience, prescribed that ordinarily the ratio between the accused persons and the dummies should be 1 to 9 or 10. Such ratio must be followed unless there were some special justifiable circumstances warranting a deviation from it.

(ix) If there were more accused persons than one who had to be subjected to test identification, then the rule of prudence laid down by the superior Courts was that separate identification parades should ordinarily be held in respect of each accused person. Identification of many accused persons in one line in one go during a test identification parade was improper. Every accused person was to be put to a separate test identification parade.

The State 2017 SCMR 1546 and Kamal Din alias Kamala v. The State 2018 SCMR 577 ref.

(x) It must be ensured that before a witness had participated in the identification proceedings, he was stationed at a place from where he could not observe the proceedings and that after his participation he was lodged at a place from where it was not possible for him to communicate with those who had yet to take their turn. It also had to be ensured that no one who was witnessing the proceedings, such as the members of the jail staff etc., was able to communicate with the identifying witnesses.

(xi) During a test identification parade the witness had to specify the role allegedly played by an accused person in commission of the offence. [pp. 502, 503] T & W

(xii) Magistrate conducting the proceedings must take an intelligent interest in the proceedings and not be just a silent spectator of the same bearing in mind at all times that the life and liberty of someone depended only upon his vigilance and caution.

(xiii) Magistrate was obliged to prepare a list of all the persons (dummies) who formed part of the line-up at the parade along with their parentage, occupation and addresses.

(xiv) Magistrate must faithfully record all the objections and statements, if any, made either by the accused persons or by the identifying witnesses before, during or after the proceedings.

(xv) Where a witness correctly identified an accused person, the Magistrate must ask the witness about the connection in which the witness had identified that person i.e. as a friend, as a foe or as a culprit of an offence etc. and then incorporate such statement in his report.

(xvi) Where a witness identified a person wrongly, the Magistrate must so record in his report and should also state the number of persons wrongly picked by the witness.

(xvii) Magistrate was required to record in his report all the precautions taken by him for a fair conduct of the proceedings.

(xviii) Magistrate had to give a certificate at the end of his report in the form prescribed by C.H.II.C. of Vol. III of Lahore High Court Rules and Orders. [p. 501] R

(xix) Said measures listed should, however, not be taken as exhaustive of the steps which were required to be taken before, during and after the identification proceedings. All said requirements were no doubt mandatory but at the same time they were only illustrative of the precautions which the Courts of law demanded before some respect could be shown to the evidence offered through the test identification proceedings.

Date of hearing: 22nd February, 2019.

ORDER

ASIF SAEED KHAN KHOSA, C J.---While disposing of Criminal Appeal No. 259 of 2018 (Asfand Yar Khan v The State, etc.) this Court had passed the following judgment on 12.02.2019:

"Asfand Yar Khan appellant and some others had allegedly abducted one Adil Butt on 01.09.2009 for the purpose of extracting ransom and had later on done him to death and for commission of the said offences they were booked in case FIR No.370 registered at Police Station Model Town, Lahore on 02.09.2009 for an offence under section 365-A, P.P.C.. After a regular trial the appellant's co-accused were acquitted of the charge by the trial court whereas the appellant was convicted and sentenced for offences under section 302(b), P.P.C. read with section 34, P.P.C., section 347, P.P.C. read with section 34, P.P.C. and section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. The appellant was, however, acquitted of the charge as far as the offences under sections 365-A and 201, P.P.C. were concerned. For the offences of murder and terrorism the appellant was sentenced by the trial court to death on each such count. The appellant challenged his convictions and sentences before the High Court through an appeal which was partly allowed, the convictions and sentences of the appellant for the offences under section 347, P.P.C. and section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 were set aside, his conviction for the offence under section 302(b), P.P.C. was upheld and his sentence of death for the offence of murder was reduced by the High Court to imprisonment for life. Hence, the present appeal by leave of this Court granted on 12.04.2018.

2. Leave to appeal had been granted in this case in order to reappraise the evidence and with the assistance of the learned counsel for the parties we have undertaken that exercise.

3. The case in hand is a case of an alleged abduction for ransom and murder and admittedly the case hinges upon some pieces of circumstantial evidence. It is not denied that nobody had seen the appellant forcibly or deceitfully abducting Adil Butt deceased, no demand of ransom was attributed to the appellant or any connection of the appellant with such demand was established, no ransom was paid to the appellant or to anybody else for release of Adil Butt and the murder of Adil Butt had not been seen by anybody. The prosecution had produced Tabassum Saeed (PW6) and Mian Muhammad Yasin (PW7) so as to establish that they had seen the appellant and his co-accused in the company of Adil Butt deceased late in the evening on 01.09.2009 but we have found that the said piece of evidence produced by the above mentioned witnesses suffered from lack of proximity between death and last-seen. The said witnesses had claimed to have seen the deceased in the company of the appellant and his co-accused on 01.09.2009 but the medical evidence brought on the record showed that Adil Butt had died some time between 02.09.2009 and 05.09.2009 and, thus, the all-important consideration of proximity was not available in this case so as to make the last-seen evidence worth any serious consideration. Apart from that the above mentioned witnesses were chance witnesses and the stated reason for their availability at the relevant spot at the relevant time had not been established through any independent evidence. The next piece of circumstantial evidence relied upon by the prosecution was the statement of Sanaullah (PW 15) who had allegedly seen the appellant and another throwing a sack in a canal on 07.09.2009 but the medical evidence did not support that stance of PW 15 inasmuch as according to the medical evidence Adil Butt deceased lost his life latest by 05.09.2009 and, thus, throwing away of a sack by an appellant and another in a canal on 07.09.2009 could not positively establish that it were the appellant and another who had done the deceased to death themselves and all that it could show was that some effort was made by the appellant and another to make the deadbody disappear. Such action attributed to the appellant and another attracted an offence under section 201, P.P.C. but admittedly the appellant had been acquitted of the said charge framed against him. The prosecution had claimed that the deadbody of the deceased had been recovered from a canal and admittedly such recovery of the deadbody had not been brought about at the instance of the appellant. It was maintained by the prosecution that two days prior to recovery of the deadbody the appellant had pointed out the place where he had thrown the deadbody in a canal. Such pointing out of the place of throwing of the deadbody attributed to the appellant could not qualify as evidence or confession because during such pointing out no recovery of any incriminating article had taken place. The last-seen evidence provided by Tabassum Saeed (PW6) and Mian Muhammad Yasin (PW7) and the Waj-takkar evidence provided by Sana Ullah (PW 15) showed that at the relevant time the said witnesses had not identified the persons who were seen last in the company of the deceased and even the persons throwing a sack in a canal had not been identified by the Waj-takkar witness. These pieces of evidence could have some relevance to this case against the appellant if the appellant had been lawfully or properly identified during a test identification parade. In the case in hand the test identification parade conducted for identification of the appellant and his co-accused by the relevant prosecution witnesses suffered from a serious legal defect inasmuch as in one and the same parade three accused persons including the appellant had statedly been identified by three separate prosecution witnesses. Such identification of three accused persons in one go amounted to a joint identification and an identification parade which is joint has consistently been disapproved by this Court through many a judgment and a reference in this respect may be made to the cases of Kamal Din alias Kamala v. The State (2018 SCMR 577), Gulfam and another v. The State (2017 SCMR 1189), Hakeem and others v. The State (2017 SCMR 1546), Shafqat Mehmood and others v. The State (2011 SCMR 537), Bacha Zeb v The State (2010 SCMR 1189), Ziaullah alias Jajj v. The State (2008 SCMR 1210), Imran Ashraf and 7 others v. The State (2001 SCMR 424) and Lal Pasand v. The State (PLD 1981 SC 142). It is unfortunate that the Magistrate conducting the test identification parade in this case was completely oblivious of such judgments holding the field. The only piece of evidence remaining in the field was in the shape of some recoveries affected in this case which included a Danda a rope, a wallet, a copy of the Computerized National Identity Card, some cheques, visiting card, receipts and a copy of the Matriculation Result Card of the deceased which had statedly been recovered from the house of the appellant during the investigation. Some reservations have already been expressed by the High Court in the impugned judgment passed by it regarding veracity of the alleged recoveries and upon our own independent evaluation we have found such recoveries to be nothing but fabricated. It was unthinkable that the culprits who had taken every precaution to conceal their crimes would keep such articles at their home so as to furnish evidence of their crimes later on.

4. For what has been discussed above a conclusion is inescapable and irresistible that the prosecution had failed to prove its case against the appellant beyond reasonable doubt. This appeal is, therefore, allowed, the conviction and sentence of the appellant are set aside and he is acquitted of the charge by extending the benefit of doubt to him. He shall be released from the jail forthwith if not required to be detained in connection with any other case.

5. Before parting with this judgment we may observe that competence and capability of Mr. Kanwar Anwaar Ali, Special Judicial Magistrate appearing before the trial court as PW8 have been found by us to be quite doubtful and deficient inasmuch as while conducting a test identification parade on 19.09.2009 in connection with this criminal case in Central Jail, Kot Lakhpat, Lahore he had paid no heed or regard whatsoever to the law declared by this Court in the precedent cases holding the field wherein it had clearly been laid down that a test identification parade qua many accused persons cannot be conducted in one go. Through his disregard of the law declared by this Court he had made a very important piece of evidence reduced in worth or eliminated as an admissible piece of evidence and the prosecution had to suffer on that score irretrievably. Let Mr. Kanwar Anwaar Ali appear before this Court on 22.02.2019 in person so as to show as to why appropriate proceedings may not be initiated against him on account of dereliction of duty and lack of sufficient legal knowledge and also to show as to why some adverse recommendations may not be made to the concerned authorities regarding his suitability to hold a judicial or executive office. The Registrar of the Lahore High Court, Lahore is directed to trace the said Mr. Kanwar Anwaar Ali and to make sure that he appears before the Court in person on the appointed date."

2. In compliance with the direction issued by this Court on 12.02.2019 Mr. Kanwar Anwaar Ali, the then Special Judicial Magistrate appearing before the trial court as PW8 has appeared before this Court in person along with his written statement which reads as follows:

"I most humbly submit that I was inducted as a Provincial Management Service (PMS) Officer (BS-17) on 15.05.2006 and my academic qualification at the time of induction was simple graduation (B.A). I received training at Management and Professional Development Department (MPDD), Government of the Punjab in a 32 weeks course on Administration and Development from 15.05.2006 to 23.12.2006. Except for few orientation lectures on C.P.C., P.P.C., Cr.P.C. and Constitutional Law, no extensive legal education or training was being imparted by the MPDD after abolition of Executive Magistracy and main focus was and still is on planning and Development, Public Administration, Public Policy, Management and Revenue.

2. It is further submitted that after 03-years of government service while I was working as Tehsil Municipal Officer, Okara, I was transferred by S&GAD on 18.08.2009, after concurrence of Hon'ble Lahore High Court, Lahore and posted as Special Judicial Magistrate, at Model Town Courts, Lahore against one of the vacant posts where erstwhile Executive Magistrates of PCS cadre would serve and decide petty offences pertaining to local and special laws. I was not a law graduate yet I served there as Special Judicial Magistrate in District Judiciary w.e.f. 01.09.2009 to 11.10.2012. in absence of any institutional setup and formal legal training arrangement or practical demonstrations pertaining to assignments like test identification parades, raids, inquests and exhumations, the only opportunity available to me was day to day on job learning or study of case laws of Superior Courts and commentaries. For a non-law-graduate like me, there was no institutional arrangement for capacity building and throughout I had to be self taught.

3. I beg to state that it was the 10th day of my duty as Special Judicial Magistrate when I conducted my maiden test identification parade in the subject case. I had given bare reading of instructions on the subject contained in volume-III of High Court Rules and Orders and Police Rules 1934. During the conduct of my ever first identification Parade, I used commonsensical learning that I had gathered from reading of bare instructions, pattern and guidance of my colleagues in judiciary. In my humble understanding, a joint identification parade meant a parade in which more than one accused had been made to stand in a single row with many other dummies for identification by a witness, therefore I took care not to mix more than one accused person with 09 almost identical dummies in a separate row. Each row was separately presented before a witness for identification. The witness was told that he would be presented three rows; one after the other and in each row of 10 inmates, one person could be a suspect. A row would appear on site, the witness could identify or otherwise, the identified person would be separated and then the left over row of the dummies would depart. The second important learning was identification of accused with description of role in front of the identified suspects.

4. It is my most humble submission that I have conducted said identification proceedings in good faith as a judicial officer to the best of my ability and knowledge without any mala fide intention. It is my humble understanding that the crux of the statements made by witnesses while describing respective roles of accused person in the occurrence could hardly substantiate the offence under sections 365-A or 302, P.P.C. It was responsibility of the prosecution to collect corroborating circumstantial evidence for proving charges against the accused person. I most humbly submit that my role as a judicial officer was restricted only to the extent of recording witnesses and their description of respective roles of the accused persons in the occurrence.

Prayer:

It is most humbly prayed that I am a career civil servant and father of three school going kids and a sole bread-winner of a large family consisting of elderly parents and un-married sisters. In good faith, I tried to perform my duty where-ever I was posted by the Government. I place myself at the mercy of the Hon'ble Court and invoke its compassion of taking a lenient view and humbly request that I may not be punished in any manner which may jeopardize my career as a civil servant and future lives of my innocent kids and dependents."

The explanation put forward by Mr. Kanwar Anwaar Ali who is presently posted as Deputy Secretary (P&D Department) Government of the Punjab, Lahore and the peculiar circumstances mentioned therein have been found by us to be plausible and, thus, no occasion has been found by us for proceeding against him in any manner or for passing any adverse remark against his conduct. The notice issued to him is, therefore, discharged.

3. Before parting with this order we would like to point out that the matter of taking of different steps in holding of a proper test identification parade in connection with a criminal case has developed over many decades and the requirements of such a parade as well as the safeguards to be ensured during such a parade so as to make it a meaningful exercise and providing material in a criminal case to be considered in a trial have elaborately been detailed in the landmark judgment passed by a learned Division Bench of the Lahore High Court, Lahore in the case of Muhammd Yaqoob and another v. The State (1989 PCr.LJ 2227) and in the said judgment Mr. Justice Khalil-ur-Rehman Ramday (as his lordship then was a Judge of the Lahore High Court, Lahore) had observed as follows:

"16. But before we undertake a deeper analysis of the evidentiary value of the test identification proceedings held in the present case, it would be of advantage to first appreciate the object and the value of such an evidence as also to recapitulate the standards required to be met before such like identification parades could be credited with reliance.

17. The evidence offered through identification proceedings is not a substantive piece of evidence but is only corroborative of the evidence given by the witnesses at the trial Muhammad Bashir v. The State PLD 1958 SC (Pak.) 1. It has no independent value of its own Muhammad Afzal and another v. The State 1982 SCMR 129 and cannot as a rule, form a sufficient basis for conviction though the same may add some weight to the other evidence available on record Sudhindranath v. The State AIR 1952 Cal. 423.

18. The identification parades (as they are normally called) are necessary only where the offender was a complete stranger to the witnesses Ismail and another v. The State 1974 SCMR 175. And the whole object of the identification proceedings is to find out whether the suspect was or was not the real offender Satya Narain v. The State AIR 1953 All. 385 and Kind v. Christle 1914 AC 545.

19. Such-like identification proceedings are not the testimony of a witness but the testimony of the senses of the witness. It is essentially a test of his power of observation and perception, a test of his power to recognize strangers and a test of his memory. These gifts of God may vary from man to man. A witness may be honest, independent and truthful but then his memory may be faulty. And then the tricks of memory and its conscious and unconscious activity could also wrap the vision of a man. When mistakes are possible in the recognition of a man known from before, then the possibility of such mistakes in identifying strangers is definitely greater. And more so when the witnesses have seen the offender for the first time during the occurrence and that also briefly and not with a calm but in an excited, confused and terrorised state of mind.

20. It was primarily for these reasons that Dorab Patel, J. (as his Lordship then was) cautioned the Courts to beware of the dangers inherent in the identification of strangers and quoting from the Criminal Law Revision Committee Report (1972), observed in Lal Pasand's case PLD 1981 SC 142 that mistaken identifications were:-

" ..by far the greatest cause of actual or possible wrong convictions...."

A similar note of caution was given by Monir in his Evidence Act Pak. Edition, Vol. 1 where the advice is that:-

" .... the evidence as to identification ought in each case, to be subjected to a close and careful scrutiny."

21. What then are the standards required to be satisfied by such an evidence before the same could be accepted by a Court of law?

22. The answer is that the vital factor determinative of the worth and value of identification proceedings is the effectiveness of the precautions taken, before and during the course of such proceedings which are designed to eliminate the possibility of unjustified convictions.

23. Although there is no law, which prescribes any such precautions yet the necessary guidelines are available in the form of executive instructions and judicial pronouncements. Some of them are summarised as under:-

(a) Memories fade and visions get blurred with passage of time. Thus, an identification test, where an unexplained and unreasonably long period has intervened between the occurrence and the identification proceedings, should be viewed with suspicion. Therefore, an identification parade, to inspire confidence, must be held at the earliest possible opportunity after the occurrence;

(b) a test identification, where the possibility of the witness having seen the accused persons after their arrest cannot be ruled out, is worth nothing at all. It is, therefore, imperative to eliminate all such possibilities. It should be ensured that, after their arrest, the suspects are put to identification tests as early as possible. Such suspects should preferably, not be remanded to police custody in the first instance and should be kept in judicial custody till the identification proceedings are held. This is to avoid the possibility of overzealous I.Os. showing the suspects to the witnesses while they are in police custody. Even when these accused persons are, of necessity, to be taken to Courts for remand etc. they must be warned to cover their faces if they so choose so that no witness could see them;

(c) identification parades should never be held at police stations;

(d) the Magistrate, supervising the identification proceedings, must verify the period, if any, for which the accused persons have remained in police custody after their arrest and before the test identification and must incorporate this fact in his report about the proceedings;

(e) in order to guard against the possibility of a witness identifying an accused person by chance, the number of persons (dummies) to be intermingled with the accused persons should be as much as possible. But then there is also the need to ensure that the number of such persons is not increased to an extent which could have the effect of confusing the identifying witness. The superior Courts have, through their wisdom and long experience, prescribed that ordinarily the ratio between the accused persons and the dummies should be 1 to 9 or 10. This ratio must be followed unless there are some special justifiable circumstances warranting a deviation from it;

(f) if there are more accused persons than one who have to be subjected to test identification, then the rule of prudence laid down by the superior Courts is that separate identification parades should ordinarily be held in respect of each accused person;

(g) it must be ensured that before a witness has participated in the identification proceedings, he is stationed at a place from where he cannot observe the proceedings and that after his participation he is lodged at a place from where it is not possible for him to communicate with those who have yet to take their turn. It also has to be ensured that no one who is witnessing the proceedings, such as the members of the jail staff etc., is able to communicate with the identifying witnesses;

(h) the Magistrate conducting the proceedings must take an intelligent interest in the proceedings and not be just a silent spectator of the same bearing in mind at all times that the life and liberty of some one depends only upon his vigilance and caution;

(i) the Magistrate is obliged to prepare a list of all the persons (dummies) who form part of the line-up at the parade along with their parentage, occupation and addresses;

(j) the Magistrate must faithfully record all the objections and statements, if any, made either by the accused persons or by the identifying witnesses before, during or after the proceedings;

(k) where a witness correctly identifies an accused person, the Magistrate must ask the witness about the connection in which the witness has identified that person i.e. as a friend, as a foe or as a culprit of an offence etc. and then incorporate this statement in his report;

(l) and where a witness identifies a person wrongly, the Magistrate must so record in his report and should also state the number of persons wrongly picked by the witness;

(m) the Magistrate is required to record in his report all the precautions taken by him for a fair conduct of the proceedings and

(n) the Magistrate has to give a certificate at the end of his report in the form prescribed by CH.II.C. of Vol. III of Lahore High Court Rules and Orders.

24. The measures above listed should, however, not be taken as exhaustive of the steps which are required to be taken before, during and after the identification proceedings. All these requirements are no doubt mandatory but at the same time they are only illustrative of the precautions which the Courts of law demand before some respect can be shown to the evidence offered through the test identification proceedings.

25. In enunciating the above principles governing the proceedings in question and in enumerating the above measures and requirements, we have sought guidance from the following:-

(i) Rules and Orders of the Lahore High Court, Chapter 11-C of Vol.III; (ii) Punjab Government Circular Letter No.6091-J-36/ 39829 (H-Judl.) dated 19-12-1936; (iii) Punjab Government Circular Letter No. 6546-J-43/83844 (H-Judl.), dated 17.12.1943; (iv) Punjab Government Circular Letter No.Judl.I-(13)/61, dated 26-7-1961, (v) Monir's Evidence Act (Pak. Edition) Vol. I, (vi) Lal Pasand v. The State PLD 1981 SC 142, (vii) Muhammad Afzal v. The State 1982 SCMR 129, (viii) Ismail v. The State 1974 SCMR 175, (ix) Khadim Hussain v. The State 1985 SCMR 721, (x) Muhammad Bashir Alam v. The State PLD 1958 SC (Pak.) 1, (xi) Gul Baig v. The State PLD 1964 Kar. 275, (xii) Musharrif Hussain v. The State PLD 1970 Dacca 686, (xiii) Sadu v. The State 1972 PCr.LJ 10, (xiv) Qabil Shah v. The State PLD 1960 Kar. 697, (xv) Wahid Bakhsh v. The State 1969 PCr.LJ 137, (xvi) Karim v. The State PLD 1961 Kar. 728, (xvii) Kameshwar Singh v. The State AIR 1972 SC 102 (xviii) Parbhu v. Emp. AIR 1943 Lah. 946, (xix) Emp. v. Debi Charan AIR 1942 All. 339, (xx) Sataya Naryan v. The State AIR 1953 All. 385, (xxi) Gajadher v. Emp. AIR 1932 Oudh. 99 and (xxii) Ramzan v. Emp. AIR 1929 Sindh 149."

We have failed to find a more elaborate illustration of the requirements and the safeguards necessary for holding a test identification parade than found in the above mentioned portion of the judgment passed in the said precedent case. We wholeheartedly approve the said requirements and safeguards which are to be meticulously followed and observed in all the test identification parades held in connection with criminal cases.

4. It may also be observed that during a test identification parade the requirement regarding specifying by a witness the role of an individual accused person in commission of an offence had also been identified and emphasized by this Court in the cases of Ismail and another v. The State (1974 SCMR 175), Khadim Hussain v. The State (1985 SCMR 721), Ghulam Rasul and 3 others v. The State (1988 SCMR 557), Asghar Ali alias Sabah and others v. The State and others (1992 SCMR 2088), State/Government of Sindh through Advocate-General, Sindh, Karachi v. Sobharo (1993 SCMR 585), Mehmood Ahmad and 3 others v. The State and another (1995 SCMR 127), Siraj-ul-Haq and another v. The State (2008 SCMR 302), Ghulam Qadir and 2 others v. The State (2008 SCMR 1221), Muhammad Afzal alias Abdullah and another v. State and others (2009 SCMR 436), Shafqat Mehmood and others v. The State (2011 SCMR 537), Sabir Ali alias Fauji v. The State (2011 SCMR 563), Muhammad Fayyaz v. The State (2012 SCMR 522), Azhar Mehmood and others v. The State (2017 SCMR 135), Hakeem and others v. The State (2017 SCMR 1546) and Kamal Din alias Kamala v. The State (2018 SCMR 577).

5. Identification of many accused persons in one line in one go during a test identification parade has also repeatedly been held by this Court to be improper and it has been clarified by this Court on a number of occasions that every accused person is to be put to a separate test identification parade and a reference in this respect may be made to the cases of Lal Pasand v. The State (PLD 1981 SC 142), Imran Ashraf and 7 others v. The State (2001 SCMR 424), Ziaullah alias Jajj v. The State (2008 SCMR 1210), Bacha Zeb v. The State (2010 SCMR 1189), Shafqat Mehmood and others v. The State (2011 SCMR 537), Gulfam and another v. The State (2017 SCMR 1189), Hakeem and others v. The State (2017 SCMR 1546) and Kamal Din alias Kamala v. The State (2018 SCMR 577).

6. Identification of an accused person by eye-witnesses before the trial court during a trial is generally considered to be quite unsafe because before such identification before the trial court during the trial the eye-witnesses get many opportunities to see the accused persons appearing before the court in connection with their remand, distribution of copies of statement of prosecution witnesses recorded under section 161, Cr.P.C., framing of the charge and recording of statements of other prosecution witnesses. Even in such identification before the trial court during the trial it is imperative that a witness must point towards a particular accused person present before the trial court and must also specify the role allegedly played by him in the incident in issue. The unsafe nature of identification of an accused person before the trial court during the trial has already been commented upon by this Court in the cases of Asghar Ali alias Sabah and others v. The State and others (1992 SCMR 2088), Muhammad Afzal alias Abdullah and another v. The State and others (2009 SCMR 436), Nazir Ahmad v. Muhammad Iqbal (2011 SCMR 527), Shafqat Mehmood and others v. The State (2011 SCMR 537), Ghulam Shabbir Ahmed and another v. The State (2011 SCMR 683) and Azhar Mehmood and others v. The State (2017 SCMR 135).

7. It may also be mentioned here that a test identification parade and correct pointing out of an accused person by an eye-witness therein is not a substantive piece of evidence and failure to hold a test identification parade is not always fatal to the prosecution's case and a reference in this respect may be made to the cases of Muhammad Akram Rahi and others v. The State and others (2011 SCMR 877) and Ghazanfar Ali alias Pappu and another v. The State (2012 SCMR 215).

8. The above mentioned precedent cases and the best practices mentioned therein have been consolidated by us in the present order so that any confusion regarding the legal position in respect of a test identification parade may be removed and all concerned may stand instructed and guided in that regard in future. A serious exception may henceforth be taken to any non-compliance or disregard of the requirements and safeguards mentioned above.

9. The office of this Court is directed to send a copy of this order to the Registrars of all the High Courts in the country with a direction to send a copy of the same to every Judge and Magistrate within the jurisdiction of each High Court handling criminal cases at all levels for their information and guidance.

MWA/K-2/S Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT

YAHYA AFRIDI, J.---This Court had granted leave to appeal in the petition moved by Bashir Ahmad (deceased) through his legal heirs, the present appellant, against the order of the learned Division Bench of the Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 23.05.2005 passed in Writ Petition No.136-R/82 in terms that:

> "Inter alia contends that the learned Division Bench of the Lahore High Court did not appreciate that the, petitioner was not a party in Writ Petition No.136/1982; that the said petition was allowed by the judgment dated 7.10.1982 and the same has adversely affected petitioner's right qua the land subject matter of this petition without hearing him.
> 2. Having heard the learned counsel for the petitioner at some length leave is granted to consider, inter alia, whether the learned High Court could have dismissed his application under section 12(2) notwithstanding the fact that the land subject matter of this petition was in petitioner's possession an allottee and he was not even impleaded as a party."

2. In essence, the issue in hand is whether the application under Section 12(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 ("the C.P.C.") filed by the present appellant on 07.08.2002, challenging the decision of the learned High Court dated 17.10.1982 passed in Writ Petition No.136-R/82, was time-barred under The Limitatlon Act, 1908 ("the Act") or otherwise.

3. Before we consider the merits of the present appeal, it would be appropriate to note that the essential purpose of the Act is to prescribe the period of limitation for an aggrieved party to enforce his existing right. The said period for different nature of suits, appeals and applications have separately been prescribed in the various Articles contained in the First Schedule of the Act ("the schedule"). The legislature has, in Section 3 of the Act, also provided for peculiar circumstances in which the period of limitation prescribed in the various Articles of the Schedule can be extended or altered. The said provision reads:

"3. Dismissal of suit, etc., instituted etc., after period of limitation. Subject to the provisions contained in sections 4 to 25 (inclusive), every suit instituted, appeal preferred and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the First Schedale shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence."

(emphasis added)

4. One of the instances for extension of the period of limitation envisaged in the above provision is under Section 18, wherein an aggrieved person who has, by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of such right or of the title on which it is founded, or where any document necessary to establish such right has been fraudulently concealed from him. Faced with the above disposition, the time limited for instituting a suit or making an application by the aggrieved person is to commence from the time when the fraud first became known to him or, in the case of the concealed document, when he first had the means of producing it or compelling its production. Section 18 of the Act reads as under:

Section 18

"Effect of fraud. Where any person having a right to institute a suit or make an application has, by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of such right or of the title on which it is founded, or where any document necessary to establish such right has been fraudulently concealed from him, the time limited for instituting a suit or making an application--

(a) against the person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto, or

(b) against any person claiming through him otherwise than in good faith and for a valuable consideration, shall be computed from the time when the fraud first became known to the person injuriously affected thereby, or, in the case of the concealed document; when he first had the means of producing it or compelling its production."

5. A careful review of the above referred provisions reveals that Section 3 prescribes for the period of limitation for the institution of suits and the filing of appeals or applications, while Section 18 provides for the commencement of the period of limitation for only suits and applications to the exclusion of appeals. Therefore, Section 18 of the Act becomes an umbrella provision for all the Articles of the Schedule when a right in a suit or application is pleaded, inter alia, on the grounds of fraud or concealment.

6. Prior to insertion of Section 12(2) of the C.P.C. vide Ordinance No. 10 of 1980, any person aggrieved of the validity of a decree on the plea of fraud, misrepresentation or concealment of fact could institute a fresh suit challenging the same. In such circumstances, the period of limitation for filing a suit was to be determined in view of Article 95 of the Act read with Section 18 (supra). Article 95 of the Act reads:

Article 95

|---|---|---|

| To set aside a decree obtained by fraud, or for other relief on the ground of fraud. | [Three years] | When the fraud becomes known to the party wronged. |

7. With the insertion of Section 12(2) in the C.P.C., any person aggrieved of a judgment passed on fraud, misrepresentation or concealment of facts was barred to institute a fresh suit and was mandated to file an application agitating his grievance before the same court which passed the said decision. In the changed scenario, the limitation for filing the application would not be governed in terms of the provisions provided under Article 95 of the Act, as the same relates to suits and not an application, which was to be filed by an aggrieved party under Section 12(2) of the C.P.C.

8. There is no period of limitation prescribed in the Act for filing an application under Section 12(2) of the C.P.C. And Article 95, being a provision for filing a suit, would not be applicable for an application being filed under Section 12(2) of the C.P.C. Therefore, residuary Article 181 of the Act would come into play to govern the period of limitation.

9. Let us now review Article 181 of the Act, which reads:--

|---|---|---|
| 181. Application for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this schedule or by section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 | Three years | When the ritght to apply accrues |

A careful reading of the above provision clearly reveals that the period of limitation to file an a oplication under Section 12(2) of the C.P.C. would be three years, and the crucial starting point for the period of limitation would be when the right to apply accrues to the aggrieved applicant, which in case of an application under Section 12(2) of the C.P.C. would be the date when the impugned decision based on fraud and concealment was passed. In case the aggrieved person has, by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of decision of the Court, he may then seek the extension of the commencing point of the period of limitation of three years from the date of the decision under Article 181 of the Act, to the date of knowledge of the said decision under section 18 (supra). Reference may be made to the case of Faizum alias Toor v. Nander Khan (2006 SCMR 1931), Mian Muhammad and others v. Pir Bakhsh and others (2005 SCMR 1505), Fida Hussain v. Ghulam Sarwar (2002 SCMR 1554), Mst. Amtul Kabir and others v. Safia Khatoon and others (1991 SCMR 1022) and Muhammad Iqbal and another v. Muhammad Alamgir and others (1990 SCMR 1377).

10. In the instant case, the right to apply accrued to the appellant when the writ petition of the private respondent was accepted by the High Court on 17.10.1982. The appellant, on the other hand, challenged the said decision under Section 12(2) of the C.P.C. after almost two decades, on 07.08.2002. Hence, the said petition, on the face of this essential fact, was time-barred within the contemplation of Article 181 of the Act. Since the appellant, in his petition, had pleaded fraud by the private respondents for not impleading him in their petition, and thereafter, concealing from him the knowledge of the decision of the High Court, his case would deserve consideration for the commencement of the period of limitation prescribed under Section 18 of the Act. In the present case, no specific date of knowledge has been stated in the application filed by the appellant under Section 12(2) of the C.P.C. However, in paragraph 11 of the said application, a vague reference to the date of knowledge as to the decision of the High Court has been made, i.e. when the partition proceedings were initiated by the private respondents. This vague assertion on such a crucial fact would not be of any legal avail to the appellant, as a mere bold assertion of fraud or concealment would not legally suffice to establish the appellant's said claim. Moreover, it is by now a settled principle that when a person raises the ground of fraud or concealment to allege his claim or defend his stance, the same has to be specifically pleaded with clear particulars. Some of the leading cases decided by this court are Ghulam Shabbir v. Mst. Nur Begum and others (PLD 1977 SC 75), Izzat Bakhsh v. Nazir Ahmad and 13 others (PLD 1976 SC 508), Faizum alias Toor v. Nander Khan and others (2006 SCMR 1931), Akbar Ali Khan and others v. Mukamil Shah and others (2005 SCMR 431) and Haji Muhammad Saleem v. Khuda Bakhsh (PLD 2003 SC 315).

11. Therefore, after having viewed the matter from every angle, we find that the application of the appellant under Section 12(2) of the C.P.C., having been filed after a lapse of twenty years, and that too, without mentioning of any specific date of knowledge, was correctly rejected by the learned High Court in its impugned decision.

12. Accordingly, for the reasons stated hereinabove, the impugned decision passed by the learned High Court is in accord with the settled principles of civil administration of justice, and thus, warrants no interference by this Court. The instant appeal being bereft of merit is dismissed.

MWA/B-2/S Appeal dismissed.

Civil Appeal No.227-L of 2010, decided on 21st March, 2019.

(a) Accommodation Allocation Rules, 2002---

----Rr. 15(2) & 25(4)(b)---Unauthorized retention of Government accommodation after retirement---Payment of standard rent with penal charges---Respondent (retired civil servant) contended that he was not liable to pay rent in terms of R.25(4)(b) of the Accommodation Allocation Rules, 2002 (`the Rules') due to a stay order granted by the Service Tribunal during pendency of his appeal---Held, that as per Rr.15(2) & 25(4)(b) of the Rules, respondent could have retained official accommodation after his retirement only for a period of six months and thereafter he was liable to pay standard rent for the remaining period---Stay order granted by the Service Tribunal was insignificant as appeal was not decided on merits and was finally withdrawn by respondent, resulting in the withdrawal of the stay order, as if it never existed---After the withdrawal of the appeal respondent had no justification not to pay the penal rent in accordance with the Rules---Department was entitled to recover standard rent with penal charges from the respondent as per R.25(4)(b) of the Rules---Appeal was allowed accordingly.

(b) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 212(3)---Appeal to Supreme Court---Substantial question of law of "public importance"---Meaning---To constitute "public importance," the matter must go substantially beyond the facts of the case; it was not sufficient that a question of law arose in the case, but whether the question of law transcended the facts of the individual case and was substantial enough to have a significant bearing on the public interest---In the context of service laws a substantial question of law of public importance was a question that may arise out of a case but then surpassed the parties, to the case, and had an overarching effect on the public or a community or a class of civil servants---To determine what might constitute a substantial question of law of public importance under Art.212(3) of the Constitution, a good test was to determine whether any decision by the Supreme Court in the matter would have a bearing on the public or on the rights of a community or segment of civil servants and would not be restricted to the parties to the case---Any question of law that involved interpretation of the law, rules, instructions, notifications or governmental policy; that had not been finally settled by the Supreme Court or was not free from difficulty or ambiguity or called for discussion of alternative views; that highlighted a state of uncertainty in the law, arising from a contradictory precedent, or, that pointed out blatant abuse of due process, may pass for a substantial question of law of public importance.

(c) Accommodation Allocation Rules, 2002---

----R. 25(4)(b)---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 212(3)---Substantial question of law of "public importance"---Scope---Unauthorized retention of Government accommodation after retirement---Payment of standard rent with penal charges---In the present case, the question was whether a civil servant could unauthorizedly retain official accommodation beyond a period of six months without paying penal rent---Hence, the case required interpretation of the Accommodation Allocation Rules, 2002 ('the Rules'), which constituted a substantial question of law of public importance because the decision by the Supreme Court would affect all those civil servants who were subject to the Rules---Appeal was allowed in circumstances.

Izharul Haque, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellant.

Date of hearing: 21st March, 2019.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question before us is whether respondent No.1 is liable to pay standard rent (with penal charges as opposed to normal rent, for unauthorized retention of Govempaent accommodation i.e., House No.C-1, Customs Officers Colony, Gulberg-III, Lahore, for a period of more than six months of his retirement in terms of Accommodation Allocation Rules, 2002 ("Rules").

2. Brief background to this case is that respondent No.1 filed Miscellaneous Petition No.569/2006 in Appeal No.952(L)CS of 2004 before the Federal Service Tribunal ("Tribunal") on 10.07.2006 before his retirement on 09.10.2006 praying that he be allowed to retain the official accommodation after his retirement. He submitted that as his pension, GP Fund and other dues had not been paid, he was not in a position to rent a new house and, therefore, requested to retain the official accommodation in question for a period of six months. Interim relief was granted to respondent No.1 on 10.07.2006 but the main appeal came up for hearing on 06.01.2010 i.e., after three and a half years, when the appeal was withdrawn by respondent No.1 while the Tribunal observed in the said order that as respondent No.1 has retained official accommodation on the basis of a stay order he was not liable to pay any penal rent and was only liable to pay normal rent under the Rules.

3. Subsequently, respondent No.3 vide letter dated 24.01.2010 demanded respondent No.1 to pay accrued standard rent in the sum of Rs.626,551/- as per rule 25(4)(b) of the Rules. Respondent No.1, according to the said letter, was entitled to retain the official accommodation under rule 15(2) only for a period of six months, after his retirement, on payment of normal rent and thereafter was liable to pay standard rent (with penal charges) such penal rent as is provided under rule 25(4)(b) of the Rules, as the house had been retained beyond the said period without any authorization and in this case for over 3 years.

4. Respondent No.1 once again approached the Tribunal against demand raised through letter 24.01.2010 by making an application in an appeal which stood already withdrawn on 06.01.2010, complaining that inspite of earlier direction of the Tribunal he has been charged rent under rule 25(4)(b) of the Rules. The Tribunal while disposing of the application of respondent No.1 vide impugned order dated 27.03.2010 reiterated that the occupation of the official accommodation by respondent No.1 was due to the judicial order passed by the Tribunal and, therefore, respondent No.1 was not liable to pay the said amount. Hence this appeal with leave of the Court granted on 22.06.2010.

5. Learned counsel for the appellant Department submits that there is a clear abuse of power and process in the present case. The appeal filed by respondent No.1 had been withdrawn on 06.01.2010 and, therefore, the question whether respondent No.1 was liable to pay standard rent (with penal charges) over and above the normal rent remained undetermined. The stay order was contingent on the final determination of the question in the appeal but as the appeal stood withdrawn so was the stay order. The appeal having been withdrawn by respondent No.1, his application could not have been entertained and no direction could have been issued vide impugned order dated 27.03.2010 to the Department. Learned counsel on behalf of respondent No.1 has no convincing argument and keeps hiding behind the stay order granted by the Tribunal. He also submitted that the instant petition is not maintainable in terms of Article 212(3) of the Constitution as it does not raise any substantial question of law of public importance.

6. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have gone through the record of the case. As per Rules 15(2) and 25(4)(b) of the Rules, respondent No.1 could have retained official accommodation after his retirement only for a period of six months and thereafter he was liable to pay standard rent for the remaining period. The stay order granted by the Tribunal is insignificant in the instant case as appeal was not decided on merits and was finally withdrawn by respondent No.1, resulting in the withdrawal of the stay order, as if it never existed. After the withdrawal of the appeal respondent No.1 had no justification not to pay the penal rent in accordance with the Rules. The entertainment of application filed by respondent No.1 by the Tribunal in an appeal which was no more pending before the Tribunal in itself amounts to abuse of the process. The legal position under the Rules is absolutely clear and there is no factual dispute regarding retention of official accommodation by respondent No.1.

7. As regards submission of learned counsel for respondent No.1 that no substantial question of law of public importance is raised in this case, it is necessary to examine the scope of Article 212(3) of the Constitution which is reproduced hereunder for reference:-

> "212(3). An appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment, decree, order or sentence of an Administrative Court or Tribunal shall lie only if the Supreme Court, being satisfied that the case involves a substantial question of law of public importance, grants leave to appeal."

8. Jurisdiction of this Court can be invoked only if the Court is satisfied that the case involves a substantial question of law of public importance. In order to fully understand the import of this Article, a good starting point is the parliamentary debate on Article 212(3) of the Constitution before the promulgation of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973.

> "Mr. Abdul Hafeez Pirzada: ...I would like to submit that we are establishing the supremacy of the Supreme Court over the Special Tribunals and Administrative Courts which are being set up; but in order to prevent flooding petitions before the Supreme Court on trivial matters and no questions of fact or on matters concluded by administrative tribunal on questions of fact and appraisal of evidence. We have provided these safeguards so that the Supreme Court shall not be flooded with petitions from judgments of administrative courts and thus destroy the object of creating Administrative Courts ....So while recognizing the principle that safety valve should be provided inasmuch as if there are any errors of law committed by Administrative Courts remedy should be available if special leave is granted by the Supreme Court. We also want to prevent frivolous and vexatious petitions from going to the Supreme Court and thus impeding the task of Supreme Court in adjudicating upon its normal cases, usual exercise of its normal jurisdiction. Therefore, what has been said is this that from the judgment, decree etc. of an Administrative Court an appeal may lie to the Supreme Court, only if the Supreme Court grants special leave, after being satisfied that there is a substantive question of law of general public importance involved in the petition. This will be a sufficient safeguard to the Government servants and also this will be recognition of the principle of the supremacy of the Supreme Court as far as judicature is concerned[1]."

9. The purpose of this limited jurisdiction assessed from the parliamentary debate was to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court in order to avoid flooding of Supreme Court with matters which do not raise any substantial question of public importance and recognizing that Tribunal is the final forum for the determination of facts. Under Order XXIV of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 a petition for leave to appeal from the judgment, decree or order of an Administrative Court or Service Tribunal shall specify succinctly in separate paragraphs, the substantial questions of law of public importance upon which leave is sought. What then is a question of public importance? In the case of Manzoor Elahi v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1975 SC 66), this Court held that "the term 'public' is invariably employed in contradistinction to the terms private or individual, and connotes, as an adjective, something pertaining to, or belonging to, the people, relating to a nation, state, or community. In other words, it refers to something which is to be shared or participated in or enjoy by the public-at-large, and is not limited or restricted to any particular class of the community." The judgment goes ahead to explain that "whatever else it may mean must include a purpose, that is an object or aim, in which the general interest of the community, as opposed to the particular interest of individuals, is directly and vitally concerned." In Suo Motu case No.13 of 2007 (PLD 2009 SC 217) this Court held that "public importance of a case is determined... on question affecting the legal rights and liberties of the people at large, even though the individual who may have brought the matter before the Court is of no significance". In Benazir Bhutto v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1988 SC 416), it was held that public importance should be viewed with reference to the freedom and liberties granted under the Constitution, their protection and invasion of these rights in a manner, which raises a serious question regarding their enforcement, irrespective of the fact whether such infraction of right, freedom or liberty is alleged by an individual or a group of individuals. In Sohail Butt v. Deputy Inspector General of Police (2011 SCMR 698) it was held that "public importance must include a purpose or aim in which general interest of the community as opposed to the particular interest of the individuals is directly and vitally concerned." In Watan Party v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2012 SC 292), this Court held that "it is settled that public importance must include a purpose or aim in which the general interest of the community as opposed to the particular interest of the individuals is directly and vitally concerned". Finally in Suo Motu Action regarding Islamabad - Rawalpindi Sit-in/Dharna case PLD 2019 SC 318 this Court held that public importance must involve the rights of the public.

10. To constitute "public importance," the matter must go substantially beyond the facts of the case. It is not sufficient that a question of law arises in the case, but whether the question of law transcends the facts of the individual case and is substantial enough to have a significant bearing on the public interest.

11. In the context of service laws a substantial question of law of public importance is a question that may arise out of a case but then surpasses the parties, to the case, and has an overarching effect on the public or a community or a class of civil servants. To determine what might constitute a substantial question of law of public importance under Article 212(3), a good test is to determine whether any decision by this Court in the matter will have a bearing on the public or on the rights of a community or segment of civil servants and will not be restricted to the parties to the case. The remedy under Article 212(3) is, therefore, not an appeal in the ordinary sense of the word but is a unique constitutional jurisdiction that is to be exercised if the question of law raised before the Court impinges on the rights of the public or a segment of public or a community of civil servants. Thus many questions of law (i) that involves interpretation of the law, rules, instructions, notifications or governmental policy; (ii) that has not been finally settled by the Supreme Court or is not free from difficulty or ambiguity or calls for discussion of alternative views[2] (iv) that highlights a state of uncertainty in the law, arising from a contradictory precedent or (v) that points out blatant abuse of due process, may pass for a substantial question of law of public importance. On the other hand a mere factual inter-party dispute, devoid of the nature of questions of law, mentioned above, will not attract the jurisdiction of this Court under Article 212(3) of the Constitution.

12. The framers of our Constitution by giving exclusivity to the constitutional jurisdiction under Article 212(3) also underlined that the Tribunal is the final forum of fact and the law (other than a substantial question of law of public importance, as discussed above). As a matter of background it is useful to remember that a civil servant has a remedial structure of in-house appeal or representation before the concerned authority and then the facility of appea1 before the Service Tribunal. This adjudicatory or dispute resolution process reaches finality at the Tribunal unless the aggrieved party can invoke the constitutional jurisdiction under Article 212(3) by raising substantial question of public importance.

13. In this case the question is whether a civil servant can unautiorizedly retain official accommodation beyond a period of six months without paying penal rent. Hence, the case requires interpretation of the Rules. This constitutes a substantial question of law of public importance because the decision by this Court would affect all those civil servants who are subject to the Accommodation

Allocation Rules, 2002. This case also highlights abuse of process and jurisdiction of the Tribunal, which is also a question of public importance and attracts the jurisdiction of this Court.

14. For the above reasons this appeal is allowed and impugned order dated 27.03.2010 passed by the Tribunal is set aside. Appellant Department is entitled to recover Standard Rent as per letter dated 24.01.2010 from respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Through leave of the Court, impugned herein is judgment dated 9.2.2015 of a learned division bench of Lahore High Court whereby appellant's conviction and sentence returned by a learned Anti Terrorism Court vide judgment dated 23.2.2012 is maintained.

2. Naveed alias Guddu, hereinafter referred to as the deceased, left home after receipt of a phone call at 7.30 p.m. on 22.8.2011. Upon failure to return, his disappearance was reported by his brother, Muhammad Rafique, PW-7. On 25.8.2011, the family received a phone call, demanding ransom of Rs.500,000/- in pursuance whereto the witnesses went to the designated place where they saw the appellant who decamped from the scene. The incident was reported to the police in consequence whereof the appellant was arrested on 26.8.2011 and upon his disclosure dead body of the abductee was retrieved, wrapped in a jute bag. It is in this backdrop that the appellant alongside Shahzad, co-accused were indicted before the Court; third accused Nadeem Hussain is still away from law. The learned Trial Judge while acquitting Shahzad co-accused from the charge convicted the appellant under Sections 201, 302(b), 365-A of Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 read with Section 7(e) of Anti Terrorism Act, 1997; he was sentenced to death on three counts along with five years' R.I. under Section 302 of the Code ibid with fine of Rs.5,000/- or to undergo four months' S.I. in lieu thereof.

3. Muhammad Rafique, PW-7, Muhammad Shehbaz, PW-9 and Fida Muhammad, PW-10 are prominent amongst the witnesses to drive home the charge. They have furnished details preceding as well as subsequent to deceased's disappearance. The investigating officer also collected cell phone data to establish conversations between the captor and the family. However, prosecution's reliance is primarily upon appellant's confessional statement dated 16.9.2011 before a judicial magistrate. It constitutes the mainstay.

4. Though the appellant when indicted claimed trial and retracted from his confessional statement during his examination under Section 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, nonetheless, on a careful examination we have found his confessional statement free from all taints. Seemingly voluntary without duress or inducement; inculpatory in nature the confessional statement reflects a complete and truthful narration of event leading to deceased's death. The learned Magistrate has taken due care to administer necessary warnings to the appellant and recorded each detail thereof in his own hand. It does not appear to have been fabricated to advance prosecution's case and thus can be squarely relied upon without any reflection on safe administration of criminal justice. It is by now well settled that a retracted confession can form basis for conviction if found voluntary and truthful. Retraction notwithstanding when examined in the totality of circumstances, the disclosure is synchronized with the events leading towards deceased's death and recovery of dead body on appellant's disclosure. These circumstances exclude every hypothesis of his innocence and thus the Courts below have rightly relied upon the confessional statement, there being no space to entertain any hypothesis of innocence. Guilty verdict calls for no interference; the appeal fails. However, in so far as question of quantum of sentence to be exacted from the appellant is concerned it requires reconsideration; in the totality of circumstances, it is unmistakably found that predominant purpose behind the crime was to extract ransom and it was in that process that the deceased lost his life due to suffocation and tranquilizer, excessively administered to subdue him; taken from this angle, alteration of death penalty into imprisonment for life on each count would be a conscionable wage in circumstances. Consequently, penalty of death is altered into imprisonment for life on each count with amounts of fine and compensation kept intact; sentences shall run concurrently with benefit of Section 382-B of the Code ibid. With the above modification, Criminal Appeal 133- L/2017 is dismissed.

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Gohar Zaman, Muhammad Afzal, Muhammad Ashraf, Babar, Zulfiqar Ali, Shiraz Ahmed, Asad Abbas, Muhammad Suleman, Muhammad Bashir, Arshad Bhatti, Haji Mushtaq and Muhammad Amjad, accused in a case of homicide, appeared before a learned Additional Sessions Judge within the precincts of District Courts, Gujrawnwala on 11-7-2009; posted for recording of evidence, the case was, however, adjourned for 17-7-2009 and it was soon thereafter, inside the court-room, the appellant alongside Muhammad Mushtaq, Haji Muhammad

Siddique, Qaisar Munir with two unknown persons, differently armed, emerged at the scene; they resorted to firing; the appellant, cited as a witness in the said case, with a .30 caliber pistol, fired upon Gohar Zaman and Arshad Bhatti followed by Muhammad Siddique who targeted Muhammad Ashraf, PW-14 while Muhammad Mushtaq and Qaisar Munir fired upon Muhammad Bashir, given up PW, and Muhammad Afzal, PW-12, respectively; they were joined by the unknown assailants; according to the crime report, lodged by Zeeshan Ilyas, PW-13, one Gogi was also shot during the occurrence. The assailants took to the heels except the appellant, apprehended at the spot and handed over to the police with two .30 caliber pistols, one found forensically wedded with three casings, secured during spot inspection. As the investigation progressed, Qaiser Munir and Haji Muhammad Siddique were let off; Muhammad Mushtaq, co-accused is still away from law. Prosecution is clueless about the unknown accused till date. The appellant alone was indicted before an Anti Terrorism Court; he was returned a guilty verdict with penalty of death on two counts, upheld by a learned Division Bench of Lahore High Court vide impugned judgment dated 10.02.2015 vires whereof are being assailed through leave of the Court.

2. Prosecution case, predominantly, is founded on common grounds; these include, enmity long raging between the two factions, hearing of the case, appearance of the deceased and the appellant being amongst the witnesses, on the fateful day, at the venue, a court-room as well as appellant's arrest therefrom. Though with some reticence, nonetheless, the appellant has not denied his presence during the episode albeit with the story of a most uncalled for provocation offered by the deceased. Three casings secured by the Investigating Officer though incommensurate with the number of alleged fire shots, nonetheless, were opined to have been fired from the weapon carried by the appellant. Totality of circumstances does not space any hypothesis other than appellant's guilt; he has rightly been convicted on the charge of homicide, however, quantum of sentence, notwithstanding the venue, warrants reconsideration. It is prosecution's own case that the appellant attended the Court to record his statement as a witness; the case was adjourned without recording of evidence and it is subsequent thereto that as many as six accused started firing upon the deceased and the PWs; two from amongst them have since been exonerated, never tried even through private complaint; Muhammad Mushtaq along with two unknown accomplices is still away from law; appellant's acquittal from the charge of attempted homicide has not been challenged. Appellant himself sustained injuries receipt whereof is denied by the prosecution witnesses. These circumstances cloud moments immediately preceding the occurrence into mystery, particularly when in the given background, the appellant had no exclusive motive, targeted upon the deceased. In this backdrop, as a cumulative impact, alteration of death penalty into imprisonment for life would not be unconscionable in circumstances. Consequently, penalty of death on both counts is altered into imprisonment for life; sentences shall run concurrently with benefit of Section 382-B of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. Though the aftermaths far from being benign, nonetheless, having no nexus with the situations and effects thereof, contemplated by Section 6 of the Anti Terrorism Act, 1997, appellant's conviction under section 7(a) thereof is not inconsonance with the law declared by this Court in the cases reported as Amjad Ali and others v. The State (PLD 2017 SC 661) and Farooq Ahmad v. The State and another (PLJ 2017 SC 408) and is, therefore, set aside. With the above modification, Criminal Appeal is dismissed.

JUDGMENT

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Muhammad Pervaiz, appellant is in receipt of a guilty verdict; he was indicted for committing qatl-e-amd of Kausar Bibi, no other than his better half; it is affirmed by the learned High Court vide impugned judgment dated 7.10.2013 vires whereof are being challenged through leave of the Court.

2. Prosecution case is structured on the statement of deceased's brother, Muhammad Arshad, PW; according to him, the marriage was on the rocks as the bride failed to bring dowry to the expectation of her in laws. Upon a message by the deceased, Muhammad Arshad, PW along with Mehmood, PW visited the former to take her back, however, upon threats by the appellant they preferred to stay overnight when in midst thereof they were attracted by the hue and cry to see the deceased being strangulated by the appellant with the assistance of Khalid co-accused; they attempted to rescue the deceased without success. Upon indictment, the accused claimed trial to confront prosecution evidence; they blamed dacoits to have murdered the deceased during the fateful night. While acquitting the co-accused, the learned trial Judge convicted the appellant under clause (b) of Section 302 of Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 and sentenced him to death with a direction to pay Rs.100,000/- as compensation or to undergo six month S.I. in the event of default, a view affirmed by the learned High Court albeit with alteration of death penalty into imprisonment for life with benefit of Section 382-B of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

3. Learned counsel for the appellant contends that the appellant could not have been convicted merely upon his failure to satisfactorily explain as to what befell upon his life during the fateful night. He adds that presence of witnesses is extremely doubtful and even otherwise cannot sustain the charge after they had been disbelieved qua identically placed co-accused; the bottom line is that it would be unsafe to maintain conviction. Contrarily, the learned Law Officer vehemently defends appellant's conviction on the ground that plea advanced by him being preposterous was rightly rejected which in retrospect established his presence at the spot, thus there was no space to entertain any hypothesis of his innocence.

4. Homicidal death is not in dispute; appellant's plea that dacoits intruded the household and strangulate the deceased has not found favour with the Courts below. The appellant has also not denied his presence, however these factors by themselves cannot hypothesize presumption of appellant's guilt in the absence of positive proof. Silence or implausible explanation cannot equate with failure within the contemplation of Article 121 of Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984, thus does not absolve the prosecution to drive home the charge by itself on the strength of positive proof. It would be grievously unsafe to convict suspects on presumptions or upon failure to establish their innocence. Possibilities are infinite and do not necessarily include the guilt alone.

A criminal case is to be essentially decided on the basis of evidence adduced by the prosecution. Once the witnesses had visited the deceased to take her back, apparently there was no occasion for them to hold in abeyance the purpose of their detour and in case they were present and in the next room, there was no compulsion for the appellant to do away with the deceased at the risk of retaliation or a certain prosecution. The script is far from being plausible and it is so viewed by the learned High Court itself in the following words "Presence of PWs may be suspicious at the time of occurrence . . . . ". It is astonishing that despite above observation, the High Court preferred to maintain the conviction. Suspicions are after all suspicions and cannot substitute the legal proof nor a suspect can be condemned on the basis of moral satisfaction in the absence of evidentiary certainty. Yet another circumstance to cast away the conviction is rejection of prosecution evidence qua Khalid co-accused. Role assigned to the acquitted co-accused is inexorably intertwined with appellant's alleged participation in the crime and thus even strongest corroboration, otherwise hopelessly lacking cannot rescue the charge. It would be unsafe to maintain the conviction, therefore by extending the benefit of doubt, Criminal Appeal No.37-L/2016 is allowed, impugned judgment is set aside. The appellant shall be released forthwith, if not required in any other case.

MWA/M-23/S Appeal allowed.

ORDER

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Muhammad Azhar Hussain, appellant in Criminal Appeal No. 11 -P of 2017, was tried along-side Al-Haj-ud-Din, petitioner in J.P. No.726 of 2017 for committing qatl-i-amd of Fida-ur-Rehman; they were convicted under clause (b) of Section 302 of Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 and sentenced to death with direction to pay compensation in the sum of Rs.100,000/-each or to undergo six months' S.I. in the event of default vide judgment dated 28.6.2014 upheld by the learned Peshawar High Court vide impugned judgment dated 19.4.2016; bound by a common thread these are being decided through this single judgment.

2. Fida-ur-Rehman, deceased, aged 4/5, went missing; he was spotted lying dead in a maize field. According to autopsy report dated 24.8.2012, his neck was found slit with sharp edge weapon; medical officer observed certain marks of resistance as well as a rounded small piece of glass in his hand. As the investigation progressed, the accused named above were hauled up by the police; they were produced before a Judicial Magistrate on 5.9.2012 when they, one by one, confessed the guilt; their confessional statements are prosecution's mainstay. It is alleged that both the accused were jointly carrying on with one Mst. Khadija and on the fateful day they went to visit her while she was alone; as they were busy in foreplay, the deceased surprised them; he threatened disclosure, however the accused persuaded him for silence in lieu of Rs. 20/-. Later in the day they again came across the child, followed him and finally intercepted near a maize field; they subdued the child, constricted his neck with the string and afterward slit it with a knife. During the trial, Saleema Bibi alias Naseem Bibi, mother of Muhammad Azhar Hussain, appellant appeared as PW-22; according to her statement, she saw Al-Haj-ud-Din while taking a small child in his lap heading towards the maize field; accused inquired from the lady about her son who according to her was about to set out to a different location. Amongst the array of witnesses, the prosecution has primarily relied upon the confessional statements to drive on the charge.

3. Learned counsel for the convicts contends that enormity of the crime notwithstanding, reliance on the confessional statements by the courts below was fraught with multiple errors, heavily impinging upon the principle of safe administration of criminal justice; according to him, the statements were inherently flawed; these were contradicted by prosecution's own witness, Saleema Bibi, PW-22, a dichotomy that escaped notice of the courts below. The learned Law Officer has vehemently defended the impugned judgments by highlighting the gruesome nature of the crime. According to him, there was no earthly reason either for the devastated family or the police to swap the real offenders; every hypothesis of their innocence stood excluded, concluded the learned Law Officer.

4. The fate of the prosecution's case is hinged upon confessional statements, made by the convicts before a Magistrate and it is on the basis of their disclosures that they have been handed down the ultimate corporal penalty, irreversible in nature and thus warrants a most careful scrutiny. Though examined separately, nonetheless their arrival before the Magistrate on the same day, one after another on 5.9.2012 is quite intriguing; two individuals in an extreme crisis situation, conducting themselves in a comfortable unison, both being in tune with the prosecution, reasonably excludes hypothesis of a voluntary disclosure, free from the taints of inducement or persuasion; it appears to be more a negotiated settlement rather than a volitional representation; there is a remarkable similarity in both the statements, in terms of sequential order as well as the pattern these were reduced into writing, otherwise surprisingly exhaustive. A person making his breast clean is not expected to be that expressive. The statements contain prosecution's encyclopedia with all the relevant details required to prosecute the case; it does not appear to be an exercise by a repentant to bring himself at peace with his conscious. Another predicament for the prosecution is conflict between testimony of Saleema Bibi, PW-22 with the confessions. Going by the later, both the convicts remained together right from intercepting the child to finally dumping him in the field whereas according to the former she saw Al-Haj-ud-Din alone while taking the child in his lap towards the field. This is also not in line with the disclosure that the accused first constricted his neck with the string before they jointly threw him in the field. These positions are irreconcilable; evidence of Saleema Bibi, PW-22 cannot be accepted without excluding confessional statements from consideration and vice versa. Similarly, in both the statements, the accused stated to have thrown weapon of offence, a churri in the river, however according to memo, exhibit PW-6/ 11, dated 4.9.2012 it was recovered with blood stains from inside the bushes a day before confessional statements were recorded; if Al-Haj-ud-Din had led to the recovery of weapon he had no occasion to omit this important investigative step in his exhaustive narrative and in case it is presumed as factually incorrect, would tremor the very basis of the confessions. We have also not felt comfortable with the printed form, purportedly used to administer warnings to the accused before recording of their statements. A confession may entail formidable consequences for an accused facing indictment and thus it is incumbent upon the Magistrate to ensure that the maker consciously comprehends the consequences of his choice and thus it is most important that the Magistrate himself, face to face, faithfully communicates to the accused all the relevant warnings, as contemplated by Section 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, a surer way to establish that the confession is free from all taints, thus we would not approve convenience procuring accused's signature on a printed format. On an overall analysis of the prosecution case, confessional statements cannot be relied upon without potential risk of error. In the absence of evidentiary certainty, it would be unsafe to maintain the convictions on moral satisfaction that certainly cannot equate with legal proof. The convicts are entitled to the benefit of doubt. Criminal Appeal No. 11-P of 2017 is allowed and as a natural corollary Jail Petition No.726 of 2017 is converted into appeal and allowed. Impugned judgments are set aside. They shall be set at liberty forthwith, if not required in any other case.

MWA/M-20/S Appeal accepted.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.--A raid, on the basis of secret information; led to the alleged recovery of intoxicating injections. Intoxicating liquid and "Phenvil injections (collectively referred to as "intoxicating substance") from the appellants. In this background they were booked in FIR No.2/2008 under sections 9(c) and 15 of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 ("Act"). After regular trial the appellants were acquitted of the charge. The ground that prevailed with the trial court was that the Reports of the Chemical Examiner failed to assess the percentage of morphine in the intoxicating substance in order to pass as a "narcotic drug," in violation of section 3 of the Act,hence the Reports were inconclusive and unreliable and could not sustain conviction. Additionally, the trial court also held that "Phenvil or pheniramine maleate did not fall under the definition of "psychotropic substance" under section 2(za) of the Act. Upon appeal before the High Court the judgment of the trial court was set aside and the case was remanded with the direction that fresh samples and fresh report of the Chemical Examiner be taken and a "fresh judgment" be passed in the case. Hence, these appeals with leave of the Court granted on 14.02.2017 to consider whether the High Court could assume the role of a prosecutor and fill the lacunas left by the parties during the trial.

2. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the record of the case with their able assistance. "Narcotic drug[1]" means "coca leaf, cannabis, heroin, opium, poppy straw and all manufactured drugs" while "manufactured drug"[2] includes:-

(i) All coca derivatives, medicinal hemp, opium derivatives, cannabis in any form and any mixture of stalks and flowering or fruiting tops of the Indian hemp plant (cannabis sativa L.), Acetic Anhydride; and

(ii) any other narcotic substance which the Federal Government may, by notification in the official Gazette made in pursuance of recommendations of any International Convention or otherwise, declare to be a manufactured drug.

"Opium[3]" means:-

(i) Poppy straw, that is to say, all parts of the poppy plant (Papaver somniferum or any other species of Papaver) after mowing, other than the seeds;

(ii) The spontaneously coagulated juice of capsules of poppy which has not been submitted to any manipulations other than those necessary for packing and transport; and

(iii) Any mixture, with or without natural materials, of any of the above forms of opium, but does not include any preparation containing not more than 0.2 per cent of morphine; (emphasis added)

"opium derivatives[4] " includes:-

(i) Medicinal opium, that is, opium which has undergone the process necessary to adapt it for medicinal use;

(ii) Prepared opium, that is, any product of opium obtained by any series of operations designed to transform opium into an extract suitable for smoking, and the dross or other residue remaining after opium is smoked;

(iii) Morphine, that is, the principal alkaloid of opium having the chemical formula C21H23NO5 and its salts;

(iv) Diacetylmorphine,that is, the semi-synthetic substance, also known as diamorphine or heroin having the chemical formula C21H23NO5 and its salts; and

(v) All preparations containing more than 0.2 per cent of morphine, or containing any diacetylmorphine.

3. Any mixture or preparation (liquid in this case) with any form of opium or opium derivative shall not pass for "opium" or "opium derivative" and finally as a "narcotic drug," if the quantity of morphine in the mixture or preparation is less than 0.2 percent. Morphine is the principal alkaloid of opium having the chemical formula C21H19NO3 and its salts[5] or an alkaloid extracted from opium to relieve moderate to severe pain,[6] used in medicine as an analgesic and sedative, although repeated use causes addiction.[7] Similarly, under sections 2(g) and 2(h) a percentage of cocaine is required in the mixture and preparations to constitute "coca derivative" or "coca leaf." The method of calculating percentages in the absence of any rules is given in proviso to section 3 of the Act which provides that one percent (1%) of a substance means a preparation in which one milliliter of the substance is contained in every one hundred milliliter of the preparation and so in proportion for any greater or less percentage. For a liquid preparation or liquid mixture to pass for opium or opium derivative, the liquid preparation or liquid mixture must have morphine in excess of 0.2 percent. Thus, the requirement of calculating the percentage of narcotic drug in a liquid preparation or mixture is mandatory as per section" 3 of the Act read with the definitional test under section 2 of the Act. See: Muhammad Imran v. State (2011 SCMR 1954) and Taimoor Khan v. State (2016 SCMR 621).

4. The three Reports of the Chemical Examiner, all dated 15.02.2008 (Ex-PK, Ex-PL, Ex-PN) show the following results:

| "Morphine detected in all samples" (Ex-PK) "Morphine detected in all above samples" (Ex-PL) "(i)-(iii) Morphine detected in all unlabeled glass ampules and unlabeled plastic bottle. (ii) Pheniramine Maleate is detected in the above bottle labeled with phenvil (Ex-PN) |

The Reports of the Chemical Examiner hopelessly fail to mention the percentage of morphine found in the intoxicating substance, leaving it uncertain whether it passes for a narcotic drug. This fatal omission makes the Reports of the Chemical Examiner inconclusive and unreliable to support conviction under the Act.

5. An important dimension of this case is the role of a criminal court, in an adversarial system of justice.[8] "The adversarial system is a two-sided structure under which criminal trial courts operate that pits the prosecution against the defence. Justice is done when the most effective and rightful adversary is able to convince the judge or jury that his or her perspective on the case is the correct one."[9] The fundamental construct of our criminal courts is modeled on an adversarial system of justice which decides on the strength of the evidence of the parties. However, in exceptional cases our criminal courts also exercise inquisitorial powers under certain provisions[10] of Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 (Cr.P.C) to secure the ends of justice,[11] however, these provisions are not attracted in the facts of the present case. The court being a neutral arbiter has to dispassionately appreciate, appraise, examine and weigh the evidence placed before: it, rather than by ignoring the evidence and embarking on a probing journey guided by emotions, sentiments arid sense of self-styled justice pegged on the lofty notion of societal reform. In an adversarial system the role of the judge is that of a neutral umpire, unruffled by emotions, a judge is to ensure fair trial between the prosecution and the defence on the basis of the evidence before it. The judge should not enter the arena so as to appear that he is taking sides. The court cannot allow one of the parties to fill lacunas in their evidence or extend a second chance to a party to improve their case or the quality of the evidence tendered by them. Any such step would tarnish the objectivity and impartiality of the court which is its hallmark. Such favoured intervention, no matter how well-meaning strikes at the very foundations of fair trial, which is now recognized as a fundamental right under Article 10-A of our Constitution.

6. In the present case the direction of the High Court for obtaining fresh samples of the alleged intoxicating substance and preparing a fresh report of the Chemical Examiner amounts to granting the prosecution a premium on its failure to put up a proper case in the first instance. Such judicial intervention is opposed to the adversary principle and offensive to the fundamental right of fair tria1[12] and due process[13] guaranteed under the Constitution. see Dildar v. State[14]; Painda Gul v. State[15] and State v. Amjad Ali.[16] The High Court has travelled beyond its lawful powers under section 423(1)(a) Cr.P.C. and has infact directed to conduct re-investigation or further investigation of the case, which is not permissible under the law.[17] Even otherwise, calling for fresh examination of the intoxicating substance at the appellate stage after all these years may frustrate the settled law[18] as to safe custody and safe transmission of the recovered substance making the report of the chemical examiner suspect and unreliable.

7. For the foregoing reasons, we allow these appeals and set aside the impugned judgment whereby the case was remanded to the trial court for retrial and restore the acquittal recorded by the trial court. These are the reasons for our the short order dated 10.05.2019, which is reproduced hereunder for convenience and completion of record:

> "For detailed reasons to follow, the instant criminal appeals are allowed. The impugned judgment of the learned High Court dated 27.01.2016 is set aside. Consequently the judgment by the learned trial Court dated 21.03.2009 is restored.

Stricture became accessible and remained in the public domain (as part of the judgment) for posterity. Subsequent exoneration of the judge in departmental disciplinary proceedings could not undo the damage already done, as the stricture continued to exist in the judgment and the mind of the public. Strictures did not restrain the judge from continuing as a judge but at the same time, shattered his confidence and weakened his performance. Judicial stricture was not something reformative and was a stigma thrust upon a judge with no formal legal recourse to undo it.

Supreme Court observed that it was desirable that the High Court, while performing its judicial function, avoided passing strictures regarding the ability, competence, integrity, and behaviour of the judge whose judgment was under scrutiny before it. Judge of the High Court, even if unhappy over the quality of the judgment under challenge, must not let go of judicial precaution and propriety and restraint from making a personal remark. Articulation, scholarship and legal reasoning of the judgment of the High Court, couched in moderation, temperance, and sobriety, would automatically highlight the error and mistake of the lower Court. High Court was not to assume the role of a critic of the personal attributes and abilities of the judge. Instead the High Court, maintaining its judicial majesty, was to focus only on the legal reasoning of the judgment under challenge. Passing strictures and publically rebuking, condemning and reproaching a judge did not sit well with the judicial character of the High Court. Similarly it was also inappropriate to summon a judge of the District Judiciary to court for a public reprimand, during the hearing of the case against his judgment, in open Court. Character of judicial determination by the High Court did not allow the court to go beyond and assess, evaluate and appraise the competence, diligence, conduct, integrity or temperament of a judge of the District Judiciary, other than judicial bias or malice if it was borne out from the record of the case and was essential for the determination of the lis. Equally, it was necessary for a judge of the District Judiciary to refer or distinguish the judgments of the superiori courts with care, caution and respect.

PLD 1996 SC 176 ref.

While it was not in the majesty, character, and dignity of the High Court or the justice system to pass judicial strictures and summon judges of the District Judiciary in open court, it was eminently within the constitutional domain of the High Court and indeed desirable that the High Court, where appropriate, exercised supervisory control over the District Judiciary through administrative disciplinary mechanisms. Power to supervise and control the District Judiciary was to be exercised by the High Court (Chief Justice and Judges of the Court) under Articles 202 and 203 of the Constitution while exercising its administrative/authority.

William G. Ross, Civility among Judges: Charting the Bounds of Proper Criticism by Judges of Other Judges, 51 F.L.A. L. R.E.V. 957, 974 (1999) ref.

Structure of service laws relating to the District Judiciary empowered the competent authority (the Chief Justice or the Administrative Committee of the High Court) to take disciplinary action against the judge. High Court had ways of expressing disapproval of judgments of the lower courts. In case inadvertent errors or irregularities of the lower courts were noticed by the High Court they could be brought to the notice of the judge concerned through a memorandum or a note addressed to the said judge by the High Court on the administrative side but not through the judgment, in exercise of its judicial function. Such notes or memorandums did not form part of the judgment but were separate administrative communiqu s delivered to the judge confidentially and also did not form part of the service dossier of the judge. However, in cases where Judge(s) of the High Court, espoused an opinion that the judge of the District Judiciary had exhibited grave incompetence or had misconducted himself in discharge of judicial duty and needed to be warned or proceeded against, the appropriate process was to inform the competent authority on the administrative side though a confidential note addressed to the Chief Justice of the Court, along with copies of the relevant judgment(s), and then leaving it to the discretion of the competent authority to take appropriate disciplinary action against the judge concerned. Such discreet and confidential process was consistent with the deliberative character of the judicial system.

Appellant in person.

Barrister Qasim Wadud, Addl. A.G. Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Hasan Raza, Senior Civil Judge and Khalid Rehman, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 2nd May, 2019.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The appellant before us is a judge, currently working as Additional District and Sessions Judge, Peshawar. She is aggrieved of the strictures recorded against her by the High Court in its judgment dated 26.06.2014 passed in Crl.A.No.633-P of 2012. She prays that these strictures, being uncalled for, harsh and impermissible in law, be expunged from the judgment of the High Court. Leave was granted by this Court to consider this question on 26.09.2017.

2. We have heard the appellant and the counsel for the respondents at some length. Brief background in which the strictures were recorded against the appellant in the judgment is that case FIR No. 97 dated 19.08.2003 was registered against M/s. Murad Gul, Hazir Bahadur and Khan Bahadur under sections 302/324 read with section 34 P.P.C. in Police Station, Nizampuir, District Nowshera for the murder of one Ghulam Haider. Initially, accused Murad Ali was arrested, who alone was tried and convicted by the trial court. On appeal his conviction was set aside and he was acquitted by the High Court. Later, the remaining two accused were also arrested and were tried separately. The trial court, presided by the appellant, convicted them and on appeal, through the judgment in question, the High Court acquitted them of the charge on the ground that similar evidence was disbelieved against the co-accused (Murad Ali) who had already been acquitted. In this case, the trial court presided by the appellant held that the evidence was disbelieved against the co-accused due to certain infirmities qua him (Murad Ali), but regarding the two accused before her, the evidence was firm and confidence-inspiring; hence, the appellant convicted and sentenced them to imprisonment for life, despite earlier acquittal of their co-accused by the High Court. This background resulted in the following observations and remarks by the High Court against the appellant, recorded in the judgment dated 26.06.2014:

"15. We have gone through the impugned judgment of the Trial Court, but did not find any reference from which it may impliedly be inferred that the Trial Court has probably applied the principle of sifting the grain from the chaff. There is no reference to any particular piece of evidence to differentiate the role of the appellants from that of acquitted co-accused. Rather, the learned Trial Judge, namely, Miss Nusrat Yasmin, despite having knowledge of acquittal of co-accused Murad Ali by this Court on the same set of evidence and knowing about finality of findings of this Court, while making unnecessary discussion on section 34, P.P.C. like alien to the law and having no knowledge about the actual essence and application of section 34, P.P.C., labored hard for convicting the appellants by passing contemptuous observations (sic) language against the High Court. The Trial Judge has failed to distinguish the role of the present appellants from that of acquitted co-accused or to point out any new evidence against them. If she while discussing section 34 P.P.C., has held the appellants vicariously liable for single injury on the person of the deceased, then at the same time, not only the appellants are charged for said single injury, but also the acquitted co-accused because general role of firing has been attributed to the appellants and acquitted accused, without attributing that single injury to any one of them. So in such circumstances, what about the acquitted co-accused? The learned Trial Court has not discussed that aspect of the case. Trial Judge while violating the mandate of law and ignoring the sphere of judicial ethic and her duties, has acted like a higher Court, treating this Court as a subordinate Court by passing disgracing language. The relevant part of her observations made in the judgment is re-produced below:--

'As far as the acquittal of co-accused is concerned, it may be added here that he has been acquitted on certain minor discrepancies occurring in the statements of the PWs examined during the said trial and it cannot be accepted as a universal principle that once an evidence was not accepted qua one accused, it can never be accepted against another accused, against whom the case has been proved to the hilt. It is also worth mentioning here that in the trial of acquitted co-accused, line of cross-examination over the statement of complainant was quite different and it was certain minor lapses in the cross-examination of the complainant which persuaded the Hon'ble High Court to acquit the said co-accused, however, in the instant trial no such lapses can be seen in the statements of the PWs including the complainant and eye-witness, who have furnished very straight forward and trustworthy account of the occurrence and have fully established the prosecution case against the accused facing trial.'

Underlines are for emphasis.

16. We have scrutinized the testimony of complainant and PW Noor Shah Gul in the earlier part of our judgment, from perusal of which, one can better understand their credibility and truthfulness. The learned Trial Judge, has traversed all the limits of judicial ethics by passing such contemptuous observations against the Higher Court, which on one hand, shows her meager knowledge about the law, while on the other hand, her disrespect towards the higher Judiciary, and such exercise on the part of a Judicial Officer, amounts to professional misconduct, which being highly deplorable cannot be countenanced.

17. Additional Registrar (Judicial) of this Court is directed to send copy of the judgment to the Registrar, for proceedings the Judicial Officer under the Government Servants (Efficiency and Disciplinary) Rules, 1973, for misconduct and showing disregard towards the Higher Judiciary, with intimation to this court. Additional Registrar (Judicial) shall circulate copy of the judgment in subordinate Judiciary of the Province for guidance."

3. The question before us is, whether it is befitting and appropriate for the High Court to record judicial stricture (i.e., a stricture recorded in a judgment) against a judge of the District Judiciary relating to his or her ability, conduct, integrity, diligence, behaviour, temperament and competence, while examining his or her judgment? Or can only address these concerns through administrative disciplinary proceedings by invoking its supervisory jurisdiction under the Constitution, the Rules and Orders of the High Court and the law?

4. High Court, under our Constitution, enjoys both judicial and administrative powers and functions. Judicial powers are drawn from the jurisdiction enjoyed by the High Court under the Constitution or the law. Article 175 of the Constitution declares that "no court shall have any jurisdiction save as is or may be conferred on it by the Constitution or by or under any law." The High Court enjoys original, appellate and revisional jurisdiction under various provisions of law and the Constitution and while exercising these jurisdictions, the High Court enjoys the power to modify, set aside or uphold the judgment of the courts below. As a matter of routine, the High Court comes across orders of the lower court, which are not justified either in law or in fact, and modifies them or sets them aside. The concept of appeal and revision to a higher forum presumes that a judge inspite of discharging his or her duties to the best of his abilities and capacity may still error make a mistake. "A judge who has not committed an error is yet to be born."[1] The High Court while adjudicating a lis is free to examine all aspects of the case that are necessary and integral for the determination of the case and this includes, in a particular case, bias or malice on the part of the judge of the District Judiciary, if the record of the case supports it. This, at best, will result in setting aside the impugned judgment on the ground of bias or mala fide. The High Court, while exercising constitutional, appellate or revisional jurisdiction under various laws is to judicially examine and review the orders and judgments of the courts below on questions of law and facts. What is under examination on the judicial side is the legal reasoning behind the order or the judgment. Error, if any, in the legal reasoning, application of law or appraisal of evidence by the courts below, is rectified by the High Court, in accordance with the law, which may include the ground of bias or malice. Stricture recorded in a judgment, on the other hand, is "a severe" and a "sharp criticism or a censorious remark[2]" and is akin to a "piece of censure[3]" and passes for a "critical remark"[4] regarding the conduct, integrity, diligence, behaviour, temperament, and competence of a judge. Stricture becomes accessible and remains in the public domain (as part of the judgment) for posterity. Subsequent exoneration of the judge in departmental disciplinary proceedings cannot undo the damage already done, as the stricture continues to exist in the judgment and the mind of the public. Strictures do not restrain the judge from continuing as a judge but at the same time, shatter his confidence and weaken his performance. There is nothing reformative about a judicial stricture and is a stigma thrust upon a judge with no formal legal recourse to undo it. Public disgrace suffered at the hands of the judicial strictures remains in the public memory, as if, etched in stone.[5] Fazal Karim J., a distinguished judge of this Court, in Muhammad Mansha v. The State[6], observed:

"2. The subordinate Courts or the inferior Courts as they are sometimes called are an integral part of the judicial system of our country. The description "inferior Courts", or "inferior tribunal" is a categorising and not a derogatory description. Such Courts or tribunals "are not inferior in the doing of justice; nor in the judges who man them, nor in the advocates who plead in them" (Lord Denning in 'Attorney-General v. B.B.C. (1981) A.C. 303, 313). The rule of law depends upon public confidence and public acceptance of the judicial system; therefore, anything which tends to undermine that confidence in the judicial system must be strongly discountenanced. It is for these reasons that we feel that the observations in the order of the learned Judge in the High Court that there were some extraneous considerations which weighed with the learned Additional Sessions Judge for granting bail to Mansha and the direction in para. 9 of the judgment that "Mr. Ghulam Mustafa Shahzad, Additional Sessions Judge, Sheikhupura to appear in person before this Court on 14-11-1995" should not have been made. The sweeping condemning observation that the learned Additional Sessions Judge was moved, in making the impugned order, by "extraneous considerations" and the direction referred to above, must necessarily shake the public confidence' at least the confidence in that officer of the people of the district where he is for the time being serving; it is the more serious because the officer had had no opportunity of explaining his position before the observation was made."

Therefore, it is desirable that the High Court, while performing its judicial function, avoids passing strictures regarding the ability, competence, integrity, and behaviour of the judge whose judgment is under scrutiny before it. A judge of the High Court, even if unhappy over the quality of the judgment under challenge, must not let go of judicial precaution and propriety and restraint from making a personal remark. The articulation, scholarship and legal reasoning of the judgment of the High Court, couched in moderation, temperance, and sobriety, will automatically highlight the error and mistake of the lower Court. The High Court is not to assume the role of a critic of the personal attributes and abilities of the judge. Instead the High Court, maintaining its judicial majesty, is to focus only on the legal reasoning of the judgment under challenge. Passing strictures and publically rebuking, condemning and reproaching a judge does not sit well with the judicial character of the High Court. It is equally inappropriate to summon a judge of the District Judiciary to court for a public reprimand, during the hearing of the case against his judgment, in open Court. The character of judicial determination by the High Court does not allow the court to go beyond and assess, evaluate and appraise the competence, diligence, conduct, integrity or temperament of a judge of the District Judiciary, other than judicial bias or malice if it is borne out from the record of the case and is essential for the determination of the lis. Needless to mention, that it equally necessary for a judge of the District Judiciary to refer or distinguish the judgments of the superiors courts with care, caution and respect. The "judicial powers" enjoyed by the High Court are only to examine the legality of the order or judgment/decree passed by the judge of the District Judiciary. The observations of this Court made in Abdul Khaliq v. Khan Bahadur[7] may advantageously be referred in this regard. This Court observed:

"3. The complainant filed a revision application before the Bench of Lahore High Court at Rawalpindi and the learned Judge in Chamber vide order dated 20-11-1995 impugned before us in this petition has cancelled the bail. Perusal of the impugned order shows that the learned Judge of the High Court in Chamber had called the Magistrate and asked from him as to why had [he] granted bail in that case. This amounts to reprimand and we do not approve such action by the Judges of the superior Courts. If judicial order is found not to have been passed in accordance with law, it can be set aside by the upper forum which is competent to do so. Even the learned Judge in the High Court could have set aside the order according to law, if he came to such conclusion, without calling the Magistrate with a view to reprimand him." (emphasis supplied)

5. While it is not in the majesty, character, and dignity of the High Court or the justice system to pass judicial strictures and summon judges of the District Judiciary in open court, it is eminently within the constitutional domain of the High Court and indeed desirable that the High Court, where appropriate, exercises supervisory control over the District Judiciary through administrative disciplinary mechanisms.[8] The power to supervise and control the District Judiciary is to be exercised by the High Court (Chief Justice and Judges of the Court) under Articles 202 and 203 of the Constitution while exercising its administrative authority. This constitutional responsibility vests in the High Court and not in a judge of a High Court exercising judicial power. The power to supervise and control is actualized through High Court Rules and Orders and service laws that govern the judges of the District Judiciary. The structure of service law[9] relating to the District Judiciary empowers the competent authority (the Chief Justice or the Administrative Committee of the High Court) to take disciplinary action against the judge.

6. High Court has ways of expressing disapproval of judgments of the lower courts. In case inadvertent errors or irregularities of the lower courts are noticed by the High Court they can be brought to the notice of the judge concerned through a memorandum or a note addressed to the said judge by the High Court on the administrative side but not through the judgment, in exercise of its judicial function. It is important to refer to Rule 4 of Part-A, Chapter-1 of the Rules and Orders of the Lahore High Court[10.] (Volume IV) which provides as under:

"4. Appellate Courts should point out to lower Courts errors and irregularities.-It is very desirable that Appellate Courts should apart from disposing of appeals judicially, bring to the notice of subordinate Courts errors or irregularities in procedure which may be observed in the course of hearing appeals. Unnecessary adjournments; undue delay in disposing of cases; omission to hear cases on the days fixed; too harsh a use of the summary procedure allowed by law in cases in which defaults in attendance, or in producing evidence or the like, occur; failure to examine thoroughly the parties and to arrive at an intelligent appreciation of the points in dispute, and similar matters should always be brought to the notice of officers concerned in a note or memorandum separate from the judgment."
(emphasis supplied)

The above Rule shows that in cases of inadvertent lapses, errors or mistakes committed by the judges of the District Judiciary, which are condonable, the judges of the High Court may point them out to the judge of the District Judiciary through an administrative note or memorandum, maintaining a correctional approach. This also passes for a piece of elderly advice, guidance and counselling of the judge of the District Judiciary by the High Court. The note or memorandum do not form part of the judgment but are separate administrative communiqu s delivered to the judge confidentially and also do not form part of the service dossier of the judge.

7. However, in cases where Judge(s) of the High Court, espouses an opinion that the judge of the District Judiciary has exhibited grave incompetence or has misconducted himself in discharge of judicial duty and needs to be warned or proceeded against, the appropriate process is to inform the competent authority on the administrative side through a confidential note addressed to the Chief Justice of the Court, along with copies of the relevant judgment(s), and then leaving it to the discretion of the competent authority to take appropriate disciplinary action against the judge concerned. This discreet and confidential process is consistent with the deliberative character of the judicial system.

8. We, therefore, hold that High Court should not pass strictures in a judgment against a judge of the District Judiciary or summon a judge in judicial proceedings, relating to his or her judgment, for public reprimand in open court. The course open to the High Court is on the administrative side and the judge(s) of the High Court hearing the case, can apprise the Chief Justice of the Court through a confidential administrative note highlighting the grave illegalities, irregularities and improprieties noticed, leaving it to the Chief Justice or the Administrative Committee of the High Court, as the case may be, to take an appropriate disciplinary action against the judge of the District Judiciary.

9. For the above reasons, we expunge the strictures recorded against the appellant in the impugned judgment dated 26.06.2014 passed by the Peshawar High Court in Crl.A.No.633-P of 2012. They shall not form part of the service record of the appellant or in any manner influence the competent authority against the appellant judge in her service matters. This appeal is allowed in these terms.

10. The Assistant Registrar of the Peshawar Branch Registry of this Court shall ensure that a copy of this judgment is dispatched to the Registrars of all High Courts, who shall circulate it among all Judges of the respective High Court, for their information.

11. It is clarified that this judgment is restricted to judicial strictures passed by High Court against a judge of the District Judiciary while performing his or her judicial function.

MWA/N-12/S Appeal allowed.

(d) Punjab Waqf Properties Ordinance (IV of 1979) ---

----Ss. 3(1), 15 & 17,---Punjab Waqf Properties (Administration) Rules, 2002, Rr. 4, 5 & 7---Waqf property---Chief Administrator Auqaf---Preparation of scheme---Control, management, development and maintenance of waqf properties by the Chief Administrator Auqaf --- Scope and mechanism---Administration and development of waqf property by the Chief Administrator Auqaf under the Punjab Waqf Properties Ordinance, 1979 ('the Ordinance') was through the mode and mechanism of schemes, with the singular object of advancing and maximizing the wishes of the wakif or the religious, pious and charitable purposes recognized by Islam---Scheme under S.15 of the Ordinance was, therefore, a strategic plan, a road map, a financial feasibility or a business plan for the administration and development of the waqf property, driven and directed by the objectives settled by the wakif or as given under the law---While the word "administration" in S.15, signified the overall control, management and maintenance of the waqf properties, the expression "development" enjoined upon the Chief Administrator Auqaf to expand, evolve and enlarge the scope of charitable work of the waqf with changing times---Scheme to be settled by the Chief Administrator Auqaf must not only carry a plan of action or a programme for the administration of the waqf properties but also the stratagem and vision for its development, evolution and future growth---Chief Administrator Auqaf must consider, at all time, the best use of the waqf property was to achieve its noble objectives, keeping in view the needs of the time and that of an evolving society---Chief Administrator Auqaf in settling a scheme must not lose sight of such central objective of the scheme and must always remain cognizant of the historical significance of waqf and how it contributed to the building of Islamic civilization; through which many mosques, schools, and educational centres were built alongwith libraries, scientific research centres and other fields in different walks of life, which gave way to the training of many scientists, researchers, inventors, and intellectuals---To draw up a scheme, therefore, required the Chief Administrator Auqaf to have sufficient expertise in management, administration, finance, accounts, marketing, planning, development, policy and in running of public charities---Chief Administrator should also be supported by informed and expert recommendations of the qualified managers and administrators appointed under the Ordinance---Waqf property could either be put to use to serve a religious, pious or charitable cause directly i.e., by running and managing a shrine or a khanqah or by establishing a school, college, university, hospital, research and training centres, etc for the general public utility and welfare of the society, either free or at subsidized rates; or indirectly, by leasing it out for purposes closer to the objectives of the waqf---Only as an exception and in the absence of any viable option to lease the property out for purposes closer to the objectives of the waqf, could the waqf property be leased out for commercial purposes---Scheme prepared by Chief Administrator must weigh, evaluate and discuss alternatives when leasing out waqf property and preference should always be given to lease out waqf property for purposes that were more akin or close to the wishes of the wakif or the objectives given under the law, including charitable purposes---Both the direct or indirect use of waqf property must be justified, with reasons, to be laid out in the scheme that was to be settled and sanctioned by the Chief Administrator Auqaf.

----Ss. 15(2) & 17---Punjab Waqf Properties (Administration) Rules, 2002, R. 7---Waqf property---Part of waqf property leased out for commercial purposes by the Chief Administrator Auqaf without preparation of a scheme---Legality---Chief Administrator Auqaf granted lease of subject waqf property to the petitioner for setting up a petrol pump, on a monthly rent of Rs. 4,000/- per month for a period of 30 years---Descendants of the original dedicator (waqif) challenged the said grant on the ground that the lease offended the object of the waqf and was violative of the provisions of the Punjab Waqf Properties Ordinance, 1979 ('the Ordinance') and the Rules framed thereunder---High Court set aside the grant of lease for setting up a petrol pump holding that the trust property could not lawfully be given to the petitioner for establishment of a petrol pump, the grant of lease for 30 years was illegal and the land in question being a playground attached to a school could not be put to a different use---Held, that only as an exception and in the absence of any viable option to lease the property out for purposes closer to the objectives of the waqf, could the waqf property be leased out for commercial purposes---In the present case, the proposal for grant of lease of subject waqf property for setting up of a petrol pump did not form part of a scheme, that was to be prepared by the Chief Administrator Auqaf for administration of the waqf property---In fact no scheme had been submitted with the Court---Summary put up for the lease of waqf property (as in the present case) to set-up a petrol pump in isolation of the other factors and considerations, without an overall plan or a road map, did not constitute a scheme, envisaged under the Ordinance---Several questions and points needed to be explained in the scheme such as why was the waqf property required to be put on lease; why for a petrol pump and not for any other purpose more akin to the objectives of the waqf; why for a meagre rental of Rs

4,000/- per month and that too for a period of 30 years; why allegedly in a playground abutting a school; whether other alternatives were discussed and weighed by the Chief Administrator Auqaf; whether the waqf was in a deficit or loss, and how was the rental money to be utilized for the advancement of the objectives of the waqf---In the absence of a well thought out scheme, sanction for lease of any waqf property could not be permitted---Grant of lease of waqf property for the setting up of a petrol pump to the petitioner without there being settlement of a proper scheme, and in the absence of any plausible reasons for extending the lease beyond the statutory period given under R.7 of Punjab Waqf Properties (Administration) Rules, 2002 ('the Rules), was offensive to the provisions of the Ordinance and Rules, and hence illegal---Supreme Court directed that the Chief Administrator Auqaf, may lease out waqf property, in future, but after settlement and sanction of the scheme, in the manner provided under the Ordinance and the Rules---Petitions for leave to appeal were dismissed.

(f) Punjab Waqf Properties Ordinance (IV of 1979) ---

----S. 15---Punjab Waqf Properties (Administration) Rules, 2002, Rr.4, 5 & 7---Waqf property---Chief Administrator Auqaf---Preparation of scheme---Judicial review---Scope---Scheme settled for the administration and development of waqf properties was a manifestation of the discretion exercised by the Chief Administrator Auqaf, in the best interest of the waqf under the law and was, therefore, always open to judicial review by the courts.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Waqf or religious endowment for the Shrine and Khanqah of Hazrat Makhdoom Abdul Rasheed Haqqani was created in the year 1908[1] over land ("waqf property") situated in tehsil and district Multan. In the year 1950, a school was also established on a portion of the said waqf property and subsequently, in 1960, the Chief Administrator Auqaf took over the said waqf property under the erstwhile Punjab Waqf Properties Ordinance, 1959 vide notification dated 23.05.1960. An amended schedule of the said waqf property was issued on 24.07.1973 under the Punjab Waqf Properties Ordinance, 1979 ("Ordinance") showing the total area of land constituting waqf property as 202 acres and 4 marlas.

2. The question before us is the legality of the grant of lease of waqf property (4 kanals) by the Chief Administrator Auqaf to the petitioner for setting up a petrol pump, on a monthly rent of Rs. 4,000/- per month for a period of 30 years. The descendants of the original dedicator (waqif) challenged the said grant through a constitutional petition, on the ground that the lease offends the object of the waqf and is violative of the provisions of the Ordinance and the Rules framed thereunder. The High Court set aside the grant of lease for setting up a petrol pump vide judgment dated 10.02.2010 holding that the trust property could not lawfully be given to the petitioner for establishment of a petrol pump, the grant of lease for 30 years is illegal and the land in question being a playground attached to a school cannot be put to a different use. The Division Bench of the High Court upheld the judgment in appeal vide impugned Order dated 29.01.2013. Hence, the instant petitions.

3. Learned counsel for the petitioners vehemently argued that the department enjoys the power under the Ordinance and the Punjab Waqf Properties (Administration) Rules, 2002 ("Rules") to lease out a portion of waqf property for setting up a petrol pump and the department has fully complied with the Rules for doing so and prayed that the judgment of the Courts below be set aside.

4. On the other hand, learned counsel for the respondents have argued that lease of the waqf property for setting up a petrol pump offends the provisions of the Ordinance and the Rules. Besides, it is also against public interest as a petrol pump is being proposed to be set up in a playground which is adjacent to a school. He supported the judgments of the Courts below.

5. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at some length and have gone through the record and the law on the subject. The legal questions involved in the case are whether a part of waqf property can be leased out for commercial purposes? And if so, what is the mode, manner and procedure available to the Chief Administrator Auqaf for sanctioning such a lease under the Ordinance and the Rules? In order to meaningfully answer the above legal questions, we need to first consider the concept of waqf in Islam; its historical importance; its purpose and utility today and the scope of administration and development of waqf properties by the Chief Administrator Auqaf under the Ordinance.

Waqf: meaning and concept

6. Waqf and its plural form, auqaf, are derived from the Arabic root verb, waqafa, which means "to stop" or "to hold."[2] When the word is employed in a legal sense with regard to a piece of land or a building, it signifies that henceforth that "property" is "stopped." In theory, it can never again change hands by inheritance, sale or seizure. An individual creating a waqf, known in Arabic as the "waqif," divests him or herself of the formal rights to possession, but retains the power to appoint a custodian i.e., a "mutawali" (literally "one who is trusted"), who manages the property dedicated[3]. Waqf is an inalienable trust[4] and is the granting or dedication of property in trust for a pious purpose.[5] D.F. Mullah, in his compilation of principles of Muhammadan Law, has defined "waqf" to mean the permanent dedication by a person professing the Mussalman [Muslim] faith of any property for any purpose recognized by the Mussalman law as religious, pious or charitable.[6]" "Waqf signifies the extinction of the proprietor's ownership in the thing dedicated and the detention of the thing in the implied ownership of God, in such a manner that its profits may revert to or be applied for the benefit of mankind.[7]" "Waqf Property" is defined in section 2(e) of the Ordinance in the following manner:-

"Waqf Property means property of any kind permanently dedicated by a person professing Islam for any purpose recognized by Islam as religious pious, or charitable....

Origins of Waqf in Islam

7. Although the word "waqf" is not specifically mentioned in the Holy Quran, yet there are many verses[8] which inspire Muslims to donate and give charity, to obtain piety, righteousness and fore mostly, the closeness and love of the Allah Almighty. A hadith quoted by Hazrat Abu Hurairah (Allah be pleased with him) is usually referred by the Islamic scholars as the basis of the institution of "waqf" in Islam. He reported Allah's Messenger, Mohammad (may peace be upon him) as saying: "when a man dies, all his acts come to an end, but three; recurring charity, or knowledge (by which people) benefit, or a pious son who prays for him (for the deceased)[9]." Waqf is the best form of a continuous charity as the dedicated property earns for the dedicators continuous good deeds even after his death. It is this understanding that motivates the Muslims to promote this religious social-welfare institution. Syed Ameer Ali, a great judge and jurist of the sub-continent (Indo-Pak) speaking for the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Vidya Varuthi v. Blusami (AIR 1922 PC 123) observed:

"13. But the Mahommedan law relating to trusts differs fundamentally from the English law. It owes its origin to a rule laid down by the Prophet of Islam; and means "the tying up of property in the ownership of God the Almighty and the devotion of the profits for the benefit of human beings." When once it is declared that a particular property is wakf, or any such expression is used as implies wakf, or the tenor of the document shows, ... that a dedication to pious or charitable purposes is meant, the right of the wakif is extinguished and the ownership is transferred to the Almighty " (emphasis underlined)

8. Hazrat Ibn-e-Umar (may Allah be pleased with him) reported: "Umar acquired a land at Khaibar. He came to Allah's Apostle (may peace be upon him) and sought his advice in regard to it. He said: Allah's Messenger, I have acquired land in Khaibar. I have never acquired property more valuable for me than this, so what do you command me to do with it? Thereupon he (Allah's Messenger) said: If you like, you may keep the corpus intact and give its produce as Sadaqa. So, Umar gave it as Sadaqa declaring that property must not be sold or inherited or given away as gift. And Umar devoted it to the poor, to the nearest kin, and to the emancipation of slaves, and in the way of Allah and guests .. "[10]. Thus, these two traditions of the Holy Prophet (peace be upon him) are commonly considered providing the express basis for the emergence of waqf in Islam.

Role of Waqf in the development of Islamic Civilization

9. It is not an exaggeration to claim that the waqf created in perpetuity has provided foundation for much of what is considered "Islamic civilization.[11]" Waqf fulfilled a crucial gap between the resources available with an emerging State and the need of a growing community in the early days of Islam, and in the later years became a main source for various public services. The Waqf contributed to the building of Islamic civilisation; through which many mosques, schools, and educational centres were built along with libraries, scientific research centres and other fields in different walks of life. Throughout the history of the Islamic world, such settlements provided for many of the spiritual and temporal wants of Muslims.[12] Waqf played an important role in establishing a flourishing civilization. It created a comprehensive scientific and cultural renaissance. These funds were the main resource for schools, scientific centres and libraries, which gave way to the training of many scientists, researchers, inventors, and intellectuals. Therefore, Waqf is described as the most important institution which provided the foundation for Islamic civilization as it was interwoven with the entire religious life and the social economy of Muslims. It covered almost all the needs of life during the early period of Islamic civilization; encompassing health, education, basic infrastructures, business and commercial activities, job creation, food provision for the hungry and livestock, shelter provision for the poor and needy, and supporting the agricultural and industrial sectors without any cost to the government[13]. Waqf is in fact a comprehensive mechanism of public finance that is capable of bringing upon economic progress as well as social development.

10. With this religious and historical perspective of waqf in Islam, we now proceed to examine the legal framework regarding the administration and management of the waqf properties under the Ordinance and the Rules.

Scheme of law under the Ordinance and the Rules

11. The preambular purpose of the Ordinance is to provide for the proper management and administration of waqf properties in the Province of the Punjab. Waqf property is defined[14] to mean any kind of property permanently dedicated by a person professing Islam for any purpose recognized by Islam as religious, pious or charitable. Property used for the relief of the poor and the orphans, education, workshop, medical relief, maintenance of shrines or for any other object of charitable, religious or pious nature or of general public utility is deemed to be charitable purposes under the Ordinance.[15] The income from boxes placed at shrines and offerings, subscriptions or articles presented at the shrine and property permanently dedicated for the purposes of mosque, shrine, takia, khankah, dargah is deemed to be waqf property. All the waqf properties in the Province vest in the Chief Administrator of Auqaf for the Province appointed by the Government including all the rights, assets, debts, liabilities and obligations relating thereto.[16] Chief Administrator Auqaf is a corporation sole and enjoys perpetual succession and can sue or be sued in its corporate name[17]. Chief Administrator Auqaf enjoys the power to take over and assume the administration, control, management and maintenance of the waqf property.[18]

12. Under section 15 of the Ordinance, the Chief Administrator Auqaf, is to settle schemes for the administration and development of a waqf property and through the settlement of schemes the Chief Administrator is to give effect to such wishes of the waqif, as can be ascertained, and to which effect can be reasonably given. Under the Punjab Waqf Properties (Administration) Rules, 2002, ("Rules 2002") the Chief Administrator Auqaf, after taking control of the waqf property appoints a Manager to administer, control, manage and maintain the waqf property on behalf of the Chief Administrator. The Manager is to prepare scheme for the waqf property to be settled by the Chief Administrator. The scheme must honour the wishes of the wakif, as can be ascertained and in the absence of any evidence, the waqf property shall be used for the purpose for which it has been used or for any purpose recognized by Islam as religious, pious or charitable.

13. Under section 17, there are two broad purposes for utilization of the waqf property; (i) the purpose for which it (waqf property) was dedicated or has been used; and (ii) for any (other) purpose recognized by Islam as religious, pious or charitable, as the Chief Administrator may deem fit. The Chief Administrator Auqaf is to maintain a complete record of all the properties under his control and management and keep accounts of income and expenditure of such properties including expenditure on the Chief Administrator and his establishment. All moneys are credited to a fund, called Auqaf Fund, which is under the control of and operated upon by the Chief Administrator subject to general supervision of the Government. The accounts maintained by the Chief Administrator are to be audited at the end of each financial year and the Audit Report with the comments of the Chief Administrator is to be laid before the Government[19]. The Punjab Waqf Properties (Accounts) Rules, 1982 provide that the Auqaf Fund shall be audited once a year by the Local Fund Audit Department of the Government.

14. Sections 9 and 19 of the Ordinance recognise that the waqf property can be put out on lease as section 9 provides for termination of lease and resumption of tenancy in cases of breach of the agreement and section 19 deals with recovery of rent or lease money as arrears of land revenue in case of default. While Rule 7 of the Rules 2002 framed under section 26(2)(c) specifically deals with terms and conditions on which waqf property may be leased out. However, any lease of waqf property shall be a part of the scheme approved by the Chief Administrator Auqaf and the "directions" given in Rule 7 are to be read as part of the scheme. The period of lease shall be for one year and not more than three years but can be extended for another two years with the approval of Chief Administrator Auqaf. Lease can also be granted for a longer period if Chief Administrator Auqaf is of the opinion that it is in the best interest of the waqf property.

15. One of the core statutory obligations[20] of the Chief Administrator Auqaf is to settle a Scheme for the administration and development of the waqf property. In settling a scheme the Chief Administrator Auqaf is to honour the wishes of the waqif, as can be ascertained and to which effect can be given reasonably.[21] Otherwise, the Scheme is to advance purposes recognized by Islam as religious, pious or charitable.[22] Relief of poor and the orphans, education, workshop, medical relief, maintenance of shrines or the advancement of any other object of charitable, religious or pious nature or of general public utility are deemed to be charitable purposes under the Ordinance.[23] Under the Rules 2002, the Chief Administrator Auqaf after taking over and assuming the administration of a waqf property appoints a Manager to administer, control, manage and maintain the waqf property. It is the Manager who prepares a scheme for the administration and development of the waqf property under his charge. The scheme is then submitted to the Chief Administrator Auqaf, who may settle or refuse to settle or return the scheme for reconsideration or may call for the further details or information about the scheme or direct any further examination of the scheme as he may consider[24].

16. The administration and development of waqf property by the Chief Administrator Auqaf under the Ordnance is, therefore, through the mode and mechanism of schemes, with the singular object of advancing and maximizing the wishes of the wakif or the religious, pious and charitable purposes recognized by Islam. A scheme under section 15 of the Ordinance is, therefore, a strategic plan, a road map, a financial feasibility or a business plan for the administration and development of the waqf property, driven and directed by the objectives settled by the wakif or as given under the law. While the word "administration" in section 15, signifies the overall control, management and maintenance of the waqf properties, the expression "development[25]" is of much more significance and enjoins upon the Chief Administrator Auqaf to expand, evolve and enlarge the scope of charitable work of the waqf with changing times. The scheme to be settled by the Chief Administrator Auqaf must not only carry a plan of action or a programme for the administration of the waqf properties but also the stratagem and vision for its development, evolution and future growth. The Chief Administrator Auqaf must consider, at all time, the best use of the waqf property is to achieve its noble objectives, keeping in view the needs of the time and that of an evolving society.

17. The scheme, like any strategic or development plan has to consider, evaluate and weigh the exiting status of the waqf properties, the revenue generated, the expenditure incurred and most importantly, the central theme of the scheme: the actual advancement of the wishes of the waqif or the promotion of religious, pious and charitable work or work of public utility for the care and welfare of the society. The Chief Administrator Auqaf in settling a scheme must not lose sight of this central objective of the scheme and must always remain cognizant of the historical significance of waqf and how it contributed to the building of Islamic civilization; through which many mosques, schools, and educational centres were built along with libraries, scientific research centres and other fields in different walks of life, which gave way to the training of many scientists, researchers, inventors, and intellectuals. The scheme is fundamentally for advancement of such causes and must justify, at all times, that the waqf property is being used to promote and expand the objectives mentioned above, improving and growing with time. The settling of scheme, therefore, goes to the root of effective administration and development of waqf property and is the central function of the Chief Administrator Auqaf under the Ordinance. To draw up a scheme, therefore, requires the Chief Administrator Auqaf to have sufficient expertise in management, administration, finance, accounts, marketing, planning, development, policy and in running of public charities. He should also be supported by informed and expert recommendations of the qualified managers and administrators appointed under the Ordinance.

18. Maximization of charitable work requires a strong and a growing revenue base, which can be generated through use or letting out of the immovable waqf property or by investments of moneys collected from the waqf property (moveable waqf property). Therefore, waqf property can either be put to use to serve a religious, pious or charitable cause directly i.e., by running and managing a shrine or a khanqah or by establishing a school, college, university, hospital, research and training centres, etc for the general public utility and welfare of the society, either free or at subsidized rates; or indirectly, by leasing it out for purposes closer to the objectives of the waqf. Only as an exception and in the absence of any viable option to lease the property out for purposes closer to the objectives of the waqf, can the waqf property be leased out for commercial purposes. It is underlined that the Scheme must weigh, evaluate and discuss alternatives when leasing out waqf property and preference should always be given to lease out waqf property for purposes that are more akin or close to the wishes of the wakif or the objectives given under the law, including charitable purposes. Both the direct or indirect use of waqf property must be justified, in the manner discussed above, with reasons, to be laid out in the scheme that is to be settled and sanctioned by the Chief Administrator Auqaf.[26] A deliberative and a well-reasoned scheme shows structured exercise of discretion by the Chief Administrator Auqaf, who is burdened with the sole authority under the law, to settle the scheme for the administration and development of the waqf property.

19. In the present case, the proposal for grant of lease of 4 kanals of waqf property for setting up of a petrol pump does not form part of a scheme as discussed above. In fact no scheme has been submitted with the Court. A summary put up for the lease of waqf property (as in the present case) to set-up a petrol pump in isolation of the other factors and considerations, without an overall plan or a road map, as discussed above, does not constitute a scheme, envisaged under the Ordinance. Questions like: why is the waqf property required to be put on lease? why for a petrol pump and not for any other purpose more akin to the objectives of the waqf? why for a meagre rental of Rs.4,000/- per month? and why for a period of 30 years? why allegedly in a playground abutting a school? And whether other alternatives were discussed and weighed by the Chief Administrator Auqaf? is the waqf in a deficit or loss? How is the rental money to be utilized for the advancement of the objectives of the waqf? These questions and points need to be explained and answered in the scheme, which, in fact, showcases the lawful exercise of discretion by the Chief Administrator Auqaf under the Ordinance. According to the information supplied to this Court, total revenue earned by the waqf property is Rs.3,958,934/- (R) from lease of agricultural land, rent of shops, income from cash boxes, rent of colleges and contract of mela ground; while the expenditure of the waqf is Rs.1,671,792/- (E). Thus, revenue exceeds the expenditure by Rs.2,287,142/- (R-E). Therefore, the leasing out of a portion of waqf property for the establishment of petrol pump (commercial purpose) needs justification and requires explanation. We hold that in the absence of a well thought out scheme, sanction for lease of any waqf property cannot be permitted.

20. Sections 9 and 19 of the Ordinance read with Rule 7 of the Rules, 2002 recognize that the waqf property can be put out on lease to generate income for the waqf. Under Rule 7 of the Rules 2002, lease is granted for a year and shall not exceed three years. However, it is extendable for another two years subject to the approval of the Chief Administrator Auqaf. Finally the lease can be extended even for a longer period if the Chief Administrator Auqaf is of the opinion that it is in the best interest of the waqf property. Any departure for the statutory period of lease provided in Rule 7 must be explained and recorded in the scheme with reasons and must show, how the extension in time, best serves the interest of the waqf property.

21. The scheme settled for the administration and development of waqf properties is a manifestation of the discretion exercised by the Chief Administrator Auqaf, in the best interest of the waqf under the law and is, therefore, always open to judicial review by the courts.

22. For the above reasons, the grant of lease of waqf property for the setting up of a petrol pump to the petitioner without there being settlement of a proper scheme, as discussed above, and in the absence of any plausible reasons for extending the lease beyond the statutory period given under Rule 7 of Rules 2002, is offensive to the provisions of the Ordinance and Rules 2002, and hence illegal. We uphold the decision of the High Court, but for reasons of our own, discussed above. Leave is, therefore, declined and these petitions are dismissed. Chief Administrator Auqaf, may lease out waqf property, in future, but after settlement and sanction of the scheme, in the manner provided under the Ordinance and Rules 2002, as explained in this judgment.

23. The Deputy Registrar of the Lahore Branch Registry of this Court shall ensure that a copy of this judgment is dispatched to all the Chief Administrators Auqaf, in the country, for their information and compliance.

In case of compounding of a coordinate compoundable offence, reduction of a sentence passed or to be passed for commission of a non-compoundable offence in the same case may be considered by the following courts at the following stages of the case:

(i) by the trial court at the time of passing the sentence at the end of the trial; or

(ii) if compounding of the coordinate compoundable offence took place at the appellate or revisional stage before a High Court or before the Supreme Court at the stage of petition for leave to appeal or appeal or review petition then a prayer for reduction of the sentence passed for commission of the non-compoundable offence may be made on that ground before the Court seized of the pending matter; or

(iii) if the Supreme Court had already passed a final order or judgment in a petition for leave to appeal or an appeal and no review petition had been filed so far then reduction of the sentence passed for the non-compoundable offence may be sought on the ground of compounding of the coordinate compoundable offence through filing of a review petition before the Supreme Court; or

(iv) if the remedy of filing of a review petition before the Supreme Court had already been exhausted then, there being no scope for filing of a second or subsequent review petition before the Supreme Court and a party to a case or anyone else interested in the matter being in no position to seek revisiting of an earlier order or judgment of the Supreme Court, the only remedy left for seeking reduction of the sentence passed for commission of a non-compoundable offence on the ground of compounding of a coordinate compoundable offence was to file a mercy petition before the President who may, in his discretion, consider such aspect in the light of the judgments passed by the Supreme Court on the subject from time to time; or

(v) if the remedy of a mercy petition before the President had already been exhausted before compounding of the coordinate compoundable offence had taken place then after acceptance of the compromise by the competent court in respect of the coordinate compoundable offence the Superintendent of the relevant jail shall, upon an initiative of the convicted prisoner, forward a fresh mercy petition to the President on behalf of that convicted prisoner seeking fresh consideration of the matter by him in respect of the sentence passed against the convicted prisoner for commission of the non-compoundable offence in the light of compounding of the coordinate compoundable offence committed by him. When seized of such a fresh mercy petition the President may, in his discretion, consider the matter of the convicted prisoner's sentence passed for commission of the non-compoundable offence afresh in the light of the judgments passed by the Supreme Court on the subject from time to time.

JUDGMENT

ASIF SAEED KHAN KHOSA, C J.---The offence of 'terrorism' defined in section 6 and punishable under section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 is not a compoundable offence but in many cases the offence of terrorism is committed simultaneously with commission of some other offence and such other coordinate offence may sometimes be a compoundable offence. The effect of compounding of such coordinate compoundable offence upon the non-compoundable offence of terrorism or some other non-compoundable offence is a question which has been referred to the present Larger Bench for resolution. The circumstances in which this question has arisen in the present cases are briefly narrated as follows:

Civil Appeal No. 1772/2008.

(Moinuddin and another v. The State and others)

The appellants were convicted and sentenced to death under section 302(a), P.P.C. read with section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 besides having been convicted and sentenced for some other offences. The appellants' appeal was dismissed by the High Court and their appeal before this Court was also dismissed. The appellants then filed a Criminal Suo Motu Review Petition before this Court which too was dismissed and their Mercy Petition was subsequently dismissed by the President of Pakistan. Later on the parties entered into a compromise but the same was disallowed by the trial court and the appellants' Constitution Petition against the said order was dismissed by the High Court which order was challenged before this Court and the matter was referred to the present Larger Bench to determine whether a compromise in respect of the offence of murder can be treated as a mitigating circumstance for reducing the sentence of death under section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 to imprisonment for life at such a stage or not. Through an order passed on 22.04.2015 in Civil Miscellaneous Application No. 1990 of 2015 this Court had suspended execution of the appellants' sentences of death during the pendency of their main appeal.

Civil Petition No. 1708 of 2011

(Abdul Rehman v. The State and another)

The petitioner was tried by the Anti-Terrorism Court, Sargodha and was convicted and sentenced to death under section 302(b), P.P.C. as well as under section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 besides having been convicted and sentenced for some other offences. The petitioner's appeal was dismissed by the High Court and his appeal before this Court also met the same fate. Thereafter the petitioner filed Criminal Review Petition 65 of 2010 before this Court which was also dismissed vide order dated 11.11.2010. The petitioner then filed an application before the Anti-Terrorism Court, Sargodha seeking permission to compound the offences against him. The said application was rejected by the said court vide order dated 18.02.2011 which order was upheld by the High Court on 16.08.2011 and the petitioner has challenged the said order before this Court through this petition.

Civil Appeal No.253 of 2015.

(Muhammad Qaiser @ Billa v. The learned District and Session Judge/Judge ATC No. 1, Faisalabad and others)

The appellant was tried by the Anti-Terrorism Court, Faisalabad and was convicted and sentenced to death for the offence under section 302(b), P.P.C. as well as for the offence under section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 besides having been convicted and sentenced for some other offences. The appellant's appeals were dismissed by the High Court and also by this Court and his convictions and sentences were upheld. The appellant then filed a Criminal Suo Motu Review Petition before this Court which was dismissed and his Mercy Petition was also rejected by the President of Pakistan. In a subsequent round the appellant's application for compromise was dismissed by the trial court and the High Court refused to interfere in the same. Leave to appeal was granted by this Court to examine the effect of a compromise in the compoundable offences on the sentence passed under section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 which offence is non-compoundable.

Criminal Petition No. 988 of 2015.

(Waryam and another v. The State)

The petitioners were tried by the Anti-Terrorism Court, Sukkur and were convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for life for the offence under section 302(b), P.P.C. and also for the offence under section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 besides having been convicted and sentenced for some other offences. The petitioners' appeal was dismissed by the High Court and their Jail Petition filed before this Court was also dismissed. Subsequently the parties entered into a compromise but the trial court refused to give effect to it and later on a revision petition filed by the petitioners in that regard was dismissed by the High Court which order was assailed by the petitioners before this Court through a Criminal Suo Motu Review Petition which is being treated as the instant petition.

Criminal Appeal No.391 of 2015

(Zafar Hussain and another v. The State and others)

The appellants were convicted by the trial court for the offence under section 396, P.P.C. and were sentenced to death and they were also convicted for the offence under section 302(c), P.P.C. and were sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 10 years and later on their convictions and sentences had been upheld and maintained by the High Court as well as this Court. The appellants then filed Criminal Review Petition 106 of 2015 before this Court which was also dismissed vide order dated 08.09.2015. Subsequently the parties entered into a compromise but the trial court refused to give effect to it and a revision petition filed by the appellants in that regard before the High Court was also dismissed. Leave to appeal was granted by this Court to consider whether the sentences of death awarded to the appellants for the offence under section 396, P.P.C., which is a non-compoundable offence, could be converted into imprisonment for life in view of the compromise affected between the parties in the coordinate compoundable offence.

Criminal Appeal No. 19 of 2018

(Kalay Khan v. The State)

The appellant was convicted by the trial court for the offences under section 302(b), P.P.C. and section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and was sentenced to death for both the said offences besides having been convicted and sentenced for the offences under section 324, PPC, section 148, P.P.C. and section 7(c) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. During pendency of the appellant's appeal before the High Court the complainant party entered into a compromise with the appellant leading to his acquittal from the charge under section 302(b), P.P.C. and conversion of his sentence of death under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 to imprisonment for life. Leave to appeal was granted by this Court to examine the effect of a compromise in connection with a compoundable offence on the conviction and sentence recorded for an offence under the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 which offence is non-compoundable.

2. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and the learned law officers at some length and with their assistance we have attended to the factual and legal issues involved in these cases as well as the precedent cases available on the subject.

3. We find that three questions emerging from the facts of the present cases need to be answered and they are as follows:

(i) Can a non-compoundable offence be treated as a compoundable offence for the purpose of recording an acquittal in respect of that offence if a coordinate compoundable offence committed in the same case has been compounded by the relevant parties?

(ii) Can the sentence passed in a non-compoundable offence be reduced on the ground that a coordinate compoundable offence committed in the same case has been compounded by the relevant parties?

(iii) If the answer to question No. (ii) is in the affirmative then at what stage and by which court or forum reduction in the sentence passed in respect of a non-compoundable offence be ordered, if deemed warranted in the circumstances of the case?

4. A careful perusal of different precedent cases decided by this Court shows that the answers to all these questions are already available in such cases but they are in a scattered form and the same need to be consolidated so that the above mentioned questions may be answered with clarity and any confusion in that regard may be removed. The relevant extracts from such precedent cases are reproduced here for facility of reference:

Muhammad Rawab v. The State

"3. Heard Dr. Babar Awan, learned Advocate Supreme Court on behalf of appellant and learned Advocate-Generals for the State. The pivotal question which needs determination would be as to whether parties can be allowed to compound the offences which are not compoundable by virtue of the provisions as contemplated in section 345, Cr.P.C. specially in view of the specific bar as mentioned in subsection (7) of section 345, Cr.P.C. There is no denying the fact that section 365-A, P.P.C. read with section 7(e) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 is not compoundable. The provisions as contained in section 345(7), Cr.P.C. have been couched in such a plain and simple language that there is hardly any scope for any interpretation except that a non-compoundable offence cannot be made compoundable by this Court for the simple reason that no amendment, deletion, insertion or addition could be made by this Court and it could only be done by the Legislature as this aspect of the matter falls in its exclusive domain of jurisdiction. The provisions as contained in section 345, Cr.P.C. cannot be stretched too far by including the non-compoundable offence therein under the garb of humanitarian grounds or any other extraneous consideration. The offences committed by the appellant are not of grave and alarming nature but the same are against the society as a whole and cannot be permitted to compound by any individual on any score whatsoever. It may be noted that tabulation of the offences as made under section 345, Cr.P.C. being unambiguous remove all doubts, uncertainty and must be taken as complete and comprehensive guide for compounding the offences. The judicial consensus seems to be that "The Legislature has laid down in this section the test for determining the classes of offences which concern individuals only as distinguished from those which have reference to the interests of the State and Courts of law cannot go beyond that test and substitute for it one of their own. It is against public policy to compound a non-compoundable offence, keeping in view the state of facts existing on the date of application to compound. No offences shall be compounded except where the provisions of section 345, Cr.P.C. are satisfied as to all matters mentioned in the section". (Emphasis provided).

4. The above judicial consensus is based on the following authorities:--

Dalsukhram Hargovandas v. Charles DeBretton 28 Bom. 326; Meenakshi Sundarammal v. Subramaniam Ayyar AIR 1955 Mad. 369; Akshoy Singh v. Rameshawar Bagdi AIR 1917 Cal. 705; Mt. Rani v. Mt. Ghulam Farid alias Farida v. The State

"5. The offence of dacoity is not compoundable either under pure Islamic Law or under the statutory law of Pakistan, therefore, the contention of the learned counsel that notwithstanding the circumstances under which the murder had taken place, Qatl with no distinction is compoundable in Islam and the bar of statutory law would not be applicable, has no substance. There is concept of right of Afw and Badal-e-Suleh in a case of Qatl-i-Amd, punishable under section 302(a), P.P.C., as Qisas and this right can also be exercised with permission of Court in a case in which punishment of death is awarded as Tazir under section 302(b) but the concept of Afw and Badl-e-Suleh under the existing law has not been made applicable to a case under section 396, P.P.C., in which death is awarded for murder taken place during the course of committing dacoity and thus the Court cannot competently give effect to a compromise in a non-compoundable offence against the policy of law. The petitioner in the present case was awarded sentence of death under section 396, P.P.C. for murder as Tazir which had taken place during the course of committing dacoity and the offence under section 396, P.P.C., being not compoundable, the provision of sections 309 and 310, P.P.C., read with 338(E), P.P.C., could not be made applicable to give effect to a compromise in a non-compoundable offence under the law. In the matter of interpretation and application of provision of Chapter XVI, P.P.C., in respect of the offences mentioned therein or the matters ancillary or akin thereto Court can seek guidance from Holy Quran and Sunnah as provided in section 338(F), P.P.C., but the Court cannot bring a non-compoundable offence within the purview of section 345, Cr.P.C., by virtue of section 338-F, P.P.C., for the purpose of compounding it on the basis of compromise. This is settled law that Courts can interpret the provisions of law but cannot change or substitute such provisions and also cannot go beyond the wisdom of law. The contention of the learned counsel that the compromise between the parties at least could be treated a mitigating circumstance for the purpose of lesser punishment, has also no substance. This Court while upholding the judgment of the High Court by virtue of which conviction and sentence awarded to the petitioner by the trial Court was maintained, has already dismissed the petition for leave to appeal. The present petition has arisen out of the proceedings in a miscellaneous application moved by the petitioner for his acquittal on the basis of his compromise with the legal heirs of the deceased, therefore, in these proceedings, it was not possible for the High Court to re-open the case on merits in exercise of its powers under section 561-A, Cr.P.C., and similarly this Court is not supposed to undertake such an exercise under Article 187 of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan and consider the question relating to the quantum of sentence on the basis of compromise between the parties in such a heinous offence which is considered a crime against the Society."

M. Ashraf Bhatti and others v. M. Aasam Butt and others

"7. In view of the facts that parties have compromised the matter and compensation has already been received by the complainants therefore, permission is accorded to compound the offence under section 345(2), Cr.P.C. Now we would advert to examine whether in the cases like one in hand where brutal murder of two young boys has been committed when they were confined in judicial lock-up, in a shocking manner which has outraged the public conscience, the convicts are liable for punishment on the principle of Fasad-fil-Arz. The facts of the case and material available on record reveal that petitioners/convicts have committed crime in a brutal manner of the deceased who were confined in lock-up. Therefore, considering them sitting ducks, they took the law in their hands, without caring that police stations or Court premises are considered such places where law protects the life of citizens. Therefore, in exercise of jurisdiction under section 311, P.P.C. the sentence of death of the two convicts namely Naheeb Butt alias Bhutto and Moazzam Butt is reduced from death to life imprisonment under section 302, P.P.C. and under section 7(b) of A.T.A. on both the counts. Similarly sentences awarded to Muhammad Aasam and Shahbaz alias Dodi for imprisonment of life under section 302(b), P.P.C. is reduced to 14 years and sentence awarded to them for life imprisonment under section 7(b) of A.T.A. is kept intact on both the counts with benefit of section 382-B of Cr.P.C., which has already been extended to them by the Lahore High Court. Remaining sentences awarded to them are kept intact. All the sentences shall run concurrently."

Muhammad Akhtar alias Hussain v. The State

"2. The petitioner after having been unsuccessful in his attempts to secure his acquittal in the case initiated making efforts to effect a compromise with the complainant party and in this respect he submitted an application before the trial Court for his acquittal on the basis of the compromise. His this application was dismissed by the trial Court against which a writ petition was filed before the High Court. The case was remanded back by the High Court to the Anti-Terrorism Court (the trial Court) with the direction to give findings with regard to the compromise between the parties. This time the trial Court while allowing the compromise to the extent of charge under section 302(b), P.P.C., acquitted the petitioner from the said charge whereas his application to the extent of conviction and sentence on the charge under section 7 of the ATA, 1997 was dismissed. The petitioner again approached the High Court through a Constitution Petition questioning the legality of the order on the ground that the conviction and sentence of the petitioner under section 7 of the ATA, 1997 is the outcome of the main charge under section 302(b), P.P.C. and since the petitioner has already been acquitted from the said charge he is also entitled to be acquitted from the charge under section 7 of the ATA, 1997. However, his this plea was not accepted by the High Court and his writ petition was dismissed and now the present petition.

3. The learned counsel for the petitioner has vehemently contended, as submitted before the High Court, that after the acquittal of the petitioner under section 302, P.P.C. he was entitled to the acquittal under section 7 of the ATA, 1997 which is the offshoot of the main offence under section 302, P.P.C.

4. We have attended to his this contention. Whatever the nature or status of an offence but for the purposes of the compromise it will be seen as to whether the offence/the section of law for which the compromise is requested is compoundable under the law or not. The offences which are compoundable have been mentioned in section 345(1), Cr.P.C. Since the offence is under section 7 of the ATA, 1997 for which a death penalty has been prescribed does not find its mention in the aforesaid section in the category of the offences which are compoundable, and both the Courts below have rightly disallowed the compromise. In this respect reliance can be placed on the case of Muhammad Rawab v. The State 2004 SCMR 1170. The relevant extract from the judgment in which leave was granted in order to examine, inter alia, the following:--

"2. ------ The question whether the Court can permit the parties to compound the offences which are not mentioned in section 345, Cr.P.C. specially when there is a bar under section 345(7) of Cr.P.C. for entertaining a compromise in the offences not mentioned in section 345, Cr.P.C."

The Court while dismissing the appeal held:--

"3. ----- The pivotal question which needs determination would be as to whether parties can be allowed to compound the offences which are not compoundable by virtue of the provisions as contemplated in section 345, Cr.P.C. specially in view of the specific bar as mentioned in subsection (7) of section 345, Cr.P.C. There is no denying the fact that section 365-A, P.P.C. read with section 7(e) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 is not compoundable. The provisions as contained in section 345(7), Cr.P.C. have been couched in such a plain and simple language that there is hardly any scope for any interpretation except that a non-compoundable offence cannot be made compoundable by this Court for the simple reason that no amendment, deletion, insertion or addition could be made by this Court and it could only be done by the Legislature as this aspect of the matter falls in its exclusive domain of jurisdiction. The provisions as contained in section 345, Cr.P.C. cannot be stretched too far by including the non-compoundable offence therein under the garb of humanitarian grounds or any other extraneous consideration. The offences committed by the appellant are not of grave and alarming nature but the same are against the society as a whole and cannot be permitted to compound by any individual on any score whatsoever. It may be noted that tabulation of the offences as made under section 345, Cr.P.C. being unambiguous remove all doubts, uncertainty and must be taken as complete and comprehensive guide for compounding the offences. The judicial consensus seems to be that "The Legislature has laid down in this section the test for determining the classes of offences which concern individuals only as distinguished from those which have reference to the interests of the State and Courts of law cannot go beyond that test and substitute for it one of their own. It is against public policy to compound a non-compoundable offence, keeping in view the state of facts existing on the date of application to compound. No offences shall be compounded except where the provisions of section 345, Cr.P.C. are satisfied as to all matters mentioned in the section."

The aforesaid judgment was followed by this Court in another case, Ghulam Farid alias Farida v. The State PLD 2006 SC 53.

5. We have also considered the question of reduction of sentence in view of the compromise arrived at between the parties. Since the matter before us is not in the regular proceeding arising out of the conviction and sentences passed by the trial Court and his appeal before the High Court and then a petition before this Court but after the decision having been rendered by this Court dismissing the petition of the petitioner against the order of his conviction and sentence and while dismissing the petition by this Court, his conviction and sentences under section 302/34, P.P.C. and section 7 of the ATA, 1997 were kept intact. So once the findings have been given on merits by this Court, then it would not be appropriate to enter the merits of the case again to consider the reduction of sentence in an offence which is not compoundable. In this respect the relevant portion of paras. 4 and 5 of the judgment passed in the case of Ghulam Farid (supra) are reproduced hereinbelow:--

"4. There is no cavil to the proposition that the Courts at all levels without any legal impediment, while deciding the criminal cases on merits, in the regular proceedings, can consider the compromise of an offender with the victim or his legal heirs, as a mitigating circumstance for the purpose of question of sentence in a non-compoundable offence but after final disposal of a criminal matter, Courts cannot assume jurisdiction to re-open the case on merits in collateral proceedings arising out of miscellaneous application. The petitioner after losing the case on merits, before the trial Court, the High Court and also before this Court in regular proceedings moved an application to the Court of first instance for his acquittal on the basis of his compromise with the legal heirs of the deceased wherein he also made an alternate prayer of reduction in sentence ----

5. ---- This is settled law that Courts can interpret the provisions of law but cannot change or substitute such provisions and also cannot go beyond the wisdom of law. The contention of the learned counsel that the compromise between the parties at least could be treated a mitigating circumstance for the purpose of lesser punishment, has also no substance. This Court while upholding the judgment of the High Court by virtue of which conviction and sentence awarded to the petitioner by the trial Court was, maintained, has already dismissed the petition for leave to appeal. The present petition has arisen out of the proceedings in a miscellaneous application moved by the petitioner for his acquittal on the basis of his compromise with the legal heirs of the deceased, therefore, in these proceedings, it was not possible for the High Court to re-open the case on merits in exercise of its powers under section 561-A, Cr.P.C., and similarly this Court is not supposed to undertake such an exercise under Article 187 of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan and consider the question relating to the quantum of sentence on the basis of compromise between the parties in such a heinous offence which is considered a crime against the Society."

6. The findings of the Courts below by not granting permission to compound the offence under section 7 of the ATA, 1997 are in accordance with law and particularly in view of the bar as contained in subsection (7) of section 345, Cr.P.C. We find no illegality in the orders impugned herein and which does not deserve any interference. Resultantly we see no force in this petition, leave is declined and the petition dismissed."

Muhammad Nawaz v. The State

"8. It is to be noted that the act of terrorism, though is interlinked with the principal offence i.e. 302(b), P.P.C., falls under a different provision of law i.e. section 6(2)(n) of ATA. Deceased Muhammad Mumtaz was on official duty at the time of the occurrence as it is evident from the statements of P.Ws. that he was in uniform and was causing arrest of nominated accused along with raiding police party but to terrorize the police the accused opened fire, which caused his (Muhammad Mumtaz) death and also created obstruction in the discharge of their duty. Sentence under section 302(b) attracts the provision of section 353, P.P.C., which he has already undergone. Thus, the offence under section 6(2)(n) of ATA also stands established against the petitioner, which provides the meaning of terrorism and any such action that falls within the meaning of said section, involving serious violence against a member of the police force, armed forces, civil armed forces, or a public servant. This offence stood established, in view of the facts and circumstances narrated hereinabove, particularly, accepting the conviction/ sentence under section 302(b), P.P.C. as he has entered into compromise with the deceased, however as far as the second count of death sentence under section 7 ATA is concerned, it has got its own implications and is not compoundable under section 345 subsections (5) and (7) of Cr.P.C. This Court examined this very proposition in the case of Muhammad Rawab v. State (2005 SCMR 1170), reliance on which has also been placed by the Sessions Judge when the compromise under section 302(b), P.P.C. and 7 of ATA was submitted. Learned Special Judge gave effect the compromise only to the extent of 302(b), P.P.C., whereas compromise under section 7 ATA was not allowed to be compounded in view of the law referred to hereinabove.

9. However, this fact can also not be over sighted that in respect of murder of Muhammad Mumtaz, Constable, the petitioner was also sentenced to death and now the parties have compounded the offence under section 302(b), P.P.C. and according to the record compensation has also been paid. Therefore, question for quantum of sentence under section 7 of ATA can be examined in view of the judgment in the case of M. Ashraf Bhatti v. M. Aasam Butt (PLD 2006 SC 182) wherein after the compromise between the parties sentence of death was altered to life imprisonment.

10. It is to be noted that both the sentences i.e. death and life imprisonment are legal sentences, therefore, under the circumstances either of them can be awarded to him. Thus in view of the peculiar circumstances noted hereinabove, sentence of death under section 7 ATA, 1997 is converted into life imprisonment without extending benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. as the same was not allowed by the trial Court, first appellate Court as well as by this Court in the judgment under review.

11. Accordingly, compromise between the parties is accepted to the extent of conviction under section 302(b), P.P.C. and the petitioner is acquitted of the charge. However, the death sentence under section 7 of ATA is converted into life imprisonment and the review petition is disposed of."

Shahid Zafar and 3 others v. The State

"9. Insofar as the compounding of the offences is concerned by the appellants reached through compromise with the legal heirs of the deceased, it would be seen that Section 7 (a) of the Anti Terrorism Act, 1997 is not compoundable and hence the learned High Court correctly dismissed such compromise applications. Even otherwise we are of the opinion that the cruel and gruesome murder of the deceased who had been begging for his life from the appellants certainly amounted to Fasad-Fil-Arz within the meaning of Section 311, P.P.C. and hence there could not be any question of acceptance of compromise between the parties. However having said as much we are also aware that in the case of Muhammad Nawaz (Supra) this Court had converted the sentence of death to that of life imprisonment under Section 7(a) of the Anti Terrorism Act 1997 where the legal heirs had compounded the matter with the accused as in the present case. Consequently we would partly allow Criminal Appeal No.8-K of 2014 by directing that the sentence of death imposed upon the appellant Shahid Zafar be reduced to life imprisonment."

Kareem Nawaz Khan v. The State

"3. Karim Nawaz Khan petitioner had allegedly murdered his sister, a brother and a sister-in-law by firing at them with the use of a Kalashnikov in an incident taking place at about 12.00 Noon on 03.06.2007 inside the house of Muhammad Khan complainant in village Whandi Shiapur in the area of Police Station Moch, District Mianwali in the backdrop of a motive based upon a dispute between the parties over some ancestral property. With these allegations the petitioner was booked in case FIR No 101 registered at the above mentioned Police Station soon after the incident and after a regular trial the petitioner was convicted on 3 counts of an offence under section 302(b), P.P.C. and was sentenced to death on each count and to pay compensation and Diyat to their heirs of the deceased. The petitioner was also convicted by the trial court for an offence under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and even on that count of the charge he was sentenced to death and to pay fine. The petitioner was additionally convicted by the trial court for an offence under section 21-L of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and for the said offence he was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years and to pay fine. The petitioner challenged his convictions and sentences before the High Court through an appeal which was dismissed and all his convictions and sentences recorded by the trial court were upheld and confirmed by the High Court. Thereafter the petitioner approached this Court through Criminal Petition No.1245-L of 2010 but the said petition was also dismissed by this Court on 05.06.2012 and leave to appeal was refused to him. Hence, the present review petition before this Court.

4. On 05.06.2012 this Court had dismissed Criminal Petition No. 1245-L of 2010 after attending to the merits of the petitioner's case and it had been held by this Court that the courts below were justified in convicting and sentencing the petitioner and in upholding and confirming his sentences. Through the present review petition it has been brought to this Court's notice that after passage of the said order by this Court upholding and maintaining the petitioner's convictions, and sentences the heirs of all the three deceased had entered into a compromise with the petitioner which compromise was presented before the trial court, i.e. the Anti-Terrorism Court, Sargodha and vide judgment dated 19.02.2014 the learned Judge, Anti-Terrorism Court, Sargodha was pleased to accept the said compromise on all the three counts of the charge under section 302(b), P.P.C. whereas the said compromise was rejected to the extent of the petitioner's convictions and sentences for the offences under sections 7(a) and 21-L of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. We have gone through the said order passed by the trial court on 19.02.2014 and have noticed that the trial court had felt satisfied regarding genuineness and completion of the acclaimed compromise between the parties. Through the present review petition the learned counsel for the petitioner has urged that in view of the compromise affected between the parties vis- -vis the offences under section 302(b), P.P.C. the sentence of the petitioner for the offence under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 may be reduced from death to imprisonment for life. In support of this submission the learned counsel for the petitioner has referred to the cases of Muhammad Nawaz v. State (PLD 2014 SC 383), Shahid Zafar and 3 others v. The State (PLD 2014 SC 809) and M. Ashraf Bhatti and others v. M. Aasam Butt and others (PLD 2006 SC 182). The learned Additional Prosecutor-General, Punjab appearing for the State has submitted that in above mentioned precedent cases this Court had indeed utilized a compromise between the parties for reduction of a convict's sentence of death to imprisonment for life on a charge under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and, thus, the matter of reduction of the petitioner's sentence on such score in the present case lies within the discretion of the Court.

5. After hearing the learned counsel for the parties and going through the record we have noticed that the appellant was very closely related to all the three murdered persons in this case, i.e., he was a brother of two of the deceased and a brother-in-law of the third deceased and the incident in issue had taken place because of a dispute between the parties over some ancestral property. According to the prosecution itself there was no enmity between the parties and the present incident had taken place half an hour of an earlier incident wherein the petitioner and the deceased and some others had quarreled with each other while discussing the matter of ancestral property. It could, thus, be said that in the absence of any on-going enmity between the parties the present occurrence had taken place because of some very recent provocation offered to the petitioner by the complainant party while discussing the issue regarding ancestral property. It may, therefore, be a case not of grave and sudden provocation but a case which was based upon some provocation recently offered to the petitioner although the same was not sudden. In a case of such a situation this Court has held that the least that a Court can do in such a case is to reduce the sentence of death to imprisonment for life and a reference in this respect may be made to the case of Ghulam Abbas v. Mazhar Abbas and another (PLD 1991 SC 1059). There is an additional factor available in this case for reduction of the petitioner's sentence of death to imprisonment for life and that is that a valid compromise had been arrived at between the parties which has already been allowed by the trial court vis- -vis three counts of the charge under section 302(b), P.P.C. In the cases of Muhammad Nawaz v. The State (PLD 2014 SC 383), Shahid Zafar and 3 others v. The State (PLD 2014 SC 809) and M.Ashraf Bhatti and others v. M. Aasam Butt and others (PLD 2006 SC 182) this Court has already considered a valid and accepted compromise in the coordinate offence to be a valid ground for reduction of a sentence of death into imprisonment for life on the charge of terrorism or of a non-compoundable offence.

6. For what has been discussed above this review petition is allowed, the order under review dated 05.06.2012 passed by this Court in Criminal Petition No. 1245-L of 2010 is recalled, the said petition is converted into an appeal and the same is partly allowed with the result that the sentence of death passed against the petitioner/ appellant for the offence under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 is converted into a sentence of imprisonment for life. The order passed by the trial court regarding payment of fine on that charge is maintained but it is ordered that in default of payment of fine he shall undergo simple imprisonment for six months. On account of a valid compromise having been arrived at between the heirs of the three deceased and the present appellant, which compromise had already been allowed by the trial court, his convictions and sentences on three counts of the charge under section 302(b), P.P.C. are set aside and he is acquitted of the said counts of the charge. The appellant has already served out his sentence of imprisonment for the offence under section 21-L of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 which shall be deemed to have run concurrently with his other sentence of imprisonment. The appellant shall be allowed the benefit under section 382-B, Cr.P.C. as far as his reduced sentence under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 is concerned. This review petition and the appellant's petition converted into an appeal are disposed of in the terms noted above."

5. The situation is altogether different in cases where the convictions and sentences of convicts have already attained finality after decision of their review petitions by this Court. Order XXVI, Rule 9 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 provides as follows:

"After the final disposal of the first application for review no subsequent application for review shall lie to the Court and consequently shall not be entertained by the Registry."

There is, thus, no scope for maintainability of a second or subsequent review petition before this Court after the first review petition has been decided. It is sometimes argued that in such a situation, particularly in a case of extreme hardship, this Court may attend to the matter in exercise of its jurisdictions under Articles 184(3) or 187 of the Constitution or may resort to revisiting the earlier order or judgment in order to safeguard the interests of justice but such arguments have consistently been rejected by this Court in the past. In many previous cases this Court has consistently held that after exhausting the review jurisdiction of this Court a party to a case cannot invoke Articles 184(3) or 187(1) of the Constitution for reopening the same case. It has also been held by this Court that the question whether an interpretation of law in any earlier order or judgment of this Court needs to be revisited or not is a question to be decided by this Court upon its own initiative and no party to a case or any other interested person can approach this Court for revisiting its earlier orders or judgments. The following precedent cases may be referred to in this respect:

Khalid Iqbal and 2 others v. Mirza Khan and others

"12. The question of maintainability of the 2nd Criminal Review Petition on the ground that this Court has to do complete justice by invoking Article 187(1) of the Constitution is also misconceived. The provisions of Article 187(1) cannot be attracted in the present case, as this Court has already recorded findings against the petitioner by the Judgment dated 28-2-2001, against which review was also dismissed and there was no 'lis' pending before this Court warranting exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 187(1) of the Constitution, besides Rule 9 of the Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, bars 2nd Review Petition. There is a distinction between right of a party to approach the Court and jurisdiction of the Court to do complete justice on its own. Once this Court has finally determined the right of the petitioner in the judgment dated 28-2-2001, holding him guilty, the petitioner through 2nd Review Petition, cannot reagitate it. If such a Review Petition is allowed to be entertained, it will land in a situation where findings of this Court against a party will never attain finality.

13. This, however, does not mean that the jurisdiction of this Court is barred by any restriction placed by the Constitution; there is no Article in the Constitution which imposes any restriction or bar on this Court to revisit its earlier decision or even to depart from them, nor the doctrine of stare decisis will come in its way so long as revisiting of the judgment is warranted, in view of the significant impact on the fundamental rights of citizens or in the interest of public good. This issue was fully comprehended and answered in the case titled Regarding pensionary benefits of the Judges of Superior Courts from the Date of their respective retirements, irrespective of their length of service as such Judges (PLD 2013 SC 829 at page 993). The relevant portions are reproduced herein below:--

"3. My learned brother has exhaustively dealt with the question of maintainability, which is a threshold proposition of the matter, and in this behalf extensive reference to the case-law has also been made. I therefore have no intention to add any superfluity to that, however, my approach to the proposition is quite simple, plain and facile, in that, the Supreme Court of Pakistan is the apex Court of the country. It is the final, the utmost and the ultimate Court, inter alia, in relation to, (a) resolving disputes inter se the parties before it, (b) securing and enforcing the fundamental rights of the citizen/person, when those (rights) are in issue before the Court, in any of its jurisdiction, either original or appellate or suo motu, (c) the interpretation and the enunciation of the law of the land, (d) examining and adjudging the legislative Acts and the executive order/actions of the State, in the exercise of its power of judicial review, (e) the exercise of original jurisdiction as per the mandate of Article 184 of the Constitution, (f) the advisory jurisdiction within the parameter of Article 186 of the Constitution, (g) the review of its decision (judgments) (see Article 188) (h) a special jurisdiction conferred upon this Court by any law. And above all the power to do complete justice (see Article 187). In terms of Article 189 of the Constitution, 'Any decision of the Supreme Court shall, to the extent that it decides question of law or is based upon or enunciates a principle of law, (emphasis supplied) be binding on all other courts in Pakistan". Moreover, according to Article 190 "All executive and judicial authorities throughout Pakistan shall act in aid of the Supreme Court".

4. The aforestated legal position explains and highlights the true magnitude and the supremacy of this Court in regard to the dispensation of justice in the country and the enunciation and the declaration of the law by it. As the law laid down by the (apex) Court, and the order(s) passed by it, being the paramount and ultimate in nature, has to be imperatively and mandatorily followed, obeyed and adhered to by all the concerned. Reading Articles 189 and 190 conjointly, and while keeping in view the scheme of the Constitution, the very purpose, the pivotal position and the status of this Court (prescribed above), it is expedient that correct law should be pronounced by the apex Court. And pursuant to the above object and due to the venerated position of this Court, the Court is cumbered with, inviolable responsibility, and a sacred duty, to interpret, declare and enunciate the law correctly, so that it should be followed, obeyed and adhered to purposively and in letter and spirit, by all the other organs of the State (including all other Courts in Pakistan) strictly in consonance with the true aim of the aforementioned Articles. It may be pertinent to mention here, that any invalid enunciation of law, shall contravene and impugn the very character, and attribute(s) of this Court and such bad/wrong law shall cause drastic adverse effects on the socioeconomic, political, geographical, ethnic, cultural aspects and dynamics of the nation, the society, the people at large and the State in presentee or in futurio. In the above context, reference can also be made to Article 4 of the Constitution which enshrines (inter alia) an inalienable right of every citizen to be dealt with in accordance with the law, obviously this shall mean the law that is, correctly laid down by this Court. As it is a cardinal principle of justice, that the law should be worn by the Judge in his sleeves and justice should be imparted according to the law, notwithstanding whether the parties in a lis before the Court are misdirected and misplaced in that regard. Therefore, if any law which has been invalidly pronounced and declared by this Court, which in particular is based upon ignorance of any provisions of the Constitution, and/or is founded on gross and grave misinterpretation thereof; the provisions of the relevant law have been ignored, misread and misapplied; the law already enunciated and settled by this Court on a specific subject, has not been taken into account, all this, inter alia, shall constitute a given judgment(s) as per incuriam; and inconsistent/conflicting decision of this Court shall also fall in that category. Such decision undoubtedly shall have grave consequences and repercussions, on the State, the persons/ citizens, the society and the public at large as stated above. Therefore, if a judgment or a decision of this Court which is found to be per incuriam (note: what is a judgment per incuriam has been dealt with by my brother), it shall be the duty of this Court to correct such wrong verdict and to set the law right. And the Court should not shun from such a duty (emphasis supplied). For the support of my above view, I may rely upon the law laid down in the dicta Lt. Col. Nawabzada Muhammad Amir Khan v. The Controller of Estate Duty, Government of Pakistan, Karachi and others (PLD 1962 SC 335 at page 340):--

'Where, however, there is found to be something directed by the judgment of which review is sought which is in conflict with the Constitution or with a law of Pakistan, there it would be the duty of the Court, unhesitatingly to amend the error. It is a duty which is enjoined upon every Judge of the Court by the solemn oath which he takes when he enters upon his duties, viz., to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution and laws of Pakistan" But the violation of a written law must be clear."

M. S. Ahlawat v. State of Haryana and another (AIR 2000 SC 1680):--

'15. To perpetuate an error is no virtue but to correct it is a compulsion of judicial conscience."

Bengal Immunity Co. Ltd., v. State of Bihar and others (AIR 1955 SC 661):--

'19. Reference is made to the doctrine of finality of judicial decisions and it is pressed upon us that we should not reverse our previous decision except in cases where a material provision of law has been overlooked or where the decision has proceeded upon the mistaken assumption of the continuance of a repealed or expired statute and that we should not differ from a previous decision merely because a contrary view appears to us to be preferable.

It is needless for us to say that we should not lightly dissent from a previous pronouncement of this court. Our power of review, which undoubtedly exists, must be exercised with due care and caution and only for advancing the public well being in the light of the surrounding circumstances of each case brought to our notice but we do not consider it right to confine our power within rightly fixed limits as suggested before us.

If on a re-examination of the question we come to the conclusion, as indeed we have, that the previous majority decision was plainly erroneous then it will be our duty to say so and not to perpetuate our mistake even when one learned Judge who was party to the previous decision considers it incorrect on further reflection (emphasis supplied by me).

In Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal v. Corporation of Calcutta (AIR 1967 SC 997) it is held:-

"If the aforesaid rule of construction accepted by this Court is inconsistent with the legal philosophy of our Constitution, it is our duty to correct ourselves and lay down the right rule (emphasis supplied by me). In constitutional matters which affect the evolution of our policy, we must more readily do so than in other branches of law, as perpetuation of a mistake will be harmful to public interests. While continuity and consistency are conducive to the smooth evolution of the rule of law, hesitancy to set right deviations will retard its growth. In this case, as we are satisfied that the said rule of construction is inconsistent without republican polity and, if accepted, bristles with anomalies, we have no hesitation to reconsider our earlier decision."

The question, however, shall be as to how this duty should be discharged and the object of correcting the wrong law, and setting it (the law) right should be achieved. One of the obvious ways of doing so is, when a party to the lis seeks review of the wrong judgment in terms of Article 188 of the Constitution. But what, if that remedy is not availed for any reason, or even if availed by the concerned, is discarded by the Court (again by committing an another wrong). Whether thereafter, such a wrong decision on the point of law, cannot be remedied and interfered with, revisited or set aside at all or in other words, even if a judgment which is patently per incuriam, infinitely should be left outstanding, allowing it to become the liability of this Court and our legal/judicial system, for all future times. And the (this) Court and the system should be fettered by it, and held as a captive thereto, leaving it intact to pervade and permeate serious prejudice in perpetuity to the persons/ citizens of the country and even the State, compelling them, to be dealt with by a wrong/invalid law, despite it having come to the notice of the Court, through any means whatsoever, that such decision suffers from patent and gross vice, and it is vividly a judgment per incuriam by all references. The answer is "No". In my candid view the approach to leave such a decision to stay intact shall be ludicrous and shall lead to drastic effects as indicated above. Rather in such a situation this Court, having special position in our judicature (judicial system as highlighted above) shall have the inherent, intrinsic and inbred power (jurisdiction) vested in it, (a) to declare a judgment per incuriam; (b) decline to follow the same as a valid precedent, (c) and/or to set it aside. For the exercise of jurisdiction in that regard and for the discharge of the duty as mentioned earlier, it is absolutely irrelevant and immaterial vide (via) which source it (decision) has come to the notice of the Court. The Court once attaining the knowledge of such a blemished and flawed decision has the sole privilege, to examine the same and to decide about its fate, whether it is per incuriam or otherwise. In this context, it may be mentioned, for example, if while hearing some case, it is brought to the attention of the Court by the member(s) of the Bar; or during the hearing of any matter, the Court itself finds an earlier judgment to be per incuriam; or if a Judge (Judge of this Court) in the course of his study or research, comes across any judgment which in his view is per incuriam or if any information through the Registrar of the Court is passed on to the honourable Chief Justice of the Court or to any other Judge (of this Court), by any member of the Bar, or the member of the civil society (any organization/ group of the society) that a judgment is per incuriam (note: without the informant having any right or locus standi of hearing or the audience, until the matter is set out for hearing in the Court and the Court deems it proper to hear him), the Court in exercise of its inherent suo motu power and the duty mentioned above (emphasis supplied) shall have the due authority and the empowerment to examine such a judgment, in order to ascertain and adjudge if the law laid down therein is incorrect or otherwise. And if the judgment is found to be per incuriam, it shall be dealt with accordingly. In such a situation (as earlier stated) it shall not be of much significance, as to who has brought the vice of the judgment to the notice of the Court or through which channel it has reached there. Rather, the pivotal aspect, the object, the concern and the anxiety of this Court should be to examine the judgment and if it is per incuriam to set the law right with considerable urgency."

On perusal of the paragraphs referred to hereinabove, we can safely reach a conclusion that this Court has absolute powers to re-visit, to review and or to set aside its earlier judgments/orders by invoking its Suo Motu Jurisdiction under Articles 184(3), 187 or 188 of the Constitution. The Powers of this Court to exercise its inherent jurisdiction under the above referred Articles of the Constitution are not dependant upon an application of a party.

14. The learned counsel has contended that the petitioner has the fundamental rights, under Articles 9 and 25 of the Constitution to seek protection of his liberty as a citizen of this country. We are not persuaded by this contention of the learned Advocate Supreme Court of the petitioner. The protection of the term "liberty" used in this Article would not cover the petitioner, who was convicted by this Court, and had exhausted all the legal remedies available in law, against his conviction and sentence. The findings of this Court against the petitioner had attained finality, which could not be undone on the basis of the judgment in the case of Dilawar Hussain (supra) which came, later in time, and had distinct facts. Therefore, the contention of the learned Advocate Supreme Court that Article 9 of the Constitution protects the life and liberty of the petitioner is without force. As far as the discrimination under Article 25 of the Constitution is concerned, the petitioner has not been discriminated against at all. This Court has decided his case on the basis of the material produced at trial. The petitioner could not plead discrimination of lesser sentence by relying on the case of Dilawar Hussain (supra), as every case needs to be decided on its own merits and the decision of one case will not regulate the quantum of sentence in the other case, nor it could attract the term 'discrimination' as used in Article 25 of the Constitution.

15. For the aforesaid reasons, we hold that 2nd Criminal Review Petition of the petitioner is not competent and the judgment dated 28-2-2001, in Criminal Appeal No. 23/1997, and the order dated 6-3-2008 in Criminal Review Petition No. 12/2001, passed by this Court having attained finality, cannot be impugned once the petitioner has exhausted all his legal remedies. Mere delay on the part of executive to execute the sentence of the petitioner would not give him a right to approach this Court and have his decision reversed on the aforestated grounds."

Syed Shabbar Raza Rizvi and others v. Federation of Pakistan, Ministry of Law and Justice Division through Secretary, Islamabad and others (2018 SCMR 514)

"There is another aspect of the matter which is of considerable importance i.e. the maintainability of these petitions. In this context, it is held that the petitioners had the remedy of challenging the judgment, if they were aggrieved of the same, by filing review petitions, which they did attempted so to do but could not succeed. They were a party in Khurshid Anwar Bhinder's case (supra) and their respective submissions were rejected and the review applications were accordingly dismissed as being not maintainable; besides observing that the judgment impugned, being in the supreme national interest, there hardly appeared any justification for review. Further, the petitioners contested the contempt notices in Justices (R) Iftikhar Hussain Chaudhry's case (supra) and then Intra Court Appeals in Justice Hasnat Ahmed Khan's case (supra) but without any measure of success. All the points raised in the said cases/judgments have been re-agitated through the present petitions. In such a situation, the petitions under Article 184(3) are absolutely incompetent and not maintainable. Where a person has/had the opportunity of filing a review or appeal against a judgment, and either files a review/appeal and fails, or does not avail that opportunity, or fails to become a party in any pending review/appeal filed by another person against the same judgment, then he has no right to re-agitate the matter through a petition under Article 184(3) ibid. Article 184(3) ibid is a constitutional provision which is meant for the purposes of enforcement of fundamental rights, where there is a question of public importance involved. It cannot be exercised as a parallel review jurisdiction by the court, especially when the remedy of review has already been availed or declined. Yes, a judgment of this Court can be considered to be per incuriam but it is for the Judges to revisit any such judgment, if and when pointed out by any person during the course of hearing of any other case. Such a finding would be premised on the Court finding the same judgment to be against any provision of the Constitution or the law, or the principle(s) already settled by a larger Bench of the Court. It is not the right of a person, who would have no locus standi under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, to file such a petition, particularly in the situation where the review jurisdiction has been invoked and the same (review) has been dismissed; thus, such judgment (under review) can never be challenged by virtue of filing independent proceedings under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. This would be an abuse of the process of law and is absolutely impermissible. Resultantly, we do not find any merit in these petitions which are accordingly dismissed."

Akhter Umar Hayat Lalayka and others v. Mushtaq Ahmed Sukhaira and others (2018 SCMR 1218)

"Second review is barred by law and no party can now approach this Court for a second review, however, this Court has absolute power to re-visit its earlier judgments/orders by invoking its Suo Motu Jurisdiction under Articles 184(3), 187 or 188 of the Constitution. This Power is not dependant upon an application of any party and it was so held in the case of Khalid Iqbal v. Mirza Khan (PLD 2015 SC 50), in the following words:-

"12. The question of maintainability of the 2nd Criminal Review Petition on the ground that this Court has to do complete justice by invoking Article 187(1) of the Constitution is also misconceived. The provisions of Article 187(1) cannot be attracted in the present case, as this Court has already recorded findings against the petitioner by the Judgment dated 28-2-2001, against which review was also dismissed and there was no 'lis'pending before this Court warranting exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 187(1) of the Constitution, besides Rule 9 of the Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, bars 2nd Review Petition. There is a distinction between right of a party to approach the Court and jurisdiction of the Court to do complete justice on its own. Once this Court has finally determined the right of the petitioner in the judgment dated 28.2.2001, holding him guilty, the petitioner through 2nd Review Petition, cannot re-agitate it. If such a Review Petition is allowed to be entertained, it will land in a situation where findings of this Court against a party will never attain finality.

13. This, however, does not mean that the jurisdiction of this Court is barred by any restriction placed by the Constitution; there is no Article in the Constitution which imposes any restriction or bar on this Court to revisit its earlier decision or even to depart from them, nor the doctrine of stare decisis will come in its way so long as revisiting of the judgment is warranted, in view of the significant impact on the fundamental rights of citizens or in the interest of public good. ... ...

On perusal of the paragraphs referred to hereinabove, we can safely reach a conclusion that this Court has absolute powers to re-visit, to review and or to set aside its earlier judgments/orders by invoking its Suo Motu Jurisdiction under Articles 184(3), 187 or 188 of the Constitution. The Powers of this Court to exercise its inherent jurisdiction under the above referred Articles of the Constitution are not dependant upon an application of a party."

The same view has been reiterated in a recent judgment dated 5.1.2018 passed in the case of Syed Shabbar Raza Rizvi v. Federation of Pakistan (2018 SCMR 514)."

6. In view of the legal position already declared by this Court in the above mentioned precedent cases the questions posed above are answered as follows:

(i) Can a non-compoundable offence be treated as a compoundable offence for the purpose of recording an acquittal in respect of that offence if a coordinate compoundable offence committed in the same case has been compounded by the relevant parties?

It has already been clarified in many a case that the non-compoundable offence of terrorism is an offence distinct and independent from any other coordinate offence also committed in the same case including the offences under sections 302, 365-A, 396 and 460, P.P.C., etc. and a reference in this respect may be made to the cases of Muhammad Amin v. The State (2002 SCMR 1017), Muhammad Ali and others v. The State and others (PLD 2004 Lahore 554), Muhammad Rawab v. The State (2004 SCMR 1170), Muhammad Akhtar alias Hussain v. The State (PLD 2007 SC 447) and Kareem Nawaz Khan v. The State through PGP and another (2016 SCMR 291). It is hereby held that an offence which the law declares to be non-compoundable remains non-compoundable even if in a coordinate compoundable offence a compounding takes place between the relevant parties and, therefore, despite any compounding of the coordinate compoundable offence an acquittal cannot be recorded in the non-compoundable offence on that sole basis.

(ii) Can the sentence passed in a non-compoundable offence be reduced on the ground that a coordinate compoundable offence committed in the same case has been compounded by the relevant parties?

It is declared that in an appropriate case, keeping in view the peculiar circumstances of the case, compounding of a coordinate compoundable offence may be considered by a court towards reduction of the sentence, within the permissible limits, passed for commission of a non-compoundable offence. It is further declared that consideration of this factor vis- -vis reduction of the sentence passed for commission of the non-compoundable offence lies within the discretion of the court and cannot be treated as automatic or as a matter of course.

(iii) If the answer to question No. (ii) is in the affirmative then at what stage and by which court or forum reduction in the sentence passed in respect of a non-compoundable offence be ordered, if deemed warranted in the circumstances of the case?

It is clarified that in case of compounding of a coordinate compoundable offence reduction of a sentence passed or to be passed for commission of a non-compoundable offence may be considered on that ground by the following courts at the following stages of the case:

(i) by the trial court at the time of passing the sentence at the end of the trial; or

(ii) if compounding of the coordinate compoundable offence takes place at the appellate or revisional stage before a High Court or before this Court at the stage of petition for leave to appeal or appeal or review petition then a prayer for reduction of the sentence passed for commission of the non-compoundable offence may be made on that ground before the Court seized of the pending matter; or

(iii) if this Court has already passed a final order or judgment in a petition for leave to appeal or an appeal and no review petition has been filed so far then reduction of the sentence passed for the non-compoundable offence may be sought on the ground of compounding of the coordinate compoundable offence through filing of a review petition before this Court; or

(iv) if the remedy of filing of a review petition before this Court has already been exhausted then, there being no scope for filing of a second or subsequent review petition before this Court and a party to a case or anyone else interested in the matter being in no position to seek revisiting of an earlier order or judgment of this Court, the only remedy left for seeking reduction of the sentence passed for commission of a non-compoundable offence on the ground of compounding of a coordinate compoundable offence is to file a Mercy Petition before the worthy President of Pakistan who may, in his discretion, consider this aspect in the light of the judgments passed by this Court on the subject from time to time; or

(v) if the remedy of a Mercy Petition before the President has already been exhausted before compounding of the coordinate compoundable offence has taken place then after acceptance of the compromise by the competent court in respect of the coordinate compoundable offence the Superintendent of the relevant Jail shall, upon an initiative of the convicted prisoner, forward a fresh Mercy Petition to the President on behalf of that convicted prisoner seeking fresh consideration of the matter by him in respect of the sentence passed against the convicted prisoner for commission of the non-compoundable offence in the light of compounding of the coordinate compoundable offence committed by him. When seized of such a fresh Mercy Petition the President may, in his discretion, consider the matter of the convicted prisoner's sentence passed for commission of the non-compoundable offence afresh in the light of the judgments passed by this Court on the subject from time to time.

7. The office is directed to fix the captioned appeals and petitions for hearing before appropriate Benches of this Court for their decision in terms of the legal position declared through the present judgment.

Nasir Mahmood, Advocate Supreme Court and M.S. Khattak, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioner.

Rehman Ullah, Advocate Supreme Court along with Rauf Khattak, A.D (SWD) KPK for Respondent No.1.

Date of hearing: 24th October, 2019.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts of the case are that the petitioner applied for the post of Lecturer in the subject of Pharmacy (BS-18) against the disability quota but his request was turned down on the ground that only one post of Lecturer in the subject of Pharmacy was advertised and the two percent quota prescribed under the law for the disabled persons could not be worked out against the advertised post.

2. We have examined sections 10 and 12 of the Disabled Persons (Employment and Rehabilitation) Ordinance, 1981 ("Ordinance"), as amended by the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Disabled Persons (Employment and Rehabilitation) (Amendment) Act, 2012, which state as under:-

Section 10:

"Establishments to employ disabled persons.---(1) Not less than two percent of the total number of persons employed by an establishment at any time shall be disabled persons whose names have been registered with the Employment Exchange of the area in which such establishment is located and against whose names in the register maintained under section 12 an endorsement exists to the effect that they are fit to work.

(2) The disabled persons employed against any post in pursuance of subsection (1) shall be entitled to the terms and conditions which are not less favourable than those of the other persons employed by the establishment against similar posts.

(3) When calculating the percentage of the posts in an establishment for the purposes of employment of disabled persons, the fraction of 2 and above shall count as a whole number."

Section 12

"Registration of disabled persons.---1. Any disabled persons desirous of being employed or otherwise rehabilitated may have his name registered in the register maintained by an Employment Exchange in such form and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Federal Government; and the Employment Exchange shall refer all names so registered to the Provincial Council.

2. The Provincial Council shall, if it thinks necessary, cause each disabled person registered under subsection (1) to be assessed as to the nature of his functional disability and also as to his aptitude and the nature of work he is fit to do by a medical officer authorised by it in his behalf or by such assessing board consisting of not less than one medical officer as it may appoint, and the medical officer or, as the case may be, the assessing board shall submit its report to the Provincial Council in such form as may be prescribed by the Provincial Government.

3. If the disabled person is considered by the Provincial Council fit to work, it shall so inform the Employment Exchange, indicating the nature of work for which he may be employed or the trade or vocation in which he may be trained, and an endorsement to that effect shall be made against his name in the register.

4. If the disabled person is not considered by the Provincial Council fit to work, the Provincial Council shall inform the Employment Exchange accordingly for an endorsement to that effect being made against his name in the register, and the Provincial Council shall take such measures for his rehabilitation as it thinks fit.

5. If a person is declared by the Provincial Council not to be a disabled person, his name shall be struck off the register"

The above provisions mandate that not less than two percent of the total number of persons employed by an establishment at any time shall be disabled persons. While "Establishment" under the Ordinance includes a University (see sections 2(f) and (h) of the Ordinance). Therefore, under section 10 the quota for disabled persons in an establishment is calculated on the basis of the total number of persons employed by the establishment and not on the basis of the number of posts advertised at a given time. To give effect to section 10, section 12 must also to be given full effect. Under section 12, a disabled person desirous of getting employed has to ensure that his name is registered with the Employment Exchange of the area. Additionally, the Provincial Council is to assess the nature of functional disability of the person and also as to his aptitude and the nature of work he is fit to do and if the Provincial Council is of the view that the disabled person is fit to work it shall inform the Employment Exchange, indicating the nature of work for which he may be employed. The total quota of 2% calculated on the basis of the fixed number of the employees in an establishment is then given effect through the information collected by the Employment Exchange with the assistance of the Provincial Council. Calculating the quota under section 10 will not lead to much result if the exercise under section 12 has not been undertaken, especially regarding the nature of work a disabled person is fit to perform.

3. Respondent University, in light of the above provision and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Disabled Persons (Employment and Rehabilitation) Rules, 1981, has worked out the total number of persons employed at the University to be 966 persons. Learned counsel for the University along with departmental representative submits that according to the total strength of the employees of the University, two percent quota for the disabled persons comes out to be 19 seats and the University is willing to allocate the said quota for disabled persons. Learned counsel representing the University submitted that University is in the process of formulating a policy for the allocation of this quota for disabled persons and as soon as it is done the case of the petitioner will be considered in the light of the said policy.

4. We leave it to the University to evolve a policy for disabled persons and for the allocation of the 19 posts for disabled persons in the University. While formulating the policy, the University will ensure that although disabled persons will have a separate quota under the Ordinance, however, merit will not be compromised and same threshold qualification, standard and eligibility shall be maintained as in the case of regular appointment. It is in this context that the assessment of the Provincial Council regarding the nature of work a disabled person is fit to perform, becomes relevant and crucial.

5. Let such policy be formulated within a period of three months from today. Once the policy is formulated, the case of the petitioner will be duly considered afresh by the respondent University and the findings of impugned judgment dated 28.05.2018 will not come in its way.

6. This petition is disposed of in the above terms.

MWA/S-40/L Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT

YAHYA AFRIDI, J.---Through this single judgment, we shall dispose of the instant seven petitions for leave to appeal impugning common judgment dated 12.05.2017 rendered by the Lahore High Court in Writ Petitions Nos. 2446, 4366, 4367, 4368, 4369, 4370 and 4371.

2. The precise issue to be addressed in all seven petitions relates to the renewal license fee payable by a licensee seeking to renew the license for operating FM radio under Pakistan Electronic Media Regulation Authority Ordinance, 2002 ("Ordinance").

3. The stance of Pakistan Electronic Media Regulation Authority ("PEMRA") is that the renewal license fee should be the last approved bidding price for FM radio of the area for which renewal is sought, with the annual inflationary rate set by the State Bank of Pakistan. While the seven licensee-respondents contend that the same to be the original bidding price, they had rendered and was approved by PEMRA with the additional annual inflationary rate set by the State Bank of Pakistan. The latter view contented by the seven licensee-respondents prevailed before the Lahore High Court, as recorded in the impugned judgment dated 12.05.2017. Hence, the instant petitions.

4. It would be appropriate to first understand; the subject matter of dispute between the parties, and the regulatory role of PEMRA envisaged under the applicable law.

Subject Matter

5. The subject matter of the dispute between the parties in the present petitions relates, generally to, information and communication technology ("ICT"), and in particular, radio frequency spectrum utilized for FM radios. ICT, including radio frequency spectrum, is regulated globally by International Telecommunication Union ("ITU"), a specialized agency of the United Nations mandated to maintain, standardize and allocate the rational use of telecommunication and radio frequency spectrum[1]. ITU has divided the globe into three geographical regions for allocation of ICT and including radio frequency spectrums, Pakistan is a signatory of ITU and falls in Region 3 on its allocation map. FM radio in Pakistan allocated the range of 87- 108 Mhz[2].

6. In recent years, ICT has witnessed tremendous growth, and in particular, in the wireless applications, GPS, cellular phones, WiFi, satellite TV, and public safety communications, e-health, e-commerce, and intelligent transportation systems. This fast growth in wireless related applications has created an unprecedented demand for the limited radio frequency spectrum allocated for its application by ITU. Resultantly, radio frequency spectrum has become a invited resource, and the market forces have made the same very valuable, leading to what has been referred to as spectrum scarcity[3].

7. The United States Supreme Court way back in 1943, acknowledged the marketability of the radio frequency spectrum and voiced its concern for the State to control and manage it[4]. Thereafter, many have cautioned that without such central administration, endemic interference between radio stations would produce chaos, and what has been dubbed as "a cacophony of competing voices."[5] Gordon A. Gow and Richard K. Smith[6] after analysing the Coase Theorem[7] and The Ofcom Spectrum Framework Review (2004)[8] concluded that: spectrum is subject to a condition of limited supply, which must be assigned in an efficient and equitable manner; and market forces can best ensure efficiency and equity for access to the available limited spectrum. This view has repeatedly resounded and urged the need for the limited spectrum of radio frequency to be under fair and equitable State regulation.

Regulatory Regime

8. To regulate and manage the telecommunication and radio frequency spectrum allocated by ITU to Pakistan, there are two essential enactments. Firstly, Pakistan Telecommunication (Reorganization) Act, 1996 ("Act of 1996"), which has created Pakistan Telecommunication Authority ("PTA")[9], a regulatory body, with its essential purpose to establish, operate, maintain and grant licenses for telecommunication systems and services in Pakistan[10]. Secondly, the Ordinance of 2002, which has also created a regulatory body, PEMRA[11], to regulate the establishment and operation of all broadcast media and distribution services in Pakistan.[12] However, the actual allocations of the frequencies for telecommunication and broadcast services within the allocated bands, under the Act of 1996 and Ordinance of 2002, are carried out by the Frequency Allocation Board (FAB) created under section 12 of Act of 1996.[13]

Renewal of License

9. The legal regime regulating issuance and renewal of licenses of F.M. radio is generally dealt with under the Ordinance of 2002. However, for the resolution of the dispute in hand; we would restrict our attention to the renewal license fee for FM radio. In this regard, it is noted that a licensee desirous of renewal of a license of F.M. radio may six months before the expiry of the sanctioned term of the license, apply for the same to PEMRA under section 24(5) of the Ordinance, which mandates:

> (5) The Authority may renew a license on such terms and conditions as may be prescribed and in case of refusal to renew a license reasons shall be recorded in writing.
> (emphasis provided)

10. The above provision clearly provides, inter alia, for PEMRA to renew a license on such terms and conditions, as may be "prescribed". While the term "prescribed" has been defined in section 2(s) of Ordinance of 2002 to be an instrument framed by rules or regulations made by PEMRA.

What is interesting to note that Ordinance of 2002, leaves the matter of determination of the renewal license fee to delegated legislation. We, however, note a reference to the renewal license fee in Rule 12 of The Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Rules, 2009 ("Rules of 2009"), which stipulates, inter alia, that:

Renewal of license on expiry of the license term;

(c) payment of the prescribed fee prevalent at the time of renewal and payment of outstanding dues, if any;

(emphasis provided)

12. In this regard, our attention was drawn to Regulation 9(2) of the Radio Broadcast Station Operation Regulations, 2012 ("Regulations of 2012"), framed by PEMRA, and duly notified in terms of subsection (3) of section 4 read with section 2(s) of the Ordinance of 2002, which provides:

License renewal fee shall be prevailing applicable license fee for the respective area and category of license plus rate of inflation calculated as prescribed by the State Bank of Pakistan: Provided that if bidding has not been held for such license, the renewal fee shall be determined by the Authority.

(emphasis provided)

13. The terms "renewal fee" and "renewal of licence" have been defined under clauses (h) and (qq) of Regulation 2 of the Regulation of 2012, respectively, which read:

clauses (h)

"renewal fee" means fee payable for renewal of a licence on expiry of the term of the licence."

clauses (qq)

"renewal of licence" means grant/revalidation of a licence for a similar or another term after expiry of the original term."

14. Similarly, the term "applicable license fee" provided in Regulation 9(2), has been defined in clause (f) of Regulation 2 of the Regulation of 2009 in terms that:

"payment of renewal fee as applicable at the time of renewal."

15. The "applicable license fee" as defined above, in the context of the present cases, where bidding had been carried out leads one to the fee which is determined through bidding by PEMRA. However, the above definition of the said fee, is rather vague, as it does not cater to situations, where more than one bidding has been carried out by PEMRA for a particular category and area where F.M. radio license renewal is being sought. To render clarity and completeness to the provision, the word "prevailing" has correctly been employed before the words "applicable license fee". By doing so, it has clarified that in cases, where there have been bidding carried out by PEMRA in the grant of licenses, then it would be the then-current approved bidding fee that would apply to the renewal of the license. Hence, the conjunctive reading of the above stated provisions would reveal that, in cases where bidding has been carried out in granting licenses, the renewal fee for the same shall be the "prevailing applicable license fee" for the respective area and category of license sought to be renewed conjoined with the rate of inflation calculated as prescribed by the State Bank of Pakistan. Simply put, the renewal license fee would be the last bidding price determined by the bidding carried out and approved by PEMRA for the category and area of F.M. radio for which renewal of license is being sought plus the rate of inflation calculated as prescribed by the State Bank of Pakistan.

16. Undoubtedly, the intention of the legislature was to vest PEMRA with the authority to decide the criteria for determining the renewal fee for carrying out and regulating F.M. radio. However, PEMRA opted to leave it for the market forces to determine the renewal license fee, and by doing so, surely left it for the principles of transparency, fairness and equity to prevail.

17. Now, when we review the impugned judgment, it is noted that a serious error crept in on account of restricting its consideration only to the "applicable license fee" as provided under Rule 2(f) of the Regulations of 2012, and the non-reading of the most crucial word "prevailing" as provided under Regulation 9(2) supra.

18. We have also noted that the impugned judgment has misread the term "base price" by referring to Table-II, Schedule B of the Rules of 2009, and applied the same to the renewal license fee, when the same clearly applies to the initial bidding process leading to the first license, which is issued for a particular category of license in a particular area[14]. In fact, for the renewal license fee, the impugned judgment did not consider the "base price", as expressly defined and dealt with under by regulation 2(k) of the Regulation of 2012, in terms: -

> "base price" means the minimum fee determined by the Authority from time to time to conduct bidding for a particular category of the license.

19. Similarly, the impugned judgment has erred by mis-reading the term "annual renewal fee" provided in Table-II, Schedule B of the Rules of 2009, and applied the same to the renewal license fee for the next term sought by the licensee-respondents. Whereas, the "annual renewal fee", stated in the said Table, applied to the annual renewal fee within the sanctioned term, and not the next term, which was the subject matter of the dispute between the parties.

20. Accordingly, in view of the above discourse, we hold that:

I. The renewal license fee for the next term sought by the licensee-respondents, would be the last bidding price determined by the bidding carried out and approved by PEMRA for the category and area of F.M. radio for which license is sought to be renewed plus the rate of inflation calculated as prescribed by the State Bank of Pakistan.

II. And in cases, where after the grant of license by PEMRA to licensee-respondents, there has been no bidding for the category and area of F.M. radio for which license is sought to be renewed, then the renewal license fee for the next term, would be the bidding price approved by PEMRA in favour of the licensee-respondent plus the rate of inflation calculated as prescribed by the State Bank of Pakistan.

21. For the reasons stated hereinabove, impugned judgment dated 12.05.2017 is set aside and these seven petitions are converted into appeals and allowed in terms of the above findings.

period till its culmination in issuance of the award could be taken into consideration; thirdly, for assessing the "potential value" of the acquired land, the most critical factor, which was to be kept in mind was the future utility of the proposed acquired land, keeping in view the availability of facilities for its said utilization; and finally, there could be no mathematical formula set for the determination of the compensation due to the landowners for the compulsory acquisition of their property--- Various factors depending on the circumstances of each case would cumulatively form the basis for determining the "market value" of the acquired land within the contemplation of S. 23(1) of the Act.

JUDGMENT

YAHYA AFRIDI, J.---Through these direct appeals, Sarhad Development Authority, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa ("the Acquiring Authority") has challenged the judgment of the Peshawar High Court, Peshawar dated 06.11.2017 passed in R.F.As. Nos. 200-P, 216-P, 12-P, 208-P, 209-P, 210-P, 211-P, 215-P, 212-P, 214-P, 201-P, 213-P, 204-P/2016 and 198-P/2016.

2. The Acquiring Authority, to expand the Nowshera Industrial Estate, Risalpur ("Project"), situated in Mauza Mera Kander District Nowshera, moved for the acquisition of land under the enabling provisions of Land Acquisition Act, 1894 ("Act"). In furtherance thereof, notification dated 25.05.2004 under section 4 ibid proposed to acquire 1205 kanals and 17 marlas, which was further enhanced to 1476 kanals and 18 marlas ("Acquired Property") vide notification dated 04.11.2004 ("Notification"). The acquisition proceedings, which followed thereafter, culminated in Award Nos. 495-502/DOR/ACQ dated 16.05.2007 ("Award"), inter alia, in the terms that:

"Cost of the land as determined by the field Revenue as under:

(i) Cost of the Land measuring 1476 Kanal 18 Marla Rs.4,11,55,590/-

(ii) 15% compulsory acquisition charges.

Rs. 61, 73 ,338/50

Total Rs.4,73,28,928/50

Under the circumstances explained above, I hereby pass an award for Rs. 4,73,28,928/50 in respect of the above land. The land owners shall be entitled for their share as entered in the Register Haqdaran-e -Zamin in the ownership column and in case of Shamilat Deh, according to HASB-E- RASAD KEWAT of Muza Mera Kander, Tehsil and District Nowshera.

All the Government taxes will be paid by the acquiring Department at the time of attestation of mutation."

3. The landowners being dissatisfied with the above Award moved references to the Referee Court under the enabling provisions of the Act for enhancement of the compensation of Acquired Property. The Referee Court vide judgment dated 28-10- 2009, after considering the evidence of the parties and report of the local commissioner ("Commission Report"), adjudged the compensation for the Acquired Property to be Rs.5,000/- per marla along with 15% compensation charges and 6% simple interest from the date of taking possession of the property till the actual payment. This decision of the Referee Court was challenged by the Acquiring Authority and the private landowners ("both parties") before the Peshawar High Court, and the same was set aside vide its common judgment dated 23.12.2010, wherein it was held that:

"The contentions of the learned counsel for both the parties appear to be correct as the report of the Commissioner is not supported by any cogent and convincing oral as well as documentary evidence. Even the evidence of the owners is not of a nature as could be considered of unquestionable worth for determining the market value of the property. We, thus, allow these appeals, set aside the impugned judgments and sent back the cases to the learned Referee Judge for decision afresh after issuing a fresh Commission at the expense of the respondents. In the circumstances of the case, the appellants as well as the respondents shall be at liberty to adduce additional evidence in support of their claim."

4 After remand, the compensation of the Acquired Property was again considered by the Referee Court, and relying upon the findings of another Commission Report adjudged the same to be Rs.22,000/- per marla. Both parties being dissatisfied with the said determination of the compensation impugned the same before the Peshawar High Court, which vide judgment dated 30-10-2014, set aside the decision of the Referee Court, in terms that: -

"The order of this Court has not been complied with properly and report of Local Commission relied upon is lacking the evidence in support of opinion framed by the learned Local Commissioner on points Nos. 1 to 4 as mentioned in the report Ex.CW.1/1 and has not based his opinion upon cogent and convincing evidence including averages rather opted to take the mutation in isolation along with un-registered documents which are not safe to be relied upon, rather the cogent oral and documentary evidence has to be considered for the purpose of assessment of market value/compensation. As such the report commission which was without any substance was wrongly relied upon by the trial Court thus the findings of Referee Court are not sustainable.

8. In view of what has been observed above, we allow all the appeals, set aside the judgment and decree dated 15.12.2011, by remanding the case to the trial Court with the direction to appoint a fresh Local Commission for submitting report with clarity about prevailing rate at the time of possession and notification strictly in accordance with parameters given in section 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. The learned Referee Court shall decide the matter afresh in the light of available evidence along with report commission and after hearing the parties within a period of two months positively."

5. Again after the second remand, yet another commission was constituted, and the report so submitted recommended the value of the Acquired Property to be Rs.20,000/- per marla, which was accepted by the Referee Court, and so the compensation of the Acquired Property was determined to be Rs.20,000/- per marla. Yet again, the decision of the Referee Court was challenged by both parties before the Peshawar High Court, and it decided the matter vide the impugned judgment dated 06.11.2017, whereby the Court held that:-

"12. For what has been discussed and deriving wisdom from the judgments of the Hon'ble Supreme Court (supra), the appeals of the landowners are allowed. The impugned judgments of the learned Referee Court are modified in the manner that the market price of per marla acquired land is fixed Rs.23,684/-. The appeals of the Acquiring Department (SDA), being meritless are hereby dismissed."

6. Both parties being aggrieved of the above impugned-decision, moved the appellate jurisdiction of this Court, while others claiming to be landowners of the Acquired Property have moved applications to be impleaded as parties in the instant appeals.

7. After carefully considering the valuable submissions of the learned counsel for the Acquiring Authority, two crucial issues require resolution in the instant connected appeals: firstly, whether sale transactions subsequent to the issuance of the notification under section 4 of the Act could be considered in determining the amount of compensation to be awarded to landowners for the Acquired Property; and secondly, whether this Court in its present jurisdiction, could for the first time determine disputed question of facts, in particular, whether the sale transactions relied by the Courts below were from a different mauza, and that the third commission report based its valuations on sale transactions relied by the previous commissions, which had been rejected by the High Court in its earlier decisions.

Object envisaged under the Act

8. Before we consider the above issues, it would be appropriate to first appreciate that the Act[1], aims to provide the procedure for compulsory acquisition of privately owned land needed for public purposes and for companies, and to this end, the mode and manner of determination of the amount of compensation to be awarded to the rightful owners of the Acquired Property. The legislature in its wisdom has provided in the Act, an inbuilt mechanism for redressal of grievances of persons interested in the land being compulsorily acquired. Firstly, we note that the formal declaration of the Provincial Government to acquire a particular land[2] only takes place after the objections of interested persons, if any, are addressed by the competent authority[3]. This protection afforded to the private landowners under the Act surely bolsters their fundamental right enshrined under Article 24 of the Constitution, as has been earlier dilated upon by this Court[4]. Secondly, any person aggrieved of the measurement of the Acquired Property, the amount of or to whom the compensation is payable, or the apportionment of the compensation amongst the persons interested, may in writing seek the Collector to refer the same for determination by the Referee Courts[5].

Sale transactions to be considered in determining the Compensation

9. To address the first contention raised by the learned counsel for the appellants, we note that section 23 of the Act provides for the essential criteria to be considered for determining the amount of compensation to be awarded to the landowners for compulsorily acquiring their property. The relevant provision of the said section, applicable to the present cases, as it reads before NWFP Ordinance No.XVII of 2001 ("Ordinance"), provided that:

"23. Matters to be considered in determining compensation.-

(1) In determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under this Act, the court shall take into consideration. Firstly, the market-value of the land on the date of publication of the notification under section 4, subsection (1).

(emphasis provided)

10. The Ordinance introduced various amendments in the Act, and the one relevant to the present matter, was in section 23(1) ("Amendment"), which since then remains to read:

"23. Matters to be considered in determining compensation.--

(1) In determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under this Act, the court shall take into consideration. Firstly, the market-value of the land on the date of taking possession of the land.

(emphasis provided)

11. What is interesting to note is that, unlike Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, in the other three provinces, section 23(1) of the Act has not been amended, and the "market value" of the land, as originally enacted, is determinable on basis of the value prevailing on the date of gazette publication of the notification under section 4(1) ibid. Thus, it is crucial to note that since 2001, when the Amendment was introduced in the Act, it is only in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa that, the determining criteria for deciding the "market value" of the property proposed to be acquired within the contemplation of section 23(1) has been the prevalent value of land on the date of taking possession of the said property, and not the date when the notification under section 4(i) ibid was published in the official gazette. As far as transfer of possession of the Acquired Property is concerned, we note that section 16 of the Act, expressly mandates that the possession thereof is to be taken by the Acquiring Authority, after the announcement of the award, unless there are circumstances, as provided in section 17 ibid, warranting taking the said possession of the Acquired Property at an early stage, which was admittedly not the case in the present appeals. In fact, in the present cases, the actual date of transfer of possession of the Acquired Property to the Acquiring Authority has not been brought on record, and thus, the High Court was legally correct in its cautious approach: to consider the "market value" recorded in sale mutations of similar properties dated after the publication of the Notification; and to discard sale mutations taking place subsequent to the date of the Award.

12. To sum up the first contention of the learned counsel for the appellants, we note that, the Amendment in the Act, peculiar to acquisitions of property in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, escaped his attention. Resultantly, his said contention being bereft of legal merit is dispelled.

13. Before parting with the issue in hand, it is pertinent to note that, precedents reflect a consistent trend to also consider for the purposes of determining the "market value" of property to be acquired, its "potential value" or essentially, the future use to which the said property can be put to. And in doing so, there is judicial consensus in considering sale transactions of similar nature of immovable property in the adjoining khasras or even mauzas taking place even after the date of publication of the Notification under section 4(1) of the Act for adjudging the "market value", and in doing so to finally fix the amount of compensation to be awarded to the landowners for the property acquired.

14. This Court in Mst. Iqbal Begum's case (PLD 2010 Supreme Court 719) after tracing its earlier decisions on the issue in hand, declared that:

"The principles laid down for determination of compensation reflect anxiety of law-giver to compensate those deprived of property adequately enough so as to be given gold for gold and not copper for gold." Various factors have to be taken into consideration i.e. the size and shape of the land, the locality and its situation, the tenure of property, the user, its potential value, and the rise or depression in the value of the land in the locality and even in its near vicinity. In our view real, proper and potential value, keeping in view all the relevant factors have been determined and it is unexceptionable.

15. Later, this Court in Begum Aziza's case (2014 SCMR 75), further clarified and expanded the scope of considering sale transactions, as to its time and location, for determining the amount of compensation to be paid for the acquired land in terms that:

"The market value is normally taken up as one existing on the date of notification under section 4(1) of the Land Acquisition Act under the principle of willing buyer and willing seller while the potential value was the value to which similar lands could be put to any use in future. Thus in determining the quantum of compensation the exercise may not be restricted to the time of the aforesaid notification but its future value may be taken into account .....

> While determining the value of the land acquired by the Government and the price which a willing purchaser would give to the willing seller, only the past sales should not be taken into account but the value of the land with all its potentialities may also be determined by examining (if necessary as Court witness) local property dealers or other persons who are likely to know the price that the property in question is likely to fetch in the open market..... The value of the land of the adjoining area which was simultaneously acquired and for which different formula of compensation has been adopted, should be taken into consideration..... The notification under section 4 of the Act was published on 27.04.1981; two corrigenda were issued on 6.10.1982; notification under section 5 was published on 20.7.1983; the declaration under section 6 was published on 1.2.1984 and the award was announced on 28.03.1985. Thus it took four years for appellants to complete the acquisition proceedings. The prices may have escalated during this period and this escalation has to be kept in view while assessing the potential value of the land. This is in line with the law laid down by this Court in Province of Sindh v. Ramzan (PLD 2004 SC 512), Abdul Majeed and others v. Muhammad Subhan and others (1999 SCMR 1245 at 1255) and Pakistan Burma Shell Limited v. Province of N.-W.F.P. and others (1993 SCMR 1700)."

16. More recently, this Court in Mst. Surraya Mehmood Jan's case (2015 SCMR 28), has confirmed its earlier views in terms that:

> "While undertaking this exercise, contemporaneous transactions of the same, adjoining or adjacent as well as the land in the same vicinity or locality; in dissenting precedents, may be taken into account. An award of compensation of a similar, adjacent, adjoining land or in respect of the land acquired in the same vicinity or locality cannot be ignored. The classification of the land in the Revenue Record cannot be the sole criteria for determining its value and its potential i.e. the use of which the said land can be put, must also be a factor. In this behalf, the use of the land in its vicinity needs to be examined."

17. Thus, in view of the above, it would be safe to state that not only in Khyber Pahktunkhwa, but even in other three provinces, where section 23(1) of the Act has not been amended, it is noted that: firstly, the value of similar land in the adjoining khasras and mauzas to the acquired land was taken into consideration for determining the amount of compensation to be awarded to owners of the acquired property; and secondly, the escalation of price of land during the acquisition period till its culmination in issuance of the award could be taken into consideration; and thirdly, for assessing the "potential value" of the acquired land, the most critical factor, which is to be kept in mind is the future utility of the proposed acquired land, keeping in view the availability of facilities for its said utilization; and finally, there can be no mathematical formula set for the determination of the compensation due to the landowners for the compulsory acquisition of their property. And thus, various factors depending on the circumstances of each case would cumulatively form the basis for determining the "market value" of the acquired land within the contemplation of section 23(1) of the Act.

Jurisdiction to determine disputed questions of fact not agitated earlier

18. Now coming to the next contention of the learned counsel for the Acquiring Authority. It has been urged that the Courts below had considered sale mutations of property having no nexus to the location of the Acquired Property and that the same had already been rejected by the earlier decisions of the High Court. In this regard, when the learned counsel for the Acquiring Authority was confronted to point out whether these grounds were taken by the Acquiring Authority in its objections to the last Commission Report or as a ground of appeal before the High Court leading to the impugned decision, he was unable to positively do so. It is by now settled[7] that this Court in its appellate jurisdiction, would generally not determine any question of fact, that has not been pleaded or raised by the parties at any stage before the learned Referee Court or the High Court and is for the first time raised in appeal before this Court. Hence, we are not inclined to enter into the disputed questions of fact raised for the first time before this Court. Accordingly, the second contention of the learned counsel for the Acquiring Authority is also devoid of legal merit, and so declined.

19. For the reasons stated hereinabove, we are of the view that the impugned decision rendered by the High Court is in accord with the settled principles of the law and has also correctly appreciated the evidence on the record, and thus, warrants no interference by this Court. These appeals being devoid of merit are dismissed.

Learned counsel for the applicants does not press these civil Miscellaneous Applications and wishes to withdraw the same in order to pursue the remedy before the proper forum. Accordingly, the same are dismissed as withdrawn.

MANZOOR AHMAD MALIK, J.---Criminal Appeal No. 143-J of 2015: After a regular trial, the appellant Ameer Ali was convicted by the trial court under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced to death for committing Qatl-i-amd of Ijaz Ahmad. Along with him Ghulam Hussain, Abbas and Shehbaz were also convicted and sentenced under different penal provisions; detail whereof is given in Para 1 of the impugned judgment, whereas nine others who were also indicted along with appellant and his co-convicts were acquitted and the trial court after giving them benefit of doubt. The appellant and his co-convicts filed criminal appeals before the learned Lahore High Court, Lahore. A murder reference was also sent for confirmation of sentence of death of appellant. The complainant filed a criminal appeal and criminal revision against acquittal of co-accused and for enhancement of sentences of co-convicts. Through the impugned judgment, the learned appellate court answered the murder reference in the negative, dismissed the appeal of the appellant and converted his sentence of death into imprisonment for life. The appeal of co-convicts Ghulam Hussain, Abbas and Shehbaz was also dismissed through the impugned judgment. The criminal revision and the criminal appeal filed by the complainant met the same fate. Thereafter, the appellant filed a jail petition, wherein leave was granted by this Court on 02.12.2015 and on the strength of leave granted to appellant, leave was also granted in the criminal petition filed by the complainant for enhancement of sentences of appellant and co-convicts Ghuiam Hussain, Abbas and Shahbaz. Hence, the instant appeals.

2. The machinery of law was set into motion through FIR (Exh.PE/1) drafted on the statement (Exh.PE) of Muhammad Ilyas complainant. It is case of the prosecution in the FIR that the complainant along with five others 'including the deceased and injured prosecution witnesses was proceeding to participate in a festival (maila) and in the way they were assaulted by Ameer Ali (appellant) and eleven others. Firearm injury on the person of Ijaz Ahmad (deceased) was attributed to Ameer Ali (appellant). Similarly a fireshot on the person of the said deceased was also attributed to Shahbaz. Thereafter murderous assault and specific injuries were attributed to Ghulam Hussain, Shahzad, Abbas and Ibrar. Motive behind the occurrence, as alleged in the FIR was that one year prior to the occurrence there was a quarrel between Ijaz (deceased) and Ameer Ali and others and due to that grudge the assault was launched.

3. We have heard learned counsel for the parties at length and have perused the available record with their assistance.

4. It is the case of the prosecution that during the occurrence, the fire so shot by appellant Ameer Ali with his repeater .12 bore hit Ijaz Ahmed on his chest, whereas the second fire shot by Shahbaz, co-convict with his 12 bore double barrel gun hit Ijaz Ahmed on his neck and chest. During the postmortem examination of Ijaz Ahmed (deceased), Dr. Muhammad Javaid (PW1) observed three firearm wounds on his person: Injury No. 1 is a firearm wound on left of his chest, front and below nipple Injury No. 2 is a firearm wound on the left side of chest above left nipple; and injury No.3 is a firearm wound on base of left side of neck. According to doctor, all the three injuries were sufficient to cause death in ordinary course of nature. Perusal of charge sheet reveals that co-accused Shahbaz along with appellant and other acquitted co-accused were charged by the trial court under sections 148, 302 read with sections 149, 324 read with sections 149, 449 and 324, P.P.C.. However, the learned trial court after appraisal of evidence concluded that every accused was responsible for the act done by him individually and as such said court did not convict co-accused Shahbaz under section 302(b), P.P.C. for the murder of Ijaz Ahmed notwithstanding the fact that in the FIR and in the statement of eye-witnesses recorded before the trial court, he was attributed two firearm injuries on the person of Ijaz Ahmed (deceased) and as per doctor, all the three firearm injuries contributed towards death of Ijaz Ahmed (deceased). Before the learned High Court, the complainant Muhammad Ilyas filed a criminal appeal against the acquittal of co-accused of the appellant and a criminal revision for enhancement of sentence of fine of appellant Amir Ali and for enhancement of sentences of co-convicts Ghulam Hussain, Shahbaz and Abbas to death as they committed the crime in furtherance of their common intention and common object. The criminal appeal and criminal revision filed by the complainant (appellant in connected appeal) was dismissed by the learned High Court. It is relevant to mention here that the complainant did not file any separate appeal against the acquittal of Shahbaz for the murder of Ijaz Ahmed (deceased), who was attributed specific injuries on the person of Ijaz Ahmed (deceased) not only in the FIR but in the statements of eye-witnesses. Before this Court as well, the complainant has not specifically challenged the acquittal of co-accused Shahbaz for the murder of Ijaz Ahmed (deceased). In these circumstances, it is to be seen what independent corroboration is available on record which could distinguish the case of the appellant from that of his co-accused/co-convict Shahbaz.

5. During course of investigation, a gun (P7) was recovered from the appellant along with live cartridges but the report of the FSL is confined only to its working order. Similarly a gun (P.8) was recovered from co-convict/co-accused Shahbaz with cartridges but the report of FSL qua that gun is also confined to its working order. The learned trial court has already disbelieved this piece of evidence.

6. The motive behind the occurrence was not believed by the learned appellate court. On our own independent scrutiny, it has been observed by us that a vague motive was set out in the FIR and the eye-witnesses, while appearing before the trial Court made material improvements and introduced rather a different motive. In the FIR it was alleged that occurrence had taken place because of a quarrel between Ijaz Ahmad (deceased) and appellant etc a year prior to the occurrence. However, while appearing before the trial court, the witnesses of ocular account stated that the appellant's side had been pressurizing the complainant side to enter into a compromise and on refusal of the complainant side, the occurrence had taken place. In these circumstances, the motive set out by the prosecution remained far from being proved.

7. It is relevant to mention here that no injury on the person of any injured PWs is attributed to the appellant. The learned trial court has concluded that every accused in this case is responsible for his own act and for injury on the person of deceased or injured PWs. Thus, the appellant stands absolved from the vicarious liability under section 149, P.P.C. to the extent of injuries on the persons of injured PWs Liaqat Ali (PW11) and Shahzad (PW12).

8. It is crystal clear that the case of the prosecution, against the appellant and his co-accused/co-convict Shahbaz to the extent of murder of Ijaz Ahmed (deceased) was on the same pedestal. At the cost of reiteration, it has been observed by us that significantly one injury was attributed to the appellant on the chest of Ijaz Ahmed, whereas two injuries were attributed to Shahbaz on the chest and neck of deceased and as per doctor all the three injuries contributed towards the death of Ijaz Ahmed. Since the prosecution failed to bring on record any strong and independent corroboration to distinguish the case of appellant from that of his co-accused Shahbaz, therefore, in the circumstances of the case, it can safely be held that case of prosecution against the appellant for the murder of Ijaz Ahmed (deceased) is not proved beyond reasonable doubt.

9. For what has been discussed above, the instant criminal appeal is allowed. The conviction and sentence of appellant Ameer Ali are set aside. He is acquitted of the charge framed against him. He shall be released forthwith, if not required to be detained in any other criminal case.

Criminal Appeal No. 142-L of 2015.

10. Since we have acquitted Respondent No. 1 Ameer Ali in the preceding paragraphs, therefore, the instant appeal to his extent has lost its relevance, which is dismissed accordingly.

11. So far as prayer of appellant for enhancement of sentences of Respondents Nos. 2 to 4 is concerned, it has been observed by us that the reasons assigned by the learned High Court for dismissing the criminal revision filed by the appellant are neither arbitrary nor fanciful or capricious, warranting interference by this Court. Therefore, the instant criminal appeal to the extent of Respondents Nos. 2 to 4 being without merit is also dismissed.

MWA/M-66/SC Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The legal question that concerns us is the application of the punishment of forfeiture of property under section 37 of the Control of Narcotic Substances Ordinance, 1995 ("Ordinance") to an offence that was committed prior to the introduction of such punishment in law.

2. The facts of the case are simple and admitted. The predecessor-in-interest of the appellant namely; Tasneem Jalal was convicted for the offences of possessing, aiding and abetting with the intent to distribute Heroin vide judgment dated 26.09.1993, passed by the United States District Court in the District of New Jersey, USA for a term of 108 months under the relevant law.

3. Subsequently, in Pakistan, the Federal Government through their authorized representative moved an application under section 37 of the Ordinance before the Lahore High Court, Lahore on 28.09.1995, praying for forfeiture of the properties acquired by the predecessor-in-interest of the appellant in Pakistan. List of the said properties was attached with the application. Leave was granted vide order dated 26.01.2015 to consider whether section 37 of the Ordinance is applicable to the present case?

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record of the case with their able assistance. The Ordinance was promulgated on 29.11.1995 having, inter alia, repealed the Dangerous Drugs Act, 1930 ("DDA"). Section 37 of the Ordinance provides that where a citizen of Pakistan is convicted by a foreign court for an offence which is also an offence punishable under the Ordinance, the Court (i.e., High Court) may on an application by the Director-General or any other authorized officer of the Federal Government order that the assets acquired in Pakistan of such a citizen are forfeited. Section 37 is reproduced hereunder for reference:-

"37. Forfeiture of assets of person convicted abroad.---(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, where a citizen of Pakistan is convicted by a foreign Court for an offence which is also an offence punishable under this Ordinance, the Court may, on an application made by the Director-General or any other officer authorized by the Federal Government, order that the assets acquired in Pakistan by such citizen shall be forfeited to the Federal Government:

Provided that the judgment or order of conviction---

(a) is passed by the foreign Court of competent jurisdiction;

(b) has been pronounced on the merits of the case;

(c) has not been obtained by fraud;

(d) has not been made in contravention of any law in force in Pakistan;

(e) has assumed finality through appeal, revision or review and is not sub judice before any appellate forum:

Provided further no order under this section shall be made without providing an opportunity of being heard to such citizen:

Provided also that, notwithstanding anything contained in clauses (a) to (e) of the first proviso, during the pendency of the application the Court may, by an order, freeze all or any of the assets or restrain such citizen, his associate and relative from alienating such assets by lease, sale, gift, transfer or in any other manner.

Explanation.---For the purpose of this section, the expression 'Court' means the High Court of the Province where the assets or any portion thereof are located."

5. The said Ordinance was promulgated on 29.11.1995 whereas the offence took place in September, 1992 and the predecessor-in-interest of the appellant was convicted and sentenced on 26.09.1993 in the USA. Therefore, at the time of the offence (1992), the punishment of forfeiture of properties of the appellant in Pakistan was not available under the law as the Ordinance was promulgated in the year 1995. Article 12 of the Constitution is very clear on the subject and provides as follows:-

"12. Protection against retrospective punishment

(1) No law shall authorize the punishment of a person:-

(a) for an act or omission that was not punishable by law at the time of the act or omission; or

(b) for an offence by a penalty greater than, or of a kind different from, the penalty prescribed by law for that offence at the time the offence was committed.

(2) Nothing in clause (1) or in Article 270 shall apply to any law making acts of abrogation or subversion of a Constitution in force in Pakistan at any time since the twenty-third day of March, one thousand nine hundred and fifty-six, an offence."

Fundamental right under Article 12 protects a person against punishment for an offence (act or omission) that was not punishable at the time of the offence. Clearly, the punishment of forfeiture of the properties of the accused in Pakistan against a conviction of a foreign court did not exist at the time of the offence or the conviction. Therefore, section 37 of the Ordinance is not applicable to an offence committed by the predecessor-in-interest of the appellant before its promulgation. See Khan Asfandyar Wali v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2001 Supreme Court 607), Abdul Rehman v. State (1978 SCMR 292) and Maqbool Ahmad v. State (2007 SCMR 116).

6. The erstwhile DDA, which was in force prior to the Ordinance and at the time of the offence, did not provide for any such punishment. Reference to section 35-C of the DDA by the prosecution is grossly misplaced. Section 35-C reproduced hereunder does not give effect to conviction of a foreign court in Pakistan, hence the sentence referred to in section 35-C cannot be read to give effect to a sentence awarded by a foreign court as has been clearly done in section 37 of the Ordinance. Section 35-C, for convenience, is reproduced hereunder:-

> "35-C. Court to order forfeiture of assets: When any person found guilty of an offence punishable under Chapter III is sentenced to imprisonment for a term of two years or more, the Court shall also order that his assets shall stand forfeited to the Federal Government and impose on him a sentence of fine which shall not be less than twice the value of the assets."

7. In this view of the matter, this appeal is allowed and the impugned judgment dated 31.07.2002 is set aside and the forfeited properties of the predecessor-in-interest of the appellant shall stand released, unless encumbered or attached in some other proceedings.

8. Criminal Misc. Application No.221-L of 2018: This is an application filed by an intervener who has statedly acquired interest in the properties in question. In the light of the above judgment, this application has become infructuous, and the applicant is free to pursue his remedy available to him under the law. Disposed of.

9. Criminal Misc. Application No.189-L of 2019: This is a reply filed by respondent No.1. The said reply has been entertained and considered. Application allowed.

Civil Petition No. 1631-L of 2018, decided on 20th March, 2019.

(On appeal from the judgment of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 14.5.2018 passed in R.F.A. No. 605 of 2014)

Insurance Ordinance (XXXIX of 2000)---

----S. 115---Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984), Art. 133---Accidental Death and Indemnity Benefit Policy ('AIB Policy')---Injury and permanent disability---Proof---Statement made by policy holder during examination-in-chief regarding his accident and permanent disability not cross-examined---Effect---Statement of policy holder stood admitted.

Evidence available on the record established that respondent-policy holder was suffering from traumatic paraplegia and was permanently disabled for life. This could be inferred from his statement, when he appeared before the (Insurance) Tribunal. Respondent was not, cross-examined on the material fact that he had met with an accident and was disabled and now confined to wheelchair for life. In absence of any cross-examination on this material fact, the statement made by respondent in his examination- in-chief stood admitted.

Further, State Life Insurance Corporation ('the Corporation') itself carried out a test in the year 2008, declaring respondent to be disabled for life. More importantly, relying on the evidence filed along with the claim of respondent, the Corporation allowed sickness benefit to the respondent. So, while relying on the same evidence, the respondent had been allowed sickness benefit, whereas for the purpose of granting annuity to him under the Accidental Death and Indemnity Benefit Policy ('AIB Policy'), the same evidence had been rejected. Courts below had rightly held that respondent was entitled to annuity under the AIB Policy.

Ibrar Ahmed, Advocate Supreme Court and Imtiaz A. Shaukat, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners.

Liaqat Ali Butt, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent.

Date of hearing: 19th March, 2019.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J,---The respondent held a life insurance policy ("Policy") in the sum of Rs.500,000/-, issued by the State Life Insurance Corporation (petitioner), dated 01.2.2004, and along with said policy, the respondent through a supplementary contract also held the Accidental Death and Indemnity Benefit Policy ("AIB Policy") for an additional premium. Admittedly, during the currency of the said policies, respondent met with a road accident in United Kingdom on 13.1.2006 and subsequently filed a claim under the AIB Policy.

2. Learned counsel for the petitioner has argued that the claim of the respondent was not maintainable as it was not filed within the time stipulated in the Policy. He also argued that there is no evidence on the record to establish that respondent had suffered permanent disability and that in the facts of the case, liquidated damages could not have been imposed on the petitioners. During the course of arguments, he submitted that on the basis of the claim submitted by the respondent, he was granted sickness benefit in the sum of Rs.130,000/- under the said policy.

3. Learned counsel for respondent on the other hand supported the judgments of the Tribunal and the High Court and submitted that it has been established that respondent suffered from permanent disability and was entitled to the annuity under the AIB policy.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at some length and perused the record. The question regarding late filing of the claim was not framed as an issue between the parties before the Tribunal and, therefore, we are not inclined to go into that question. As far as the factum of respondent having met with an accident in United Kingdom resulting in permanent disability is concerned, while we agree with the learned counsel for the petitioners that reliance cannot be placed on Mark-A and Mark-B produced by respondent along with his claim, there is still other evidence available on the record which establishes that respondent is suffering from trauamatic paraplegia and is permanently disabled for life. This can be inferred from the statement of respondent, who appeared before the Tribunal as AW-1. Respondent was not cross-examined on the material fact that he had met with an accident and was disabled and now confined to wheelchair for life. In absence of any cross-examination on this material fact, the statement made by respondent in his examination- in-chief stands admitted. Further, petitioner Corporation itself carried out a test in the year 2008, declaring respondent to be disabled for life. More importantly, relying on the evidence filed along with the claim of respondent, petitioner Corporation allowed sickness benefit in the sum of Rs.130,000/- to respondent. So, while relying on the same evidence, the petitioners have been allowed sickness benefit, whereas for the purpose of granting annuity to the respondents under the AIB policy, the same evidence has been rejected.

5. As far as liquidated damages are concerned, section 118 of the Insurance Ordinance, 2000 provides that in case of late settlement of claims, the insurer is bound to make payment of liquidated damages as provided under section 118(2). It is, therefore, a statutory requirement and is attracted in the present case.

6. For the above reasons and in the peculiar facts and circumstances of this case, we are not inclined to interfere in the concurrent judgments of the Courts below. Leave is, therefore, refused and this petition is dismissed.

JUDGMENT

ASIF SAEED KHAN KHOSA, C.J.---Respondents Nos. 1 to 5 had been convicted by the trial court on two counts of an offence under section 302, P.P.C. read with sections 148 and 149, P.P.C. and were variously sentenced but on appeal their convictions and sentences recorded by the trial court were set aside and they were acquitted of the charge by the High Court. Hence, the present appeal by leave of this Court granted on 13.12.2011.

2. Leave to appeal had been granted in this case in order to reappraise the evidence and with the assistance of the learned counsel for the parties we have undertaken that exercise.

3. The record of the case shows that five crime-empties had been recovered from the place where the dead bodies of Manzoor and Noor Hussain were present at the spot and it had completely been suppressed by the prosecution that the deceased had also resorted to firing at the place of occurrence. The motive set up by the prosecution regarding damaging of a drain of waste water by the accused party at the spot had remained far from being established and the site-plan of the place of occurrence did not show any drain having been damaged. After an elaborate reappraisal of the evidence available on the record the High Court had concluded that some material facts had been suppressed by the complainant party and it was not clear how and why the occurrence had taken place. In these circumstances the High Court had decided to extend the benefit of doubt to respondents Nos. 1 to 5 and had acquitted them of the charge. The respondents' acquittal had come about in the year 2009, i.e. about 10 years ago and the criminal case in hand had originated about 19 years ago. The reasons recorded by the High Court for recording acquittal of respondents Nos. 1 to 5 have been found by us to be cogent and valid. No jurisdictional infirmity, illegality of approach, irregularity of procedure or perversity of reasoning on the part of High Court has been highlighted before us so as to warrant interference in the impugned judgment of acquittal passed by the High Court. This appeal is, therefore, dismissed. The bail bonds and sureties of respondents Nos. 1 to 5, if any, shall stand discharged.

ORDER

MANZOOR AHMAD MALIK, J.---Respondent Javed, after a regular trial, was convicted by the trial court under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced to death, with direction to pay compensation of Rs.100,000/- to the legal heirs of deceased. He challenged his conviction and sentence before the Peshawar High Court, Peshawar by filing a criminal appeal, whereas a murder reference was sent by the trial court for confirmation of sentence of death or otherwise. Through the impugned judgment, the learned High Court allowed the criminal appeal of respondent, set aside his conviction and sentence, answered the murder reference in the negative and acquitted the respondent of the charge framed against him. Against the said judgment, the appellant filed a criminal petition, wherein leave was granted by this Court on 18.09.2014. Hence, the instant criminal appeal.

2. We have heard learned counsel for the parties at length and have perused the available record with their assistance.

3. It has been observed by us that the learned appellate court, after proper reappraisal of evidence available on record, has rendered findings of acquittal in favour of respondent. In addition to the said findings, it has been observed by us that the occurrence in this case, as per prosecution, took place on 19.02.2005 at 10.00 p.m. The matter was reported to police in the intervening night of 19/20.02.2005 at 1.00 a.m (night). The postmortem examination on the dead body of Mst. Naheeda (deceased) was conducted by Dr. Faiqa Elahi (PW7) on 20.02.2005 at 8.50 a.m. Even if delay in conducting the postmortem examination on the dead body of deceased, in the circumstances of the case, is ignored, the fact remains that in the relevant column of inquest report "brief history of crime", nothing is mentioned regarding facts of the case despite the claim of prosecution that matter was reported to police within three hours of the occurrence i.e. in the intervening night of 19/20.02.2005 at 1.00 a.m (night). This circumstance alone casts serious doubts about the veracity of prosecution case against the respondent and the claim of the eye-witnesses Mst. Yasmeen (PW5) and Mst. Kabalo (PW6) to have witnessed the occurrence.

4. The occurrence in this case, as per prosecution, had taken place in the month of February at 10.00 p.m. In the FIR, the complainant Mst. Yasmeen (PW5) has herself mentioned that at the time of occurrence there was no electricity at the place of occurrence due to loadshedding. No source of light has been mentioned in the site plan either.

5. During the course of investigation, nothing was recovered from the respondent. He is not even connected with the motive part of the prosecution story. It has been admitted by the learned counsel for the appellant that in a separate trial, co-accused of the respondent namely Muhammad Jan, Bakhtiar and Akbar Ali, who along with the respondent were equally charged by the complainant with the allegation of firing at the deceased were acquitted by the trial court and no appeal against their acquittal was filed by the complainant-appellant.

6. For the foregoing this appeal having no merit is dismissed.

(On appeal from the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 21.11.2017 passed in Income Tax References Nos. 304 to 307 of 2014)

Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----Ss. 120, 171 (Explanation) & 171(2)(c)---Tax refund---Due date---Additional payment or compensation for delayed refund---For the purposes of compensation, tax refund became due from the date of the refund order and not from the date of deemed assessment under S. 120 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001.

Explanation to section 171 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('the Ordinance') provided that for the purposes of compensation, tax refund becomes due from the date of the refund order and not from the date of deemed assessment under section 120. In other words, the mechanism of refund under the Ordinance, worked on the basis of a refund order passed on an application for refund filed by tax payer and duly scrutinized by the Commissioner and was not payable simply on the basis of the deemed assessment under section 120. The scheme of refund provided under the statute overrode the deeming provision of section 120. Deemed assessment under section 120 was, therefore, not a substitute for a refund order. It appeared, as if the return of tax or refund by the Exchequer to a taxpayer required scrutiny by the Commissioner and could not be deemed to be an amount outstanding in favour of the taxpayer. The taxpayer was free to apply for refund under section 170, immediately after the filing of the tax return or the deemed assessment. Section 170 provided a fast-tracked mechanism for refund as it specified time for the passing of a refund order and the remedy of appeal in case of failure to pass any such order. Other than this fast-track refund mechanism there was no scheme of automatic refund on the basis of the deemed assessment as was made amply clear by the Explanation to section 171 of the Ordinance.

Explanation to section 171 of the Ordinance enjoyed retrospective effect because its purpose was "removal of doubt" besides supplying necessary statutory "clarification." However, the retrospective operation of the Explanation shall not affect past and closed transactions where the benefit of refund and compensation had already been extended to the taxpayer on the basis of deemed assessment under section 120.

In the present case, the applications for refund filed by the petitioner-taxpayer under section 170 were taken up by Assistant Commissioner Inland Revenue in the year 2010 and initially rejected. After remand of the matter by Commissioner Inland Revenue (CIR) (Appeals), the Deputy Commissioner Inland Revenue (DCIT) passed refund order on 22-03-2013. The matter remained under litigation between the department and the taxpayer, and refund order was passed on 23-03-2013, rather than 15-02-2011, when the CIR (Appeals) simply remanded the matter to the DCIT to decide the same afresh. Therefore, the date of refund order passed by DCIT i.e., 22-03-2013 would be the date when the refund became due as per section 171(2)(c) [instead of section 171(2)(a)] of the Ordinance.

Shahbaz Butt, Advocate Supreme Court along with Iqbal Hashmi, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in all cases).

Mian Yousaf Umer, Advocate Supreme Court along with Imtiaz A. Shaukhat, Advocate-on-Record for Respondent (in all cases).

Date of hearing: 5th March, 2020.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question before us is to determine the date when tax refund becomes due to the petitioner (taxpayer) under the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 (the "Ordinance") for the purposes of Additional Payment or compensation for delayed refund.

2. Brief facts are that the petitioner filed tax returns along with refund applications for Tax Years 2004 to 2008. The refund applications were taken up under section 170 and rejected by the Assistant Commissioner Inland Revenue, Regional Tax Office, Lahore on 23.09.2010. On appeal filed by the petitioner before the Commissioner Inland Revenue (Appeals) [CIR (Appeals)], Lahore the case was remanded to Taxation Officer on 15.02.2011 for a fresh decision. The Deputy Commissioner Inland Revenue (DCIT) decided the matter on 22.03.2013 granting refund to the petitioner, as well as, additional payment (compensation) for delayed refund w.e.f 15.02.2011 i.e., the date when CIR (Appeals) decided the appeals and remanded the matters to the DCIT. Petitioner, aggrieved of the date of the refund due, preferred appeals before CIR (Appeals) which were dismissed on the question of jurisdiction; holding that no appeal lay against an order under section 171 of the Ordinance. The petitioner filed an appeal before the Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue (ATIR) which was allowed vide order dated 12.09.2014, granting Additional Payment (compensation) to the petitioner for delayed refunds from the date of the deemed assessment under section 120 of the Ordinance when the petitioner had filed the annual income tax returns for the relevant tax years. The tax department assailed the order before the High Court by filing appeals which were allowed vide impugned order dated 21.11.2017 holding the date of the refund due in terms of section 171(2)(a) to be w.e.f 22.03.2013 - the date when DCIT passed the refund order in favour of the petitioner.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties. The petitioner defended the order of the Tribunal while the respondent department supported the view of the High Court in the impugned judgment. We have examined the relevant provisions of the Ordinance, in particular, sections 120, 170, 171 and the Explanation inserted in section 171(2) vide Finance Act, 2013, dated 01.07.2013. These provisions have been reproduced in the Schedule to this judgment for ready reference.

4. Under the scheme of the Ordinance (Chapter X, Part VI) a taxpayer, who has paid tax in excess of the amount which is properly chargeable under the Ordinance, may apply to the Commissioner for the refund of the excess under section 170. The application for refund has to be in the prescribed form and verified in the prescribed manner and is to be made within three years of the later of the (i) assessment order (under section 120) issued by the Commissioner to the taxpayer for the tax year to which the refund application relates or (ii) the date on which the tax was paid. The Commissioner if satisfied that the tax has been overpaid by the taxpayer may do the following in a sequential manner: (i) apply the excess in reduction of any tax due from the taxpayer under the Ordinance. (ii) apply the balance, if any, to pay any outstanding liability of the taxpayer to pay other taxes and (iii) refund the remainder, if any to the taxpayer. The Commissioner is to decide the refund application within 60 days of the receipt of the application and decide the same after granting a hearing to the taxpayer. Any one aggrieved of the refund order or the failure of the Commissioner to decide the application within the specified time can file an appeal as provided in the Ordinance. Once the refund order has been passed which may entail cash refund or adjustment against pending liability as envisaged under section 170(3). Thereafter, if the refund is delayed and not paid to the taxpayer within three months of the date on which it becomes due, the taxpayer gets entitled to compensation at the rate of KIBOR plus 0.5 percent per annum of the amount of refund computed for the period commencing at the end of the three month period and ending on the date on which it is paid. Subsection (2) of section 171 refers to dates which are treated to be the dates when the refund becomes due. Sections 170 and 171, therefore, provide a complete mechanism for claiming tax refund by a taxpayer. Such an application undergoes proper scrutiny and only upon satisfaction of the Commissioner is the refund order issued.

5. The impression that deemed assessment under section 120, when the annual tax return filed under section 114 shows a refund payable to the taxpayer, passes for a refund order, stands dispelled by the Explanation to section 171 inserted through Finance Act, 2013, which states as under:

> Explanation.-- For the removal of doubt, it is clarified that where a refund order is made on an application under subsection (1) of section 170, for the purpose of compensation, the refund becomes due from the date refund order is made and not from the date the assessment of income treated to have been made by the Commissioner under section 120."

For removal of any doubt and as a clarification, the Explanation provides that for the purposes of compensation, tax refund becomes due from the date of the refund order and not from the date of deemed assessment under section 120. In other words, the mechanism of refund under the Ordinance, works on the basis of a refund order passed on an application for refund filed by tax payer and duly scrutinized by the Commissioner and is not payable simply on the basis of the deemed assessment under section 120. The scheme of refund provided under the statute overrides the deeming provision of section 120. Deemed assessment under section 120 is, therefore, not a substitute for a refund order. It appears, as if the return of tax or refund by the Exchequer to a taxpayer requires scrutiny by the Commissioner and cannot be deemed to be an amount outstanding in favour of the taxpayer. The taxpayer is free to apply for refund under section 170, immediately after the filing of the tax return or the deemed assessment. Section 170 provides a fast tracked mechanism for refund as it specifies time for the passing of a refund order and the remedy of appeal in case of failure to pass any such order. Other than this fast-track refund mechanism there is no scheme of automatic refund on the basis of the deemed assessment as is made amply clear by the Explanation. The Explanation enjoys retrospective effect because its purpose is "removal of doubt" besides supplying necessary statutory "clarification." However, the retrospective operation of the Explanation shall not affect past and closed transactions where the benefit of refund and compensation has already been extended to the taxpayer on the basis of deemed assessment under section 120.

6. The instant case pertains to pre-2013, it has been argued by the petitioner that the tax refund became due from the date of the deemed assessment under section 120 of the Ordinance. This argument is not available to the petitioner. Firstly, the case of the petitioner is not a past and closed transaction and secondly, the petitioner had moved a refund application under section 170 of the Ordinance which was processed and finally refund order was passed on 22.03.2013.

7. In the present case, the applications for refund filed by the petitioner under section 170 were taken up by Assistant Commissioner Inland Revenue in the year 2010 and initially rejected. After remand of the matter by CIR (Appeals), DCIT passed refund order on 22.03.2013. The matter remained under litigation between the department and the taxpayer, and refund order was passed on 23.03.2013, rather than 15.02.2011, when the CIR (Appeals) simply remanded the matter to the DCIT to decide the same afresh. Therefore, the date of refund order passed by DCIT i.e., 22.03.2013 will be the date when the refund becomes due as per section 171(2)(c) [instead of section 171(2)(a)] as correctly noted by the High Court.

8. For the above reasons, these petitions fail and are, therefore, dismissed.

SCHEDULE

"120. Assessments.-(1) Where a taxpayer has furnished a complete return of income (other than a revised return under subsection (6) of section 114) for a tax year ending on or after the 1st day of July, 2002,-

> (a) the Commissioner shall be taken to have made an assessment of taxable income for that tax year, and the tax due thereon, equal to those respective amounts specified in the return; and
> (b) the return shall be taken for all purposes of this Ordinance to be an assessment order issued to the taxpayer by the Commissioner on the day the return was furnished.

(1A) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (1), the Commissioner may [conduct audit of the income tax affairs of a person] under section 177 and all the provisions of that section shall apply accordingly.]

(2) A return of income shall be taken to be complete if it is in accordance with the provisions of subsection (2) of section 114.

(3) Where the return of income furnished is not complete, the Commissioner shall issue a notice to the taxpayer informing him of the deficiencies (other than incorrect amount of tax payable on taxable income, as specified in the return, or short payment of tax payable) and directing him to provide such information, particulars, statement or documents by such date specified in the notice.

(4) Where a taxpayer fails to fully comply, by the due date, with the requirements of the notice under subsection (3), the return furnished shall be treated as an invalid return as if it had not been furnished.

(5) Where, in response to a notice under subsection (3), the taxpayer has, by the due date, fully complied with the requirements of the notice, the return furnished shall be treated to be complete on the day it was furnished and the provisions of subsection (1) shall apply accordingly.

(6) No notice under subsection (3) shall be issued after the [expiry of one hundred and eighty days from the end of the financial year in which return was furnished], and the provisions of subsection (1) shall apply accordingly.

170. Refunds.- (1) A taxpayer who has paid tax in excess of the amount which the taxpayer is properly chargeable under this Ordinance may apply to the Commissioner for a refund of the excess.

(1A) Where any advance or loan, to which sub-clause (e) of clause (19) of section 2 applies, is repaid by a taxpayer, he shall be entitled to a refund of the tax, if any, paid by him as a result of such advance or loan having been treated as dividend under the aforesaid provision.

(2) An application for a refund under subsection (1) shall be -

(a) made in the prescribed form;

(b) verified in the prescribed manner; and

(c) made within [three] years of the later of -

(i) the date on which the Commissioner has issued the assessment order to the taxpayer for the tax year to which the refund application relates; or

(ii) the date on which the tax was paid.

(3) Where the Commissioner is satisfied that tax has been overpaid, the Commissioner shall -

(a) apply the excess in reduction of any other tax due from the taxpayer under this Ordinance;

(b) apply the balance of the excess, if any, in reduction of any outstanding liability of the taxpayer to pay other taxes; and

(c) refund the remainder, if any, to the taxpayer.

(4) The Commissioner shall, within [sixty] days of receipt of a refund application under subsection (1), serve on the person applying for the refund an order in writing of the decision [after providing the taxpayer an opportunity of being heard].

(5) A person aggrieved by-

(a) an order passed under subsection (4); or

(b) the failure of the Commissioner to pass an order under subsection (4) within the time specified in that subsection, may prefer an appeal under Part III of this Chapter.

171. Additional payment for delayed refunds.- (1) Where a refund due to a taxpayer is not paid within three months of the date on which it becomes due, the Commissioner shall pay to the taxpayer a further amount by way of compensation at the rate of [KIBOR plus 0.5 per cent] per annum of the amount of the refund computed for the period commencing at the end of the three month period and ending on the date on which it was paid.

(2) For the purposes of this section, a refund shall be treated as having become due --

(a) in the case of a refund required to be made in consequence of an order on an appeal to the Commissioner (Appeals), an appeal to the Appellate Tribunal, a reference to the High Court or an appeal to the Supreme Court, on the date of receipt of such order by the Commissioner;[or]

(b) in the case of a refund required to be made as a consequence of a revision order under section [122A], on the date the order is made by the Commissioner; or

(c) in any other case, on the date the refund order is made.

Explanation.-- For the removal of doubt, it is clarified that where a refund order is made on an application under subsection (1) of section 170, for the purpose of compensation, the refund becomes due from the date refund order is made and not from the date the assessment of income treated to have been made by the Commissioner under section 120."

JUDGMENT

SAYYED MAZAHAR ALI AKBAR NAQVI, J.---Criminal Petition for leave to appeal under section 185(3) of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 has been assailed by the petitioner calling in question impugned judgment dated 14.09.2015 passed by Lahore High Court, Lahore in Murder Reference No.276/2011 and Crl. Appeal No.996/2011.

2. As per prosecution story portrayed in the FIR No.203/2009 dated 04.06.2009, offence under section 302, P.P.C. registered with Police Station Saddar Farooqabad Sheikhupura (Exh.PD) lodged at the instance of one Allah Ditta son of Lal Din, (PW-3) is that he is resident of Herchand and they are three brothers and he is eldest. The complainant and his younger brother Qurban reside with their parents at Herchand whereas brother Ramzan live separately. On 03.05.2009 at evening, the complainant along with his father came to the house of brother Muhammad Ramzan because his daughter was sick. They were talking to each other when at about 7:00 p.m. Raza son of Niaz i.e. a neighbor of Ramzan called him outside. The complainant with father also came out of the house along with Ramzan. Ayisha Bibi wife of Ramzan followed and came out of the house. Raza was armed with Carbine, he raised lalkara to Muhammad Ramzan that he had entered into an altercation with his mother, therefore, he will teach a lesson and thereafter accused made a fire shot with his Carbine 12 bore which hit Muhammad Ramzan on his abdomen, below the chest. Muhammad Ramzan fell down being injured whereas accused fled away from there. The occurrence was witnessed by the complainant, his father and Bhabi Ayisha. The injured was taken to Sheikhupura Hospital but he was referred to Mayo Hospital, Lahore. Initially the FIR was registered under section 324, P.P.C. but when the injured died on 08.05.2009, offence under section 302, P.P.C. was added.

3. After registration of the aforesaid case, investigation was carried out and petitioner was challaned while placing his name in column No.3 of the report under section 173, Cr.P.C.

On receipt of challan, the learned Trial Court formally charge sheeted the petitioner vide order dated 12.08.2010 to which he pleaded not guilty and claimed trial. Prosecution in order to substantiate its case produced as many as 13 witnesses. The petitioner was examined under section 342, Cr.P.C., however, he opted not to appear in his defence as his own witness in terms of section 340(2), Cr.P.C. to disproof the allegations levelled against him.

4. The learned trial court after conclusion of trial found that the prosecution succeeded to prove allegations against the petitioner, hence convicted him under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced him to death. The petitioner was further burdened to pay compensation of Rs.1,00,000/- to be paid to the legal heirs of the deceased in terms of section 544-A, Cr.P.C. In default thereof, he was further ordered to undergo simple imprisonment for six months.

5. The petitioner being aggrieved by the judgment of the learned trial court dated 07.06.2011 filed Criminal Appeal No.996 of 2011 before the Lahore High Court, Lahore whereas the learned trial court forwarded Murder Reference No.276 of 2011 for confirmation of the sentence of death inflicted upon the petitioner in terms of section 374, Cr.P.C. The learned Division Bench of High Court vide judgment dated 14.09.2015 converted death sentence of the petitioner into imprisonment for life whereas amount of compensation and imprisonment in its default prescribed by the learned Trial Court was ordered to be maintained. Benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. was also given to him. Hence, instant petition.

6. At the very outset, learned counsel for the petitioner argued that in fact both the courts below have not attended the circumstances of the case in its true perspective and convicted the petitioner under section 302(b), P.P.C., which is not substantiated from the record. Contends that as far as occurrence is concerned, the same has been admitted by the petitioner while making his statement under section 342, Cr.P.C. Adds that a specific plea was taken by the petitioner before the Investigation Officer that the deceased made an attempt to commit rape with sister of the petitioner namely Saima Bibi. Contends that plea of the petitioner was found correct during the course of investigation as such the conviction and sentence recorded by learned Courts below is not sustainable in the eye of law. Contends that when it is established from the record that petitioner has committed the occurrence on the question of `ghairat', therefore, the petitioner is entitled for the benefit of the same and as such the appropriate sentence could be under section 302(c), P.P.C.

7. On the other hand, learned Law Officer has not seriously controverted the contentions raised by learned counsel for the petitioner as the same is spelled out from the record.

8. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and gone through the record.

9. Admittedly, the occurrence had taken place within the local limits of Police Station Saddar Farooqabad, District Sheikhupura. There is no denial to this fact that the allegation against the petitioner is that he caused fire-arm injury with Carbine, which landed on the abdomen near the chest of the deceased Muhammad Ramzan. The injured was taken to District Headquarter Hospital, Sheikhupura from where he was referred to Mayo Hospital, Lahore however, he succumbed to the injuries on 08.05.2009 and as such the provision of section 302, P.P.C. was added in the crime report. The petitioner since his arrest and commencement of investigation has raised first plea wherein it has been mentioned that deceased had made an attempt to commit rape with his sister. The mother of petitioner Maqsoodan Bibi had gone to reprimand Muhammad

Ramzan deceased upon which he started abusing mother of the petitioner and also grappled with her. The petitioner approached there he could not afford the conduct of the deceased and as such he flared up and under the heat of passion could not resist and as such made a single fire shot. The stance taken by the petitioner remained consistent throughout during the course of investigation as well as the trial. During investigation, the first plea raised by the petitioner was found correct by the Investigating Officer. It is an admitted fact that first plea of the accused is admissible in evidence under Article 27 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984 ("Order of 1984"). Article 27 of Order 1984 is general principle enabling the Investigating Officer to record the same whereas Article 28 is mere an exception. As a general rule evidence not forming part of the transaction is not admissible whereas Articles 27/28 are an exceptions to the said general principle by laying down a rule that admissibility of those fact which might not be tendered in evidence to prove it but these are relevant to prove the status/mind the person committing it. For example the guilt, intent, knowledge, negligence, malice etc., and in all the intentions qua these conditions would be an admissibility as it is provided under Article 27 of the Order of 1984. Article 27 of the Order of 1984 has extended the scope to meet the question qua the existence of person state of mind or bodily feeling and all these facts and their existence in the state of affair has turned relevant.

During the course of proceedings before the learned Trial Court, the suggestion qua the state of mind referred above was also put to the prosecution witnesses of ocular account PW-3 and PW-4, respectively. Now the question, which requires determination, only relates to the quantum of sentence in the given facts and circumstances narrated above.

10. As observed earlier, that the occurrence had taken place due to the act of the deceased, which enraged the mental faculty of the petitioner and under the impulses of the same the instant occurrence had taken place, the same is spelled out from the record and as such the benefit of the same is available for which so many circumstances are not required rather the glimpse of the same is always deemed sufficient, which has been established by the Superior Court from time to time.

11. For what has been discussed above, we are of the considered view that sentence inflicted upon the petitioner by learned Courts below under section 302(b), P.P.C. is not made out, therefore, keeping in view the facts narrated above, instant petition is converted into appeal and same is partially allowed and we convert the sentence from imprisonment for life under section 302(b), P.P.C. to imprisonment for 10 years under section 302(c), P.P.C. whereas amount of compensation and imprisonment in its default prescribed by the learned Trial Court is ordered to be maintained. Benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. is also extended. The Criminal Petition No. 1120(L)/2015 filed by the complainant for enhancement of sentence, having no substance, is dismissed.

MWA/R-2/SC Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT

SAYYED MAZAHAR ALI AKBAR NAQVI, J.---Criminal appeal, by leave of the Court, is directed against the impugned judgment of learned Division Bench of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 23.10.2014 passed in Capital Sentence Reference No. 34-T/2007 and Criminal Appeal No. 534/2007 whereby the conviction of the appellants under section 302(b), P.P.C. awarded by the Special Judge, Anti-Terrorism Court, Sargodha vide judgment dated 29.03.2007 on three counts each was maintained but their sentences were converted from death each to imprisonment for life each. The compensation awarded by the learned trial court and sentence in default thereof was maintained. The benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. was also given to the appellants. Convictions and sentences under sections 324, 337-A(i), 337-A(ii), 337-F(i), 337-F(iii), 337-F(vi), 148, 149, P.P.C. were also maintained.

2. As per prosecution story contained in the FIR No. 72/2005 dated 16.02.2005, offences under sections 302, 324, 148, 149, 395, P.P.C. read with section 7, Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, registered with Police Station Jauharabad District Khushab (Exh.PBB) lodged at the instance of one Mazhar Anwaar (PW-20) is that he along with Gul Hayat son of Mian Muhammad, Gul Hayat son of Muhammad Feroze were going to Lorri Adda Hadali on feet and when they reached in the street near the house of Muhammad Mahboob, from opposite side Jeep No. B-4303/Swat came in which Naeemullah (his brother), Said Rasool (PW-21), Hafeezullah were coming and Naeemullah was sitting on front seat, Said Rasool on back seat whereas Hafeezullah was driving the jeep. It is further mentioned in the crime report that when the jeep reached near the shop of Muhammad Iqbal Lohar, due to speed breaker the jeep became slow and from the shop Muhammad Shabbir armed with GIII, Muhammad Ameer armed with Kalashnikov, Khuda Bakhsh (P.O.) armed with Kalashnikov, Imran son of Atta Muhammad armed with Kalashnikov, Imran Abbas son of Ghulam Rasool armed with Kalashnikov came in front of the jeep and appellant Muhammad Shabbir by raising lalkara made a fire shot of rifle G-III on Naeemullah which hit on his head. The crime report further reveals that appellant Muhammad Imran fired a shot with his Kalashnikov which landed on the chest of Naeemullah and thereafter Muhammad Ammer made fire with Kalashnikov which hit on front of the mouth of Hafeezullah who was driving the Jeep, thereafter Imran Abbas fired a shot with .12 bore repeater that hit on the left flank of Said Rasool; appellant Muhammad Munir made fire with Kalashnikov which hit on the mouth of Naeem Ullah; thereafter Khuda Bakhsh (P.O.) made fire with Kalashnikov which hit on the chest of Hafeezullah and then all the accused persons made indiscriminate firing which hit on their heads, chests and different parts of the bodies. It is further mentioned that the appellant Shabbir while escaping also took licensed rifle/Kalashnikov with magazine bag, ammunition and license which were lying in Jeep. At some distance, they found Hameedullah (deceased) and Fazal-e-Haq (PW), on this Khuda Bakhsh (P.O.), appellant Muhammad Shabbir and Muhammad Ameer made repeated fires on Hameedullah which hit on his chest, back, left hand and different parts of his body. The matter was reported to the police and as such instant crime report was registered with the local police.

3. After registration of the aforesaid case, it was found that the appellants Muhammad Shabbir etc. after committing the occurrence forcibly snatched a car No. LRZ-4949 Model 2004 2-OD on gun point within the view of Allah Bakhsh (PW-19) and fled away. The appellants were taken into custody and after the conclusion of the investigation; they were challaned while placing their names in column No.3 of the report under section 173, Cr.P.C. On receipt of challan, the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Khushab formally charge sheeted the appellants vide order dated 20.03.2007 to which they pleaded not guilty and claimed trial. The complainant moved application under section 12 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 which was dismissed vide order dated 14.11.2005 and complainant filed Writ Petition No.18694/2005 before learned High Court and vide order dated 26.02.2007 the learned High Court transferred this case from learned Additional Sessions Judge Khushab to the court of Special Judge, Anti-Terrorism, Sargodha and a fresh charge was framed against all the accused on 20.03.2007 to which they pleaded not guilty and claimed trial. Prosecution in order to substantiate its case produced as many as 22 witnesses. The appellants were examined under section 342, Cr.P.C., however, they opted not to appear in their defence as their own witness in terms of section 340(2), Cr.P.C. to disproof the allegations levelled against them and they did not produce any defence evidence.

4. The learned trial court after conclusion of trial found that the prosecution succeeded to prove allegations against the petitioner, hence convicted the appellants under sections 302/149, P.P.C. and sentenced to death each on three counts for committing the murder of Naeemullah, Hafeezullah and Hameedullah along with compensation of Rs.1,00,000/- each under section 544-A of Cr.P.C. payable to each legal heirs of deceased and in default thereof further undergo six months each on three counts. They were also convicted under sections 324/149, P.P.C. and sentenced to ten years' R.I. each for attempting to commit the Qatl-i-amd of Said Rasool along with fine of Rs.50,000/- each and in default thereof further undergo three months' S.I. each. They were also convicted under sections 337-A(i)/149, P.P.C. and to pay Rs.25,000/- each as Daman for causing Shajjah-e-Khafifah to Said Rasool and in default thereof further undergo two years' R.I. They were also convicted under sections 337-A(ii)/149, P.P.C. and to pay Rs.15,000/- each for causing Shajjah-e-Mudiah to Said Rasool as five percent of Arsh and also undergo five years' R.I. as Tazir. They were also convicted under sections 337-F(i)/149, P.P.C. and to pay Rs.25,000/- each as Daman for causing Ghayr-Jaifah Damiyah to Said Rasool and also undergo one year's R.I. as Tazir. They were also convicted under sections 337-F(iii)/149, P.P.C. and to pay Rs.25,000/- each as Daman for causing Ghayr-Jaifah Mutalahimah to Said Rasool and also undergo three years' R.I. as Tazir. They were also convicted under sections 337-F(vi)/149, P.P.C. and to pay Rs.25,000/- as Daman for causing Ghayr-Jaifah Munaqqillah to Said Rasool and also undergo seven years' R.I. each as Tazir. They were also convicted under sections 148/149, P.P.C. and sentenced to undergo three years' R.I. each. The appellants were also convicted under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and sentenced to death each along with fine of Rs.50,000/- each and in default thereof undergo three years' S.I. They were also convicted under section 7(c) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 read with section 149, P.P.C. and sentenced to imprisonment for life each along with fine Rs.50,000/- each and in default thereof further undergo three years' S.I.

5. The appellants being aggrieved by the judgment of the learned trial court dated 29.03.2007 filed Criminal Appeal No.534/2007 before the Lahore High Court, Lahore whereas the learned trial court forwarded Capital Sentence Reference No.34-T/2007 for confirmation of the sentence of death inflicted upon the appellants. The learned Division Bench of High Court vide judgment dated 23.10.2014 set aside the convictions and sentences recorded against the appellants under sections 7(a) and 7(c) of Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, however, maintained their convictions under section 302(b), P.P.C. awarded by the learned trial court on three counts each but converted the sentence from death each to imprisonment for life each. The compensation awarded by the learned trial court and sentence in default thereof was maintained. The benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. was also given to the appellants. Convictions and sentences under sections 324, 337-A(i), 337-A(ii), 337-F(i), 337-F(iii), 337-F(vi), 148, 149, P.P.C. were also maintained.

6. Leave to appeal was granted by this Court by means of order dated 20.02.2020 for reappraisal of entire evidence available on the record for safe administration of criminal justice.

7. At the very outset, it has been argued by learned counsel appearing on behalf of appellants that both the courts below have not taken the evidence available on the record in its true prospective and same has not been evaluated according to the established principles of law enunciated by superior courts from time to time. Contends that the prosecution has failed to prove its case against the present appellants as there are many major discrepancies in the statements of the PWs and there is conflict between ocular account and medical evidence. It has been further argued that firing is attributed to all the accused including Khuda Bakhsh (P.O.), hence, learned High Court has failed to appreciate the facts and law of the case in its true perspective and has drawn wrong conclusion due to which gross miscarriage of justice has taken place in this case. Further contends that there are circumstances which created reasonable doubt in the prudent mind about the guilt of the appellants, then they would be entitled for the same not as a matter of grace and concession but as a matter of right. Further contends that besides causing specific injuries on the persons of deceased, they all resorted to indiscriminate firing and firearm injuries on the person of injured Said Rasool was specifically attributed to co-accused Muhammad Hussain who was acquitted by the learned High Court and when the injured eye-witness has not been believed qua his own injuries, his evidence cannot be used to convict the appellants when recoveries from the appellants were not relied by the learned High Court. Learned counsel further contends that the complainant in his statement as PW-20 has stated that no untoward incident had taken place after the acquittal of Naeem till the occurrence, hence, the motive setup by the prosecution remained far from being proved, therefore, it create a doubt in the genuineness of the prosecution version resulting into acquittal of the appellants.

8. On the other hand, learned Law Officer assisted by learned counsel appearing on behalf of complainant has argued that the prosecution has been succeeded to establish the case against the appellants. Further contends that three persons were done to death in brutal manner whereas one person was seriously injured which shows the highhandedness of the appellants which is spelled out from the facts and circumstance of this case. It is contended that the ocular account was furnished by the quite independent and trustworthy witnesses duly supported by the medical evidence. Lastly it was argued that the appellants by resorting to firing had taken the life of three innocent persons and the prosecution adduced its case through straight forward, reliable and confidence inspiring evidence, therefore, the learned High Court has rightly convicted and sentenced the appellants under the relevant provisions of law.

9. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and gone through the record.

We have noticed that it is a case of highhandedness in which three persons were done to death in brutal manner and one person was seriously injured. It is noticed that as per post mortem reports, the deceased Naeemullah received 28 injuries, deceased Hafeezullah received as many as 34 injuries and deceased Hameedulah received 12 injures on different parts of their bodies. The injured PW Said Rasool also received as many as nineteen injures on different parts of his body. The occurrence initiated when both the deceased Naeem Ullah (sitting on front seat), Hafeezullah (driver) and injured Said Rasool (PW-21) (sitting on back seat) were passing on Jeep No.B-4303/Swat near the shop of Muhammad Iqbal Lohar, the appellants came from the shop and appellant Muhammad Shabbir made a fire shot of rifle G-III on Naeemullah which hit on his head; appellant Muhammad Imran made a fire shot with his Kalashnikov which hit on the chest of Naeemullah whereas appellant Muhammad Munir made fire with Kalashnikov which hit on the mouth of Naeem Ullah and all the accused persons made indiscriminate firing which hit on their heads, chests and different parts of the bodies. The injured Said Rasool (PW-21) also sustained serious injuries. It is further noticed that after committing the occurrence, when the appellants etc. were decamping, at some distance they found Hameedullah and one Fazal-e-Haq, the appellants etc. made repeated fires on Hameedullah which hit on his chest, back, left hand and different parts of his body. Subsequently, it was found that after committing the occurrence, the appellants etc. forcibly snatched a car No. LRZ-4949 (P-35) within the view of Allah Bakhash (PW-19) on gun point and on 17.02.2005 the appellants were arrested near Jhelum River while travelling on the same car. The ocular account has been furnished by Mazhar Anwaar (PW-20) and Said Rasool injured (PW-21) and prosecution also rely on the statement of Allah Bakhash (PW-19). So far as the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants that the firearm injuries of Said Rasool (PW-21) were specifically attributed to co-accused Muhammad Hussain who was acquitted by learned High Court, is concerned, careful perusal of the entire evidence produced by the prosecution reveals that since the occurrence had taken place in the broad daylight in the street near the shop of Muhammad Iqbal Lohar in the same village, therefore, the presence of Mazhar Anwaar (PW-20) and Said Rasool injured (PW-21) at the scene of occurrence was quite natural and beyond any doubt and the statements of the prosecution witnesses are consistent, confidence inspiring and in consonance with the probability and circumstances of the case and being worthy of credence, which could not be brushed aside. Injured Said Rasool (PW-21) received firearms injures in the occurrence while sitting in the jeep and saw the occurrence, hence, his presence at the relevant time cannot be considered as unnatural and improbable and he has no enmity or malice against the appellants and his testimony is duly supported by medical evidence having been found confidence inspiring, truthful and unimpeachable. Furthermore it is noticed that co-accused Muhammad Hussain has been acquitted by learned High Court on the basis that his name has been replaced with Imran Abbas son of Ghulam Rasool, caste Kharal resident of Chak No. 47 North, District Sargodha by complainant Mazhar Anwaar (PW-20) in his second supplementary statement dated 18.02.2005 and no identification parade was held for identification of the co-accused Muhammad Hussain and prosecution is not certain about the identity of Muhammad Hussain, benefit of which was given to him. It is further noticed that the report of Forensic Science Agency (Ex.PZ) shows that all empties except some were fired from the weapons recovered from the appellants. So far as the contention of the learned counsel that there are major discrepancies in the statement of PWs, it is established law that if the discrepancies are shattering the prosecution story on salient feature then it has substance to intervene on the subject otherwise it has no impact on the veracity of the prosecution story. Reliance in this regard is placed on case titled "Muhammad Iqbal v. The State" (PLD 2001 Supreme Court 222). We have observed during the course of proceedings that the father of appellant Muhammad Shabbir was murdered wherein Naeemullah deceased was one of the accused. There is no denial to this fact that he was finally acquitted of the charge, therefore, the revenge in the mind of appellant continued cultivation and ultimately instant occurrence has taken place. In such like cases where the murders are committed as revenge depends upon human physiology. The human being a creature of the environment; therefore, he is governed by the background of the society from where he hails. Although this aspect do not cover the doctrine of provocation still the area and other antecedent of persons are relevant factor while taking into account which might be suggesting for a moment where revenge can be regarded as mitigating circumstances, however, the question of sentence in each criminal case definitely has direct nexus with the particular circumstances of the said case. This principle was considered and relied upon by salutary judgment titled "Ajun Shah v. The State" (PLD 1967 Supreme Court 185). The learned High Court while handing down the judgment impugned before us has already taken care of all established principles of law and converted the sentences of each appellant from death to imprisonment for life which seems to us appropriate and in accordance with law. The contentions raised by learned counsel are without any force which are repelled. As a consequence, this appeal is dismissed.

MWA/M-33/SC Appeal dismissed.

Civil Appeal No. 158-L of 2011, decided on 30th June, 2020.

(On appeal from the judgment of Federal Service Tribunal, Lahore dated 27.05.2020, passed in Appeal No. 668(L)C.S/2001)

Removal from Service (Special Powers) Ordinance (XVII of 2000)---

----S. 3(1)(e)(iii)---Fundamental Rules, R. 29---Major penalty of reduction/reversion to the lowest of the time-scale---Whether such penalty could be imposed without any specified time---Held, that major penalty of reduction/reversion to the lowest of the time-scale had to be time bound---Once the time was served the officer under penalty could revert to his original position or status in service.

Section 3(1)(e)(iii) of the Removal from Service (Special Powers) Ordinance, 2000 ('the Ordinance') did not specify any time as to how long the reduction to the lowest post or time scale or lower stage in time scale was to last. However Rule 29 of the Fundamental Rules clearly provided that any such major penalty had to be time-bound. Consistent practice of the Supreme Court over the years was to specify the time in such like penalties by placing reliance on Fundamental Rule 29.

Muhammad Sadiq v. Superintendent of Police and others 2008 SCMR 1296; Member (A.C.E. and S.T.) Federal Board of Revenue, Islamabad and others v. Muhammad Ashraf and 3 others 2008 SCMR 1165; Secretary Kashmir Affairs and Northern Areas Division, Islamabad v. Saeed Akhtar and another PLD 2008 SC 392; Government of Pakistan through Secretary, Establishment Division, Islamabad and others v. Muhammad Umer Morio 2005 SCMR 436 and Tanvir Ahmed v. Chief Secretary, Government of Punjab, Lahore 2004 SCMR 647 ref.

Major penalty of reduction to a lower post or pay scale or to a lower stage in a pay scale was not akin to the board game of Snakes and Ladders, relegating a civil servant to a lower position and making him rise up again. It was not the scheme of the penalty under the Ordinance that the officer after such reduction was to a start all over again in the new position and rise up the ranks as if to re-live his service life again. This was not the purpose or the object of the major penalty. Such like penalties, by nature were time-bound, they were to punish an officer for the lapse committed and once the time was served, the officer under penalty could revert to his original position or status in service and stood restituted. A major penalty of reduction to lower position without specifying time not only defeated the object of the penalty but was also disproportionate with the lapse committed by the officer.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts are that the appellant while working as Inspector in the Income Tax Department was proceeded against departmentally under The Removal from Service (Special Powers) Ordinance, 2000 ("Ordinance") on the allegations that there were persistent public complaints regarding harassment and corruption; inefficiency in the performance of his official duties inspite of repeated warnings; failure to achieve budgetary targets; failure to furnish Annual Declarations of Assets and Liabilities; was appointed for extraneous political grounds in violation of the relevant rules. Vide order dated 26.05.2001 passed by the Competent Authority major penalty of reduction to the lowest of the time-scale was imposed upon the appellant. He filed a departmental appeal, which remained pending. As a consequence he filed an appeal before the Service Tribunal in terms of section 4 of the Service Tribunals Act, 1973, which was dismissed vide impugned judgment dated 27.05.2010. Leave was granted in this case on 24.05.2011 to consider whether the major penalty of reversion to the lowest of the time-scale can be without any specified time.

2. We have heard learned counsel for the parties. Section 3 (1), (e) (iii) reads as follows:

Section 3 Removal from Service.

(iii) reduction to a lower post or pay scale or to a lower stage in a pay scale.

The above provision does not specify any time as to how long the reduction to the lowest post or time scale or lower stage in time scale is to last. We, therefore, refer to Fundamental Rule 29, which provides as under:-

> "F.R. 29. If a Government servant is, on account of misconduct or inefficiency, reduced to a lower grade or post, or to a lower stage in his time-scale, the authority ordering such reduction shall state the period for which it shall be effective and whether, on restoration, it shall operate to postpone future increments and if so, to what extent."

The above Rule clearly provides that any such major penalty has to be time-bound. It has been the consistent practice of this Court over the years to specify the time in such like penalties by placing reliance on F.R. 29. See Muhammad Sadiq v. Superintendent of Police and others (2008 SCMR 1296), Member (A.C.E. and S.T.) Federal Board of Revenue, Islamabad and others v. Muhammad Ashraf and 3 others (2008 SCMR 1165), Secretary Kashmir Affairs and Northern Areas Division, Islamabad v. Saeed Akhtar and another (PLD 2008 SC 392), Government of Pakistan through Secretary, Establishment Division, Islamabad and others v. Muhammad Umer Morio (2005 SCMR 436) and Tanvir Ahmed v. Chief Secretary, Government of Punjab, Lahore (2004 SCMR 647).

3. The major penalty of reduction to a lower post or pay scale or to a lower stage in a pay scale is not akin to the board game of Snakes and Ladders, relegating a civil servant to a lower position and making him rise up again. It is not the scheme of the penalty under the Ordinance that the officer after such reduction is to a start all over again in the new position and rise up the ranks as if to re-live his service life again. This is not the purpose or the object of the major penalty. Such like penalties, by nature are time-bound, they are to punish an officer for the lapse committed and once the time is served, the officer under penalty, can revert to his original position or status in service and stand restituted. A major penalty of reduction to lower position without specifying time not only defeats the object of the penalty but is also disproportionate with the lapse committed by the officer. See Sabir Iqbal v. Cantonment Board, Peshawar through Executive Officer and others (PLD 2019 SC 189), Secretary to Government of the Punjab Food Department, Lahore and another v. Javed Iqbal and others (2016 SCMR 1120) and Muhammad Ali S. Bukhari v. Federation of Pakistan through Establishment Secretary, Islamabad and 2 others (2008 SCMR 214).

4. Considering the nature of the case made out against the appellant and the fact that it is pending since 2001, we instead of remanding the matter to the competent authority, specify a period of three years for the major penalty of reduction to the lowest time scale imposed upon the appellant. The respondent department shall actualize the same and fix the service record of the appellant accordingly.

5. This appeal is, therefore, partially allowed in the above terms.

MWA/A-25/SC Order accordingly.

----S. 497(1), provisos 3 & 4---Bail, grant of---Statutory ground of delay in the conclusion of trial---Proviso 4 to S. 497(1), Cr.P.C.---Scope and applicability.

Provisos 3 and 4 to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. were co-existent qua their application; hence, the imports of the same could not be constructed in isolation rather they had to be interpreted conjointly. [p. 1234] J

Proviso 4 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. envisaged distinct legal requisites in relation to its applicability;

(i) That the provision of third proviso of subsection 497(1), Cr.P.C. shall not apply to previously convicted offender in an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life;

(ii) Or to a person who in the opinion of the court was hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal or involved in terrorism.

Plain reading of first requisite depicted it to be mandatory in nature by virtue of its language which was otherwise clear, unambiguous and transparent in its application. It spoke about those weighed down with criminal background. In other words any criminal who was previously convicted was outrightly barred from the consideration to avail the benefit of proviso 3 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. This condition was to apply stricto sensu in all fairness without compromising it in any manner; hence, all those who were stigmatized/tainted with criminal background were ousted from consideration. However, the second limb of proviso 4 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. was discretionary in its applicability. The language itself was self-explanatory ensuing the intent of said provision. While introducing this limb of said provision the legislature had empowered the court to form an opinion qua the person involved in a criminal case if brought forth while taking into consideration the act, mode and manner of occurrence and other existing circumstances placed before the court without being prejudiced by any previous record. The Court while forming opinion about the criminal declaration had to satisfy all norms of legal aspects so that opinion made should not frustrate any ethics of decency and fairness to meet the ends of justice. The opinion of the court should meet all legal justiciable requirements demanded by the law in the interest of safe administration of criminal justice.

ORDER

MANZOOR AHMAD MALIK, J.---Petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 24.02.2020, whereby bail was refused to him by the learned Lahore High Court-Lahore in case FIR No. 64 dated 05.02.2016, offence under sections 302, 324, 34, P.P.C. and section 7 of the Anti Terrorism Act, 1997, registered at Police Station Samanabad, Lahore.

2. As per contents of FIR registered on the statement of Ch. Muhammad Saleem respondent No.2, Soman alias Soom and Sajid Chaudhry while armed with firearms along with their co-accused resorted to firing and caused injuries to Muhammad Safdar Ali and Bahadar Ali who died as a result of the said injuries. Subsequently, Malik Sadaqat Ali respondent No.3 who was uncle of the said two deceased filed another application alleging therein that Ali Akbar petitioner along with his co-accused had in fact made firing upon the aforesaid deceased persons. Firearm injury on the person of Bahadar Ali (deceased) was specifically attributed to the present petitioner.

3. The petitioner is asking for bail on merits as well as on statutory ground i.e. non-conclusion of trial within the period specified under section 497, Code of Criminal Procedure. On the last date of hearing, a report was requisitioned from the learned trial court as to the status of trial, reasons and responsibility for its delay. The said report has since been received.

4. Learned counsel for the petitioner contends that petitioner was taken into custody on 11.06.2016 i.e. about four years back and charge against him was framed on 10.07.2018 i.e. after a lapse of about two years and one month of the arrest of the petitioner; that when the charge was framed, the petitioner had been in continuous custody for two years and the period for conclusion of trial as stipulated under section 497 Code of Criminal Procedure had already lapsed; that the learned trial court in its report has not held the petitioner solely responsible for delay in the conclusion of trial; that the complainant and other private witnesses have failed to appear before the trial court on numerous occasions and the trial court issued non-bailable warrants of arrest of complainant and two witnesses; that there is no previous record of conviction of the petitioner and in the circumstances of the case, the petitioner cannot be held to be a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal.

5. Conversely, learned Additional Prosecutor General and respondent No.3 present in person have vehemently opposed the bail petition by contending that the trial has been delayed by the petitioner and his co-accused and that petitioner is a dangerous, desperate and hardened criminal within the meaning of Fourth Proviso to section 497, Code of Criminal Procedure.

6. Heard. Record perused.

7. Undisputedly, the petitioner was taken into custody in this case on 11.06.2016. It has also not been disputed that charge against him was framed on 10.07.2018 i.e. after a lapse of more than two years. As per Third Proviso to section 497, Code of Criminal Procedure, a person accused of an offence punishable with death, if detained for such an offence for a continuous period exceeding two years shall be released on bail, of course, with the exception contained in the Fourth Proviso to section 497, Code of Criminal Procedure that the provisions of Third Proviso shall not apply to a previously convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or to a person, who, in the opinion of the Court, is a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal or is accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life. After having gone through the report submitted by the trial court, it has been observed by us that in the said report the learned trial court has not held the petitioner solely responsible for delay in the conclusion of trial. The relevant portion of the said report is as under:-

"Number of accused persons have been nominated in the instant case and after declaring the accused Tauseef Zafar as proclaimed offender, charge in this case was framed on 10.07.2018 and case was fixed for prosecution evidence. Three prosecution witnesses have been recorded; two of them were injured witnesses, who have affected compromise with the accused persons and stated that they have no objection if all accused persons are acquitted from the case, whereas third witness namely Naeem ud Din stated that he knows nothing about the occurrence. From 05.09.2018 to 05.01.2019, the file of this case was remained pending before Hon'ble Lahore High Court, Lahore. Thereafter, the complainant and private witnesses were repeatedly summoned through non-bailable warrants of arrest but they did not turn up. On numerous dates of hearing, different accused persons have filed application for dispensation of their personal attendance. On issuance of non-bailable warrants of arrest through DIG (investigation) complainant and two witnesses appeared before the court on 20.02.2020. On the said date Mr. Sardar Azhar Hussain Advocate has filed power of attorney on behalf of complainant and requested for adjournment, which was granted for 05.03.2020. On 07.03.2020, fresh power of attorney was filed by Muhammad Abdul Qaddus, Advocate who also requested for adjournment and the same was granted for 14.03.2020 and thereafter the instant case was adjourned due to pandemic of Corona virus (COVID-19) and is fixed for 22.06.2020." (Emphasis supplied)

8. Qua responsibility of delay in the conclusion of trial, the learned trial court has explained in its report as under:-

".....The delay in conclusion of trial is also on the part of complainant and his private witnesses because they despite repeated adjournment failed to appear for evidence." (Emphasis Supplied),

9. In these circumstances, when the trial court has in its report, stated that the delay in the conclusion of trial is also on the part of complainant and his private witnesses, the petitioner cannot be solely held responsible for such delay particularly when the period of two years' continuous detention expired even before framing of charge. Now even four years have passed since the arrest of the petitioner (petitioner was arrested in this case on 11.06.2016). Learned Additional Prosecutor General under instructions of the police officer present in Court has confirmed that there is no record of previous conviction of the petitioner. So far as two deceased are concerned, single injury on the person of Bahadar Ali (deceased) is attributed to the petitioner, therefore, he cannot be considered as a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal. Considering all these circumstances, we are of the view that petitioner has made out a case for his release on bail on the statutory ground of delay in the conclusion of trial.

10. For the foregoing, the instant criminal petition is converted into an appeal and the same is hereby allowed. The appellant Ali Akbar is allowed bail (in the instant FIR) subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.100,000/- (one hundred thousand) with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the learned trial court.

11. The learned trial court seized of the matter is directed to expedite the proceedings of trial and ensure its conclusion in the shortest possible time. It is made clear that if the petitioner-appellant misuses the concession of bail or delay in the conclusion of trial is caused by him or anyone else acting on his behalf, the learned trial court shall be competent to recall the bail granted to him, after hearing the parties, strictly in accordance with law.

These are the reasons for our short order dated 24th of June, 2020, which is reproduced herein below:-

"For reasons to be recorded later, by majority of two to one (Sayyed Mazahar Ali Akbar Naqvi, J dissenting), the instant criminal petition is converted into an appeal and the same is hereby allowed. The appellant Ali Akbar is allowed bail (in the instant FIR) subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.100,000/ - (one hundred thousand) with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the learned trial court."

Sayyed Mazahar Ali Akbar Naqvi, J

SAYYED MAZAHAR ALI AKBAR NAQVI, J.---The instant case bearing FIR No. 64/2016 dated 05.02.2016 offence under sections 302, 324, 34, P.P.C. read with section 7, Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 registered with Police Station Samanabad, Lahore is a glaring example of atrocious act in a civilized society of 21st Century. The background of said untoward incident is that in fact there are two groups of criminals operating within the local limits of Police Station Samanabad, one led by Ch. Saleem while the other group is led by Sajid Chaudhary. Both the groups are at daggers drawn with each other. On 05.02.2016 at 3.15 p.m. two members of Sajid Chaudhary group were found in Rashid Amin Chowk, where they were confronted by their opponents. As a consequence, both of them were fired upon in the said Chowk. Another person from the same group namely Mashooq Butt reached there to rescue them but he was also dealt in the same manner. Thereafter, members of said group of criminals conspired with each to chalk out a plan to tackle with the situation. Hence to fulfill their nefarious design, present petitioner, co-accused Waqar under the patronage of Ch. Saleem entered into nearby street where the house of complainant is located. They resorted to reckless firing, one of the fire shot made by petitioner with rifle .223 bore hit Bahadar Ali aged 14 years on his temporal region while co-accused Waqar fired hitting Safdar Ali on his forehead, another minor aged 13 years when both brothers were standing in the balcony of their own house. The said gruesome act was committed with nefarious designs to create a concocted counter-version against the earlier incident with ulterior motives. The mode and manner of occurrence by the assailant show their inter-se connectivity qua their mindset. After committing the double murder, petitioner along with others restrained inmates of deceased family inside their house on gun point while their house was locked from outside. They were threatened not to report the matter to police or even to attend their children. The most nasty aspect of this case is that after the commission of said offence, Ch. Saleem being in league with the local police lodged First Information Report as complainant while depicting a false, baseless and concocted story by distorting actual facts and circumstances Sadaqat Ali real Chacha of both deceased rescued himself from the clutches of the accused person, he approached police station where he lodged a complaint which was recorded under section 161, Cr.P.C. with the intervention of high-ups of police. Due to sensational nature of this case it was investigated by senior police officers. During the course of investigation the recovery of rifle .223 bore was affected from the petitioner which was sent to Forensic Science Laboratory. It also matched with the empties collected from the place of occurrence. Therefore, report of Forensic Science Laboratory is positive in nature. The investigation concluded and found the active participation of the petitioner in the above said double murder with a specific role of causing firearm injury to one of deceased on temporal region.

2. Vide order dated 18.05.2020, this Court requisitioned report from the learned trial court. The said report bearing No. 55 dated 01.06.2020 is placed before us. The report of the trial court is ambiguous on many aspects. The trial court has not fixed the responsibility of delay rather a confusing picture has been portrayed. Order passed by the learned Single Bench of High Court dated 24.02.2020 while dismissing the bail application has demonstrated a different picture, which actually occasioned for delay in conclusion of trial from the record. Admittedly the petitioner was taken into custody on 11.06.2016, however, the co-accused escaped from appearance before trial court one after the other on 27.04.2017, 16.05.2017, 15.06.2017, 21.6.2017, 13.09.2017, 23.10.2017, 18.12.2017, 21.12.2017, 05.01.2018, 15.01.2018 and 24.01.2018. As such the accused party practically made it impossible for the trial court to frame charge against them. Nevertheless the trial court after marking the attendance of all the accused persons framed charge on 10.07.2018. The highhandedness of the accused party continued even after the framing of charge, the accused persons once again while playing the same tactics absented themselves one by one on 06.08.2018, 22.09.2018, 19.10.2018, 09.11.2018, 19.11.2018, 29.11.2018, 05.12.2018, 11.12.2018, 24.12.2018, 26.01.2019, 30.01.2019, 07.2.2019,

3. The real cause of non-appearance of complainant and PWs before the trial court cannot be attributed to them; as it was not intentional; rather they are forced to avoid appearance, because they are apprehending serious threats to their lives. The complainant has already made several attempts in order to seek police protection but all efforts made by the complainant proved futile. Even at one stage the police guards were deployed vide notification dated 29.08.2016 but unfortunately those were withdrawn due to influence of accused party. This very fact was not brought in our notice by the trial court. During the course of proceedings before this Court, Sadaqat Ali (complainant) was present in person. He was given the right of audience. He explained in the Court the reasons in detail for non-appearance of complainant and prosecution witnesses. He further apprised that he had already moved various applications to police hierarchy, even to the Chief Justice, Lahore High Court but all efforts proved fruitless. He further informed that lawlessness of the aforesaid groups can be gauged from the fact that (364) empties of sophisticated weapons were recovered from the spot. This statement of the complainant was not controverted by anyone present in the Court from either side. Another portion of report that three PWs had compromised with the accused person before trial court is in fact settlement in between the two groups having no nexus with the case of prosecution lodged at the instance of Sadaqat Ali complainant. The prosecution version advanced by Sadaqat Ali complainant is still intact in all respects. Nevertheless, the trial court has assured this Court that trial can be concluded within the shortest possible time subject to the cooperation of the parties.

4. Another alarming situation has been brought in the notice of this Court during record inspection that the police file was manipulated by distracting Case Dairies from the original record, during court custody. In this regard "Rapt" has already been recorded in local police station. This very fact alone is sufficient to raise alarm towards the gravity of situation.

5. Now the pivotal question which requires determination is whether after the expiry of certain period, benefit of proviso 3 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. could be available to the accused in all eventualities or there can be any legal restriction imposed by the law. To construe the legal imports of law, it is advantageous to reproduce it:-

Section 497. When bail may be taken in cases of nonbailable offence.--

1. When any person accused of non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer-incharge of a police station, or appears or is brought before a Court, he may be released on bail, but he shall not be so released if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of [an offence punishable with death or [imprisonment for life or imprisonment for ten years]]:

Provided that

Provided further that ..

Provided further that the Court shall, except where it is of opinion that the delay in the trial of the accused has been occasioned by an act or omission of the accused or any other person acting on his behalf or in exercise of any right or privilege under any law for the time being in force, direct that any person shall be released on bail--

(a) who, being accused of any offence not punishable with death, has been detained for such offence for a continuous period exceeding one year and whose trial for such offence has not concluded; or

(b) who, being accused of an offence punishable with death, has been detained for such offence for a continuous period exceeding two years and whose trial for such offence has not concluded.

Provided further that the provisions of the foregoing proviso shall not apply to a previously convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or to a person who, in the opinion of the Court, is a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal or is accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

The provisos 3 and 4 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. are co-existent qua their application; hence, the imports of the same cannot be constructed in isolation rather to interpret it conjointly. The language of proviso 3 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. demonstrates a general principle which is clear, unambiguous in its texture rather it in express terms confers jurisdiction upon the court to entertain and extend benefit of proviso 3 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. in the spirit of language of said provision pursuant to the intent of the legislature, however, the said concession has been controlled while imposing certain restriction while introducing proviso 4 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The bare perusal of proviso 4 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C override to some extent proviso 3 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. by limiting its efficacy by placing conditions against the general principle as such it has laid an embargo which has to satisfy prior to availing concession of proviso 3 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C., resultantly, these are practically exceptions to the general principle entails from proviso 3 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The proviso 4 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. envisages distinct legal requisites in relation to its applicability.

(i) That the provision of third proviso of subsection shall not apply to previously convicted offender in an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

(ii) Or to a person who in the opinion of the court is hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal or involved in terrorism.

The plain reading of first requisite depicts it to be mandatory in nature by virtue of its language which is otherwise clear unambiguous transparent in its application. It speaks about those weighed down with criminal background. In other words any criminal who is previously convicted is outrightly barred from the consideration to avail the benefit of proviso 3 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. This condition is to apply stricto sensu in all fairness without compromising it in any manner; hence, all those who are stigmatized/tainted with criminal background are ousted from consideration. However, the second limb of proviso 4 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. is discretionary in its applicability. The language itself is self-explanatory ensuing the intent of said provision. While introducing this limb of said provision the legislature has empowered the court to form an opinion qua the person involved in a criminal case if brought forth while taking into consideration the act, mode and manner of occurrence and other existing circumstances placed before the court without being prejudiced by any previous record. The Court while forming opinion about the criminal declaration has to satisfy all norms of legal aspects so that opinion made should not frustrate any ethics of decency and fairness to meet the ends of justice. The opinion of the court should meet all legal justiciable requirements demanded by the law in the interest of safe administration of criminal justice.

6. The instant case exclusively relates to second limb of the proviso 4 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. Although there is no denial that this group is involved in eight other criminal cases of serious nature but even if this aspect is kept-a-aside the heinousness of the act committed by the petitioner in the present case when evaluated/scrutinized in its entirety, it is loaded with overwhelming material available on the record which connects the petitioner as main perpetrator of double murder case. Thus no other opinion can be formed in this case except that the petitioner while joining hands with others had committed a gruesome act of double murder. Hence, accumulative effect of the entire discussion leads towards one and the only opinion in the mind of the Court, which brings him in the category of hardened, desperate and dangerous criminal as stipulated under proviso 4 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The findings recorded by this Court was subject matter of an earlier case, which was dealt by a Single Bench of Sindh High Court in a salutary judgment titled "Muhammad Hanif v. The State" (PLD 1986 Karachi 437) in which it was enunciated by the learned Court that even in the absence of previous record, an accused can be declared hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal subject to act, mode and manner of occurrence in that very case. A number of judgments with divergent view were in fields from other Courts, hence to resolve this controversy leave to appeal was granted to pronounce an authoritative judgment on the subject, even it was considered a case of first impression before this Court, Therefore, in the case titled "Mounder and others v. The State" (1988 SCMR 1113). A larger Bench of five Hon'ble Members was constituted which approved the judgment of Sindh High Court mentioned above in the case "Moundar and others v. The State" (PLD 1990 Supreme Court 934). Relevant at p/939 reproduced:-

"The word "criminal" cannot be given a special meaning as a person already convicted of a crime for in that case, the category of provision convicts having been separately mentioned as disentitled to the privilege of release on bail on the ground of statutory delay, the words under interpretation to the effect that the person is hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, would be rendered completely redundant and meaningless. According to the learned Judge, therefore, opinion on this question can be based upon the materials available in the case under trial as well as any other material which may be produced by the prosecution to help the Court in formation of such opinion. Somewhat similar view was expressed by another learned Judge of the Sindh High Court in Gull Khan and others v. The State PLD 1986 Kar. 629, in which the word "criminal" was construed in the context of provision under consideration, to mean a person "accused of criminal offence or who is known to be or reputed to committing crime".

At page No. 941 it is observed as under:-

"In subsection (1) of section 497 the legislature has already empowered the Court even before the commencement of the trial to make a tentative assessment of the evidence collected against an accused person or likely to be produced in the trial against him, in order to reach the conclusion whether there appears a reasonable ground for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or life imprisonment or imprisonment for 10 years. The provision under consideration here is a proviso to the same subsection, and, therefore, it will be reasonable to construe it in the same manner authorizing a Court to take into consideration the evidence collected by the prosecution for purpose of determining whether the accused is a criminal of the categories prescribed therein. Of course the Court can take into consideration and indeed in most of the cases it will take into consideration other materials produced by the prosecution in order to show that the case falls within the prohibitions contained in the 4th proviso".

7. As a consequence of the facts and circumstances, the law on the subject, this Court has no hesitation to conclude that the allegation levelled against the petitioner regarding commission of such a heinous offence squarely comes with the ambit of a hardened, desperate and dangerous criminal, hence, he is not entitled to avail the benefit of proviso 3 of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. Therefore, I do not find any force in the said petition which is hereby dismissed. Leave to appeal is declined.

JUDGMENT

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Muhammad Ashraf son of Nazeer Ahmed, 50, was shot dead at 9:30 p.m. on 4.6.2008 within the remit of Police Station Ghulam Muhammad Abad, Faisalabad; incident was reported by his nephew Muhammad Jameel (PW-10), 10:20 p.m. at the spot; prime target of the assault Rashid struggled with multiple injuries, breathed his last on 14.6.2008; from amongst the witnesses Muhammad Zaman and Qaisar survived the assault; they were medically noted with firearm injuries, however, opted to stay away from the witness-box.

According to the complainant, on the fateful night, he was at his grocery store along with Muhammad Ashraf son of Nazeer Ahmed, Muhammad Iqbal son of Muhammad Hussain and Muhammad Ashraf son of Muhammad Rafique when Muhammad Yasin, Younas alias Kala, Shahid alias Mithu, Muhammad Azam, Imtiaz Butt and Ilyas accompanied by an unknown companion confronted Rashid deceased who alongside Zulfiqar Ali, on a motorbike had just arrived at the scene. Muhammad Yasin along with the co-accused subdued Rashid deceased and after hitting him with an iron rod forced him to board on a rickshaw; Muhammad Ashraf deceased, Qaisar Manzoor and Muhammad Zaman attempted to intervene when all the accused with their pistols resorted to firing; a fire shot by Muhammad Yasin, petitioner, trapped Muhammad Ashraf deceased on his left chest, a fire shot by Azam (P.O.) hit Rashid on his face followed by a fire shot by Ilyas landing on the backside of his shoulder. Unknown assailant targeted Muhammad Zaman on his left deltoid while Shahid alias Mithu fired on the left flank of Qaisar Manzoor whereafter all the accused resorted to indiscriminate firing and took to the heels within the view of terror stricken neighbourhood. It is alleged that the assailants dealt in narcotics and they suspected Rashid deceased to have intermediated information to the police.

Spot inspection includes seizure of blood as well as 22 casings; Muhammad Zaman and Qaisar Manzoor PWs were medically examined under a police docket at 10:20 p.m. followed by Rashid deceased at 10:40 p.m. however, autopsy on Ashraf deceased was conducted following day at 9:30 a.m. The accused, barring Azam and Shafqat, P.Os, unanimously claimed trial on 04.01.2010 that culminated into their acquittal except the petitioner vide judgment dated 21.07.2010; convicted on two counts of homicide as well as terrorism, he was sentenced to death on each, altered in appeal into imprisonment for life vide impugned judgment dated 8.10.2015.

2. Learned counsel for the petitioner contends that there was no occasion for the learned trial Court to return a guilty verdict qua the petitioner after it had disbelieved entire bulk of prosecution evidence qua majority of the accused that included Ilyas co-accused as well who was assigned a direct fire shot to Rashid deceased; an error repeated by the High Court in appeal; that prosecution's failure to bring forth Muhammad Zaman and Qaisar Manzoor, the injured witnesses of the episode, tremors the very foundation of the case; seizure of 22 casings notwithstanding, nonetheless, in the absence of recovery of weapons except for an iron rod, has been cited to argue that occurrence did not take place in the manner as alleged in the crime report. Learned Law Officer assisted by learned counsel for the complainant has faithfully defended the impugned judgment; the latter while referring to the magnitude of violence inflicted upon the deceased, including Rashid who laid his life for siding with the law, prayed for reversal of the alteration of sentence, contending death being a conscionable wage in circumstances.

3. Heard. Record perused.

4. Medical examination of Rashid deceased as well as given up witnesses unambiguously suggest that occurrence took place on or around the time mentioned in the crime report; venue being at a distance of 1- k.m. from the police station, arrival of the police and conclusion of complaint at 10:20 p.m. apparently reflect a remarkable promptitude, however, autopsy of Muhammad Ashraf deceased, held as late as at 9:30 a.m. following day, despite arrival of the injured and the dead body during the preceding night at 10:20 p.m. is quite intriguing. It is further mind boggling that examination of the injured in the hospital and recording of complaint at the spot are steps taking place at the same time i.e. 10:20 p.m. Coincidence even though without obliquity, nonetheless, when taken in the totality of circumstances admits a possibility that crime report was not recorded at a point of time purported therein. Delayed autopsy in a tertiary hospital i.e. Allied Hospital Faisalabad reinforces the above hypothesis that in retrospect cast its shadow on the ostensible promptitude behind the crime report and, thus, the argument that the foundation of the case was laid after deliberations and consultations cannot be dismissed out of hand.

Desertion of Muhammad Zaman and Qaisar Manzoor (given up PWs), statedly won over by the accused, though reflects a possible societal phenomena unfortunately not uncommon, nonetheless, being the best witnesses in circumstances, their absence from the scene certainly calls for extra caution.

The witnesses unanimously blamed Ilyas acquitted co-accused to have targeted Rashid deceased with a straight fire shot landing on the back of his left shoulder; while first Medical Officer i.e. Dr. Muhammad Yousaf (PW-1) who examined the deceased in injured condition remained somewhat reticent on the nature of injury, the autopsy conducted by Dr. Bashir Ahmed (PW-2) clearly established the injury attributed to Ilyas acquitted co-accused as an aftermath of entry wound, being exit of injury on the right cheek. Prosecution's failure qua Ilyas accused both before the trial Court as well as in the High Court entails inescapable repercussions as the set of witnesses disbelieved qua Ilyas would essentially require independent corroboration vis- -vis the remainder. With a non-specific and vaguely formulated motive, concurrently held out of consideration, in the absence of consequential recoveries, the witnesses, disbelieved with regard to an identically placed co-accused cannot join themselves to corroborate each other against the convicts; acquittal of Shahid alias Mithu, Imtiaz Butt, Muhammad Younas alias Kala and Saeed, though assigned roles that san harm to the deceased, nonetheless, further compound the prosecution predicament inasmuch as they were alleged to have resorted to indiscriminate firing; their departure cast away the entire case. On the whole prosecution case is found fraught with doubts, embedded in and deducible from the stated positions and, thus, it would be unsafe to maintain the convictions on the left over fragments. Criminal Petition No.1292-L of 2015 is converted into appeal and allowed; petitioner/appellant is acquitted of the charge and shall be released forthwith, if not required to be detained in any other case.

ORDER

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---Akhtar Ali, petitioner, is engaged in litigation with his estranged wife Tania Kousar; he is also accused in a criminal case registered at the instance of one Mst. Ghazala Bibi; he has arrayed both of them in his quest for transfer of cases pending adjudication before a learned Judicial Magistrate at Sheikhupura to a Court at Gojra District Nankana Sahib. After his failure before the learned District and Sessions Judge Sheikhupura, his request before a learned Judge-in-Chamber of the Lahore High Court Lahore met with no better fate and the learned Judge having found the motion scandalous and frivolous, burdened him with a cost of Rs.50,000/-. It is in this backdrop that he has resigned before us as a last resort.

2. In his move before the Courts below, we have found his accusations directed against the learned Judges as outrageous as well as scandalous; he has also targeted the members and office bearers of the local Bar, apparently having no axe to grind in his trivial contests wherein we have found the respondents equally reckless and abrasive. We view the repugnant course adopted by the parties before the learned Courts with disdain. It is fundamentally important for the peaceful preservation of any society that its Judges attend call of their office fearlessly with dignity, respect and independence so as to sit on the judgment between the contestants, regardless of their status or station, without let or hindrance. A society cannot countenance obstruction or interference with the administration of justice without incurring disastrous consequences, therefore, to ensure freedom to a Judge within the remits of law is a duty cast upon all and sundry without exception and immunity.

3. The petitioner while hurling accusations threw both caution as well as courtesy to the wind and the learned Judge-in-Chamber was well within the bounds of law to saddle him with a substantial cost. The petitioner, however, before us has expressed remorse and regret, throwing himself at the mercy of the Court; he pledged profound respect and courtesy that appertains to a tribunal with an undertaking to be extremely careful in the future.

4. Restraint is a better part of judicial calling; we would never exercise coercive authority of the State vesting in us since time immemorial in order to wreak vengeance or as a means to uphold our dignity or respect that we solemnly believe 'must rest on surer foundations', nonetheless, given the gravity of petitioner's reckless behavior we would not let him off without a tag. With a stern warning and while exercising restraint, we reduce the cost imposed by the High Court to a sum of Rs.2000/- as a symbolic reminder to the petitioner for his mischief.

5. We entertain no manner of doubt that the learned Magistrate, conscious of his calling as a tryst with divinity, uninfluenced by the scandalous conduct of the parties, would dispose of the pending matters in accordance with law, in the fullness of time with all convenient dispatch. The petitioner shall deposit Rs.2000/- as cost with the District Nazir Sheikhupura within a fortnight. Petition fails. Leave declined.

JUDGMENT

MANZOOR AHMAD MALIK, J.---Sarwar petitioner with his sister Sugharan Bibi faced trial before the learned Additional Sessions Judge Chiniot in case FIR No.371 of 2001 dated 03.09.2001 offence under sections 302/34, P.P.C. registered at Police Station Saddar Chiniot. After regular trial, he was convicted under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced to death with compensation of Rs.200,000 (rupees two hundred thousand only) payable to the legal heirs of the deceased and in default thereof to undergo simple imprisonment for six month. Through the same judgment, Sugharan Bibi was acquitted of the charge. Aggrieved of his conviction and sentence, the petitioner filed a criminal appeal whereas the learned trial court transmitted murder reference. Both these matters were taken up together by a learned Division Bench of the Lahore High Court and through the impugned judgment, appeal filed by the petitioner was dismissed. His sentence of death, however, was altered to life imprisonment. Amount of compensation and the sentence of imprisonment in default thereof as ordered by the learned trial court were maintained. He was extended benefit of section 382-B, Code of Criminal Procedure. Aggrieved of the decision of the learned appellate court, Sarwar petitioner has filed Criminal Petition No.1116-L of 2015 whereas Mst. Parveen Bibi complainant has filed Criminal Petition No.1143-L of 2015.

2. Precisely, the prosecution case as set out in the FIR and narrated by both the witnesses of ocular account, while appearing before the learned trial court, is that Sarwar petitioner while armed with a .12 bore gun fired at Anwar (deceased) as a result whereof he died at the spot.

3. We have heard learned counsel for the petitioner as well as learned Additional Prosecutor General for the State assisted by learned counsel for the complainant and with their able assistance have gone through the relevant record.

4. The occurrence in this case took place at 0.800 a.m. on 03.09.2001 and it was reported to the Police on the same day at 10.15 p.m. The delay is two hours and fifteen minutes in reporting the crime to the Police is not material keeping in view the peculiar circumstances of the case such as the gender of the complainant and 11 miles distance between the place of occurrence and the Police Station. Therefore, we hold that there was no deliberate or conscious delay in reporting the matter to the Police.

5. Ocular account in this case was furnished by Mst. Parveen Bibi (PW.2) widow of the deceased and Jahangir (PW.3) who was brother in law (sala) of the deceased. The occurrence took place in front of the house of the complainant and place of occurrence was never disputed by the defence. Presence of the complainant at the time and place of occurrence cannot be doubted by any stretch of imagination. Jahangir was resident of other village but has given a specific reason for his presence at the place of occurrence which is to the effect that he along with others had visited the house of the deceased to patch up the matter between Anwar (deceased) and Sarwar (petitioner). Therefore, we hold that both the witnesses of ocular account were present at the spot and had witnessed the crime being committed by Sarwar petitioner.

6. It is case of the prosecution that Sarwar petitioner fired two shots at Anwar (deceased) with a .12 bore double barrel gun and only one shot landed on the person of the deceased. While conducting post mortem on the dead body of Anwar (deceased) Dr. Saif Ullah Haral (PW.5) observed one firearm entry wound. Therefore, we hold that the ocular account is fully supported by the medical evidence.

7. In the circumstances, we hold that the prosecution has successfully brought home guilt against the petitioner beyond any reasonable doubt. Therefore there is no merit in Criminal Petition No.1116, which is dismissed and leave to appeal is refused.

8. Now we take up Criminal Petition No.1143-L of 2015, filed by the complainant. We have observed that there are certain circumstances in this case which persuaded the learned Lahore High Court for altering the sentence of death of Sarwar respondent No.1 to imprisonment for life inasmuch as recovery of .12 bore double barrel gun was not believed by both the learned courts below; motive behind the occurrence could not be proved and single fire shot on the person of deceased is attributed to the petitioner. In these circumstances, the alteration of the sentence of death to imprisonment for life by the learned appellate court is fully justified. Resultantly, there is no merit in Criminal Petition No.1143-L of 2015, which is dismissed and leave to appeal is refused.

MWA/S-27/SC Petition dismissed.

----R. 22(5), proviso---Punjab Civil Servants Act (III of 1974), S. 2(1)(a)---Ad hoc employees regularized in service---Seniority---Seniority in the case of ad-hoc employees was to be granted from the date of their regularization and not from the date of their ad-hoc appointment.

In the present case the respondents were appointed in the year 1995 on ad-hoc basis and their services were terminated after one year in accordance with Rule 22(2) of the Punjab Civil Servants (Appointment and Conditions of Service) Rules, 1974. However, the respondents and others challenged their termination and were successful in obtaining injunctive orders in their favour and since then the matter of regularization remained pending before the courts or the administrative authorities. Finally in the year 2009, the Government was directed by the court that the case of the ad-hoc employees be considered in light of a certain Supreme Court precedent. As a result vide order dated 15.06.2012 passed by the department the services of the respondents were regularized from the date of issuance of the order. The respondents while accepting their regularization from the said date contended that their seniority be reckoned from the date of their ad-hoc appointments. Any such claim of the respondents was opposed to proviso to Rule 22(5) of the Civil Servants (Appointment and Conditions of Service) Rules, 1974. Seniority in the case of ad-hoc employees was to be granted from the date of their regularization.

In light of provision of proviso to Rule 22(5) of the Civil Servants (Appointment and Conditions of Service) Rules, 1974, especially when the department was not at fault and did not extend any expectations to the ad-hoc employees in such regard, the regularization of ad-hoc employee shall be reckoned from the order of regularization and seniority was also to be reckoned from the date of regularization and not from the date of their ad-hoc appointment.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts are that the respondents were appointed as Secondary School Teachers ("SST") by the Director of Secondary Education, Faisalabad Division, Faisalabad in the year 1995 on ad hoc basis, thereafter, their services were terminated in the year 1996; aggrieved of the same they approached Lahore High Court by invoking its constitutional jurisdiction and obtained an interim relief to continue as SSTs vide order dated 22.05.1996. Thereafter, in the year 2001, High Court observed that the matter of termination could not be looked into, in view of the bar contained in Article 212 of the Constitution, however, in the interest of justice and fair play dispatched the matter to the Secretary concerned to look into the matter and pass appropriate orders. The issue of regularization of ad hoc SSTs kept tossing around between the Courts and the administration as similarly placed employees had also agitated this matter. Thereafter in the year 2009 vide order dated 25.03.2009 passed in C.Ps. Nos.1086-L to 1571-L, 1973-L of 2008, the Government was directed that the case of the Ad hoc employees be considered in the light of case reported as Dr. Naveeda Tufail and 72 others v. Government of Punjab and others (2003 SCMR 291). As a result the, services of the respondents were regularized vide order date 15.06.2012 from the date of issuance of the order. Aggrieved of the said order, respondents claiming their regularization from the date of their ad hoc appointment, challenged the said order before the Service Tribunal, which were disposed of vide judgment dated 18.12.2013 with the direction to the Chief Secretary, Punjab to decide all the pending appeals of the respondents expeditiously. Thereafter the departmental appeals were rejected vide order dated 30.12.2014. Against the same, the respondents once again approached the Punjab Service Tribunal, which vide impugned order dated 09.10.2019 allowed the appeals and granted regularization of their services from the date of the initial appointment. This has been impugned before us.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the record as well as the law on the subject.

4. At the very outset it is pointed out by the respondents that their grievance before this Court is somewhat different, they accept their regularization from the date of order of regularization i.e., in the year 2011, however, they seek seniority from the date of; their ad hoc appointment. Ad hoc appointment has been defined in section 2(1)(a) of the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974 in the following manner:-

"2. Definitions. (1) In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context:-

(a) "ad hoc appointment" means appointment of a duly qualified person made otherwise than in accordance with the prescribed method of recruitment, pending recruitment in accordance with such method;"

Rules 22(2) of the Punjab Civil Servants (Appointment and Conditions of Service) Rules, 1974 provides that a post to be filled on ad hoc basis, shall be for a period not exceeding one year. In the present case the respondents were appointed in the year 1995 and their services were terminated in the light of the above Rule, however, the respondents and others challenged their termination and were successful in obtaining injunctive orders in their favour and since then the matter of regularization remained pending before the courts or the administrative authorities. Finally in the year 2009 vide order dated 25.03.2009 passed in C.Ps. Nos. 1086-L to 1571-L, 1973-L of 2008, the Government was directed that the case of the Ad hoc employees be considered in the light of Dr. Naveeda Tufail and 72 others v. Government of Punjab and other (2003 SCMR 291). As a result vide order dated 15.06.2012 passed by the department the services of the respondents were regularized from the date of issuance of the order. The respondents while accepting their regularization from the said date pray that their seniority be reckoned from the date of their ad hoc appointment. Any such claim is opposed to proviso to Rule 22(5) of the Rules, which states as follows:-

"Provided further that ad hoc appointment shall not confer any right on the persons so appointed in the matter of regular appointment of the same post nor the service will count towards seniority in the grade." (emphasis supplied)

It has been a consistent jurisprudence of this Court that seniority in the case of ad hoc employees is to be granted from the date of their regularization. See Abu Bakar Farooq through Chairman and others v. Muhammad Ali Rajpar and others (2019 SCMR 830), Nadir Shah, S.D.O. Minor Canal Cell, Irrigation Sub-Division, Dera Murad Jamali and 2 others v. Secretary, Irrigation and Power Department, Balochistan, Quetta and 7 others (2003 PLC (C.S.) 961), Federation of Pakistan and others v. Rais Khan (1993 SCMR 609) and Mian Muhammad Afzal and others v. Government of the Punjab and others (1982 SCMR 408).

4. In the light of the law settled by this Court and clear provision of proviso to Rule 22(5) of the Rules, especially when the department was not at fault and did not extend any expectations to the Ad hoc employees in this regard, we are of the view that the regularization of ad hoc employee shall be reckoned from the order of regularization and seniority is also to be reckoned from the date of regularization and not from the date of their ad hoc appointment. The impugned order of the Punjab Service Tribunal is, therefore, set aside. These petitions are converted into appeal and allowed in the above terms.

5. It is pointed out that some of the petitions are barred by time, however, their period of limitation has been condoned.

Following are some of the constitutional and legal flaws in the exercise of jurisdiction by the President, the Prime Minister, the Cabinet and the Ministry of Defence, in the extension, reappointment and appointment of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff (COAS):

(i) The Prime Minister appointed the incumbent COAS as the Chief of the Army Staff for another term of three years from the date of completion of the current tenure vide his "order" dated 19.08.2019, while the Prime Minister had no such power under the Constitution.

(ii) The tenure of 3 years mentioned in the above order of the Prime Minister had no legal basis.

(iii) The extension of the tenure of COAS for a further period of three years vide notification dated 19-08-2019 was not supported by law as there was no provision of tenure or extension of tenure prescribed under the Constitution or the law.

(iv) The summary initiated by the Ministry of Defence dated 19.08.2019 stated that the incumbent COAS was due for retirement from 29.11.2019 by tenure but did not state the law providing for such tenure for retirement.

(v) The said summary mentioned that the General Officer may be granted extension of one further tenure of three years under Regulation 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules), despite the fact that there was no tenure prescribed for a General and that there was no provision for extension for another tenure in the Pakistan Army Act, 1952, Pakistan Army Act Rules, 1954 or the Army Regulations (Rules).

(vi) The President under Article 243(4)(b) of the Constitution granted extension to the incumbent COAS for three years on 19-08-2019, while the President had no power to grant extension under the Constitution or the law.

(vii) The Government, the very next day, i.e. 20-08-2019, retracted from the earlier position and without withdrawing the notification regarding grant of extension to the incumbent COAS, issued under the approval/authority of the President a day before, took up the matter of extension of the tenure of the COAS with the Cabinet relying on Army Regulation 255 in the absence of any tenure or age of retirement prescribed for a General.

(viii) Only 11 members of the Cabinet out of 25 approved the above summary through circulation. However, no notification was issued under the authority or approval of the Federal Government regarding extension of the tenure of the incumbent COAS. Thus, this exercise served no purpose.

(ix) This approval through circulation failed to comply with Rule 19 of the Rules of Business, 1973 which required that the Cabinet Secretary was to specify the time by which the opinions of the Ministers should be communicated to him. No such timeframe was specified.

(x) The Ministry of Defence issued notification dated 26.11.2019 stating that retirement of incumbent COAS, as a General Officer had been limited and he had been granted extension for further three years. This exercise conducted under the freshly amended Army Regulations (Rules) 255 (including the word "extension") could only be useful if there had been tenure or retirement age of a General provided under the law.

(xi) Finally on 28-11-2019, a fresh summary was put up before the Prime Minister for appointment of incumbent COAS as the Chief of the Army Staff w.e.f. 28-11-2019 under Article 243(4)(b) of the Constitution which was approved by the President, leading to notification dated 28-11-2019. This Notification stated that the notification dated 26.11.2019 regarding limiting retirement and granting extension of service to incumbent COAS stood withdrawn. This shows that there remained no notification in the field regarding limiting retirement and granting extension of service to the incumbent COAS. The appointment of the incumbent COAS on 28.11.2019 was again based on the assumption that his tenure had expired. [p. 21] D

Detailed examination of the laws relating to the Army revealed that there was no provision providing for the tenure and age of retirement of a General and as a consequence of the Chief of the Army Staff, as well as, for the extension of tenure or fresh appointment for another tenure; nor was there any consistent and continuous institutional practice of granting such extension, which could be enforced in absence of the law on the subject. The summaries initiated by the Ministry of Defence and approved by the President, the Prime Minister and the Cabinet, for the re-appointment, extension and fresh appointment of the incumbent COAS seemed to be meaningless and of no consequence in the absence of the law prescribing tenure of a General and providing extension for another tenure. Attorney General had assured the Court that the Federal Government would carry out legislation through the Parliament in the shape of an Act within six months to provide for the terms of service of a General (and as a consequence of COAS) so that effect could be given to Article 243 of the Constitution in letter and spirit and functionality of the constitutional provisions be realized at the earliest.

Supreme Court observed that exercising judicial restraint it was appropriate to leave the matter to the Parliament and the Federal Government to clearly specify the terms and conditions of service of the COAS through an Act of Parliament within a period of six months, and to clarify the scope of Article 243 of the Constitution in such regard; that the Federal Government may also, if deemed appropriate, specifically provide for extension of the tenure of an army officer of the rank of a General in the Act with grounds for granting such an extension, so that the discretion of the Federal Government in granting extension to a General was structured.

Sindh High Coiurt Bar Association v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2009 SC 879; Government of Sindh v. Sharaf Faridi, 1990 SCMR 91, PLD 1994 SC 105 and Nadeem Ahmad v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2010 SC 1165 ref.

In the present state of legal vacuum regarding the tenure of a COAS and in the light of the assurance given by the Federal Government to address these issues through fresh legislation within six months, and considering that the COAS was the commanding officer of the Army and was responsible for the command, discipline, training, administration, organization and preparedness for war of the Army and in order to preserve smooth functioning of the Army, the Supreme Court directed that the current status of the incumbent COAS shall continue for a period of six months, where after the new legislation (Act of the Parliament) shall determine his tenure and other terms of his service; that in case the Federal Government remained unable to regulate the tenure and terms of service of a General and as a consequence of the COAS through an appropriate legislation by the Parliament, within a period of six months, the tenure of the constitutional post of COAS could not be left totally unregulated and to continue forever; that in case of such failure of the Federal Government the institutional practice of retirement of a General on completion of the tenure of three years as borne out from the record, shall stand enforced to regulate the tenure of incumbent COAS consequentially his tenure as COAS, from the date of his promotion to the rank of General and appointment as COAS, i.e.29.11.2016, and the President shall, on advice of the Prime Minister, appoint a serving General officer as the new COAS.

Supreme Court observed that its exercise of judicial restraint in the present matter may not be mixed up or confused with the application of the doctrine of necessity, which amounted to going against the law of the land to attend to some political or other goal; that this was not so in the present case where there was no law, in fact, there was a total legal vacuum regarding the tenure of a General.

----Regln. 262-A---Pakistan Army Act, (XXXIX of 1952), S. 18---Pakistan Army Act Rules, 1954, R. 12---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts.240 & 243(3) & 243(4)(b)---Constitutional petition before the Supreme Court relating to the tenure and extension of the Chief of the Army Staff---Chief of the Army Staff (COAS) or an Army General (commissioned after the year 1970)---Retirement age and extension of tenure---Regulation 262-A of the Army Regulations (Rules), 1998, which dealt with officers commissioned after 1970, did not provide the retirement age of an officer of the rank of a General---Pakistan Army Act, 1952 fell deficient of the structural requirements for raising and maintaining an Army under clause (3) of Art.243 of the Constitution, as it did not provide for essential elements required to raise and maintain an Army, particularly the grant of Commissions in the Army and the terms of service of the Commissioned Officers including tenure and extension of a General---At present the tenure of a General and consequentially of a COAS was three years as per institutional convention and practice---Supreme Court observed that such an institutional practice could not be a valid substitute of the law required to be made in pursuance of the constitutional mandate under Art.243(3) of the Constitution; that this was a serious legislative omission, yet in the absence of such law the institutional convention and practice could be enforced to remove uncertainty as to the tenure of a General and to make the constitutional post of Chief of the Army Staff functional; that service in the Armed Forces being "Service of Pakistan" must be regulated by or under the law in accordance with the provisions of Art.240 of the Constitution read with Art.243(3), otherwise, it was inconceivable that the highest rank in the Army, would have no tenure or age of retirement or other terms of service; that in the first instance, the matter should be allowed to be regulated by law, made by the legislature, as mandated by the Constitution.

----Regln. 255---Army officer---Delaying or suspending retirement or extending date of retirement---Scope---Regulation 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules), 1998, could only be invoked for an officer who had retired or was about to retire---Emphasis was to delay the retirement either by limiting the retirement or by extending the date of retirement or suspending retirement after retirement---Such an act was a temporary arrangement and could only be availed if the exigencies of service and public interest so required---Essence of Regln. 255 was that if an officer was on the way out (about to retire) and urgent or pressing circumstances required that he be retained in service, said Regulation came into play---Exercise of discretion by the Federal Government under Regln. 255 had to be structured on parameters of exigency of service with a corresponding temporary period in mind---Words suspension, limiting retirement and extension did not connote permanency and could not be equated with grant of new tenure or a fresh appointment, therefore, a new tenure or fresh appointment or extension of another full tenure could not be given or granted to an army officer, including a General, under Army Regulation (Rules) 255.

(j) Legislation---

----Delegated legislation---Rules and Regulations---Delegatee must have legislative guidelines to formulate Rules and Regulations, and such guidelines, contours or boundaries must come from the Legislature (Parliament) itself---Legislature could confer upon any person or body the power to make subordinate/delegated legislation (Rules, Regulations or byelaws, etc.) in order to give effect to the law enacted by it yet it must perform itself the essential legislative function, i.e. to exercise its own judgment on vital matters of policy and enact the general principles providing guidance for making the delegated legislation.

(k) Separation of powers, doctrine of---

----Delegation of an "essential legislative function" by the Legislature to the Executive was not permissible under the Constitution---Foundation of such embargo owed its genesis to the concept of trichotomy of powers between the Legislature, the Executive and the Judicature, which was a fundamental principle of the constitutional construct.

----S. 176A---Army Regulations (Rules), 1998---Power to make Regulations---Section 176A of the Pakistan Army Act, 1952, vires of---In order to provide a legal cover to the Army Regulations (Rules), S.176A was inserted in the Pakistan Army Act, 1952, which empowered the Federal Government to make Regulations---Army Regulations (Rules) once brought within the statutory fold must flow from the Pakistan Army Act, 1952---Regulations which did not meet such requirement would be ultra vires the said Act---Scope of the Pakistan Army Act, 1952 or the vires of the Army Regulations (Rules) could not be determined by the words inserted in S.176A like governance, command, discipline, recruitment, terms and conditions of service, rank, precedence and administration of the Pakistan Army---Said words were mere words when there was no essential or core legislation on these subjects---Section 176-A after its insertion provided a shortcut and authorized the Federal Government to regulate areas like governance, command, discipline, recruitment, terms and conditions of service, rank, precedence and administration of the Pakistan Army through the Army Regulations (Rules)---Power of the Parliament under the Constitution could not be delegated to the Federal Government without the Parliament performing the basic essential legislative function, i.e. providing policy guidelines on these areas---Through S.176A, the Parliament appeared to have divested itself of the essential legislative function which amounted to excessive delegation, as neither said section nor any other section of the Pakistan Army Act, 1952 provided the essential legislative policy guidelines for making the delegated legislation, viz. the Regulations, on the subjects mentioned therein---Army Regulations (Rules) would be rendered ultra vires if they did not draw their power from the parent Act, i.e. the Pakistan Army Act, 1952 and would suffer from excessive delegation if they drew their strength only from S.176A of the Act---Army Regulations (Rules) appeared to be without any legal cover and fell outside the scope of the Pakistan Army Act, 1952---Said Regulations had to be fully examined in the light of said principles---Supreme Court observed that it was for the Federal Government to bring about appropriate legislation to remove such defects so that the Army Regulations (Rules) had a proper legal cover and were fully enforceable under the law.

----Ss. 3 & 7(e)---Army Regulations (Rules), 1998---Inaccessible for public---Acts of the Parliament or subordinate legislation were public documents and must be readily available to the citizen of the country subject to the exceptions provided under the Right of Access to Information Act, 2017---Said exceptions extended only to record relating to defence forces, defence installations or connected therewith and ancillary to defence and national security and not to the Army laws---Every legislative instrument must be made accessible to public.

(o) Judicial restraint, doctrine of---

----Scope---Constitutional questions---Judicial restraint in its substantial approach urged Judges considering constitutional questions to give deference to the views of the elected branches and invalidate their actions only when constitutional limits had clearly been violated---While the principle, "if it is not necessary to decide more, it is necessary not to decide more" well stated the procedural aspect of judicial restraint---Judicial restraint (exercised so as not to intrude in other branches of Government) was essential to the continuance of rule of law, and for the continued public confidence in the political impartiality of the judiciary and the voluntary respect for the law as laid down and applied by the Courts.

----Arts. 184(3) & 199---Judicial review, power of---Scope---Power of judicial review was a great weapon in the hands of Judges, but the Judges must observe the Constitutional limits set by the parliamentary system on their exercise of this beneficial power, namely, the separation of powers between the Parliament, the Executive and the Courts---Judicial review must, therefore, remain strictly judicial and in its exercise Judges must take care not to intrude upon the domain of the other branches of Government.

(q) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 243(3) & 243(4)(b)---Pakistan Army Act (XXXIX of 1952), S.8(2)---Army Regulations (Rules), 1998, Regln. 255---Constitutional petition before the Supreme Court relating to the tenure and extension of the Chief of the Army Staff---Terms and conditions of service of Chief of the Army Staff, the tenure of his office, extension in the tenure of his office or his reappointment to that office had remained unregulated by any law so far---Clause (3) of Art.243 of the Constitution mandated that the President's power to raise and maintain the armed forces was to be "subject to law" and, thus, leaving some vital aspects relevant to the office of Chief of the Army Staff without being regulated by any law militated against the said express provision of the Constitution---His Lordship observed with hope and optimism that framing of a law by the Parliament regulating the terms and conditions of the office of Chief of the Army Staff may go a long way in rectifying multiple historical wrongs and in asserting sovereign authority of the chosen representatives of the people besides making exercise of judicial power of the Courts all pervasive, and that the democratic maturity of the nation had reached a stage where the Supreme Court could proclaim that "Howsoever high you may be; the law is above you".

JUDGEMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---At the heart of this case lies the fundamental question of rule of law: Is our government of laws or of men?[1] The case before us questions whether the top military post in the country, that of the Chief of the Army Staff ("COAS"), the commanding officer of the Pakistan Army, is regulated by the Constitution and the law; whether the COAS has a tenure or can seek an extension or has any terms of service under the law.

2. The proceedings of the case brought to fore more questions: Whether the constitutional mandate since 1956 of raising and maintaining an Army under the law, has been fulfilled by the Pakistan Army Act, 1952; whether Regulation 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules) is designed to grant extension to a COAS for another term; whether at all, the Army Regulations (Rules), inherited from the British India, enjoy the protection of the Pakistan Army Act, 1952? This judgment addresses these questions.

3. The history of our Army has seen successive appointments, retirements and extensions of several Chiefs of the Army Staff since Independence. However, for the first time the matter has come to the highest Court of the land questioning the legal framework under which these appointments, retirements and extensions take place.

Facts

4. The Prime Minister appointed the current COAS for another term of three years through his "order" dated 19.08.2019. Thereafter, the President on the advice of the Prime Minister granted "extension" for one further tenure of three years to the COAS w.e.f. 29.11.2019. This public interest litigation (PIL) has challenged the extension of the COAS on the ground that it is offensive to Article 243(4)(b) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution"), thereby urging the Court to strike it down.

5. The petitioner did not appear on the first date of hearing. The Court Associate placed an undated handwritten application before the Court, which prayed that the petitioner be allowed to withdraw the petition. This application was not entertained by the Court for the following reasons recorded in the order dated 26.11.2019:

> "The Court-Associate has produced before us a handwritten application statedly submitted by the petitioner seeking permission to withdraw this petition. The petitioner has failed to appear in person nor anybody else has appeared on his behalf. The application received does not carry any date and the same is not accompanied by any affidavit. There is nothing before us to accept or to presume that the said application has actually been summited by the petitioner himself or that he has submitted the same voluntarily. Be that as it may the petition in hand invokes Article 184(3) of the Constitution and the subject matter of the petition involves a question of public importance with reference to enforcement of fundamental rights and, thus, the individual capacity of the petitioner pales into insignificance even if he decides not to pursue the present petition. The application attributed to the petitioner is, therefore, not entertained."

The Petitioner appeared in person, on the next date of hearing and made an oral request seeking permission to withdraw the petition. He was apprised of the above quoted observation of the Court, and his request was turned down.

Public Interest Litigation (PIL) - Withdrawal

6. A public interest litigation (PIL) can only be withdrawn with the permission of the Court. This is because it does not raise a personal issue limited to the petitioner; it is not a dominis litis (the person to whom a suit belongs) that would give a right to the petitioner to withdraw it as a matter of choice. "In granting the permission (to withdraw) the Court would be guided by considerations of public interest and would also ensure that it does not result in the abuse of the process of law. Courts must guard against possibilities of such litigants settling the matters out of Court to their advantage and then seeking withdrawal of the case."[2] Sometimes withdrawal of a public interest litigation, for oblique ends, can be used to the detriment of the public interest agitated therein. The Court has to be cautious not to fall prey to such oblique motives. The proceedings in public interest litigation are inquisitorial in nature and, therefore, the request for withdrawal of such litigation must always be weighed in the light of the question of public importance raised in it. A petitioner initiating public interest litigation is, therefore, not entitled to withdraw the petition at his sweet will.[3] The Court, however, may permit withdrawal of such litigation on considering the nature of the matter agitated therein and ensuring that it does not involve abuse of the process of law.

Maintainability and Jurisdiction under Article 184(3)

7. The Armed Forces are to defend Pakistan against external aggression and threat of war, under our Constitution.[4] The COAS is an officer commanding the Pakistan Army[5] and is responsible for the command, discipline, training, administration, organization and preparedness for war of the Army. He is also the Chief Executive in the General Headquarters and an adviser to the Government on military matters.[6] The appointment of the COAS of the Pakistan Army is, thus, inextricably linked with the life, security and liberty of every citizen and is undoubtedly a question of grave and vital public importance. The Army is perceived to play an intrinsic role in upholding constitutional values of sovereignty, freedom, democracy and the fundamental rights relating to life, liberty and dignity. Hence, the questions relating to its structure, command, governance and organization are of public importance with reference to the enforcement of the fundamental rights. In this age of information, the issues raised also attract fundamental right to information under Article 19A, as well as, the right to non-discrimination in services under Article 27 of the Constitution. Fundamental rights in a living Constitution are to be liberally interpreted so that they continue to embolden freedom, equality, tolerance and social justice.

8. Even the learned Attorney-General appearing for the Federal Government and the learned counsel for the COAS thought it appropriate, in this case, not to raise any objection to the assumption of jurisdiction by this Court or to the maintainability of this petition. They, during the hearing, rather tried to satisfy and convince the Court about the legality of the extension granted to the COAS and practically demonstrated that "it is confidence in the men and women who administer the judicial system that is the true backbone of the rule of law."[7] They in the course of arguments beseeched the Court to provide guidance to the Federation in this important matter.

9. The case proceeded as the Attorney-General for Pakistan ("Attorney-General") was already in attendance on his own, on the first date of hearing, and took us through the Summaries, approvals and orders passed regarding the extension of the COAS. The Court in its order dated 26.11.2019 identified some prima facie constitutional and legal flaws in the process of granting extension to the COAS and issued notices to all the respondents after impleading General Qamar Javed Bajwa, the COAS, as a respondent in the petition. The Court also suspended the operation of the notification of his extension dated 19.08.2019. The case was fixed for hearing the next day, on the request of the Attorney General. Relevant extract of the order dated 26.11.2019 is given as follows for ready reference:

"i) A summary had initially been moved by the Ministry of Defence for extension of the term of office of the Chief of the Army Staff and subsequently he was appointed as Chief of the Army Staff for a second term of three years after completion of his first term in that office but the learned Attorney-General for Pakistan has not been able to refer to any provision in any legal instrument regarding extension in service of a Chief of the Army Staff upon completion of his first term in that office or for his re-appointment to that office after completion of his first term.

ii) In the case in hand the Prime Minister had himself passed an order appointing the current Chief of the Army Staff for a second term in that office on 19.08.2019 whereas under Article 243 of the Constitution it is the President who is the appointing authority for that office. Apparently that mistake came to notice straightaway and on the same day, i.e. 19.08.2019 a summary was moved from the Prime Minister's office to the President for extension/re appointment of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff and on that very day, i.e. 19.08.2019 the President was pleased to approve the summary in that regard and, hence, the advice of the Prime Minister was apparently accepted and acted upon. It appears that even that process was found to be flawed and on that very day it was realized that the Prime Minister or the President could not take the above mentioned actions without the approval of the Cabinet and, thus, on the next day, i.e. 20.08.2019 a summary was moved in the relevant regard for approval of the Cabinet and on 21.08.2019 the Cabinet was said to have approved the said proposal through circulation. The opinion of the Cabinet recorded in this regard, photocopies whereof have been produced before us, shows that there are 25 members of the Cabinet and out of those 25 members only 11 had agreed to the proposal which shows that the majority of the Cabinet had not approved the said proposal. Yet another peculiar aspect is that after the purported or so-called approval of the Cabinet regarding extension/re-appointment of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff the matter was never sent to the Prime Minister or the President again for the purposes of a fresh advice or a fresh order of the Prime Minister and the President respectively.

iii) After our repeated queries the learned Attorney-General for Pakistan has referred to Regulation No. 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules) according to which a retirement of an Army officer can temporarily be suspended or limited. By placing reliance upon the said Regulation the learned Attorney-General for Pakistan has maintained that the Federal Government has the requisite authority to re-appoint or extend the services of an incumbent Chief of the Army Staff prior to his retirement if the exigencies of the service so require or the public interest so demands. A bare perusal of Regulation No. 255, however, prima facie shows that the said provision can be invoked after an officer has already retired from service and that is why the said Regulation speaks of suspension of retirement or limiting of retirement. Suspending a retirement or limiting a retirement before the retirement has actually taken effect may amount to putting the cart before the horse. The learned Attorney-General for Pakistan has, however, very candidly submitted before us that in the entire body of laws pertaining to the Pakistan Army there is no express provision available regarding re-appointment or extension in the service of a Chief of the Army Staff.

iv) The stated purpose for the proposed re-appointment/extension in the term of office of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff is "regional security environment". The said words are quite vague and if at all there is any regional security threat then it is the gallant armed forces of the country as an institution which are to meet the said threat and an individual's role in that regard may be minimal. If the said reason is held to be correct and valid then every person serving in the armed forces would claim re-appointment/extension in his service on the basis of the said reason."

Submissions of Attorney-General

10. The Attorney-General defended the Federal Government by arguing that the fresh appointment/ extension of the COAS is fully within the constitutional and legal fold. He submitted that the tenure of a General/COAS is three years as per unwritten convention and practice; that the tenure of a General/COAS can be extended under Regulation 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules); that the said Regulations have been framed under section 176-A of the Pakistan Army Act, 1952 and, therefore, have statutory force; and that even a retired Army General can be appointed as COAS under Article 243(4) of the Constitution, as the said clause of Article 243 is not subject to law. The Attorney-General took us through a series of documents, prepared prior to the filing of the instant petition and also those prepared during the course of hearing of the case, comprising the Summaries put up before the President, Prime Minister and the Cabinet; the subsequent approvals; and the relevant notifications regarding "reappointment", "extension", "limit-in-retirement" and "appointment" of General Qamar Javed Bajwa. A brief summary of the said documents is given as follows:

Initial appointment of General Bajwa as COAS

a. On 15.11.2016, the Ministry of Defence moved a Summary for the Prime Minister seeking approval of the Prime Minister under Rule 12 of the Pakistan Army Act Rules, 1954 for the retirement of General Raheel Sharif, COAS w.e.f. 29.11.2016.

b. On 28.11.2016, the Ministry of Defence notified the approval granted by the Federal Government for the retirement of General Raheel Sharif, COAS w.e.f. 29.11.2016.

c. On 26.11.2016, the Prime Minister gave advice to the President to promote General Qamar Javed Bajwa to the rank of General and to appoint him as COAS under Article 243(4)(b) of the Constitution. The President approved the advice on the same date.

d. On 26.11.2016, the Ministry of Defence notified the promotion of General Bajwa to the rank of General and his appointment as COAS w.e.f. 29.11.2016.

Extension of General Bajwa as COAS

First Proceedings dated 19.08.2019

e. The Prime Minister of Pakistan made an "order" appointing General Bajwa, as the COAS for another term of three years from the date of completion of current tenure. He stated "the regional security environment" as a reason of his said order.

f. The Prime Minister's office addressed a letter to the Defence Secretary stating that the Prime Minister had desired the extension of service of General Bajwa as COAS for another term of three years from the date of completion of the current tenure, and directed the Ministry of Defence to initiate a Summary to that effect.

g. The Ministry of Defence initiated a Summary for the Prime Minister stating therein that General Bajwa was due for retirement from 29.11.2019 by tenure and the Prime Minister was desirous for the extension of tenure of the General Officer for another term of three years from the date of completion of current tenure. The Ministry recommended that the General Officer may be granted extension under the Army Regulations (Rules) 255 for one further tenure (3 years) w.e.f. 29.11.2019 and beyond superannuation. The Ministry proposed the Prime Minister to advise the President to approve the recommendation regarding extension of the General Officer under Article 243(4)(b) of the Constitution. The Prime Minister advised accordingly and the President approved the Summary on the same day.

h. The Ministry of Defence notified that General Bajwa, COAS, had been granted extension for one further tenure (03 years) w.e.f. 29.11.2019 to 29.11.2022.

Second Proceedings dated 20.08.2019 and 21.08.2019

i. The Ministry of Defence, on 20.08.2019, initiated a Summary stating that the President has been pleased to approve the extension of the term of the General Officer for another 3 years from 29 Nov. 2019 to 29 Nov. 2022; that Rule 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules) stipulates that the retirement of officers will always be subject to the exigencies of service. Full power is reserved to Federal Government to "limit retirement in general or in individual cases whenever it may be necessary to do so in the public interest". With the said statements of fact and of law, the Ministry of Defence recommended that approval of the Federal Government was solicited for extension of the term of the General Officer for another 3 years from 29 Nov. 2019 to 29 Nov. 2022 and proposed obtaining approval of the Summary from the Cabinet through circulation.

j. The Cabinet Division, on 21.08.2019, circulated the said Summary amongst the members of the Cabinet with the approval of the Prime Minister. 11 (eleven) members of the Cabinet endorsed the Summary, while approval of 11 (eleven) members remained "awaited", while 03 (three) members were stated to be out of city or country. The Cabinet Division, however, considered the Summary to have been endorsed by the available members of the Cabinet by circulation. But the extension purportedly granted by the Federal Government was not notified.

Third Proceedings dated 26.11.2019

k. The Ministry of Defence moved the following three Summaries for the consideration of the Cabinet:-

i. Summary for withdrawal of the earlier Summary dated 20.08.2019 which was got approved by circulation on 21.08.2019;

ii. Summary for amendment/ substitution of Rule 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules); and

iii. Summary for limiting the retirement of and grant of extension in service to General Qamar Javed Bajwa.

The Cabinet approved all the said three Summaries in its meeting held on 26.11.2019.

Fourth Proceedings dated 26.11.2019

l. The Ministry of Defence notified the amendment/ substitution of Rule 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules), and also moved the following two Summaries for the Prime Minister:-

i. Summary for proposing withdrawal of the advice dated 19.08.2019 given to the President so that the President may withdraw the appointment of the COAS dated 19.08.2019 and any subsequent order or notification; and

ii. Summary for proposing the Prime Minister to advise the President to re-appoint General Bajwa for another term of three years as COAS under Article 243(4)(b) of the Constitution.

The Prime Minister advised accordingly, and the President approved the said Summaries.

m. The Ministry of Defence issued Notification No.3 / 11 / D-2 (A-II)/2019 dated 26.11.2019 stating thus:

"This Ministry's Notification of even No. dated 19 August, 2019 regarding extension in service in respect of PA-19617 General Qamar Javed Bajwa, NI(M), HI(M), Chief of the Army Staff (CAOS) is hereby withdrawn."

The Ministry of Defence, on the same day, issued another Notification No. F.3/11/D-2 (A-II)/2019 stating that:

"PA-19617 General Qamar Javed Bajwa, NI(M), HI(M), Chief of the Army Staff's (CAOS) retirement has been limited and he has been granted extension for one further tenure (03 years) with effect from 29 November 2019 to 29 November 2022."

Fifth Proceedings dated 28.11.2019

n. The Ministry of Defence initiated yet another Summary stating that the earlier Summaries and subsequent orders and notifications are liable to be withdrawn, and proposed the Prime Minster to advise the President:-

i. to approve the appointment of General Qamar Javed Bajwa, Chief of the Army Staff (CAOS) with effect from 28.1.2019, in view of the exigencies and highest public interest, in terms of Article 243 (4) (b) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973;

ii. to determine that General Qamar Javed Bajwa, Chief of the Army Staff, shall be entitled to salary and allowances as prescribed under the Pay and Allowances Regulations (Army) as amended from time to time; and

iii. to supersede the earlier approval of the President on the advice of the Prime Minister dated 26.11.2019.

The PM advised accordingly and the President approved the Summaries.

o. The Ministry of Defence, on the same day, finally issued Notification No.F.3/11/D-2(A-II)/2019 stating thus:

"In exercise of the powers conferred under Article 243 (4) (b) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973, the President, on advice of the Prime Minister, is pleased to appoint PA-19617 General Qamar Javed Bajwa, NI(M), HI(M), Chief of the Army Staff (CAOS) with effect from 28th November 2019, on salary and allowances prescribed under the Pay and Allowances Regulations (Army) as amended from time to time.

2. This Ministry's Notification No.3/11/D-2(A-II)/2019 dated 26 Nov, 2019 regarding limiting retirement and granting extension in service to the above named General Officer and Notification No.3/ 11 /D-2(A-II)/2019 dated 27 November 2019 are hereby withdrawn."

Flaws in the above process

11. In addition to the flaws noted in the process in our order dated 26.11.2019, the exercise of jurisdiction by the President, the Prime Minister, the Cabinet and the Ministry of Defence, Government of Pakistan in the extension, reappointment and appointment of the COAS highlights some further constitutional and legal flaws which are stated as follows:

a. The Prime Minister appointed General Bajwa as the COAS for another term of three years from the date of completion of the current tenure vide his "order" dated 18.09.2019, while the Prime Minister has no such power under the Constitution.

b. The tenure of 3 years mentioned in the above order of the Prime Minister has no legal basis.

c. The extension of the tenure of COAS for a further period of three years vide Notification dated 19.08.2019 is not supported by law as there is no provision of tenure or extension of tenure prescribed under the Constitution or the law.

d. The Summary initiated by the Ministry of Defence dated 19.08.2019 stated that General Qamar Javed Bajwa was due for retirement from 29.11.2019 by tenure but did not state the law providing for such tenure for retirement.

e. The said Summary mentioned that the General Officer may be granted extension of one further tenure of three years under the Army Regulations 255, despite the fact that there is no tenure prescribed for a General and that there is no provision for extension for another tenure in the Pakistan Army Act, 1952, Pakistan Army Act Rules, 1954 or the Army Regulations (Rules).

f. The President under Article 243(4) (b) of the Constitution granted extension to General Bajwa for three years on 19.08.2019, while the President has no power to grant extension under the Constitution or the law.

g. The Government, the very next day, i.e. 20.08.2019, retracted from the earlier position and without withdrawing the notification regarding grant of extension to General Bajwa, issued under the approval/ authority of the President a day before, took up the matter of extension of the tenure of General Bajwa with the Cabinet relying on Army Regulation 255 in the absence of any tenure or age of retirement prescribed for a General.

h. Only 11 members of the Cabinet out of 25 approved the above Summary through circulation. However, no notification was issued under the authority or approval of the Federal Government regarding extension of the tenure of General Bajwa. Thus, this exercise served no purpose.

i. This approval through circulation failed to comply with Rule 19 of the Rules of Business, 1973 which requires that the Cabinet Secretary is to specify the time by which the opinions of the Ministers should be communicated to him. No such timeframe was specified.

j. The Ministry of Defence issued notification dated 26.11.2019 stating that retirement of General Bajwa, as a General Officer has been limited and he has been granted extension for further three years. This exercise conducted under the freshly amended Army Regulations (Rules) 255 (including the word "extension") could only be useful if there had been tenure or retirement age of a General provided under the law.

k. Finally on 28.11.2019, a fresh Summary was put up before the Prime Minister for appointment of General Bajwa as COAS w.e.f. 28.11.2019 under Article 243(4)(b) of the Constitution which was approved by the President, leading to notification dated 28.11.2019. This Notification stated that the notification dated 26.11.2019 regarding limiting retirement and granting extension of service to General Bajwa stands withdrawn. This shows that there remains no notification in the field regarding limiting retirement and granting extension of service to General Bajwa. The appointment of General Bajwa on 28.11.2019 is again based on the assumption that his tenure has expired.

12. Some Summaries mention that the same have been prepared in due deference to observations of the Supreme Court of Pakistan. This generates an impression that the same have been made on the orders or directions of this Court. This is totally incorrect. In fact the Court simply highlighted steps taken by the President, the Prime Minister and the Cabinet, without any supporting law and as a consequence they on its own tried to rectify the same. The impression generated that the said steps were taken on the desire, orders or directions of the Court is dispelled.

Scope of Article 243 of the Constitution

13. The questions highlighted above require us to understand the legal structure of the Pakistan Army and the terms of service of its Commander, i.e. the Chief of the Army Staff. Therefore, it is most appropriate to begin with the understanding of the scope of Article 243 of the Constitution, which relates to raising and maintaining the Armed Forces and the appointment of their Chiefs.

14. "It is a constitution we are expounding[8]." As Chief Justice Dickson of the Supreme Court of Canada noted that "the task of expounding a constitution is crucially different from that of construing a statute. A statute defines present rights and obligations. It is easily enacted and as easily repealed. A constitution, by contrast, is drafted with an eye to the future. Its function is to provide a continuing framework for the legitimate exercise of governmental power and, when joined by a Bill or Charter of rights, for the unremitting protection of individual rights and liberties. Once enacted, its provisions cannot easily be repealed or amended. It must, therefore, be capable of growth and development over time to meet new social, political and historical realities often unimagined by its framers. The judiciary is the guardian of the constitution and must, in interpreting its provisions, bear these considerations in mind.[9]" "Any interpretation of the Constitution must be grounded in its own language." It is a language written in invisible ink, between the lines, and derived from the structure of the Constitution.[10]

15. The history of Article 243 of the Constitution begins with Article 40 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1956 ("1956 Constitution") and travels through 54 years to take its present shape in the year 2010 through the Constitution (Eighteenth Amendment) Act, 2010. Evolution of Article 243 through time has been traced and is reproduced hereunder for better understanding of the Article.

16. Article 40 of the 1956 Constitution shows that the President was made the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and the said command was to be exercised by him under the law. The Article further provided that until the Parliament made law, the President would raise and maintain an Army and grant Commissions in Forces and appoint, inter alia, Commander-in-Chief of the Army. The underlying constitutional spirit gathered from the said Article is that the President was to raise and maintain an Army, to command it, to grant Commissions in it and to appoint its Commander-in-Chief under the law. It is important to note that the Pakistan Army Act, 1952 ("Act") was in force at the time of promulgation of the 1956 Constitution and despite its existence the framers of the Constitution required the Parliament to make provision by law to regulate the above matters. Article 40, thus, underlined that the Act had to provide the necessary structural underpinning that would constitute raising and maintaining of an Army, granting Commissions in the Forces and appointing its Commander-in-Chief.

17. Article 17 of the Constitution of the Republic of Pakistan, 1962 ("1962 Constitution") carried the spirit of Article 40 of the erstwhile Constitution; this time without awaiting for the legislation by the Parliament made the exercise of the President in relation to raising and maintaining the Armed Forces and granting Commissions in and appointing Chiefs of, such Forces, subject to law. No changes had been made in the Pakistan Army Act, 1952 since 1956 till 1962, therefore, the Act remained devoid of these constitutional structural requirements, in as much as, no provisions were added therein as to command of the Armed Forces by the President as the Supreme Commander, the powers to be exercised by him to raise and maintain an Army, to grant Commissions in the Forces and to make appointment of the "Chief Commander." This constitutional mandate was not actualized in law by the Legislature and the Government of the time, and remains unrealized even today.

18. This brings us to the present Constitution of 1973. The unrealized constitutional mandate once again is repeated in Article 243 with the same vigour and flair as it was done in the Constitutions of 1956 and 1962. Clauses (1) and (2) of Article 243 of the Constitution provide that the Federal Government shall command and control the Armed Forces and the President shall be its Supreme Commander. Clause (3) Article 243 of the Constitution provides that the President shall subject to law raise and maintain the Military, Naval and Air Forces of Pakistan and the Reserves of such Forces and grant Commissions in the Forces. Integral and intrinsic to raising and maintaining an Army is to first provide for the post of Commander in Chief of the Army, the General Officers and other Commissioned Officers that stand behind him and constitute the body of the valiant Army. No Army can be visualized without its gallant commanders. Once the structure including terms of service and tenure of the General Officers is put in place under the law envisaged by the Constitution, the role of the President to appoint the Chief of the Army Staff, under clause (4) of Article 243, from amongst the General Officers, on the advice of the Prime Minister is then simply a matter of selecting the most appropriate and suitable General officer to act as COAS. The power to appoint COAS under Article 243(4) is, therefore, not an exercise in isolation but stands rooted and connected to the Army raised and maintained under Article 243(3) of the Constitution.

19. Review of the Military Laws of other countries shows that the law must provide for essential structural areas that would pass for raising and maintaining an Army. A comparative chart of the Laws of the Armed Forces of different countries is given hereunder:

20. The above mentioned laws provide the essential structural areas that constitute raising and maintaining an Army. The key structural areas include Organization; Control; Personnel; Terms and Conditions of services of officers of the Armed Forces including Appointments, Ranks, Remuneration, Promotion, Resignation, Termination, Superannuation, Command, Rank; Discipline, Administration, Training and Development, Education and Offences. The United States Law of Armed Forces also provides for Procurement, Supply and Acquisitions for the Armed Forces. The above laws strongly underline that the officers, who are to command and control the Army, unquestionably form an essential component of the Army and must, therefore, be explicitly recognized under the law.

Review of the Pakistan Army Act, 1952

21. When the Pakistan Army Act, 1952 is reviewed in the context of raising and maintaining an Army, we see that it largely deals with offences, courts martial and punishments. There is no mention of the Chief of the Army Staff, the commanders of the Pakistan Army. There is no mention of the General Officers or the other Commissioned Officers or terms of their service. Only three chapters briefly touch upon definitions, appointment and termination of service. While the Act governs Commissioned Officers there is nothing in the Act that prescribes the terms and conditions of service of the said Officers. Chapter II deals with the Appointment, Enrolment and Attestation of Junior Commissioned Officers and Warrant Officers and not of Commissioned Officers, while section 18 in Chapter III, relating to Termination of Service deals with the retirement, release or discharge of persons subject to the Act. The Act is silent about key structural areas that constitute raising and maintaining an Army especially about the Commissioned Officers and their Commander-in-Chief.

22. In order to meet this structural constitutional requirement of Article 243(3) of the Constitution, it seems that a hurried effort was made and some key structural areas that are necessary for raising and maintaining an Army were inserted in section 176A of the Act in the year 1965[11] empowering the Federal Government to make Regulations in respect of "governance, command, discipline, recruitment, terms and conditions of service, precedence, and administration of the Pakistan Army." This slipshod legislative upload, however, does not meet the requirement of Article 243(3) of the Constitution, without providing for core, primary and essential legislation on these structural areas by the Parliament. This aspect is discussed in detail in later part of the judgment while examining the status of the Army Regulations (Rules). For now it would suffice to observe that the Pakistan Army Act, 1952, falls deficient of the Constitutional requirement under Article 243(3) as it does not provide for essential elements required to raise and maintain an Army, in particular, the grant of Commissions in the Army and the terms of service of the Commissioned Officers. Had this been done, the questions raised before the Court today, would not have arisen.

Post of COAS - Whether Unregulated

23. The appointment to the post of COAS is made under Article 243(4)(b) of the Constitution. It would be advantageous to have a look at the history of the successive amendments in the said Article before discussing various aspects surrounding the appointment of the COAS. The trajectory of constitutional amendments made in Article 243 is given as under:-

(In clause (4), for the words "in consultation with the Prime Minister" the words "on advice of the Prime Minister" were substituted.) |

24. Article 243(4), which carries a long constitutional ancestry since 1956, provided in its original form that the President shall "subject to law" appoint and determine salary and allowances of the COAS, alongwith matters of raising and maintaining Armed Forces and granting Commissions in Forces. Under the Legal Framework Order, 2002 the matter of appointment of COAS was separated and provided for under clause (3) of Article 243 which was renumbered as clause (4) in the year 2010. Post 2002, clause (3), now clause (4) of Article 243, does not contain the expression "subject to law." Relying on the current language of clause (4) of Article 243 the learned Attorney-General submitted that the post of the COAS not being "subject to law" allows appointment of even a retired General as the COAS.

25. The submission of the learned Attorney-General, if accepted, immediately gives rise to a number of questions: Who can be appointed as a COAS? Can a COAS be a serving or a retired army officer? What will be the rank of such army officer? What will be the tenure of COAS? What will be the age of his retirement? Can he be removed from service? Can he resign or step down due to personal reasons? How will the President, the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces or the Federal Government having the command and control of the Armed Forces regulate the post of COAS? These questions are of importance for the nation and for the Armed Forces as a premier security institution of the country. It is inconceivable that the constitutional appointment to the post of the COAS in the "service of Pakistan[12]" goes unregulated under a written Constitution.

26. The interpretation put by the learned Attorney General, to the provisions of clause (4) of Article 243 is the result of reading it in isolation from the other clauses of Article 243, particularly the immediately preceding clause, i.e. clause (3), and in oblivion of the overall constitutional scheme of appointment to the constitutional posts and their tenure. It is a settled principle of interpretation that the words in a provision cannot be read and interpreted in isolation. The meaning and scope of a provision is determined by looking not to the isolated words used therein but by reading its text in context. The relevant provision of the Constitution is, therefore, to be read in its immediate context as well as in the overall scheme of the constitutional appointments.[13]

27. Clause (3) of Article 243 as elaborated earlier, contemplates raising and maintaining the Armed Forces and granting Commissions in such Forces under a law enacted by the Parliament. Such a law must provide for a cadre of commanders who will eventually head the Army. Article 243(4) simply deals with selection/ appointment of the COAS by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister. This selection/ appointment is naturally to be made from amongst the General Officers of the Army raised and maintained under Article 243(3) and is solely the prerogative of the President on the advice of the Prime Minister which cannot be curtailed by law. Both clauses (3) and (4) of Article 243 work in tandem, without disturbing each others powers. Therefore, separation by the Legal Framework Order 2002 of clause (4) from that of clause (3) and omission of the expression "subject to law" in clause (4) has only given more autonomy to the Prime Minister, the head of the Executive branch, in selection and appointment of a General Officer as a COAS. The removal of the term "subject to law" does in no manner lessen the importance of Article 243(3), which envisages that the terms of service of the General Officers should be provided under the law.

28. A look at the scheme of the Constitution shows that the President in whom the Supreme Command of the Armed Forces vests, has a fixed tenure under the Constitution.[14] The Prime Minister, on whose advice the COAS is appointed, being a Member of the National Assembly, has also a fixed term under the Constitution. A survey of the constitutional appointments to be made by the President is given as under:

| 228(2) | Members of Council of Islamic Ideology | 228(5) | 3 years tenure |
| 228(4) | Chairman, Council of Islamic Ideology | 228(5) | No tenure. But same as that of a Member, i.e., 3 years under Article 228(5). |
| 242(1A) | Chairman of Public Service Commission | | No tenure or age of retirement. Terms of service of a Member applicable. Section 4(1) of the FBSC Ordinance, 1977 provides a tenure of three years or an age of 65 years, whichever is earlier of a Member the Commission. |
| 243(4) | Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff Committee; and Chiefs of Armed Forces | | No tenure prescribed in the Constitution and the law relating to the Armed Forces. |

The above provisions of the Constitution provide for the following constitutional positions as to tenure or age of retirement: (i) posts with specific tenure or age of retirement in the Constitution, (ii) posts with no specific tenure or age of retirement but are regulated at the pleasure of the President, and (iii) posts with no specific tenure or age of retirement but are regulated with the tenure or age of retirement of the persons so appointed to the posts. A quick reference can be made to the appointment of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court or of a High Court, which is an appointment without a tenure or age of retirement. This falls in the third category. Chief Justice of the Supreme Court or of a High Court is appointed from amongst the Judges of these Courts and it is the age of retirement of these Judges, under the Constitution, that regulates the age of retirement of the Chief Justices. Therefore, if a Judge of Supreme Court retires at 65 years of age, so does the Chief Justice of Pakistan. Similarly, the Chairman of the Council of Islamic Ideology has no tenure or age of retirement under the Constitution. However, as the Chairman of the Council is appointed from amongst the Members of the Council, it is his tenure as a Member that regulates his tenure in the post of Chairman. Another example is of the tenure of the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, who is not provided under Article 242(1A). However, being a Member[15] of the Public Service Commission his tenure and age of retirement stand regulated under section 4(1) of the Federal Public Service Commission Ordinance, 1997 which determines tenure and age of retirement of a Member.

29. Army Regulations (Rules) 125 read with Annex D shows that an officer of the Army holding the rank of a "General" is appointed as a COAS. This is also an admitted position according to the submissions made by the Attorney-General besides being visible from the appointment notifications of the earlier and the present COAS, placed on the record. The appointment notifications provide that a Lieutenant-General is first promoted to the rank of a General and then appointed to the post of COAS. It is for this reason that the Federal Government in the Summaries and notifications, referred to above, have taken pains to extend the tenure of General Bajwa for a period of three years either through extension in service or limiting his retirement in order to make him available for re-appointment to the post of COAS. Therefore, the substantive rank of the army officer who is posted as a COAS is that of a General, which in turn then regulates the tenure, as well as, the other terms of service of the COAS. This puts to rest the impression that the post of COAS is without any tenure under Article 243(4)(b). Thus, the constitutional appointment of COAS, like similar constitutional appointments, stands regulated and falls in line with the constitutional scheme. It is important to underline that it is only a serving General who can be appointed as the COAS. This is because only a serving army officer is subject to the Pakistan Army Act, 1952.[16] A retired army officer has no terms of service and is not regulated under the Act. Therefore, the terms of service of the rank of the General appointed as COAS regulates the tenure and terms of service of the COAS, other than his salary and allowances which are to be determined by the President under Article 243(4) of the Constitution.

Tenure or Age of Retirement of a General

30. We have examined the laws relating the Pakistan Army to determine the terms of service of a General, in particular his tenure and age of retirement. The Pakistan Army Act, 1952 and the Pakistan Army Act Rules, 1954 are totally silent about the tenure or age of retirement of a General. Section 18 of the Act states that the prescribed Authority may, in conformity with such rules as may be prescribed in this behalf, retire, release, or discharge from the service any person subject to this Act. While Rule 12 of the Rules provides that the retirement or release of an officer shall be authorized by the Federal Government and notified in the official Gazette. Both these provisions do not provide the age of retirement or tenure of army officers including a General.

31. The Army Regulations, however, contain the provisions regarding the retirement of the army officers. Regulations 262, 262-A and 262-C deal with normal retirement of officers. Regulation 262 deals with normal retirement of officers who were on the Effective List[17] on 1.07.1970 (commissioned prior to 1970) and provides their retirement age and service limit including that of a General as follows:

| Rank | Age (yrs) | Service |
|---|---|---|
| (a) Major and below | 47 | 23 |
| (b) Lieut-Colonel | 50 | 25 |
| (c) Colonels | 53 | 26 |

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| (d) Brigadiers | 55 | 28 |
| (e) Major Generals | 57 | 30 |
| (f) Lieut-Generals | 58 | 32 |
| (g) Generals | 60 | 35 |

Regulation 262-A deals with officers commissioned after 1970 which includes the incumbent COAS, while Regulation 262-C deals with the officers commissioned after 1988. Regulation 262-A, which is applicable to General Bajwa, does not provide for age of retirement for the officer of the rank of a General as seen from the relevant provision reproduced hereunder:

| Rank | Age Limit |
|---|---|
| (a) Major and below | 48 |
| (b) Lieut-Colonel | 50 |
| (c) Colonel | 52 |
| (d) Brigadier | 53 |
| (e) Major General | 55 |
| (f) Lieut-General | 57 years or on completion of one tenure of four years which ever is earlier. However, an officer may be retained in service as a special case by the Federal Government for an extra year on completion of his tenure of four years. |

32. The laws relating to the Army discussed above do not provide for the tenure or age of retirement of a General. The learned Attorney-General has also conceded this legal deficiency and submitted that the tenure of a General, at present, is being regulated by the institutional convention and practice. As per the said practice, he submitted, the tenure of a General and consequentially of a COAS is three years. This institutional practice pleaded by the Attorney-General is discussed in detail in the later part of the judgment. It would suffice here to observe that such an institutional practice cannot be a valid substitute of the law required to be made in pursuance of the constitutional mandate under Article 243(3) of the Constitution. This is a serious legislative omission. Service in the Armed Forces being "Service of Pakistan" must be regulated by or under the law in accordance with the provisions of Article 240 of the Constitution read with Article 243(3). Otherwise, it is inconceivable that the highest rank in the Army, would have no tenure or age of retirement or other terms of service.

Extension in service and limit in retirement of a General

33. The re-appointment, extension or fresh appointment of General Bajwa as COAS has been structured by the Federal Government by first limiting the retirement of the General under Regulation 255 for three years and then appointing him as COAS for another term under Article 243(4) of the Constitution. During the course of hearing of this case, the said Regulation was amended overnight by the Federal Government on 26.11.2019 to include the expression "extension" in limiting retirement. In the absence of a tenure or age of retirement for the rank of a General under the law, this exercise to amend the Regulation 255 did not serve any purpose.

Scope and Meaning of Army Regulation (Rules) 255

34. The above Regulation has been provided in the Chapter dealing with Termination of Service of Army Regulations (Rules) and bears the heading Retirement and Resignation. This Regulation can only be invoked for an officer who has retired or is about to retire. The emphasis is to delay the retirement either by limiting the retirement or by extending the date of retirement or suspending retirement after retirement. This is a temporary arrangement and can only be availed if the exigencies of service and public interest so require. The essence of the Regulation is that if an officer is on the way out (about to retire) and urgent or pressing circumstances require that he be retained in service, this Regulation comes into play. An example could be that during war, an army officer may not be allowed to leave the war front just because he is about to retire or has retired, in such a situation the retirement can be limited, extended or suspended. This is in line with Regulation 255A. The exercise of discretion by the Federal Government under the said Regulation has to be structured on parameters of exigency of service with a corresponding temporary period in mind. The words suspension, limiting retirement and extension do not connote permanency and cannot be equated with grant of new tenure or a fresh appointment. Therefore, a new tenure or fresh appointment for a full new tenure cannot be given or granted to an army officer under Army Regulation (Rules) 255.

Status of Regulations 255

35. Reading of Regulation 255 in the light of the relevant provisions of the Act and the Rules has given rise to some serious doubts as to the vires of its provisions which we would like to highlight in the public interest so that the Federal Government when initiates a legislative process on the subject, may take it also into consideration. Section 18 of the Act provides as under:

> 18. Retirement, release or discharge.-- The prescribed Authority may, in conformity with such rules as may be prescribed in this behalf, retire, release, or discharge from the service any person subject to this Act.

Section 176(2)(a) empowers the Federal Government to make Rules on the subject of "retirement" and as a consequence Rule 12 of the Pakistan Army Act Rules, 1965 provide as follows:

> 12. Authorities empowered to authorize retirement, release or discharge.--(a) The retirement or release of an officer shall be authorized by the Federal Government and notified in the official Gazette. The Federal Government may at any time terminate the services of an officer.

36. Army Regulation (Rules) 255 appears in Chapter XI of the Regulations dealing with Termination of Service under the head Retirement and Resignation. Regulation 255, prior to the recent amendment, provided as follows:

> Retirement and Resignation
>
> 255. General Provision:- Retirement of officers will always be > subject to the exigencies of service. Full power is reserved to the Federal Government temporarily or limit retirement, in general or in individual cases wherever it may be necessary to do so in public interest. Officer of the rank of Colonel and above will not be permitted to retire voluntarily unless deemed expedient by the Federal Government.

The above Regulation was amended in one day on 26.11.2019 during the pendency of this case. This was done when the Court asked the Attorney-General to show if there was any provision of the law dealing with "extension" of the tenure of a General or COAS. The amended Regulation is as follows:

> 255. General Provision:- Notwithstanding anything contained in the Army Regulations, Volume-I (Rules), 1998, the Federal Government shall have the power to suspend temporarily or limit retirement, the latter including the grant of extension in the service of any officer, in general or in individual cases, during the currency of tenure or upon reaching retirement, wherever it is necessary to do so in any exigency or in the public interest. Officer of the rank of Colonel and above will not be permitted to retire voluntarily unless deemed expedient by the Federal Government

37. Section 176A of the Act clearly provides that the Federal Government shall make Regulations for all or any of the purposes of the Act but other than those in respect of which Rules have been made under section 176. Rule 12 specifically covers the subject of "retirement"; therefore, Regulations could not deal with the subject of retirement. While the Act and the Rules mention simple retirement, the Regulation introduces a totally new concept of suspending, limiting in and extending retirement, which apparently exceeds the mandate of the Act.

Status of Section 176A of the Act and the Army Regulations

38. The examination of Regulation 255 has lead us to examine the history and constitutionality of section 176A of the Act and the vires of the Army Regulations as a whole. Before Independence, Army of the British India was governed by the Indian Army Act, 1911. After 1947, the Pakistan Army continued to be governed by the said Act by virtue of section 18 of the Indian Independence Act, 1947. The Act of 1911 was repealed and replaced by the Pakistan Army Act, 1952. We could not trace the history of Army Regulations (Rules) and their legislative authority before 1960 or 1965 when they are said to have been made under section 176A of the Act. The Regulations were in existence even in 1945 but did not have a legislative cover under the Indian Army Act, 1911 as there was no provision under the said Act to make the Regulations. India resolved this anomaly by adding sections 192, 193 and 193A in the Indian Army Act, 1950; and Pakistan did this in the year 1965 by adding section 176A to the Pakistan Army Act, 1952.

Essential Legislative Function - Excessive Delegation

39. In order to provide a legal cover to the Army Regulations, section 176A was inserted in the Act vide the Pakistan Army (Amendment) Ordinance, 1965 (Act XV of 1965) which empowered the Federal Government to make Regulations in the following manner:

> 176A. Power to make regulations. The Federal Government may make regulations for the governance, command, discipline, recruitment, terms and conditions of service, rank, precedence, and administration of the Pakistan Army and generally for all or any of the purposes of this Act, other than those in respect of which rules have been made under section 176. (emphasis supplied)

It is useful to refer to the debates[18] in the National Assembly when Section 176-A was introduced through the Pakistan Army (Amendment) Ordinance, 1965. Dr. Aleem Al-Razi, the then Member of the National Assembly pointed out as follows:

> "Thirdly, the last clause in section 176 of the Act is absolutely unnecessary. It takes away the entire thing from the purview of this Legislature to the Executive Government alone who will be determining the factors whom to be given precedence and whom to be given a new title or new favour this is absolutely in the hand of the Central Government. Under the previous rules, under section 176 of the Pakistan Army Ordinance, 1952, Mr. Speaker, the wording of that section are not so quiet but unfortunately by adding new section 176-A a comprehensive power we are giving to the Executive Government and we shall not know anything. Even there is no provision of publication of those rules and regulations in the official Gazette of Pakistan. So, Mr. Speaker, Sir, may I ask the Members of the Treasury Benches that they may publish these rules and regulations in the Official Gazette and if necessary produce those rules and regulations on the floor of the House if not for approval may be for our reading, for our understanding so that we may know the fate of our Army, we may know the rules and regulations by which our Armed Forces are governed so that we may also go in the Armed Forces of Pakistan." (emphasis supplied)

Mr. Muhammed Qasim Malik, the then Parliamentary Secretary to the Defence Division, who tabled the Ordinance for approval by the Assembly under clause (3) of Article 29 of the Constitution, 1962 pointed out as under:

> "... This is actually to legalize the Pakistan Army Regulations which are already in existence. But unfortunately it was found later on that they had no legal force under the Army Act. Under the Army Act, Army regulations can be made and they already exist and there is a great necessity of these Regulations. Therefore, this Ordinance had to be brought in. The main purpose is to legalize this and to give a certain legal force behind those regulations because they could not be framed unless and until this Ordinance was passed or this Resolution is passed "

40. The debates are self-explanatory and set out the purpose of inserting section 176A in the Act. It can be safely maintained that the said Regulations existing from the time of the British India were promulgated as statutory Regulations by the Federal Government under section 176A of the Act after 1965. The only problem is that these Regulations once brought within the statutory fold must flow from the Act. Regulations which do not meet this requirement would be ultra vires the Act. The scope of the Act or the vires of the Regulations cannot be determined by the words inserted in section 176A like governance, command, discipline, recruitment, terms and conditions of service, rank, precedence and administration of the Pakistan Army. These words are mere words when there is no essential or core legislation on these subjects. Article 142(a) of the Constitution provides that the Parliament shall have exclusive power to make laws with respect to any matter in the Federal Legislative List. Item No. 1 of the said List provides for Military, Naval and Air Forces raised and maintained by the Federation. However, no such legislation was ever made since it was first clearly mandated under the 1956 Constitution. Section 176-A inserted in 1965 provided a shortcut and authorized the Federal Government to regulate areas like governance, command, discipline, recruitment, terms and conditions of service, rank, precedence and administration of the Pakistan Army through Regulations. The power of the Parliament under the Constitution cannot be delegated to the Federal Government without the Parliament performing the basic essential legislative function, i.e. providing policy guidelines on these areas.

41. This Court has time and again held that the essential legislative function of the Parliament cannot be delegated.[19] The wisdom behind it is that the delegatee must have legislative guidelines to formulate Rules and Regulations, and that guidelines, contours or boundaries must come from the Legislature itself. Delegation of an "essential legislative function" by the Legislature to the Executive is not permissible under the Constitution. The foundation of embargo owes its genesis to the concept of trichotomy of powers between the Legislature, the Executive and the Judicature, which is a fundamental principle of our constitutional construct. Under the Constitution, these three organs of the State have been entrusted with separate and specified functions. The primary function of the Legislature is to legislate laws, of the Executive to execute laws, and of the Judicature to interpret laws.[20] The words of Chief Justice Marshall of the US Supreme Court frequently quoted, in explaining the doctrine of separation of powers, by the Courts of various jurisdictions in the last about two centuries still hold: "the Legislature makes, the Executive executes, and the Judiciary construes, the law." The Legislature cannot abdicate performance of the function assigned to it by the Constitution and set up a parallel Legislative authority. Though the Legislature can confer upon any person or body the power to make subordinate/delegated legislation (rules, regulations or byelaws, etc) in order to give effect to the law enacted by it yet it must perform itself the essential legislative function, i.e. to exercise its own judgment on vital matters of policy and enact the general principles providing guidance for making the delegated legislation. Through section 176A, the Parliament appears to have divested itself of the essential legislative function which amounts to excessive delegation.

42. The Army Regulations (Rules) will be rendered ultra vires if they do not draw their power from the parent Act, i.e. the Pakistan Army Act, 1952 and will suffer from excessive delegation if they draw their strength only from section 176A of the Act. The Regulations have to be fully examined in the light of these principles. Once again it is for the Federal Government to bring about appropriate legislation to remove these defects so that the Regulations have a proper legal cover and are fully enforceable under the law.

Accessibility of Regulations

43. The copy of the Army Regulations (Rules) carries a stamp of "Restriction" stating as follows:

> RESTRICTED The information given in this document is not to be communicated either directly or indirectly, to the press or to any person not authorized to receive it.

Acts of the Parliament or subordinate legislation are public documents and must be readily available to the citizen of the country subject to the exceptions provided under the Right of Access to Information Act, 2017. Those exceptions extend only to record relating to defence forces, defence installations or connected therewith and ancillary to defence and national security,[21] and not to the Army Laws. It is important to remember that when there is information, there is enlightenment and when there is debate, there are solutions.[22] Had the Army Regulations been made accessible to public and had these matters been discussed earlier, the omissions pointed out for the first time since 1947 could have been remedied much earlier. Therefore, every legislative instrument must be made accessible to public.

Legal Vacuum and the Assurance by the Federal Government

44. After detailed examination of the laws relating to the Army it is concluded that there is no provision providing for the tenure and age of retirement of a General and as a consequence of the COAS, as well as, for the extension of tenure or fresh appointment for another tenure. The Summaries initiated by the Ministry of Defence and approved by the President, the Prime Minister and the Cabinet, for the reappointment, extension and fresh appointment of the COAS seems to be meaningless and of no consequence in the said legal vacuum. The learned Attorney-General has assured the Court that the Federal Government will carry out legislation through the Parliament in the shape of an Act within six months to provide for the terms of service of a General (and as a consequence of COAS) so that effect can be given to Article 243 in letter and spirit and functionality of the constitutional provisions be realized at the earliest. Even otherwise, this Court could have directed[23] the Federal Government to initiate and process legislation to give effect to a constitutional mandate. The Federal Government may also, if deems appropriate, specifically provide for extension of the tenure of an army officer of the rank of a General in the Act with grounds for granting such an extension, so that the discretion of the Federal Government in granting extension to a General is structured. It may also carry out necessary amendments in the law to protect the Army Regulations (Rules) as discussed above, which appear to be without any legal cover and fall outside the scope of the Pakistan Army Act, 1952.

Institutional Practice

45. When confronted with the legal vacuum regarding the tenure, age of retirement and other terms of service of a General, the learned Attorney-General candidly responded that there is an unwritten institutional practice in vogue since long whereby the tenure of a General is considered to be of three years. He admitted that no tenure or age of retirement of a General has been provided under the law. Perusal of the earlier notifications placed before us relating to the former Chiefs of Army Staff and the process of reappointment, extension and fresh appointment of the incumbent, pre-suppose a fixed tenure of three years for a General/COAS. An institutional practice followed continuously and consistently by an institution for a considerable period of time may be used to resolve a controversy, in the absence of the law.[24] We can, therefore, place reliance on the institutional practice in order to ensure realization of the constitutional scheme under which it is inconceivable for a constitutional post in the service of Pakistan to be left totally unregulated and to continue forever. We are, however, of the view that, in the first instance, this matter should be allowed to be regulated by law as mandated by the Constitution, so that the people of Pakistan decide through their chosen representatives the length of tenure of a General, as this will consequentially determine the tenure of the COAS. The people of Pakistan may accept or reject the institutional practice through their chosen representatives in the Parliament. Besides, the question before us is not only regarding the tenure but also regarding the extension of tenure for another term, which in any case, requires legislation. The Attorney-General has assured us that necessary legislation will be brought into effect within six months to plug this legal vacuum. This assurance has tempted us to exercise judicial restraint in the matter, so that people of Pakistan may decide this question through the Parliament.

Judicial Restraint

46. Judicial restraint in its substantial approach urges Judges considering constitutional questions to give deference to the views of the elected branches and invalidate their actions only when constitutional limits have clearly been violated;[25] while the principle, "if it is not necessary to decide more, it is necessary not to decide more"[26] well states the procedural aspect of judicial restraint. The power of judicial review is a "great weapon in the hands of Judges", but the Judges must observe the Constitutional limits set by our parliamentary system on their exercise of this beneficial power, namely, the separation of powers between the Parliament, the Executive and the Courts. Judicial review must, therefore, remain strictly judicial and in its exercise Judges must take care not to intrude upon the domain of the other branches of Government. Judicial restraint, in this perspective, is essential to the continuance of rule of law, and for the continued public confidence in the political impartiality of the judiciary and the voluntary respect for the law as laid down and applied by the Courts.[27]

47. Separation of powers is a cornerstone of a constitutional democracy and we do not wish to encroach upon the domain of the legislature. This Court has, therefore, in many cases, exercised judicial restraint in deference to the principle of trichotomy of powers and given the other branches of Government a fair opportunity to fulfill their constitutional mandate before making a final verdict on the disputed matters. The cases of Sindh High Court Bar Association[28], Sharaf Faridi[29] and Nadeem Ahmad[30] may be cited with advantage. We, therefore, exercise judicial restraint and give an opportunity to the Federal Government in the light of the assurance of the Attorney-General to carry out appropriate legislation through an Act of Parliament within a period of six months.

Continuity of Incumbent COAS for Six Months

48. In this state of legal vacuum regarding the tenure of a COAS and in the light of the assurance given by the Federal Government to address these issues through fresh legislation within six months, we considering that the COAS is the commanding officer of the Pakistan Army[31] and is responsible for the command, discipline, training, administration, organization and preparedness for war of the Army [32] and in order to preserve smooth functioning of the Pakistan Army, find it appropriate to allow the current status of the COAS to continue for a period of six months, whereafter the new legislation (Act of the Parliament) shall determine his tenure and other terms of his service.

49. This exercise of judicial restraint may not be mixed up or confused with the infamous and unpopular application of the doctrine of necessity, which amounts to going against the law of the land to attend to some political or other goal. This is not so in the present case where there is no law; in fact, there is a total legal vacuum regarding the tenure of a General. It is also instructive to refer to the spirit of Article 203D of the Constitution whereunder the Court can direct the Federal Government to initiate process for making appropriate legislative amendments in the relevant law and can grant reasonable time for doing the needful.

Summary of Findings of the Court

50. In our endeavour to address the legal questions raised in this case, we have explored the scope of Article 243 of the Constitution, reviewed the Pakistan Army Act, 1952, the Pakistan Army Act Rules, 1954, and the Army Regulations (Rules) and have found:

1) That the Pakistan Army Act, 1952 falls deficient of the structural requirements for raising and maintaining an Army under clause (3) of Article 243 of the Constitution. It does not provide for essential elements required to raise and maintain an Army, particularly the grant of Commissions in the Army and the terms of service of the Commissioned Officers including tenure and extension of a General.
2) That the terms of service of the rank of General regulates the tenure and other terms of service (except salary and allowances) of the post of the COAS. The salary and allowances of the COAS are to be determined by the President under clause (4) of Article 243 of the Constitution.
3) That no tenure or age of retirement for the rank of General is provided under the law. As per the institutional practice a General retires on completion of a tenure of three years. Although an institutional practice cannot be a valid substitute of the law required to be made under clause (3) of Article 243 yet in the absence of such law the said practice can be enforced to remove uncertainty as to the tenure of a General and to make the constitutional post of COAS functional. However, in the first instance, the matter should be allowed to be regulated by law, made by the legislature, as mandated by the Constitution.

4) That there is no provision in the law for extending service of a General for another tenure; nor is there any consistent and continuous institutional practice of granting such extension, which could be enforced in absence of the law on the subject.

5) That the Summaries of the Ministry of Defence approved by the President, the Prime Minister and the Cabinet for the reappointment, extension and fresh appointment of General Bajwa seem to be meaningless and of no consequence, in absence of the law prescribing tenure of a General and providing extension for another tenure.

6) That Regulation 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules), in its original as well as amended form, does not confer authority on the Federal Government to grant extension of another full tenure to a General. This Regulation provides for only a temporary arrangement for a short term, if the exigencies of service so requires in the public interest.

7) That Regulation 255 and other Regulations of the Army Regulations (Rules) on the subject of "retirement" appear to be ultra vires the Pakistan Army Act, as Section 176 of the Pakistan Army Act has assigned the subject of "retirement" to be regulated under the Rules and not under the Regulations. The Regulations can be made only for the matters other than those which are to be dealt with under the Rules.

8) That Section 176A of the Pakistan Army Act and the Regulations made under it appear to suffer from the excessive delegation of the essential legislative function, as neither that section nor any other section of the Pakistan Army Act provides the essential legislative policy guidelines for making the delegated legislation, viz. the Regulations, on the subjects mentioned therein.

9) That in view of the assurance of the Attorney-General given on behalf of the Federal Government to process the legislation for meeting the deficiencies in the Pakistan Army Act, in particular, the tenure, age of retirement and if deemed proper, the extension of tenure of a General, it is appropriate to leave the matter, at the first instance, to be decided by the chosen representative of the people of Pakistan by making an appropriate legislation.

10) That in view of the legal vacuum regarding tenure and extension of a General and the assurance given by the Attorney-General to process legislation on the subject within six months, and also considering the importance of the responsibilities of the COAS regarding administration and organization of the Army, it is appropriate that the incumbent COAS may continue for a period of six months, in order to preserve continuity of the institution.

51. These are the detailed reasons of our short order dated 28.11.2019 whereby the instant petition was disposed of in the following terms:

"The learned Attorney-General has categorically assured the Court that this practice being followed is to be codified under the law and undertakes that the Federal Government shall initiate the process to carry out the necessary legislation in this regard and seeks a period of six months for getting the needful done. Considering that the COAS is responsible for the command, discipline, training, administration, organization and preparedness for war of the Army and is the Chief Executive in General Headquarters, we, while exercising judicial restraint, find it appropriate to leave the matter to the Parliament and the Federal Government to clearly specify the terms and conditions of service of the COAS through an Act of Parliament and to clarify the scope of Article 243 of the Constitution in this regard. Therefore, the current appointment of General Qamar Javed Bajwa as COAS shall be subject to the said legislation and shall continue for a period of six months from today, whereafter the new legislation shall determine his tenure and other terms and conditions of service."

52. It is, however, claried that in case the federal Government remains unable to regulate the tenure and terms of service of a General and as a consequence of the COAS through an appropriate legislation by the Parliament as assured by the Attorney-General, within a period of six months, the tenure of the constitutional post of COAS could not be left totally unregulated and to continue forever. This would be inconceivable and amount to a constitutional absurdity. Therefore, in case of such failure of the Federal Government the institutional practice of retirement of a General on completion of the tenure of three years as pleaded by the Attorney-General and borne out from the record, shall stand enforced to regulate the tenure of General Bajwa and consequentially his tenure as COAS, from the date of his promotion to the rank of General and appointment as COAS, i.e. 29.11.2016. And the President shall, on advice of the Prime Minister, appoint a serving General officer as the new COAS.

53. In the end, we would like to emphasise that this crucial matter of the tenure of COAS and its extension, which has a somewhat chequered history, is before the Parliament, to fix for all times to come. It is now for the people of Pakistan and their chosen representatives in the Parliament to come up with a law that will provide certainty and predictability to the post of COAS, remembering that in strengthening institutions, nations prosper.

55. I agree with the judgment authored by my learned brother Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J., and would like to add that in our peculiar historical context Chief of the Army Staff holds a powerful position in ways more than one. Unbridled power or position, like unstructured discretion, is dangerous. It has been a shocking revelation to us that the terms and conditions of service of Chief of the Army Staff, the tenure of his office, extension in the tenure of his office or his reappointment to that office have remained unregulated by any law so far. Clause (3) of Article 243 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 mandates that the President's power to raise and maintain the armed forces is to be "subject to law" and, thus, leaving some vital aspects relevant to the office of Chief of the Army Staff without being regulated by any law militates against the said express provision of the Constitution. In the backdrop of the last three scores and twelve years of our history I may observe with hope and optimism that framing of a law by the Parliament regulating the terms and conditions of the office of Chief of the Army Staff may go a long way in rectifying multiple historical wrongs and in asserting sovereign authority of the chosen representatives of the people besides making exercise of judicial power of the Courts all pervasive. I understand that democratic maturity of our nation has reached a stage where this Court can proclaim that, as declared by Chief Justice Sir Edward Coke of England in the Commendam case in the year 1616 regarding the powers of King James I, "Howsoever high you may be; the law is above you".

ORDER

For detailed reasons to be recorded later we pass the following short order:-

2. The extension/reappointment of General Qamar Javed Bajwa, Chief of the Army Staff ("COAS") has been challenged before us. In the proceedings before us during the last three days the Federal Government has moved from one position to another referring to it as reappointment, limiting of retirement or extension of tenure and has also interchangeably placed reliance on Article 243(4)(b) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") and Regulation 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules), 1998. However, finally today the Federal Government through the learned Attorney General for Pakistan has presented this Court with a recent summary approved by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister along with Notification dated 28.11.2019 which shows that General Qamar Javed Bajwa has been appointed as COAS under Article 243(4)(b) of the Constitution with effect from 28.11.2019.

3. We have examined Article 243(4)(b) of the Constitution, Pakistan Army Act, 1952, Pakistan Army Act Rules, 1954 and Army Regulations (Rules), 1998 and inspite of the assistance rendered by the learned Attorney-General, we could not find any provision relating to the tenure of COAS or of a General and whether the COAS can be reappointed or his term can be extended or his retirement can be limited or suspended under the Constitution or the law. The learned Attorney-General has taken pains to explain that the answers to these questions are based on practice being followed in the Pakistan Army but the said practice has not been codified under the law.

4. Article 243 of the Constitution clearly mandates that the Federal Government shall have control and command of the Armed Forces and the supreme command of the Armed Forces shall vest in the President. It further provides that the President shall, subject to law, have power to raise and maintain the military, etc. and it is the President who on the advice of the Prime Minister shall appoint, inter alia, COAS. Article 243 of the Constitution, therefore, clearly shows that the President shall, subject to law, raise and maintain the military, however, the laws referred, to above do not specify the tenure, retirement, re-appointment and extension of the COAS or of a General of the Pakistan Army.

5. The learned Attorney-General has categorically assured the Court that this practice being followed is to be codified under the law and undertakes that the Federal Government shall initiate the process- to carry out the necessary legislation in this regard and seeks a period of six months for getting the needful done. Considering that the COAS is responsible for the command, discipline, training, administration, organization and preparedness for war of the Army and is the Chief Executive in General Headquarters, we, while exercising judicial restraint, find it appropriate to leave the matter to the Parliament and the Federal Government to clearly specify the terms and conditions of service of the COAS through an Act of Parliament and to clarify the scope of Afticle 243 of the Constitution in this regard. Therefore, the current appointment of General Qamar Javed Bajwa as COAS shall be subject to the said legislation and shall continue for a period of six months from today, whereafter the new legislation shall determine his tenure and other terms and conditions of service.

6. This petition is disposed of in the above terms.

(a) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 243(4)(b) & 184(3)---Army Regulations (Rules), 1998, Regln.255---Constitutional petition before the Supreme Court regarding extension/re-appointment of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff for a fresh term of three years in such office after expiry of his first term---Constitutionality and legality---Plea by Attorney General that in terms of Regulation No. 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules), 1998, retirement of an Army officer could temporarily be suspended or limited; that the Federal Government had the requisite authority to re-appoint or extend the services of an incumbent Chief of the Army Staff prior to his retirement if the exigencies of the service so required or the public interest so demanded---Held, that perusal of Regln. No.255, prima facie, showed that the said provision could be invoked after an officer had already retired from service and that was why the said Regulation spoke of suspension of retirement or limiting of retirement---Suspending a retirement or limiting a retirement before the retirement had actually taken effect may amount to putting the cart before the horse---Attorney-General was unable to refer to any provision in any legal instrument regarding extension in service of a Chief of the Army Staff upon completion of his first term in that office or for his re-appointment to that office after completion of his first term---Since present issue called for a detailed examination of the matter of extension/re-appointment of incumbent Chief of the Army Staff, therefore, he was made a respondent to present case---Supreme Court suspended the operation of the impugned order/notification in respect of extension/re-appointment of incumbent Chief of the Army Staff for another term in the said office---Matter was adjourned till next date of hearing.

----Arts. 243(4)(b) & 184(3)---Constitutional petition before the Supreme Court regarding extension/re-appointment of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff for a fresh term of three years in such office after expiry of his first term---Procedure adopted for issuing notification of extension in service---Lapses---Prime Minister had himself passed the order appointing the current Chief of the Army Staff for a second term in that office on 19-08-2019 whereas under Art.243 of the Constitution it was the President who was the appointing authority for such office---When such mistake came to notice straightaway on the same day, i.e. 19.08.2019 a summary was moved from the Prime Minister's office to the President for extension/reappointment of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff and on that very day, i.e. 19.08.2019 the President approved the summary in that regard and, hence, the advice of the Prime Minister was apparently accepted and acted upon---Even said process was found to be flawed and on that very day it was realized that the Prime Minister or the President could not take action on extension/re-appointment of current Chief of the Army Staff without the approval of the Cabinet and, thus, on the next day, i.e. 20-08-2019 a summary was moved in the relevant regard for approval of the Cabinet and on 21.08.2019 the Cabinet was said to have approved the said proposal through circulation---Opinion of the Cabinet recorded in this regard, showed that there were 25 members of the Cabinet and out of those 25 members only 11 had agreed to the proposal for extension/ reappointment of the current Chief of the Army Staff, which showed that the majority of the Cabinet had not approved the said proposal---Another peculiar aspect was that after the purported approval of the Cabinet regarding extension/re-appointment of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff the matter was never sent to the Prime Minister or the President again for the purposes of a fresh advice or a fresh order of the Prime Minister and the President respectively---Since present issue called for a detailed examination of the matter of extension/re-appointment of incumbent Chief of the Army Staff, therefore, he was made a respondent to present case---Supreme Court suspended the operation of the impugned order/notification in respect of extension/re-appointment of incumbent Chief of the Army Staff for another term in the said office---Matter was adjourned till next date of hearing.

(c) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 243(4)(b) & 184(3)---Constitutional petition before the Supreme Court regarding extension/re-appointment of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff for a fresh term of three years in such office after expiry of his first term---Purpose of extension/re-appointment---Stated purpose for the proposed reappointment/extension in the term of office of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff was "regional security environment"---Supreme Court observed that the said words were quite vague and if at all there was any regional security threat then it was the gallant armed forces of the country as an institution which were to meet the said threat and an individual's role in that regard may be minimal; that if the said reason/purpose was held to be correct and valid then every person serving in the armed forces would claim re-appointment/extension in his service on the basis of the said reason---Since present issue called for a detailed examination of the matter of extension/re-appointment of incumbent Chief of the Army Staff, therefore, he was made a respondent to present case---Supreme Court suspended the operation of the impugned order/notification in respect of extension/re-appointment of incumbent Chief of the Army Staff for another term in the said office---Matter was adjourned till next date of hearing.

Nemo for Petitioner.

Anwar Mansoor Khan, Attorney-General for Pakistan and Mian Asghar Ali, Deputy Attorney General for Pakistan for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 26th November, 2019.

ORDER

ASIF SAEED KHAN KHOSA. C J.---The Court-Associate has produced before us a handwritten application statedly submitted by the petitioner seeking permission to withdraw this petition. The petitioner has failed to appear in person nor anybody else has appeared on his behalf. The application received does not carry any date and the same is not accompanied by any affidavit. There is nothing before us to accept or to presume that the said application has actually been submitted by the petitioner himself or that he has submitted the same voluntarily. Be that as it may the petition in hand invokes Article 184(3) of the Constitution and the subject matter of the petition involves a question of public importance with reference to enforcement of fundamental rights and, thus, the individual capacity of the petitioner pales into insignificance even if he decides not to pursue the present petition. The application attributed to the petitioner is, therefore, not entertained.

2. The learned Attorney-General for Pakistan is in attendance on his own and he has presented before us photocopies of many documents leading to an order passed by the President approving the summary sent to him by the Prime Minister along with his advice for extension/re-appointment of General Qamar Javed Bajwa, Chief of the Army Staff for a fresh term of three years in that office after expiry of his first term in that office. With the assistance of the learned Attorney-General for Pakistan we have gone through the said documents and have ex facie noticed the following things:

i) A summary had initially been moved by the Ministry of Defence for extension of the term of office of the Chief of the Army Staff and subsequently he was appointed as Chief of the Army Staff for a second term of three years after completion of his first term in that office but the learned Attorney-General for Pakistan has not been able to refer to any provision in any legal instrument regarding extention in service of a Chief of the Army Staff upon completion of his first term in that office or for his re-appointment to that office after completion of his first term.

ii) In the case in hand the Prime Minister had himself passed an order appointing the current Chief of the Army Staff for a second term in that office on 19.08.2019 whereas under Article 243 of the Constitution it is the President who is the appointing authority for that office. Apparently that mtstake came to notice straightaway and on the same day, i.e. 19.08.2019 a summary was moved from the Prime Minister's office to the President for extension/re-appointment of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff and on that very day, i.e. 19.08.2019 the President was pleased to approve the summary in that regard and hence, the advice of the Prime Minister was apparently accepted and acted upon. It appears that even that process was found to be flawed and on that very day it was realized that the Prime Minister or the President could not take the above mentioned actions without the approval of the Cabinet and, thus, on the next day, i.e. 20.08.2019 a summary was moved in the relevant regard for approval of the Cabinet and on 21.08.2019 the Cabinet was said to have approved the said proposal through circulation. The opinion of the Cabinet recorded in this regard, photocopies whereof have been produced before us, shows that there are 25 members of the Cabinet and out of those 25 members only 11 had agreed to the proposal which shows that the majority of the Cabinet had not approved the said proposal. Yet another peculiar aspect is that after the purported or so-called approval of the Cabinet regarding extension/re-appointment of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff the matter was never sent to the Prime Minister or the President again for the purposes of a fresh advice or a fresh order of the Prime Minister and the President respectively.

iii) After our repeated queries the learned Attorney-General for Pakistan has referred to Regulation No. 255 of the Army Regulations (Rules) according to which a retirement of an Army officer can temporarily be suspended or limited. By placing reliance upon the said Regulation the learned Attorney-General for Pakistan has maintained that the Federal Government has the requisite authority to re-appoint or extend the services of an incumbent Chief of the Army Staff prior to his retirement if the exigencies of the service so require or the public interest so demands. A bare perusal of Regulation No. 255, however, prima facie shows that the said provision can be invoked after an officer has already retired from service and that is why the said Regulation speaks of suspension of retirement or limiting of retirement. Suspending a retirement or limiting a retirement before the retirement has actually taken effect may amount to putting the cart before the horse. The-learned Attorney-General for Pakistan has, however, very candidly submitted before us that in the entire body of laws pertaining to the Pakistan Army there is no express provision available regarding re-appointment or extension in the service of a Chief of the Army Staff.

iv) The stated purpose for the proposed re-appointment/extension in the term of office of the incumbent Chief of the Army Staff is "regional security environment". The said words are quite vague and if at all there is any regional security threat then it is the gallant armed forces of the country as an institution which are to meet the said threat and an individual's role in that regard may be minimal. If the said reason is held to be correct and valid then every person serving in the armed forces would claim re-appointment/extension in his service on the basis of the said reason.

3. The points noted above call for a detailed examination of the matter of extension/re-appointment of General Qamar Javed Bajwa, Chief of the Army Staff and, therefore, he is hereby made a respondent to this petition and the office is directed to carry out the necessary addition in the memorandum of this petition. Let notice of this petition be issued to all the respondents for tomorrow, i.e. 27-11-2019, as requested by the learned Attorney-General for Pakistan. In the meanwhile the operation of the impugned order/Notification in respect of extension/re-appointment of General Qamar Javed Bajwa, Chief of the Army Staff for another term in the said office shall remain suspended.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.--

Criminal Miscellaneous Application No. 1019 of 2019

For the reasons given in the application, this application is allowed and delay in the filing of the petition is condoned.

Criminal Petition No. 733 of 2019

2. The petitioner was apprehended in a search operation allegedly selling drugs on a public street and 1150 grams of charas garda was recovered from him. In this background, he was booked in FIR No.452 dated 23.10.2017, registered at Police Station Saddar, Mianwali. After regular trial, he was convicted by the Trial Court under section 9(c) of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 ("Act") and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 04 years and 06 months along with fine of Rs.20,000/-, and in case of default in payment of fine to undergo simple imprisonment for further 05 months. On appeal, the High Court, upheld the said conviction and sentence vide the impugned judgment dated 18.04.2019.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and, at the outset, have examined the Report of the Government Analyst of the Punjab Forensic Science Agency dated 15.11.2017 and found it deficient in terms of Rule 6 of the Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001 ("Rules") as interpreted repeatedly by this Court in the cases of Ikramullah.[1] Imam Bakhsh[2] and Khair-ul-Bashar.[3]

4. In Ikramullah, this Court while referring to Rule 6 of the Rules observed that the Government Analyst is to refer the necessary protocols, and mention the tests applied and their results, in his report. The Court further observed that the failure in compliance of the said Rule affects the reliability of the report, and that such a deficient report does not qualify to be called a report in the context of section 36 of the Act, so as to be treated as a "conclusive" proof of recovery of narcotic substance from an accused person.

5. In Imam Bakhsh, the question of mandatory or directory nature of Rule 6 was considered in detail. The Court held that its compliance to the extent of mentioning the full protocols of the test applied in the Report, to be mandatory with the observation that its non-compliance can frustrate the purpose and object of the Act, and held that its non-compliance will render the report of the Government Analyst inconclusive and unreliable. The Court elaborated the expression "protocol" to mean an explicit, detailed plan of an experiment, procedure or test. With this elaboration, it was held that the report under Rule 6 must specify every test applied for the determination of the seized substances with the full protocols adopted to conduct such tests. In Khair-ul-Bashar this interpretation was reinforced.

6. The Report of the Government Analyst in this case specifies only the tests applied and not the protocols thereof. The term "protocol" has not been defined in the Rules. Its dictionary meaning is: "A plan of scientific experiment or other procedure.[4]" It is also referred to as "the precise method for carrying out or reproducing a given experiment[5]." These definitions are in line with the elaboration of the term "protocol" given in Imam Bakhsh wherein the Court stated the expression "protocol" to mean an explicit plan of an experiment, procedure or test.lt is clarified that "protocol" is, therefore, a recognized standard method or plan for carrying out the test applied to ascertain the nature of the substance under examination. No test can take place without a protocol. The Report of the Government Analyst must show that the test applied was in accordance with a recognized standard protocol. Any test conducted without a protocol loses its reliability and evidentiary value. Therefore, to serve the purposes of the Act and the Rules, the Report of the Government Analyst must contain (i) the tests applied (ii) the protocols applied to carry out these tests (iii) the result of the test(s). This sequence, for clarity and better understanding can be envisaged as follows:

7. Once the above three requirements under Rule 6 are contained in the Report of the Government Analyst, any ambiguity therein may be resolved by the Trial Court by exercising its power under Proviso to section 510, Cr.P.C. The said provision states that the Court may, if it considers necessary in the interest of justice, summon and examine the person by whom such report has been made.Therefore, the Trial Court while examining the said Report has the power to summon the Government Analyst in case there is any ambiguity in the said Report and seek clarification thereof. This clarification can only be based on the existing record of the Government Analyst and does not mean to allow the Government Analyst to conduct a fresh test or prepare another Report, for that would amount to giving the prosecution a chance of filling the gaps and lacunas in the Report. The Trial Court must also be mindful of the legal position that the per se admissibility of the Report i.e. without examining the Analyst (expert) does not vouch for its evidentiary value, as observed in Khair-ul-Bashar. The Courts are free to examine the contents of the Report and to assess its evidentiary value (weight), a matter distinct from its admissibility.

8. The Report of the Government Analyst in the instant case does not specify the protocols of the tests applied and thus does not meet the requirements of the law as interpreted by this Court in the cases of Imam Bakhsh and Khair-ul-Bashar (supra). The said Report cannot be relied upon for the conviction of the petitioner. Therefore, the petition is converted into an appeal and allowed. The conviction and sentence of the petitioner are set aside. He shall be released forthwith if not required to be detained in any other case.

9. We have observed in a number of cases before us that the import of the above cited judgments have not been fully understood in the context of "protocols", which has been further clarified in this judgment. Therefore, it will be appropriate if a copy of this judgment is dispatched to all the High Courts for their reference and for further circulation to the Trial Courts dealing with such matters and to the Forensic Science Laboratories in their respective areas.

MWA/Q-1/S Petition allowed.

(b) Anti-Terrorism Act (XXVII of 1997)---

----S. 6 & Third Sched. Entry No.4---Anti-Terrorism Court, jurisdiction of---Scope---Heinous offences specified under Entry No.4 to Third Sched. of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, that did not constitute terrorism---Such heinous offences did not per se constitute the offence of terrorism but were to be tried by an Anti-Terrorism Court because of their inclusion in the Third Sched.---In such cases an Anti-Terrorism Court could punish the person committing such specified heinous offences only for commission of those offences and not for committing terrorism because such offences did not constitute terrorism---Supreme Court observed that definition of 'terrorism' contained in S. 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 ('the Act') as it stood at present was too wide and the same included many actions, designs and purposes which had no nexus with the generally recognized concept of what terrorism was; that including some other heinous offences in the Preamble and the Third Sched. to that Act for trial of such offences by an Anti-Terrorism Court when such other offences did not qualify to be included in the definition of "terrorism" put an extra and unnecessary burden on such courts and caused delay in trial of actual cases of terrorism; that the Parliament may consider substituting the present definition of 'terrorism' by a more succinct definition bringing it in line with the international perspectives of that offence and focusing on violent activities aimed at achieving political, ideological or religious objectives and that the Parliament may also consider suitably amending the Preamble to the Act and removing all those offences from the Third Sched. to the Act which offences had no nexus with the offence of terrorism.

(c) Anti-Terrorism Act (XXVII of 1997)---

----Ss. 6 & 7(e) & Third Sched. Entry No.4---Penal Code (XLV of 1860), S. 365-A---Explosive Substances Act (VI of 1908), Ss. 4(b), 5 & 6---Terrorism, kidnapping or abduction for ransom, possessing explosives---Offences mentioned under Entry No. 4 to Third Sched. of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997---Conviction for such offences under the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997---Scope---Offence of abduction or kidnapping for ransom under S.365-A, P.P.C. was included in Entry No. 4 of the Third Sched. to the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and kidnapping for ransom was also one of the actions specified in S.7(e) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997---Abduction or kidnapping for ransom was a heinous offence but the scheme of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 showed that an ordinary case of abduction or kidnapping for ransom under S.365-A, P.P.C. was merely triable by an Anti-Terrorism Court but if kidnapping for ransom was committed with the design or purpose mentioned in cl. (b) or cl. (c) of subsection (1) of S.6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 then such offence amounted to terrorism attracting S.7(e) of that Act---In the former case the convicted person was to be convicted and sentenced only for the offence under S. 365-A, P.P.C. whereas in the latter case the convicted person was to be convicted both for the offence under S.365-A, P.P.C. as well as for the offence under S.7(e) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997---Same rule may also be applied to the other offences mentioned in Entry No. 4 of the Third Sched. to the Act pertaining to "Use of firearms or explosives by any device, including bomb blast in a mosque, imambargah, church, temple or any other place of worship, whether or not any hurt or damage is caused thereby", "Firing or use of explosive by any device, including bomb blast in the court premises", "Hurt caused by corrosive substance or attempt to cause hurt by means of a corrosive substance" and "Unlawful possession of an explosive substance or abetment for such an offence under the Explosive Substances Act, 1908"---Such distinction between cases of terrorism and other heinous offences by itself explained and recognizes that all heinous offences, howsoever serious, grave, brutal, gruesome, macabre or shocking, did not ipso facto constitute terrorism which was a species apart.

----Ss. 6(1) & 6(2)---"Terrorism"---Acts constituting terrorism in terms of S.6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 ('the Act')---Scope---'Actus reus' and 'mens rea' for terrorism---Scope---For an action or threat of action to be accepted as terrorism within the meanings of S.6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 the action must fall in subsection (2) of S.6 of the said Act and the use or threat of such action must be designed to achieve any of the objectives specified in cl. (b) of subsection (1) of S.6 of Act or the use or threat of such action must be to achieve any of the purposes mentioned in cl. (c) of subsection (1) of S.6 of that Act---Requirements that needed to be satisfied for invoking cl.(c) of subsection (1) of S.6 were that the use or threat of action should be for "the purpose of advancing areligious, sectarian or ethnic cause" or for the purpose of"intimidating and terrorizing the public, social sectors, media persons, business community" or for the purpose of "attacking the civilians, including damaging property by ransacking, looting, arson, or by any other means, government officials, installations, security forces or law enforcement agencies"---Clause (b) of subsection (1) of S.6 specified the 'design' and cl.(c) of subsection (1) of S.6 earmarked the 'purpose' which should be the motivation for the act and the actus reus had been clearly mentioned in subsection (2) of S.6---Only when the actus reus specified in subsection (2) of S.6 was accompanied by the requisite mens rea provided for in cl.(b) or cl.(c) of subsection (1) of S.6 that an action could be termed as 'terrorism'---Thus, it was not the fear or insecurity actually created or intended to be created or likely to be created which would determine whether the action qualified to be termed as terrorism or not but it was the intent and motivation behind the action which would be determinative of the issue irrespective of the fact whether any fear and insecurity was actually created or not---Any action constituting an offence, howsoever grave, shocking, brutal, gruesome or horrifying, did not qualify to be termed as terrorism if it was not committed with the design or purpose specified or mentioned in cls. (b) or cl.(c) of subsection (1) of S.6 of the Act---Action could be termed as terrorism if the use or threat of that action was designed to coerce and intimidate or overawe the Government or the public or a section of the public or community or sect, etc. or if such action was designed to create a sense of fear or insecurity in the society or the use or threat was made for the purpose of advancing a religious, sectarian or ethnic cause, etc.---Creating fear or insecurity in the society was not by itself terrorism unless the motive itself was to create fear or insecurity in the society and not when fear or insecurity was just a by product, a fallout or an unintended consequence of a private crime---Mere shock, horror, dread or disgust created or likely to be created in the society did not transform a private crime into "terrorism"---"Terrorism" was a totally different concept which denoted commission of a crime with the design or purpose of destabilizing the government, disturbing the society or hurting a section of the society with a view to achieve objectives which were essentially political, ideological or religious---Violent activity against civilians that had no political, ideological or religious aims was just an act of criminal delinquency, a felony, or simply an act of insanity unrelated to "terrorism".

----S. 6(3)---"Terrorism"---Section 6(3) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997---Scope---Subsection (3) of S.6 of the Act, provided that "The use or threat of use of any action falling within subsection (2) which involves the use of firearms, explosive or any other weapon is "terrorism", whether or not subsection (1)(c) is satisfied" which meant that if for commission of the actions mentioned in subsection (2) of S.6, a firearm, an explosive substance or any other weapon was actually used or a threat regarding use of the same was extended then all such actions were to constitute the offence of terrorism even if the other requirements of cl.(c) of subsection (1) of S. 6 were not satisfied or fulfilled---Provisions of S.6(3) of the Act were quite problematic as they did not piece well with the remaining provisions of S. 6 as far as the matter of defining "terrorism" was concerned---If provisions of subsection (3) of S.6 of the Act, as they were worded, were to be given effect then the distinction between the peculiar offence of terrorism and most of the run of the mill offences committed in the society in routine would be obliterated---Supreme Court observed that the legislature may like to have another look at the provisions of S.6(3) of the Act and to consider deleting or suitably amending the same so as to bring them in harmony with the remaining provisions of the Act.

JUDGMENT

ASIF SAEED KHAN KHOSA, C.J.---The meanings, scope and import of the term 'terrorism' defined in section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act 1997, as amended from time to time, have been a subject of controversy in this Court for some time and different Honourable Benches of varying strength deciding different cases have differed with each other in the past and have understood and interpreted the said term differently. It is in this backdrop that the present Larger Bench has been constituted so as to put an end to that controversy.

2. The facts of the present appeals giving rise to the issue at hand are summed up as follows:

Ghulam Hussain v. The State

(Criminal Appeal No. 95 of 2019)

After a regular trial Ghulam Hussain appellant was convicted by the trial court on two counts of the charge under section 302(b), P.P.C. for killing two minors and was sentenced to death on each count. He was also convicted on two counts of the charge under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and was sentenced to death on each such count. His appeal filed before the High Court was dismissed and all his convictions and sentences recorded by the trial court were upheld and confirmed. Leave to appeal was granted by this Court in order the reappraise the evidence and also to consider as to whether the provisions of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 were applicable to the facts and circumstances of the case or not.

Muhammad Azeem and 3 others v. The State

(Criminal Appeal No. 96 of 2019)

The appellants were convicted by the trial court for offences under section 302(b), P.P.C. and section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and were sentenced to death each for committing the said offences besides having been convicted and sentenced for some other offences. The appellants filed a joint appeal before the High Court which was dismissed and all their convictions and sentences were upheld and maintained except their sentences of death on two counts of the charge which sentences of death were reduced by the High Court to imprisonment for life each on each of the relevant counts of the charge. Leave to appeal was granted by this Court in order to reappraise the evidence and also to consider as to whether the provisions of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 were attracted to the facts and circumstances of the case or not.

Tanvir v. Prosecutor General Punjab, Lahore, etc.

(Civil Appeal No. 10-L of 2017)

In this case the investigating agency had deleted section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 from the FIR and the Anti-Terrorism Court-II, Lahore had refused to treat the case as one of terrorism. A writ petition filed in that regard before the High Court succeeded and the case was ordered to be transferred to the Anti-Terrorism Court for trial. Leave to appeal was granted by this Court to determine as to whether the provisions of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 were attracted to the case or not.

Sikandar Hayat v. The State

(Criminal Appeal No. 63 of 2013)

The appellant was convicted by the trial court for an offence under section 302(b), P.P.C. read with section 149, P.P.C. and was sentenced to imprisonment for life besides having been convicted and sentenced for an offence under section 148, P.P.C. read with section 149, P.P.C. The appellant's appeal was dismissed by the High Court and leave to appeal was granted by this Court in order to reappraise the evidence.

3. Before making an attempt to understand as to what the term 'terrorism' defined in section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 denotes it may be advantageous to recapitulate how different acts, events, episodes and phenomena have from time to time been perceived or understood in different parts of the world as terrorism and distinct from ordinary and usual crimes howsoever heinous in nature.

4. History is full of instances where likeminded groups of people have resorted to violence as a tool for achieving political, ideological and religious ends. Jewish sects Zealots and Sicarii (or Sicarris), using small daggers called sicae hidden in their cloaks to stab people in crowds and then melting away in the throng, attacking the Roman occupiers of Judea and their allies in public places between 2 B.C. and 70 A.D.; the Assassins of Persia and Syria, Muslims belonging to the Ismaili sect who were called the Assassins because they were given hashish (hashishin) before being launched for terrorist acts, killing their targets and threatening the governments of several states between the 11th and 13th centuries; suicidal attacks carried out by different groups against the colonial rule in India, Indonesia and Philippines in the 18th and 19th centuries; Russian anarchists attacking members and supporters of the Tsarist regime with explosives at the end of the 19th century; Japanese Kamikaze pilots launching suicide attacks against American ships in the Pacific ocean during World War II, particularly in the Battle of Okinawa in April 1945 wherein some 2,000 Kamikaze pilots rammed fully fuelled planes into more than 300 ships killing about 5,000 Americans and about 2000 Kamikaze; Hizbullah supporters launching devastating attacks against the American and French forces in Lebanon in the year 1983; the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) using hundreds of suicide bombers and killing thousands of people including Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in the year 1991 and Sri Lankan President Premadasa in the year 1993; and the Marxist-Nationalist Kurdistan Worker's Party (PKK) carrying out many suicide attacks in Turkey against a range of targets during the end of the last century and beginning of the current century have all been universally perceived and acknowledged as terrorists indulging in acts of terrorism.

5. There are also many other instances in history where some individual acts or collective activity were, and are, perceived and accepted as terrorism and not just commission of normal, though heinous, offences. In the year 1881 anarchists killed the Russian Tsar Alexander II and 21 bystanders; in the year 1901 anarchists killed the US President McKinley as well as King Humbert I of Italy; World War I started in the year 1914 when anarchists killed Archduke Ferdinand of Austria; the British Raj referred to Bhagat Singh, Chandrasekhar Azad and many other Indian freedom fighters as terrorists; guerrilla fighters from Mao Zedong to Ho Chi Minh and Fidel Castro killed civilians during their revolutionary campaigns and they too were called terrorists until they triumphed; after World War II some Jewish groups in Palestine, i.e. Haganah, Irgun and Stern Gang fought for the creation of a Jewish state, bombing hotels and installations and killing civilians and the British, who then governed Palestine, called those Jewish groups terrorists and many of those terrorists including Moshe Dayan, Yitzhak Rabin, Menachem Begin and Ariel Sharon later became leaders of the independent state of Israel and, ironically, those former terrorists then derided terrorism, applying this label to the Arabs, including Yasser Arafat, fighting for the very same nationhood that the Jews had fought for earlier; in Germany in the years 1968 to 1992 the Baader-Meinhoff Gang killed dozens, including the head of Treuhand, the German privatization agency; in Italy the Red Brigades kidnapped and killed Aldo Moro, a former prime minister, and the Japanese Red Army was an Asian version of that; Japan was also the home of Aum Shinrikyo, a Buddhist cult that tried to kill thousands in the Tokyo metro system using nerve gas in the year 1995; in Europe the Irish Republican Army has been a Catholic terrorist organization for almost a century; Spain and France face a terrorist challenge from ETA and the Basque terrorist organization; Lord's Salvation Army in Uganda and Boko Haram in Nigeria are universally acknowledged as terrorist outfits; the Afghan freedom fighters were called the Mujahideen (holy warriors) by the West when they were fighting the Soviet occupying forces but they are now branded as terrorists when they are fighting to oust the American occupying forces; the Muslim freedom fighters in the Indian occupied Kashmir, the Sikhs led and inspired by Bhindranwale in Punjab, the United Liberation Front and Bodo of Assam, militant groups in Tripura, Christian Mizos mounting an insurrection for decades, Christian Nagas waging a freedom struggle and the Maoist groups operating in no less than 150 out of India 's 600 districts are all termed by India as terrorists; and the savagery perpetrated by Talibans of different shades in Afghanistan and Pakistan for the last many decades is generally accepted and treated as acts of terrorism.

6. The historical context of terrorism given above shows that at different times in history terrorism has been resorted to for achieving different political, ideological or religious objectives. There are many explanatory theories about terrorism in modern times but the one advanced by David C. Rapoport, Professor Emeritus of Political Science at the University of California, Los Angeles, in the year 2004 (published in his journal Terrorism and Political Violence) has received wide acceptance. The theory propounded by him is known as the 'waves of terrorism' theory and according to him modern terrorism can be divided into four waves which are Anarchists (1880s-1920s), Anti-Colonial (1920s-1960s), Left Wing (1960s-1990s) and Religious (1990 to date). He maintains that each wave came and died out and that these waves have at times overlapped also. The common factor in all those waves is that all the relevant acts of violence were and are universally recognized as terrorism because the unlawful use of violence was and is meant to achieve political, ideological or religious goals. By now the international community understands quite well that terrorism is a species quite distinct from all other usual and private crimes howsoever heinous or gruesomely executed.

7. In his book 21 Lessons for the 21st Century (published by Random House LLC, New York in 2018) the author Yuval Noah Harari has come up with a very interesting, and quite apt, analysis of how terrorists operate and succeed in their objectives. The following part of his analysis is quite enlightening:

> "Though the challenges are unprecedented, and though the disagreements are intense, humankind can rise to the occasion if we keep our fears under control and be a bit more humble about our views.
>
> Terrorists are masters of mind control... terrorism is a military strategy that hopes to change the political situation by spreading fear rather than by causing material damage.
>
> In this respect, terrorists resemble a fly that tries to destroy a china shop. The fly is so weak that it cannot move even a single tea-cup. So how does a fly destroy a china shop? It finds a bull, gets inside its ear, and starts buzzing. The bull goes wild with fear and anger, and destroys the china shop. This is what happened after 9/11, as Islamic fundamentalists incited the American bull to destroy the Middle Eastern china shop. Now they flourish in the wreckage. And there is no shortage of short-tempered bulls in the world.
>
> Terrorism is a very unattractive military strategy, because it leaves all the important decisions in the hands of the enemy. Terrorists are so weak that they cannot wage war so they opt instead to produce a theatrical spectacle that they hope will provoke the enemy and cause him to overreact. By killing a handful of people the terrorists cause millions to fear for their lives.
>
> Terrorists don't think like army generals. Instead, they think like theatre producers. Because we intuitively understand that terrorism is theatre, we judge it by its emotional rather than material impact.
>
> Terrorists undertake an impossible mission: to change the political balance of power through violence, despite having no army.
>
> Every now and then a state loses its temper and reacts far too forcefully and publicly, thus playing into the hands of the terrorists. The legitimacy of the modern state is based on its promise to keep the public sphere free of political violence. Consequently, sporadic acts of political violence that kill a few dozen people are seen as a deadly threat to the legitimacy and even survival of the state. A small coin in a big empty jar makes a lot of noise.
>
> The theatre of terror generates visceral fear of anarchy, making people feel as if the social order is about to collapse. The state is driven to respond to the theatre of terror with its own theatre of security. So instead of acting quietly and efficiently, the state unleashes a mighty storm, which not infrequently fulfills the terrorists' most cherished dreams.
> How then should the state deal with terrorism? A successful counter-terrorism struggle should be conducted on three fronts: First, governments should focus on clandestine actions against the terrorist networks. Second, the media should keep things in perspective and avoid hysteria. The theatre of terror cannot succeed without publicity. The third front is the imagination of each and every one of us. The success or failure of terrorism therefore depends on us. If we allow our imagination to be captured by the terrorists and then we overreact to our own fears, terrorism will succeed. If we free our imagination from the terrorists and then we react in a balanced and cool way, terrorism will fail."

This analysis also confirms that terrorists operate on a level different from that on which ordinary criminals operate, their operations and tactics are different and the offence of terrorism is more concerned with the object and design behind an action than with the action itself.

8. Since the year 1974 different laws have been introduced in our country in order to deal with the menace of terrorist activities and terrorism and the first serious attempt to understand the nature and scope of such an offence was made by a Division Bench of the Lahore High Court, Lahore in the case of Basharat Ali v Special Judge, Anti-Terrorism Court-II, Gujranwala and 2 others (PLD 2004 Lahore 199). In that case the history of terrorism was traced, different definitions of 'terrorism' adopted in the laws of different countries were mentioned, all the precedent cases available on the subject till then in Pakistan and India were referred to and all the relevant issues were exhaustively discussed.

As all the ensuing discussion in the judicial and legal circles that followed that decision generally revolved around the judgment rendered in that case, therefore, some parts of that judgment are being reproduced here in extenso:

"4. Terror and terrorism are concepts quite distinct from each other and the quintessence of the two notions is not difficult to distil. Terror as a manifestation of fright, dread, fear or insecurity is a consequential effect created by an act that may not necessarily be motivated to create such an effect whereas terrorism is an activity designed to create such an effect of terror. The critical difference between the two is the design and purpose understood in the criminal jurisprudence as mens rea. In the case of terror the act, or the actus reus, is not motivated to create fear and insecurity in the society at large but the same is actuated with a desire to commit a private crime against targeted individuals, etc. and the fear and insecurity created by the act in the society at large is only an unintended consequence or a fall out thereof whereas in the case of terrorism the main purpose is creation of fear and insecurity in the society at large and the actual victims are, by and large, not the real targets. Every crime, no matter what its magnitude or extent, creates some sort of fear and insecurity in some section of the society but every felony or misdemeanor cannot be branded or termed as terrorism. As against that an act of terrorism designed to create fear and insecurity in the society at large may or may not succeed in achieving the desired effect but nonetheless it can be accepted as nothing but terrorism because of the object or purpose behind such act. Thus, the real test to determine whether a particular act is terrorism or not is the motivation, object, design or purpose behind the act and not the consequential effect created by such act. In this context terrorism has to be understood as a species different and apart from terror, horror, shock, fear, insecurity, panic or disgust created by an ordinary crime. The history of recent terrorism in the world and an insight into how the world has understood and tried to define the same may be of significant help and of critical importance in appreciating the true meanings and import of the term 'terrorism'.

5. The history of terrorism as it is known today has essentially a political tone and background.----

6. The question of a definition of terrorism has haunted the debate among States for decades.----

7. The discussion made above shows, and shows quite clearly, that out of the various facets of the world view about terrorism one factor is constant and that is that in order to qualify as terrorism an act must be designed to achieve a political and a larger objective and the same is not primarily directed against the actual victims themselves who are treated merely as 'collateral damage'. It is also quite evident that the extent of the actual damage caused or injuries inflicted by the act is not the determinative factor in this regard.

8. Like its counterparts in rest of the world Pakistan has also been groping for the last many decades to find a suitable and appropriate definition of terrorism. Eversince the introduction of anti-terrorism laws in our country our legislature has constantly been in search of an apt definition of terrorism and in the process different laws have been enacted from time to time and different definitions of terrorism have been introduced at different occasions. In such definitions emphasis has been placed upon different aspects at different times. Although Suppression of Terrorist Activities (Special Courts) Act, 1974, Special Courts for Speedy Trials Ordinance, 1987, Terrorist Affected Areas (Special Courts) Ordinance, 1990, Special Courts for Speedy Trials Ordinance, 1991, Special Courts for Speedy Trials Act, 1992 and many other laws were also enacted in this regard from time to time yet for the purposes of the present judgment we intend to focus mainly on the two major enactments in this field, i.e. the Suppression of Terrorist Activities (Special Courts) Act, 1975 and the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997.

9. The first major piece of legislation introduced in Pakistan specifically in the context of terrorism was the Suppression of Terrorist Activities (Special Courts) Act, 1975 ----- It is of critical importance to point out here that although the word terrorism had been used in the Preamble of the said Act yet the same had not been defined in the Act at all and the Schedule of that Act created an impression that the word terrorism was to be understood in the context of any offence of serious and grave nature.

10. The Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 was a major step forward in Pakistan's quest for dealing with the menace of terrorism and its Preamble provided as follows:

"Whereas it is expedient to provide for the prevention of terrorism, sectarian violence and for speedy trial of heinous offences and for matters connected therewith and incidental thereto."

Section 12 of the Act conferred jurisdiction to try the scheduled offences exclusively upon the Special Courts constituted under the said Act. Section 6 of that Act defined a 'terrorist act' in the following terms:

"Whoever, to strike terror in the people, or any section of the people, or to alienate any section of the people or to adversely affect harmony among different sections of the people, does any act or thing by using bombs, dynamite or other explosive or inflammable substances, or fire-arms, or other lethal weapons or poisons or noxious gases or chemicals or other substances of a hazardous nature in such a manner as to cause, or to be likely to cause the death of, or injury to, any person or persons, or damage to, or destruction of, property or disruption of any supplies of services essential to the life of the community or displays fire-arms, or threatens with the use of force public servants in order to prevent them from discharging their lawful duties commits a terrorist act."

Section 7 of the Act specified various punishments for the terrorist acts mentioned in section 6, section 8 defined an offence regarding stirring up sectarian hatred and section 9 of the said Act provided for punishment for the offence under section 8. The Schedule of the said Act read as follows:

"1. Any offence punishable under this Act.

2. Any offence punishable under any of the following sections of the Pakistan Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), namely:-

(a) section 302, --

(i) if committed with a cannon, grenade, bomb, rocket or a light or heavy automatic weapon;

(ii) if the victim is a member of police, armed forces or civil armed forces or is a public servant;

(iii) if there is more than one victim; or

(iv) the victim was subjected to cruelty, brutality, torture or burning; and

(b) offences under sections 295-A, 298-A, 364, 364-A, 365, 365-A, 392 to 402 of the Pakistan Penal Code (Act No. XLV of 1860).

3. An offence punishable under sub-section (4) of section 10 of the Offence of Zina (Enforcement of Hudood) Ordinance, 1979 (Ordinance No. VII of 1979).

4. Any attempt or conspiracy to commit or any abetment of any of the aforesaid offences."

The core and essence or the pith and substance of a 'terrorist act' defined by this Act was striking terror in the people or any section of the people or alienating any section of the people or adversely affecting harmony among different sections of the people. The emphasis appeared to be on the gravity of the offence and its effect upon the general populace rather than on the actual motivation behind the act.

11. The above mentioned definition of a 'terrorist act' contained in section 6 was subsequently amended through the Anti-Terrorism (Second Amendment) Ordinance, 1999 (Ordinance No. XIII of 1999) and the new definition read as follows:

"A person is said to commit a terrorist act if he -

(a) in order to, or if the effect of his actions will be to, strike terror or create a sense of fear and insecurity in the people, or any section of the people, does any act or thing by using bombs, dynamite or other explosive or inflammable substances, or such fire-arms or other lethal weapons as may be notified, or poisons or noxious gases or chemicals, in such a manner as to cause, or be likely to cause, the death of, or injury to, any person or persons, or damage to, or destruction of, property on a large scale, or a widespread disruption of supplies of services essential to the life of the community, or threatens with the use of force public servants in order to prevent them from discharging their lawful duties; or

(b) commits a scheduled offence, the effect of which will be, or be likely to be, to strike terror, or create a sense of fear and insecurity in the people, or any section of the people or to adversely affect harmony among different sections of the people; or

(c) commits an act of gang rape, child molestation, or robbery coupled with rape as specified in the Schedule to this Act; or

(d) commits an act of civil commotion as specified in section 7-A."

Through this amendment the focus on the effect of the action was extended to a potential or likely effect besides the actual effect of the action and the focal point still remained the effect of the action rather than the incentive or inspiration behind the same.

12. It is of vital importance to mention here that while providing in the amended section 6 that "in order to, or if the effect of his actions will be to, strike terror or create a sense of fear and insecurity in the people, or any section of the people, does any act or thing ---" the legislature never specified the motivation for that "act or thing" on the part of the perpetrator which propelled or prompted him to commit a terrorist act. Thus, the actus reus was itself considered to be determinative if the same was intended to create fear and insecurity, etc. in the public at large, had the effect of creating such fear and insecurity, etc. or had a potential for creating such fear and insecurity, etc. According to this definition what was of paramount consideration was the effect of the act, whether actual, intended or potential, and not the design or the purpose behind that act. It was in that context that the Hon'ble Supreme Court of Pakistan had interpreted the provisions of section 6 of this Act in many cases, to be discussed later on in this judgment, and had held that an act was to be considered a terrorist act if its effect, whether actual, intended or potential, was to create fear and insecurity, etc. in the society at large.

13. On August 15, 2001 the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 was drastically amended through the Anti-Terrorism (Amendment) Ordinance, 2001 (Ordinance No. XXXIX of 2001). Through the amending Ordinance the Schedule of the Act containing various offences to be tried under the said Act was done away with and the term 'terrorist act' with its definition contained in section 6 of the Act was substituted and replaced by the term 'terrorism' with the following definition thereof:

"(1) In this Act "terrorism" means the use or threat of action where:

(a) the action falls within the meaning of subsection (2), and

(b) the use or threat is designed to coerce and intimidate or overawe the Government or the public or a section of the public or community or sect or create a sense of fear or insecurity in society; or

(c) the use or threat is made for the purpose of advancing a religious, sectarian or ethnic cause.

(2) An "action" shall fall within the meaning of sub-section (1), if it:

(a) involves the doing of anything that causes death;

(b) involves grievous violence against a person or grievous bodily injury or harm to a person;

(c) involves grievous damage to property;

(d) involves the doing of anything that is likely to cause death or endangers a person's life;

(e) involves kidnapping for ransom, hostage-taking or hijacking;

(f) incites hatred and contempt on religious, sectarian or ethnic basis to stir up violence or cause internal disturbance;

(g) involves stoning, brick-batting or any other form of mischief to spread panic;

(h) involves firing on religious congregations, mosques, imambargahs, churches, temples and all other places of worship, or random firing to spread panic, or involves any forcible takeover of mosques or other places of worship;

(i) creates a serious risk to safety of the public or a section of the public, or is designed to frighten the general public and thereby prevent them from coming out and carrying on their lawful trade and daily business, and disrupts civic life;

(j) involves the burning of vehicles or any other serious form of arson;

(k) involves extortion of money ("bhatta") or property;

(l) is designed to seriously interfere with or seriously disrupt a communications system or public utility service;

(m) involves serious coercion or intimidation of a public servant in order to force him to discharge or to refrain from discharging his lawful duties; or

(n) involves serious violence against a member of the police force, armed forces, civil armed forces, or a public servant.

(3) The use or threat of use of any action falling within sub-section (2), which involves the use of fire-arms, explosives or any other weapon, is terrorism, whether or not subsection 1(c) is satisfied.

(4) In this section "action" includes any act done for the benefit of a proscribed organization.

(5) In this Act, terrorism includes any act done for the benefit of a proscribed organization.

(6) A person who commits an offence under this section or any other provision of this Act, shall be guilty of an act of terrorism.

(7) In this Act, a "terrorist" means:

(a) a person who has committed an offence of terrorism under this Act, and is or has been concerned in the commission, preparation or instigation of acts of terrorism;

(b) a person who is or has been, whether before or after the coming into force of this Act, concerned in the commission, preparation or instigation of acts of terrorism, shall also be included in the meaning given in clause (a) above."

14. The resume of our legislative developments in the field of terrorism shows that with different laws and definitions of terrorist act or terrorism the emphasis has been shifting from one criterion to another including the gravity of the act, lethal nature of the weapon used, plurality of culprits, number of victims, impact created by the act and effect of fear and insecurity brought about or likely to be created in the society by the action. The last definition of a 'terrorist act' contained in section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 squarely focused on the effect of fear and insecurity intended to be created by the act or actually created by the act or the act having the potential of creating such an effect of fear and insecurity in the society. It, however, appears that subsequently the legislature did not feel convinced of the aptness or correctness of that definition and resultantly the erstwhile definition of a 'terrorist act' contained in section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 was repealed and a totally fresh and new definition of 'terrorism' was introduced through an amended section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and this was accomplished through the Anti-Terrorism (Amendment) Ordinance, 2001 (Ordinance No. XXXIX of 2001) promulgated on 15.08.2001. The legislature had probably realized by then that an effect of an act may not always be a correct indicator of the nature of such an act as every crime, especially of violence against person or property, does create some sense of fear and insecurity in some section of the society and a definition of terrorism based upon the magnitude or potential of an effect created or intended to be created or having a potential of creating would necessarily require a premature, speculative and imaginary quantification of the effect so as to determine the nature of the act in order to decide about the jurisdiction of a criminal court to try such an act. That surely was an unsure test and the result of such a premature, speculative and presumptive test could vary from court to court and from Judge to Judge reminding a legal scholar of the Star Chamber and the early days of a Court of Equity in England where equity was said to vary with the size of the Chancellor's foot. The new definition of 'terrorism' introduced through the amended section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 as it stands today appears to be the most comprehensive and the clearest definition of 'terrorism' introduced in our legal system thus far. It appears that in its quest for an apt and appropriate definition of terrorism and after stumbling through various approaches in that regard the legislature in our country has finally hit upon a definition of terrorism which is not only closest to its real meaning but the same is also in accord with the international perceptions about the same. The earlier emphasis on the speculative effect of the act has now given way to a clearly defined mens rea and actus reus. The amended section 6(1)(b) now specifies the 'design' and section 6(1)(c) earmarks the 'purpose' which should be the motivation for the act and the actus reus has been clearly mentioned in section 6(2)(a) to (n) and now it is only when the actus reus specified in section 6(2) is accompanied by the requisite mens rea provided for in section 6(1)(b) or (c) that an action can be termed as 'terrorism'. Thus, it is no longer the fear or insecurity actually created or intended to be created or likely to be created which would determine whether the action qualifies to be termed as terrorism or not but it is now the intent and motivation behind the action which would be determinative of the issue irrespective of the fact whether any fear and insecurity was actually created or not. After this amendment in section 6 an action can now be termed as terrorism if the use or threat of that action "is designed to coerce and intimidate or overawe the Government or the public or a section of the public or community or sect" or if such action is designed to "create a sense of fear or insecurity in society" or the use or threat is made for the purpose of advancing a religious, sectarian or ethnic cause. Now creating fear or insecurity in the society is not by itself terrorism unless the motive itself is to create fear or insecurity in the society and not when fear or insecurity is just a byproduct, a fall out or an unintended consequence of a private crime. In the last definition the focus was on the action and its result whereas in the present definition the emphasis appears to be on the motivation and objective and not on the result. Through this amendment the legislature seems to have finally appreciated that mere shock, horror, dread or disgust created or likely to be created in the society does not transform a private crime into terrorism but terrorism as an 'ism' is a totally different concept which denotes commission of a crime with the object and purpose of destabilizing the society or government with a view to achieve objectives which are political in the extended sense of the word. This approach appears to be in harmony with the emerging international perception about terrorism according to which, as referred to above, "the aim of the activity is always political, i.e. the goal is to attain political objectives like changing the regime, changing the people in power, changing social or economic policies, etc. In the absence of a political aim, the activity in quest will not be defined as terrorism. A violent activity against civilians that has no political aim is, at most, an act of criminal delinquency, a felony, or simply an act of insanity unrelated to terrorism. Some scholars tend to add ideological or religious aims to the list of political aims." This metamorphosis in the anti-terrorism law in our country has brought about a sea change in the whole concept as we have understood it in the past and it is, therefore, of paramount importance for all concerned to understand this conceptual modification and transformation in its true perspective. In view of this conceptual transformation even the interpretations of a 'terrorist act' or 'terrorism' rendered by our courts in the past on the basis of the earlier law may, it is observed with great respect, require revisiting and reinterpretation so as to be in line with the newly introduced definition and concept of terrorism.

15. Adverting to the case-law on the subject we may straightaway observe with profound respect that, barring a few exceptions, the judgments rendered on the subject thus far by the Hon'ble Supreme Court of Pakistan appear to be heavily influenced by the erstwhile definition of a 'terrorist act' contained in the original Act and even the new definition of 'terrorism' contained in the amended Act has, by and large, been looked at with the same mindset. For instance in the case of -------

16. One cannot help noticing that all the cases referred to in the last paragraph pertained to offences committed for private purposes with no motivation to destabilize the society at large but they were all adjudged to be cases of terrorist acts or terrorism on the basis of a presumptive and speculative quantification of the effect that the relevant actions could have created in the society. In all such cases, it is observed with great deference, the change brought about by the new definition of 'terrorism' with its resultant shifting of focus from the effect of the action to the design or purpose behind the action had not been noticed and all those cases had been decided on the basis and on the yardstick of the principles provided for by the earlier definition of a 'terrorist act'. In the above mentioned cases the gravity of the offence with its resultant actual, intended or potential effect on the people at large was considered as the measure for determining whether the act constituted terrorism or not. We can appreciate that the mindset inherited by us in the background of the Summary Military Courts, Speedy Trial Courts and Special Courts for Suppression of Terrorist Activities, which were different courts constituted at different stages in the past for separate and special handling of offences of grave nature, may take some time to be dispelled and it may take us a while to appreciate and realize that an act of 'terrorism' is not just a grave offence but it is a class and species apart and this class or species has to be understood in its true and correct perception and perspective otherwise every serious offence may be found by one Judge or the other to involve terrorism depending upon a subjective assessment of the potential of the act to create some sense of fear or insecurity in some section of the society. Such an approach, it may be observed with great veneration, may not be wholesome as it may ultimately result in every case of a serious offence landing in a Special Court and thereby rendering the ordinary courts substantially redundant. It ought not to be lost sight of that the legislature's repeal of the Suppression of Terrorist Activities (Special Courts) Act, 1975, doing away with the Schedule of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and also its retraction from the 'effect' through the fresh definition of 'terrorism' cannot be without any significance or purpose. That drastic change of the definition manifestly indicated a change of meanings and of focus and such a change has to be given its proper effect. After all if the newly introduced term 'terrorism' is still to be interpreted in the same manner as the erstwhile term 'terrorist act' then there was hardly any occasion or need for the legislature to amend the definition and to bring about any change in the existing law in that regard. The legacy and interpretations pertaining to the Suppression of Terrorist Activities (Special Courts) Act, 1975 and of the original provisions of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 have now to be shrugged off so as to correctly understand the new definition of 'terrorism' introduced through the latest amendment in the latter Act. The Hon'ble Supreme Court of Pakistan had itself declared in the above mentioned case of Mumtaz Ali Khan Rajban and another v. Federation of Pakistan and others (PLD 2001 SC 169) that the subject matters of the Suppression of Terrorist Activities (Special Courts) Act, 1975 and the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 were "different" and their respective applicability was "governed by different criteria".

17. We understand, and we observe so with all the respect at our command, that in the above mentioned cases the Hon'ble Supreme Court of Pakistan had, wittingly or otherwise, detracted or moved away from the principle of nexus so painstakingly carved out by itself in the case of Mehram Ali and others v. Federation of Pakistan and others (PLD 1998 SC 1445). -----

18. It may be advantageous to mention here that the definition of 'terrorism' introduced in Pakistan in 2001 through the latest amendment in the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 proceeds on lines somewhat similar, if not identical, to the corresponding definitions contained in the relevant laws of Northern Ireland, United Kingdom, United States of America, Australia and India. Section 58 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1996 defined terrorism in the following words: -----Section 1 of the United Kingdom's Terrorism Act, 2000 reads as follows:-----

Section 802 of the Uniting and Strengthening America Act by Providing Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism (USA PATRIOT) Act of 2001 of the United States of America defines "domestic terrorism" as follows: --- In Australia Section 5 of the Terrorism (Emergency Powers) Act, 2003 defines a 'terrorist act' in the following words: --- In India the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987 (Act No. 28 of 1987) defined a 'terrorist act' in section 3(1) thereof as follows: -- The Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987 was subsequently repealed in India and was substituted by the Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002 (Act No. 15 of 2002) and section 3 of the said Act provides as follows:---

19. The similarities, nay resemblances, in the definitions of a 'terrorist act' or 'terrorism' enacted in Northern Ireland, United Kingdom, United States of America, Australia, India and Pakistan are too striking to be merely coincidental and, therefore, in the larger interests of global harmony and communion their interpretations ought also not be different. ---- In the case of Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi, Advocate v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijja and others (AIR 1990 SC 1962) ----This, to us, appears to be an approach which is not only in complete harmony with the change of focus brought about by the new definition of 'terrorism' through the amended section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 in Pakistan but is also in perfect accord with the global perceptions about the true nature of terrorism according to which the determinative factor is the design or purpose behind the act and not the presumptive effect created by the act upon those who were not even the targets of the private act. ----- the Hon'ble Supreme Court of India had reiterated in the case of Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi, Advocate v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijja and others (AIR 1990 SC 1962) that: ---- In the subsequent case of Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab ((1994) 3 Supreme Court Cases 569) the Hon'ble Supreme Court of India reproduced the above mentioned passages from the judgments in the cases of Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi, Advocate v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijja and others (AIR 1990 SC 1962) and Usmanbhai Dawoodbhai Memon v. State of Gujarat ((1988) 2 SCC 271) and commented upon them with approval and reiteration. The later case of Hitendra Vishnu Thakur and others v. State of Maharashtra and others (AIR 1994 SC 2623) can truly be described as a milestone in the context of identifying the true meanings of terrorism and the Hon'ble Supreme Court of India had observed in its judgment in that case as follows: ---- A similar approach was adopted by the Hon'ble Supreme Court of Pakistan in 1998 in the above mentioned case of Mehram Ali and others v. Federation of Pakistan and others (PLD 1998 SC 1445) by carving out the principle of nexus with the objects of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. However, it appears that in the last few years the said principle has either been side tracked or placed on the back burner in our country and the law is not only being stretched in a different direction but the same is also often being misapplied and misused by the police and the subordinate courts. An appropriate and correct restatement of the relevant law for its proper application is, therefore, not only necessary but also a crying need so that the relevant law may be saved from being derailed from its real objectives.

20. By way of summing up we may observe that, keeping in view the latest definition of 'terrorism' contained in section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, mere gravity or brutal nature of an offence does not provide a valid yardstick for branding the same as terrorism. In order to qualify as terrorism the motivation behind the offence has to be political in the extended sense of the word and, as provided in the United Kingdom law, "the use or threat is made for the purpose of advancing a political, religious or ideological cause" and the act has to be designed to destabilize the society at large. The history of crimes in the human society is replete with macabre, gruesome and horrifying offences shocking the society at large yet such crimes were never treated or accepted as terrorism because the motivation was personal and private. As against that even an unsuccessful attempt at sabotage of public supplies or services has readily been accepted as terrorism because the purpose behind the act is to destabilize the society at large. Even a petty theft in a house in a street is likely to create a sense of insecurity in the people living in that street, a rape of a young girl is bound to send jitters in every family having young girls living in the relevant locality, a murder in the vicinity surely creates a grave sense of fear in the inhabitants of the area, a bloodbath in furtherance of an on-going feud shocks the society as a whole, a massive fraud in a bank may send shockwaves throughout the banking and financial sectors and an offence committed against a member of any profession may render the other members of that profession feeling vulnerable and insecure. But all such offences are ordinary crimes distinguishable from terrorism because for the former the motivation is personal and private whereas for the latter the purpose has to be to destabilize the society at large. In this backdrop a premature, speculative, presumptive and imaginary quantification of the effect of an action so as to determine the nature of the act as terrorism or not appears to be an unsure and subjective test and it would be safer and consistent to revert to the principle of nexus carved out by the Hon'ble Supreme Court of Pakistan which is not only now a statutory requirement but the same is also consistent with the first major enunciation of the relevant law by our Supreme Court and that too by a Bench larger than any other Bench deciding any of the other cases mentioned above.

22. Judged on the basis of the requirements of the amended provisions of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and examined on the touchstone of the principle of nexus propounded by the largest Bench of the Hon'ble Supreme Court of Pakistan in the case of Mehram Ali and others v. Federation of Pakistan and others (PLD 1998 SC 1445), reiterated by an equally large Bench of it in the case of Jamat-i-Islami Pakistan through Syed Munawar Hassan, Secretary-General v. Federation of Pakistan through Secretary, Law, Justice and Parliamentary Affairs (PLD 2000 SC 111) and applied by it in the case of Ch. Bashir Ahmad v. Naveed Iqbal and 7 others (PLD 2001 SC 521) the case in hand, despite the brutality displayed by the culprits and the consequent horror, shock, fear and insecurity likely to be created by the savagery perpetrated by the offenders, has not appeared to us to be a case of terrorism as the motive for the alleged offences was nothing but personal enmity and private vendetta and the motivation on the part of the accused party was not to overawe or intimidate the government, etc. or to destabilize the society at large or to advance any sectarian cause, etc.. The intention of the accused party did not depict or manifest any 'design' or 'purpose' as contemplated by the provisions of section 6(1)(b) or (c) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and, thus, the actus reus attributed to it was not accompanied by the necessary mens rea so as to brand its actions as terrorism triable exclusively by a Special Court constituted under the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. The stand taken before us by the learned Assistant Advocate-General appearing for the State also proceeds on the same lines and it is for these very reasons that the State has chosen not to oppose this petition. This writ petition is, therefore, allowed, the impugned order passed by the learned Judge, Anti-Terrorism Court-II, Gujranwala on 04.10.2003 is declared to be without lawful authority and of no legal effect and the same is set aside, the application filed by the petitioner before the said court under section 23 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 is accepted and the petitioner's case is declared to be triable by a court of ordinary jurisdiction. The learned Judge, Anti-Terrorism Court-II, Gujranwala is directed to transmit the record of the petitioner's case to the learned District and Sessions Judge, Gujranwala forthwith for further proceedings in the matter. There shall be no order as to costs."

The said judgment passed by the Lahore High Court, Lahore (authored by one of us, Asif Saeed Khan Khosa, CJ, in his capacity as a Judge of that Court at that time) was initially set aside by this Court in the case of Mirza Shaukat Baig and others v. Shahid Jamil and others (PLD 2005 SC 530) but subsequently in the cases of Bashir Ahmed v. M. Siddique (PLD 2009 SC 11), Ahmad Jan v. Nasrullah and others (2012 SCMR 59) and Farooq Ahmed v. State and another (2020 SCMR 78) it was not only referred to with approval and relied upon by this Court but it was also held to be laying down correct law regarding the scope and meanings of 'terrorism' as defined in section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997.

9. Section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 has been amended from time to time and in its present shape it provides as follows:

6. Terrorism. - (1) In this Act, "terrorism" means the use or threat of action where:

(a) the action falls within the meaning of subsection (2), and

(c) the use or threat is made for the purpose of advancing a religious, sectarian or ethnic cause or intimidating and terrorizing the public, social sectors, media persons, business community or attacking the civilians, including damaging property by ransacking, looting, arson, or by any other means, government officials, installations, security forces or law enforcement agencies:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall apply to a democratic and religious rally or a peaceful demonstration in accordance with law.

(2) An "action" shall fall within the meaning of subsection (1), if it:

(a) involves the doing of anything that causes death;

(b) involves grievous violence against a person or grievous bodily injury or harm to a person;

(c) involves grievous damage to property including government premises, official installations, schools, hospitals, offices or any other public place or private property including damaging property by ransacking, looting or arson or by any other means;

(d) involves the doing of anything that is likely to cause death or endangers a person's life;

(e) involves kidnapping for ransom, hostage-taking or hijacking;

(ee) involves use of explosive by any device including bomb blast or having any explosive substance without any lawful justification or having been unlawfully concerned with such explosive;

(f) incites hatred and contempt on religious, sectarian, or ethnic basis to stir up violence or cause internal disturbance;

(g) involves taking the law in own hand, award of any punishment by an organization, individual or group whatsoever, not recognized by the law, with a view to coerce, intimidate or terrorize public, individuals, groups, communities, government officials and institutions, including law enforcement agencies beyond the purview of the law of the land;

(h) involves firing on religious congregations, mosques, imambargahs, churches, temples and all other places of worship, or random firing to spread panic, or involves any forcible takeover of mosques or other places of worship;

(i) creates a serious risk to safety of the public or a section of the public, or is designed to frighten the general public and thereby prevent them from coming out and carrying on their lawful trade and daily business, and disrupts civic life;

(j) involves the burning of vehicles or any other serious form of arson;

(k) involves extortion of money ("bhatta") or property;

(l) is designed to seriously interfere with or seriously disrupt a communication system or public utility service;

(m) involves serious coercion or intimidation of a public servant in order to force him to discharge or to refrain from discharging his lawful duties;

(n) involves serious violence against member of the police force, armed forces, civil armed forces, or a public servant;

(o) involves in acts as part of armed resistance by groups or individuals against law enforcements agencies; or

(p) involves in dissemination, preaching ideas, teachings and beliefs as per own interpretation on FM stations or through any other means of communication without explicit approval of the government or its concerned departments.

(3) The use or threat of any action falling within subsection (2) which involves the use of firearms, explosive or any other weapon is terrorism, whether or not subsection (1) (c) is satisfied.

(4) In this section "action" includes an act or a series of acts.

(5) In this Act, terrorism includes any act done for the benefit of a proscribed organisation.

(6) A person who commits an offence under this section or any other provision of this Act, shall be guilty of an act of terrorism.

(7) In this Act, a "terrorist" means:-

(a) an individual who has committed an offence of terrorism under this Act, and is or has been concerned in the commission, preparation, facilitation, funding or instigation of acts of terrorism;

(b) an individual who is or has been, whether before or after the coming into force of this Act, concerned in the commission, preparation, facilitation, funding or instigation of acts of terrorism, shall be included in the meaning given in clause (a) above.

On the basis of the said definition of 'terrorism' and the precedent cases available on the subject all the learned counsel for all the parties as well as all the learned law officers, except the learned Attorney-General for Pakistan, have argued before us in unison that an act of terrorism is not to be confused with an ordinary crime committed in the background of a personal enmity or private vendetta and gravity of an offence, shocking nature of the violence committed or mere fear and insecurity generated or likely to be generated by commission of a brutal, gruesome or heinous act are not to be treated as the yardsticks for determining whether an action is to be labeled as terrorism or not and only that action is to be accepted as terrorism which action falls within the purview of subsection (2) of section 6 and such action is committed with a 'design' or 'purpose' specified in clauses (b) or (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. The learned Attorney-General for Pakistan has, however, submitted his written submissions and through the same he has maintained that "all "actions" that fall within the contemplation of sub-section (3) of section 6 would have to be registered as an act of terror, within the meaning of terrorism. However punishments contemplated by Sec 7 would be awarded, subject to subsequent evidence being led, that, the 'actions' where weapons are used and has caused fear/terror etc., it would be termed as 'terrorism', as defined in section 6(1), (2) and (3), else, the person could be acquitted to the extent of the charge of terrorism. In other cases not involving the contemplation of subsection (3) of section 6, the FIR cannot be lodged under the provisions of ATA, however, where during investigation and available evidence, any of the provision of sub section (2) of section 6 comes to surface, Anti-Terrorism Act can be included." The main thrust of the stand taken by the learned Attorney-General is that in terms of subsection (3) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 use or threat of use of firearms, explosive or any other weapon for all the actions mentioned in subsection (2) of section 6 of that Act ipso facto constitutes terrorism and an FIR can be registered on that basis in respect of the offence of terrorism but conviction for committing the offence of terrorism can be recorded at the end of the trial only if the alleged action is proved through evidence to have been taken with the 'design' or 'purpose' specified in clauses (b) and (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. According to the learned Attorney-General subsections (1), (2) and (3) of section 6 of the said Act are to be read in conjunction and for determining whether an action constitutes terrorism or not it is the action with its actual or likely consequences which is relevant and not the intention behind the action which remains hidden in the mind of the perpetrator of the action. However, in the same written submissions the learned Attorney-General has also observed that "terrorism as a concept is not 'ordinary' in even the way that intention, guilt and dishonesty are. Nor is it a term belonging to some science; its natural home is in polemical, ideological, and propagandist contexts or, less alarmingly, highly political ones." The learned Additional Prosecutor-General, Punjab has added that the provisions of subsection (3) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 are quite problematic as they do not piece well with the remaining provisions of the said section as far as the matter of defining terrorism is concerned. According to him if the provisions of subsection (3) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, as they are worded, are to be given effect then almost every offence in commission of which firearms, explosive or any other weapon is used or threatened to be used would constitute terrorism and such an approach would obliterate any distinction between the peculiar offence of terrorism and most of the run of the mill offences committed in the society in routine.

10. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at some length and have attended to the relevant statutory provisions and all the precedent cases available on the subject so far. As the opinion of this Court has remained divided on the issue as to what constitutes terrorism in the context of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, therefore, it is imperative to examine and scrutinize all the precedent cases available on either side of the divide with care. In the following cases this Court has held that the actions specified in subsection (2) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 are to constitute the offence of terrorism only if such actions are accompanied by the 'design' or 'purpose' specified in clauses (b) or (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 of the said Act and it has consistently been maintained in these cases that an act of terrorism is not to be confused with the usual and run of the mill crimes committed in the background of any personal enmity or private vendetta and also that gravity of an offence, shocking nature of the violence committed or mere fear and insecurity generated or likely to be generated by commission of a brutal, gruesome or heinous offence are not to be treated as the determining factors for deciding whether an action is to be labeled and accepted as terrorism or not.

> "However, it may be observed that the offences mentioned in the Schedule should have nexus with the object of the Act and the offences covered by sections 6, 7 and 8 thereof. It may be stated that section 6 defines terrorist acts, section 7 provides punishment for such acts, and section 8 prohibits acts intended or likely to stir up sectarian hatred mentioned in clauses (a) to (d) thereof. If an offence included in the Schedule has no nexus with the above sections, in that event notification including such an offence to that extent will be ultra vires. --- It will suffice to observe that if a Government servant or any other employee of the Government functionaries is murdered because he belongs to the above service and that there was no enmity or plausible reason for commission of the above offence, such a killing is an act of terrorism within the ambit of the Act and can lawfully be included in the Schedule, but if the murder is committed solely on account of personal enmity, such murder will have no nexus with the above provisions of the Act and will not be triable under the Act."

Jamat-i-Islami Pakistan through Syed Munawar Hassan, Secretary-General v. Federation of Pakistan through Secretary, Law, Justice and Parliamentary Affairs

" ---- to make an act punishable under the Act, it must be shown that the act bears nexus to sections 6, 7 and 8 of the Act."

Ch. Bashir Ahmad v. Naveed Iqbal and 7 others

"A person would commit a terrorist act if in order to, or if the effect of his actions will be "to strike terror or create a sense of fear and insecurity in the people, or any section of the people---". In the instant case as the facts of the case reveal, the alleged sprinkling of the spirit on the person of the victim was within the boundary walls of the appellant's house. It was not in public and, therefore, the element of striking terror or creating sense of fear and insecurity in the people, or any section of the people is not made discernible in the FIR and for that matter on the record of the case as a whole. Similarly the perusal of the Schedule to the Act also indicates that the element of striking terror or creation of sense of fear and insecurity in the people or any section of the people by doing an act or thing by using bombs, dynamite or other explosive or inflammable substances etc. is a sine qua non for the attraction of the provisions of section 6 of and the Schedule to the Act---. In the instant case no doubt the offence committed was certainly most heinous in nature but it does not mean that it does qualify to be a terrorist act within the contemplation of section 6 or the Schedule to the Act."

Muhammad Mushtaq v. Muhammad Ashiq and others

"It would thus appear that ordinary crimes are not to be dealt with under the Act. A physical harm to the victim is not the sole criterion to determine the question of terrorism."

Fazal Dad v. Col. (Rtd.) Ghulam Muhammad Malik and others

"In case the aforesaid provisions and contents of F.I.R. are put in a juxta position then section 6 of the said ordinance is not attracted. It is a settled law that preamble is always key to interpret the statute. The very object to promulgate the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 was to control the acts of terrorism, sectarian violence and other heinous offences as defined in section 6 of the Act and their speedy trial to bring the offence within the ambit of the act, it is essential to examine that the said offence should have nexus with the object of the act and offences covered by its relevant provisions such as section 6. It is a settled law that provisions of law must be read as a whole in order to determine its true nature, import and scope ---. It is abundantly clear that in case the provisions of act be read as a whole with the offence which creates a sense of fear or insecurity in society, causes of death or endangers a person's life commits an act of vehicle snatching or lifting, damage to or disturbance of, State or private property failing to create panic charging bhatta or criminal trespasser (Illegal qabza). As mentioned above, the ingredients of aforementioned offences have no nexus while reading the aforesaid provisions along with the contents of the impugned FIR It is pertinent to mention here that nothing was on record to show that occurrence created terror, panic or sense of insecurity among people by securing possession of the land in question by the respondent. The word illegal Qabza must be read with the previous words used by the legislature in clause (d) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 on well-known principle that statutory provisions ought not to be construed in isolation and courts always to lean towards reasonable interpretation of statute. The learned High Court was justified to examine the scope of terrorism at the time of deciding the constitutional petition with regard to the transfer of case from special court to ordinarily court on the well known maxim that legislative intent as a guide to interpretation of statute should be gathered primarily from words used in statute. The case in hand did not qualify to be a terrorist act within the contemplation of section 6 or schedule of Anti-Terrorism Act and the learned High Court was justified to transfer the case to the ordinary court. It is settled law that promulgation of special law by itself is not sufficient to supersede provisions of law contained in Cr.P.C. In case, the offence has no nexus with the parameters of special law, then general law will apply. The judgment of the learned High Court is in consonance with the law laid down by this court in various pronouncements. See Mehram Ali's case PLD 1998 SC 1445 and Jamat-e-Islami Pakistan's case PLD 2000 SC 111."

Mohabbat Ali and another v State and another

"In order to determine as to whether an offence would fall within the ambit of section 6 of the Act, it would be essential to have a glance over the allegations made in the FIR, record of the case and surrounding circumstances. It is also necessary to examine that the ingredients of alleged offence has any nexus with the object of the case as contemplated under sections 6, 7 and 8 thereof. Whether a particular act is an act of terrorism or not, the motivation, object, design or purpose behind the said Act is to be seen. It is also to be seen as to whether the said Act has created a sense of fear and insecurity in the public or any section of the public or community or in any sect. Examining the case in hand on the above touchstone, it is manifest on the face of it that the alleged offence took place because of previous enmity and private vendetta. The incident admittedly took place inside the fields of sugarcane and Banana cultivated in jungle about 14/15 miles away from the main road. Motive as defined in the FIR is also to be given a specific attention which indicates that there was a personal enmity between the parties over the land and murder case of Haries of complainant."

"From the entire resume, it is manifest on record that intention of the petitioner was not at all to create sense of insecurity or in destabilize the public-at-large or to advance any sectarian cause. Thus, we are of the view that the design or purpose of the offence as contemplated by the provisions of section 6 of the Act is not attracted. Reference can be made to the case of this Court reported as Bashir Ahmad v. Naveed Iqbal PLD 2001 SC 521 whereby sprinkling of spirit on the person of victim was made within the boundary walls of the house of appellant which was not a public place and accordingly the element of a striking terror or creating sense of fear and insecurity in the people or any section of the people was found missing, therefore, the order of transferring the case to the Court of learned Sessions Judge passed by the High Court was upheld."

Tariq Mahmood v. State

"In our opinion, the case of the respondent accused, who have clean past, rests on a lower pedestal than that on terrorists and sectarian criminals who killed innocent persons either to weaken the State or to cause damage to the parties of the rival sect. The terrorist or the sectarian killers do not have any personal grudge or motive against the innocent victims. The instant case is clearly distinguishable as admittedly a feud existed between the parties over a piece of land prior to the occurrence."

Muhammad Yaqoob and others v. The State and others

"Though learned counsel for the appellants has not specifically challenged convictions of the appellants under section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and occurrence in the case allegedly took place in Samoote Bazaar, opposite U.B.L. Branch, wherein three persons were done to death and another sustained grievous injuries yet, in the absence of any stipulation in the FIR to the effect that the incident had struck terror or panic in the public and in the absence of any evidence to the effect that the incident had created sense of fear or insecurity in the public or any section of public or community or any sect, it could not have been contended that section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 was attracted in the instant case. It would be pertinent to mention here that in order to bring a particular act within the ambit of section 7, it is to be seen as to whether the said act had created sense of fear or insecurity in public or in any section of public or community or any sect, or the occurrence was simply the result of previous enmity or personal vendetta.

Since in the instant case it has been established that motive behind the incident was previously strained relations between the parties and an iota of evidence has not been brought on record to show that object was not to kill the deceased but also to strike terror or create sense of fear or insecurity in the general public or community or any sect thereof, therefore, in our view section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act was not attracted. In the case of Tariq Mahmood v. The State 2008 SCMR 1631, the occurrence had allegedly taken place in a Bazaar which was heavily populated and it was claimed that due to firing there was stampede in the traversers yet, since it was found that there was no evidence that the act of respondents/accused struck terror amongst the masses and the place of occurrence was not a busy populated area rather it took place on a service road, therefore, the provisions of Anti- Terrorism Act were not attracted. In the case of Muhammad Idrees and others v. The State 2008 SCMR 1544, occurrence took place on the bank of canal. It was not established on record that the act done by the accused persons had created sense of fear or insecurity in public, therefore, it was held that section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act was not attracted. In the case of Mohabbat Ali v. The State 2007 SCMR 142, the alleged incident took place because of previous enmity and private vendetta inside the fields of sugarcane and banana, about 14/15 miles away from main road, it was held that intention of the accused was not at all to create sense of fear or insecurity or to destabilize public at large or to advance any sectarian cause and design or purpose of offence as contemplated by provisions of section 6 of Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 was not attracted. In the case of Fazal Dad v. Col. (Retd.) Ghulam Muhammad Malik PLD 2007 SC 571, since nothing was brought on record to show that the occurrence created terror, panic or sense of insecurity among people by securing possession of land in question by the accused persons, therefore, the case did not qualify to be a terrorist act within the contemplation of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act or its schedule. Convictions and sentences recorded against the appellants under section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, are, therefore, set aside."

Bashir Ahmed v. M. Siddique

"In order to determine as to whether an offence would fall within the ambit of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, it would be essential to have a glance over the allegations made in the FIR record of the case and surrounding circumstances. It is also necessary to examine that the ingredients of alleged offence have any nexus with the object of the case as contemplated under sections 6, 7 and 8 thereof. Whether a particular act is an act of terrorism or not, the motivation, object, design or purpose behind the said act is to be seen. It is also to be seen as to whether the said act has created a sense of fear and insecurity in the public or any section of the public or community or in any sect. Examining the case in hand on the above touchstone, it is manifest on the face of it that the alleged offence took place because of previous enmity and private vendetta. A perusal of the record would reveal, that occurrence has taken place in front of the `haveli' of the respondents, situated in village 'Fatoowala'. The motive for the occurrence is enmity inter-se the parties on account of some previous murders. In this view of the matter, we are of the opinion that since motive was enmity inter-se the parties, the application of section 7 of the Act, which primarily requires the spread of sense of insecurity and fear in the common mind is lacking in the present case. The occurrence neither reflects any act of terrorism nor it was a sectarian matter instead the murders in question were committed owing to previous enmity between the two groups. The present case, as observed above, does not fulfil the requirements laid down in the judgment titled as "Basharat Ali v. Special Judge Anti-Terrorism Court-II, Gujranwala (PLD 2004 Lah.199), wherein it was held that fear or insecurity must not be a by-product, fall out or unintended consequence of a private crime. As such, creation of fear and insecurity in the society is not itself terrorism unless the same is coupled with the motive. The gist of the citation is that act of terrorism desires to be determined from the yardstick and scale of motive and object, instead of its result or after effect. From the facts of case, the definition of terrorism is not attracted as the said offence has neither created any threat to coerce or intimidate or overawe the Government or the public or a section of the public or community or sect or create a sense of fear or insecurity in society. Reference in this regard can be made on Ch. Bashir Ahmad v. Naveed Iqbal and 7 others (PLD 2001 SC 521), Muhammad Mushtaq v. Muhammad Ashiq and others (PLD 2002 SC 841) and Basharat Ali v. Special Judge, Anti-Terrorism Court-II, Gujranwala (PLD 2004 Lah. 199) ."

Ahmad Jan v. Nasrullah and others

"In Bashir Ahmed v. State (PLD 2009 SC 11) by considering the law laid down in Basharat Ali v. Special Judge, Anti-Terrorism Court-II (PLD 2004 Lahore 199), a judgment authored by one of us (Asif Saeed Khan Khosa, J), Bashir Ahmed v. Naveed Iqbal and others (PLD 2001 SC 521) and Muhammad Mushtaq v. Muhammad Ashiq and others (PLD 2002 SC 841), the case in question was held not to be triable by a Special Court established under the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 because "The motive for the occurrence is enmity inter se the parties on account of some previous murders. In this view of the matter, we are of the opinion that since motive was enmity inter se the parties, the application of section 7 of the Act, which primarily requires the spread of sense of insecurity and fear in the common mind is lacking in the present case. The occurrence neither reflects any act of terrorism nor it was a sectarian matter instead the murders in question were committed owing to previous enmity between the two groups.""

Malik Muhammad Mumtaz Qadri v. The State and others

"The next question to be considered is as to whether by committing the murder of Mr. Salman Taseer, the then Governor of the Province of the Punjab, the appellant had also committed the offence of 'terrorism' as defined by section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 or not which offence is punishable under section 7(a) of the said Act. A plain reading of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 shows that while defining 'terrorism' the said section bifurcates the same into two parts, the mens rea for the offence falling in section 6(1)(b) or (c) and the actus reus of the offence falling in section 6(2) of the Act and in order to attract the definition of terrorism in a given case the requisite mens rea and actus reus must coincide and coexist. The provisions of section 6(5), (6) and (7) of the Act also indicate that there may be some other actions of a person which may also be declared or recognized as acts of terrorism by some other provisions of the same Act. Restricting ourselves to the provisions of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 for the present purposes we note that in a case where the action involves the doing of anything that causes death [section 6(2)(a)] and such causing of death is designed to coerce and intimidate or overawe the Government or the public or a section of the public or community or sect or create a sense of fear or insecurity in society [section 6(1)(b)] or such causing of death is for the purpose of advancing a religious, sectarian or ethnic cause [section 6(1)(c)] there the causing of death of the victim is to be accepted and treated as terrorism triable exclusively by an Anti-Terrorism Court. As far as the case in hand is concerned the action of Malik Muhammad Mumtaz Qadri appellant involved firing at Mr. Salman Taseer and thereby causing his death and, thus, his actus reus fell within the ambit of section 6(2)(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. As regards the appellant's mens rea he had himself stated in his statement recorded by the trial court under section 342, Cr.P.C. that the murder of Mr. Salman Taseer committed by him was "a lesson for all the apostates, as finally they have to meet the same fate". That statement of the appellant clearly established that he not only wanted to punish Mr. Salman Taseer privately for the perceived or imagined blasphemy committed by him but the appellant also wanted to send a message or teach a lesson to all others in the society at large who dared to follow Mr. Salman Taseer's suit. In this view of the matter the causing of death of Mr. Salman Taseer by the appellant was surely designed to intimidate or overawe the public or a section of the public or to create a sense of fear or insecurity in the society so as to attract the requisite mens rea contemplated by section 6(1)(b) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. Apart from that it cannot be seriously contested that the appellant had committed the murder of Mr. Salman Taseer for the purpose of advancing a religious cause and, thus, even the mens rea contemplated by section 6(1)(c) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 stood fully attracted to the case of the appellant. In these circumstances we have entertained no manner of doubt that the action of the appellant and the intention, design or purpose behind such action fully attracted the definition of terrorism contained in section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and, therefore, he was correctly and justifiably punished by the trial court under section 7(a) of the said Act for committing the offence of terrorism. In paragraph No. 44 of the impugned judgment the Islamabad High Court, Islamabad had set aside the appellant's conviction and sentence recorded by the trial court under section 7(a) of the Anti- Terrorism Act, 1997 on the sole ground that sufficient evidence had not been brought on the record by the prosecution to establish that the murder committed by the appellant had in fact created any sense of fear or insecurity in the society. We have found such an approach adopted by the Islamabad High Court, Islamabad vis-a-vis the offence of terrorism to be utterly misconceived. The provisions of section 6(1)(b) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 quite clearly contemplate creation of a sense of fear or insecurity in the society as a design behind the action and it is immaterial whether that design was actually fulfilled or not and any sense of fear or insecurity was in fact created in the society as a result of the action or not. It is the specified action accompanied by the requisite intention, design or purpose which constitutes the offence of terrorism under section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 and the actual fallout of the action has nothing to do with determination of the nature of offence. In this view of the matter we find ourselves in agreement with the learned Advocate-General, Islamabad that Malik Muhammad Mumtaz Qadri appellant's acquittal by the Islamabad High Court, Islamabad from the charge under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 is liable to be set aside and consequently his conviction for the said offence recorded by the trial court needs to be restored."

Khuda-e-Noor v. The State

"The crucial question involved in this appeal is as to whether the learned Sessions Judge, Mastung was justified in holding that the case in hand was one of honour killing and, thus, it was a case of "terrorism" attracting the exclusive jurisdiction of an Anti-Terrorism Court or not. It also needs to be examined as to whether the High Court of Balochistan, Quetta was justified in declaring in the case of Gul Muhammad (supra) that by virtue of the provisions of section 6(2)(g) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 all cases of honour killing are to be tried by an Anti-Terrorism Court. We have minutely gone through the said judgment passed by the High Court of Balochistan, Quetta and have found that for holding that all cases of honour killing attracted the definition of "terrorism" the High Court had only relied upon the provisions of section 6(2)(g) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 without appreciating that by virtue of the provisions of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 any action falling within any of the categories of cases mentioned in subsection (2) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 could not be accepted or termed as "terrorism" unless the said action was accompanied by a "design" or "purpose" specified in section 6(1)(b) or (c) of the said Act. If the interpretation of section 6(2)(g) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 advanced by the High Court of Balochistan, Quetta in the said judgment were to be accepted as correct then all cases of a person taking the law in his own hands are to be declared or accepted as cases of terrorism but that surely was not the intention of the legislature. The provisions of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 which define "terrorism" clearly show that the said section is divided into two main parts, i.e. the first part contained in section 6(1) (b) and (c) of the said Act dealing with the mens rea mentioning the "design" or the "purpose" behind an action and the second part falling in section 6(2) of the said Act specifying the actions which, if coupled with the mens rea mentioned above, would constitute the offence of "terrorism". This scheme of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 had unfortunately not been considered by the High Court of Balochistan, Quetta while rendering the judgment mentioned above and, thus, we have every reason to declare that the said judgment passed by the High Court of Balochistan, Quetta had not laid down the law correctly and had in fact misconceived the legal position contemplated by section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997."

"The case in hand was a case of a private motive set up in the FIR and during the trial the motive set up in the FIR was changed by the prosecution and an element of honour killing was introduced but even that did not change the character of the offence which was nothing but a private offence committed in the privacy of a home with no design or purpose contemplated by section 6(1)(b) or (c) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. We have thus, entertained no manner of doubt that the allegations levelled against the appellant and his co-accused in the present criminal case did not attract the jurisdiction of an Anti-Terrorism Court, the learned Sessions Judge, Mastung was not justified in transferring the case to an Anti-Terrorism Court and the High Court was also not legally correct in dismissing the appellant's revision petition."

Sagheer Ahmed v. The State and others

"High Court in the impugned judgment has observed as follows:

"10. The averments of FIR are silent regarding the financial status and source of income of the complainant against which accused have been demanding Bhatta. Complainant has also not disclosed the specific dates, times and places of demanding Bhatta by accused persons nor any such evidence was produced before the Investigating Officer to prima facie establish such allegations. In absence of any tangible material, mere allegations of demanding Bhatta do not attract section 6(2)(k) of Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, in the present case nor said section was mentioned in the FIR and Challan. Perusal of Challan reflects that Investigating Officer had made a request to the Anti-Terrorism Court for return of FIR and other documents so that Challan may be submitted before the ordinary Court of law as no case under the provisions of Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 was made out, but his request was declined by the Anti-Terrorism Court vide order dated 09.06.2014, and cognizance was taken by the Court.

11. Cumulative effect of the averments of FIR, surrounding circumstances and other material available on record have replicated that offence having been committed on account of previous old enmity with a definite motive. The alleged offence occurred at Faiz Wah bridge, which is not situated in any populated area, consequently, the allegations of aerial firing have not appeared to us to be a case of terrorism as the motive for the alleged offence was nothing but personal enmity and private vendetta. The intention of the accused party did not depict or manifest any act of terrorism as contemplated by the provisions of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. Consequently, we are of the considered view that complainant has failed to produce any material before the Investigating Officer that at the time of occurrence sense of fear, panic, terror and insecurity spread in the area, nevertheless it was a simple case of murder due to previous enmity, thus, alleged offence does not fall within purview of any of the provisions of Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997."

4. We note that observation made by the High Court is based upon the record of the case and no misreading in this respect was pointed out before us."

Ch. Shaukat Ali v. Haji Jan Muhammad and others

"In view of the discussion in Para 7 above and the report of police under section 173, Code of Criminal Procedure, prima facie it appears that altercation between the parties occurred all of a sudden when the procession of the complainant side on winning the election was passing in front of house of Haji Jan Muhammad accused and there was no prior 'object/ design.'

10. During the course of arguments, we have observed that basic premise of the arguments of learned counsel for the petitioner pivots around the judgment of a Five Member Bench of this Court in Kashif Ali v. The Judge, Anti-Terrorism Court No.II, Lahore and others (PLD 2016 SC 951), wherein the issue of jurisdiction has been dealt with. It is appropriate to reproduce the relevant portion of Para 12 of the said judgment for ready reference:

"12. In order to determine whether an offence falls within the ambit of Section 6 of the Act, it would be essential to have a glance over the allegations levelled in the FIR, the material collected by the investigating agency and the surrounding circumstances, depicting the commission of offence. Whether a particular act is an act of terrorism or not, the motivation, object, design or purpose behind the said Act has to be seen "

11. We have gone through the allegations levelled in the FIR, the material collected by the investigating agency during course of investigation and other surrounding circumstances as discussed above and are of the considered view that present case is not triable by a Court established under the provisions of Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997."

Waris Ali and 5 others v. The State

"Under the jurisprudence, "mens rea" is an essential ingredient of every crime, needs to be attended first by the Courts of law however, in cases of terrorism or terrorist activities the "mens rea" becomes twofold, i.e. the first object is to commit a crime, while the primary object of "mens rea" in the second fold speaks of terrorism related ideology, purpose and object, the most nefarious and detestable designs to commit crimes, creating sense of fear, insecurity and instability in the society and community with the ultimate object to destabilize the State as a whole. The true and perceivable object of this second "mens rea" is to create chaos, large scale disturbances, widespread sense of insecurity in the society/public and to intimidate and destabilize the State as a whole by means of terrorist activities.

10. In cases of this nature, "mens rea" is essentially with an object to accomplish the act of terrorism and carrying out terrorist activities to overawe the State, the State Institutions, the public at large, destruction of public and private properties, make assault on the law enforcing agencies and even at the public at large. The ultimate object and purpose of such acts is to terrorize the society or to put it under constant fear while in ordinary crimes committed due to personal vengeance/blood feud or enmity, the element to create fear or sense of insecurity in the society, public by means of terrorism is always missing.

11. True, that the offences contained in the Schedule to the Anti-Terrorism Act would fall within the definition of terrorism and terrorist activities but the crimes committed due to private revenge or to say traditional crimes, cannot be dragged into the fold of terrorism and terrorists activities.
12. The mere fact that the crimes for personal motive are committed in a gruesome or detestable manner, by itself would not be sufficient to bring the acts within the meaning of terrorism or terrorist activities. The Courts of law should not lose sight of the fact that terrorism and terrorist activities are committed and are carried out by a person, group of persons and well equipped organizations, whose primary aim and object is to destabilize the society and the State as a whole through such activities. The object and "mens rea" behind such activities is clearly spelled out from the nature of the crime committed, which must be attended to by the Courts with a deep judicial thought, as in the latter category the sole object/purpose in committing different crimes is to cause alarm, dread, fright inducing sense of insecurity in the mind of the people.
13. The acts of terrorism and terrorist activities are committed and carried out in a wolfish manner by terrorists and terrorist groups, to whom training and skills are imparted, their brainwash is made in a planned manner so that, while committing gruesome and sickening crimes, they have to act in cruel manner and in pursuance of creating terror, the prime and ultimate object to be accomplished. The suicidal attacks and blasts in busy markets/business places, hospitals, mosques, other religious and educational institutions where peoples are slaughtered/butchered and their limbs are blown apart through bomb blast, are some of the instances of such activities, conveying dreadful message to the community/ society at large of terror, for no motive other than the one to create fear and sense of insecurity.
14. Albeit, murder, attempted murder, causing bodily harm or hurt and damage to property and some other offences have been included in the Third Schedule, appended to the Anti-Terrorism Act however, on plain reading, it becomes apparent that these offences are triable by the Special Courts, constituted under the Special Act but, there is no reference either expressed or implied in the Schedule that the Special Court shall award punishment under section 7 read with section 6 of the Act to accused persons charged for such crimes. There is another category of offences, which are squarely mentioned in the substantive provision of section 7 read with section 6 of the Special Act, which are specifically described to be acts of terrorism and shall fall within that definition however, the qualifying words, attached thereto, create a subtle distinction between the ordinary crimes, committed out of personal revenge, enmity or private motive and those committed for the object of creating terror. This aspect needs to be interpreted and construed in a meaningful and objective manner so that the two categories of crimes i.e. ordinary crimes and those related to terrorism, are neither mixed up nor intermingled because construction placed on it at random without judicial thoughts, the cardinal principle relating to construction of Statute, would be defeated and ordinary crimes having no nexus with terrorism or terrorist activities would be incorrectly or wrongly placed in the grey category of crimes, which is not the object and intent of the Legislature. If ordinary crimes committed due to personal revenge or motive are given the colour of terrorism or terrorist activities, hundreds and hundreds of Criminal Courts (Sessions Courts) and other Courts would be rendered inoperative and their vested jurisdiction would be taken away for no justifiable reason. The Prosecution and disgruntled complainants have been noticed making crude attempts to paint an ordinary crime as an act of terrorism so that the rival/opposite party is put to maximum mental agony. Here, it becomes the duty of the Court of law to draw a fine distinction between two kinds of crimes, which are definitely pole apart."

"19. Keeping in view the above narrative, it is thus essential to look at the legislation and the new enactments, as to how these were introduced and what was the purpose and object of the same. The conventional and ordinary crimes of murder, hurt, etc. were being committed due to personal motives however, in committing these crimes unlike in the past, where the same were being committed through clubs, sharp weapons, shotguns or non-automatic rifles, the old crime weapons were substituted by sophisticated weapons, fully or semi automatic which fell in the hands of the majority of the peoples. Now invariably these crimes are committed with modern weapons, which has no doubt a devastating effect. However, this category of crimes is committed due to longstanding blood feud and is the result of personal motive. There is no intention (mens rea) in committing these crimes to create fear, terrorize the society/ community at large or to put it under constant fear and terror. In terrorism cases, evil elements are always persuasive factor and integral parts of it, therefore, due care and caution shall have to be observed by the Courts so that ordinary crimes might not be pushed to the grey area of terrorism or terrorist activities to be dealt with under the law, meant for a particular class of peoples, group of persons/organizations, which are to be treated altogether differently under the special law. The careful reading of all the relevant provisions of Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 would show that the sole and primary object of the same is to curb and eliminate terrorism and terrorist activities and also the groups involved in the same, besides to eliminate the sectarian and factional violence committed with the same object therefore, ordinary crimes due to personal motive or revenge shall not be taken at par with acts of terrorism or terrorist activities, the sole object of which is nothing but to terrorize the society/community and the State as a whole. There is a sky high difference between the crimes of the old category and the new one, for which special law has been enacted."

"30. In the present case, besides many infirmities highlighted in the earlier paras of the judgment, it appears that the noose was thrown wider, the act/acts, the crimes committed and executed were the consequence of personal motive and in the course of the transaction no element of terrorism defined by Legislature was involved, although it was gruesome in nature, however, the punishment provided under section 302(a) and (b), P.P.C. is also death sentence besides compensation too was awardable under section 544-A, Cr.P.C. Therefore, in the matter of punishment there is no marked distinction, if the penal provision of P.P.C. is applied. The parties are having a blood feud since long and the object to be achieved was to take revenge for the previous murder and attempted murder, therefore, in our considered view, both the Courts below have not taken due care by applying correct provision of law to the established facts of the case. The construction on the provisions of Anti-Terrorism Act and the principle laid down in the cases cited at the bar i.e. Shahbaz Khan alias Tippu v. Special Judge Anti-Terrorism Court (PLD 2016 SC 1) and Kashif Ali v. The Judge Anti-Terrorism Court, No.II, Lahore (PLD 2016 SC 951) proceeds on different premises, both legal and factual and are not attracted to the facts and circumstances of the present case."

Sajid Rasheed Qureshi v. Munawar Ahmad

Amjad Ali and others v. The State

(PLD 2017 SC 661)

"The last aspect of this case highlighted in the leave granting order is as to whether the courts below were justified in convicting and sentencing the appellants for an offence under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 or not. We note in that context that a mere firing at one's personal enemy in the backdrop of a private vendetta or design does not ipso facto bring the case within the purview of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 so as to brand the action as terrorism. There was no 'design' or 'object' contemplated by section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 involved in the case in hand. We further note that by virtue of item No. 4(ii) of the Third Schedule to the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 a case becomes triable by an Anti-Terrorism Court if use of firearms or explosives, etc. in a mosque, imambargah, church, temple or any other place of worship is involved in the case. That entry in the Third Schedule only makes such a case triable by an Anti-Terrorism Court but such a case does not ipso facto become a case of terrorism for the purposes of recording convictions and sentences under section 6 read with section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. The case in hand had, thus, rightly been tried by an Anti-Terrorism Court but the said Court could not have convicted and sentenced the appellants for an offence under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 as it had separately convicted and sentenced the appellants for the offences of murder, etc. committed as ordinary crimes."

Abdul Nabi v. The State

"After hearing the learned counsel for the parties and going through the record we have observed that the case in hand was not a case of terrorism but was a case of a private offence committed in secrecy. The "design" or "purpose" provided for by section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 were non-existent in the present case and apparently there was no intention on the part of the appellant to create a sense of fear or insecurity in the public at large. Apart from that in view of the conclusions which are to follow in the later part of this judgment the case in hand was not a case of a gang-rape and, thus, even from that angle the Schedule to the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 did not stand attracted to the present case. In this view of the matter we are of the considered opinion that the courts below were not justified in convicting and sentencing the appellant for the offence under section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997."

Province of Punjab through Secretary Punjab Public Prosecution Department and another v. The State

"The preamble of the Act, 1997 clearly indicates that the Act, 1997 was promulgated for the prevention of terrorism, sectarian violence and for speedy trial of heinous offences. So, in the cases of the terrorism, the mens-rea should be with an object to accomplish the act of terrorism and carrying out terrorist activities to overawe the state, the state institutions, the public at large, destruction of public and private properties, make assault on the law enforcing agency and even at the public at large in sectarian matters. The ultimate object and purpose of such act is to terrorize the society but in ordinary crimes committed due to personal vendetta or enmity, such elements are always missing so the crime committed only due to personal revenge cannot be dragged into the fold of terrorism and terrorist activities. The same was the view in the case of Mehram Ali v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1998 SC 1445) passed by a full bench (five members bench) of this Court.

After the amendment the term "design" was used in Section 6 of the Act, which has widened the scope of the Act. The word "design" was substituted to see that if the act is designed to create sense of fear or insecurity in the society then the Anti-Terrorism Court will have the jurisdiction to try the same. The word "design" can be considered the scheme and object in the mind of accused for its subsequent execution. So the Courts while deciding the question of attraction of the provisions of the Act, has to see the manners in which the incident had taken place including the time and place and should also take note of the fact of the act as to create terror or insecurity in the general public where the action of the accused results in striking terror or creating fear, panic and sense of insecurity among the people in a particular vicinity, it amounts to terror within the ambit of Section 6 of the Act. The Courts are required to see whether the terrorist act was such that it would have the tendency to create the sense of fear or insecurity in the mind of general public as well as psychological impact created in the mind of the society.

The Courts can form opinion after going through the facts, circumstances and material so collected by the police in the case under discussion because the facts are varies from case to case."

Dilawar Mehmood alias Dulli and another v. The State

(2018 SCMR 593)

"During the course of arguments, learned counsel for the petitioner vehemently contended that the learned Courts below have also convicted the petitioner under the provisions of Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 without adverting to the fact that the said provisions are not attracted in the circumstances of the present case. Therefore, we have undertaken a detailed scrutiny of the evidence available on record in order to see whether the provisions of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 are attracted to the present case or not. The occurrence in this case took place at cattle Market, Kundian. It is alleged by the prosecution that petitioner along with his co-accused Muhammad Arshad (P.O.) armed with Kalashnikovs came at the spot and made straight firing at deceased Muhammad Afzal, as a result whereof the latter succumbed to the injuries. The motive behind the occurrence as stated in the FIR was previous enmity. Having a look at the time of occurrence, place of occurrence, the mode and manner of the occurrence and the alleged motive between the parties coupled with other circumstances, we are of the considered view that provisions of Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 are not attracted in this case and the learned Courts below have erred in law in convicting/sentencing the petitioner under the said provisions of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997."

11. As against the above mentioned cases there are many other cases decided by this Court wherein the fallout, consequences or effect of an action were held to determine as to whether the action amounted to terrorism or not. The following cases may be referred to in this category of cases:

Muhammad Ajmal v. The State

"On the face of it this seems to be an act of terrorism fully falling within the ambit of section 6 of the Act. Admittedly, the petitioner has behaved in an inhuman manner who while entering inside the Court-room made indiscriminate firing at the complainant party and the personnel of the Court staff and killed complainant's brother namely, Abdul Ghafoor and Muhammad Munir Naib Qasid and severely injured Reader of the Court namely, Umar Draz, thus created a sense of fear and insecurity among the people. All the witnesses examined at trial have fully supported the case of prosecution against the petitioner on the score that he fired indiscriminately in the Court-room on the abovementioned persons and that he was apprehended there and then along with his .30 bore pistol the crime weapon. Not only this but 5 crime empties with lead bullets were recovered from the Courtroom which were sealed and sent for expert opinion along with crime weapon and the same were opined to have been fired from the said weapon."

Mumtaz Ali Khan Rajban and another v. Federation of Pakistan and others

In this case a Professor was gunned down because he did not allow a candidate appearing in an examination to adopt unfair means and this Court held that the act of the accused "struck terror and also created sense of fear and insecurity amongst people in general and Teachers/ Professors in particular" and, therefore, the case was adjudged as one of a terrorist act. It was observed by this Court as follows:

"It is contended with reference to Petition No. 1675 that the act of the petitioner does not fall within the ambit of "Terrorism Act" as defined in above-quoted section. Precisely stated the contention is that Professor Abdul Latif, deceased only prevented the petitioner from copying in the examination hall and immediately thereafter nothing happened and that the threat, as contemplated in above section, shall precede before a public servant is prevented from discharging his lawful duties. Learned counsel argued that at the time of occurrence the deceased was not performing any official duty, as such, alleged threat in the examination hall did not bring the case within the purview of above-quoted section. The contention is devoid of any force. The threat was translated into reality, and the deceased was killed. It is not necessary that the force must have been used immediate after the threat. The act of the petitioner squarely fell within the scope of "terrorist act", for the reasons that as a consequences of said threat the deceased was killed. Besides in the examination hall, as well as, in the college every body knew about it. It struck terror and also created sense of fear and insecurity amongst people in general and Teachers/ Professors in particular."

In this case four persons were murdered by their adversaries when they were proceeding to the premises of the District Courts, Lahore to attend a hearing of a case and this Court held that to be a terrorist act because:

"The cumulative fall-out of the occurrence as to the time, place and manner of the act created a sense of the fear and insecurity in society. . The Lahore High Court fell in error by taking into consideration only the element of the alleged enmity existing between the parties. The High Court failed to advert to the terrorizing effect of the occurrence created on the minds of the people at large and of the concerned locality and passer-by who had no means to ascertain the background or motive for the crime or the enmity of the parties inter se."

Mst. Raheela Nasreen v. The State and another

In the said case a Batman of a Major serving in the Pakistan Army had allegedly murdered the Major in connivance with the Major's wife and this Court held that to be a case of terrorism by observing that:

"From a bare reading of section 6(b) of the Act, it is manifest that it is not necessary that the offence as alleged had in fact, caused terror as the requirement of the said provision of law could be adequately satisfied if the same was likely to strike terror or sense of fear and insecurity in the people.--- The learned Judges of the High Court came to the conclusion that a Batman who was a trusted person of an army officer if he kills as alleged his master in connivance with his (master's) wife, the same was likely to strike terror or feeling of insecurity among the army officers which reasonings in our view are based on relevant consideration having logical nexus with the relevant law and do not suffer from any legal infirmity."

Muhammad Amin v. The State

A person had been murdered in this case during a dacoity at a house and another person had been shot at and injured by the fleeing dacoits and this Court found the case to be of terrorism by observing that:

"The accused entered in the Baithak of the house of complainant armed with pistol with the purposes to commit robbery and in consequence to the resistance put by the father of complainant he was killed by the petitioner and further the petitioner with a view to create terror also fired at Nasir Ahmed in the street when he along with others, made an attempt to apprehend the petitioner and thus, the manner in which the petitioner while committing robbery took the life of deceased and caused fire-arm injuries to Nasir Ahmed in the broad daylight would squarely bring the case with the ambit of "terrorism" in term of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997."

Zia Ullah v. Special Judge, Anti-Terrorist Court, Faisalabad and 7 others

In this case an Advocate proceeding towards a court in his robes was done to death by his enemies and this Court decided that the case was one of terrorism. It was observed that:

"The alleged murder was committed in wanton, reckless and brutal manner and resultantly learned Advocate who was in his robe was done to death in Court vicinity. The gravity of the offence could not be diminished or minimized merely on the ground that alleged murder was not committed exactly within the Court premises as pressed time and again by the learned counsel for the respondents. It is to be noted that one Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police was seriously injured by means of fire-arms. We are not having the slightest doubt while holding that the alleged occurrence must have caused fear, panic and wave of sensation and thus the matter squarely falls within the ambit and jurisdiction of Special Court."

State through Advocate-General, N.-W.F.P., Peshawar v. Muhammad Shafiq

A person was murdered in this case by firing at and sprinkling petrol on him and resultantly his body was charred and some of his bones were also burnt. The said murder had been committed at a deserted place and was a consequence of an on-going personal enmity. Apparently this Court was not properly assisted in that case and the newly introduced definition of 'terrorism' had not been brought to the notice of the Court and in that background, while reproducing and expressly referring to the deleted and inapplicable definition of a 'terrorist act' contained in the unamended section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, this Court observed that:

"A reading of the above provision of the Act demonstrates that it is not necessary that the commission of murder must have created panic and terror among the people. The Courts have only to see whether the terrorist act was such which would have the tendency to create sense of fear or insecurity in the minds of the people or any section of the society. We have to see the psychological impact created upon the minds of the people. ---The moment such a charred dead body was brought for its funeral rites within the area of the deceased's residence, it would had certainly caused shock, fear and insecurity among the people of the vicinity. The body was completely charred and the onlookers must have felt fear and insecurity on seeing the barbaric and callous manner in which the human body was mutilated."

Naeem Akhtar and others v. The State and others

In this case an accused person's mother was medically treated by a doctor for an accidental fracture of her leg but the accused party felt dissatisfied with her treatment by the doctor and with that motive the said doctor was abducted by the accused party and was murdered. This Court found the case to be of a terrorist act as:

"The motive for the occurrence no doubt related to the personal grievance of the appellant who held the deceased responsible for imputation of leg of his mother but murder of the doctor after his abduction for such a motive would be an alarming situation for all doctors and would be a direct source of creating panic and terror in the medical profession."

"In general terms a fright, dread or an apprehension in the mind of a person induced by an horrible act of a person or causing fear and terror to the people is terrorism and if an act done by a person which is a source of terror in any section of people, which may cause damage to life or property of an individual, is a terrorist act and is an offence as defined in section 6 of A.T.A., 1997 and punishable under section 7 of the said Act. The act of abduction of the deceased and Dr. Javed Umer from an open place on gun point and subsequent murder of Dr.Muhammad Aslam for the reason that patient could not get desired result by the treatment given by him, would create unrest, panic and terror against the doctors who are discharging very sacred duty in the medical field."

Sh. Muhammad Amjad v. The State

A young Barrister was abducted for ransom and was killed in this case. This Court held the case to be one of terrorism by observing that:

"Even if by act of terrorism actual terror is not created, yet, above quoted subsection (b) [of section 6(1) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997] will be applicable if it was likely to do any harm contemplated in the said subsection. It is the cumulative effect of all the attending circumstances which provide tangible guidelines to determine the applicability or otherwise of said subsection. It is noted that about 300/400 people gathered at the house of the complainant and they would have destroyed the house of the appellant, if the police would not have intervened. Lawyer community was also annoyed over the murder of a member of their community and had passed a resolution in this regard.

Under the circumstances, the case was rightly assigned to Anti-Terrorism Court for trial."

Mst. Najam-un-Nisa v. Judge, Special Court constituted under Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997

In this case seven persons had been killed in a house at night in furtherance of a private enmity and this Court held the case to be one of terrorism. It was observed that:

"The venue of the commission of a crime, the time of occurrence, the motive which had led to the commission of a crime and the fact whether the said crime had or had not been witnessed by the public at large are not the only factors determining the issue whether a case did or did not fall within the parameters of the ATA of 1997. The crucial question is whether the said crime had or had not the effect of striking terror or creating a sense of fear and insecurity in the people or any section of the people. Needless to mention here that a crime of the kind in hand committed even in a remote corner does not remain unnoticed in the area in which is committed or even in the country on account of the print and electronic media. Seven persons being butchered in a house at night is not the kind of occurrence which would not create terror and horror in the people or any section of the people."

Abdul Ghafoor Bhatti v. Muhammad Saleem and others

In this case after a dacoity in a house the dacoits kidnapped two minors for ransom who were subsequently retrieved after payment of the demanded ransom. This Court found the case to be that of terrorism and observed that:

"The Courts have to see the impact of the act which the miscreants have perpetrated. In the case in hand two minors were abducted for ransom by the miscreants. Such-like act has certainly got the tendency to create sense of fear and insecurity in the minds of the people or any section of the society. The psychological effect created upon the minds of the people would be the guiding feature so as to see whether the act complained of has got nexus with sections 6 and 7 of the Act. It is not necessary that the said act must have created insecurity. As already stated the Courts have to see only the tendency whether nature of such act would create sense of insecurity. By no stretch of imagination, it can be said that the abduction of minors at gun points would not create terror among reasonable and prudent persons of the society."

Muhammad Farooq v. Ibrar and 5 others

"8. The very object to promulgate Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 was to control the acts of terrorism, sectarian violence and other heinous offences as defined in section 6 of the Act and their speedy trials. To bring an offence within the ambit of the Act, it is essential to examine that the said offence should have nexus with the object of the Act and the offences covered by its sections 6, 7 and 8. On bare perusal of sub-clauses (b), (d), (h), and (i) of subsection (1) of section 6 of the Act, it is abundantly clear that the offence which creates a sense of fear or insecurity in society, causes death or endangers a person's life, involves firing on religious congregations, mosques, imambargahs, churches, temples and all other places of worship, or random firing to spread panic, or involves any forcible takeover of mosques or other places of worships, falls within its ambit.

9. In the case in the hand, though the motive is shown to be a previous enmity, yet paramount consideration to be taken note of is the culminative fall out of the occurrence. The incident having taken place in Mosque a public place particularly during Jumma prayer, where a large number of people usually assemble to offer prayer is sufficient to attract the provisions of section 6 of the Act. In such cases, the time, place and, manner of the act is of eminence importance."

Azizullah and another v. The State and another

"The main object to promulgate the Act was to prevent and control the acts of terrorism, sectarian violence, hijacking, hostages taking and kidnapping or abduction for ransom. It was for this purpose that the offences falling within the ambit of the Act were to be disposed of expeditiously by way of speedy trial. In the instant case, it is alleged that wife and children of the complainant were called by the petitioners in their house on the pretext of Qura'n Khani and were made hostages and demand of ransom for their release was made. Not only this but also the brothers and grand-daughter of complainant who went to the house of petitioners to rescue the above mentioned detenus were also made hostages. It is revealed from the investigation that police in order to rescue the hostages when arrived at the house of petitioners, firing was made upon them and in retaliation police also fired at the abductors resulting in the death of one of the abductors namely Rahimullah. As discussed above, the material available with the prosecution prima facie shows that the abductees were kidnapped and ransom of Rs. 5 lacs was paid and further demand of ransom was also made and that the abductees were made hostages by the petitioners in their house. The above act created sense of fear or insecurity in the public as such the ingredients of sections 6 and 7 of the Act are attracted."

Mirza Shaukat Baig and others v. Shahid Jamil and others

"The language as employed in the section is unambiguous, plain and simple which hardly requires any scholarly interpretation and is capable enough to meet all kinds of terrorism. It is an exhaustive section and does not revolve around the word "designed to" as used in section 6(1)(b) of the Act or mens rea but the key word, in our opinion is "action" on the basis whereof it can be adjudged as to whether the alleged offence falls within the scope of section 6 of the Act or otherwise? The significance and the import of word "action" cannot be minimized and requires interpretation in a broader prospective which aspect of the matter has been ignored by the learned High Court and the scholarly interpretation as made in the judgment impugned has no nexus with the provisions as contained in section 6 of the Act, the ground realities, objects and reasons, the dictums laid down by this Court and is also not inconsonance with the well-entrenched principles of interpretation of criminal statutes..."

"Where a criminal act is designed to create a sense of fear or insecurity in the mind of the general public that can only be adjudged by keeping in view the impact of the alleged offence and manner of the commission of alleged offence. A farfetched interpretation of the words "designed to" as used in section 6 of the Act has been made by the learned High Court which we are afraid is not correct as the impact of the alleged offence and the manner in which it is committed has been ignored on the basis whereof the design of the alleged offence can be unveiled. There is absolutely no doubt in our mind that the Act was brought into force for the prevention and elimination of terrorism, sectarian violence and for expeditious dispensation of justice in the heinous offences as stipulated in Act itself. We have also surveyed the case law on the subject. It is, however, to be noted here at this juncture that so far as the concept of "terrorism" is concerned there is no substantial change between the Suppression of Terrorism Activities (Special Courts) Act (XV of 1975) and the Anti-Terrorism Act (XXVII of 1997) except a few minor changes having no bearing on the meaning and scope of terrorism."

"After having gone through the entire law as enunciated by this Court in different cases the judicial consensus seems to be that striking of terror is sine qua non for the application of the provisions as contained in section 6 of the Act which cannot be determined without examining the nature, gravity and heinousness of the alleged offence, contents of FIR, its cumulative effects on the society or a group of persons and the evidence which has come on record. In so far as the factum of intention is concerned that cannot be evaluated without examining the entire evidence which aspect of the matter squarely falls within the jurisdictional domain of the Court constituted under the Act and such questions cannot be decided by invocation of Constitutional jurisdiction without scrutinizing all the circumstances in a broader prospect by keeping in view the ground realities in mind. There could be no second opinion that where the action of an accused results in striking terror or creating fear, panic, sensation, helplessness and sense of insecurity among the people in a particular vicinity it amounts to terror and such an action squarely falls within the ambit of section 6 of the Act and shall be triable by a Special Court constituted for such purpose. What was the real intention of the offender could only be adjudged on the basis of evidence which cannot be determined by invocation of Constitutional jurisdiction and learned Special Judge who is usually a Senior Sessions Judge can take care of the matter which can be transferred by him if it does not fall within his jurisdictional domain. There is no denying the fact that it was never the intention of legislature that every offender irrespective of the nature of the offence and its overall impact on the society or a section of society must be tried by the Anti-Terrorist Court but the question as to whether such trial shall be conducted or not initially falls within the jurisdictional domain of Anti-Terrorist Court which cannot be interfered with in the absence of sufficient lawful justification which appears to be lacking in these cases. It is, however, obligatory for such Courts to watch carefully the nature of accusation and examine the entire record with diligent application of mind to determine as to whether the provisions as contained in the Act would prima facie be attracted or otherwise? Where such Courts are of the view after taking cognizance of the offence that the alleged offence does not fall prima facie under the provisions of the Act it must transfer the same to regular Court without loss of time."

Zahid Imran and others v. The State and others

"The language as employed in the section is unambiguous, plain and simple which hardly requires any scholarly interpretation and is capable enough to meet all kinds of terrorism. It is an exhaustive section and does not revolve around the word "designed to" as used in section 6(1)(b) of the Act or mens rea but the key word, in our opinion, is "action" on the basis whereof it can be adjudged as to whether the alleged offence falls within the scope of section 6 of the Act or otherwise? After having gone through the provisions as contained in section 6 of the Act we are of the firm opinion that "terrorism" means the use or threat of "action" where the "action" falls within the meaning of subsection (2) of section 6 of the Act and creates a serious risk to safety of the public or a section of the public, or is designed to frighten the general public and thereby prevent them from coming out and carrying on their lawful trade and daily business, and disrupts civil life shall amount to terrorism as enumerated in section 6 of the Act."

"The judicial consensus seems to be that striking of terror is sine qua non for the application of the provisions as contained in section 6 of the Act 1997 which cannot be determined without examining the nature, gravity and heinousness of the alleged offence, contents of the FIR, its cumulative effects on the society and a class of persons and the evidence which has come on record. There could be no second opinion that where the action of an accused person results in striking terror or creating fear, panic, sensation, helplessness and sense of insecurity among the people in a particular vicinity it amounts to terror and such an action squarely falls within the ambit of section 6 of the Act 1997."

Muhammad Idrees and others v. The State

"However, since it was not established on record that the acts done by the accused had created sense of fear or insecurity in public, nor any section of public or community or any sect was shown to have been affected, as the incident had taken place at night on a bank of canal which by no stretch of imagination could be termed as a public place, therefore, in our view, section 7 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, was not attracted in the instant case."

Nazeer Ahmed and others v. Nooruddin and another

(2012 SCMR 517)

"We have heard the learned Advocate Supreme Court and have perused the record. The learned High Court has examined the material at length and has rightly concluded that the act of the petitioners created sense of insecurity amongst the villagers and did destabilize the public at large and, therefore, attracts the provisions of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act. The learned Advocate Supreme Court in support of his contentions has relied upon the Judgments reported in the case of Mohabat Ali v. The State reported in 2007 SCMR 142 and the case of Bashir Ahmed v. Muhammad Siddiq, reported in PLD 2009 SC 11, which are distinguishable on facts. Neither the motive nor intent for commission of the offence is relevant for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on the Anti-Terrorism Court. It is the act which is designed to create sense of insecurity and or to destabilize the public at large, which attract the provisions of section 6 of the AT Act, which in the case in hand was designed to create sense of insecurity amongst the co-villagers."

Shahid Zafar and 3 others v. The State

"As to learned Advocate Supreme Court's contention that the incident could not be defined as an act of terrorism, we are quite clear in our minds that such a gruesome murder at the hands of a law enforcing agency would certainly create a sense of terror, insecurity and panic in the minds and hearts of those who were available at the scene and the entire public who had watched this DVD on air. In this regard a reference may be made to the definition of terrorism in Section 6(1)(b) of the Anti-Terrorism Act according to which this is the use or threat of action where the use or threat is designed to coerce and intimidate or overawe the Government or the public or a section of the public or community or sect or create a sense of fear or insecurity in society. In our opinion therefore such definition can be bifurcated into two i.e. where the use or threat is designed to coerce and intimidate or overawe the Government or the public or a section of the public or community or sect or where it creates a sense of fear or insecurity in society. Although the offence under consideration may not have been designed to coerce and intimidate or overawe the Government or a section of the public or community or sect but it certainly created a sense of fear or insecurity in the society. What could be a more grievous and heinous crime then to shoot an unarmed young boy who was begging for his life and thereafter let him bleed to death despite his pleading that he should be taken to the hospital. This certainly did create a sense of fear and insecurity in the public at large and hence we are of the opinion that the appellants were correctly charged, tried, convicted and sentenced under Section 302(b), P.P.C. and section 7(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997."

Kashif Ali v. The Judge, Anti-Terrorism, Court No.II, Lahore and others

"12. The term "design" now used in Section 6 of the Act has widened the scope of the Act and the terms "intention" and "motive" previously used have been substituted with the sole object that if the act is designed to create a sense of fear or insecurity in society, then the Anti-Terrorism Court will have the jurisdiction. From the above definition of the term "design" it is clear that it means a plan or scheme conceived in mind and intended for subsequent execution. In order to determine whether an offence falls within the ambit of Section 6 of the Act, it would be essential to have a glance over the allegations levelled in the FIR, the material collected by the investigating agency and the surrounding circumstances, depicting the commission of offence. Whether a particular act is an act of terrorism or not, the motivation, object, design or purpose behind the said Act has to be seen. The term "design", which has given a wider scope to the jurisdiction of the Anti-Terrorism Courts excludes the intent or motive of the accused. In other words, the motive and intent have lost their relevance in a case under Section 6(2) of the Act. What is essential to attract the mischief of this Section is the object for which the act is designed."

"17. The judgment relied upon by the learned High Court in the case of Basharat Ali v. Special Judge, Anti-Terrorism Court-II, Gujranwala (PLD 2004 Lahore 199) was overruled by this Court in the case of Mirza Shaukat Baig and others v. Shahid Jamil and others (PLD 2005 SC 530), which is the correct law. It was held by this Court in the case of Mirza Shoukat Baig (supra) that there could be no second opinion that where the action of an accused results in striking terror, or creating fear, panic sensation, helplessness and sense of insecurity among the people in a particular vicinity it amounts to terror and such an action squarely falls within the ambit of Section 6 of the Act and shall be tried by a Special Court constituted for such a purpose. Moreover, in State through Advocate General v. Muhammad Shafiq (PLD 2003 SC 224) it was held by this Court that the Courts are only required to see whether the terrorist act was such that it would have the tendency to create sense of fear or insecurity in the minds of the people or any section of the society, as well as the psychological impact created on the minds of the society. Whereas a strictly narrow interpretation of the term "design" in Section 6 of the Act is undoubtedly one where a premeditated plan to create terror is the object behind the said act, we cannot simply rule out from the ambit of Section 6 an individual's action which is implemented in a setting where a creation of feeling of fear in the society was an inevitable consequence of the said act."

Shahbaz Khan alias Tippu and others v. Special Judge, Anti-Terrorism, Court No.3, Lahore and others

"7. It is clear from a textual reading of Section 6 of ATA that an action categorized in subsection (2) thereof constitutes the offence of terrorism when according to Section 6(1)(b) ibid it is "designed" to, inter alia, intimidate or overawe the public or to create a sense of fear or insecurity in society. Therefore, the three ingredients of the offence of terrorism under Section 6(1)(a) and (b) of ATA are firstly, taking of action specified in Section 6(2) of ATA; secondly, that action is committed with design, intention and mens rea; and thirdly, it has the impact of causing intimidation, awe, fear and insecurity in the public or society."

8. There is no doubt that the brutal killing of five unarmed persons on a public street would have stricken panic, fear and insecurity among the residents in the locality. However, because of the motive of a family dispute given in the FIR, there is a challenge that the required third element of "design," intention or mens rea to commit terrorism is lacking in the present case. This element of the offence of terrorism has been treated as the pivotal criterion for ascertaining the jurisdiction of a learned ATC in the two judgments referred in the leave granting order: namely Bashir Ahmed v. Muhammad Siddique (PLD 2009 SC 11) and Ahmed Jan v. Nasrullah (2012 SCMR 59). The judgment in Ahmed Jan's case ibid endorses the law enunciated in Bashir Ahmed's case ibid to the effect that under Section 6(1)(b) of ATA a design that is intention or mens rea of an accused to cause the prescribed public or social reaction to an action specified in Section 6(2) of ATA is essential for the commission of the offence of terrorism."

"11. Primarily, the rule laid down in Bashir Ahmed's case ibid requiring the ascertainment of the design, intention and mens rea of an act for establishing the jurisdiction of a learned ATC rests on dicta given in Mehram Ali's case ibid. However, Bashir Ahmed's case ibid does not consider the ways and means by which the design, intention or mens rea, for an act of terrorism, requiring in essence the proof of an assailant's state of mind, should be ascertained by a Court of law. Whether the Court should mechanically consider the motive alleged by a complainant in the FIR to be decisive or should it also scrutinize other aspects of an occurrence to assess if the culprits had any design, intention or mens rea to commit a terrorist act?

12. In most cases, the nature of the offences, the manner of their commission and the surrounding circumstances demonstrate the motive given in the FIR. However, that is not always the case. When offences are committed by persons with impunity disregarding the consequence or impact of their overt action, the private motive or enmity disclosed in the FIR cannot be presumed to capture their true intent and purpose. In such cases, it is plain that action taken and offences committed are not instigated "solely" by the private motive alleged in the FIR. It is settled law that intention, motive or mens rea refer to the state of mind of an offender. It is equally well established that a state of mind cannot be proven by positive evidence or by direct proof. The intention of an accused for committing an offence is to be gathered from his overt acts and expression. It has been held in the case of State v. Ataullah Khan Mangal (PLD 1967 SC 78) that an accused person "must be deemed to have intended the natural and inevitable consequences of his action." Thus apart from the overt acts of the accused, the injuries caused by him or consequences ensuing from his actions and the surrounding circumstances of the case are all relevant to ascertain the design intention or mens rea that instigated the offences committed. These principles are enunciated in Zahid Imran v. The State (PLD 2006 SC 109) and Pehlwan v. Crown (1969 SCMR 641). Intention is presumed when the nature of the act committed and the circumstances in which it is committed are reasonably susceptible to one interpretation. In such event, the rule of evidence that the natural and inevitable consequences of a person's act are deemed to have been intended by him is applicable: Jane Alam v. The State (PLD 1965 SC 640). In Muhammad Mushtaq v. The State (PLD 2002 SC 841) the inevitable consequence of an act was considered as its design. Four persons were killed to settle a blood feud while they were on their way for a Court hearing at the nearby District Courts, Lahore. This Court observed that the learned ATC was the competent trial forum in the case:

"7. It would thus appear that ordinary crimes are not to be dealt with under the Act. A physical harm to the victim is not the sole criterion to determine the question of terrorism. What is to be seen is the psychological effect produced by the violent action or with the potential of producing such an effect on the society as a whole or a section thereof. There may be a death or injury caused in the process. Thus where a criminal act is designed to create a sense of fear or insecurity in the minds of the general public disturbing even tempo of life and tranquility of the society, the same may be treated to be a terrorist act. There may be just a few killings, random or targeted, resorted to with single-mindedness of purpose. But nevertheless the impact of the same may be to terrorize thousands of people by creating a panic or fear in their minds".

8. In the present case, we, prima facie, find that the occurrence took place during the peak hours of the day on the busy Court Road near the District Courts, Lahore, wherein four persons while on their way to attend the Court were allegedly murdered by the use of kalashnikovs. The cumulative fall-out of the occurrence as to the time, place and manner of the act created a sense of the fear and insecurity in society. The case was, therefore, triable by the Anti-Terrorism court established under the said Act ..."

13. When wanton overt acts committed by an accused lead to horrendous consequences then the motive given in the FIR merely indicates the background. The presumption that the natural and inevitable consequences of the acts of an accused are deemed to be intended, provides a reliable touchstone for gathering the design, intention or mens rea of an assailant in the context of Section 6(1)(b) of ATA.

14. Indeed neither Mehram Ali's case nor Bashir Ahmed's case ibid have confined judicial recourse solely to the motive disclosed in the FIR for ascertaining the mens rea for the offence of terrorism. For the existence or otherwise of mens rea of the said offence, a Court of law may rightfully interpret the different aspects of a prosecution case noted above in order to ascertain the design behind the acts committed by an assailant. In the present case the assailants who committed the brutal acts of causing the death of five persons had no personal grouse against their victims. Prima facie, they executed the instructions given by the other accused. This was done with impunity because doing the job was material and not the consequence and impact of their overt action. A dispute about the possession of a family house thus exploded disproportionately to a scale depicting wanton ruthlessness and impunity in the multiple killing of victims in a public place inhabited by public residents. To our minds, the motive of a domestic family property dispute is merely the spark that triggered the occurrence, or metaphorically, the fire. The rule that the accused in the present case are deemed to intend the natural and inevitable consequences of action taken is apt and accurate in depicting their design, intention and mens rea. The three ingredients under Section 6 of ATA that constitute the offence of terrorism are prima facie available in the present case.

15. Therefore, the approach in the impugned judgment to interpret overt acts of the accused and the surrounding circumstances of the case in order to ascertain whether the case falls within the ambit of the ATA, is justified. Equally, the reliance placed by the learned ATC solely on the motive disclosed in the FIR No. 247 of 2014 lodged by the complainant in the case adopts a course meant for simple cases wherein the motive disclosed in the FIR is duly demonstrated by the other criteria for ascertainment of mens rea."

12. One cannot help noticing that all the cases referred to in the last paragraph and falling in the second category pertained to offences committed for private purposes with no motivation to destabilize the State or the society at large but they were all adjudged to be cases of terrorist acts or terrorism on the basis of a presumptive and speculative quantification of the effect that the relevant actions could have created in the society. In all such cases, it is observed with great deference, the changed definition of 'terrorism' with its resultant shifting of focus from the effect of the action to the design or purpose behind the action had not been noticed and all those cases had been decided on the basis and on the yardstick of the principles provided for by the earlier definition of a 'terrorist act'. In the above mentioned cases the gravity of the offence with its resultant actual, intended or potential effect on the people at large was considered as the measure for determining whether the act constituted terrorism or not. We can appreciate that the mindset inherited by us in the background of the Summary Military Courts, Speedy Trial Courts and Special Courts for Suppression of Terrorist Activities, which were different courts constituted at different stages in the past for separate and special handling of offences of grave nature, may take some time to be dispelled and it may take us a while to appreciate and realize that an act of 'terrorism' is not just a grave offence but it is a class and species apart and this class or species has to be understood in its true and correct perception and perspective otherwise every serious offence may be found by one Judge or the other to involve terrorism depending upon a subjective assessment of the potential of the act to create some sense of fear or insecurity in some section of the society. Such an approach, it may be observed with great veneration, may not be wholesome as it may ultimately result in every case of a serious offence landing in a Special Court and thereby rendering the ordinary courts substantially redundant. It ought not to be lost sight of that the legislature's repeal of the Suppression of Terrorist Activities (Special Courts) Act, 1975, doing away with the Schedule of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 at one stage and also its retraction from the 'effect' through the fresh definition of 'terrorism' cannot be without any significance or purpose. That drastic change of the definition manifestly indicated a change of meanings and of focus and such a change has to be given its proper effect. After all if the term 'terrorism' as defined today is still to be interpreted in the same manner as the erstwhile term 'terrorist act' then there was hardly any occasion or need for the legislature to amend the definition and to bring about any change in the existing law in that regard. The legacy and interpretations pertaining to the Suppression of Terrorist Activities (Special Courts) Act, 1975 and of the original provisions of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 have now to be shaken or shrugged off so as to correctly understand the definition of 'terrorism' introduced through the later Act and its amendments. This Court had itself declared in the above mentioned case of Mumtaz Ali Khan Rajban and another v.Federation of Pakistan and others (PLD 2001 SC 169) that the subject matters of the Suppression of Terrorist Activities (Special Courts) Act, 1975 and the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 were "different" and their respective applicability was "governed by different criteria".

13. We understand, and we observe so with all the respect at our command, that in the above mentioned cases falling in the second category this Court had, wittingly or otherwise, detracted or moved away from the principle of nexus so painstakingly carved out by it in the case of Mehram Ali and others v. Federation of Pakistan and others (PLD 1998 SC 1445). As already noticed above, one of the reasons for such drifting away from the principle of nexus was the effect-based definition of "terrorist act" provided in the repealed Suppression of Terrorist Activities (Special Courts) Act, 1975. Another reason for the lack of clarity in this respect was an incorrect understanding of the words "speedy trial of heinous offences" contained in the Preamble to the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. In many of the judgments referred to above those words appearing in the Preamble were mentioned and relied upon for holding that commission of heinous offences also amounted to terrorism even if the 'design' or 'purpose' mentioned in clauses (b) and (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 did not stand attracted to a case. For removal of any confusion in that respect the scheme of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 needs to be understood and appreciated in its correct perspective. The Preamble to the said Act reads as follows:

> "An act to provide for the prevention of terrorism, sectarian violence and for speedy trial of heinous offences;
> Whereas it is expedient to provide for the prevention of terrorism, sectarian violence and for speedy trial of heinous offences and for matters connected therewith and incidental thereto;
> It is hereby enacted as follows:---"

Section 12 of that Act provides as under:

> 12. Jurisdiction of Anti-terrorism Court.- (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code or in any other law, a scheduled offence committed in an area in a Province or the Islamabad Capital Territory shall be triable only by the Anti-Terrorism Court exercising territorial jurisdiction in relation to such area."

Section 2(t) of the Act defines a scheduled offence in the following terms:

" "Scheduled offence" means an offence as set out in the Third Schedule."

The Third Schedule to the Act reads as under:

THE THIRD SCHEDULE

(Scheduled Offences)

[See section 2(t)]

1. Any act of terrorism within the meaning of this Act including those offences which may be added or amended in accordance with the provisions of section 34 of this Act.
2. Any other offence punishable under this Act.
3. Any attempt to commit, or aid or abetment of, or any conspiracy to commit, any of the aforesaid offences.
4. Without prejudice to the generality of the above paragraphs, the Anti-Terrorism Court to the exclusion of any other Court shall try the offences relating to the following, namely:-

(i) Abduction or kidnapping for ransom;

(ii) Use of firearms or explosives by any device, including bomb blast in a mosque, imambargah, church, temple or any other place of worship, whether or not any hurt or damage is caused thereby; or

(iii) Firing or use of explosive by any device, including bomb blast in the court premises; or

(iv) Hurt caused by corrosive substance or attempt to cause hurt by means of a corrosive substance; and

(v) Unlawful possession of an explosive substance or abetment for such an offence under the Explosive Substances Act, 1908 (VI of 1908).

A careful reading of the Third Schedule shows that an Anti-Terrorism Court has been conferred jurisdiction not only to try all those offences which attract the definition of terrorism provided by the Act but also some other specified cases involving heinous offences which do not fall in the said definition of terrorism. For such latter category of cases it was provided that although those offences may not constitute terrorism yet such offences may be tried by an Anti-Terrorism Court for speedy trial of such heinous offences. This distinction between cases of terrorism and cases of specified heinous offences not amounting to terrorism but triable by an Anti-Terrorism Court has already been recognized by this Court in the cases of Farooq Ahmed v. State and another (2020 SCMR 78), Amjad Ali and others v. The State (PLD 2017 SC 661) and Muhammad Bilal v. The State and others (2019 SCMR 1362). It has been clarified by this Court in those cases that such specified heinous offences are only to be tried by an Anti-Terrorism Court and that court can punish the person committing such specified heinous offences only for commission of those offences and not for committing terrorism because such offences do not constitute terrorism. For the purposes of further clarity on this issue it is explained for the benefit of all concerned that the cases of the offences specified in entry No. 4 of the Third Schedule to the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 are cases of those heinous offences which do not per se constitute the offence of terrorism but such cases are to be tried by an Anti-Terrorism Court because of their inclusion in the Third Schedule. It is also clarified that in such cases of heinous offences mentioned in entry No. 4 of the said Schedule an Anti-Terrorism Court can pass a punishment for the said offence and not for committing the offence of terrorism. It may be pertinent to mention here that the offence of abduction or kidnapping for ransom under section 365-A, P.P.C. is included in entry No. 4 of the Third Schedule and kidnapping for ransom is also one of the actions specified in section 7(e) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. Abduction or kidnapping for ransom is a heinous offence but the scheme of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 shows that an ordinary case of abduction or kidnapping for ransom under section 365-A, P.P.C. is merely triable by an Anti-Terrorism Court but if kidnapping for ransom is committed with the design or purpose mentioned in clauses (b) or (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 then such offence amounts to terrorism attracting section 7(e) of that Act. In the former case the convicted person is to be convicted and sentenced only for the offence under section 365-A, P.P.C. whereas in the latter case the convicted person is to be convicted both for the offence under section 365-A, P.P.C. as well as for the offence under section 7(e) of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. The same may also be said about the other offences mentioned in entry No. 4 of the Third Schedule to the Act pertaining to "Use of firearms or explosives by any device, including bomb blast in a mosque, imambargah, church, temple or any other place of worship, whether or not any hurt or damage is caused thereby", "Firing or use of explosive by any device, including bomb blast in the court premises", "Hurt caused by corrosive substance or attempt to cause hurt by means of a corrosive substance" and "Unlawful possession of an explosive substance or abetment for such an offence under the Explosive Substances Act, 1908 (VI of 1908)". Such distinction between cases of terrorism and other heinous offences by itself explains and recognizes that all heinous offences, howsoever serious, grave, brutal, gruesome, macabre or shocking, do not ipso facto constitute terrorism which is a species apart. Through an amendment of the Third Schedule any heinous offence not constituting terrorism may be added to the list of offences which may be tried by an Anti-Terrorism Court and it was in this context that the Preamble to the Act had mentioned "Whereas it is expedient to provide for the prevention of terrorism, sectarian violence and for speedy trial of heinous offences".

14. Adverting now to the written submissions of the learned

Attorney-General based upon the provisions of subsection (3) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 we may straightaway observe that we have felt nothing but sympathy for the learned Attorney-General because he had to make some effort to make some sense of the said provisions which, with respect, make no sense to us. He has urged that subsections (1), (2) and (3) of section 6 of the said Act are to be read in conjunction. The said provisions read as follows:

6. Terrorism. - (1) In this Act, "terrorism" means the use or threat of action where:

(a) the action falls within the meaning of subsection (2), and

(c) the use or threat is made for the purpose of advancing a religious, sectarian or ethnic cause or intimidating and terrorizing the public, social sectors, media persons, business community or attacking the civilians, including damaging property by ransacking, looting, arson, or by any other means, government officials, installations, security forces or law enforcement agencies:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall apply to a democratic and religious rally or a peaceful demonstration in accordance with law.

(2) An "action" shall fall within the meaning of subsection (1), if it:

(3) The use or threat of any action falling within subsection (2) which involves the use of firearms, explosive or any other weapon is terrorism, whether or not subsection (1) (c) is satisfied.

Reading of subsections (1) and (2) of the said section together makes good sense, i.e. all the actions specified in subsection (2) shall constitute terrorism if they are committed with the 'design' mentioned in clause (b) of subsection (1) or are committed for the 'purpose' referred to in clause (c) of subsection (1) of that section. Subsection (3) of that section, however, provides that "The use or threat of any action falling within subsection (2) which involves the use of firearms, explosive or any other weapon is terrorism, whether or not subsection (1) (c) is satisfied" which means that if for commission of the actions mentioned in subsection (2) a firearm, an explosive substance or any other weapon is actually used or a threat regarding use of the same is extended then all such actions are to constitute the offence of terrorism even if the other requirements of clause (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 are not satisfied or fulfilled. The requirements that need to be satisfied for invoking clause (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 are that the use or threat of action should be for "the purpose of advancing a religious, sectarian or ethnic cause" or for the purpose of "intimidating and terrorizing the public, social sectors, media persons, business community" or for the purpose of "attacking the civilians, including damaging property by ransacking, looting, arson, or by any other means, government officials, installations, security forces or law enforcement agencies". If the said requirements and purposes mentioned in clause (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 do not need to be satisfied and if mere use or threat of use of a firearm, an explosive substance or any other weapon for commission of the actions mentioned in subsection (2) of section 6 is to ipso facto constitute the offence of terrorism then every murder committed (action under clause (a) of subsection (2) of section 6), every grievous bodily injury or harm caused (action under clause (b) of subsection (2) of section 6), every grievous damage to private property (action under clause (c) of subsection of section 6), doing anything that is likely to cause death or endangers a person's life (action under clause (d) of subsection (2) of section 6) or creating a serious risk to safety of the public or a section of the public (action under clause (i) of subsection (2) of section 6) even if committed with an ordinary stick, a brickbat or a stone when used as a weapon would constitute the offence of terrorism! Such trivializing of the diabolical offence of terrorism surely could not be the intention of the legislature when framing a law for the offence of terrorism which is a class apart and a species different from any other ordinary crime. In this context we have found the learned Additional Prosecutor-General, Punjab to be quite justified in maintaining that the provisions of subsection (3) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 are quite problematic as they do not piece well with the remaining provisions of the said section as far as the matter of defining terrorism is concerned. He has also been found by us to be correct in submitting that if the provisions of subsection (3) of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, as they are worded, are to be given effect then the distinction between the peculiar offence of terrorism and most of the run of the mill offences committed in the society in routine would be obliterated. In this backdrop his submission that the provisions of subsection (3) of section 6 may be read down in order to save the main Act and its purposes has been found by us to be meriting serious consideration. We may add here that the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 was introduced about twenty-two years ago but in all these years, to the best of our knowledge, the provisions of subsection (3) of section 6 of that Act have never before been pressed into service in any reported case in the country. It appears that the Judges and lawyers in the country have found the said provisions to be so confusing and incentive-incompatible that they have kept themselves away from the same so far. It is about time that the legislature may like to have another look at the said provisions and to consider deleting or suitably amending the same so as to bring them in harmony with the remaining provisions of the Act.

15. The resume of our legislative developments in the field of terrorism shows, as already observed in the case of Basharat Ali (supra), that with different laws and definitions of terrorist act or terrorism the emphasis has been shifting from one criterion to another including the gravity of the act, lethal nature of the weapon used, plurality of culprits, number of victims, impact created by the act and effect of fear and insecurity brought about or likely to be created in the society by the action. The last definition of a 'terrorist act' contained in section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 squarely focused on the effect of fear and insecurity intended to be created by the act or actually created by the act or the act having the potential of creating such an effect of fear and insecurity in the society. It, however, appears that subsequently the legislature did not feel convinced of the aptness or correctness of that definition and resultantly the erstwhile definition of a 'terrorist act' contained in section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 was repealed and a totally fresh and new definition of 'terrorism' was introduced through an amended section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997. The legislature had probably realized by then that an effect of an act may not always be a correct indicator of the nature of such an act as every crime, especially of violence against person or property, does create some sense of fear and insecurity in some section of the society and a definition of terrorism based upon the magnitude or potential of an effect created or intended to be created or having a potential of creating would necessarily require a premature, speculative and imaginary quantification of the effect so as to determine the nature of the act in order to decide about the jurisdiction of a criminal court to try such an act. That surely was an unsure test and the result of such a premature, speculative and presumptive test could vary from court to court and from Judge to Judge reminding a legal scholar of the Star Chamber and the early days of a Court of Equity in England where equity was said to vary with the size of the Chancellor's foot. The new definition of 'terrorism' introduced through the amended section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 as it stands today appears to be closer to the universally understood concept of terrorism besides being easier to understand and apply. The earlier emphasis on the speculative effect of the act has now given way to a clearly defined mens rea and actus reus. The amended clause (b) of subsection (1) of section 6 now specifies the 'design' and clause (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 earmarks the 'purpose' which should be the motivation for the act and the actus reus has been clearly mentioned in subsection (2) of section 6 and now it is only when the actus reus specified in subsection (2) of section 6 is accompanied by the requisite mens rea provided for in clause (b) or clause (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 that an action can be termed as 'terrorism'. Thus, it is no longer the fear or insecurity actually created or intended to be created or likely to be created which would determine whether the action qualifies to be termed as terrorism or not but it is now the intent and motivation behind the action which would be determinative of the issue irrespective of the fact whether any fear and insecurity was actually created or not. After this amendment in section 6 an action can now be termed as terrorism if the use or threat of that action is designed to coerce and intimidate or overawe the Government or the public or a section of the public or community or sect, etc. or if such action is designed to create a sense of fear or insecurity in the society or the use or threat is made for the purpose of advancing a religious, sectarian or ethnic cause, etc. Now creating fear or insecurity in the society is not by itself terrorism unless the motive itself is to create fear or insecurity in the society and not when fear or insecurity is just a byproduct, a fallout or an unintended consequence of a private crime. In the last definition the focus was on the action and its result whereas in the present definition the emphasis appears to be on the motivation and objective and not on the result. Through this amendment the legislature seems to have finally appreciated that mere shock, horror, dread or disgust created or likely to be created in the society does not transform a private crime into terrorism but terrorism as an 'ism' is a totally different concept which denotes commission of a crime with the design or purpose of destabilizing the government, disturbing the society or hurting a section of the society with a view to achieve objectives which are essentially political, ideological or religious. This approach also appears to be in harmony with the emerging international perspective and perception about terrorism. The international perception is also becoming clearer on the point that a violent activity against civilians that has no political, ideological or religious aims is just an act of criminal delinquency, a felony, or simply an act of insanity unrelated to terrorism. This metamorphosis in the anti-terrorism law in our country has brought about a sea change in the whole concept as we have understood it in the past and it is, therefore, of paramount importance for all concerned to understand this conceptual modification and transformation in its true perspective.

16. For what has been discussed above it is concluded and declared that for an action or threat of action to be accepted as terrorism within the meanings of section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 the action must fall in subsection (2) of section 6 of the said Act and the use or threat of such action must be designed to achieve any of the objectives specified in clause (b) of subsection (1) of section 6 of that Act or the use or threat of such action must be to achieve any of the purposes mentioned in clause (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 of that Act. It is clarified that any action constituting an offence, howsoever grave, shocking, brutal, gruesome or horrifying, does not qualify to be termed as terrorism if it is not committed with the design or purpose specified or mentioned in clauses (b) or (c) of subsection (1) of section 6 of the said Act. It is further clarified that the actions specified in subsection (2) of section 6 of that Act do not qualify to be labeled or characterized as terrorism if such actions are taken in furtherance of personal enmity or private vendetta.

17. Before parting with this judgment we may observe that the definition of 'terrorism' contained in section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 as it stands at present is too wide and the same includes so many actions, designs and purposes which have no nexus with the generally recognized concept of what terrorism is. Apart from that including some other heinous offences in the Preamble and the Third Schedule to that Act for trial of such offences by an Anti-Terrorism Court when such other offences do not qualify to be included in the definition of terrorism puts an extra and unnecessary burden on such courts and causes delay in trial of actual cases of terrorism. It is, therefore, recommended that the Parliament may consider substituting the present definition of 'terrorism' by a more succinct definition bringing it in line with the international perspectives of that offence and focusing on violent activities aimed at achieving political, ideological or religious objectives. We further recommend that the Parliament may also consider suitably amending the Preamble to the Act and removing all those offences from the Third Schedule to the Act which offences have no nexus with the offence of terrorism.

18. The office is directed to fix the captioned appeals for hearing before appropriate Benches of this Court for their decision in terms of the legal position declared through the present judgment.

MWA/G-6/S Order accordingly.

Present: Mushir Alam, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

NATIONAL ACCOUNTABILITY BUREAU through Chairman---Appellants

Versus

SHABBIR AHMED MALIK and others---Respondents

Civil Appeals Nos.621 to 624 of 2019, decided on 8th January, 2020.

(On appeal from the judgment of High Court of Sindh, Sukkar Bench dated 3-6-2016, passed in Const. Ps. Nos. 424, 425, 1626 and 1627 of 2016).

(a) National Accountability Ordinance (XVIII of 1999)---

---Ss. 25(a) & 33E---Voluntary Return settlement ('VR settlement')---Default in payment under the VR settlement---Whether such default vitiated the VR settlement, resulting in initiation of further proceedings by the National Accountability Bureau ("NAB") against a holder of public office or any other person under the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ("Ordinance") or whether NAB could recourse to S.33E of the Ordinance to recover the amount of VR settlement as arrears of land revenue---Held, that default in deposit of the amount under a VR settlement vitiated the settlement resulting in initiation of further proceeding by the NAB against the accused under the Ordinance, and the NAB could not take recourse to S.33E of the Ordinance to recover the amount determined in VR settlement as arrears of land revenue---However, any partial payment under VR settlement would be available for adjustment even after VR stood vitiated and could be adjusted against Plea Bargain ("PB") or the liability determined by the court, as the case may be---Further more absence of time frame under a VR settlement could not be relied upon to make the VR arrangement continue indefinitely.

Voluntary Return ('VR') was an option available to a person under inquiry or even before inquiry but prior to authorization of investigation against him, to come forward to discharge his liability by making a voluntary return of the amount due against him. Voluntary Return settlement, as a concept was structured around and dependent upon the volition of the person who wished to settle. Voluntary Return, therefore, constituted (i) an offer of a holder of public office or any other person to make a voluntary return of the assets acquired or gains made by him in the course, or as a consequence, of any offence under the Ordinance; (ii) acceptance of that offer by the Chairman NAB; (iii) determination of the amount due from such person by the Chairman NAB; and (iv) deposit by such person with the NAB, of the amount so determined. Anything short of this did not constitute a valid VR settlement. Voluntary Return was, therefore, a one off voluntary return facility linked with the liability of the accused as determined by the Chairman NAB. Being a voluntary payment, any failure thereof, simple put an end to the facility of VR. Any short payment or partial payment did not constitute a valid VR settlement and thus did not discharge the person from his liability in respect of the matter or transaction in issue and the proceeding initiated under the Ordinance continued unabated.

In case the NAB granted time to a person to arrange for money so as to discharge his liability under the VR settlement, any such concession extended to the accused had no bearing on the essential constituent of VR, i.e., the deposit of the determined amount. Facility of VR became effective once the entire determined amount was paid or else the facility of VR came to an end. Even if the accused was allowed to pay the amount in installments, VR would only be effective once the determined amount was deposited in full. Voluntary return envisaged a voluntary deposit against the liability and there was no concept of any outstanding amount.

Under VR, there was either a deposit of the determined amount voluntarily or there was no VR. Therefore, the question of the recovery of the outstanding amount under VR did not arise in order to attract Section 33E of the Ordinance. However, any partial payment under VR would be available for adjustment even after VR stood vitiated and could be adjusted against Plea Bargain ("PB") or the liability determined by the court, as the case may be.

Mahesh Kumar v. Chairman NAB PLD 2008 Kar. 38 and Haji Khan Muhammad v. Government of Pakistan 2013 PCr.LJ 1571 distinguished.

Elahi Bux v. State PLD 2015 Sindh 165 and Raheel Sabir Jadoon v. Chairman, NAB PLD 2014 Pesh. 95 ref.

Absence of time frame under a VR settlement could not be relied upon to make the VR arrangement continue indefinitely.

(b) National Accountability Ordinance (XVIII of 1999)---

----Ss. 25(a), 25(b) & 33E---"Voluntary Return ('VR')"---"Plea Bargain" ('PB')---Distinction---Recovery of amount of fines, etc., as arrears of land revenue---Scope---Voluntary Return ('VR') under cl.(a) to S.25 of the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ('the Ordinance') used the phrase "deposit with the NAB", while Plea Bargain ('PB') under cl. (b) to S.25 used the phrase "agrees to return to the NAB"---Both said concepts presented two different transactional arrangements---Former envisaged full deposit and the latter a commitment to pay---Voluntary Return was linked with the condition of full deposit whereas Plea Bargain became operative if the accused "agrees to return" to the National Accountability Bureau (NAB) the amount determined by the Chairman, NAB and the Court approved such agreement---Amount so agreed to be returned under Plea Bargain [section 25(b)] became due under the Ordinance and was thus recoverable as arrears of land revenue under S.33E of the Ordinance, whereas NAB could not take recourse to S.33E to recover the amount determined in a VR settlement as arrears of land revenue.

Aftab Alam Yasir, Advocate Supreme Court, Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Respondent No.1 (in C.As. Nos.621 and 623 of 2019).

Nemo. (in C.As.622 and 624 of 2019).

Dates of hearing: 7th and 8th January, 2020.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH. J.--These appeals raise a specific legal question: whether default of payment under a Voluntary Return ("VR") settlement vitiates the settlement, resulting in initiation of further proceedings by the National Accountability Bureau ("NAB") against a holder of public office or any other person under the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ("Ordinance") or whether NAB can recourse to section 33E of the Ordinance to recover the amount of VR as arrears of land revenue?

2. Brief facts are that the respondents were Food Inspectors who, at the time, also held the charge of the Wheat Procurement Centre in District Jacobabad. During the inquiry initiated by the NAB against the respondents on the basis of an alleged misappropriation of wheat bags causing loss to the national exchequer, the respondents voluntarily came forward to settle the matter by offering VR under section 25(a) of the Ordinance, of the gains acquired through the said misappropriation. The applications requesting VR dated 24.4.2013, submitted by the respondents, stated that the respondents with free consent and without any coercion, duress or undue influence had voluntarily come forward and admitted that they were in possession of the gains made in consequence of an offence under the Ordinance and undertook to deposit the amount as determined by the NAB, with the prayer to be discharged of their liability in respect of the subject inquiry.

3. The said request for VR was processed by the NAB and liabilities of both the accused respondents were determined by the Chairman NAB in the sum of Rs.19,677,000/- (against Shabbir Ahmed Malik) and Rs.29.853.000/- (against Abdul Ghaffar Kalwar). Deposit of the said amount was to be made in three installments; however, no timeframe was provided for making payment of these installments. This settlement was recorded in affidavits drawn up by the respondents. The appellants paid the first installment/down payment in the sum of Rs.10,300 000/- and Rs.14,700.000/- respectively. However, they failed to pay the remaining amount inspite of notices issued to them by the NAB on 30.6.2014, 09.7.2014, 27.10.2014 and 29.10.2014. On remaining unsuccessful for a period of almost two years, the NAB cancelled the VR settlement on 04.2.2015 and proceeded with the investigation of the case on 16-3-

2015. The investigation allegedly led to discovery of further misappropriation on the part of the respondents and their liability soared to Rs.21,085,350/- and Rs.36,911,100/- resulting in the filing of References Nos. 17 and 18 of 2015 against both the respondents, respectively. Thereon, the Accountability Court Sukkar issued non-bailable warrants (NBWs) against them vide its order dated 9.1.2016, to face trial in the References.

4. The respondents approached the High Court challenging the NBWs and seeking bail before arrest, as well as, quashment of the References through separate petitions. These petitions were heard together and finally through impugned judgement dated 03.06.2016 the References against the respondents were quashed on the grounds: (i) that after a VR agreement, the outstanding amount can only be recovered under section 33E of the Ordinance as arrears of land revenue; (ii) that there was no timeframe provided in the VR agreement hence the agreement could not have been rescinded or enforced; (iii) that parallel criminal proceedings[1] for the same offences before the Anti-Corruption Court amounted to double jeopardy. Leave was granted on 19.03.2019 only to consider the question whether section 33E is applicable in case of default of payment under the VR settlement.

5. Learned Additional Prosecutor General NAB submits that the sole ground for quashment of the References by the High Court was its reliance on section 33E of the Ordinance. He submits that after the respondents failed to honour the voluntary return arrangement, the facility under section 25(a) of the Ordinance came to an end and NAB proceeded against the respondents in accordance with the Ordinance. He places reliance on Elahi Bux v. State (PLD 2015 Sindh 165), Minhon Khan Chandio v. National Accountability Bureau (2011 PCr.LJ 79), and Raheel Sabir Jadoon v. Chairman, NAB (PLD 2014 Peshawar 95) to submit that the failure of the respondents to honour the voluntary return does not attract section 33E of the Ordinance.

6. Learned counsel for the respondents on the other hand submits that in case of failure of an accused to honour the voluntary return, NAB can only proceed under section 33E of the Ordinance for recovery of the amount as arrears of land revenue and places reliance on Mahesh Kumar v. Chairman, NAB (PLD 2008 Karachi 38), Khan Muhammad v. Government of Pakistan, NAB (2013 PCr.LJ 1571), Ali Muhammad v. State (PLD 2009 Lahore 312). He adds that Shabbir Ahmed Malik, one of the accused was also booked in FIR No.3/2014 under section 409 P.P.C. read with section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 and after regular trial was acquitted by the Special Judge, Anti-Corruption Court, Larkana vide judgment dated 25.04.2017, and as a consequence, he cannot undergo trial for the same offence afresh.

7. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at some length, examined the record of the case and the provisions of the Ordinance. The answer to the legal question that has arisen in these appeals hinges upon the interpretation of sections 25(a) and 33E of the Ordinance, which are reproduced hereunder for ready reference:-

Section 25:(a)

"25.(a) Notwithstanding anything contained in section 15 or in any other law for the time being in force, where a holder of public office or any other person, prior to the authorization of investigation against him, voluntarily comes forward and offers to return the assets or gains acquired or made by him in the course, or as the consequence, of any offence under this Ordinance, the Chariman NAB may accept such offer and after determination of the amount due from such person and its deposit with the NAB discharge such person from all his liability in respect of the matter or transaction in issue:

Provided that the matter is not sub judice in any court of law."

Section 33E:

"33E. Any fine or other sum due under this Ordinance, or as determined to be due by a Court, shall be recoverable as arrears of land revenue"

Without going into the constitutionality of section 25(a), which we have been informed is the subject matter of another case,[2] we restrict ourselves to the meaning and scope of VR under section 25(a). VR is an option available to person under inquiry or even before inquiry but prior to authorization of investigation against him, to come forward to discharge his liability by making a voluntary return of the amount due against him. A VR settlement, as a concept is structured around and dependent upon the volition of the person who wishes to settle. VR, therefore, constitutes (i) an offer of a holder of public office or any other person to make a voluntary return of the assets acquired or gains made by him in the course, or as a consequence, of any offence under the Ordinance; (ii) acceptance of that offer by the Chairman NAB; (iii) determination of the amount due from such person by the Chairman NAB; and (iv) deposit by such person with the NAB, of the amount so determined. Anything short of this does not constitute a valid VR settlement. VR is, therefore, a one off voluntary return facility linked with the liability of the accused as determined by the Chairman NAB. Being a voluntary payment, any failure thereof, simple puts an end to the facility of VR. Any short payment or partial payment does not constitute a valid VR settlement and thus does not discharge the person from his liability in respect of the matter or transaction in issue and the proceeding initiated under the Ordinance continues unabated. VR under the law is a one-time facility of depositing the determined amount and not a long-term repayment arrangement. In case the NAB grants time to a person to arrange for money so as to discharge his liability under the VR settlement, any such concession extended to the accused has no bearing on the essential constituent of VR, i.e., the deposit of the determined amount. Facility of VR becomes effective once the entire determined amount is paid or else the facility of VR comes to an end. Even if the accused is allowed to pay the amount in installments, VR will only be effective once the determined amount is deposited in full. Voluntary return envisages a voluntary deposit against the liability and there is no concept of any outstanding amount. "Outstanding amount" or "any sum due" imply that a person is otherwise bound to pay and hasn't paid. Under VR, there is either a deposit of the determined amount voluntarily or there is no VR. Therefore, the question of the recovery of the outstanding amount under VR does not arise in order to attract section 33E of the Ordinance. However, any partial payment under VR will be available for adjustment even after VR stands vitiated and can be adjusted against Plea Bargain ("PB") or the liability determined by the court, as the case may be.

8. The case law referred to by learned counsel for the respondents and relied upon by the High Court is misconceived and has no relevance to the matter in hand. Mahesh Kumar v. Chairman NAB (PLD 2008 Karachi 38) and Haji Khan Muhammad v. Government of Pakistan (2013 PCr.LJ 1571) relate to the cases of PB under clause (b) of section 25, and not of VR unde clause (a) of that section of the Ordinance. There is a clear difference between the two clauses; under clause (a) the phrase "deposit with the NAB" and under clause (b) "agrees to return to the NAB" present two different 'transactional arrangements. One envisaging full deposit and other a commitment to pay. VR is linked with the condition of full deposit whereas PB becomes operative if the accused "agrees to return" to the NAB the amount determined by the Chairman, NAB and the Court approves such agreement. The amount so agreed to be returned under clause (b) becomes due under the Ordinance and is thus recoverable as arrears of land revenue under section 33E of the Ordinance. Mahesh Kumar actually involved the question whether non-deposit of amount of PB was an offence within the provisions of section 5(r) of the Ordinance, when the remedy of recovery of such amount was available under section 33E of the Ordinance; while the controversy in Haji Khan Muhammad pertained to imposition of interest on actual amount of PB. None of these cases relate to VR and therefore do not advance the case of the respondents. Elahi Bux v. State (PLD 2015 Sindh 165) and Raheel Sabir Jadoon v. Chairman, NAB (PLD 2014 Peshawar 95) however, espouse the view expressed by this Court.

9. The legal question involved in these appeals is therefore answered in the terms that default in deposit of the amount under a VR settlement vitiates the settlement resulting in initiation of further proceeding by the NAB against the accused under the Ordinance, and the NAB cannot recourse to section 33E of the Ordinance to recover the amount determined in VR settlement as arrears of land revenue. The absence of time frame under the present VR arrangement cannot be relied upon to make the VR arrangement continue indefinitely. In the present case sufficient time (2 years) was given to the respondents to pay up and inspite of several notices sent to the respondents there was no response, hence the cancellation of the VR settlement. In view of this legal position, the impugned judgment[3] is set aside; as a consequence, References Nos.17 and 18 of 2015 against the respondents shall be deemed to be pending before the Accountability Court concerned, to be decided strictly in accordance with law.

10. It is stated that respondent Shabbir Ahmed Malik has been acquitted by the Anti-Corruption Court on 25.04.2017 after the impugned judgment dated 03.06.2016. Bare perusal of the order of the Anti-Corruption Court shows that the sole ground for the acquittal of the respondent was the quashment of the Reference made through the impugned judgment. Be that as it may, the effect of acquittal of the respondent Shabbir Ahmed Malik by the Anti-Corruption Court, under Article 13 of the Constitution read with section 403 Cr.P.C. may be considered and decided by the Accountability Court in view of the provisions of sections 3, 16, 16A and 18 of the Ordinance in accordance with the law, if the same is agitated by the respondents before it.

11. Learned counsel for the respondent Shabbir Ahmed Malik prays for his bail before arrest. He submits that in compliance of Order dated 03.06.2016 of the High Court, the said respondent has deposited the remaining amount determined under the VR, which forms a major portion of the amount assessed against him in the Reference. This fact is borne out from the Certificate dated 16.10.2017 issued by the Sindh High Court and is confirmed by the Additional Prosecutor General, NAB. We, therefore, admit respondent Shabbir Ahmed Malik to bail subject to his furnishing a bond in the amount of Rs.200,000/- with one surety of the like amount to the satisfaction of the Accountability Court concerned.

12. These appeals are allowed in the above terms.

(g) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----S. 302---Qatl-i-amd---Defence plea---'Grave and sudden provocation'---Meaning and scope.

Expression "grave and sudden provocation" was used by the Legislature in Exception-1 to the erstwhile section 300 of P.P.C. as: "Culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, whilst deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation, causes the death of the person who gave the provocation." It is clearly spelt out from the said provisions that the provocation offered by the act of the victim must be so grave and sudden that it would deprive the offender of the power of self-control. Provocation in law thus consisted mainly of three elements: (i) the act of provocation, (ii) the loss of self-control, and (iii) the retaliation/reaction proportionate to the provocation. The relationship of these elements to each other, particularly in point of time, was of the foremost importance to determine whether there was time for passion to cool and reason to resume.

Ali Muhammad v. Ali Ali Muhammad PLD 1996 SC 274 ref.

Doctrine relating to provocation depended on the fact that it causes, or may cause, a sudden and temporary loss of self-control,whereby malice which was the formation of an intention to kill or to inflict grievous bodily harm, was negatived.The proportionality of the reaction to the provocation was tested on the touchstone of the reaction expected from a reasonable person. What a reasonable man would do in certain circumstances depended upon various factors including the customs, traditions, social and cultural values, and way of life of the society to which he belonged. No abstract standard of reasonableness could be laid down, in this regard.

----S. 342---Power of Court to examine the accused---Scope and purpose.

Primary purpose of section 342, Cr.P.C. was to enable the accused to know and to explain and respond to the evidence brought against him by the prosecution. It was essential that attention of the accused must be brought to all the vital parts of the evidence brought against him by the prosecution, especially if he was an ignorant person who could not be expected to know or understand what particular parts of the evidence were or were likely to be considered by the Court to be against him. The purpose was to establish a direct dialogue between the Court and the accused and to put every important incriminating piece of evidence to the accused and grant him an opportunity to answer and explain.

----S. 342---Admission or confession by accused in his statement under S.342, Cr.P.C.---Probative value---Admission or confession which was improbable or unbelievable, or was not consistent with the overall facts and circumstances of a case may not have any probative value and thus could not be relied upon by the court for reaching to a conclusion.

(j) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 342---Prosecution failing to prove its case---Admission or confession by accused in his statement under S.342, Cr.P.C.---Evidentiary value---Where prosecution had failed to prove its case, the statement of accused under S.342, Cr.P.C., could be taken into consideration by the court (for convicting him) but in its entirety---Reliance could not be placed on only inculpatory part of such statement---Principles.

If the prosecution failed to prove its case against the accused, the court could take into consideration the statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C. whether in favour of or against the accused; but it must take into consideration such statement in its entirety and could not select and place reliance on the inculpatory part of the statement only. However where there was prosecution evidence which disproved the exculpatory part of the statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C., then reliance could be placed on the inculpatory part of the statement by excluding the exculpatory part, but not otherwise. In other words, if the prosecution had proved a case against the accused beyond reasonable doubt, the court may, if it deemed expedient to get further support, take into consideration also the inculpatory part of the statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C., only if the prosecution evidence negated the exculpatory part of the statement and it could be safely severed from the inculpatory part but not otherwise. Even if this exercise was not undertaken the conviction of the accused stood as the prosecution had already proved its case against the accused beyond reasonable doubt, on the basis of its evidence. The inculpatory part of the statement was not being considered to fill up gaps in the case of the prosecution but simply to draw support in a case already established by the prosecution and no more.

Rahim Bakhsh v. Crown PLD 1952 FC 1; Mehrban Shah v. State 1969 SCMR 839; Najib Raza Rehmani v. State PLD 1978 SC 200; Hanumani Govind Nargundi v. State of Madhya Pardesh AIR 1952 SC 343; Faiz v. State 1983 SCMR 76; Waris Khan v. Ishtiaq PLD 1986 SC 335 and Sultan Khan v. Sher Khan PLD 1991 SC 520 ref.

Once the prosecution evidence was disbelieved, rejected or excluded from consideration, the facts explained by the accused in his statement under section 342, Cr.P.C. were to be accepted in their entirety without requiring their proof. The court was then to examine the said facts to give due effect to the statement of the accused, under the law, whether in favour of or against the accused. The object of such examination was to determine whether or not the facts narrated by the accused constituted an offence under the law or fit into any exception of the offence provided under the law.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.--Ali Ahmad (the appellant), murdered his sister, Rabia Khalil and her paramour, Raheel Arif, in his own house, in the wee hours of the night (3:00 am) on 23.04.2006. He was thereafter booked in FIR No. 155 of the same date registered at Police Station, City Gojra, District Toba Tek Singh for offences punishable under section 302 P.P.C. After regular trial, he was convicted under section 302(c) P.P.C. and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 10 years by the Trial Court. Upon appeal by the complainant the High Court through impugned judgment dated 26.02.2013 set-aside the judgment of the trial court and convicted the appellant under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced him to imprisonment for life, thereby the criminal appeal of the complainant was allowed, whereas the criminal appeal filed by the appellant seeking acquittal was dismissed.

2. When this appeal came up for hearing before this Court on 27.3.2014, it was pointed out that the heirs of the deceased Rabia Khalil had entered into compromise with the appellant. Criminal Misc. Application No.512-L/2013 was placed on the record in this regard, which was allowed and the appeal of the appellant was partly accepted to the extent of Rabia Khalil and conviction of the appellant qua her murder was set aside, while the appeal to the extent of conviction qua the murder of Raheel Arif was kept pending, which has come up for hearing before us today.

3. Story of the prosecution is that the brother of the complainant, Muhammad Nawaz, was hospitalized due to a heart condition at Bashir Clinic, Gojra Road, Gojra on 21.04.2006. The appellant, having close terms with Muhammad Nawaz and his family, regularly visited him at the clinic. At the end of one of his visits to the clinic on 23.04.2006, the appellant, around 2:15 a.m., requested Raheel Arif, nephew of the complainant, to walk him home from the clinic. Around 3:00 am, the same night, the complainant, who was also at the clinic, went out to drop Hassan Iftikhar (PW-12) and Adeel Arif (brother of Raheel Arif) home on his motorbike. The complainant party on their way home and while passing by Mehdi Mohalah, heard a fire shot in a street and on hearing the same, turned and drove into that street and saw the appellant firing at Raheel Arif, who succumbed to his injuries and died in the street. The crime report continues to state that thereafter the appellant went into the house and locked the door and more fire shots were heard from inside the house. According to prosecution the motive behind the murder was that the appellant suspected that Raheel Arif had illicit relations with his sister Rabia Khalil.

4. The defence version, as per statement of the appellant recorded under section 342, Cr.P.C, is that he murdered the deceased and his sister due to grave and sudden provocation when he saw his sister in a compromising position with the deceased, as he returned home from medical clinic in the wee hours of the night on 23.4.2006.

5. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the record and the judgments of the courts below. The trial court disbelieved the presence of the eye-witnesses, the complainant, Ali Ahmad (PW-11) and Hassan Iftikhar (PW-12) at the site of the occurrence after a careful appraisal of their testimony, supported by cogent reasons. The High Court has not upset the said findings in the impugned judgment. Additionally, we find that according to the prosecution the complainant (PW-11) set out on his motorbike to drop Hassan Iftikhar (PW-12) and Adeel Arif (brother of the deceased Raheel Arif) at their respective homes. In the cross-examination the eye-witnesses (PW-11 and PW-12) and Syed Kazim Hussin (PW-1), the draftsman who prepared the site plan (Ex-PA), stated that the place of occurrence does not fall on the way to their homes. The site plan (Ex-PA) does not even show that the road to Samundari Road, Gulshan Colony or Abdullahpur (areas where residences of PW-12, Adeel Arif and PW-11 are situate) passes through the place of occurrence. According to the site plan the complainant party saw the occurrence from a distance of 297 feet, in the dead of the night. There is a contradiction between the statements of the two eye-witnesses (PW-11 and PW-12) regarding their distance from the site of occurrence, PW-12 categorically stated in his cross-examination that he was present during the occurrence at a distance of 14/15 feet from the place of occurrence, while PW-11 supports the site plan which describes the distance to be 297 feet. This inconsistency between the statement of the two eye-witnesses casts doubt on the case of the prosecution. The light of the motorcycle and a private bulb installed in the doorway of the house of the appellant is also suspect as neither the said bulb nor the motorcycle was recovered. Adeel Arif, one of the three eye-witnesses, being the real brother of the deceased and as a consequence being the most aggrieved amongst them, was given up by the prosecution as being "unnecessary," giving rise to an adverse inference regarding his presence at the scene of the crime. The above analysis makes the presence of the eye-witnesses at the crime scene doubtful, as concluded by the trial court.

6. With the presence of the eye-witnesses doubtful at the scene of the crime, it is not safe to place reliance on the ocular account. As a consequence, the medical evidence or the recovery of the firearm from the appellant lends little support or corroboration, to the case of the prosecution. For the above reasons we are of the view that the prosecution failed to establish the culpability of the appellant, on the basis of its evidence.

7. The High Court did not examine the case of the prosecution and appraise its evidence to find out whether the prosecution had succeeded to prove the charge against the accused but instead, examined only the defence plea by placing reliance on Article 121 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984 ("QSO") and held that the appellant had failed to prove his plea of grave and sudden provocation as taken in his statement under section 342, Cr.P.C and proceeded to convict him under section 302(b) P.P.C. for the offence of "honour killing", as alleged by the prosecution.

Process of appraising evidence and scope of Article 121 of QSO

8. In a criminal trial, it is now jurisprudentially well- entrenched, the proper course for the court is to first discuss and assess the prosecution evidence, particularly the reliability of the eye-witnesses, in order to arrive at the conclusion as to whether or not the prosecution has succeeded in proving the charge against the accused on the basis of its evidence.[1] Burden is always on the prosecution to prove its case and it is only when a prima facie case is made out against the accused sufficient to justify his conviction, does the burden shift upon the accused under Article 121 of the QSO, if he relies on any of the General Exceptions in the P.P.C or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the P.P.C. or in any law defining the offence charged.[2.] If the prosecution fails to prove its case against the accused, the question of shifting of burden upon the accused does not arise as it becomes immaterial. Where the accused has taken a defence plea (like, self defence, provocation, accident, etc.) which relates to an essential ingredient of the offence charged, the court is to appraise the prosecution case and the defense version in juxtaposition to adjudicate the matter.[3]

9. The approach adopted by the High Court, in the instant case, in examining the defence plea of grave and sudden provocation in isolation from the prosecution evidence was incorrect. The High Court did not appraise the prosecution evidence at all and convicted the appellant, under section 302(b),

P.P.C., on the basis of its finding that he had failed to establish his defence plea of grave and sudden provocation. This approach of the High Court in coming to the conclusion of the culpability of the appellant was contrary to the law declared by the two larger benches of this Court in the cases of Wali Muhammad[4] and Ashiq Hussain.[5] In the cited cases this Court authoritatively declared that the accused cannot be convicted on the ground that his defense plea appears unconvincing. The prosecution is duty bound to prove its case against the accused beyond reasonable doubt on the basis of its own evidence and is not absolved of this duty even if the accused has taken a defence plea.

10. Reliance by the High Court on Feroze[6] is misplaced; because in Feroze the learned trial court convicted the accused, and the High Court affirmed it, on the basis of the evidence of the prosecution and not on failure of the accused to prove its defence plea and this Court maintained the decisions of the courts below by refusing leave to appeal. However, if Feroze creates an impression that the prosecution evidence needs not to be appraised/examined in a case where the accused has taken a defence plea, we strongly dispel the same and reinforce the aforesaid view of the larger benches of this Court expressed in Wali Muhammad and Ashiq Hussain.

11. Consistent jurisprudence has evolved over the years by several judgments of this Court, wherein the accused persons were acquitted by accepting their plea taken in statement under section 342, Cr.P.C., of having acted in furtherance of self-defence, when the prosecution had failed to prove its case against them. The cases of Mehrban,[7] Najib Raza,[8] Waris Khan,[9] Muhammad Aksar,[10] Faiz[11] and Sultan[12] may be referred in this regard. These cases do not discuss Article 121, QSO[13] as the accused is not required to prove his plea of self-defense, on failure of the prosecution to prove its case.

Honour killing vis-a-vis grave and sudden provocation

12. The High Court has also relied on Ameer[14], for holding that the case is one of honour killing and not of grave and sudden provocation, without fully appreciating the difference between the two. In case of honour killing the act of murder is well thought out, calculated and pre-mediated, while in case of grave and sudden provocation the act is committed on the spur of the moment without any pre-planning or deliberation[15]. Family honour may be at the root of both the acts, still there is a difference between the two; in case of honour killing the act is pre-meditated and a planned one, while in case of grave and sudden provocation the act is so sudden that it entails no prior deliberation or planning. Reliance by the High Court on Ameer is misplaced as the murder in that case was a pre-meditated one. This glaring distinguishing fact has not been appreciated by the High Court. It is also important to shed some light on the meaning and scope of the expression, "grave and sudden provocation."

Meaning and scope of grave and sudden provocation

13. The expression "grave and sudden provocation" was used by the Legislature in Exception-1 to the erstwhile section 300 of P.P.C. as: "Culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, whilst deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation, causes the death of the person who gave the provocation." It is clearly spelt out from the said provisions that the provocation offered by the act of the victim must be so grave and sudden that it would deprive the offender of the power of self-control. Provocation in law thus consists mainly of three elements: (1) the act of provocation, (2) the loss of self-control, and (3) the retaliation/ reaction proportionate to the provocation. The relationship of these elements to each other, particularly in point of time, is of the foremost importance to determine whether there was time for passion to cool and reason to resume.[16] The whole doctrine relating to provocation depends on the fact that it causes, or may cause, a sudden and temporary loss of self-control, whereby malice which is the formation of an intention to kill or to inflict grievous bodily harm, is negatived.[17.] The proportionality of the reaction to the provocation is tested on the touchstone of the reaction expected from a reasonable person. What a reasonable man will do in certain circumstances depends upon various factors including the customs, traditions, social and cultural values, and way of life of the society to which he belongs.[18] No abstract standard of reasonableness can be laid down, in this regard.

14. In his statement under section 342, Cr.P.C, the appellant stated that he murdered the deceased and his sister due to grave and sudden provocation when he saw Raheel Arif committing zina with his sister, as he returned home from the medical clinic in the wee hours of the night on 23.4.2006. His statement made under section 342, Cr.P.C is reproduced below, for ready reference:

"Statement of accused Ali Ahmed son of Khalil Ahmed caste Butt aged 30 years businessman resident of Mehdi Mohallah, Gojra under section 342, Cr.P.C without oath.

Q.14 Have you any thing else to say?

Ans. I am innocent. The real facts of the present case are that I had a family terms and good relations with Muhammad Nawaz Gill and also friendly terms with Raheel Gill. Muhammad Nawaz Gill suffered heart attack on 21.4.2006. He was admitted in Bashir Clinic Quaid-i-Azam Road, Gojra. His wife and daughter remained present with him round the clock and I used to visit him during night regularly and during day hours occasionally. On the night between 22/23.4.2006 I was present with Muhammad Nawaz in Bashir Clinic. At mid night he felt a severe pain in his left arm. I had informed the dispenser about the precarious condition of Muhammad Nawaz Gill and on his information doctor had attended the patient. At that time through telephonic message I had informed Ijaz Gill Nazim U.C., the real brother of Nawaz Gill and Raheel Gill, real Bhanja of Nawaz Gill about the serious condition of Muhammad Nawaz. They both had come to the clinic after some time, the condition of Muhammad Nawaz Gill became O.K. Then Raheel Arif had gone on the pretext that his mother is alone at home. At about 3 p.m. when Muhammad Nawaz's condition was satisfactory, I left the clinic for my home. When I reached my house towards St.No.4, gate was lying open. Thereafter, I went inside my office and found my sister Rabia Khalil and Raheel Arif both committing zina with each other. I was holding my licensed pistol, I lost senses and self control and in the above said circumstances under grave and sudden provocation I made fire with my pistol on Raheel Arif when he was trying to flee away from the spot and he sustained injury on his shin in the deohri and he fell down outside the house in street. Then I made successive fires with pistol which landed on different parts of his body and in the same mental condition I went inside the house and made fire with repeater gun on my sister Rabia Khalil and she also fell down. Thereafter, I came back in the street and I made further firing on Raheel Arif with repeater gun 12 bore. The occurrence was not witnessed by the PWs. After the occurrence I had informed the police at PS through telephone and informed them about the present occurrence. On the arrival of the I.O., I had informed Ijaz Gill Nazim U.C through telephonic message, thereafter the complainant had come to the place of occurrence with Mehtab Ahmed Cheema and concocted this false story and involved me in this false case. I was in police custody since 23.4.2006. On the asking of I.O. on 24.4.2006, I had written my statement and produced the same before him which is now on judicial record as Ex.DG. The underwear of Rabia Khalil was found to be stained with semen " (emphasis supplied)

Scope and purpose of section 342, Cr.P.C

15. Before examining the effect of statement of the appellant made under section 342, Cr.P.C, it is necessary to explore the scope and evidentiary value of a statement made under Section 342 of the Cr.P.C, which is reproduced below:-

342. Power to examine the accused. (1) For the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Court may, at any stage of any inquiry or trial without previously warning the accused, put such questions to him as the Court considers necessary, and shall for the purpose aforesaid, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence.

(2) The accused shall not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer such questions or by giving false answers to them; but the Court may draw such inference from such refusal or answer as it thinks just.

(3) The answers given by the accused may be taken into consideration in such inquiry or trial, and put in evidence for or against him in any other inquiry into, or trial for, any other offence which such answers may tend to show he has committed.

(4) Except as provided by subsection (2) of S. 340 no oath shall be administered to the accused. (emphasis supplied)

16. Bare reading of section 342, Cr.P.C shows that its primary purpose is to enable the accused to know and to explain and respond to the evidence brought against him by the prosecution. It is essential that attention of the accused must be brought to all the vital parts of the evidence brought against him by the prosecution, especially if he is an ignorant person who cannot be expected to know or understand what particular parts of the evidence are or are likely to be considered by the Court to be against him. The purpose is to establish a direct dialogue between the Court and the accused and to put every important incriminating piece of evidence to the accused and grant him an opportunity to answer and explain.[19] Muhammed Sharif, J. in Abdul Wahab[20] eloquently explained the object of section 342, Cr.P.C in the following words: "It should not ... be overlooked that the real object of section 342 is not to subject the accused to a detailed cross-examination. It is, as a matter of fact, inviting his attention to the point or points in the evidence which are likely to influence the mind of the judge in arriving at conclusions adverse to the accused, and before such an adverse inference can be drawn, the accused should be afforded an opportunity to offer an explanation, if he has any."

Status of a statement under section 342, Cr.P.C

17. The words "taken into consideration" appearing in section 342(3), Cr.P.C are very wide. The statement of an accused recorded under section 342, Cr.P.C, has no less probative value than any other "matter" which may be taken into consideration against him within the contemplation of the definition of "proved" given in Article 2(4) of the QSO[21] (previously section 3 of the Evidence Act, 1872), which states that a fact is said to be proved when, after considering the matters before it, the Court either believes it to exist, or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists. Muhammad Munir, J., in Rahim Bakhsh[22], regarding statement under section 342, Cr.P.C. wrote: "I know of no law which says that an admission made by an accused person in or out of court unless it is vitiated by any such circumstances as are mentioned in the Indian Evidence Act, cannot be considered to be a matter which the court may take into consideration in coming to its conclusion." The circumstances which can vitiate an admission or confession, referred to by the learned Judge, may be of inducement, threat or promise under which a particular statement is made. A statement under section 342, Cr.P.C. having been made by an accused before court in presence of his counsel has little chance of suffering from such circumstances.[23] However, an admission or confession which is improbable or unbelievable, or is not consistent with the overall facts and circumstances of a case may not have any probative value and thus cannot be relied upon by the court for reaching to a conclusion.[24]

Conviction on the basis of the statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C.

18. In Abdur Rehman,[25] Amin,[26] Mehrban,[27] Maqsood,[28] and Sattar,[29] the High Court disbelieved the prosecution evidence but convicted the accused persons for the offence punishable under section 302(c), P.P.C. or the erstwhile section 304-I, P.P.C. on the basis of the statements under section 342, Cr.P.C., of having committed the offences on account of grave and sudden provocation, without requiring them to prove their statements. This Court maintained the conviction recorded by the High Court, in those cases.

19. Hanif[30] and Ali Muhammad[31] may also be referred in this regard. In Hanif, this Court maintained the judgment of the trial court whereby the accused had been convicted for offence under section 302(c), P.P.C., after rejection of the prosecution evidence, on the basis of his plea of having committed the murder under the circumstances of grave and sudden provocation. In Ali Muhammad, this Court reversed the acquittal judgment of the High Court and convicted the accused under section 302(c), P.P.C., despite rejection of the prosecution evidence, on the basis of version of the accused taken in statement under section 342, Cr.P.C. The version of the accused, in that case, was that he saw the deceased and his wife lying on the same bed in an objectionable position, and acted under sting of grave and sudden provocation. In Shamoon,[32] this Court while relying upon the plea of the accused narrated in statement under section 342, Cr.P.C, of having acted under grave and sudden provocation converted his sentence from section 302, P.P.C. to 304-II, P.P.C., as both the Courts below had disbelieved the ocular testimony of the prosecution witnesses. This Court, in Gul Nissa,[33] made an explicit and unequivocal statement of law that "accused can be convicted on his own statement even if the prosecution evidence is rejected".

Principles governing section 342, Cr.P.C

20. The principles surrounding section 342, Cr.P.C have evolved for over a period of the last about two hundred years beginning with the case of Sarah Jones[34] (decided in 1827) and taking shape in Balmakund[35] as follows:

> "...where there is no other evidence to show affirmatively that any portion of the exculpatory element in the confession is false, the Court must accept or reject the confession as a whole and cannot accept only the inculpatory element while rejecting the exculpatory element as inherently incredible."

These principles have been refined and rearticulated by our own courts.

A. When prosecution fails to prove its case - the statement of the accused, under section 342 Cr.P.C. is to be considered in its entirety and accepted as a fact.

Sir Abdul Rashid J., the then Chief Justice of Federal Court of Pakistan observed in Rahim Bakhsh[36] that if the conviction of an accused is to be based solely on his statement in Court then that statement should be taken into consideration in its entirety. In Mehrban[37] S.A. Rahman J. speaking for a five member bench of this Court held that "[i]t was not open to the learned Judges, after having rejected the prosecution evidence as unreliable, to dissect the accused's statement and accept it in part and reject the rest of it." In Najib Raza[38] this Court agreed with Mahajan J. who observed that "it is settled law that an admission made by a person whether amounting to a confession or not cannot be split up and part of it used against him.[39]" In Faiz,[40] another five member Bench of this Court held that where the conviction is based entirely on the statement of the accused then the statement should be taken into consideration in its entirety as the reply or the narration of the accused "is not tested or completed either by cross-examining him or by putting him further questions. The state of his [accused's] mind is not prodded. His bare statement about it exists on record, for whatever its worth. In the absence of any other evidence, it has to be accepted as a fact"[41], and cannot be rejected by adopting a process of appraisement and analysis.[42] In Sultan,[43] Abdul Qadeer Chaudhry, J. spoke for the Court to hold that when the prosecution fails to setup a case against the accused and the entire evidence of the prosecution has been discarded and disbelieved the statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C has to be taken into consideration in toto (in its entirety) and the Court cannot select a portion out of the statement that goes against the accused.

B. The inculpatory part of the statement of the accused cannot be used or construed to fill up gaps in the case of the prosecution as the prosecution has to prove the case on its own evidence.

21. Sultan[44] went ahead to add that if there is prosecution evidence which disproves the exculpatory part of the statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C, then reliance can be placed on the inculpatory part of the statement by excluding the exculpatory part, but not otherwise. In other words, if the prosecution has proved a case against the accused beyond reasonable doubt, the court may, if it deems expedient to get further support, take into consideration also the inculpatory part of the statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C., only if the prosecution evidence negatives the exculpatory part of the statement and it can be safely severed from the inculpatory part but not otherwise. It is underlined that even if this exercise is not undertaken the conviction of the accused stands as the prosecution has already proved its case against the accused beyond reasonable doubt, on the basis of its evidence. The inculpatory part of the statement is not being considered to fill up gaps in the case of the prosecution but simply to draw support in a case already established by the prosecution and no more.

C. Where prosecution has failed and the statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C. is accepted in entirety, the court is then to give due effect to the statement of the accused, under the law, whether in favour of or against the accused.

22. Next comes the question, how such a statement of the accused when "accepted as a fact[45]" and taken in its entirety is to be given effect and acted upon, once the prosecution has failed to make out a case? Once the prosecution evidence is disbelieved, rejected or excluded from consideration, and the facts explained by the accused in his statement under section 342, Cr.P.C. are accepted entirely, the court is then to examine the said facts to give due effect to the statement of the accused, under the law, whether in favour of or against the accused.[46] The object of such examination is to determine whether or not the facts narrated by the accused constitute an offence under the law or fit into any exception of the offence provided under the law. In this respect, the observation of Sir Mukerji J., made in the case of Bhola Nath[47] is quoted to explain the purpose of this examination of the statement of the accused. The learned Judge observed, at page 5:

> "If on the whole of the statement of the accused, taken together, his guilt is established, and his plea, say, of acting in self-defence or of the case falling within any of the general or special exceptions (sic) is not made out on the facts admitted, there cannot be any bar to a conviction, simply because the prosecution evidence, by itself, would not have secured a conviction " (emphasis supplied)

This legal examination was also aptly explained and applied by Lobo C.J. in Gul Mahomed[48]. The learned Judge found that accepting the statement of the appellant as true, the act of the appellant in killing his wife and another was under grave provocation but it was not under sudden provocation. The facts narrated by the appellant though were accepted but those were found not to fit in the legal parameters of Exception-I to section 300, P.P.C. for making the case of the appellant as one of grave and sudden provocation. Likewise, this Court, in Muhammad Azam[49], though admitted the statement under section 342, Cr.P.C. as a whole, but found, even in those admitted facts, the accused to have exceeded in his right of self-defence and convicted him accordingly. In Sattar referred above the accused while explaining the circumstances in which he inflicted injuries to him, claimed to have acted in the exercise of right of self-defence. But the High Court though accepted his statement of facts in its entirety, but convicted him under section 304-I, P.P.C. by treating his version not to fit in the legal requirement of the valid exercise of right of self-defence as the accused as per his own version of facts had chased the deceased in street who was attempting to escape from the place of occurrence.

Summary of principles of law regarding Article 121, QSO and section 342 Cr. P. C.

23. We consider it appropriate to recapitulate and summarise key principles of law discussed in this judgment, regarding Article 121, QSO and section 342, Cr.P.C., for convenience, which are stated as under:

i. The burden, in a criminal case, to prove the guilt of the accused is always on the prosecution. Therefore, the court, in the first instance, is to discuss and assess the prosecution evidence, in order to arrive at the conclusion as to whether or not the prosecution has succeeded in proving the charge against the accused on the basis of its evidence.

ii. In a case where the accused has not taken any specific plea (e.g. self defence, grave and sudden provocation etc.) or has not produced any evidence in his defence, the court should decide the question of success or failure of the prosecution in proving the charge against the accused on the basis of the prosecution evidence alone.

iii. In a case where the accused has taken a specific plea or has produced evidence in his defence, the court should appraise the prosecution case and the defense version in juxtaposition, in order to arrive at a just conclusion. Even in such situation the burden remains on the prosecution to prove the necessary ingredients of the offence charged against the accused, and it does not shift upon the accused merely by taking a defence plea or producing evidence in his defence.

iv. The burden shifts upon the accused under Article 121 of the QSO to prove his defense plea, only when a prima facie case is made out against him by the prosecution on the basis of its evidence. If the prosecution fails to prove its case against the accused, the question of shifting of burden on the accused does not arise.

v. The primary purpose of section 342 Cr.P.C. is to enable the accused to know and to explain and respond to the evidence brought against him by the prosecution. A direct dialogue is established between the Court and the accused by putting every important incriminating piece of evidence to the accused and granting him an opportunity to answer and explain.

vi. If the prosecution fails to prove its case against the accused, the court can take into consideration the statement of the accused under section 342 Cr.P.C. whether in favour of or against the accused; but it must take into consideration that statement in its entirety and cannot select and place reliance on the inculpatory part of the statement only.

vii. In the last mentioned circumstance, the facts narrated by the accused in his statement under section 342 Cr.P.C. are to be accepted without requiring their proof. The court, however, should examine the said facts in order to give due effect to them under the law. The object of such examination is to determine whether or not the facts narrated by the accused constitute an offence under the law or fit into any exception of the offence provided under the law.

viii. An admission or confession made in statement under section 342 Cr.P.C., which is improbable or unbelievable, or is not consistent with the overall facts and circumstances of a case do not have any probative value and thus it cannot be relied upon by the court for reaching a conclusion.

24. The above settled principles of law when applied to the present case, we find that the prosecution has failed to prove the case against the appellant beyond reasonable doubt, on the basis of its evidence. We, therefore, revert to the defense plea and the statement of the appellant made under section 342, Cr.P.C., which is to be accepted in its entirety without requiring the proof under Article 121, QSO. The appellant, in his statement under section 342 Cr.P.C., has explained that he killed his sister and her paramour on grave and sudden provocation as he saw them committing zina when entered in his house at 03:00 am in the night, on his return from the hospital. His statement is not improbable or unbelievable, nor is it inconsistent with the overall facts and circumstances of the case; therefore, it can safely be relied and acted upon. Our culture and social values reflected in the jurisprudence[50] developed so far is that an act of illicit sex with a female family member of the offender is considered sufficient to cause provocation so grave and sudden that it would deprive the offender of the power of self-control. The arguments on behalf of the complainant have been made only to convince this Court to believe the prosecution story, though they could not succeed; and it has not even been argued that the facts and circumstances narrated by the appellant under which he committed the murder of Raheel Arif, if admitted to be correct, do not constitute grave and sudden provocation. In the light of the scope and meaning of grave and sudden provocation discussed in para 13 above, the statement of the appellant when taken as a whole, establishes grave and sudden provocation. The case of the appellant to the extent of murder of Raheel Arif, therefore, falls within the scope of section 302(c) P.P.C; hence, his appeal is partly allowed to the extent of the impugned judgment of the High Court. The judgment of the High Court whereby the appellant was convicted under section 302(b) P.P.C. for the murder of Raheel Arif is set aside, while that of the Trial Court convicting the appellant under section 302(c) P.P.C. is restored. However, the sentence of the appellant is modified. The appellant is sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a period of 15 years, in the peculiar circumstances of the case. He is also directed to pay compensation of Rs.100,000/- (one hundred thousand) to the legal heirs of the deceased, in terms of section 544-A, Code of Criminal Procedure, and in default whereof to undergo simple imprisonment for six months. Benefit of Section 382-B, Code of Criminal Procedure is extended to the appellant. Consequently, criminal petition for leave to appeal filed by the complainant for enhancement of the sentence of the appellant from life imprisonment to death is dismissed for being without merit and leave to appeal is refused.

25. Foregoing are the reasons for our short order of even date.

MWA/A-2/S Order accordingly.

Criminal Petition No.74-L of 2018, decided on 13th March, 2020.

(On appeal from the judgment of the Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 30.10.2017, passed in Crl. A. No. 146 of 2016 and W.P. No.33366 of 2016).

(a) Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXV of 1997)---

----S. 32(2)---Vehicle used in transportation of narcotics---Confiscation of such vehicle---Scope---Under S.32(2) of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 vehicles, vessels and other conveyances were liable to confiscation if they were used in carrying both narcotics or narcotics along with lawful drugs and substances---Vehicles, vessels and other conveyances were liable to confiscation irrespective whether they were used in carrying narcotics alone or joint category of narcotics and lawful drugs and substance.

(b) Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXV of 1997)---

----Ss. 32(2) & 74, proviso---Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S.516-A---Superdari/custody of vehicle used in transportation of narcotic---Scope---Applicant could seek release of a vehicle on superdari, which had been seized under the Control of Narcotic Substances Act 1997 and was a case property in a criminal case; if the applicant could show that he was the lawful owner of the vehicle; and that he was neither the accused nor an associate or a relative of the accused or an individual having any nexus with the accused.

Under the proviso to section 74 of Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 ('the 1997 Act'), the provisions of Cr.P.C to the extent of custody and disposal of a conveyance under general law were not applicable under the 1997 Act. Vehicle used in the commission of an offence under the 1997 Act could not be released or given on custody (superdari) to the accused or any of his associate or relative or any private individual till the conclusion of the case.

Joint reading of sections 32 and 74 of the 1997 Act showed that an applicant could seek release of a vehicle on superdari, which had been seized under the 1997 Act and was a case property in a criminal case; if the applicant could show that he was the lawful owner of the vehicle; that he was neither the accused nor an associate or a relative of the accused or an individual having any nexus with the accused. While the prosecution had to show/prove that the applicant knew that the offence was being or was to be committed. It was during trial that the prosecution had to prove that the owner knew that the offence was being or was to be committed. Under section 33 if the vehicle was finally held not liable to confiscation it could be released to its owner. As a corollary, where the court could pass a final order, it could also pass an interim order, therefore, a vehicle could also be released as an interim measure or temporarily on superdari under the 1997 Act after the court was prime facie satisfied regarding the ownership of the applicant and the absence of the association of the owner with the accused and the commission of the offence. Applicant while asserting his ownership of the vehicle must specify in his application for superdari how he was deprived of the vehicle, how and when he found out that his vehicle was missing, and the legal proceedings initiated by him thereafter, if any.

(c) Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXV of 1997)---

----S. 32(2)---Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 516-A---Motor Vehicles Ordinance (XIX of 1965), S. 2(24)---Superdari of vehicle used in transportation of narcotic---Scope---Ownership of vehicle - Proof - Vehicle on 'open transfer letter' - Applicant must be the owner of the vehicle prior to the commission of the offence---Open transfer letter was not a valid document of title and it did not transfer ownership of a vehicle in terms of the Motor Vehicles Ordinance, 1965---Legal title of a vehicle confiscated under the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 stood frozen till the conclusion of the trial and as a result the owner stood cautioned not to deal or transact with the title of the vehicle till the conclusion of the trial.

In the present case, the applicant/petitioner moved an application for seeking superdari of the vehicle on 20-11-2015, described himself as the owner of the vehicle, but at the time, he only had an open transfer letter. Open transfer letter was not a valid document of title and it did not transfer ownership of a vehicle in terms of the Motor Vehicles Ordinance, 1965. Subsequently, the vehicle was duly registered in the name of the applicant on 21-01-2016, which was too late as at the time of alleged commission of the offence, the seizure of the vehicle and the registration of the criminal case on 20-08-2015 the applicant was not the owner of the vehicle. Applicant must be the owner of the vehicle prior to the commission of the offence.

On 20-08-2015, when the applicant made application for superdari of the vehicle, he was not the owner of the vehicle and, therefore, did not pass the requirement laid down in proviso to section 32 of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 ('the 1997 Act'). Further, the applicant did not assert a word, in the application, to show that he was not an associate or relative of the accused or an individual having any nexus with the accused or the offence. His failure to explain how the vehicle, whose ownership he claimed, had gone into the possession and use of the accused was fatal to his prayer for superdari of the same. As the petitioner had failed to establish his ownership of the vehicle, there was no reason to burden the prosecution to show if the applicant was aware of the commission of the offence. Application made for release of the vehicle by the applicant was, therefore, not maintainable, and was wrongly allowed by the trial court.

Vehicle was registered in the name of the applicant by the Motor Registration Authority under the Motor Vehicles Ordinance, 1965, when the vehicle had already been seized by the police and had become case property in a criminal case, hence becoming liable to confiscation under the 1997 Act. As a result the disposal of the vehicle came under the control of the court and the owner stood cautioned not to deal or transact with the title of the vehicle till the conclusion of the trial. In fact there was a freeze on the legal title of the owner of the vehicle till the conclusion of the trial. The rationale behind this being that any transfer or change in the title of the vehicle (case property) would undermine the safe administration of criminal justice system; as any such transfer (registration of the vehicle in the name of a third party) would amount to interference in the powers of the criminal court and in eroding the sanctity and security of the evidence in an ongoing criminal trial. Therefore, transfer of ownership of the vehicle by the Motor Registration Authority on 21-01-2016 was not permissible and was, therefore, without lawful authority.

Supreme Court directed that the Provincial Government, and Chief Commissioner, ICT should consider amendment(s) in the Motor Vehicles Ordinance, 1965 and the Rules thereunder to prevent registration of vehicles involved in the commission of crime; that in addition, the Provincial Governments and ICT may consider that the Motor Registration Authority and the police develop an online verification system to identify vehicles involved in the commission of crime; that the transferor/transferee at the time of registration of the vehicle may be required to obtain a No Objection Certificate from the police or to submit an Affidavit to the effect that the vehicle was not involved in any criminal case.

(d) Motor Vehicles Ordinance (XIX of 1965)---

----Ss. 27 & 32---Transfer of ownership of vehicle in favour of subsequent transferee---Physical verification of vehicle---Requirement of S.27 of the Motor Vehicles Ordinance, 1965 regarding physical verification of the vehicle prior to registration was an essential requirement and was fully applicable to subsequent registrations of vehicles under S.32 of the Ordinance.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Upon a spy-information, the Police conducted a raid by intercepting a vehicle, i.e., Toyota Corolla bearing registration No. UH 608 (the "Vehicle") and apprehended its two passengers. The Police allegedly recovered narcotics and weapons from the Vehicle, as well as, from the passengers. In this background a criminal case (FIR No. 397) was registered against the two passengers at Police Station Mustafabad, District Lahore on 20.08.2015 under the provisions of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 (the "CNSA") and the Arms Ordinance, 1965. The Police also seized the Vehicle on the same day. According to the Report submitted before this Court by the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore dated 24.11.2018, the trial of the case is pending adjudication and the Additional Prosecutor General has not stated otherwise.

2. Brief facts, pertaining to the instant matter, are that during trial, the petitioner, claiming himself to be the "owner" of the Vehicle and not being an accused in the case, submitted an application before the trial court on 20.11.2015 for release of the Vehicle to him on superdari. The petitioner asserted in the application that he was the owner of the Vehicle and if the Vehicle was not handed over to him he would suffer irreparable loss; besides, there was a probability that the Vehicle may suffer damage in the possession of the Police.

3. The trial court allowed the application for superdari vide order dated 18.12.2015 with the direction to hand over the custody of the Vehicle to the petitioner. The State challenged the order in appeal before the High Court. As the Vehicle had not been released, the petitioner also filed a writ petition praying that the Police be directed to hand over the Vehicle to him in compliance with the order of the trial court. The High Court allowed the appeal of the State and dismissed the writ petition filed by the petitioner vide impugned consolidated Order dated 30.10.2017, on the ground that the petitioner could not establish his ownership of the Vehicle on the basis of an open transfer letter. Learned counsel for the petitioner has pointed out, that the Vehicle was subsequently registered in the name of the petitioner by the relevant Authority on 21.01.2016. Admittedly, the registration of the Vehicle in favour of the petitioner has been made after the commission of the offence; the seizure of the Vehicle by the Police; and the registration of the criminal case.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties, gone through the record of the case, considered the submissions of the officials of the Motor Registration Authority ("Authority") and examined the relevant law.

5. This case brings up for determination two distinct yet interconnected legal issues. First, whether a vehicle involved in the commission of an offence under CNSA, after being seized by the Police and put up before the court as case property, can be temporarily released on superdari? And second, whether a vehicle that has been seized and is a case property in a criminal case under the Act can be transferred and registered in the name of a third party by the Authority under the Motor Vehicles Ordinance, 1965 (the "MVO") till the conclusion of the trial and the final disposal or confiscation of the vehicle by the court?

A. Release of Vehicle (Case Property) on Superdari under CNSA

6. Under the scheme of general criminal law, a vehicle seized by the Police and having become case property, can be released on custody (superdari), during the trial, under section 516-A or an order be made for its disposal to the person entitled to its possession by the Magistrate under section 523 of the Cr.P.C. Things are, however, different under the CNSA which does not envisage release of a conveyance (vehicle, etc.) during the trial, except as provided in the proviso to sections 32(2) and 74 of CNSA. Examining the scheme of the Act, we note that section 32 deals with Articles connected with narcotics in the following manner:-

32. Articles connected with narcotics.---(1) Whenever any offence has been committed which is punishable under this Act, the narcotic drug, psychotropic substance or controlled substance, materials, apparatus and utensils in respect of which, or by means of which, such offence has been committed shall be liable to confiscation.

(2) Any narcotic drug, psychotropic substance or controlled substance lawfully imported, transported, manufactured, possessed, or sold along with, or in addition to, any narcotic drug, psychotropic substance or controlled substance which is liable to confiscation under subsection (1) and the receptacles or packages, and the vehicles, vessels and other conveyances used in carrying such drugs and substances shall likewise be liable to confiscation:

Provided that no vehicle, vessel or other conveyance shall be liable to confiscation unless it is proved that the owner thereof knew that the offence was being, or was to be, committed.

7. The word "narcotics" in the title of the section refers to narcotic drugs, psychotropic substance or controlled substance in respect of which an offence has been committed under the CNSA (hereinafter referred to as "narcotics"). Sub-section (1) of section 32 provides that any narcotics or materials, apparatus and utensils in respect of which or by means of which an offence punishable under CNSA has been committed shall be liable to confiscation. It is pointed out that section 32(1) does not refer to any conveyance including a vehicle used in the commission of the offence. Subsection (2) of section 32 deals with articles, which are connected with narcotics; These articles are (i) narcotic drug, psychotropic substance or controlled substance lawfully imported, transported, manufactured, possessed or sold (for convenience referred to as " lawful drugs and substances" as compared to "narcotics" mentioned above) along with or in addition to, any narcotics and articles like of (ii) receptacles or packages, and the vehicles, vessels and other conveyances used in carrying such drugs and substances. Both the set of articles mentioned in (i) and (ii) above are liable to confiscation. Therefore, vehicles, vessels and other conveyances are liable to confiscation if they are used in carrying both narcotics or narcotics along with lawful drugs and substances.

8. We wish to point out that at first blush, reading of section 32(2) does create an impression that the vehicles, vessels and other conveyances liable to confiscation are only those which are used in carrying joint category of narcotics and lawful drugs and substance. However, a more holistic reading of the provision shows that it would be absurd to imagine that only vehicles, vessels and other conveyances carrying joint category of narcotics and lawful drugs and substances are liable to confiscation, while vehicles, vessels and other conveyances carrying narcotics alone are not liable to confiscation. Therefore, the second set of articles connected with narcotics i.e., vehicles, vessels and other conveyances are liable to confiscation irrespective whether that are used in carrying narcotics alone or joint category of narcotics and lawful drugs and substance.

9. The proviso to section 32 excludes certain vehicles, vessels and other conveyances from being liable to confiscation. According to the proviso unless it is proved that the owner of the vehicles, vessels and other conveyances knew that the offence was being or was to be committed, the vehicles, vessels and other conveyances are not liable to confiscation.

10. This view is further strengthened by the proviso to section 74 of CNSA, which provides:

74. Application of other laws. If an offence punishable under this Act, is also an offence in any other law for the time being in force, nothing in that law shall prevent the offender from being punished under this Act:

Provided that nothing contained in Section 523 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Act V of 1898), or any other provision of the said Code or any other law for time being in force, the custody of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances, controlled substances, any material utensils used for production or manufacture of such drugs or substances or any conveyance used in > import, export, transport or transshipment thereof or for commission of an offence under this Act, shall not be given on custody to the accused or any of his associate or relative or any private individual till the conclusion of the case except as provided in the second proviso to subsection (2) of section 33.

Under the proviso to section 74 of CNSA, the provisions of Cr.P.C to the extent of custody and disposal of a conveyance under general law are not applicable under CNSA. A vehicle used in the commission of an offence under CNSA cannot be released or given on custody (superdari) to the accused or any of his associate or relative or any private individual till the conclusion of the case. The terms "associate" and "relative" have been defined in clauses (b) and (z-b) of section 2 of CNSA, and the expression "any private individual" used in the proviso to section 74 has been explained by this Court in the case of Allah Ditta[1] to be an individual who has some nexus with the offender or the offence.

11. Joint reading of sections 32 and 74 of CNSA show that an applicant can seek release of a vehicle on superdari, which has been seized under CNSA and is a case property in a criminal case; if the applicant can show that he is the lawful owner of the vehicle; that he is neither the accused nor an associate or a relative of the accused or an individual having any nexus with the accused. While the prosecution has to show that the applicant knew that the offence was being or was to be committed. See Allah Ditta[2]. Under section 33 if the vehicle is finally held not liable to confiscation it can be released to its owner. As a corollary, where the court can pass a final order, it can also pass an interim order. See Abdul Salam[3]. Therefore, a vehicle can also be released as an interim measure or temporarily on superdari under CNSA after the court is prime facie satisfied regarding the ownership of the applicant and the absence of the association of the owner with the accused and the commission of the offence. The applicant while asserting his ownership of the vehicle must specify in his application for superdari how he was deprived of the vehicle, how and when he found out that his vehicle was missing, and the legal proceedings initiated by him thereafter, if any. This becomes important in the light of section 109 of MVO which attracts criminal liability if one drives a vehicle without the consent of the owner. On the other hand, in order to oppose the release of vehicle on superdari, the prosecution has to prima facie show from the record that the owner knew that the offence was being or was to be, committed. It is underlined that it is during the trial that the prosecution has to prove that the owner knew that the offence was being or was to be, committed.

12. Coming to the facts of the present case, the first and the foremost condition is that the petitioner must be the "owner" of the vehicle. "Owner" is defined in section 2(24) of MVO to mean a person in whose name the motor vehicle is registered and includes the transferee. Transferee must be duly registered under MVO. In the present case, the petitioner moved an application for seeking superdari of the Vehicle on 20.11.2015, described himself as the owner of the Vehicle, but at the time, he only had an open transfer letter. An open transfer letter is not a valid document of title[4] and it does not transfer ownership of a vehicle in terms of MVO. Subsequently, the Vehicle was duly registered in the name of the petitioner on 21.01.2016. This was too late as at the time of alleged commission of the offence, the seizure of the Vehicle and the registration of the criminal case on 20.08.2015 the petitioner was not the owner of the Vehicle. An applicant must be the owner of the vehicle prior to the commission of the offence. The registration certificate of the Vehicle shows that the original owner of the Vehicle was Muslim Khan, who sold the Vehicle to Asif Kamal and then finally the Vehicle was transferred in the name of the petitioner on 21.01.2016. Asif Kamal, was the owner of the vehicle at the time of the offence, but did not approach the court to seek release of the Vehicle. On 20.08.2015, when the petitioner made application for superdari of the Vehicle, he was not the owner of the Vehicle and, therefore, does not pass the requirement laid down in proviso to section 32 of CNSA.

13. Further, the petitioner did not assert a word, in the application, to show that he was not an associate or relative of the accused or an individual having any nexus with the accused or the offence. His failure to explain how the Vehicle, whose ownership he claims, had gone into the possession and use of the accused was fatal to his prayer for superdari of the same. As the petitioner has failed to establish his ownership of the Vehicle, we see no reason to burden the prosecution to show if the petitioner was aware of the commission of the offence. The application made for release of the Vehicle by the petitioner was, therefore, not maintainable, and was wrongly allowed by the trial court.

B. Transfer of ownership of a seized vehicle and its registration under the Ordinance

14. The Vehicle was registered in the name of the petitioner by the Motor Registration Authority under MVO when the Vehicle had already been seized by the Police and had become case property in a criminal case, hence becoming liable to confiscation under CNSA. As a result the disposal of the vehicle comes under the control of the court and the owner stands cautioned not to deal or transact with the title of the vehicle till the conclusion of the trial. Infact there is a freeze on the legal title of the owner of the vehicle till the conclusion of the trial. The rationale behind this being that any transfer or change in the title of the vehicle (case property) would undermine the safe administration of criminal justice system; as any such transfer (registration of the vehicle in the name of a third party) would amount to interference in the powers of the criminal court and in eroding the sanctity and security of the evidence in an ongoing criminal trial. Therefore, transfer of ownership of the Vehicle by the Motor Registration Authority on 21.01.2016 was not permissible and is, therefore, without lawful authority.

15. Section 23 of MVO provides that no person shall drive a vehicle or no owner shall permit the vehicle to be driven in any place unless the vehicle is registered in accordance with provisions of MVO. Section 27 requires physical production of the vehicle before the Authority or any authority as the Government may appoint for this purpose, in order that the Authority is satisfied that the particulars contained in the application are true and the vehicle complies with the requirements of Chapter VI and of the Rules thereunder. Physical verification of the vehicle prior to registration has many advantages. First, it helps the registering authority verify that the vehicle being registered is the same as mentioned in the application form (Form F), e.g. class of vehicle, type of body, maker's name, year of manufacture, etc. Second, it confirms that the vehicle physically exists at the time of registration and thirdly, the owner is in lawful possession of the vehicle (moveable property). Section 32 provides for transfer of ownership in favour of a subsequent transferee. We see no reason why the process of registration of a vehicle provided under section 27 be any different for the vehicle being registered subsequently in the name of a new transferee and for any further transfers. The importance of physical verification remains equally important in subsequent transfers, as has come to surface in the instant case, where a vehicle allegedly involved in the commission of a crime, which had been seized by the police and was a case property in a criminal case, yet it was registered in the name of the petitioner on the basis of wrongful assumption that the transferor holds an absolute legal title of the Vehicle and is in lawful possession of the same. The application for registration (Form F) or the application for transfer of ownership, rests upon a fundamental assumption that the vehicle is in lawful ownership and possession of the owner of the vehicle. In order to effectively regulate the vehicles under MVO, physical verification of the vehicle at the time of registration and its subsequent registration is critical and is also in the public interest besides advancing the purposes of MVO. Physical verification of the vehicle also helps actualize sections 34 and 35 of MVO dealing with suspension and cancellation of registration of the vehicle. We, therefore, hold that the requirement of section 27 regarding physical verification of the vehicle prior to registration is an essential requirement and is fully applicable to subsequent registrations of vehicles under section 32 of MVO. We, therefore, refer the matter relating to the registration of the Vehicle in favour of the petitioner dated 21.01.2016 to the concerned Motor Registration Authority for necessary action under the law.

Direction to the Government, Motor Registration Authority and the Police.

16. We deem it appropriate to direct the Provincial Government, and Chief Commissioner, ICT to consider amendment(s) in MVO and the Rules thereunder to prevent registration of vehicles involved in the commission of crime as discussed above. In addition, the Provincial Governments and ICT may consider that the Motor Registration Authority and the Police develop an online verification system to identify vehicles involved in the commission of crime. The transferor/ transferee at the time of registration of the vehicle may be required to obtain a No Objection Certificate from the Police or to submit an Affidavit to the effect that the vehicle is not involved in any criminal case.

17. For what has been discussed above we find that the order of the trial court whereby the petitioner had been allowed superdari of the Vehicle was not sustainable under the law and was, therefore, rightly set aside by the High Court. We uphold the impugned order, decline leave and dismiss this petition, with the above direction to the Provincial Governments and ICT, Motor Registration Authority and the Police. The Deputy Registrar of this Court at the Lahore Branch Registry shall send copy of this order to the Secretaries, Excise and Taxation Department of all the Provincial Governments and Director, Excise and Taxation Department, ICT, as well as, Inspectors General Police of the respective Governments, for information and appropriate action at their end. These are the reasons for our short order dated 13.03.2020.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.--Leave has been sought against order of the Lahore High Court whereby second bail application of the petitioner (a juvenile offender) moved on statutory ground was dismissed. Briefly, according to the crime report on the night of 21.05.2018, the complainant and his brother left their house on their motorcycle to attend to some domestic errands. On the way, two unknown persons on a motorcycle, came up from behind and over-powered them and demanded to handover their mobiles and cash to them. As the brother of the complainant resisted, one of the two unknown persons shot him in his left leg and thereafter both fled away. In this background FIR No. 241 of 2018 was registered on 22.05.2018 at Thana Lower Mall, Lahore against the petitioner and his co-accused, initially under section 394, P.P.C. and later on as the brother of the complainant succumbed to his injuries and died, offence under section 302, P.P.C. was added to the crime report.

2. The first bail application of the petitioner was dismissed on merit by both the courts below on 29.08.2018 and 26.12.2018, respectively. Thereafter, charge was framed against the petitioner on 8.04.2019 and the petitioner on 22.04.2019 moved an application seeking declaration of his juvenility at the time of the crime, having been born on 01.01.2001 according to Form "B" maintained by NADRA. He also moved an application on 24.4.2019 for an ossification test. After examining the birth certificate issued by NADRA, the medical report and the ossification test, the trial court declared the petitioner to be a juvenile on 27.11.2019. Thereafter, on 11.02.2020 the petitioner moved the second bail application on the basis of statutory ground as he was arrested on 7.06.2018. The bail applications were dismissed by both the courts below, hence the instant petition for leave to appeal.

3. The learned prosecutor and the counsel for the complainant, opposed the bail on two main grounds: they relied on the proviso to section 10(7) of the Juvenile Justice System Ordinance, 2000 ("Juvenile Ordinance") to submit that if the juvenile is over 15 years of age, bail can be refused to him if he is involved in a heinous crime or has a previous criminal record; and that the delay in the trial caused in determining the age of juvenility on the application of the petitioner is a delay attributable to the petitioner and not to the prosecution. Learned counsel for the petitioner, however, argued otherwise to submit that the petitioner is entitled to bail on statutory ground under the law.

4. After hearing the parties, we felt it important to reproduce sections 7 and 10 (7) of the Juvenile Ordinance and sections 4(7), 6 (5) and 8 of the Juvenile Justice System Act, 2018 ("Juvenile Act") which repealed the Juvenile Ordinance. It is important to highlight that the Juvenile Act came into force on 18.05.2018[1] while the occurrence, as reported in the crime report took place on 21.5.2018. Juvenile Act was, therefore, fully applicable to the case in hand.

Sections 7 and 10 (7) of the Juvenile Ordinance:

7. Determination of age. If a question arises as to whether a person before it is a child for the purposes of this Ordinance, the juvenile Court shall record a finding after such inquiry which shall include a medical report for determination of the age of the child.

10. Arrest and bail.-

(7) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code and except where a juvenile court is of the opinion that the delay in the trial of the accused has been occasioned by an act or omission of the accused or any other person acting on his behalf or in exercise of any right or privilege under any law for the time being in force, a child who, for commission of an offence, has been detained, shall be released on bail,-

(a) if, being accused of an offence punishable with death has been detained for such an offence for a continuous period exceeding one year and whose trial for such an offence has not concluded;

(b) if, being accused of any offence punishable for imprisonment for life has been detained for such an offence for a continuous period exceeding six months and whose trial for such offence has not concluded; or

(c) who, being accused of any offence not punishable with death, or imprisonment for life, has been detained for such an offence for a continuous period exceeding four months and whose trial for such an offence has not concluded:

Provided that where a child of the age of fifteen years or above is arrested, the Court may refuse to grant bail if there are reasonable grounds to believe that such child is involved in an offence which in its opinion is serious, heinous, gruesome, brutal, sensational in character or shocking to public morality or he is a previous convict of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

Sections 4(7), 6 (5) and 8 of the Juvenile Act:

4. Juvenile Court.-

(7) If any court taking cognizance of an offence finds that an accused brought before it is a juvenile, it shall transfer his case to the Juvenile Court for further proceedings.

6. Release of a juvenile on bail.-

(5) Where the Juvenile Court is of the opinion that the delay in the trial of a juvenile has not been occasioned by an act or omission of such juvenile or any other person acting on his behalf or in exercise of any right or privilege under any law for the time being in force, such juvenile shall be released on bail if he has been detained for a continuous period exceeding six months and whose trial has not been completed.

8. Determination of age. (i) Where a person alleged to have committed an offence physically appears or claims to be a juvenile for the purpose of this Act, the officer-in-charge of the police station or the investigation officer shall make an inquiry to determine the age of such person on the basis of his birth certificate, educational certificates or any other pertinent documents. ln absence of such documents, age of such accused person may be determined on the basis of a medical examination report by a medical officer.

(2) When an accused person who physically appears to be a juvenile for the purpose of this Act is brought before a Court under section 167 of the Code, the Court before granting further detention shall record its findings regarding age on the basis of available record including the report submitted by the police or medical examination report by a medical officer.

Determination of age

5. The determination of the age or juvenility of the accused under the Juvenile Ordinance was the responsibility of the trial court, requiring the trial court to hold an inquiry including obtaining a medical report for the determination of age. However, this process underwent change under section 8 of the Juvenile Act, wherein if the accused physically appears or claims to be a juvenile, the Police shall make an inquiry to determine the age of the accused on the basis of his birth certificate, educational certificate or any other pertinent document. In the absence of such documents, age of such accused person may be determined on the basis of a medical examination report by a medical officer. Therefore, the Police are to determine the juvenility of the accused and thereafter the case is put up before the Juvenile Court for trial. Section 8(2) provides that if the accused physically appears to be a juvenile when brought before a court (of general criminal jurisdiction) under section 167 Cr.P.C the court shall before granting further detention record its finding regarding age of the accused. Section 4(7) of the Juvenile Act provides that a criminal court of general jurisdiction can find the accused to be a juvenile and thereafter transfer the case to the juvenile court for further proceedings. Therefore, in the absence of any inquiry by the Police the determination of age and juvenility of the accused can be determined by the court having taken cognizance of the matter. This is what happened in the instant case, when the court declared the petitioner to be a juvenile on the application of the petitioner.

6. Determination of age of an accused who appears or claims to be a juvenile is, therefore, initially the statutory responsibility of the Police. In the absence of which, the court of general jurisdiction enjoys the power to determine the age of the accused, and if declared to be a juvenile, transfer the case to the concerned Juvenile Court. In the instant case, the Police had not carried out any such exercise and therefore the court on the application of the petitioner issued the required declaration. The determination of age by the court is also a statutory obligation, hence the time spent in obtaining the said finding or declaration by the court cannot possibly be termed as delay caused in the trial by the accused, so as to deprive him of his right to bail on the ground of statutory delay. Any such determination of age by the court is a statutory requirement and forms part of the trial.

Trial and the period of statutory delay

7. The period of statutory delay of one year for offences punishable for death under the Juvenile Ordinance has been reduced to six months under the Juvenile Act and the proviso under section 10(7) of the erstwhile Ordinance stating that bail may be refused to a juvenile offender if he is 15 years of age or above and there are reasonable grounds to believe that the juvenile is involved in a heinous offence or is a previous convict for an offence punishable under death or imprisonment for life, has been repealed under the new Juvenile Act. Section 6(5) of the Juvenile Act provides that the juvenile will be entitled to be released on bail if he has been detained for a continuous period exceeding six months while his trial has not been concluded, unless the delay has been occasioned by the act or omission of such a juvenile. The petitioner was arrested on 7.06.2018 and the petitioner was declared a juvenile on 27.11.2019 the trial has still not been concluded. The second bail application on statutory ground was moved on 11.12.2019 which is much after the period of six months from the date of arrest as provided under section 6(5) of the Juvenile Act. For the above reasons the petitioner being a juvenile offender was entitled to bail on statutory ground.

9(sic). These are the reasons for our short order dated 20.05.2020 reproduced hereunder for convenience and completion of record. The instant petition is, therefore, converted into an appeal and allowed.

> "For reasons to be recorded later, the instant criminal petition is converted into an appeal and the same is hereby allowed. Appellant Saleem Khan is allowed bail (in the instant FIR) subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.200,000/- (Rupees two hundred thousand) with one surety in the like amount, to the satisfaction of the trial court."

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Legal question regarding the scope of Appeal provided under section 124 of the Insurance Ordinance, 2000 ("Ordinance") has come up before us. This question emerges from the following factual background: Respondent policy holder filed an application for the recovery of insurance claim and liquidated damages under his Crop Insurance Policy against the insurer (the petitioner) before the Insurance Tribunal ("Tribunal") under the Ordinance. In the course of these proceedings the right of the petitioner to file its written reply was closed vide order dated 28.03.2018 of the Tribunal. This order was challenged by the petitioner before the High Court by invoking the constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution. The writ petition was dismissed vide impugned order dated 30.05.2018, inter alia, on the ground that alternate remedy of a statutory appeal was available against the said order under section 124(2) of the Ordinance.

2. Learned counsel for the petitioner argued that the constitutional petition was maintainable against order dated 28.03.2018 as appeal under section 124(2) of the Ordinance has a limited scope and is available against decisions that finally adjudicate upon the insurance claim or the penalty thereof. He also pointed out that different High Courts have expressed conflicting opinions and therefore a definitive opinion of this Court will help clarify the legal position. He referred to State Life Insurance Corporation of Pakistan through Chairman and another v. Additional District Judge-I and another (2010 CLD 845), UBL Insurers Limited v. Ashiq Hussain and another (2014 CLC 1155), Hashwani Hotels Limited through Senior Manager v. Sindh Insurance Tribunal, Karachi (2016 CLD 1790) and State Life Insurance Corporation of Pakistan through Attorney v. Additional District Judge and others (2019 CLD 144). Learned counsel for the respondent supported the impugned judgment.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the Ordinance and the case law cited before us. Section 124 of the Ordinance provides as under:-

> 124. Appeal.- (1) Subject to the right of appeal conferred by subsection (2) hereof, the decision of the Tribunal on any application shall be final and shall not be questioned in any Court or before any other authority.
>
> (2) Any party aggrieved by a decision of the Tribunal may, if the amount of the claim in dispute or the penalty prescribed, as the case may be, is not less than one hundred thousand rupees, prefer an appeal to the High Court within a period of thirty days from the date of such decision.
> (3) An appeal under subsection (2) shall be heard by a Bench of not less than two judges of the High Court having territorial jurisdiction over the relevant Tribunal.

Under the statutory scheme of the Ordinance, not all decisions or orders of the Tribunal are appealable under Section 124. Infact under section 124(1) the Ordinance provides that these decisions on miscellaneous applications shall not be questioned before any court or authority. However, section 124(2) provides that if any party is aggrieved by a decision of a Tribunal which decides a claim in dispute or the penalty prescribed of an amount of not less than one hundred thousand rupees may prefer an appeal under section 124(2) before the High Court. Section 124(2), therefore, refers to the final decision regarding the insurance claim or the penalty prescribed. Any such appeal is to be heard by a bench of not less than two judges of the High Court having territorial jurisdiction over the relevant Tribunal. Limiting the right of appeal to a select category of final decisions, the legislative design of the Ordinance is to provide for an expeditious disposal of insurance claims.

4. There can be a variety of decisions passed on miscellaneous applications during the course of the proceedings before the Tribunal with varying consequences on the parties to the proceedings. Irrespective of the gravity of these decisions/orders on the parties, the statutory scheme of the Ordinance remains neutral and does not provide for a right of statutory appeal against any of these decisions. So like in the instant case where the right to file written statement of the petitioner has been closed, is the petitioner to accept his fate and wait to file an appeal after the final decision of the Tribunal or does he have a remedy?

5. Remedy is available outside the legislative framework of the Ordinance and on a constitutional plane. It is axiomatic and by now a judicial cliche that sub-constitutional legislation cannot curtail or abridge the jurisdiction of the constitutional court. Legislature, being the creature of the Constitution cannot take away the jurisdiction of a constitutional court conferred by the Constitution[1]. The Ordinance is a sub-constitutional legislation and cannot control the constitutional remedy available under Article 199 of the Constitution. While the constitutional courts may consider the legislative object and purpose of a statute, still they cannot shut their doors to an aggrieved person who invokes the constitutional jurisdiction of the court under Article 199 of the Constitution. This well settled constitutional principle loudly resonates through our jurisprudence[2].

6. Order dated 28.03.2018 passed against the petitioner by the Tribunal through which the right to file a written statement has been denied, does not fall within the purview of Section 124(2) of the Ordinance and can only be challenged by invoking the constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 199 of the Constitution. It is then for the constitutional court to examine whether such a petition meets the requirements of Article 199 and requires interference in the light of the established jurisprudential principles that guide a constitutional court. The constitutional court may also consider the decision in the overall scheme of the Ordinance under which it arises and give due deference to the legislative object and purpose. The views expressed by the High Courts in Hashwani Hotels Limited through Senior Manager v. Sindh Insurance Tribunal, Karachi (2016 CLD 1790) and State Life Insurance Corporation of Pakistan through Chairman and another v. Additional District Judge-I and another (2010 CLD 845) regarding the nature of appeal under section 124 of the Ordinance and the right to access to a constitutional court are correct.

7. We have noticed that the High Court while holding that the petitions before the High Court are not maintainable due to the statutory remedy of appeal under section 124, went ahead and gave a finding on the merits of the case, which was not appropriate. We were minded to remand the matter to the High Court to decide the case afresh, on merits. However, at this stage learned counsel for the respondent, on instructions, conceded that he has no objection, as far as the merits of the case are concerned, if order dated 28.03.2018 passed by the Tribunal is set aside and the petitioner is allowed to file its written statement, before the Tribunal, provided this Court directs the Tribunal to decide the matter expeditiously.

8. While holding that constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution can be invoked to challenge miscellaneous decisions passed during the course of proceedings before the Tribunal covered under section 124(1) of the Ordinance, we on the concession of the learned counsel on merits set aside order dated 28.03.2018 passed by the Tribunal, as well as, the impugned order. The parties are directed to appear before the Tribunal on 20.07.2020 when the petitioner company will file its written statement and therefrom the Tribunal shall proceed further and decide the matter strictly in accordance with law definitely before the close of this year.

9. We are aware that the petitioner could have filed an intra-court appeal under Section 3 of the Law Reforms Ordinance, 1972 against the impugned order but considering that there are conflicting judgments of the two High Courts on the interpretation of Section 124 of the Ordinance and also that the learned counsel for the respondent has conceded that the petitioners be allowed to file their written statement and keeping in view the fact that insurance claim was filed way back in the year 2015, we thought it best in the interest of justice to entertain these petitions and resolve the legal question involved without further ado.

10. For completion of record it is pointed out that Mr. Munir Ahmad Khan Sadhana, advocate, who is not an advocate of this Court, has been granted special permission to argue this matter considering that he has been attending to this case, before the Tribunal since beginning and is well versed with the facts of the case. The fact that the application for the recovery of the insurance claim filed by the respondents is pending since the year 2015, also weighed on our minds in granting this permission.

11. For the above reasons, we set-aside impugned order dated 30.05.2018, convert these petitions into appeals and allow the same.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts of the case are that the Income Tax Reference filed by the petitioner (the Commissioner of Inland Revenue) under Section 133(1) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("Ordinance") before the High Court was dismissed for non-prosecution vide order dated 08.09.2015. Thereafter, an application for restoration of the said Tax Reference was filed on 04.06.2016, after a period of almost nine months, which was also dismissed vide impugned order dated 14.12.2016. This order has been assailed before us.

2. Learned counsel for the petitioners argued that Tax Reference filed under Section 133 (1) of the Ordinance, cannot be dismissed for non-prosecution as it invokes the advisory jurisdiction of the High Court and therefore, the legal questions raised in the Tax Reference are to be answered by the High Court, irrespective of the presence of the parties or their counsel. He next contended that keeping in view the unique nature of the Tax Reference, only Article 181 of the Limitation Act, 1908 ("Act") is applicable, and therefore the petitioner had a period of three years to file an application for the restoration of the Tax Reference.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at some length and gone through the record of the case, as well as, the law on the subject.

4. Tax Reference is filed under section 133(1) of the Ordinance which states as under:

> 133. Reference to High Court:---(1) Within ninety days of the communication of the order of the Appellate Tribunal under subsection (7) of section 132, the aggrieved person or the Commissioner may prefer an application, in the prescribed form along with a statement of the case, to the High Court, stating any question of law arising out of such order.

The above shows that against the order of the Appellate Tribunal an aggrieved person or the Commissioner can prefer an Application before the High Court. This Application, perhaps because of the title of the section or its historical legacy, is commonly referred to as a Tax Reference, when in effect it is an Application. This Court in Squibb Pakistan Pvt. Ltd.[1] has elaborately and authoritatively traced the legislative history of section 133 and concluded that it is appellate in nature and must be construed and applied as such. The relevant extracts from Squibb Pakistan Pvt. Ltd. are as under:

> 48. To recapitulate, the problem all along has been the unfortunate legacy of the Act, 1918. This provided a true illustration of advisory jurisdiction, since advice was to be rendered to the Revenue Authority prior to its having passed an order. In 1922, this advisory jurisdiction was retained under section 66(1) of the Act, 1922 which was similarly framed. However, this subsection had, in sum and substance, lost its importance because of subsection (2), which conferred the right to challenge the decision of the Tribunal on questions of law. It was this remedy which was followed thereafter. Section 66(1) ibid thereafter became redundant for all practical purposes and was eventually deleted through a subsequent amendment in 1939 and the same position continued under the Ordinance, 1979 and succeeding law. Thereafter, no advisory jurisdiction remained in any shape or form. But since the significance of the change was not appreciated, the concept of advisory jurisdiction continued to confuse the courts - the corpus had disappeared, but the shadow remained. The law as it stands after the 2005 amendment is now clear beyond any conceptual doubt. There is no question of advisory jurisdiction (which phrase was never used in the law at any stage) and the plain words of the section must now be given their ordinary meaning. No hypertechnicalities now stand as barriers in the way of substantive justice.
> 49. An independent interpretation of section 133 of the Ordinance, 2001, as it stands today, on the plain language of the law, liberated from the burden or benefit of earlier judgments, would make the position very clear. Subsection (1) confers a right on any person or the Commissioner aggrieved by a final order of the Appellate Tribunal to file an application before the High Court along with a statement of the case stating any questions of law arising out of the Tribunal's order. There is a direct right to approach the High Court in a similar manner as in appeals, revisions, reviews etc. The order being challenged is the final order but the challenge is limited to questions of law only. The statement must set out the facts, the Tribunal's determination and the questions of law which arise out of its order in terms of subsection (3). The questions of law which may be referred are only those which "arise" out of the order of the Tribunal. On the plain language of the law , this would include any question which can be made out from the order of the Tribunal. There is nothing in the scheme of the section to impute any extraordinary limitations on the type of questions which may be posed. The facts as stated in the Tribunal's order have to be taken as recorded and any question which can be made out from those facts may be raised in an application under section 133 ibid, regardless of whether it was previously urged or not. There is absolutely no reason for confining the questions which may be referred to only those which were argued before the Tribunal on the hypothesis that this is an advisory jurisdiction as that is not what the language of the law contemplates. The law, as it stands, allows all questions "arising" out of the order to be referred and not just questions "argued" or "raised" before the Tribunal.

50. Section 133 ibid clearly states that upon hearing a case, the High Court is obligated to decide the question of law raised by the reference and pass judgment thereon and the Tribunal's order automatically stands modified by the order of the High Court. This is an extremely significant aspect as it is the essence of an appellate order that it per se modifies the order of the lower forum, or, in other words, merges into it. As pointed out above, this particular aspect of section 133 ibid was introduced for the first time by way of the 2005 amendment and was not present in section 66 of the Act, 1922 during the brief period between 1971 and 1974 when the law was similar to the present one. It is therefore clear beyond any doubt that the remedy under section 133 ibid is appellate in nature and must be construed and applied as such. The language of the law must be given effect to, rather than unnecessarily restricting the scope of the jurisdiction on the basis of judgments from an era when the law and circumstances were completely different. The civilized world, including our own country, has been moving towards greater rights for citizens over the last century to the extent that the privilege of a fair trial has now become a constitutional right. In these circumstances, it is not appropriate to restrict the scope of a legal remedy available to citizens on the basis of old decision, especially when the language of the law is clearly pointing in the opposite direction.

The above shows that the Application under section 133(1), also referred to as the Tax Reference, is in effect an Appeal and it must be construed as such. The misimpression and confusion in some quarters that a Tax Reference invokes advisory jurisdiction of the High Court and therefore the High Court is bound to answer the question of law brought before it is a misconception and is hereby dispelled. Application under section 133(1) of the Ordinance is no different than an appeal and must be construed and applied as such.

5. Now coming to the question of limitation for filing an application for the restoration of the Application/Tax Reference. As held in Squibb Pakistan Pvt. Ltd., taking Application under section 133(1) of the Ordinance to be an appeal, Article 168 of the First Schedule of the Act is fully applicable to the case and provides 30 days as the period of limitation for readmission or restoration of an appeal dismissed for want of prosecution. In the presence of a specific provision under Article 168, Article 181 stands excluded and does not apply. Both the Articles are reproduced hereunder for convenience:-

|---|---|---|
| 168. For the readmission of an appeal dismissed | Thirty days | The date of the dismissal. |

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| for want of prosecution. | | |

---

|---|---|---|
| 181. Applications for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this schedule or by section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908. | Three years | When the right to apply accrues. |

6. Even the merits of the restoration application hopelessly fail to furnish sufficient cause for the restoration of the Application/Tax Reference.

7. For the above reasons, we see no reason to interfere in the impugned order, hence these petitions are dismissed and leave refused.

(b) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 161---Examination of accused by police---Scope---Statement of the accused after his arrest or during investigation was covered by S.161, Cr.P.C.---Where the accused gave version of the same occurrence which was different from the one recorded in FIR, such version was also recorded under S.161, Cr.P.C.

Expression "any person" used in section 161, Cr.P.C. had to be understood in its context. It required a police officer making an investigation to examine "any person" supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case. Said expression was extensive and, in its plain and ordinary meaning, included all persons who were supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case, and not only the witnesses but also those who were alleged to have committed the offence under investigation in a case. A person who was alleged to have committed the offence, was as much supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case as an alleged eye-witness was.

In most cases a version of the same occurrence different from the one recorded in FIR was given by the accused. Such version of an accused was to be, and is, recorded under section 161, Cr.P.C. Statement of the accused after his arrest or during investigation was covered by section 161, Cr.P.C.

Article 38 of Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984 prohibited the admissibility of a confession made to a police officer if proved against the accused but did not bar the use of it by the accused in his own favour. The Legislature could not be attributed by implication the intent to deprive an accused from his right to make use of any of his statements, if they were relevant and admissible under any provision of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984. Article 38 had been enacted for the benefit of the accused, to eradicate the apprehension that police may misuse their extensive powers if confessions made to them were made admissible in evidence, against the accused. A provision enacted for the benefit of the accused could not be construed to his detriment.

Like Article 38 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984, section 162 Cr.P.C was also for the protection of the accused and benefitted the accused. A confessional statement of the accused before a police officer, setting out his first version and used by the accused in his own favour was not barred by the provision of section 162, Cr.P.C. Confessional statement recorded of the accused in the police diary was not hit by section 162, Cr.P.C, if used by the accused in his favour.

---"Confession" and "admission"---Distinction.

Confession was as an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime, stating or suggesting the inference that he committed that crime. Confession was defined as a statement made by an accused which "either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence." A confession was thus a species of admission, and could briefly be stated to be an admission of the guilt by the accused. There was a distinction between admissions and confessions. Confessions were a species of which admission was the genus. All admissions were not confessions, but all confessions were admissions. If the statement by itself was sufficient to prove the guilt of the maker, it was a confession. If, on the other hand, the statement fell short of it, it amounted to an admission. No statement, which contained self-exculpatory matter, could amount to a confession, if the exculpatory statement was of some fact which, if true, would negate the guilt. A confession was thus an admission by an accused in a criminal case and if he did not incriminate himself, the statement could not be said to be a confession.

----Art. 27---Facts showing existence of state of mind, or of body, or bodily feeling---Scope and admissibility in evidence.

Article 27 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984 dealt with such external or collateral facts which showed the existence of any state of mind. Evidence of such external or collateral facts was admitted to prove a person's state of mind, and not to prove the occurrence itself. Thus, the scope of Article 27 was that there must be a cluster of facts outside and around the fact in issue or the occurrence from which inference could be drawn to show and support the state of mind in question; such surrounding facts became relevant under Article 27. Such construction was supported by Explanation 1 to Article 27, which provided that relevant facts must show that the state of mind existed not generally but in reference to the particular matter in question. Both previous and subsequent events may be relevant under Article 27 as showing the state of mind.

----Ss. 161, 162, 340(2) & 342---First statement or confession of accused made before police under S.161, Cr.P.C---Evidentiary value.

Confessional statement of the accused before a police officer at the time of his arrest showed his own version put forward at the earliest possible opportunity and was referred to as the "first version" or the "first plea." First version was a statement made before a police officer which was not otherwise admissible under section 162, Cr.P.C., except in the case of a confessional statement to be used by the accused in his favour. First version of the accused by itself had no special evidentiary value or weight. Once it was found to be relevant and admissible it was to be examined in the light of the overall evidence of the case i.e., the statement of the accused recorded under section 342, Cr.P.C., his statement, if any, under section 340(2), Cr.P.C. along with the defence evidence, if any, and the overall evidence of the prosecution. The attribution of high probative value to the first version of the accused, in some cases, pretending it as a principle of law had no basis in criminal jurisprudence. The probative value of such version of the accused, if found relevant and admissible under the law, was to be determined like any other piece of evidence in the peculiar facts and circumstances of each case as it did not stand on any special footing.

(h) Criminal trial---

----Defence plea---Reasonable possibility of defence plea being true---Benefit of same had to go to the accused.

If after examination of the whole evidence, the Court was of the opinion that there was reasonable possibility that the defence put forward by the accused might be true, then the whole of the prosecution case was viewed in context of this reasonable possibility, entitling the accused to the benefit of the doubt. It would be enough for the accused if, in the final analysis, the defence plea was substantiated to the extent of creating reasonable doubt in the credibility of the prosecution case. Thus, reasonable possibility of the defence plea of being true could benefit the accused.

----S. 342---Power of court to examine the accused---Statement of accused under S.342, Cr.P.C.---Scope---Such statement did not strictly constitute evidence but may provide valuable material to the courts for appraising the prosecution evidence in arriving at its findings.

Statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C. was not evidence, it is only the stand or version of the accused by way of an explanation when incriminating material against him was brought to his notice. The statement was not made on oath, and could not be tested by cross-examination, and was made under the protection of immunity, of the maker of the statement from punishment for making false statement. Such statement could not be placed on the same footing as statements made by witness in court on oath, which were tested by cross-examination. Such statement thus did not strictly constitute evidence, but in view of the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused, the statement may provide valuable material to the courts for appraising the prosecution evidence in arriving at its findings. The version given in such statement if found by the court to be reasonable and in accord with the probabilities of the established facts and circumstances, the same may be accepted by the court even without requiring defence evidence, unless the version was falsified by the prosecution evidence.

ORDER

SAYYED MAZAHAR ALI AKBAR NAQVI, J.---Criminal petition for leave to appeal under section 185(3) of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 has been assailed by the petitioner calling in question impugned judgment dated 14.09.2015 passed by Lahore High Court, Lahore in Murder Reference No.276 of 2011 and Crl. Appeal No.996 of 2011.

2. As per prosecution story portrayed in the FIR No.203/2009 dated 04.06.2009, offence under section 302, P.P.C. registered with Police Station Saddar Farooqabad Sheikhupura (Exh.PD) lodged at the instance of one Allah Ditta son of Lal Din, (PW-3) is that he is resident of Herchand and they are three brothers and he is eldest. The complainant and his younger brother Qurban reside with their parents at Herchand whereas brother Ramzan live separately. On 03.05.2009 at evening, the complainant along with his father came to the house of brother Muhammad Ramzan because his daughter was sick. They were talking to each other when at about 7:00 p.m. Raza son of Niaz i.e. a neighbor of Ramzan called him outside. The complainant with father also came out of the house along with Ramzan. Ayisha Bibi wife of Ramzan followed and came out of the house. Raza was armed with Carbine, he raised lalkara to Muhammad Ramzan that he had entered into an altercation with his mother, therefore, he will teach a lesson and thereafter accused made a fire shot with his Carbine 12 bore which hit Muhammad Ramzan on his abdomen, below the chest. Muhammad Ramzan fell down being injured whereas accused fled away from there. The occurrence was witnessed by the complainant, his father and Bhabi Ayisha. The injured was taken to Sheikhupura Hospital but he was referred to Mayo Hospital, Lahore. Initially the FIR was registered under Section 324, P.P.C. but when the injured died on 08.05.2009, offence under Section 302, P.P.C. was added.

3. After registration of the aforesaid case, investigation was carried out and petitioner was challaned while placing his name in column No.3 of the report under Section 173, Cr.P.C.

On receipt of challan, the learned Trial Court formally charge sheeted the petitioner vide order dated 12.08.2010 to which he pleaded not guilty and claimed trial. Prosecution in order to substantiate its case produced as many as 13 witnesses. The petitioner was examined under Section 342, Cr.P.C, however, he opted not to appear in his defence as his own witness in terms of Section 340(2), Cr.P.C. to disproof the allegations levelled against him.

4. The learned trial court after conclusion of trial found that the prosecution succeeded to prove allegations against the petitioner, hence convicted him under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced him to death. The petitioner was further burdened to pay compensation of Rs.1.00,000/- to be paid to the legal heirs of the deceased in terms of Section 544-A, Cr.P.C. In default thereof, he was further ordered to undergo simple imprisonment for six months.

5. The petitioner being aggrieved by the judgment of the learned trial court dated 07.06.2011 filed Criminal Appeal No.996 of 2011 before the Lahore High Court, Lahore whereas the learned trial court forwarded Murder Reference No.276 of 2011 for confirmation of the sentence of death inflicted upon the petitioner in terms of Section 374, Cr.P.C. The learned Division Bench of High Court vide judgment dated 14.09.2015 converted death sentence of the petitioner into imprisonment for life whereas amount of compensation and imprisonment in its default prescribed by the learned Trial Court was ordered to be maintained. Benefit of Section 382-B, Cr.P.C. was also given to him. Hence, instant petition.

6. At the very outset, learned counsel for the petitioner argued that in fact both the courts below have not attended the circumstances of the case in its true perspective and convicted the petitioner under Section 302(b), P.P.C., which is not substantiated from the record. Contends that as far as occurrence is concerned, the same has been admitted by the petitioner while making his statement under Section 342, Cr.P.C. Adds that a specific plea was taken by the petitioner before the Investigation Officer that the deceased made an attempt to commit rape with sister of the petitioner namely Saima Sibi. Contends that plea of the petitioner was found correct during the course of investigation as such the conviction and sentence recorded by learned Courts below is not sustainable in the eye of law Contends that when it is established from the record that petitioner has committed the occurrence on the question of 'ghairat', therefore, the petitioner is entitled for the benefit of the same and as such the appropriate sentence could be under Section 302(c), P.P.C.

7. On the other hand, learned Law Officer has not seriously controverted the contentions raised by learned counsel for the petitioner as the same is spelled out from the record.

8. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and gone through the record.

9. Admittedly, the occurrence had taken place within the local limits of Police Station Saddar Farooqabad, District Sheikhupura. There is no denial to this fact that the allegation against the petitioner is that he caused fire-arm injury with Carbine, which landed on the abdomen near the chest of the deceased Muhammad Ramzan. The injured was taken to District Headquarter Hospital, Sheikhupura from where he was referred to Mayo Hospital, Lahore however, he succumbed to the injuries on 08.05.2009 and as such the provision of Section 302, P.P.C. was added in the crime report. The petitioner since his arrest and commencement of investigation has raised first plea wherein it has been mentioned that deceased had made an attempt to commit rape with his sister. The mother of petitioner Maqsoodan Bibi had gone to reprimand Muhammad Ramzan deceased upon which he started abusing mother of the petitioner and also grappled with her. The petitioner approached there he could not afford the conduct of the deceased and as such he flared up and under the heat of passion could not resist and as such made a single fire shot. The stance taken by the petitioner remained consistent throughout during the course of investigation as well as the trial. During investigation, the first plea raised by the petitioner was found correct by the Investigating Officer. It is an admitted fact that first plea of the accused is admissible in evidence under Article 27 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984 ("Order of 1984"). Article 27 of Order 1984 is general principle enabling the Investigating Officer to record the same whereas Article 28 is mere an exception, As a general rule evidence not forming part of the transaction is not admissible whereas Articles 27/28 are an exceptions to the said general principle by laying down a rule that admissibility of those fact which might not be tendered in evidence to prove it but these are relevant to prove the status/ mind the person committing it. For example the guilt, intent, knowledge, negligence, malice etc., and in all the intentions qua these conditions would be admissible as it is provided under Article 27 of the Order of 1984, Article 27 of the Order of 1984 has extended the scope to meet the question qua the existence of person state of mind or bodily feeling and all these facts and their existence in the state of affair has turned relevant.

During the course of proceedings before the learned Trial Court, the suggestion qua the state of mind referred above was also put to the prosecution witnesses of ocular account PW-3 and PW-4, respectively. Now the question, which requires determination, only relates to the quantum of sentence in the given facts and circumstances narrated above.

10. As observed earlier, that the occurrence had taken place due to the act of the deceased, which enraged the mental faculty of the petitioner and under the impulses of the same the instant occurrence had taken place, the same is spelled out from the record and as such the benefit of the same is available for which so many circumstances are not required rather the glimpse of the same is always deemed sufficient, which has been established by the Superior Court from time to time.

11. For what has been discussed above, we are of the considered view that sentence inflicted upon the petitioner by learned Courts below under Section 302(b), P.P.C. is not made out, therefore, keeping in view the facts narrated above, instant petition is converted into appeal and same is partially allowed and we convert the sentence from imprisonment for life under Section 302(b), P.P.C. to imprisonment for 10 years under Section 302(c), P.P.C. whereas amount of compensation and imprisonment in its default prescribed by the learned Trial Court is ordered to be maintained, Benefit of Section 382-B, Cr.P.C. is also extended, The Crl. Petition No.1120(L)/2015 filed by the complainant for enhancement of sentence, having no substance, is dismissed.

JUDGMENT

12. SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---I have had the opportunity of going through the order of my learned brother Sayyad Mazahar Ali Akbar Naqvi J. While I agree with the conclusion regarding the conviction and quantum of sentence awarded to the petitioner under section 302(c) instead of section 302(b) of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 ("P.P.C."), however, with respect, I find myself unable to agree with the reasoning in paragraphs 9 and 10 of the Order of my learned brother.

13. In the instant case, the First Information Report[1] by the complainant Allah Ditta (PW-3), records that on 03.05.2009 around 7 p.m., Raza ("petitioner") called his neighbour, Ramzan ("deceased"), to come out of his house. As soon as Ramzan came out in the street outside his house, the petitioner shot him with his 12 bore carbine in the belly. Ramzan suffered several injuries all over the abdomen and the chest. He was rushed to the local hospital in Sheikhupura and then to hospital in Lahore but unfortunately he succumbed to his injuries on 08.05.2009. Motive behind this gory incident, as reported, was the quarrel between the mother of the petitioner and the deceased. In this background the petitioner was sent up for trial. He was convicted for murder under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced to death[2] by the trial court and upon appeal to the High Court his conviction was maintained but his sentence was reduced to imprisonment for life, while the remaining sentence awarded by the trial court was kept intact vide impugned judgment dated 14.09.2015.

14. Main reliance of the prosecution evidence is on the ocular account of PW-3 and PW-4; the brother and wife of the deceased who witnessed the crime; and the medical evidence which supports the ocular account. On the other hand, the defence plea of the petitioner (accused) in the statement under section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 ("Cr.P.C.") is that he acted under grave and sudden provocation as the deceased attempted to rape his sister and then abused and grappled with his mother. This was also the first version taken by the petitioner (accused) before the investigating Police Officer after his arrest.

15. In a criminal trial, it is now jurisprudentially settled that the proper course for the court is to first discuss and assess the prosecution evidence in order to arrive at the conclusion as to whether or not the prosecution has succeeded in proving the charge against the accused on the basis of the evidence. In case where the accused has taken a specific plea the court is to appreciate the prosecution evidence and the defence version in juxtaposition in order to arrive at a just conclusion.[3]

16. In the present case, the statement of the petitioner under section 342, Cr.P.C. refers to the statement (first version) of the petitioner made before the Police Officer after his arrest. Therefore, before appraising the prosecution evidence and the defence version, it is imperative to answer the following important legal questions that have arisen in this case:

(i) What is the provision of law under which the statement of an accused is recorded by the Police Officer during the investigation?

(ii) Whether the statement of the accused recorded by the Police Officer during investigation is relevant and admissible, particularly in view of the bar contained in Article 38 of the Qanun-e-Shahdat Order, 1984 ("QSO") and Section 162 of the Cr.P.C.?

(iii) What is the meaning and scope of Article 27 of the QSO and its applicability to the present case?

(iv) Whether reasonable possibility of the defence plea of being true can benefit the accused?

17. I endeavour to answer the above questions as under:--

(i) What is the provision of law under which the statement of an accused is recorded by the investigating Police Officer during investigation?

There is no specific provision under Cr.P.C that deals with the recording of the statement of the accused during police investigation. High Courts in British India had divergent opinions on the applicability of Sections 161 and 162, Cr.P.C to the statements of accused persons recorded by investigating officers in the course of investigation. This conflict of opinion was resolved by the decision of the Privy Council in Pakala Narayana Swamy.[4] While discussing the phrase "any person" under section 162, Cr.P.C. Lord Atkin, observed: "That the words in their ordinary meaning would include any person though he may thereafter be accused seems plain. Investigation into crime often includes the examination of a number of persons none of whom or all of whom may be suspected at the time ... but eventually accused." A full bench of the Allahabad High Court observed in Upadhyaya[5]. "After the decision of the Privy Council ... it is no longer possible to accept the argument that sections 161 and 162 Criminal Procedure Code do not cover statements made by accused persons and that under those sections an investigating officer is not authorised to record the statements of such persons. Nor is there anything in the section to show that only non-confessional or non-incriminatory statements of such accused persons can be recorded. The words used are wide enough to include all kinds of statements, provided of course, they throw some light on the offences under investigation." Likewise, Dorab Patel, J., in Ghulam Hussain,[6] observed: "After the Judicial Committee's observations in Naryana Swami's case it cannot even be argued that statements by the accused do not fall within the ambit of section 162 of the Code."

18. The relevant extracts of Sections 161 and 162 are reproduced hereunder:-

"161. Examination of witnesses by police.--(1) Any Police-officer making an investigation under this Chapter or any police-officer not below such rank as the Provincial Government may, by general or special order, prescribe in this behalf, acting on the requisition of such officer may examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case.

162. Statements to police not to be signed: Use of such statements in evidence. (1) No statement made by any person to a police-officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall if reduced into writing be signed by the person making it; nor shall any such statement or any record thereof, whether In a police-diary or otherwise or any part of such statement or record, be used for any purpose (save as hereinafter provided) at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made.

This expression "any person" has to be understood in the context of section 161, Cr.P.C. It requires a police officer making an investigation to examine "any person" supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case. This expression is extensive and, in its plain and ordinary meaning, includes all persons who are supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case, and not only the witnesses but also those who are alleged to have committed the offence under investigation in a case. A person who is alleged to have committed the offence, is as much supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case as an alleged eye-witness is. There is no reason to modify or restrict that plain and ordinary meaning of the expression "any person" by interpretation, especially when it does not present any absurdity or inconsistency. "If the words of the statute are in themselves precise and unambiguous, then no more can be necessary than to expound those words in their natural and ordinary sense. The words themselves alone do in such case best declare the intention of the law-giver."[7] Besides "when the meaning of the words is plain it is not the duty of the courts to busy themselves with the supposed intentions".[8] I see no reason to restrict the simple meaning of the phrase "any person" and exclude the "accused" from its ambit.

19. In a recent decision of this Court in Sughran Bibi,[9] a seven-member bench of this Court in to which one of us (Malik, J.) was a member, supports this interpretation. Khosa, ACJ., speaking for the bench therein declared that: "During the investigation conducted after registration of an FIR the investigating officer may record any number of versions of the same incident brought to his notice by different persons which versions are to be recorded by him under section 161, Cr.P.C. in the same case. No separate FIR is to be recorded for any new version of the same incident brought to the notice of the investigating officer during the investigation of the case." It is common that in most cases a version of the same occurrence different from the one recorded in FIR is given by the accused, as it happened in the present case. And in view of the law declared in Sughran Bibi, it can be said with certainty that such version of an accused is to be, and is, recorded under section 161, Cr.P.C.

20. The answer to the above question is that the statement of the accused after his arrest or during investigation is covered by section 161, Cr.P.C.

(ii) Whether the statement of the accused recorded by the investigating Police Officer during investigation is relevant and admissible, particularly in view of the bar contained in Article 38 of the QSO and Section 162 of the Cr.P. C?

21. The term "relevant" means what is logically probative and "admissible" means that which is legally receivable. The legal admissibility of facts is for the most part determined by their logical relevancy to the issue.[10] Admissibility is determined according to the rule of evidence, while the relevancy of a fact is determined by the issue in a case.[11] The scheme of the QSO is to make all relevant facts admissible, as said by Lord Hobhouse,[12] that "relevant in this Act[13] means admissible".

22. Statement made by the accused, after his arrest, before the Police Officer may include a statement (i) where he admits the commission of the crime and therefore amounts to a confession; or (ii) where the accused denies the commission of the crime; or (iii) the accused admits the commission of the crime but gives his own version of it. Out of the above three, we specially examine the last category of statement (version), as the same is relevant in this case.

23. "Confession" has been defined as an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime, stating or suggesting the inference that he committed that crime.[14] The Privy Council in Pakala Narayana Swami[15] defined confession as a statement made by an accused which "either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence." A confession is thus a species of admission, and can briefly be stated to be an admission of the guilt by the accused.[16] The expression "confession" has been used in Articles 37 to 43, QSO, but it is not defined therein. There is a distinction between admissions and confessions. It would appear that confessions are a species of which admission is the genus. All admissions are not confessions, but all confessions are admissions. If the statement by itself is sufficient to prove the guilt of the maker, it is a confession. If, on the other hand, the statement falls short of it, it amounts to an admission.[17] No statement, which contains self-exculpatory matter, can amount to a confession, if the exculpatory statement is of some fact which, if true, would negate the guilt.[18] A confession is thus an admission by an accused in a criminal case and if he does not incriminate himself, the statement cannot be said to be a confession.[19]

24. Article 37 of QSO provides that a confession is irrelevant if caused by inducement, etc. and Article 41 provides that if the inducement, etc. mentioned in Article 37 is removed, confession becomes relevant. Joint reading of Articles 37 and 41 leads to an unambiguous corollary that a voluntary confession of the accused is a relevant fact under QSO.

25. Article 38, QSO states that no confession made to a police officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence. Section 162, Cr.P.C declares that no statement made by any person to a police-officer in the course of an investigation shall be used for any purpose at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made, except the statement of a prosecution witness to contradict him in cross-examination, or to explain any matter referred to in cross-examination of that witness in re-examination. The question which has remained under judicial debate since 1872 is whether Article 38, QSO and Section 162, Cr.P.C. bar the admissibility of a confessional statement of an accused, which is used by the accused in his favour.

Bar of Article 38, QSO

26. Article 38 states that no confession made to a police officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence. What if the confession is to be used by the accused in his favour? Is such a confession admissible? Can the converse be a logical corollary of Article 38? The very first case that can be referred to in this regard, is Pitamber[20] where a full bench of the Bombay High Court held that "there is not anything ... in the Indian Evidence Act ... that would justify us in excluding such evidence when sought to be given on behalf of the co-accused, provided it be relevant." Hasil[21] is the most important case on the question as it was frequently referred to and consistently followed in later cases by courts not only in Pakistan, but in India also. In Hasil, A division bench of the Lahore High Court held: "The prohibition contained in section 25 [of the Evidence Act, 1872] can be treated as applying only to confessions which are to be proved as against the accused, that is, in support of the prosecution case, and cannot apply to statements on which the accused himself wishes to rely in connection either with his conviction or his sentence." Similar views were expressed in Lal Khan,[22] Ghulam Abbas[23] and Muhammad Yaqub.[24]

27. The legal position as to the scope and purpose of Article 38, QSO is thus well settled now. This Article prohibits the admissibility of a confession made to a police officer if proved against the accused but does not bar the use of it by the accused in his own favour. The Legislature cannot be attributed by implication the intent to deprive an accused from his right to make use of any of his statements, if they are relevant and admissible under any provision of the QSO. Article 38 has been enacted for the benefit of the accused, to eradicate the apprehension that Police may misuse their extensive powers if confessions made to them are made admissible in evidence, against the accused. A provision enacted for the benefit of the accused cannot be construed to his detriment.

Bar of Section 162, Cr.P.C.

28. Having come to the conclusion that the statement made by the petitioner to the investigating officer as his first version of the alleged occurrence is recorded under section 161, Cr.P.C., the question that arises for determination is how can it be used in favour of the accused in view of the restriction prescribed by Section 162, Cr.P.C.? Section 162 states as under:

> S.162 Statement to police not to be signed: use of such statements in evidence:---(1) No statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall if reduced into writing be signed by the person making it; nor shall any such statement or any record thereof whether in a police-diary or otherwise or any part of such statement or record, be used for any purpose (save as hereinafter provided) at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made:
> Provided that, when any witness is called for the prosecution in such inquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing as aforesaid the Court shall on the request of the accused, refer to such writing and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof, in order that any part of such statement, if duly proved, may be used to contradict such witness in the manner provided by section 145 of the Evidence Act, 1872 (I of 1872) When any part of such statement is so used, any part thereof may also be used in the re-examination of such witness, but for the purpose only of explaining any matter referred to in his cross-examination:
>
> Provided further, that, if the Court is of opinion that any part of any such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the inquiry or trial or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interests, it shall record such opinion (but not the reasons therefore) and shall exclude such part from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused.
> (2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to any statement falling within the provision of section 32, clause (1), of the Evidence Act, 1872 (or to affect the provisions of Section 27 of that Act).

Although there was a divergence of opinion in the High Courts of British India on this question, but most of the High Courts found the provisions of the Evidence Act (now QSO) on the subject of confession to be a special law and declared that the provisions of the Evidence Act on the subject of confession are not affected by section 162, Cr.P.C. The observations of Beaumont, C.J. made in Biram Sardar,[25] are notable:--

> "Most, if not all, of the learned Judges agree that section 27, Evidence Act, is a special law in force at the date of the passing of the amended section 162, and that point seems to me beyond question. It is a law applicable to a particular subject within section 41, I.P.C. . . . Section 1(2) enacts a rule of construction to be applied in the interpretation of the Code. That rule is that where there is a conflict between the Code and a special law, the special law is to prevail in the absence of a specific provision to the contrary. . .I am myself inclined to think that "specific provision" is a stronger expression than "express provision" and means a provision clearly expressed. I do not see how a provision arising by implication only can be said to be specific. But if this is going too far, I am clearly of opinion that the language of the Code giving rise to the implication must at any rate be so directly contradictory to the special law that it can be affirmed with certainty that the Legislature intended to override the special law. There is, however, nothing in the language of section 162 which suggests that the Legislature had in mind section 27, Evidence Act. The language of the two sections is quite distinct and to a large extent the respective subject-matters are not identical. Section 162 deals with all statements made to a police officer in the course of an investigation; section 27, Evidence Act, merely deals with information received from a person accused of an offence in the custody of a police officer which leads to a discovery. The two sections only overlap in respect of statements made to a police officer in course of an inquiry which lead to a discovery. It seems to me impossible to hold that section 162 contains a specific provision that section 27, Evidence Act, is not to prevail over it."

29. Similar question arose in Ghulam Hussain[26] as to whether the admissibility of a statement falling under section 25 of the Evidence Act, 1872 (Article 30 of QSO) is affected by the provisions of Section 162, Cr.P.C.? Dorab Patel J. writing for the High Court in Ghulam Hussain observed that "section 162 of the Code does not draw any distinction between statements by the accused on which the prosecution wished to rely and statement on which accused himself wished to rely .... the Courts have evolved a rule that a provision intended to protect the accused is not used against him[27]. In cases of this kind, when two versions of the same incident are being put forward, it is often of the greatest importance for an accused to be able to show that his own explanation was put forward at the earliest possible opportunity, and we do not think that it can ever have been the intention of the Legislature that an accused person should be deprived of the right to make use of such a statement, merely because to a certain extent it goes against him[28]. After an exhaustive survey of almost all the previous decisions the court in Ghulam Hussain concluded that the confessional statement recorded of the accused in the police diary was not hit by Section 162 of the Cr.P.C. if used by the accused in his favour.

30. It is observed that Section 1(2), Cr.P.C. states that the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 extends to the whole of Pakistan but, in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing herein contained shall affect any special or local law or any special jurisdiction or power conferred or any special form of procedure prescribed by any other law for the time being in force. Section 41 of P.P.C. defines "special law" to be a law applicable to a particular subject and section 4(2) of Cr.P.C. provides that all words and expressions used in the Cr.P.C. but not defined therein shall have the same meanings as in P.P.C. Like Article 38 of the QSO, Section 162, Cr.P.C. is also for the protection of the accused and benefits the accused (see provisos to section 162), I, therefore, agree with the view taken in the cases discussed above, that a confessional statement of the accused before a police officer, setting out his first version and used by the accused in his own favour are not barred by the provision of Section 162, Cr.P.C.

31. The answer to the above question is that a statement (first version), as discussed above, made by an accused before a Police Officer is relevant and admissible and not barred under Article 38 of the QSO or section 162 of the Cr.P.C, if used by the accused in his own favour.

(iii) What is the meaning and scope of Article 27 of the QSO and its applicability to the present case?

32. Article 27 falls under Chapter III of the QSO which deals with Relevancy of Facts. The Article states:

27. Facts showing existence of state of mind, or of body, or bodily feeling. Facts showing the existence of any state of mind, such as intention, knowledge, good faith, negligence, rashness, ill-will or goodwill towards any particular person, or showing the existence of any state of body or bodily feeling, are relevant, when the existence of any such state of mind or body or bodily feeling is in issue or relevant.

Explanation 1. A fact relevant as showing the existence of a relevant state of mind must show that the state of mind exists, not generally, but in reference to the particular matter in question.

Explanation 2. But where, upon the trial of a person accused of an offence, the previous commission by the accused of an offence is relevant within the meaning of this Article, the previous conviction of such person shall also be a relevant fact.

Article 27 deals with such external or collateral facts which show the existence of any state of mind.[29] Evidence of such external or collateral facts is admitted to prove a person's state of mind, and not to prove the occurrence itself. Thus, the scope of this Article is that there must be a cluster of facts outside and around the fact in issue or the occurrence from which inference can be drawn to show and support the state of mind in question; such surrounding facts become relevant under Article 27. This construction is supported by Explanation 1 to the Article, which provides that relevant facts must show that the state of mind exists not generally but in reference to the particular matter in question. Both previous and subsequent events may be relevant under this Article as showing the state of mind.[30] Illustration (e) refers to "previous publication" and illustration (j) refer to threatening letters "previously sent," but in illustration (m) the test is merely proximity of time, not priority. Similarly illustrations (i), (k), (l) and (o) to Article 27 are self-explanatory and support the above view.

33. The above view is supported by R v. Armstrong[31] where the accused was charged with the murder of his wife by administering arsenic, evidence that the accused had attempted to poison another person with arsenic on a subsequent occasion, was held to have been rightly admitted to rebut the defence that the wife had committed suicide and that the arsenic was kept by the accused for an innocent purpose, namely, for killing weeds. So also in R v. Mortimer,[32] where the charge was one of murder by deliberately running down a woman bicyclist with a motorcar, evidence was admitted of similar attacks on other women, immediately before or after the offence charged.

34. Previous decisions on the subject of relevancy and admissibility of such first version of accused persons in their favour have not referred to Article 27 while dealing with the question. There is no case law that relies upon Article 27 for this purpose except Liaqat Ali,[33] and the judgments[34] that relied upon Liaqat Ali.

35. In Liaqat Ali, Dr. Khalid Ranjha, J. mainly relied upon the afore-referred cases of Hasil, Muhammad Yaqoob and Ghulam Hussain, for decision of the question involved in the case; he referred to Article 27 as an additional ground only. His words are quoted for ready reference:

"It may also be added that the statement of an accused person immediately after the occurrence is in a way relevant fact within the meaning of Article 27 of Qanun-e-Shahadat and as such there can be no legal bar in bringing it on record as an admissible fact."[35] (Emphasis supplied)

There is no discussion on how the said Article is applicable for determining relevancy of the statement of the accused made to the investigating officer in the course of investigation. An important aspect that escaped the notice of the learned Judge is that the accused in that case, had taken a plea of self-defence in his statement made to the investigating officer. That statement was therefore not inculpatory. It was thus not a confessional statement, as discussed above. The plea of self-defence, if true, definitely negatives the offence alleged. But it is not so in a case of plea of grave and sudden provocation which simply diminishes the criminal liability and consequentially entails lesser punishment only, and does not negative the offence altogether. The statement of the accused in that case was a self-serving statement equal to the statement denying, and not admitting, the guilt by the accused. The statement having been made by the accused to the investigation officer in the course of investigation, and not falling within the scope of the special law of confession in the QSO, was clearly hit by the bar of Section 162, Cr.P.C. The reliance by the learned Judge on Hasil, Muhammad Yaqoob and Ghulam Hussain was, submitted with respect, is grossly misplaced.

36. Article 27 of the QSO provides that if a state of mind is a fact in issue or a relevant fact then facts that establish the state of mind are also relevant. These surrounding facts are obviously other than the facts in issue. Therefore, Article 27 has little relevance to the instant case.

First version of the accused - no special evidentiary value

37. The confessional statement of the accused before a police officer at the time of his arrest shows his own version put forward at the earliest possible opportunity and has over the years come to be referred to as the "first version" or interchangeably used as the "first plea." First version is a statement made before a police officer which is not otherwise admissible under section 162, Cr.P.C., except in the case of a confessional statement to be used by the accused in his favour, as discussed above. It is, however, underlined that the first version of the accused by itself has no special evidentiary value or weight. Once it is relevant and admissible (as discussed above), it is to be examined in the light of the overall evidence of the case i.e., the statement of the accused recorded under section 342, Cr.P.C., his statement, if any, under section 340(2) of the Cr.P.C along with the defence evidence, if any, and the overall evidence of the prosecution. The attribution of high probative value to the first version of the accused, in some cases, pretending it as a principle of law has no basis in criminal jurisprudence. The probative value of such version of the accused, if found relevant and admissible under the law, is to be determined like any other piece of evidence in the peculiar facts and circumstances of each case as it does not stand on any special footing.

(iv) Whether reasonable possibility of the defence plea of being true can benefit the accused?

38. In Woolmington,[36] a famous English case, Viscount Sankey, Lord Chancellor, in his "Golden thread" speech laid down: "While the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner, there is no such burden laid on the prisoner to prove his innocence and it is sufficient for him to raise a doubt as to his guilt; he is not bound to satisfy the jury of his innocence. ... Throughout the web of the English Criminal Law one golden thread is always to be seen that it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the prisoner's guilt ... If, at the end of and on the whole of the case, there is a reasonable doubt, created by the evidence given by either the prosecution or the prisoner, as to whether the prisoner killed the deceased with a malicious intention, the prosecution has not made out the case and the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal." The application of the Woolmington principle in Pakistan was considered by the Federal Court[37] of Pakistan in Safdar Ali.[38] Abdul Rashid, CJ., in that case, held:

> "If, after an examination of the whole evidence, the Court is of the opinion that there is a reasonable possibility that the defence put forward by the accused might be true, it is clear that such a view reacts on the whole prosecution case. In these circumstances, the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt, not as a matter of grace, but as of right, because the prosecution has not proved its case beyond reasonable doubt. ... The principles laid down in Woolmington's case are applicable with full force in Pakistan." (emphasis supplied)

Thus if after examination of the whole evidence, the Court is of the opinion that there is reasonable possibility that the defence put forward by the accused might be true, then the whole of the prosecution case is viewed in context of this reasonable possibility, entitling the accused to the benefit of the doubt. This principle has since then been consistently followed and applied by this Court,[39] and has received endorsement of larger benches of this Court in the cases of Ashiq Hussain[40] and Abdul Haque.[41] This Court, in Ashiq Hussain, said that it would be enough for the accused if, in the final analysis, the defence plea is substantiated to the extent of creating reasonable doubt in the credibility of the prosecution case, and in Abdul Haque held that: "In criminal jurisprudence general principle is that prosecution prove the case against the accused beyond doubt and this burden does not shift from prosecution even if accused takes up any particular plea and fails in it. If there is any room for benefit of doubt in the case of prosecution, the same will go to accused and not to prosecution." Thus, reasonable possibility of the defence plea of being true can benefit the accused.

Statement of the accused under section 342 Cr.P.C

39. It is important to underline that the statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C. is not evidence, it is only the stand or version of the accused by way of an explanation when incriminating material against him is brought to his notice.[42] The statement is not made on oath, and cannot be tested by cross-examination, and is made under the protection of immunity of the maker of the statement from punishment for making false statement.[43] Such statement cannot be placed on the same footing as statements made by witness in court on oath, which are tested by cross-examination. Such statement thus does not strictly constitute evidence, but in view of the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused, the statement may provide valuable material to the courts for appraising the prosecution evidence in arriving at its findings. The version given in such statement if found by the court to be reasonable and in accord with the probabilities of the established facts and circumstances, the same may be accepted by the court even without requiring defence evidence, unless the version is falsified by the prosecution evidence.[44]

40. Coming to the present case, it is observed that the two eye-witnesses i.e., the complainant (PW-3) and Ayesha Bibi (PW-4), are the brother and wife of the deceased, respectively. PW-4 lives in a village nearby and was visiting the deceased to inquire about his indisposed daughter. Both of the eye-witnesses even though close relatives of the deceased, harbour no prior enmity to falsely implicate the petitioner, hence their testimony cannot be discarded merely because of their relationship with the deceased, especially when their presence at the scene of the crime is not unnatural or unusual. The ocular account is fully supported by medical evidence, which confirm the firearm injuries on the body of the deceased. However, it has been observed by us that recovery of the carbine is ineffective due to the inconclusive FSL Report and, therefore, does not support the case of the prosecution. Regarding motive the crime report states that the incident happened as a result of the quarrel between the deceased and the mother of the petitioner; while PW-3 and PW-4 give two different accounts. PW-3 deposed that a quarrel had taken place between his mother and the petitioner. PW-4, the widow of the deceased, stated that the quarrel took place between her and the mother of the petitioner on lighting fire to the garbage/trash. Both the eye-witnesses have given an inconsistent and contradictory account of the motive behind the incident.

41. We now examine the statement of the accused under section 342, Cr.P.C. which states as under:

Q.5. Why this case against you and why the P.Ws. deposed against you?

A. Complainant got registered the instant case after twisting the true facts of the case. As a matter of fact on 03.05.2009, Ramzan deceased made attempt to commit rape with my sister, namely Saima Bibi. My mother, namely, Maqsoodan Bibi came there and interrupted and reprimanded to Ramzan deceased. Upon which he started abusing her and grappled with her. Meanwhile, I came there after listening the reason of quarrel and abuses of Ramzan deceased. I flared up and under grave and sudden provocation, I made a single shot. I have no intention to kill Ramzan deceased, so I did not repeat the fire. During investigation, I took the same stance which was found correct. P.W. 10/Investigating Officer, had admitted this fact during cross-examination.

The defence version as to the circumstances that led to the occurrence is that the deceased attempted to outrage the modesty of accused's sister, Saima Bibi. The mother of the accused reprimanded the deceased, whereupon the deceased started abusing and grappling with her. Meanwhile, the petitioner (accused) reached there and made a fire shot to the deceased, acting under grave and sudden provocation. This defence version finds support from the statement of PW-10 (investigating Police Officer) made in his cross-examination which is relevant and admissible as discussed above. Reading the prosecution evidence in juxtaposition with the defence version, we see that while the prosecution has been successful in establishing and proving that it was the petitioner who fired at the deceased whereby his death occurred. However, it has been noticed that the High Court for valid reasons has observed that "during the trial the motive alleged in the complaint and the FIR was not substantiated and as such remained shrouded in mystery" and concluded that "the occurrence was without premeditation and pre-planning." The finding of the High Court that the occurrence was without premeditation and pre-planning is in line with the first version of the petitioner. The confessional statement of the petitioner made to the investigating officer has been held relevant and admissible to be used in his favour; the statement is not inherently improbable or unbelievable, nor is it inconsistent with the overall facts and circumstances of the case; the first version of the petitioner does not appear to be a concocted one or an afterthought, as it has been his consistent stance since his arrest in the case till recording of his statement under section 342, Cr.P.C.[45] It is underlined that generally absence of motive is a mitigating factor that has a bearing on the quantum of punishment. Absence of motive, therefore, becomes relevant if there is possibility of further reduction in the quantum of punishment. In a case like this, where the petitioner in his first version has raised a plea of grave and sudden provocation, motive assumes crucial importance. It is not only explanatory of the conduct of persons concerned in the incident in the given situation, but also helps in the proper appreciation of evidence in the case, in the light of motivation of their conduct. In the attending circumstances of the present case, a reasonable possibility has arisen that the act of the petitioner may have been induced by grave and sudden provocation to the petitioner. The benefit of the possibility of the existence of another version emerging out of the statement of the petitioner under section 342, Cr.P.C. and the first version of the accused before the Police Officer, if extended to the petitioner, brings his case under Section 302(c) instead of Section 302(b), P.P.C. and in the circumstances of the case the petitioner is entitled to this benefit.

42. For the foregoing reasons and in the circumstances of the case, the instant criminal petition is converted into an appeal and is partly allowed. The conviction and sentence of the petitioner-appellant recorded by the trial court and maintained/ modified by the High Court under Section 302(b), P.P.C are set aside. Instead the petitioner-appellant is convicted under Section 302(c), P.P.C. and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 10 years. He shall also pay compensation of Rs. 100,000/- (one hundred thousand) to the legal heirs of the deceased, in terms of Section 544-A, Cr.P.C., and in default of its payment he shall undergo simple imprisonment for a period of six months. Benefit of Section 382-B, Cr.P.C. is extended to him. The criminal petition filed by the complainant for enhancement of the sentence of the petitioner-appellant being devoid of merits is dismissed and leave to appeal is refused.

Civil Petition No. 205-L of 2017, decided on 11th August, 2020.

(On appeal from the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 13.12.2016, passed in W.P. No.36461 of 2016)

Establishment of the Office of Wafaqi Mohtasib (Ombudsman) Order (I of 1983)---

----Art. 9---Federal Ombudsmen Institutional Reforms Act (XIV of 2013), S. 10---Wafaqi Mohtasib (Investigation and Disposal of Complaints) Regulations, 2003, Regln. 2(m)---Wafaqi Mohtasib (Ombudsman) and Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat---Legal status and powers---Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat was not a legal entity, and did not enjoy any legal status or the power to sue or be sued under the law---Furthermore the Ombudsman, being a creature of the statute, could not challenge the powers vested in him by the legislature, however, the parties to the proceedings may bring such a challenge---Ombudsman by law and by design was not empowered to defend its decisions before a higher forum by becoming a party to the proceedings---Ombudsman had no locus standi to challenge an order passed by the constitutional court that interpreted its jurisdiction or powers under the law.

Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat gave its findings in the present matter and recommended respondent (Sui Northern Gas Pipeline Ltd.) to reconsider the matter by adopting proper procedure and take disciplinary action against its delinquent officers, etc. Respondent challenged said Recommendations of the Ombudsman before the High Court and vide the impugned order the High Court held that the disputes pertaining to detection bills on allegations of meter tampering fell within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Oil and Gas Regulatory Authority ("OGRA") and Ombudsman had no jurisdiction over such like matters.

Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat/petitioner (not the Ombudsman) filed present petition for leave to appeal before the Supreme Court with the prayer that order of the High Court be set aside. The alleged grievance of the petitioner, arose from the curtailment of the jurisdiction and powers of the Ombudsman in matters pertaining to gas detection bills and meter tampering. Primary questions in the present case were whether Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat (or for that matter even the Ombudsman) could maintain the present petition for leave to appeal by challenging the order of the High Court whereby the jurisdiction and powers of the Ombudsman under the Establishment of the Office of the Wafaqi Mohtasib (Ombudsman) Order, 1983 ("Order I of 1983") read with the Federal Ombudsman Institutional Reforms Act, 2013 ("Act") had been interpreted and determined; as to how was the Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat or the Wafaqi Mohtasib (Ombudsman) aggrieved by the impugned order; and more importantly, could the Ombudsman and his Secretariat be aggrieved of an order which interpreted and determined the jurisdiction and powers of the Wafaqi Mohtasib under the Order of 1983 and the Act.

Perusal of Order of 1983 revealed that Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat was not a legal entity, infact it was not a defined term under said Order, and did not enjoy any legal status or the power to sue or be sued under the law. Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat was at best an administrative term and referred to the establishment of the offices of the Ombudsman under Wafaqi Mohtasib (Investigation and Disposal of Complaints) Regulations, 2003. The filing of the present petition by the Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat was, therefore, hopelessly misconceived as it had no locus standi to maintain the instant petition.

Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the present petition was filed by the Ombudsman. Still the question arose, whether the Ombudsman was an aggrieved person in the present matter. The answer to such question required an understanding of the distinction between the two roles enjoyed by the Ombudsman under Order I of 1983. One was personal, that related to the terms and conditions of service of the Ombudsman; while the other was the neutral quasi-judicial institutional role (or statutory) of the Ombudsman to "redress and rectify" mal-administration. In the first case the Ombudsman could be (personally) aggrieved regarding any order that affected his terms and conditions of service under Order of 1983, as that would be affecting his rights to service under the law. However, in the second case, the Ombudsman, could not be said to be aggrieved, if the powers to redress mal-administration vested in him under the law were modified (enhanced or curtailed) by the Parliament or through interpretation of the constitutional court. Challenging the powers would be challenging the law and intent of the Parliament. Ombudsman, being a creature of the statute, could not challenge the powers vested in him by the legislature, however, the parties to the proceedings may bring such a challenge. The powers enjoyed by the Ombudsman could not be confused with his rights under the law.

A neutral quasi-judicial adjudicatory forum created under a statute could not become a party to the proceedings brought before it. Such a forum was simply to redress mal-administration by exercising its powers under the law. The Ombudsman by law and by design was not empowered to defend its decisions before a higher forum by becoming a party to the proceedings. This would totally tarnish its neutrality.

Even the Ombudsman had no locus standi to challenge an order passed by the constitutional court that interpreted its jurisdiction or powers under the law. Therefore, the present petition filed by the Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat was hopelessly misconceived, not maintainable and passed for frivolous litigation resulting in wasting the time of the court. Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed with costs of Rs.100,000/- [p. 591] E & F

Hafiz Ahsaan Ahmad Khokhar, Advocate Supreme Court, Imtiaz A. Shaukat, Advocate-on-Record and M. Usman Arif, D.A.G. for Petitioners.

Umar Sharif, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent No.1.

Date of hearing: 11th August, 2020.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts of the case are that Respondent No.2, an industrial gas consumer, approached the Wafaqi Mohtasib (Ombudsman) to complain about the excessive gas billing by Sui Northern Gas Pipeline Ltd. (SNGPL), Respondent No.1 and the "mal-administration" at the hands of its officials. In the "Findings Recommendations" issued by Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat dated 28.10.2014 the complaint of Respondent No.2 against Respondent No.1 was rejected finding no maladministration on the part of Respondent No. 1. Thereafter, the Respondent No.2 filed a review and in its "Revised Findings" and "Final Recommendations for Implementation" issued by the Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat on 26.02.2016, Respondent No.1 was recommended to reconsider the matter by adopting proper procedure and take disciplinary action against the delinquent officers, etc. Respondent No.1 challenged these Recommendations of the Ombudsman before the High Court and vide impugned order dated 13.12.2016 the High Court[1] held that the disputes pertaining to detection bills on allegations of meter tampering fell within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Oil and Gas Regulatory Authority ("OGRA") under the Oil and Gas Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ("Ordinance") and Ombudsman had no jurisdiction over such like matters. The writ petition was decided through the impugned order in favour of Respondent No.1 on 13.12.2016 and the said order, as per the learned counsel for the parties has not been challenged before this Court by the parties.

2. The petitioner before us is the Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat (not the Ombudsman) with the prayer that order of the High Court be set aside. The alleged grievance of the petitioner, as disclosed in the petition, arises from the curtailment of the jurisdiction and powers of the Ombudsman in matters pertaining to gas detection bills and meter tampering which fall under the OGRA Ordinance. Without going into the merits of the case or commenting upon the merits of the impugned judgment, the primary question before us is whether Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat (or for that matter even the Ombudsman) could maintain the instant petition by challenging the order of the High Court whereby the jurisdiction and powers of the Ombudsman under the Establishment of the office of the Wafaqi Mohtasib (Ombudsman) Order, 1983 ("Order, 1983") read with the Federal Ombudsmen Institutional Reforms Act, 2013 ("Act") have been interpreted and determined. How is the Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat or the Wafaqi Mohtasib (Ombudsman) aggrieved by the impugned order? And more importantly, can the Ombudsman and his secretariat be aggrieved of an order which interprets and determines the jurisdiction and powers of the Wafaqi Mohtasib under the Order and the Act?

3. Perusal of Order, 1983 reveals that Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat is not a legal entity, infact it is not a defined term under Order, 1983[2] and does not enjoy any legal status or the power to sue or be sued under the law. Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat is at best an administrative term and refers to the establishment of the offices of the Ombudsman under Wafaqi Mohtasib (Investigation and Disposal of Complaints) Regulations, 2003. The filing of the instant petition by the Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat is, therefore, hopelessly misconceived as it has no locus standi to maintain the instant petition.

4. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the petition was filed by the Ombudsman, as he was arrayed as a respondent in the writ petition. Still the question arises, whether the Ombudsman is an aggrieved person in the instant matter? The answer to this question requires an understanding of the distinction between the two roles enjoyed by the Ombudsman under Order, 1983. One is personal, that relates to the terms and conditions of service of the Ombudsman; while the other is the neutral quasi-judicial institutional role (or statutory) of the Ombudsman to "redress and rectify" mal-administration. In the first case the Ombudsman can be (personally) aggrieved regarding any order that affects his terms and conditions of service under Order, 1983, as that would be affecting his rights to service under the law. However, in the second case, the Ombudsman, cannot be said to be aggrieved, if the powers to redress mal-administration vested in him under the law are modified (enhanced or curtailed) by the Parliament or through interpretation of the constitutional court. Challenging the powers would be challenging the law and intent of the Parliament. Ombudsman, being a creature of the statute, cannot challenge the powers vested in him by the legislature, however, the parties to the proceedings may bring such a challenge. The powers enjoyed by the Ombudsman cannot be confused with his rights under the law.

5. Another way to look at it is that a neutral quasi judicial adjudicatory forum created under a statute cannot become a party to the proceedings brought before it. Such a forum is to simply to redress mal-administration by exercising its powers under the law. The Ombudsman by law and by design is not empowered to defend its decisions before a higher forum by becoming a party to the proceedings. This would totally tarnish its neutrality.

6. For the above reasons, even the Ombudsman has no locus standi to challenge an order passed by the constitutional court that interprets its jurisdiction or powers under the law. Therefore, the instant petition filed by the Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat is hopelessly misconceived and not maintainable.

7. The filing of this petition by the Wafaqi Mohtasib's Secretariat through its Secretary has left us concerned and disturbed. We, therefore, direct the Ombudsman to hold an inquiry into the matter and submit a report to this Court within two months from today as to who had authorized the filing of the instant petition and the action taken against the concerned officials.

8. This hopelessly misconceived petition passes for frivolous litigation and has resulted in wasting the time of the court. Therefore, this petition is dismissed with costs of Rs.100,000/- imposed under Order XXVIII, Rule 3 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980. The costs shall be deposited with any approved, recognized and well-known Charitable Organization and receipt thereof be submitted with the Deputy Registrar of this Court (Lahore Registry) within two months from today. In case of failure to comply with the directions in this paragraph or paragraph 7 (above), the office shall fix this petition before the Court for necessary orders. Leave is, therefore, declined and this petition stands dismissed with costs.

(d) Disabled Persons (Employment and Rehabilitation) Ordinance (XL of 1981)---

----S. 10---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9, 14(1) & 18---Employment of persons with disabilities---Disability quota---Allocation of 2% disability quota against sanctioned posts---Scope and meaning---Disability Quota was to be calculated on the basis of the total sanctioned posts of the establishment---In every tier of the establishment, the total Disability Quota was to be further apportioned and allocated amongst different categories of posts in the establishment---Determination of different categories was on the basis of their distinct qualifications, selection criteria and separate merit list---In case the sanctioned strength of a post was less than 50, it would be for the establishment to allocate seat(s) from the overall Disability Quota against such a post---If a particular post was not fit for a person with disabilities, the establishment may shift the Disability Quota and adjust it against another post in the establishment so that the overall Disability Quota was maintained at all times.

Section 10 of the Disabled Persons (Employment and Rehabilitation) Ordinance, 1981 provided that not less than 2% of the total number of persons employed by an establishment at any time shall be persons with disabilities (PWDs). The total number of persons employed meant the total sanctioned posts of the establishment, i.e., an Organization, Authority, Department or Ministry. Two percent (2%) of the total sanctioned posts or workforce of the establishment became the Disability Quota for the establishment. Every establishment had a variety of posts with different qualifications; job descriptions and skill sets. Appointments to these posts were based on different selection criteria and separate merit lists. The mechanism for appointment against 2% Disability Quota was also to work side by side with the general recruitment process for every category of posts. Therefore, the total Disability Quota for the establishment was further apportioned and allocated against the sanctioned strength of various category of posts which had a separate selection criteria.

Phrase "disabled persons" is not approved should be persons with disabilities. Barrister Asfandyar Khan Tareen and others v. Government of the Punjab and others PLD 2018 Lah. 300 and Sajjad Ali v. Vice-Chancellor through Registrar University of Malakand at Chakdara, Dir Lower and others 2020 PLC (C.S.) 235 ref.

There may arise a situation where the posts in a particular category were less than 50, in that case it would be upto the establishment to allocate Disability Quota to respective categories of posts even though they were less than 50 posts in a particular category in order to maintain the overall Disability Quota of the establishment. It may also be the case that a particular category of posts in an establishment may not be fit for a person with disability, in that case the establishment may shift the Disability Quota to posts which are fit for PWDs. The prime objective was to maintain a 2% Disability Quota within the establishment and it was for the establishment to allocate the posts against respective categories in case they were less than 50 in a particular category or not suited to PWDs.

Allocation of 2% Disability Quota on the basis of the advertised posts as compared to the sanctioned posts was adverse to the interest of the PWDs for the reasons that 2% Disability Quota could only be actualized if there was a minimum of 50 posts advertised to secure one post for the PWDs. If the advertisement was for less than 50 posts (due to the vacancies arising at that particular time), Disability Quota on the basis of the advertised posts could not be worked out, depriving the PWDs of their prospect of employment. This could go on for a longtime as posts were advertised as per vacancies which varied from time to time, therefore, if Disability Quota were to be based on the advertised posts, the fate of the PWDs would continue to hang in the balance and remain uncertain unless the posts advertised happened to be above 50. It was, therefore, in the interest of the PWDs that the Disability Quota for the establishment was first worked out on the basis of the total sanctioned posts and then apportioned against the total sanctioned strength of different categories of posts. Thereafter, the posts could be successively filled as and when the vacancies arose through advertisement, keeping the total Disability Quota in mind rather than the number of posts advertised.

Filling the Disability Quota on the basis of advertised posts was, therefore, detrimental to the interest and welfare of the persons with disabilities; was against the letter of the law and offended their fundamental right to life and livelihood and their right to dignity

The advertisement for any category of post must clearly provide the total Disability Quota for that category of posts and the number of seats vacant under the said Disability Quota at the time of the advertisement. [p. 611] M

(f) Disabled Persons (Employment and Rehabilitation) Ordinance (XL of 1981)---

----S. 10---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9, 14(1), 18 & 25(1)---UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD), 2006, Art. 2---Employment of persons with disabilities---Disability quota of 2% against sanctioned posts---Persons with disabilities must be provided with the infrastructure, access, support, and facilities at their workplaces---Appropriate modification and adjustments, including assistive technology, where needed, were to be provided to ensure that persons with disabilities could enjoy on an equal basis with others all human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Appointing persons with disabilities under Disability Quota of 2% was half the story. The other half and perhaps the more important half was to provide the infrastructure, access, support, and facilities, so that persons with disabilities, once appointed to a post, could perform their job without feeling physically or emotionally incapacitated in any manner. The biggest barriers to the employment of persons with disabilities was the accessibility and their social acceptability at the workplace. The Government and the concerned establishment was bound to make provisions for it, for otherwise, the Disability Quota and the purpose of the Disabled Persons (Employment and Rehabilitation) Ordinance, 1981, would stand frustrated and serve no useful purpose. This support and facilitation for persons with disabilities had been recognized as 'Reasonable Accommodation' under the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD) that Pakistan had ratified in 2011. It means necessary and appropriate modification and adjustments where needed in a particular case to ensure persons with disabilities the enjoyment on an equal basis with others of all human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Reasonable accommodation could be through assistive technology, which was an umbrella term that included assistive, adaptive, and rehabilitative devices for people with disabilities. Assistive technology promoted greater independence by enabling persons with disabilities to perform tasks that they were formerly unable to accomplish, or had great difficulty accomplishing, by providing enhancements to, or changing methods of interacting with, the technology needed to accomplish such tasks.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The Petitioner applied for the post of Senior Elementary School Educator Arabic ("SESE [Arabic]") on the disability quota ("Disability Quota") in pursuance to the advertisement put out by the Education Department, Local Government, Multan. According to the advertisement, in addition to the other posts, a total of 81 posts of SESE [Arabic] were advertised with 42 posts in female category and 39 posts in the male category at the Girls and Boys schools, respectively. Thereafter, only one Mst. Asma Qasim was appointed against the said post under the Disability Quota and the petitioner failed to secure a position. Admittedly, Mst. Asma Qasim with 62.78 Marks topped the merit list for the post of SESE [Arabic] under the Disability Quota and the petitioner with 43.53 Marks could not be offered a post. Aggrieved of not being offered a place, the petitioner challenged the selection process under Disability Quota before the High Court by invoking its constitutional jurisdiction. His writ petition was dismissed vide order dated 28.10.2013 and so did his appeal before the High Court (ICA) vide impugned order dated 01.12.2014.

2. After hearing the parties and having gone through the record, the legal question that arises in this case is the manner of allocation of 2% Disability Quota for employment under the Disabled Persons (Employment and Rehabilitation) Ordinance, 1981 ("Ordinance")[1]. The Ordinance requires that 2% of the total number of persons employed by an establishment at any time shall be "disabled persons"[2]. In order to fully understand the allocation mechanism of the Disability Quota under the Ordinance, it would be useful to first understand the concept of Disability and the importance of role of employment in the lives of persons with disabilities ("PWDs") as compared to persons without disabilities.

CONCEPT OF DISABILITY

3. Disability means lacking one or more physical powers, such as the ability to walk or to coordinate one's movements, as from the effects of a disease or accident, or through mental impairment.[3] According to the UN Convention on the Rights Of Persons With Disabilities ("CRPD" or "Convention") ratified by Pakistan in 2011, persons with disabilities include those who have long-term physical, mental, intellectual or sensory impairments which in interaction with various barriers may hinder their full and effective participation in society on an equal basis with others.

Medical and Social model

4. There are two main threads to the concept of disability: the medical model and the social model. Both models regard disability as a difficult predicament commonly faced by people; however, while the medical model looks at disability as a condition requiring medical intervention, the social model looks at it as a condition that requires the transformation of societal attitudes and state policies.[4] The medical model views disability as an impairment due to various health related factors which can be identified and eradicated through medical treatment.[5] While the social model identifies systemic barriers, negative attitudes and exclusion by society and argues that societal attitudes and environment are the main barriers for people with disabilities.

5. The social model argues that Disability is the loss or limitation of opportunities to participate in activities - social, economic and political - on an equal footing with those with no impairments. "Disability is the outcome of an oppressive relationship between people with impairments and the rest of society".[6] It has been argued that society is the cause of disability and reject the idea of it being a personal tragedy.[7]

6. The social and economic inclusion of people with disabilities in development has not been realized, despite the fact that disability belongs to the socio-economic development agenda. There is a reluctance to consider disability from the viewpoint of investment. Human capital development such as education and employment are among the most important factors for inclusion and economic empowerment. When these factors are made inclusive and accessible to persons with disabilities, it not only leads to an improvement in their livelihoods but also improves the prospects of their families and of society as a whole.[8] Disability is thus not just a health problem. It is a complex phenomenon, reflecting the interaction between features of a person's body and features of the society in which he or she lives.[9]

Employment for persons with disabilities

7. According to International Labour Organization (ILO) an estimated 386 million of the world's working-age are PWDs. The unemployment among the PWDs is as high as 80 per cent in some countries. Often employers assume that persons with disabilities are unable to work. In Pakistan, estimates of the number of persons living with disabilities vary between 3.3 million and 27 million.[10]

8. Employment is equally important to all people, without it, social inclusion and economic independence are unlikely to be achieved. Among the crucial social functions that employment can facilitate are financial independence and social inclusion. It has also been found to improve social status, provide social support and enable workers to make a contribution, thereby leading to an increase in self-worth[11]. Employment has the potential to improve a person's financial situation, open up opportunities for social contact, build (new) friendships and increase people's self-esteem. By contrast, unemployment can cause not only poverty and social exclusion but also result in a lower sense of self-worth. The effects of unemployment on physical health like symptoms of somatization disorder, depression and anxiety were significantly greater in unemployed than employed individuals.[12] The situation for people with disabilities may have consequences of a greater extent as they tend to be looked upon as dependents of their families and relatives and are not expected to be gainfully employed or independent. Work has been, and will undoubtedly continue to be, central to all human societies.

9. One of the major difficulties faced by persons with disabilities is that employers have the erroneous assumption that these people will probably underperform in most areas of their duties - something which is actually not the case. Another plausible issue is that when the majority of workplaces are not made accessible to people with disabilities, employers may feel that they will have to make an unwarranted investment to provide facilities for people with disabilities, and some do not believe in the employment potential of such people.[13]

Rights based approach towards disability

10. The paradigm in disability has shifted from charity to investment, exclusion to inclusion and sympathy to rights-based approach towards disability.[14] Disabled people initially were not considered worthy of any rights. The disabled were treated as abnormal or different from society, and thus needed to be given medical treatment under the medical model. Under the social model, disability is explained as a condition created by society and the environment, and not the result of an individual's impairment. The human rights model or rights-based model embodies the values or principles of dignity, respect, equality, and social justice to the disabled. The UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities of 2006 ("CRPD") created a binding framework for the rights-based model of disability law. Disabled persons by virtue of being a human have the right to enjoy life, liberty, equality, security and dignity.[15]

11. In Pakistan, policy approaches to disability have largely been focused on rehabilitation, welfare handouts and related charity. This has been changing since CRPD, which Pakistan ratified in 2011, but progress around building an inclusive society has been woefully slow. The Convention, which became operational in 2008, is the first human rights treaty of the 21st century and the first UN treaty protecting the fundamental rights of persons with disability. In line with the general discourse around development-related issues today, the treaty is a move towards viewing disability from a rights-based approach.[16]

12. CRPD works to promote and protect the human rights of people with disabilities. With Article 27 explicitly recognizing their right to work on an equal basis with others. The same Article further emphasizes the opportunity to gain a living by work freely chosen or accepted in a labour market and work environment that is open, inclusive and accessible to people with disabilities. CRPD also prohibits all forms of employment discrimination, promotes access to vocational training, promotes opportunities for self-employment and calls for reasonable accommodation in the workplace. The new dimension in the treatment of persons with disabilities, which the Convention sanctions, is the departure from the perception of people with disabilities as "objects" of mercy, treatment and social protection, to the perception of disabled people as "subjects" possessing rights, which they are able to claim, make decisions and be active members of society. This legal act is based on values arising from fundamental human rights. It guarantees people with disabilities equal access to institutions and the possibility of pursuing social activities and fulfilling the roles on the same principles as those who are able-bodied.[17]

DISABILITY AND OUR CONSTITUTION

13. Our Constitution, as a whole, does not distinguish between a person with or without disabilities. It recognizes inherent dignity of a human being; equal and inalienable rights of all the people as the foundation of freedom, justice and peace. Every person is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth therein, without distinction of any kind. It, therefore, applies equally to persons with disabilities, guaranteeing them full enjoyment of their fundamental rights without discrimination. The triangular construct of the right to life, dignity and equality under the Constitution provides a robust platform for mainstreaming persons with disabilities.[18] "The purpose of the constitutional right to human dignity is to realize the constitutional value of human dignity; to realize a person's humanity; his free will; the freedom to shape his life and fulfill himself. It is a person's freedom to write his life story."[19] Such vibrancy and vitality is the hallmark of a living constitution in a democracy.[20]

2% DISABILITY QUOTA - HOW TO BE WORKED OUT.

14. Understanding Disability and the importance of employment for PWDs, we now examine the relevant provision of the Ordinance. The preambular statement of the law is that it is an Ordinance to provide for the employment, rehabilitation and welfare of PWDs. Section 10 of the Ordinance provides as under:-

10. Establishments to employ disabled persons.[21]

(1) Not less than two percent of the total number of persons employed by an establishment at any time shall be disabled persons whose names have been registered with the Employment Exchange of the area in which such establishment is located and against whose names in the register maintained under section 12 an endorsement exists to the effect that they are fit to work.

(2) The disabled persons employed against any post in pursuance of subsection (1) shall be entitled to the terms and conditions which are not less favourable than those of the other persons employed by the establishment against similar posts.

(3) When calculating the percentage of the posts in an establishment for the purposes of employment of disabled persons, the fraction of 0.5 and above shall count as a whole number.

Section 10 of the Ordinance provides that not less than 2% of the total number of persons employed by an establishment at any time shall be PWDs. The total number of persons employed means the total sanctioned posts[22] of the establishment, i.e., an Organization, Authority, Department or Ministry. 2% of the total sanctioned posts or workforce of the establishment becomes the Disability Quota for the establishment. Every establishment has a variety of posts with different qualifications; job descriptions and skill sets. Appointments to these posts are based on different selection criteria and separate merit lists. The mechanism for appointment against 2% Disability Quota is also to work side by side with the general recruitment process for every category of posts. Therefore, the total Disability Quota for the establishment is further apportioned and allocated against the sanctioned strength of various category of posts which have a separate selection criteria. For example in the instant case the Disability Quota in the respondent Education Department is as follows, including the Disability Quota for the post of SESE [Arabic]:

CADRE WISE POSTS - 2009

| # | POST | SANCTION | 2% DISABILITY QUOTA |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | SSE/SST | 1326 | 27 |
| 2 | EST/SESE (Arts, Science) | 1699 | 34 |
| 3 | EST (OT) | 299 | 6 |
| 4 | EST (ARABIC) | 252 | 5 |
| 5 | EST (DM) | 159 | 3 |
| 6 | EST (Phy) | 291 | 6 |
| 7 | ESE/PST | 5900 | 118 |
| 8 | NON TEACHING POSTS | 2306 | 46 |
| TOTAL Sanctioned Posts | | 12,232 | 245 |

15. There may arise a situation where the posts in a particular category are less than 50, in that case it will be upto the establishment to allocate Disability Quota to respective categories of posts even though they are less than 50 posts in a particular category in order to maintain the overall Disability Quota of the establishment. It may also be the case that a particular category of posts in an establishment may not be fit for a person with disability, in that case the establishment may shift the Disability Quota to posts which are fit for PWDs. The prime objective is to maintain a 2% Disability Quota within the establishment and it is for the establishment to allocate the posts against respective categories in case they are less than 50 in a particular category or not suited to PWDs.[23]

16. The Allocation of 2% Disability Quota on the basis of the advertised posts as compared to the sanctioned posts is adverse to the interest of the PWDs for the reasons that 2% Disability Quota can only be actualized if there is a minimum of 50 posts advertised to secure one post for the PWDs. If the advertisement is for less than 50 posts (due to the vacancies arising at that particular time), Disability Quota on the basis of the advertised posts cannot be worked out, depriving the PWDs of their prospect of employment. This can go on for a longtime as posts are advertised as per vacancies which vary from time to time, therefore, if Disability Quota were to be based on the advertised posts, the fate of the PWDs would continue to hang in the balance and remain uncertain unless the posts advertised happen to be above 50. It is, therefore, in the interest of the PWDs that the Disability Quota for the establishment is first worked out on the basis of the total sanctioned posts and then apportioned against the total sanctioned strength of different categories of posts. Thereafter, the posts can be successively filled as and when the vacancies arise through advertisement, keeping the total Disability Quota in mind rather than the number of posts advertised.

17. In the present case the posts advertised for SESE [Arabic] were 81 which allows for one post in the Disability Quota, while if the Disability Quota is worked out on the total sanctioned strength of the posts of SESE [Arabic] it comes to 5 posts (see chart above) and 4 more PWDs could have been appointed against the said posts against the advertisement in question. Filling the Disability Quota on the basis of advertised posts is, therefore, detrimental to the interest and welfare of the persons with disabilities; is against the letter of the law and offends their fundamental right to life and livelihood and their right to dignity.

18. Summarizing the above we hold that: (i) The 2% (and now 3%)[24] Disability Quota is to be calculated on the basis of the total sanctioned posts of the establishment. (ii) In order to ensure fair and equitable representation of persons with disabilities (PWDs) in every tier of the establishment, the total Disability Quota is to be further apportioned and allocated amongst different categories of posts in the establishment. The determination of different categories is on the basis of their distinct qualifications, selection criteria and separate merit list. (iii) In case the sanctioned strength of a post is less than 50, it will be for the establishment to allocate seat(s) from the overall Disability Quota against such a post (iv) if a particular post is not fit for a PWD, the establishment may shift the Disability Quota and adjust it against another post in the establishment so that the overall Disability Quota is not disturbed and maintained at all times. (v) The advertisement for any category of post must clearly provide the total Disability Quota for that category of posts and the number of seats vacant under the said Disability Quota at the time of the advertisement.

Use of inappropriate and insensitive words

19. It is also observed that words like "disabled," "physically handicapped" and "mentally retarded" deeply bruise and offend human dignity of persons with different abilities. The Federal Government and the Provincial Governments are directed to discontinue the use of these words in official correspondence, directives, notifications and circulars and shift to "persons with disabilities" or "persons with different abilities". The view taken by the Lahore High Court in Barrister Asfandyar Khan case[25] is approved and must be given effect to.

Employment is half the story

20. Appointing persons with disabilities under Disability Quota of 2% is half the story. The other half and perhaps the more important half is to provide the infrastructure, access, support, and facilities, so that persons with disabilities, once appointed to a post, can perform their job without feeling physically or emotionally incapacitated in any manner. The biggest barriers to the employment of persons with disabilities is the accessibility and their social acceptability at the workplace. The Government and the concerned establishment is bound to make provisions for it, for otherwise, the Disability Quota and the purpose of the Ordinance will stand frustrated and serve no useful purpose. This support and facilitation for persons with disabilities has been recognized as Reasonable Accommodation under the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD) that Pakistan has ratified in 2011. It means necessary and appropriate modification and adjustments where needed in a particular case to ensure persons with disabilities the enjoyment on an equal basis with others of all human rights and fundamental freedoms.

21. It is elaborated that Reasonable Accommodation can be through assistive technology, which is an umbrella term that includes assistive, adaptive, and rehabilitative devices for people with disabilities. Assistive technology promotes greater independence by enabling PWDs to perform tasks that they were formerly unable to accomplish, or had great difficulty accomplishing, by providing enhancements to, or changing methods of interacting with, the technology needed to accomplish such tasks.[26] The Convention provides that no one can be discriminated on the ground of disability and obligates the State to take steps to provide Reasonable Accommodation in order to provide inclusion and access to persons with disabilities in the society.

Relief

22. In the present case the Disability Quota for 252 posts[27] of SESE [Arabic] is 5 posts but only one post out of this Disability Quota has been filled by Mst. Asma Qasim. Therefore, respondents are directed to reconsider the case of the petitioner, preferably along with the other applicants with disabilities who had applied for the said posts (if they can be reached out) and fill the Disability Quota for SESE [Arabic] only if petitioner and other applicants (if any) meet the selection criteria fixed for the said post. Let this exercise be completed within a period of one month from the receipt of this judgment through a speaking order. For the above reasons the impugned orders of the High Court are set aside. This petition is converted into an appeal and allowed in the above terms.

(Against the order of the Supreme Court of Pakistan dated 01.08.2019, passed in C.Ps. Nos.257-L and 258-L/2019).

----Arts. 10-A, 184, 185 & 188---Judgments/orders challenged before the Supreme Court---Judgment given by the Supreme Court---Scope and contents---If the Supreme Court, having examined the judgment challenged before it, was satisfied with its reasoning and conclusions and was of the view that it did not call for any interference, the Supreme Court could simply endorse the impugned judgment and adopt the reasoning of the court below---In such cases re-tracing the same path travelled by the court below appeared to be an unnecessary exercise and a waste of public time---Finding no reversible error in the judgment, a concise, simple order could suffice, however if the Court was to reverse or modify the judgment of the court below, the reasons for the reversal or modification must be set forth---Such approach was by no means a short-cut which was offensive to fair trial under Art. 10-A of the Constitution.

One of the grounds for review in the present case was that the order under review was without any reason. The order under review passed by the Supreme Court read:- "We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioners at some length and have gone through the impugned judgment of the High Court, the record of the case and the law on the subject. We have not been able to take any exception to the reasoning of the impugned judgment and are of the view that it does not warrant any interference. Leave is, therefore, declined and these petitions are dismissed."

If the Supreme Court, having examined the judgment challenged before it, was satisfied with its reasoning and conclusions and was of the view that it did not call for any interference, the Supreme Court could simply endorse the impugned judgment and adopt the reasoning of the court below. In such a case, re-tracing the same path travelled by the court below appeared to be an unnecessary exercise and a waste of public time - time which could be allocated to other cases where the decisions of the courts below had been overturned or modified. Finding no reversible error in the judgment, a concise, simple order could suffice. On the other hand, if the Court was to reverse or modify the judgment of the court below, the reasons for the reversal or modification must be set forth.

Such approach adopted by the court, was by no means a short-cut which was offensive to fair trial under Article 10-A of the Constitution nor did it in any manner undermine due process and fair-play. It was simply a creative way forward that spared the Court from writing opinions where a mere adoption of a well-reasoned judgment of the court below through a short order served the purpose adequately.

(b) Administration of justice---

We find that no ground for review of the impugned order dated 01.08.2019 is made out.

2. We have also noticed that one of the grounds for review is that the order under review is without any reason. The order passed by this Court on 01.08.2019 was as under:-

> "We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioners at some length and have gone through the impugned judgment of the High Court, the record of the case and the law on the subject. We have not been able to take any exception to the reasoning of the impugned judgment and are of the view that it does not warrant any interference. Leave is, therefore, declined and these petitions are dismissed."

It is emphasised that if this Court, having examined the judgment challenged before it, is satisfied with its reasoning and conclusions and is of the view that it does not call for any interference, this Court can simply endorse the impugned judgment and adopt the reasoning of the court below. In such a case, re-tracing the same path travelled by the court below appears to be an unnecessary exercise and a waste of public time - time which can be allocated to other cases where the decisions of the courts below have been overturned or modified. Finding no reversible error in the judgment, a concise, simple order can suffice. On the other hand, if the Court is to reverse or modify the judgment of the court below, the reasons for the reversal or modification must be set forth.[1]

3. This approach adopted by the court, is by no means a short-cut which is offensive to fair trial under Article 10-A of the Constitution nor does it in any manner undermine due process and fair-play. It is simply a creative way forward that spares the Court from writing opinions where a mere adoption of a well-reasoned judgment of the court below through a short order serves the purpose adequately.

4. Nothing is cast in stone. Old practices evolve with changing times. Burgeoning population and the corresponding rapid increase in litigation require imaginative solutions. Courts all over the world have moved on to efficient time and case management techniques. Therefore this ground for review is absolutely misconceived.

5. As no ground for review is made out, these civil review petitions are, therefore, dismissed.

6. These are applications for condonation of delay in filing the titled civil review petitions. For the reasons given in the said applications, the same are allowed.

(a) Res judicata, principle of---

----Scope---Principle of res judicata was a principle of peace---Once a controversy with regard to a right in property or a right to office was adjudicated upon and attained finality through a judicial pronouncement of a competent Court of law, it no more remained open to challenge in any subsequent judicial proceedings between the same parties on the same subject matter---Said principle was intended not to afford a litigant more than one opportunity for resolution of a judicial dispute and thus eliminated the chances of repetitious and successive litigation against a party on the same issue---Maxim "that there should be an end to litigation" was germane to such matters.

(b) Res judicata, principle of---

----Applicability and scope---Vires of a statute---Conflicting judgments of two High Courts---In case of conflicting decisions on the vires of a legislative enactment of two High Courts, when decision of one remained unchallenged in the hierarchy as no appeal was preferred and the other was challenged before the Supreme Court, then the verdict of the High Court that went unchallenged, which was in conflict with the final decision of the Supreme Court had to be treated as outmoded and no longer executable---Such a situation warranted departure from the doctrine of res judicata.

Any relief which a litigant sought in a judicial proceeding with regard to any power or a right or an obligation connected with some property or an office which power or right or obligation was not dependent upon the legitimacy of a legislative enactment and stood or fell on its own strength then in such cases when the decision rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction attained finality, there was no difficulty in applying the principle of res judicata to such a decision. However, it would be difficult to apply such a principle in matters where a power or a right or an obligation solely depended upon the very legitimacy of the enactment that had come under challenge in a Court of law on the touchstone of the Constitution. In such a situation the existence of such power or right or obligation would solely depend on the final adjudication as to the legal validity of the enactment itself. This could be understood from a situation where a controversy as regards constitutional validity of an enactment had come under challenge before two High Courts, one declaring the enactment ultra vires the Constitution and the other intra vires. If the principle of res judicata was applied to the decision of the High Court that declared the law ultra vires as the same was not challenged any further by the Government then two conflicting declarations would stand side by side on the legitimacy of a legislative enactment, one party treating the law valid and the other invalid. This would lead to treating an Act of the parliament valid for some and invalid for others though both the set of persons were similarly placed. If the decision rendered by the High Court that declared the law intra vires the Constitution was only challenged before the Supreme Court and after examining the merits of the case the enactment was declared by the Supreme Court to be intra vires the Constitution, then in such peculiar situation when the Supreme Court finally validated the legislative enactment then the same had to be applied uniformly to every person falling within its ambit. Such final judicial determination on the legitimacy of a legislative enactment had to be treated as a judgment in rem regardless of the fact that the judgment of the High Court that invalidated the very same enactment was not challenged before the Supreme Court. Such a situation warranted departure from the doctrine of res judicata. Omission of a public functionary to file appeal could not put fetters on the universal application of a legislative enactment declared by the Supreme Court to be constitutionally valid as it would amount to repealing the statute for some and treating it valid for others.

Hence where there were conflicting decisions on the vires of a legislative enactment of two High Courts, and decision of one remained unchallenged in the hierarchy as no appeal was preferred and the other was challenged before the Supreme Court, then the verdict of the High Court that went unchallenged, which was in conflict with the final decision of the Supreme Court had to be treated as outmoded and no longer executable.

Pir Bukhsh and others v. Chairman Allotment Committee PLD 1987 SC 145 distinguished.

The final determination of the Supreme Court on the legitimacy of a law had to apply even to those who had succeeded in obtaining a judgment from a Court lower in the hierarchy that the law was ultra vires the Constitution, they too would be bound by the judgment of the Supreme Court, if it had through a judicial pronouncement declared a legislative enactment to be valid.

(d) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 73, 77 & Fourth Sched. Pt. II, Entries Nos. 47 to 53---Taxes and fees, levy of---Prerogative of the Legislature---Under the Constitution it was the prerogative of the legislature to raise revenue for the government on matters that fell within its legislative competence---Legislature enjoyed the privilege to identify the base of the levy i.e. those upon whom the incidence of the levy would fall and also determine the quantum to be charged from them, which could either be at a fixed rate or ad valorem---Under the Constitution the legislature could levy taxes as well as fees.

(e) Fee---

----Fee imposing legislative enactments, types of---'Fee-simplicitor' and 'Cess-fee'---Distinction---Basic difference between an enactment where fee simplicitor was imposed and where Cess-fee was imposed was that in the former a service or a privilege was made available to the payer directly on the strict principle of quid pro quo whereas in the latter case, the declared purpose came with a promise to bring some benefit or advantage in future which was basically meant for its payers---In order to remain as a fee-levying enactment, the purpose for which the Cess was to be charged should be well spelled out and defined in the enactments as narrowly as possible lest it may convert it into a tax-levying enactment---Proceeds of Cess should be clearly identifiable in the accounts by using separate accounting codes so that its collection and utilization was reconcilable with the purposes stated in the enactment.

There were two kinds of fee-imposing legislative enactments. One was based purely on the principle of quid pro quo i.e. a charge was payable for rendering a specific service or extending a specific privilege which the payers could avail subject to the conditions that may be attached to it. In other words, it could be called as 'fee-simplicitor'. In such an enactment there was direct and immediate correlation in absolute terms between the service that was rendered and the fee that was charged for it. The other kind of a fee-levying legislation was where 'Cess' was imposed as a compulsory exaction in the same manner where taxes were imposed with the distinction that it was imposed for achieving a specific purpose promised in the enactment itself which when realized would bring some advantage or benefit for the payers in future. Such benefit or privilege once made available on the ground may be availed by others as well but that would not change the status of such fee-levying enactment. It would remain a specie of fee-levying enactment in contradistinction to tax-levying enactment in which no specific purpose or specific service needed to be disclosed by the legislature in order to justify its imposition. Cess-fee could be described as 'purpose specific'. In such a form of levy, the specified purpose was pre-committed to the payers before the revenue was collected under the legislation. For example, Cess was imposed to meet the extraordinary costs involved in providing infrastructure such as construction of dams or for importing oil or gas from abroad through pipelines or to build farm to mill roads in order to facilitate marketing of the agricultural produce or for conducting research and development in some specialized field. In such a form of levy the rule of quid pro quo did not exist in the same sense as it existed in a case where an existing service was rendered or a privilege was extended directly to the payer for a fee. What needed to be taken into consideration was whether the enactment had promised some benefit or advantage for the payers to be made available in future by utilizing the revenue, making it more akin to a fee then a pure revenue raising measure like taxes in general were imposed with no precondition attached for their spending.

Hinger-Rampur Coal Co. Ltd. and others v. The State of Orissa AIR 1961 SC 459; Sona Chandi Oal Committee v. State of Maharashtra AIR 2005 SC 635; State of West Bengal v. Kesoram Industries Limited AIR 2005 SC 1646 and Messrs Gasket Radiators Pvt. Ltd. v. Employees' State Insurance Corporation and another AIR 1985 SC 790 ref.

When Cess as a fee was levied to meet an earmarked financial exigency spelt out in an enactment, it preserved the levy for such purpose only even with the change in the government setup. It could not be levied as a general revenue collecting tool and the government would not be justified to collect it if the funds were diverted to some other expenditure. So it was like a 'promised spending' to be applied to the specific purpose described in the enactment. Hence, in order to remain as a fee-levying enactment, the purpose for which the Cess was to be charged should be well spelled out and defined in the enactments as narrowly as possible lest it may convert it into a tax-levying enactment. The proceeds of Cess should be clearly identifiable in the accounts by using separate accounting codes so that its collection and utilization was reconcilable with the purposes stated in the enactment. A correlation between the revenue collected and the expenditure incurred for the promised specific purpose should always be maintained. In such manner the earmarked levy also provided information on the amount collected and spent. This also inculcated confidence in the payers as it contained the promise that the revenue would be utilized for the specific purpose only for which it was collected and they would have a claim to transparency and accountability of the utilization of the revenue so collected. When the revenue could only be utilized for the purpose promised in the fee-levying enactment then in that sense the levy could also be regarded as a temporary levy. Once the purpose for which it was imposed stood served, the justification for its imposition also came to an end. The collection of Cess therefore should be based on some calculation keeping in view the funding requirements and as and when the purpose was achieved, the government lost its right to collect Cess regardless of the fact that the enactment continued to remain in force.

(f) Legislation---

----Legislature, powers of---Re-enacting a law on the same subject with retrospective effect---Scope---Legislature had the right to re-enact a law on the same subject, which on account of legal infirmities in its enactment process had been declared invalid by a Court of law, by removing the causes that led to its invalidity---Legislature was also competent to make the re-enacted law applicable retrospectively in order to bind even the past transactions that had been declared invalid.

(g) Interpretation of statutes---

----Constitutionality of a statute---Courts should lean towards the constitutionality of a legislative enactment instead of destroying it, keeping in view the rules of constitutional interpretations.

Per Faisal Arab, J. [Majority view]: Legislature introduced the bill of Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 ('GIDC Act, 2015) under Article 70 of the Constitution which was passed by both the houses of the Parliament as a fee-levying enactment. National Assembly was fully competent to impose tax on natural gas through a Money Bill on the strength of Entry No.51 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List contained in the Fourth Schedule [pp. 677, 687] L & EE

The provision of the Constitution that enabled the legislature to legislate GIDC Act, 2015 was Entry No.54 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List. Said entry stated 'Fees in respect of any of the matters in this Part, but not including fees taken in any court.' Furthermore Entry No.27 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List provided 'Import and export across customs frontiers as defined by the Federal Government, inter-provincial trade and commerce, trade and commerce with foreign countries; standard of quality of goods to be exported out of Pakistan'. Said entry, inter alia, covered legislation that related to subjects of import into Pakistan and trade with foreign countries and the mode through which natural gas could be cheaply and efficiently imported from nearby countries through overland pipeline where it was more than sufficient for their needs. This was exactly the purpose and object of the GIDC Act, 2015 as reflected by its section 4 which provided that the revenue that was to be generated from the GIDC cess shall be utilized for facilitating import of natural gas into Pakistan through two separate transnational pipelines and for ancillary projects. For such purpose trade agreements had also been executed with two countries (Iran and Turkmenistan) separately. In addition to this section 4 of the GIDC Act, 2015 also provided that the GIDC cess was required for the purposes of LNG which under a trade agreement with Qatar was being imported on ships and after its discharge at the port of Karachi and gasification, was planned to be transported upcountry through a pipeline project named 'North South pipeline'. From this it had become evident that the whole purpose of enacting GIDC Act, 2015 was to facilitate import of natural gas, a very important source of energy from the nearby countries under trade agreements executed with them. The fee imposed under the GIDC Act, 2015 was clearly intended to facilitate import into Pakistan of natural gas on the basis of trade agreements executed with foreign countries which acts clearly fell within the ambit of Entry No. 27 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List contained in the Fourth Schedule to the Constitution.

Whole purpose of enacting GIDC Act, 2015 was to facilitate import into the country of a very important source of energy i.e. natural gas / LNG from nearby countries in order to meet the ever expanding energy needs of the country as our own resources of energy were fast depleting and the cheapest way to import it was through overland transnational pipelines. The supply of imported LNG to various parts of the country after its import on ships through trans-provincial pipeline was also a project of the Federal Government. The incidence of the cost involved in doing so fell on the industrial and commercial consumers whose consumption accounted for more than three-fourth of the total supply of natural gas. The industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas in the country, from whom GIDC cess was being collected, consumed about 76% of the total supply of natural gas. They would be mainly benefited once the promised projects were completed. It did not matter if domestic consumers of natural gas would also be benefitted.

As the GIDC Act, 2015 contained a well-defined object meant for making future availability of natural gas more convenient and without interruption that would mainly benefit the industrial and commercial consumers, therefore, in pith and substance the GIDC Act, 2015 was a fee-imposing enactment and use of terms like 'levied' or 'charged' would not change the object with which it was legislated.

The object which the Parliament had promised in the GIDC Act, 2015 was clearly 'purpose based' which was distinctly defined and carried with it an element of quid pro quo, making it a fee-imposing enactment instead of a pure revenue raising measure like taxes in general were imposed with no precondition attached for their spending. After seeing the purpose of the enactment and the fact that its revenue was duly accounted for and had also not been diverted to any other use, the imposition of GIDC cess under GIDC Act, 2015 was not a tax-imposing enactment.

Whatever GIDC cess had been collected right from the day when the erstwhile Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2011 (since declared unconstitutional), came into force had been accounted for by the Federal Government in its annual accounts recording it under separate code numbers and was thus identifiable separately from the other revenues of the Federal Government. This would facilitate in seeking information on the amount collected as against the amount that was going to be spent for the purposes promised in the GIDC Act, 2015. Thus a correlation between the revenue collected and the expenditure which was going to be incurred for the promised specific purpose could be maintained. It mattered not if the revenue so collected formed part of the Federal Consolidated Fund as it was the mandate of Article 78 of the Constitution itself that all revenues of the Federal Government had to made part of Federal Consolidated Fund.

The provisions of Section 8 of the GIDC Act, 2015, which gave retrospective effect to the charge and recovery of GIDC cess levied from the year 2011 were also valid being within the legislative competence of the Parliament.

Mamukanjan Cotton Factory v. Punjab Province PLD 1975 SC 50 ref.

Levy imposed under Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 was in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution.

Supreme Court disposed of the appeals, petitions and applications with the following directions:

(i) From the date of present judgment, the Federal Government was restrained from charging GIDC cess, which power of the Federal Government shall remain suspended until the Cess-revenue collected and that which was accrued so far but not yet collected was expended on the projects listed in section 4 of the GIDC Act, 2015;

(ii) In the remaining period of the financial year 2020-21 while considering fixation of sale price of Compressed Natural Gas (CNG), the Oil and Gas Regulatory Authority (OGRA) shall not take into consideration the element of GIDC cess under GIDC Act, 2015 as one of the costs of sale of GNG;

(iii) As all industrial and commercial entities which consumed gas for their business activities passed on the burden to their customers / clients therefore all arrears of 'GIDC cess' that had become due upto 31-07-2020 and had not been recovered so far shall be recovered by the companies responsible under the GIDC Act, 2015 from their consumers. However, as a concession, the same be recovered in twenty-four equal monthly instalments starting from 01-08-2020 without the component of late payment surcharge. The late payment surcharge shall only become payable for the delays that may occur in the payment of any of the twenty-four instalments; and

(iv) The Federal government shall take all steps to commence work on the laying of the North-South pipeline within six months and on TAPI pipeline as soon as its laying in Afghanistan reached the stage where the work of laying pipeline on Pakistan soil could conveniently start and on IP pipeline as soon as the sanctions on Iran were no more an impediment in its laying. In case no work was carried out on North-South pipeline within the prescribed time and for laying any of the two other major pipelines (IP and TAPI) though the political conditions became conducive, the purpose of levying GIDC cess shall be deemed to have been frustrated and the GIDC Act, 2015 would become permanently in-operational and considered dead for all intents and purposes.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. dissenting [Minority view]:

Utilization of GIDC cess as per the earlier and the recent GIDC Act, 2015 was for setting up infrastructure development of Iran Pakistan Pipeline Project (IP), Turkmenistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan-India (TAPI) Pipeline Project, LNG or other ancillary projects. These projects were financed through the imposition of GIDC (Fee), used as a tool of public finance. The gas consumers had been paying GIDC cess for almost a decade, and a total of Rs 295.40 billion had been collected to-date, however, there had been no work on the ground and these gas projects had no physical existence, whatsoever, in Pakistan. No development phase expenditure had taken place and project development cost funded by GIDC cess was nil. Even though, there was nothing on the ground, these projects were announced in the year 2011 and GIDC cess was since then being collected.

The GIDC Act, 2015 in its wisdom, considering the long-term nature of the infrastructure development gas pipeline projects required the Federal Government to inform both the Houses of the Parliament regarding the utilization of GIDC cess by tabling an Annual Report under Section 4(2) of the Act. Admittedly not a single Annual Report was tabled before the Houses of the Parliament except the one placed before the Parliament after the filing of present cases. The Government had unabashedly and successively hoodwinked the Parliamentary oversight, paying little heed to the energy crisis in the country; the interest of the gas consumers who had been regularly paying GIDC cess and the welfare of the general public. More disturbingly, the Parliament itself, inspite of acute energy crisis in the country never took the Federal Government to task and allowed a decade to pass by. The Executive and the Legislature both had failed the industrial gas consumers and public expectations besides wasting valuable time and opportunity to utilize and divert the money collected to some other projects to alleviate the gas shortage in the country. Had the Executive apprised the Parliament under the GIDC Act, 2015 legislative intervention may have followed, saving everyone the long drawn litigation and better financial management and use of Rs.295 Billion, which was sitting unused with the Federal Government.

For the Fee to have a constitutional existence, the service to be rendered in return or the quid pro quo must be certain, clear, unambiguous and within a definite time. It was by all means a legitimate expectation of the payer of Fee to know when will the service be delivered. Any law that levied a Fee must first unambiguously and clearly spell out the nature of the service to be rendered in return (quid pro quo) and then provide for a reasonable and definite timeline for the delivery of such service. Legislature must also consider the entire mechanism at work behind such relationship of reciprocity e.g., the obligations of the provider of Fee, the consequences of delay and failure to render service including refund. The GIDC Act, 2015 was silent on all these counts and therefore passed for colourable legislation as it actually imposed a levy unknown to the Constitution in the garb of a Fee. The GIDC Act, 2015 did not provide a level playing field for the parties and was devoid of the basic fairness, protection and due process that was required to be meted out to a payer who was the source of the public finance required for funding the long-term gas projects. Such a law offended and renders constitutional protections of right to property, business and non-discrimination, absolutely hollow and meaningless. The GIDC Act, 2015 imposed an unconstitutional levy in the garb of a Fee.

As a consequence, the amount of GIDC cess collected over the years should be returned and refunded to the payers in full, unless in some cases, it was impractical to so do. The Federal Government shall constitute a Committee to work out a mechanism for refund of GIDC cess so that payers of the said cess were fully restituted; be it the gas consumers under the GIDC Act, 2015 or the final consumers. Even if the gas consumers had passed on the Fee to its customers, technology may be available to credit such customers, so that there was no unjust enrichment on the part of the State. The amount of GIDC that cannot be refunded after exploring all other avenues, shall remain earmarked and be utilized only for the infrastructure development of the gas sector. [Minority view]

(j) Interpretation of statutes---

----Fiscal statute---Fee imposing enactment---Use of terms 'levy' or 'charge'---When terms like 'levy' or 'charge' were used in any revenue raising enactment, it did not mean that it could not be a fee imposing enactment---Terms 'levied' or 'charged' meant 'to impose by legal authority'---Whether tax was being imposed or a fee, it entirely depended upon the object of the legislation and had nothing to do with the use of such terms---Mere use of terms like 'levied' or 'charged' could not be made basis to describe a law as tax imposing enactment.

(k) Interpretation of statutes---

----Commencement date---Enforcement---When an Act of Parliament provided that it will come into force at once then every provision of it became enforceable from the day the Act received the assent of the President unless any provision of the Act itself suggested that it would come into force only when some authority nominated in such behalf so decided or on the happening of an event---Where the legislature intended to leave a matter for the Federal Government to decide before it was given effect to then it specifically stated so in the law itself.

(l) Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act (IV of 2015)---

----S. 3(1)---Industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas---Gas Infrastructure Development Cess ('GIDC cess')---Whether excluding domestic users from the ambit of the cess/levy was discriminatory---Held, that GIDC cess which the industrial and commercial concerns paid became part of the cost of the goods which they sold or the cost of the services they rendered and thus was ultimately borne by the buyers of their goods and services---Domestic consumers were indirectly burdened with the incidence of GIDC cess in a way that whatever product or service they bought/availed from an industrial or commercial enterprise, the element of cost of cess having already been factored in the price of their purchases, it ultimately passed on to them---Every industrial and commercial entity using natural gas for its business activity was entitled to claim the burden of GIDC cess as their business expense, being part of the cost of their goods sold or services rendered, and get it adjusted against their business profits---GIDC cess had been levied only on those consumers of natural gas who on account of their industrial or commercial dealings passed on its burden to their customers/clients; this was not the case with the domestic consumers of gas as the question of passing on the burden in their case obviously did not arise---Domestic consumers of natural gas being treated as a distinct class of consumers from industrial and commercial consumers, no discrimination in favour of domestic consumers emerged on account of their exclusion from the levy of GIDC cess.

----Fourth Sched. Pt. I, Entry No. 51---Expression 'Taxes on mineral oil, natural gas and minerals for the use in generation of nuclear energy'---Interpretation---'Mineral oil' and 'natural gas' though being sources of energy were distinct from the source that generated nuclear energy, thus, 'mineral oil' and 'natural gas' appearing in Entry No. 51 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List were to be read disjunctively from 'nuclear energy'.

Regarding generation of nuclear energy, the scientific reality was that it originated from splitting of atoms of the uranium which generated heat. This process of splitting the atoms of uranium was called fission. The heat so generated helped in producing steam which was then used to operate turbines to generate electricity. As nuclear energy was produced only through the process of fission, fuels such as mineral oil or natural gas could not be used for such purpose. There were several other primary sources of generating energy such as fossil fuels like coal, petroleum, natural gas and sources like hydroelectric, solar and wind. None could be used as nuclear fuel to generate nuclear energy except uranium and its by-product plutonium. When such was the scientific reality then mineral oil and natural gas appearing in Entry No.51 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List on which the process of fission could not apply to generate nuclear energy were to be read disjunctively, as both were sources of energy other than nuclear energy.

(n) Tax---

----'Fee' and 'tax'---Salient features of a 'tax' and 'Fee' and distinction between the two concepts stated. [Minority view]

Normatively, theoretically and legislatively three prominent tasks had been entrusted to taxation, namely; revenue augmentation, redistribution of wealth in society and regulatory function to ensure expected economic behaviour. Fee, on the other hand, had a narrower scope and was premised on a corresponding service in return or quid pro quo. Whereas tax was devoid of quid pro quo, it was a sine qua non for Fee.

A tax was a compulsory contribution to the government, imposed in the common interest of all, for the purpose of defraying the expenses incurred in carrying out the public functions or imposed for the purpose of regulation, without reference to the special benefits conferred on the one making the payment. As a corollary, tax being instrumental in revenue augmentation, its quantum need not commensurate with costs incurred by such public authority. Further, tax was devoid of any quid pro quo. Even where any benefit seemed to flow, in case of tax, it was merely incidental and not primary. In other words, there existed no connection, whether direct and immediate or broad and casual between the contributor of tax and benefits.

Martin T Crowe, The Moral Obligation of Paying Just Taxes 12 (Catholic University of American Press, Washington D.C., 1944) ref.

In a glaring contrast, Fee, was generally defined to be a charge for a special service rendered to individuals by some governmental agency. Ordinarily, Fees were uniform and no account was taken of the varying abilities of different recipients to pay. A Fee may either be regulatory or compensatory. Where a Fee was commensurate with the cost of rendering the service, though not in exact arithmetical equivalence, it was a compensatory Fee. On the other hand a Fee charged to regulate or control, was validly classifiable as regulatory Fee, provided it was not excessive or not dominantly intending to raise revenues for the public authority. Whilst both tax and Fee were compulsory exactions of money by public authority, their real distinction comprised in primarily what was known as quid pro quo test and proportionality of amount test.

Accordingly, a levy to be identified as Fee must have an element of quid pro quo between the payer and the public authority that imposed it. This quid pro quo or service rendered in return envisaged an intimate and immediate relationship between rendition of service and the payer, who was direct beneficiary of such service, on a one-on-one basis. This proximity between the beneficiaries and services could also be categorized for simplicity as "proximate quid pro quo". So the classical approach of Fee comprised the following: a proximate quid pro quo i.e., rendition of certain services to the payers by government agency which amounted to special benefit/advantage to the payer; proportionality i.e., the amount imposed ought to commensurate with cost of services to be rendered; specific fund that ensured dedicated spending from an earmarked fund for specific purpose of that service, Merger of proceeds with general revenue to be spent for general purposes was not acceptable; and primary objective that was to enquire whether the primary purpose of imposing levy was rendition of services and it was not merely incidental to augmentation of revenue. If latter predominated, it acted as negative restriction and the levy would be tax.

With passing of time as economies grew, Fee was imposed to render services to a large class of people or specified sector or area as a whole. In such cases, the relationship between the beneficiary and the services rendered became more generic, broad and remote. This was because such a service was to reach a general class of people or a specified sector or a designated area and not to an individual per se and therefore the service may also extend to free riders who were not the payers of Fee, hence the bond of proximity stood diluted. This shift has also been termed as "remote quid pro quo" which is used to describe the situation where services targeted beneficiaries which was a generic class comprising of a certain free riders but inclusive of payers. The shift from proximate to remote quid pro quo overtime did not mean that the service to be rendered to the payers of Fee would be any different or in any manner less. The scope and depth of service to be rendered depended on the nature of the service.

Merely because collections for services rendered or grant of a privilege or license were taken to the consolidated fund of the state and not separately appropriated towards the expenditure for rendering the service was not by itself decisive.

The modern approach to Fee therefore consisted of three-point check: Primary object test- whether the plenary objective of the levy was rendition of service to specified class and this service was something other than something merely incidental; Remote quid pro quotest- whether the payer received a general benefit from the authority imposing levy; Proportionality test- whether there existed a broad and generic co-relationship between services rendered and the amount of Fee charged. (o) Fee---

----'Quid pro quo in future'---'Service to be rendered'---'Time dimension' of service to be rendered---Scope---Simultaneity or contemporaneity of payment and benefit was not the most vital or crucial test to determine whether a levy was a Fee or not, especially in long-term projects---While "service to be rendered" or quid pro quo in future was permissible it was equally important that the prospects of such a future service were certain, as if tied in time, with the payment of Fee---For the Fee to have a constitutional existence, the service to be rendered in return or the quid pro quo must be certain, clear, unambiguous and within a definite time---Payment of Fee by the payer could not be towards a service that floated in a timeless zone; was open-ended and uncertain---Failure in providing future service within reasonable timeline, deprived the Fee of its essential character, and gave it the complexion of a tax.

It was not a requirement that all the required services against a Fee must be in place before a Fee could be levied. Merely because the benefits to be received were postponed, it could not be said that there was no 'quid pro quo'. It was true that ordinarily a return 'in praesenti' was generally the case when Fee was levied but simultaneity or contemporaneity of payment and benefit was not the most vital or crucial test to determine whether a levy was a Fee or not, especially in long-term projects. In fact, it may often happen that the rendering of a service or the conferment of a benefit may only follow after the consolidation of a fund from the Fee levied. Hospitals, for instance, could not be built in a day nor medical facilities or gas supply provided right from the day of the commencement of the scheme. It was only after infrastructure development was available that one may reasonably expect a compensating return. How soon a return may be expected or ought to be given must necessarily depend on the nature of the services required to be rendered and benefits required to be conferred. So while "service to be rendered" or quid pro quo in future was permissible it was equally important that the prospects of such a future service were certain, as if tied in time, with the payment of Fee.

Agriculture Market Committee, Rajam and others v. Rajam Jute and Oil Millers Association, Rajam AIR 2003 SC 1742 and Messrs Gasket Radiators Pvt. Ltd. v. Employees' State Insurance Corporation and another AIR 1985 SC 790 ref.

Fee was a constitutional levy against a service rendered, which could not be structured on assumptions, suppositions, expectations and verbal commitments of the Executive but required a clear, crisp and certain statutory timeline. For the Fee to have a constitutional existence, the service to be rendered in return or the quid pro quo must be certain, clear, unambiguous and within a definite time. While there was an obligation of the payer to deposit Fee on time which was subject to a surcharge for late payment, there must also be a corresponding obligation on the State or the authority responsible to provide the service in return, to do the same within a definite timeline. Without this corresponding obligation, the legislation failed to recognize the core ingredient of a Fee - the quid pro quo. It was by all means a legitimate expectation of the payer of Fee to know when would the service be delivered. The payment of Fee by the payer could not be towards a service that floated in a timeless zone; was open-ended and uncertain. Any service to be rendered in such like cases became a disservice. The relationship in a Fee must exist till the end. Failure in providing future service within reasonable timeline, deprived the Fee of its essential character, sheds its complexion as a Fee and gave that of a Tax. As such failure and the uncertainty of time diminished the requisite degree of correlation between the payment of Fee and provision of service in return. This indefiniteness negated the concept of Fee and partakes the character of a Tax. Therefore, service against a Fee was not simply a theoretical recognition of the service to be rendered but must also have certainty in its applied form i.e., the timeline for the actual delivery. If the constituent of time was missing the service became practically non-existent and the levy no more retained the character of Fee and became a tax rendering the levy (of fee) unconstitutional. categories of industrial gas consumers---No intelligible differentia was found amongst the different gas consumers mentioned in the Second Schedule for the purposes of the GIDC Act, 2015---One justification for charging different rates from amongst the industrial gas consumers could have been their overall consumption of natural gas, however the data provided to the court showed that differentiation of rates was not based on the consumption pattern of the gas consumers---Rates of GIDC cess fixed for different gas consumers were, therefore, ex-facie discriminatory and could not be allowed to stand. JUDGMENT

FAISAL ARAB, J.---The appellants as well as the petitioners and the intervenors all utilize natural gas for their industrial and commercial activities. Some of them even use natural gas as fuel for their in-house power generation facilities. Those who own CNG stations use natural gas for converting it into Compressed Natural Gas (CNG) at their filling stations and then sell it to their customers.

2. Before discussing the controversy involved in the case we find it appropriate to briefly discuss the background of the laws that imposed Cess from the year 2011.

3. In the year 2011 the Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2011 (GIDC Act, 2011) was legislated through a bill introduced in the National Assembly as a Money Bill by treating the imposition thereunder as a specie of 'tax' whereby Cess was imposed on industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas. This was done to finance the cost which Pakistan has to bear for laying the overland pipelines through which natural gas was to be imported into the country from Iran and Turkmenistan. Apart from import of natural gas from the above two countries, LNG imported from Qatar on ships, after its discharge at the Karachi port, was to be gasified and transported up-country through a pipeline called North-South pipeline. The said Act was challenged by the industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas located in the Province of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa in the Peshawar High Court in the year 2011 and they succeeded in seeking a declaration that it is ultra vires the Constitution in the year 2013. The Federal Government appealed which was dismissed by this Court on 22.08.2014 after holding that the GIDC Act, 2011 in its character is a fee-imposing enactment, its bill could not have been introduced in the National Assembly as a Money Bill under the provisions of Article 73 of the Constitution. The said Act was thus declared to be ultra vires the Constitution, which decision has come to be known as Durrani Ceramics case reported in 2014 SCMR 1630.

4. Soon after the decision in Durrani Ceramics case, the President on 25.09.2014 promulgated the Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Ordinance, 2014 through which Cess on natural gas was again imposed, which Ordinance was also given retrospective effect from 15.12.2011, the date when the GIDC Act, 2011 came into effect. While the GIDC Ordinance, 2014 was still in the field, the Federal Government sought review of Durrani Ceramics case which was dismissed by this Court vide judgment dated 15.04.2015 reported as Federation of Pakistan v. Durrani Ceramics (PLD 2015 SC 354).

5. Within a month of the dismissal of the review petition, the Parliament on 15.05.2015 passed the Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 (GIDC Act, 2015) whereby Cess was again imposed on all consumers of natural gas excluding the domestic sector consumers. The purpose of its imposition was the same as was stated in the GIDC Act, 2011. In terms of Section 8 of GIDC Act, 2015 the levy and collection of Cess made under the GIDC Act, 2011 as well as under GIDC Ordinance, 2014 was also legitimized with retrospective effect.

6. In this second round of litigation the industrial and commercial consumers assailed the vires of the GIDC Act, 2015 before the Sindh High Court as well as in the Peshawar High Court claiming that like GIDC Act, 2011 the GIDC Act, 2015 be also declared ultra vires the Constitution as it has been enacted by the parliament beyond its legislative competence. The Sindh High Court declared the levy unconstitutional vide judgment dated 26.10.2016 whereas the Peshawar High Court upheld the levy vide judgment passed on 31.05.2017 declaring the GIDC Act, 2015 to be intra vires the Constitution. These appeals have arisen from such decision with the leave of this Court.

7. On 22.10.2019 when this case came up for hearing, it was pointed out to us by Mr. Muneer A. Malik, one of the counsel for the intervenors that 377 suits were filed by invoking Original jurisdiction of the Sindh High Court in which the vires of GIDC Act, 2015 were challenged and all were decreed vide common judgment dated 26.10.2016 whereby the GIDC Act, 2015 was declared to be ultra vires the Constitution. He further pointed out that the Federal Government has filed only one appeal bearing High Court Appeal No. 361 of 2016 against the plaintiff of one suit and not against the plaintiffs of the remaining 376 suits, including his client. They were not even made party in the said appeal and the time for filing appeal against them had already gone by. He contended that on account of such omission the decision rendered by the Single Judge has attained finality on the principle of res judicata for the rest of the plaintiffs and accordingly the GIDC Act, 2015 in their cases is to be treated as ultra vires the Constitution and Cess cannot be charged from them. In support of this argument Mr. Muneer A. Malik relied upon the judgment of this Court rendered in the case of Pir Bukhsh and others v. Chairman Allotment Committee (PLD 1987 SC 145). As these appeals and connected petitions have emanated only from the decision of the Peshawar High Court which declared the GIDC Act, 2015 to be intra vires the Constitution this led us to pass an order on the said date that in identical matters pending in other High Courts opportunity be given to such litigants and their counsel to present their case before us on the merits of the controversy. This was done so that the challenge to the vires of the said Act be adjudicated upon once and for all at this Court's level. Pursuant to our order dated 22.10.2019 several miscellaneous applications for joining in these proceedings as party were filed by those who had challenged the vires of the GIDC Act, 2015 in various other High Courts. All of them were given opportunity to present their point of view on the merits of the controversy. Certain other petitions which were filed against the judgment of the Peshawar High Court but did not come up for hearing at the time of grant of leave of these appeals were also taken up for hearing so that the same could be decided together with the appeals.

8. Before we proceed to decide the merits of the main controversy we prefer to address the plea of res judicata raised by the intervenors first.

9. The principle of res judicata is a principle of peace. Once a controversy with regard to a right in property or a right to office is adjudicated upon and attains finality through a judicial pronouncement of a competent Court of law, it no more remains open to challenge in any subsequent judicial proceedings between the same parties on the same subject matter. This principle is intended not to afford a litigant more than one opportunity for resolution of a judicial dispute and thus eliminates the chances of repetitious and successive litigation against a party on the same issue. The maxim that there should be an end to litigation is germane to such matters.

10. Any relief which a litigant seeks in a judicial proceeding with regard to any power or a right or an obligation connected with some property or an office which power or right or obligation is not dependent upon the legitimacy of a legislative enactment and stands or falls on its own strength then in such cases when the decision rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction attains finality, there is no difficulty in applying the principle of res judicata to such a decision. However, it would be difficult to apply such a principle in matters where a power or a right or an obligation solely depend upon the very legitimacy of the enactment that has come under challenge in a Court of law on the touchstone of the Constitution. In such a situation the existence of such power or right or obligation would solely depend on the final adjudication as to the legal validity of the enactment itself. This could be understood from a situation where a controversy as regards constitutional validity of an enactment has come under challenge before two High Courts, one declaring the enactment ultra vires the Constitution and the other intra vires. If the principle of res judicata is applied to the decision of the High Court that declared the law ultra vires as the same was not challenged any further by the Government then two conflicting declarations would stand side by side on the legitimacy of a legislative enactment, one party treating the law valid and the other invalid. This would lead to treating an Act of the parliament valid for some and invalid for others though both the set of persons are similarly placed. If the decision rendered by the High Court that declared the law intra vires the Constitution is only challenged before the Supreme Court and after examining the merits of the case the enactment is declared by this Court to be intra vires the Constitution, then in such peculiar situation when this Court finally validates the legislative enactment then the same has to be applied uniformly to every person falling within its ambit. Such final judicial determination on the legitimacy of a legislative enactment has to be treated as a judgment in rem regardless of the fact that the judgment of the High Court that invalidated the very same enactment was not challenged before this Court. Such a situation warrants departure from the doctrine of res judicata. Omission of a public functionary to file appeal cannot put fetters on the universal application of a legislative enactment declared by this Court to be constitutionally valid as it would amount to repealing the statute for some and treating it valid for others. Hence conflicting decisions on the vires of a legislative enactment of two High Courts, decision of one remains unchallenged in the hierarchy as no appeal was preferred and the other is challenged before this Court, then the verdict of the High Court that went unchallenged, which is in conflict with the final decision of this Court has to be treated as outmoded and no longer executable. The Supreme Court of the United States of America took note of a similar situation in the case of United States v. Stone and Downer Co. [274 U.S. 225 (1927)] and held that if some of the persons are released from the application of a provision of legislative enactment on the principle of res judicata, it will lead to inequalities and discrimination causing injustice and confusion. It was held that in such a situation the plea of res judicata cannot be sustained. Following passages from the said judgment of the Supreme Court where it refused to apply the principle of res judicata in a revenue matter can be quoted with considerable advantage:

.One large importing house may secure a judgment in its favour from the Customs Court on a question of fact as to the merchandise of a particular importation or a question of construction in the classifying statute. If that house can rely upon a conclusion in early litigation as one which is to remain final as to it and not to be reheard in any way, while a similar importation made by another importing house may be tried and heard and a different conclusion reached, a most embarrassing situation is presented. The importing house which has by the principle of the thing adjudged obtained a favourable decision permanently binding on the government will be able to import the goods at a much better rate than that enjoyed by other importing houses, its competitors. Such a result would lead to inequality in the administration of the customs law, to discrimination and to great injustice and confusion. In the same way, if the first decision were against a large importing house and its competitors instituted subsequent litigation on the same issues with new evidence or without it and succeeded in securing a different conclusion, the first litigant, bound by the judgment against it in favour of the government must permanently do business in importations of the same merchandise at great and inequitable disadvantage with its competitors.

These were doubtless the reasons which actuated the Court of Customs Appeals when the question was first presented to it to hold that the general principle of res judicata should have only limited application to its judgments The fact that objection to the practice has never been made before in the history of this court or in history of the Court of Customs Appeals in 18 years of its life is strong evidence, not only of the wisdom of the practice, but of general acquiescence in its validity. The plea of res judicata cannot be sustained in this case.'

11. In the case of Pir Bukhsh and others v. Chairman Allotment Committee (PLD 1987 SC 145), on which much reliance was placed by Mr. Muneer A. Malik, the learned counsel for one of the intervenors, the controversy was with regard to a right of allotment of land which did not depend on the constitutionality of a legislative enactment. In that case, the principle of res judicata clearly applied but this principle, as discussed above, cannot be applied in the same manner to a case where any power or a right or an obligation of a person solely depend upon the legitimacy of a legislative enactment without which such power or right or obligation has no existence of its own. Hence, when the power of the government to charge and the obligation of the persons to pay a tax or a fee depends on the determination of vires of a legislative enactment then the final determination of this Court has to be uniformly applied on all those upon whom the law was intended to apply otherwise it would be applied in a discriminatingly manner to a section of persons belonging to one and the same class of persons. The final determination of this Court on the legitimacy of a law has to apply even to those who had succeeded in obtaining a judgment from a Court lower in the hierarchy that the law is ultra vires the Constitution, they too would be bound by the judgment of this Court which being the final Court of the judicature has through a judicial pronouncement declared a legislative enactment to be valid. The power of the Federal Government to charge the Cess and the obligation of the payers to pay under GIDC Act, 2015 would depend upon such final determination by this Court. Such power or obligation arising from an enactment will not cease to exist for the reason that the High Court in some other proceedings has declared the said Act ultra vires the Constitution which remained unchallenged. We in our minds are therefore clear that where there are two conflicting adjudications with regard to the constitutionality of a legislative enactment, standing side by side, then the one that has the binding effect on the other has to become the law of the land on the subject without any distinction whatsoever as an Act of the Parliament in its application cannot be allowed to be regarded as intra vires the Constitution for one set of persons and ultra vires for another at the same time when both belong to the same class of persons. If this is allowed, it would result in discrimination as some would be bound to discharge the obligation arising from the Act of the Parliament thereby putting them in disadvantageous position against those who are discharged from the obligation on the principle of res judicata. Such a position cannot be allowed to be sustained.

12. The validity of the plea of res judicata can be looked at from another angle also. The learned Additional Attorney General has pointed out that one High Court Appeal has been filed against the common judgment of the Single Judge of the Sindh High Court rendered in 377 suits and those decree holders who have been left out in that appeal would be made party in the pending appeal. If that has already been done then this Court in similar situation has held in the cases of Mehran Zaibun Nisa and others v. Land Commissioner, Multan and others (PLD 1975 SC 397) and Province of Punjab v. Muhammad Tayyab (1989 SCMR 1621) that a matter filed after the period of limitation can also be decided on merits with a connected case that was filed within time. So belated joining of some of the parties in the appeal as respondents who were initially not made party would not be of much consequence. In any case, the right of the Federal Government to challenge the judgment of the Single Judge of the Sindh High Court cannot be said to be altogether lost as one appeal is still pending. So, the decision of the Sindh High Court cannot be said to have attained finality in the strict sense of the word. Even otherwise, the right of the Federal Government to defend the decision of the Peshawar High Court in these proceedings before us does not get swallowed by the judgment of the Sindh High Court. That right also still subsists. There is yet another aspect of the matter. We vide our order dated 22.10.2019 had decided to hear all the parties who have challenged the GIDC Act, 2015 in the High Courts so that their point of view on the controversy could also be heard on merits. So, as intervenors, not only the plaintiff against whom High Court Appeal has been filed joined the proceedings and through its counsel addressed this Court on the merits of the main controversy but the counsel of those plaintiffs against whom no appeal was filed have also addressed this Court on merits of the controversy so that the controversy relating to the validity of GIDC Act, 2015 is finally decided. For this reason too the principle of res judicata would also not come in the way of the Federal Government. In these circumstances the maxim that there should be end to litigation once the matter has been finally decided is not attracted as finality with regard to validity or otherwise of the GIDC Act, 2015 is yet to be reached in these proceedings. In the peculiar situation stated above, the plea of res judicata cannot be sustained.

13. We shall now proceed to examine the merits of the main controversy.

14. The bill of GIDC Act, 2015 was introduced under the provisions of Article 70 of the Constitution by treating it as a specie of fee-levying enactment which was accordingly passed by both houses of the Parliament. This was done for the reason that when the bill of GIDC Act, 2011 was introduced in the National Assembly through a Money Bill as a tax-imposing enactment the same was struck down in Durrani Ceramics case for the reason that the levy being a fee imposing enactment, its bill could not have been introduced in the National Assembly under Article 73 of the Constitution as a Money Bill.

15. Mr. Makhdoom Ali Khan as lead counsel for the appellants argued the case, whose arguments were adopted by several counsel appearing on behalf of the appellants, petitioners and the intervenors. The counsel who also made additional submissions were Mr. Muneer A. Malik, Mr. Salman Akram Raja, Mr. Rashid Anwar, Mr. Isaac Ali Qazi, Mr. Anwar Kamal, Syed Haziq Ali Shah, Sardar Muhammad Ghazi, Mr. Abid S. Zuberi, Qazi Ghulam Dastgir, Mr. Ijaz Ahmed, Mr. Abdul Munim Khan and Mr. Tasleem Hussain. Barrister Mian Bilal argued on behalf of Sui Northern Gas Pipeline Limited and Chaudhry Aamir Rehman, learned Additional Attorney General argued on behalf of the Federation.

16. The arguments that were advanced on behalf of the counsel for appellants / petitioners / intervenors, which are relevant for the disposal of these cases on merits of the main controversy can be summarized as follows:-

a) The GIDC Act, 2015 would survive only if the Federation can demonstrate that it is a fee-levying enactment and that too within the ambit of Entry 2 read with Entry 15 of Part II of the Federal Legislative List contained in the Fourth Schedule to the Constitution. The GIDC, Act, 2015 is neither a tax nor a fee which places it outside the Fourth Schedule, hence ultra vires the Constitution.

b) Fee can only be levied and collected if the state provides a service directly in return to the payer otherwise it would be a tax-imposing enactment. It is the direct nature of the service which marks the boundary between tax and fee. The Federation could not show that any direct or special service would be provided to the appellants as a reward or recompense for payment of the fee. There is no quid pro quo in the enactment.

c) There can be compulsory exactions but must be based on services which are available or may be made available immediately or shortly after the payment of the fee. It is not necessary that a service is rendered in full immediately on payment of fee as it can be rendered incrementally. There may also be a gap between the payment of fee and provision of service, however the provision of the service cannot be indefinitely postponed on a hope to be provided in the unforeseeable future.

d) Section 4 of the Act, 2015 provides that Cess is to be used for the development of Iran-Pakistan Pipeline Project (IP) as well as Turkmenistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan-India Pipeline Project (TAPI). Both projects mentioned in Section 4 of the Act 2015 have neither commenced nor has the government given any tangible timeframe for their launch or completion. The two terminals that are operated by Engro and PGPCL at Karachi port are financed from other sources so the Cess is no longer to be utilised for LNG and now can only be utilised for IP and TAPI projects and projects ancillary thereto.

e) Under Section 4 of GIDC Act, 2015, the Cess is a specific purpose levy, the Federation is not free to use it as it pleases. There was no evidence of the amount collected towards Cess ever having been spent for the specified purposes. Between 2011 and 30th June 2019 a sum of Rs.295,402,787,597.67 has been collected out of which Rs.279,575,000 and Rs.207,664,501 have been spent. The Government has failed to justify the collection of Cess.

f) Revenue of Cess so far collected has not been put in any special fund but has been made part of general revenues of the state and retained in the Federal Consolidated Fund.

g) The Second Schedule to GIDC Act, 2015 only mentions the maximum rates of tax but the actual rate of tax to be charged was not specified.

h) The supply of gas in the province of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa is in excess of the demand, therefore, the GIDC Act, 2015 conferred no benefit on its residents. The shortage was created for reasons extraneous to the demand in the Province.

i) Section 3(1) of the GIDC Act, 2015 used the terms 'levied' and 'charged' which indicate that it is a tax imposing enactment and not 'fee' and while enacting GIDC Act, 2011 which is a similar Act, legislated as a tax-imposing enactment.

17. In support of their arguments learned counsel for the appellants / petitioners / intervenors have placed reliance on the cases of Collector of Customs v. Shaikh Spinning Mills (1999 SCMR 1402), Abdul Majid v. Province of East Pakistan (PLD 1960 Dacca 502), Sohail Jute Mills v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1991 SC 329), Nishat Tek Ltd., Lahore v. Salvation Army (AIR 1975 SC 846).

18. Learned Additional Attorney General has placed reliance on the cases of B. S.E. Brokers' Forum, Bombay and others v. Securities and Exchange Board of India and others (2001 (3) SCC 482), Krishi Utpadan Mandi Samiti v. Ashok Kumar Dinesh Chandra and another (1996 (10) SCC 100), The City Corporation of Calicut v. Thachambalath Sadasivan and others (AIR 1985 SC 756), Messrs Gasket Radiators Pvt. Ltd. v. Employees' State Insurance Corporation and another (AIR 1985 SC 790). Barrister Mian Bilal has placed reliance on the case of The City Corporation of Calicut v.

Thachambalath Sadasivan (AIR 1985 SC Court 756), Gasket Radiators (Pvt.) Limited v. Employees' State Insurance Corporation (AIR 1985 SC 790), The Hinger-Ramper Coal Co. Ltd. v. The Commissioner for Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments, Mysore (AIR 1963 SC 966) and Jaora Sugar Mills (Pvt.) Limited v. The State of Madhya Pradesh (AIR 1966 SC 416).

19. Under the Constitution it is the prerogative of the legislature to raise revenue for the government on matters that fall within its legislative competence. The legislature enjoys the privilege to identify the base of the levy i.e. those upon whom the incidence of the levy would fall and also determine the quantum to be charged from them, which could either be at a fixed rate or ad valorem. Under our Constitution the legislature can levy taxes as well as fees. As GIDC Act, 2015 has been enacted by the Parliament as a fee-levying enactment, we deem it appropriate to briefly discuss the legal concept of such enactments.

20. There are two kinds of fee-imposing legislative enactments which have been defined in various judicial pronouncements, both from our as well as foreign jurisdictions. One is based purely on the principle of quid pro quo i.e. a charge is payable for rendering a specific service or extending a specific privilege which the payers can avail subject to the conditions that may be attached to it. In other words, it can be called as 'fee-simplicitor'. In such an enactment there is direct and immediate correlation in absolute terms between the service that is rendered and the fee that is charged for it. The other kind of a fee-levying legislation is where Cess is imposed as a compulsory exaction in the same manner where taxes are imposed with the distinction that it is imposed for achieving a specific purpose promised in the enactment itself which when realized would bring some advantage or benefit for the payers in future. It can be described as 'purpose specific' and in many judicial pronouncements have been termed as 'Cess-fee'. In such a form of levy, the specified purpose is pre-committed to the payers before the revenue is collected under the legislation. To quote a few examples, Cess is imposed to meet the extraordinary costs involved in providing infrastructure such as construction of dams or for importing oil or gas from abroad through pipelines or to build farm to mill roads in order to facilitate marketing of the agricultural produce or for conducting research and development in some specialized field. In such a form of levy the rule of quid pro quo does not exist in the same sense as it exists in a case where an existing service is rendered or a privilege is extended directly to the payer for a fee. What needs to be taken into consideration is whether the enactment has promised some benefit or advantage for the payers to be made available in future by utilizing the revenue, making it more akin to a fee then a pure revenue raising measure like taxes in general are imposed with no precondition attached for their spending. In a case from the Indian jurisdiction cited by one of the counsel of the appellants reported as Hinger-Rampur Coal Co. Ltd. and others v. The State of Orissa (AIR 1961 SC 459) the Supreme Court of India in paragraphs 9 and 10 while discussing a fee-imposing enactment observed as follows:

> 'If specific services are rendered to a specific area or to a specific class of persons or trade or business in any local area, and as a condition precedent for the said services or in return for them cess is levied against the said area or the said class of persons or trade or business, the cess is distinguishable from a tax and is described as a fee.'

21. In the case of Sona Chandi Oal Committee v. State of Maharashtra (AIR 2005 SC 635) the Indian Supreme Court while describing fee based levy observed as follows:

> ' .The levy does not cease to be a fee merely because there is an element of compulsion or coerciveness present in it, nor is it a postulate of a fee that it must have a direct relation to the actual service rendered by the authority to each individual who obtains the benefit of the service. Quid pro quo in the strict sense was not always a sine qua non for a fee. All that is necessary is that there should be a reasonable relationship between the levy of fee and the services rendered and it is not necessary to establish that those who pay the fee must receive direct or special benefit or advantage of the services rendered for which the fee was being paid. It was held that if one who is liable to pay, receives general benefit from the authority levying the fee, the element of service required for collecting the fee is satisfied.'

22. Then in the case of State of West Bengal v. Kesoram Industries Limited (AIR 2005 SC 1646) the Indian Supreme Court in paragraph 145 of its judgment observed as under:

' . The impugned cess can, therefore, be justified as a fee for rendering such services as would improve the infrastructure and general development of the area, the benefits whereof would be availed even by the stone-crushers.'

23. Barrister Mian Bilal has placed reliance on the case of Messrs Gasket Radiators Pvt. Ltd. v. Employees' State Insurance Corporation and another (AIR 1985 SC 790) wherein it has been held as under:-

"Merely because the benefits to be received are postponed, it cannot be said that there is no quid pro quo. It is true that ordinarily a return in praesenti is generally present when fee is levied but simultaneity or contemporaneity of payment and benefit is not the most vital or crucial test to determine whether a levy is a fee or not. In fact, it may often happen that the rendering of a service or the conferment of a benefit may only follow after the consolidation of a fund from the fee levied. Hospitals, for instance, cannot be built in a day nor medical facilities provided right from the day of the commencement of the scheme. It is only after a sufficient nucleus is available that one may reasonably expect a compensating return. The question of how soon a return may be expected or ought to be given must necessarily depend on the nature of the services required to be performed and benefits required to be conferred."

24. The basic difference between the enactment where fee-simplicitor is imposed and where Cess-fee is imposed is that in the former a service or a privilege is made available to the payer directly on the strict principle of quid pro quo whereas in the latter case, the declared purpose comes with a promise to bring some benefit or advantage in future which is basically meant for its payers. Such benefit or privilege once made available on the ground may be availed by others as well but that would not change the status of such fee-levying enactment. It would remain a specie of fee-levying enactment in contradistinction to tax-levying enactment in which no specific purpose or specific service needs to be disclosed by the legislature in order to justify its imposition.

25. When Cess as a fee is levied to meet an earmarked financial exigency spelt out in an enactment, it preserves the levy for such purpose only even with the change in the government setup. It cannot be levied as a general revenue collecting tool and the government would not be justified to collect it if the funds are diverted to some other expenditure. So it is like a 'promised spending' to be applied to the specific purpose described in the enactment. Hence, in order to remain as a fee-levying enactment, the purpose for which the Cess is to be charged should be well spelled out and defined in the enactments as narrowly as possible lest it may convert it into a tax-levying enactment. The proceeds of Cess should be clearly identifiable in the accounts by using separate accounting codes so that its collection and utilization is reconcilable with the purposes stated in the enactment. A correlation between the revenue collected and the expenditure incurred for the promised specific purpose should always be maintained. In this manner the earmarked levy also provides information on the amount collected and spent. This also inculcates confidence in the payers as it contains the promise that the revenue would be utilized for the specific purpose only for which it was collected and they would have a claim to transparency and accountability of the utilization of the revenue so collected. They can claim that the revenue cannot be utilized for any other purpose other than for which they have been charged. When the revenue can only be utilized for the purpose promised in the fee-levying enactment then in that sense the levy could also be regarded as a temporary levy. Once the purpose for which it was imposed stands served, the justification for its imposition also comes to an end. The collection of Cess therefore should be based on some calculation keeping in view the funding requirements and as and when the purpose is achieved, the government loses it right to collect Cess regardless of the fact that the enactment continues to remain in force.

26. After discussing the two kinds of fee-levying enactments, we shall now proceed to examine whether the GIDC Act, 2015 is a fee or tax-levying enactment and whether it was legislated within the legislative competence of the Parliament.

27. The counsel for the appellants in support of their argument that the Cess levied under GIDC Act, 2015 is a tax, basically made its comparison with such fee-levying enactments where the principle of quid pro quo was the only consideration i.e. comparison was made with service specific enactments describable as 'fee-simplicitor'. The controversy in the present case is comparable with the enactments that impose fee for a specific purpose that is promised to be achieved for the benefit of the payers in future i.e. a category described in various judicial pronouncements as 'Cess-fee'. In Durrani Ceramics case also it was held that practically the Federal Government has demonstrated that GIDC Act, 2011 was a fee imposing enactment, which for its object and purpose was no different from GIDC Act, 2015. In paragraph 22 of Durrani Ceramics case it was observed ' ..Similarly, in the Annual Budget Statement (Federal Budget 2013-14) that carries a similar worded preface, 'Gas Infrastructure Development Cess' has again been listed at C03916 as Non-Tax Revenue. Thus on the Government's own showing, as reflected in the Annual Budget, GIDC is not a 'tax'. No argument has been advanced on behalf of the appellants to explain away the categorization of GIDC as Non-Tax Revenue by the Government in the Annual Budget... . The above determination is sufficient to hold that being a 'fee' the same could not have been imposed through a money bill and on this score the levy was liable to be struck down.' Thus what invalidated the GIDC Act, 2011 in Durrani Ceramics case, as is evident from its paragraph 22 was that GIDC Act 2011 being a fee-levying enactment its bill could not have been introduced in the National Assembly as a Money Bill under Article 73 of the Constitution. This is precisely the ratio of Durrani Ceramics case which is evident from its concluding paragraph 45 also.

28. Keeping in mind the above legal infirmity with which the legislative process suffered in the legislation of GIDC Act, 2011 which led this Court in Durrani Ceramics Case to declare it invalid, the legislature introduced the bill of GIDC Act, 2015 under Article 70 of the Constitution which was passed by both the houses of the Parliament as a fee-levying enactment. By recasting the GIDC Act, 2015 as a fee-levying instead of tax-levying enactment the constitutional requirements that lacked in the GIDC Act, 2011 were met. This Court in several cases has recognized the right of the legislature to re-enact a law on the same subject, which on account of legal infirmities in its enactment process had been declared invalid by a Court of law, by removing the causes that led to its invalidity. The legislature is also competent to make the re-enacted law applicable retrospectively in order to bind even the past transactions that had been declared invalid. In the case of Molasses Trading and Export (Pvt.) Limited v. Federation of Pakistan (1993 SCMR 1905) this Court at page 1920 held as follows:-

> "Before considering this question it would be appropriate to make certain general observations with regard to the power of validation possessed by the legislature in the domain of taxing statute. It has been held that when a legislature intend to validate a tax declared by a Court to be illegally collected under an invalid law, the cause for ineffectiveness or invalidity must be removed before the validation can be said to take place effectively. It will not be sufficient merely to pronounce in the statute by means of a non-obstinate clause that the decision of the Court shall not bind the authority, because that will amount to reversing a judicial decision rendered in exercise of the judicial power, which is not within the domain of the Legislature. It is therefore necessary that the conditions on which the decision of the Court intended to be avoided is based, must be altered so fundamentally, that the decision would not any longer be applicable to the altered circumstances. One of the accepted modes of achieving this object by the Legislature is to re-enact retrospectively a valid and legal taxing provision, and adopting the fiction to make the tax already collected to stand under the re-enacted law. The Legislature can even give its own meaning and interpretation of the law under which the tax was collected and by `legislative fiat' make the new meaning biding upon Court. It is in one of these ways that the Legislature can neutralize the earlier decision of the Court. The Legislature has within the bound of the Constitutional Limitation the power to make such a law and give it retrospective effect so as to bind even past transaction. In ultimate analysis therefore a primary test of validating piece of legislation is whether the new provision removes the defect, which the Court had found in the existing law, and whether adequate provisions in the validating law for a valid imposition of tax were made."

29. In the case of Mamukanjan Cotton Factory v. Punjab Province (PLD 1975 SC 50) this Court at pages 53-54 held as follows:-

"Mr. A. K. Brohi, appearing in support of these two petitions, frankly conceded, that he did not find it possible to question the vires of the validating Ordinance on the grounds canvassed in the High Court. With the permission of this Court, learned counsel, however, attacked the vires of the Ordinance and the resultant action of the Provincial Government on a fresh ground. His argument in nutshell was that the validating Ordinance purports to enable the Provincial Government to retain and claim, what according to the judgments of the High Court, the Government could not have at the material time, levied and collected. These judgments are rendered by the High Court, in exercise of its jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution itself. The validating Ordinance on the other hand, is sub-constitutional legislation, which according to learned counsel cannot undo or destroy, what he described as the "end product" of the Constitutional jurisdiction.

The argument, in my opinion, is without substance and which is accepted would indeed lead to startling results. It would strike at the very root of the power of Legislature, otherwise competent to legislate on a particular subject, to undertake any remedial or curative legislation after discovery of defect in an existing law as a result of the, judgment of a superior Court in exercise of its constitutional jurisdiction. The argument overlooks the fact, that the remedial or curative legislation is also "the end product" of constitutional jurisdiction in the cognate field. The argument if accepted, would also seek to throw into serious disarray the pivotal arrangement in the Constitution regarding the division of sovereign power of the State among its principal organs; namely, the executive, the Legislature and the judiciary each being the master in its own assigned field under the Constitution.

The argument of learned counsel also conveniently overlooks string of cases, in which the vires of the remedial legislation, competently made, was upheld by this Court, notwithstanding the earlier judgments of the Superior Courts, in exercise of their constitutional jurisdiction, to the contrary effect. The foremost and exactly in point among these cases is the judgment in Dossa Ltd. v. The Province of the Punjab, in which as in these cases, the vires of the validating Ordinance of 1971, was called in question. It was inter alia observed in that case:-

"The last contention, namely, that the Ordinance of 1971 could not validate something which was void ab initio in terms of the Act of 1949, loses sight of the fact that it is open to the Legislature to confer retrospective operation on the laws made by it. A reference to the provisions of this Ordinance leaves no doubt that the law maker expressly made its operation retrospective with the avowed object of conferring validity on a demand which was not valid under the original Act of 1949.

30. To the same effect are the judgments of this Court rendered in the cases of Molasses Trading and Export (Pvt.) Ltd. v. Federation of Pakistan (1993 SCMR 1905), FECTO Belarus Tractor Ltd. v. Government of Pakistan through Finance Economic Affairs (PLD 2005 SC 605), Dr. Mobashir Hassan v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2010 SC 265) and Contempt Proceedings against Chief Secretary, Sindh (2014 PLC (C.S.) 82).

31. In many landmark cases this Court has also held that Courts should lean towards the constitutionality of a legislative enactment instead of destroying it, keeping in view the rules of constitutional interpretations. A seventeen member full Court in paragraph 39 of its judgment rendered in the case Dr. Mobashir Hassan v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2010 SC 265) in paragraph 39 stated as follows:-

'There is another principle of law, which casts duty upon this Court to the effect that it should normally lean in favour of constitutionality of a statute and efforts should be made to save the same instead of destroying it. This principle of law has been discussed by this Court on a number of occasions. Reference in this behalf may be made to the cases of Abdul Aziz v. Province of West Pakistan (PLD 1958 SC 499), Province of East Pakistan v. Siraj-ul-Haq Patwari (PLD 1966 SC 854), Inam-ur-Rehman v. Federation of Pakistan (1992 SCMR 563), Sabir Shah v. Shad Muhammad Khan (PLD 1995 SC 66), Multiline Associates v. Ardeshir Cowasjee (PLD 1995 SC 423), Tariq Nawaz v. Government of Pakistan (2000 SCMR 1956), Asif Islam v. Muhammad Asif (PLD 2001 SC 499) and Federation of Pakistan v. Muhammad Sadiq (PLD 2007 SC 133). This principle has been appropriately dealt with in the case of Elahi Cotton Mills Ltd. v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1997 SC 582) in the following terms:-

"that the law should be saved rather than be destroyed and the Court must lean in favour of upholding the constitutionality of legislation, keeping in view that the rule of constitutional interpretation is that there is a presumption in favour of the constitutionality of the legislative enactments unless ex facie it is violative of a constitutional provision."'

32. As to the legislative competence of the Parliament to pass the GIDC Act, 2015 as a fee-imposing enactment, in a case from the Indian jurisdiction reported as Ujagar Prints v. Union of India and others (AIR 1989 SC 516) cited by one of the counsel of the appellants the Indian Supreme Court in paragraph 23 while discussing the application of legislative entries to an enactment observed that entries to the Legislative Lists are not the source of legislative power but are merely topics of fields of legislation and must receive a liberal construction inspired by a broad and generous spirit and not in a narrow pedantic sense. In paragraph 25 it was further observed that if a legislation purporting to be under a particular legislative entry is assailed for lack of legislative competence, the State can always show that the law was supportable under any other entry within its legislative competence. In the case of Elahi Cotton Mills Ltd. v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1997 SC 582) relied upon by one of the appellants' counsel this Court held that the entries in the Legislative List of the Constitution are not powers of legislation but only fields of legislative heads and allocation of the subjects to the lists is not by way of scientific or logical definition but by way of mere simple enumeration of broad catalogue.

33. The provision of the Constitution that enables the legislature to legislate GIDC Act, 2015 is Entry No.54 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List contained in the Fourth Schedule. This entry states 'Fees in respect of any of the matters in this Part, but not including fees taken in any court.' When we glance through the entries of Part I of the Federal Legislative List in order to see which specific entry enables the Parliament to cover the subject stated in the GIDC Act, 2015, we find Entry No.27. It provides 'Import and export across customs frontiers as defined by the Federal Government, inter - provincial trade and commerce, trade and commerce with foreign countries; standard of quality of goods to be exported out of Pakistan'. This entry, inter alia, covers legislation that relates to subjects of import into Pakistan and trade with foreign countries and the mode through which natural gas can be cheaply and efficiently imported from nearby countries where it is more than sufficient for their needs is through overland pipeline. This is exactly the purpose and object of the GIDC Act, 2015 as reflected by its Section 4 which provides that the revenue that is to be generated from Cess shall be utilized for facilitating import of natural gas into Pakistan through two separate transnational pipelines and for ancillary projects. It states 'The cess shall be utilized by the Federal Government for or in connection with infrastructure development of Iran-Pakistan Pipeline Project, Turkmenistan-

Afghanistan-Pakistan-India (TAPI) Pipeline Project, LNG or other ancillary projects.' For such purpose trade agreements have also been executed with Iran and Turkmenistan separately. In addition to this Section 4 of the GIDC Act, 2015 also provides that the Cess was required for the purposes of LNG which under a trade agreement with Qatar is being imported on ships and after its discharge at the port of Karachi and gasification, is planned to be transported upcountry through a pipeline project named 'North-South pipeline'. From this it has become evident that the whole purpose of enacting GIDC Act, 2015 was to facilitate import of natural gas, a very important source of energy from the nearby countries under trade agreements executed with them. The fee imposed under the GIDC Act, 2015 is clearly intended to facilitate import into Pakistan natural gas on the basis of trade agreements executed with foreign countries which acts clearly fall within the ambit of Entry No. 27 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List contained in the Fourth Schedule to the Constitution.

34. The industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas of this country, from whom Cess is being collected, consume about 76% of the total supply of natural gas, which fact was also brought to the notice of this Court in the Durrani Ceramics case. They would be mainly benefited once the promised projects are completed. It does not matter if domestic consumers of natural gas would also be benefitted. Mr. Salman Akram Raja had argued that as his client is getting sufficient supply of natural gas from the wellhead located very near to its installation therefore the imported gas would be of no benefit for his client who may be exempted from the levy of Cess as there exists no quid pro quo. In a legislative enactment where there is an element of compulsion, which can be even in an impost such as Cess-fee, the payer does not enjoy the privilege of avoiding the obligation at his choice. If such a plea is accepted then every consumer would be able to take it and that would virtually nullify the Act itself at the choice of the payers. In the case of Hinger-Rampur Coal Co. Ltd. v. The State of Orissa (AIR 1961 SC 459) the Indian Supreme Court in its paragraph 10 has observed:-

> 'There is, however, an element of compulsion in the imposition of both tax and fee. When the Legislature decides to render a specific service to any area or to any class of persons, it is not open to the said area or to the said class of persons to plead that they do not want the service and therefore they should be exempted from the payment of the cess.'

35. It was also argued that in Section 3(1) of the GIDC Act, 2015 the terms 'levied' and 'charged' are used which demonstrate that it is a tax imposing enactment and not 'fee'. The learned counsel attempted to strengthen this argument by relying on the stand which the Federal Government in Durrani Ceramics case took that the levy in the GIDC Act, 2011 was a tax-imposing enactment. When the terms like 'levy' or 'charge' are used in any revenue raising enactment, it does not mean that it cannot be a fee imposing enactment. A plea taken by a party on a point of law which was not accepted by a Court in an earlier round of litigation cannot be used against such party which on account of such decision has accordingly changed its plea in subsequent legal proceedings. In any case the terms 'levied' or 'charged' mean 'to impose by legal authority'. Whether tax is being imposed or a fee, it entirely depends upon the object of the legislation and has nothing to do with the use of such terms. Even in Article 279 of the Constitution the term 'levied' is used for tax as well as for fee imposing legislations. So mere use of terms like 'levied' or 'charged' cannot be made basis to describe a law as tax imposing enactment. As the GIDC Act, 2015 contains a well-defined object meant for making future availability of natural gas more convenient and without interruption that would mainly benefit the industrial and commercial consumers which the appellants, the petitioners and the intervenors undeniably are, therefore, in pith and substance the GIDC Act, 2015 is a fee-imposing enactment and use of terms like 'levied' or 'charged' would not change the object with which it was legislated.

36. It was also argued that in Section 3 (1) of the GIDC Act, 2015 it is stated that Cess shall be levied and charged by the Federal Government which means that Federal Government has been empowered to levy it as and when it so decides which decision is yet to come. It was contended that until the Federal Cabinet so decides and upon such decision the Federal Government issues notification in this behalf, Section 3 (1) would remain inoperative. When an Act of Parliament provides that it will come into force at once then every provision of it becomes enforceable from the day the Act receives the assent of the President unless any provision of the Act itself suggests that it will come into force only when some authority nominated in this behalf so decides or on the happening of an event. No such precondition has been attached to Section 3(1) for its coming into operation. It clearly states that the Cess shall be levied and charged by the Federal Government from the gas consumers of the companies which are listed in the First Schedule and such companies shall be responsible for billing and collection and making onward payment of the Cess so collected from the gas consumers to the Federal Government. When such is the unqualified mandate of Section 3(1) of GIDC Act, 2015 and the responsibility of billing and collection has already been cast upon the companies listed in the First Schedule from the day when it comes into effect then the Cess becomes chargeable from that very day without leaving it to the Federal Government to first decide when to bring Section 3(1) into operation. On the other hand, where the legislature intends to leave a matter for the Federal Government to decide before it is given effect to then it specifically states so in the law itself. This can be seen from the contents of Section 7 of the GIDC Act, 2015 which provides 'The Federal Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, make such amendments in the First Schedule as it deems fit.' No such precondition is contained in Section 3 (1) of the GIDC Act, 2015.

37. It was also argued that the GIDC Act, 2015 is discriminatory as the domestic consumers of natural gas have been excluded from the levy. From the contents of Section 3 (1) of the GIDC Act, 2015 it is evident that the incidence of Cess falls only on commercial and industrial concerns. In our opinion this may have been for the reason that the Cess which the industrial and commercial concerns pay becomes part of the cost of the goods which they sell or the cost of the services they render and thus is ultimately borne by the buyers of their goods and services. Same is the case with the consumers of CNG. The burden of the Cess payable by the owners of CNG stations on their purchases of natural gas gets factored in towards fixation of sale price of CNG. Every industrial and commercial entity using natural gas for its business activity is entitled to claim the burden of Cess as their business expense, being part of the cost of their goods sold or services rendered, and get it adjusted against their business profits. They must have already done so in their books of account and the annual returns of their income must have been filed before the Income tax authorities accordingly. Thus the Cess under GIDC Act, 2015 has been levied only on those consumers of natural gas who on account of their industrial or commercial dealings pass on its burden to their customers/ clients. This is not the case with the domestic consumers of gas as the question of passing on the burden in their case obviously does not arise. For this reason, the domestic consumers may have been treated an altogether different class of gas consumers and consciously excluded from the levy of Cess, which reason appears to be very sound. This could be the only distinction on the basis of which the domestic consumers were not burdened with the incidence of Cess under GIDC Act, 2015. Needless to point out that the domestic consumers are indirectly burdened with the incidence of Cess in a way that whatever product or service they buy/avail from an industrial or commercial enterprise or purchase CNG from a CNG station, the element of cost of Cess having already been factored in the price of their purchases, it ultimately passes on to them. So looking from that angle too, the domestic consumer or an ordinary person becomes the ultimate payer of the Cess that is levied on industrial or commercial concerns who consume natural gas for their business activity. What emerges from this is that domestic consumers of natural gas being treated as a distinct class of consumers from industrial and commercial consumers, no discrimination in favour of domestic consumers emerges on account of their exclusion from the levy of Cess under GIDC Act, 2015.

38. Whatever Cess has been collected right from the day when when GIDC Act, 2011 came into force has been accounted for by the Federal Government in its annual accounts recording it under separate code numbers and is thus identifiable separately from the other revenues of the Federal Government. This would facilitate in seeking information on the amount collected as against the amount that is going to be spent for the purposes promised in the GIDC Act, 2015. Thus a correlation between the revenue collected and the expenditure which is going to be incurred for the promised specific purpose can be maintained. It matters not if the revenue so collected forms part of the Federal Consolidated Fund as it is the mandate of Article 78 of the Constitution itself that all revenues of the Federal Government has to made part of Federal Consolidated Fund.

39. The background of the legal history of the controversy in question can be traced back to 2011, when the levy under GIDC Act, 2011 was challenged before the Peshawar High Court which in 2013 declared the levy as ultra vires the Constitution and struck down the GIDC Act, 2011. The Islamabad High Court followed the same course in its judgment in 2014. As a result of these decisions, the matter came before this Court in the case which has come to be known as Durrani Ceramics case. This Court in its judgment refused to interfere with the decision rendered by the Peshawar High Court and declared the GIDC Act, 2011 as unconstitutional, holding that the levy in question was in fact a fee and not a tax, hence, it could not have been imposed through a Money Bill. The case came before this Court again in review, which was dismissed in 2015. Later, the Government enacted the GIDC Act, 2015 as a fee imposing enactment. The constitutional validity of the said Act was also challenged before the High Courts. The Sindh High Court declared the levy unconstitutional vide its judgment dated 26.10.2016 whereas the Peshawar High Court upheld the constitutionality of the new Act vide its judgment dated 31.05.2017. While several other similar matters awaited adjudication before other High Courts issue came before this Court for a second time, in which we vide order dated 22.10.2019 allowed the parties concerned to join the present proceedings as intervenors so that they can have a chance to assist us in the present proceedings and get an opportunity to present their version of the case before us. If we look at this matter in retrospect, there has been continuous litigation pertaining to the constitutional validity of the GIDC cess right from 2011 till July 2020 when we are finally deciding the controversy in these proceedings. Apart from continuous litigation on the issue, we were also told that due to international sanctions on Iran, the response to international tender for EPC contract was very poor as no contractor was willing to undertake the project. On TAPI it is stated that land acquisition proceedings is at an advance stage however work on laying of the pipeline could not start in Afghanistan on account of the insurgency in Afghanistan. It is also stated at the bar that now there are signs that work on laying the pipeline in Afghanistan may commence soon as the final draft of TAPI Project Land Management Law is on final review of the Government of Afghanistan. Hence the delay in the commencement of work on laying the pipelines on account of continuous proceedings in the High Courts as well as before this Court and the levy under both the enactments having been struck down as unconstitutional in the year 2013 and 2016, geopolitical situations in the neighboring countries which are beyond the control of the Federal Government. This means that the projects have not been deliberately abandoned and there is also no material on record to doubt the intentions of Federal Government in this behalf. The Executive, therefore, cannot be blamed for not laying down the pipelines in question. In such a situation where work has not yet started on the laying of the pipelines and no contract has been awarded it would also be premature to ask for laying any report before the National Assembly.

40. At this stage, we like to refer to Entry No.51 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List contained in the Fourth Schedule to the Constitution. It reads 'Taxes on mineral oil, natural gas and minerals for the use in generation of nuclear energy.' As regards generation of nuclear energy is concerned, the scientific reality is that it originates from splitting of atoms of the uranium which generates heat. This process of splitting the atoms of uranium is called fission. The heat so generated helps in producing steam which is then used to operate turbines to generate electricity. As nuclear energy is produced only through the process of fission, fuels such as mineral oil or natural gas cannot be used for such purpose. Resultantly, no greenhouse gas emissions are produced while generating nuclear energy, hence it is also a clean source of energy. There are several other primary sources of generating energy such as fossil fuels like coal, petroleum, natural gas and sources like hydroelectric, solar and wind. None can be used as nuclear fuel to generate nuclear energy except uranium and its by-product plutonium. When such is the scientific reality then mineral oil and natural gas appearing in Entry No.51 on which the process of fission cannot apply to generate nuclear energy are to be read disjunctively, as both are sources of energy other than nuclear energy.

41. While discussing the scope of Entry No.51 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List contained in the Fourth Schedule to the Constitution which was also examined in Durrani Ceramics case, we feel the need to highlight the fact that prior to the framing of the 1956 Constitution the subject of mineral development was under the exclusive domain of the Federal Government for legislation which was administered under the federal law i.e. 'The Regulation Mines and Oil Fields and Mineral Development (Government Control) Act, 1948'. Hence legislation with regard to all minerals before 1956 Constitution came into force, fell within the domain of the Federal Government. Under the 1956 Constitution only two sources of energy, the mineral oil and natural gas were exclusively retained by the Federal Legislature as is evident from its Entry No.15 and iron, coal and other minerals were placed under Entry 12 of the Part II of the Concurrent List and under Entry No.41 regulation of mines and mineral development, excluding those mentioned in the Federal and Concurrent Lists fell in the Provincial List. Now for the first time an item described as 'mineral resources for generation of nuclear energy' was added in the 1962 Constitution under Entry No. 23 of the Federal Legislative List and mineral oil and natural gas were listed under Entry No.24 of the Federal Legislative List. This also recognizes the fact that mineral oil and natural gas though being sources of energy are distinct from the source that generates nuclear energy. In the 1973 Constitution mineral oil, natural gas and minerals for use in generation of nuclear energy were clubbed together under Entry No.51 for the simple reason that all three denote a common feature i.e. these are all sources of energy which the Federal legislature continued to retain for itself for legislation. Placing all three items under one and the same Entry is understandable. However, mere mention of all three sources of energy in one and the same entry does not mean that scientific reality has changed and the first two sources of energy i.e. mineral oil and natural gas can now also be used to generate nuclear energy. In the Durrani Ceramics case all items contained in Entry No.51 were read conjunctively, meaning thereby that Federal Government can levy tax on natural gas and mineral oil only if these sources of energy can be used to generate nuclear energy. It appears that no proper assistance on scientific lines was rendered by the law officers to this Court during the hearing of the Durrani Ceramics case hence the scientific fact that it was not possible to generate nuclear energy from mineral oil and natural gas, as these sources cannot be used as nuclear fuel was not taken into consideration. In view of the fact that nuclear energy can only be generated from uranium and its by-product plutonium and not from natural gas or mineral oil, the National Assembly was fully competent to impose tax on natural gas through a Money Bill on the strength of Entry No.51 of the Federal Legislative List. However, in these proceedings we leave this aspect at that as the law which was the subject matter of the controversy in Durrani Ceramics case is not in existence anymore and in light of decision in that case, the Federal Government also changed its stance and opted to impose fee.

42. From what has been discussed above it can be concluded that the whole purpose of enacting GIDC Act, 2015 was to facilitate import into the country a very important source of energy i.e. natural gas / LNG from nearby countries in order to meet the ever expanding energy needs of the country as our own resources of energy are fast depleting and the cheapest way to import it is through overland transnational pipelines. The supply of imported LNG to various parts of the country after its import on ships through trans-provincial pipeline is also a project of the Federal Government. The incidence of the cost involved in doing so falls on the industrial and commercial consumers whose consumption account for more than three-fourth of the total supply of natural gas, which fact was also brought to the notice of this Court in Durrani Ceramics case. Such consumers, apart from being major beneficiaries of the imported gas, would on account of their business activity pass on the burden to their clients/customers being part of the cost of their goods or services which they sell to their customers/clients. The object which the Parliament has promised in the GIDC Act, 2015 is clearly 'purpose based' which is distinctly defined and carries with it an element of quid pro quo, making it a fee-imposing enactment instead of a pure revenue raising measure like taxes in general are imposed with no precondition attached for their spending. After seeing the purpose of the enactment clearly and the fact that its revenue is duly accounted for and has also not been diverted to any other use, we hold that the imposition of Cess under GIDC Act, 2015 is not a tax-imposing enactment. It was passed through a bill moved in the Parliament under Article 70 of the Constitution deriving its legislative competence from Entry 54 read with the enabling Entry No. 27 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List contained in the Forth Schedule to the Constitution thereby curing the defect which lead to the invalidation of the GIDC Act, 2011 in Durrani Ceramics case. The provisions of Section 8 of the Act, which give retrospective effect to the charge and recovery of 'Cess' levied from the year 2011 are also declared to be valid being within the legislative competence of the Parliament. Exercise of such a power has been recognized by this Court in the Case of Mamukanjan Cotton Factory v. Punjab Province (PLD 1975 SC 50). The levy imposed under Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 is therefore in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution. However, keeping in view the ground realities discussed in the preceding paragraph and the fact that around 295 billion rupees have already been collected towards Cess-revenue and together with the outstanding amount the total sum by the end of this month would be in the vicinity of seven hundred billion rupees, which is more than what is the estimated cost of the projects mentioned in Section 4 of the GIDC Act, 2015, we are constraint to issue following directions: -

(i) From the date of this judgment, we restrain the Federal Govern-ment from charging Cess which power of the Federal Government shall remain suspended until the Cess-revenue collected and that which is accrued so far but not yet collected is expanded on the projects listed in Section 4 of the GIDC Act, 2015.

(ii) In the remaining period of the financial year 2020-21 while considering fixation of sale price of CNG, OGRA shall not take into consideration the element of Cess under GIDC Act, 2015 as one of the cost of sale of GNG.

(iii) As all industrial and commercial entities which consume gas for their business activities pass on the burden to their customers / clients therefore all arrears of 'Cess' that have become due upto 31.07.2020 and have not been recovered so far shall be recovered by the Companies responsible under the GIDC Act, 2015 to recover from their consumers. However, as a concession, the same be recovered in twenty-four equal monthly installments starting from 01.08.2020 without the component of late payment surcharge. The late payment surcharge shall only become payable for the delays that may occur in the payment of any of the twenty-four installments.

(iv) The Federal government shall take all steps to commence work on the laying of the North-South pipeline within six months and on TAPI pipeline as soon as its laying in Afghanistan reaches the stage where the work of laying pipeline on Pakistan soil can conveniently start and on IP pipeline as soon as the sanctions on Iran are no more an impediment in its laying. In case no work is carried out on North-South pipeline within the prescribed time and for laying any of the two other major pipelines (IP and TAPI) though the political conditions become conducive, the purpose of levying Cess shall be deemed to have been frustrated and the GIDC Act, 2015 would become permanently in-operational and considered dead for all intents and purposes.

43. Subject to the directions contained herein above, all these appeals and connected petitions are dismissed. In the light of this decision and the directions contained therein all listed applications also stand disposed of.

44. SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---I have had the privilege of reading the judgment authored by my learned brother Faisal Arab J. with which my learned brother Mushir Alam, J. has concurred ("Majority Judgment"). I, with respect, do not agree with the reasoning and conclusion of the Majority Judgment. I look at the issue somewhat differently. The principal question that concerns me is whether a fiscal levy imposed for a service to be rendered - a service dependent on the completion of long-term multinational infrastructural projects tied to the vagaries of international politics, exist without a reasonable time line? Is reasonable time, therefore, an essential constituent of quid pro quo? Can a fee levying legislation, resting on reciprocity, impose a one sided obligation on the gas consumers to pay the levy while providing no timeline nor any consequences for failure to deliver the proposed service? I venture to examine the constitutionality of the impugned levy (GIDC) in this background.

45. Constitutionality and legality of Gas Infrastructure Development Cess ("GIDC") imposed under the Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015[1] ("Act") has come up for our consideration. Two provincial High Courts have expressed contrary views; Sindh High Court has struck down the levy and the Act, as being unconstitutional, vide judgment[2] dated 26.10.2016, whereas, Peshawar High Court has upheld the levy, vide judgment[3] dated 31.05.2017. Matters are still pending in other Provincial High Courts.

46. GIDC is levied and charged[4] by the Federal Government from the gas consumers[5], other than the domestic sector consumers. According to the Act, GIDC is to be utilized[6] by the Federal Government for infrastructure development of Iran Pakistan Pipeline Project (IP), Turkmenistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan-India (TAPI) Pipeline Project, LNG or other ancillary projects.

47. As a matter of background almost similar Cess (GIDC) was earlier imposed under The Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2011 ("Act, 2011").[7] Considering it to be a "tax" under item No.51 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List of the Constitution[8], it was passed as a Money Bill under Article 73 of the Constitution. It was soon challenged after its promulgation by the gas consumers, primarily on the grounds; that GIDC was infact a Fee and could not have been introduced through a Money Bill bypassing the bicameral legislative procedure provided under Article 70 of the Constitution; and that the Parliament did not enjoy the legislative competence to impose "Tax" on "natural gas."

48. Peshawar and Islamabad High Courts struck down the Act, 2011 and declared the levy of GIDC as being unconstitutional in Ashraf Industries (Pvt.) Ltd.[9] and Master Textile Mills.[10] Finally, the matter came up before this Court in Durrani Ceramics[11]. This Court also declared the law unconstitutional on the ground that GIDC under Act, 2011 was not a Tax but a Fee and therefore could not have been passed as a Money Bill. Review filed against the same was also dismissed in Durrani Ceramics -II.[12]

49. The Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 was promulgated on 21.05.2015 with modifications once again imposing GIDC (Cess) on all the gas consumers other than the domestic sector consumers. It drew its legislative competence from item No. 2[13] of Part II of the Federal Legislative List. The new Act is substantially a repeat of the previous Act, 2011 except that its legislative routing is through both the Houses of the Parliament in terms of Article 70 of the Constitution. The new legislation does not set out the essential constituents of the new levy (Fee) to show that GIDC is no more a Tax but a Fee. Perhaps the legislature simply banked on the declaration given in Durrani Ceramics and thought that no additional legislative design was required.

50. The constitutionality and legality of the new Act was challenged before the provincial High Courts in the country. Sindh High Court vide judgment dated 26.10.2016 struck down the levy as being unconstitutional, however, the Peshawar High Court upheld the levy in its judgment dated 31.05.2017. Litigation is still pending in other Provinces, therefore, this bench vide order dated 22.10.2019 had allowed parties in pending matters to join these proceedings as intervenors so that their contention and viewpoint can be heard. The matter has now come up before us for final determination.

Grounds of challenge

51. Several legal questions of varying complexities were raised before us in the startling backdrop of this case; the more fundamental and pivotal being whether the Act imposes a Fee under our constitutional framework, especially when the corresponding service or quid pro quo is to be rendered in some distant future; whether different Cess rates provided in the Second Schedule to the Act are discriminatory; the failure to seek prior approval of the Federal Cabinet before initiating the legislative process of the Act; and whether the Parliament can legislate without first allowing Council of Common Interest (CCI) to deliberate on the subject of natural gas which falls in Part II of the Federal Legislative List and without considering its recommendations of CCI. And in the absence of any notification and specification of the rates under section 3 of the Act, whether GIDC could be levied and charged and finally whether the validation provision under section 8 of the Act holds water and GIDC for the period prior to the Act was lawfully charged. I deal with the constitutionality of the Fee imposed and therefore some of the questions raised are not required to be answered in this case.

52. I have had the opportunity of hearing the learned counsel for the parties and the intervenors extensively over days. I have examined the record of the case; the current status of the infrastructure development gas projects on the ground; the recent trends in the sub-continental comparative jurisprudence on the subject of Tax and Fee; and tried to understand the contemporary concept and meaning of Fee (with future service), now used for raising public finance for large infrastructure projects and have examined its constitutionality and legality under our living Constitution.

Concept of Fee

53. Summarizing the sub-continental jurisprudence[14] on Tax versus Fee, I see that normatively, theoretically and legislatively three prominent tasks have been entrusted to taxation, namely; revenue augmentation, redistribution of wealth in society and regulatory function to ensure expected economic behaviour. Fee, on the other hand, has a narrower scope and is premised on a corresponding service in return or quid pro quo. While tax is devoid of quid pro quo, it is a sine qua non for Fee. Tax and Fee both properly belong to the world of public finance.[15]

54. A tax is a compulsory contribution to the government, imposed in the common interest of all, for the purpose of defraying the expenses incurred in carrying out the public functions or imposed for the purpose of regulation, without reference to the special benefits conferred on the one making the payment.[16] As a corollary, tax being instrumental in revenue augmentation, its quantum need not commensurate with costs incurred by such public authority. Further, tax is devoid of any quid pro quo. Even where any benefit seems to flow, in case of tax, it is merely incidental and not primary. In other words, there exists no connection, whether direct and immediate or broad and casual between the contributor of tax and benefits.

55. In a glaring contrast, Fee, is generally defined to be a charge for a special service rendered to individuals by some governmental agency. Ordinarily, Fees are uniform and no account is taken of the varying abilities of different recipients to pay. A Fee may either be regulatory or compensatory. Where a Fee is commensurate with the cost of rendering the service, though not in exact arithmetical equivalence, it is a compensatory Fee. On the other hand a Fee charged to regulate or control, is validly classifiable as regulatory Fee, provided it is not excessive or not dominantly intending to raise revenues for the public authority. Whilst both tax and Fee are compulsory exactions of money by public authority, their real distinction comprise in primarily what is known as quid pro quo test and proportionality of amount test.

56. Accordingly a levy to be identified as Fee must have an element of quid pro quo between the payer and the public authority that imposed it. This quid pro quo or service rendered in return envisages an intimate and immediate relationship between rendition of service and the payer, who is direct beneficiary of such service, on a one-on-one basis. This proximity between the beneficiaries and services can also be categorized for simplicity as "proximate quid pro quo.[17]" So the classical approach of Fee comprises the following: a) proximate quid pro quo i.e., rendition of certain services to the payers by government agency which amounts to special benefit/advantage to the payer; b) proportionality i.e., the amount imposed ought to commensurate with cost of services to be rendered; c) specific fund that ensures dedicated spending from an earmarked fund for specific purpose of that service. Merger of proceeds with general revenue to be spent for general purposes was not acceptable; d) primary objective that is to enquire whether the primary purpose of imposing levy is rendition of services and it is not merely incidental to augmentation of revenue. If latter predominates, it acts as negative restriction and the levy will be a tax[18].

57. As the economy grew, Fee was imposed to render services to a large class of people or specified sector or area as a whole. In such cases, the relationship between the beneficiary and the services rendered became more generic, broad and remote. This is because such a service is to reach a general class of people or a specified sector or a designated area and not to an individual per se and therefore the service may also extend to free riders who are not the payers of Fee, hence the bond of proximity stands diluted. This shift has also been termed as "remote quid pro quo"[19] which is used to describe the situation where services target beneficiaries which is a generic class comprising of a certain free riders but inclusive of payers. The shift from proximate to remote quid pro quo overtime does not mean that the service to be rendered to the payers of Fee would be any different or in any manner less. The scope and depth of service to be rendered depends on the nature of the service. Like in the instant case, the service of continuous and increased supply of natural gas, inspite of being a generic service, extending to a class of gas consumers including those who are not payers of GIDC, must still reach all the industrial gas consumers paying GIDC (Fee).

58. The requisite earmarking of funds stands diluted in subsequent case law. Merely because collections for services rendered or grant of a privilege or license are taken to the consolidated fund of the state and not separately appropriated towards the expenditure for rendering the service is not by itself decisive.

59. With proximate quid pro quo test replaced with remote quid pro quo test and the specific fund test being considered non-determinant factor, the only test that remained untouched from the classical package was proportionality test. This test coupled with primary object test became new determinants of Fee. The modern approach to Fee therefore consists of three point check: (a) Primary object test-whether the plenary objective of the levy is rendition of service to specified class and this service is something other than something merely incidental; (b) Remote quid pro quo test-whether the payer receives a general benefit from the authority imposing levy; (c) Proportionality test - whether there exists a broad and generic co-relationship between services rendered and the amount of Fee charged[20]. Durrani Ceramics I and II

60. In Durrani Ceramics this Court held that GIDC was not a Tax but a Fee and declared Act, 2011 to be unconstitutional for having been passed as a Money Bill. Relevant extracts are as under:-

> 19. Upon examining the case-law from our own and other jurisdictions it emerges that the 'Cess' is levied for a particular purpose. It can either be 'tax' or 'fee' depending upon the nature of the levy. Both are compulsory exaction of money by public authorities. Whereas 'tax' is a common burden for raising revenue and upon collection becomes part of public revenue of the State, 'Fee' is exacted for a specific purpose and for rendering services or providing privilege to particular individuals or a class or a community or a specific area. However, the benefit so accrued may not be measurable in exactitude. So long as the levy is to the advantage of the payers, consequential benefit to the community at large would not render the levy a 'tax'. In the light of this statement of law it is to be examined whether the GIDC is a 'tax' or a 'fee'.
> 20. To recapitulate the 'Cess' collected is to be utilized for specific purposes, namely, development of infrastructure of Iran Pakistan Pipeline Project, Turkmenistan Afghanistan Pakistan India (TAPI) Pipeline Project, LNG or other projects or for price equalization of other imported alternative fuels including LPG. An annual report regarding utilization of the amount so collected is to be regularly placed before the House after three months of the end of each fiscal year (See S. 4 of GIDC Act). The levy therefore is to be utilized only for the purposes mentioned in the GIDC Act. The same is not a common burden for raising revenue generally. The money so collected from the levy is to be utilized for a specific purpose for the advantage and benefit of the consumers of gas. The 'Cess' is basically to be levied on all consumers of gas with certain exemption, mainly for domestic consumers. This exemption is by way of relief to such consumers. Even otherwise the data so provided to us regarding consumption of gas by different sectors shows that the domestic sector consumes only 20.3% of the total gas whereas 76 % of the total gas is consumed by those from whom the 'Cess' is collected (see Pakistan Energy Year Book, 2012). The latter sector has invested in development of the infrastructure for utilization of gas for their respective concerns. As envisaged in section 4 of GIDC Act, the 'Cess' is mainly to be utilized for development of the pipelines from other countries and other similar projects in order to ensure continuous and increased supply of gas to this sector. Undoubtedly other consumers of country as a whole would also benefit from such Projects but the same is inconsequential compared to the advantage that will accrue to the payers.

> 22. Another formidable argument on behalf of the respondents was based upon the National Assembly for the Financial Years 2012-13 and 2013-14 .... This Annual Budget Statement along with money bill is to be simultaneously transmitted to the Senate so that it may make recommendations to the National Assembly. Page-6 of the Statement contains list of Non-Tax Revenue, which under the Object Code C03916 includes 'Gas Infrastructure Development Cess'. Similarly in the Annual Budget Statement (Federal Budget 2013-14) that carries a similar worded preface, 'Gas Infrastructure Development Cess' has again been listed at C03916 as Non-Tax Revenue. Thus on the Government's own showing, as reflected in the Annual Budget, GIDC is not a 'tax'. No argument has been advanced on behalf of the appellants to explain away the categorization of GIDC as Non-Tax Revenue by the Government in the Annual Budget. This is not a mere accounting procedure as urged by Mr. Salman Akram Raja, Advocate Supreme Court, who in this context had relied upon Sheikh Muhammad Ismail & Co. v. Chief Cotton Inspector Council (supra), but were part of the Annual Budget Statements. As submitted by Mr. Makhdoom Ali Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, the possible reason why the levy has been reflected as Non-Tax Revenue in the Budget was to exclude it from the divisible pool under the National Finance Commission (NFC) Award. The above determination is sufficient to hold that being a 'fee' the same could not have been imposed through a money bill and on this score the levy was liable to be struck down.

31. Entry 51 mentions three items, namely 'mineral oil', 'natural gas' and 'minerals' which are followed by the words "for use in generation of nuclear energy". The basic rule for interpretation of statutes is to give the words their ordinary and natural meaning. Deviation from this rule is permissible only when it becomes necessary, for example to avoid or overcome absurdity or render certain words meaningless. This exercise is undertaken when assigning the words their ordinary meaning does not reflect the true intention of the Legislature. By the use of 'and' in between 'natural gas' and 'minerals' in Entry 51, all the three items are to be read conjunctively with the words following them. In the said Entry 'and' could have been substituted by 'or' only if without the change absurd consequences would have followed. Restricting 'mineral oil' or 'natural gas' to their use in the generation of nuclear energy would not lead to any absurdity.... After all the Constitution is a living document which caters for future development and progress. Thus Entry 51 can only be accorded its natural meaning and the same shall be read conjunctively. Similarly the Last Antecedent Rule is of no help to the appellants when the plain reading does not admit of any other interpretation but that only such items mentioned therein can be subjected to tax that are used in the generation of nuclear energy.

34. Admittedly 'natural gas' is subject to levy of Sales Tax and GIDC Act does not appear to suggest that it is another instance of Sales Tax levied by the Parliament on the supply of natural gas. As held in the above cited judgment, double taxation can be imposed only by clear and specific language and not by implication.

35. Thus under section 2(46) of the Sales Tax Act, 1990 the 'Cess' is one of the cost added to the price of the product for the calculation of sales tax. It cannot therefore be termed as another Sales Tax.

36. Coming to Entry 52, Mr. Salman Akram Raja, Advocate Supreme Court, had not urged that the GIDC can be levied under the said Entry. The learned Attorney General initially made submissions with regard to the said Entry but ultimately did not seriously press the same. Mr. Makhdoom Ali Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, in response to the said argument submitted that Entry 49 imposing Sales Tax on 'natural gas' and other commodities and Entry 52 empowering the imposition of tax on capacity are mutually exclusive. That since the 'natural gas' has already been subjected to Sales Tax no additional tax can be levied on the capacity. The learned counsel in this context had referred to Kohinoor Industries Ltd., Faisalabad v. Government of Pakistan (ibid), Central Board of Revenue v. Seven-Up Bottling Company (Pvt.) Ltd. (ibid) and Ellahi Cotton Mills Ltd. v. Federation of Pakistan (supra). The above authorities clearly lay down, with reference to Entry 52 and other Entries in Part-1 of the Federal Legislative List, that tax cannot be levied under the said Entry if the goods or activity has already been subjected to tax or duty under any other Entry. It follows that the GIDC is not covered by either of the three Entries, i.e. 49, 51 or 52 of Part-I of the Federal Legislative List. It was admitted on behalf of the appellant that for a 'tax' to fall under the said Federal Legislative List it must be covered by Entries Nos. 43 to 53. Apart from the said three no other Entries were pressed in service on behalf of the appellants for declaring the 'Cess' as 'tax'. On this count too the 'Cess' could not have been introduced through a money bill under Article 73 of the Constitution.

42. It was pointed out on behalf of the respondents that the Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Resources was of the view that the issue of levy of the 'Cess' may be placed for its approval before the Council of Commons Interest, which represents all the federating units. Similar was the opinion expressed by the Ministry of Law, Justice and Parliamentary Affairs. This fact was expressly averred in the Constitution Petitions filed before the Peshawar High Court and was not denied by the Federal Government. True that such an advice or opinion or non-reference of the matter to the Council of Common Interest would not render the levy illegal or invalid, nevertheless it would have been appropriate had the federating units been taken into confidence, particularly in the context of Article 160(3) of the Constitution.

45. To conclude the GIDC is a fee and not a tax, in the alternative it is not covered by any Entry relating to imposition or levy of tax under Part-I of the Federal Legislative List. On either counts the 'Cess' could not have been introduced through a money bill under Article 73 of the Constitution. The same was, therefore, not validly levied in accordance with the Constitution.

61. Durrani Ceramics declared that setting up of the infrastructure development gas projects would ensure continuous and increased supply of gas for the gas consumers, thereby constituting a service against the Fee (GIDC) charged. The continuous and increased supply of gas to the gas consumers was an assumption drawn by the Court, as no such legislative promise is borne out from Act, 2011. However, this assumption remained unchallenged in the review (Durrani Ceramics-II) by the parties and came to be the service rendered or quid pro quo under Act, 2011. The argument of the appellants that Durrani Ceramics has a limited precedential value, as it was restricted to the question of Tax and the legislative procedure of Money Bill, is not correct. This Court in answering these questions has also declared that GIDC is a Fee. This declaration was re-affirmed in review filed by the Federal Government. In the background of the jurisprudence discussed above, I see no reason to take a view different from that of Durrani Ceramics which simply holds that the concept of infrastructure development of gas pipeline projects leading to continuous and increased gas supply in the country constitutes service or quid pro quo for the appellants. The ground reality of the gas projects at the time of Durrani Ceramics was not so noticeable or stark as it is now (discussed hereunder) and, therefore, the delivery or actualization of the service, has come to be of critical importance.

62. Moved by the facts on the ground, I feel it necessary to re-examine the meaning and concept of Fee and the scope and extent of its inbuilt reciprocity - quid pro quo. The question, regarding "future service" which is of pivotal importance to this case, though raised in Durrani Ceramics, was not addressed or answered. I now move beyond Durrani Ceramics to grapple with the question of future service and look for a more contemporary meaning of quid pro quo.

FUTURE SERVICE AND TIMELINE

63. Existing jurisprudence informs us that it is not that all the required services against a Fee must be in place before a Fee can be levied.[21] Merely because the benefits to be received are postponed, it cannot be said that there is no 'quid pro quo'. It is true that ordinarily a return in praesenti is generally the case when Fee is levied but simultaneity or contemporaneity of payment and benefit is not the most vital or crucial test to determine whether a levy is a Fee or not, especially in long-term projects. In fact, it may often happen that the rendering of a service or the conferment of a benefit may only follow after the consolidation of a fund from the Fee levied. Hospitals, for instance, cannot be built in a day nor medical facilities or gas supply provided right from the day of the commencement of the scheme. It is only after infrastructure development is available that one may reasonably expect a compensating return. How soon a return may be expected or ought to be given must necessarily depend on the nature of the services required to be rendered and benefits required to be conferred.[22] So while "service to be rendered" or quid pro quo in future is permissible it is equally important that the prospects of such a future service are certain, as if tied in time, with the payment of Fee. I come to this important question later in the judgment.

- Instant case and its unique facts

64. Let's leapfrog from 2011 (imposition of GIDC) to 2014 (Durrani Cermaics) and finally to 2020 (current case). The facts and figures of this case are admitted and show that utilization of GIDC as per the earlier and the recent statute is for setting up infrastructure development of Iran Pakistan Pipeline Project (IP), Turkmenistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan-India (TAPI) Pipeline Project, LNG or other ancillary projects. These projects were financed through the imposition of GIDC (Fee), used as a tool of public finance. The gas consumers have been paying GIDC for almost a decade, as is established from the accounts and the status of the projects placed before us by the Interstate Gas System (Pvt.) Ltd., which we are informed, is the company that is to set up these projects on behalf of the Federal Government. The figures hereunder undisputedly reveal that there has been no work on the ground and these gas projects have no physical existence, whatsoever, in Pakistan. Letter of the Finance Division, Government of Pakistan dated 18.02.2020 signed by the Deputy Secretary (Budget Resources) filed[23] in Court reveals that the total amount of GIDC accrued, collected and outstanding as on 30.6.2019 is as under and does not include Late Payment Surcharge under section 3(3) of the Act.

| Total development and construction cost- to be funded through GIDC | 271 billion | 30.513 billion | 20.250 billion | 75 billion | 396.7 billion |

65. The Letter further states that a meeting was held in the Petroleum Division attended by relevant officers of Petroleum Division and Finance Division and the proposal for the way forward was that "the amount of GIDC (Rs. 295.403 billion) shall be utilized against projects to be submitted by Petroleum Division through budgetary mechanism in line with GIDC enactments." This proposal was to be approved by ECC/Cabinet. This was the state of affairs on 18.02.2020, almost nine years after the levy of GIDC.

66. Status of these projects has been attached with Letter dated 11.02.2020 issued by the Interstate Gas Systems (Pvt.) Ltd. and filed in Court.[25] The Project Brief on Turkmenistan-Afghanistan Pakistan-India (TAPI) Gas Pipeline Project does not mention about the actual development of the pipeline infrastructure in Pakistan or the date when supply of gas will be made available. And the Project Brief on Iran-Pakistan (IP) Gas Pipeline Project mentions that "the current status of the Project is that Pakistan's contractual obligations are suspended under the Agreement, however, the legally binding agreement is still in place and the Government of Pakistan is still committed with the Project. The two sides have recently given themselves a further period of five years for the implementation of the Project by signing Amendment Agreement No. 3 of GSPA on 5th September, 2019." The details of the Projects as given by the Federal Government are as follows:-

2 Development and construction expenditure are expected to be incurred in next 2 to 3 years.

3 All amounts have been converted @ PKR 150/US$.

67. The above record undisputedly reveals that no development phase expenditure has taken place and that project development cost funded by GIDC is Nil.[26] Even though, there is nothing on the ground, these projects were announced in 2011 and GIDC is since then being collected. The representatives of the concerned Ministries were at sea when asked to give a definite timeline for the service in return.

-Position of the Projects in the Pakistan Economic Survey

68. The Pakistan Economic Survey 2014-15[27] mentioned that the Government is taking steps to overcome the shortfall of natural gas by, inter alia, importing natural gas from Iran and Turkmenistan. It further provides as follows;

> The two transnational gas pipelines that Pakistan has pursued for over two decades have been delayed due to reasons beyond control. The 750 MMCFD Iran-Pakistan (IP) gas pipeline has been delayed due to international sanctions (although there is hope for removal of the sanctions) and the 1,325 MMCFD Turkmenistan Afghanistan-Pakistan-India (TAPI) pipeline has been delayed due to the security situation in Afghanistan and structural issues with project transaction.
> The Government of Pakistan is now successful to import 500 million cubic feet per day (mmcfd) of LNG from Qatar.

The same Survey (2014-15)[28] further states:

> During the recent visit of the Prime Minister to Turkmenistan .... the review of Turkmenistan Afghanistan-Pakistan-India (TAPI) pipeline and energy security remained main focus of the meeting. The project is expected to be materialized by end of 2017 will be providing the gas of 1.3 billion cubic feet to Pakistan.

69. There is no mention of IP or TAPI pipeline projects in the Pakistan Economic Surveys of 2015-16, 2016-17, 2017-18, 2018- 19 and 2019-20. And Chapter-14 on "Energy" in the latest Pakistan Economic Survey 2019-20 states as follows[29]:

> Pakistan is successfully overcoming energy crisis, which has direct and indirect impact on all sectors of the economy. Presently, Energy Sector is confronted with demand supply gap....in terms of energy-mix, Pakistan's reliance on thermal which includes imported coal, local coal and RLNG and natural gas has been decreasing over the last few years. Pakistan's dependence on natural gas in the overall energy mix is on decline and the reduction of its share in the energy mix may be attributed to declining natural gas reserves as well as to the introduction of LNG since 2015.
> Gas Sector
> Natural Gas is a clean, safe, efficient and environment friendly fuel. Its indigenous supplies contribute about 38 percent in total primary energy supply mix of the country. Pakistan produces around four (4) Billion Cubic Feet Per Day (Bcfd) of indigenous natural gas against an unconstrained demand of over six (6) Bcfd. To meet the shortfall, the GoP has initiated the import of LNG. (emphasis supplied)

70. Pakistan Economic Survey is silent regarding these projects since 2015 and shows that the shortfall in natural gas is being successfully plugged through the import of LNG, which surprisingly, is not a GIDC funded Project. The above documents show that after a decade of charging GIDC from gas consumers and after having collected Rs 295.40 billion to-date there is no sign of development of the gas pipeline projects in Pakistan. Absence of the said projects and highlighting the import of LNG in the latest Pakistan Economic Survey hazards a guess that the Government of Pakistan is not willing to or is unable to complete these projects anymore and therefore the shortfall in gas supply is being increasingly plugged through LNG imported from Qatar.

- Annual Reporting to the Parliament under section 4(2) of the Act and Parliamentary Practice.

71. The Act, in its wisdom, considering the long-term nature of the infrastructure development gas pipeline projects required the Federal Government to inform both the Houses of the Parliament regarding the utilization of GIDC by tabling an Annual Report under Section 4 (2) of the Act, which provides as follows:

> The annual report in respect of the utilization of the cess shall be laid before the both houses of Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament) after three months at the end of each fiscal year.

72. This is the closest the Act came to realizing that the levy of Fee is not contemporaneous and entails a time-lag and therefore requires a Parliamentary oversight on the utilization of GIDC. This was to ensure that the Government delivers the promised service of continuous and increased gas supply, to the gas consumers, at the earliest and also to check that the funds collected are earmarked and utilized for these projects only. It is an admitted position that not a single Annual Report was tabled before the Houses of the Parliament except the one placed before the Parliament on 30.06.2019 after the filing of these cases. The Government has unabashedly and successively hoodwinked the Parliamentary oversight, paying little heed to the Energy crisis in the country; the interest of the gas consumers who have been regularly paying GIDC and the welfare of the general public. More disturbingly, the Parliament itself, inspite of acute Energy crisis in the country, never took the Federal Government to task and allowed a decade to pass by. The Executive and the Legislature both have failed the appellants and public expectations besides wasting valuable time and opportunity to utilize and divert the money collected to some other projects to alleviate the gas shortage in the country. I completely disagree with Majority View that the Executive has not been at fault. Had the Executive apprised the Parliament under the Act, legislative intervention may have followed, saving everyone this long drawn litigation and better financial management and use of Rs.295 Billion, which is sitting unused with the Federal Government.[30]

73. According to the legislative design behind section 4(2) of the Act, these Annual Reports would have disclosed the status of the projects and their funding to the Parliament. In case of inordinate delay or non-development of the projects the Parliament could take appropriate action. Under the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business of the National Assembly, 2007 ("Rules") these Annual Reports under section 4(2) of the Act would stand referred to a Standing Committee concerned under Rule 181 read with Rules 198, 201 and 235 of the Rules. The Rules provide that the Standing Committees can examine the expenditure, administration and policies of the Ministry concerned and may forward its report of findings and recommendations to the Ministry to submit its reply to the Committee. This never happened as the Government admittedly failed to submit Annual Report regarding GIDC and the Projects to the Parliament. Timely interference by the Parliament would have borne different results.

74. It might not be out of place to mention that Parliament today has become more and more a multi-functional institution performing variety of roles. Some of the cardinal roles and functions of the Parliament are: Legislation, Oversight of the Government actions and Financial Accountability of the Government and the public sector. Parliament makes laws, authorizes the Government to spend public money, scrutinizes the Government activities and is a forum for debate on national issues.

75. The worst thing that the Government in a parliamentary system can do is to deny information to the Parliament. The Executive is answerable to the Parliament. Article 91(6) of the Constitution declares it in unequivocal terms that the Cabinet, together with the Ministers of State, shall be collectively responsible to the Senate and the National Assembly. It is the function of Parliament to exercise political and financial control over the Executive. To call for information is perhaps the greatest power of Parliament. Even otherwise, it is the duty of the Government itself to feed Parliament with information, which is full, truthful, precise and supplied in time. This is seen by Ministers making statements on the floor of the House, laying reports and papers on the Table of the House. All these constitute a wealth of information, which becomes immediately public and can be issued to raise discussion in the House.[31] Nothing of the sort took place in the Parliament on GIDC and almost ten years passed without a whimper. This failure on the part of the two prime institutions of the country reflects poor governance and unsatisfactory performance of their constitutional duties, to say the least.
Timeline - essential requirement for quid pro quo

76. I now re-visit the constitutional concept of Fee, a levy which appears as "Fee for any service rendered" in Articles 72(3)(a), 115(3)(a), 165(3) and as "Fee" in Articles 203B(c), 270AA(7), 279 and item Nos. 54 and 15 of Parts I and II of the Federal Legislative List, respectively. In the present case, Fee is being charged as a tool of public finance for raising funds for the infrastructure development of gas projects, with the corresponding service of continuous and increased supply of natural gas for the gas consumers, to meet the energy shortfall in the country. It is axiomatic that, in this case, service rendered in return or quid pro quo will materialize after the gas pipeline projects are set up, hence the service will be rendered after a time-lag and will therefore be a future service.

77. It is jurisprudentially settled that the concept of Fee, as opposed to Tax, is premised on a service in return or quid pro quo. This essential constituent of Fee needs further elaboration in the backdrop of the present case. Examination of the existing jurisprudence shows that courts have over time laboured to determine whether in a particular case there existed a service in return in order to justify the levy as a Fee as opposed to a Tax. The question never arose regarding the actual delivery of the service, perhaps for the reason that in most of the cases either the service was available or was easily made available in short span of time, so the payer never had a concern regarding the actual delivery of the service. This dimension of time has not come up for discussion in the existing jurisprudence or writings on "Tax v. Fee" in any detail. The facts of the present case have prompted me to consider the time dimension of service to be rendered in return for the payment of a Fee. It cannot be denied that words and phrases take colour, shape and character in a context and mean differently in different contexts. It is worthwhile to remember that there is a living content behind words and phrases, which breathes, and so, expands and contracts with changing times.

78. The staggering facts of this case beg the question whether the fundamental constituent of Fee i.e., service in return or quid pro quo or future service should have a certain timeline? Service in return or quid pro quo seems to exist at two levels. First, at the theoretical level - the examination of the legislative design should show that there is a quid pro quo or service to be rendered in return for the Fee. Second, at the applied level - this deals with the actual delivery of the service or a definite timeline for the delivery of future service. The legitimization of Fee requires the existence of service at both the levels: theoretical, as well as, applied. It will be absurd and illogical to conceive that a payer of Fee, who is subject to compulsory exaction of money by the State, is left to grope in the dark, guessing when the promised service is to be rendered. Fee is a constitutional levy against a service rendered, which cannot be structured on assumptions, suppositions, expectations and verbal commitments of the Executive but require a clear, crisp and certain statutory timeline. For the Fee to have a constitutional existence, the service to be rendered in return or the quid pro quo must be certain, clear, unambiguous and within a definite time-frame. Durrani Ceramics settles the case at the theoretical level only. The case did not touch the applied level, because the facts of the case in the year 2014 did not necessitate the examination of this aspect, as the Court and the parties assumed at that time that the service would be rendered in a reasonable period of time.

79. The underlying theme of a Fee is based on relationship of reciprocity and mutuality- the quid pro quo. The legislation that imposes a Fee must cater for this reciprocity and guard this relationship premised on quid pro quo. While there is an obligation of the payer to deposit Fee on time which is subject to a surcharge for late payment, there must also be a corresponding obligation on the State or the authority responsible to provide the service in return, to do the same within a definite timeline. Without this corresponding obligation, the legislation fails to recognize the core ingredient of a Fee - the quid pro quo. It is by all means a legitimate expectation of the payer of Fee to know when will the service be delivered. His rights to property, trade and business under the Constitution require it. The payment of Fee by the payer cannot be towards a service that floats in a timeless zone; is open-ended and uncertain. Any service to be rendered in such like cases becomes a disservice. The relationship in a Fee must exist till the end. Failure in providing future service within reasonable timeline, deprives the Fee of its essential character, sheds its complexion as a Fee and gives that of a Tax, as such failure and the uncertainty of time diminishes the requisite degree of correlation between the payment of Fee and provision of service in return. This indefiniteness negates the concept of Fee and partakes the character of a Tax. Therefore, service against a Fee is not simply a theoretical recognition of the service to be rendered but must also have certainty in its applied form i.e., the timeline for the actual delivery. The theoretical and applied constituents of the levy must exist in the legislative design, for the levy to stand as a Fee under the Constitution otherwise it passes for a Tax.

80. The Act is silent on these counts and therefore passes for colourable legislation as it actually imposes a levy unknown to the constitution in the garb of a Fee. The Act does not provide a level-playing field for the parties and is devoid of the basic fairness, protection and due process that is required to be meted out to a payer who is the source of the public finance required for funding these long-term gas projects. Such a law offends and renders constitutional protections of right to property, business and non-discrimination, absolutely hollow and meaningless.

81. This unexpected delay and uncertainty in the supply of gas (service to be rendered or quid pro quo) is both a Legislative and an Executive failure. The Federal Government should have tabled Annual Reports before both the Houses of the Parliament under section 4(2) of the Act and apprised the Parliament of the delay and its reasons or furnished a timeline for the completion of these projects. Irrespective of these responsibilities, Executive is there only to implement the law and if the law is silent regarding the timeline of delivery of service, the Executive carries no obligation to provide the service, except an expectation or assumption of a reasonable time, which is not actionable under the law, as the law envisages no penalty for such an omission. There is even no penalty for not tabling the Annual Reports before the Parliament by the Executive. In the absence of any statutory obligation and corresponding penalty, the real failure is of the legislative design.

-nature of fiscal statute

82. The above discussion becomes more nuanced when considered in the backdrop of a fiscal statute. The principles of interpretation of a fiscal statute apply equally to a Fee as they do to a Tax - both being compulsory exactions of money by the State. It was expressed by Rowlatt J. in Cape Brandy Syndicate v. IRC[32] that 'in a taxing statute, one has to look at what is clearly said. There is no room for any intendment. There is no equity about a tax. There is no presumption as to a tax. Nothing is to be read in, nothing is to be implied. One can look fairly at the language used[33].' It is settled that interpreting a taxing statute, equitable consideration are entirely out of place. Nor can taxing statute be interpreted on any presumptions or assumptions. The court must look squarely at the words of the statute and interpret them. The court cannot imply anything that is not expressed, it cannot import provisions in the statutes so as to supply an assumed deficiency.[34] A taxing statues, if it professes to impose a charge, its intention must be expressed in clear, unequivocal and unambiguous language. A hunt into the intention to find a charge is impermissible. No equitable construction of a charging section is to be applied. The charging section is to be construed strictly regardless of its consequences that may appear to the judicial mind to be. It is not the function of the court to hunt out ambiguities by strained and unnatural meaning.[35] Fiscal legislation requires that any law that levies a Fee must first unambiguously and clearly spell out the nature of the service to be rendered in return (quid pro quo) and then provide for a reasonable and definite timeline for the delivery of such service. The legislature must also consider the entire mechanism at work behind this relationship of reciprocity - for example, the obligations of the provider of Fee, the consequences of delay and failure to render service including refund.

- Our Constitution and the living tree doctrine

83. I know that the Constitution is organic and a living testament of the aspirations of the people it governs. The "living tree" doctrine[36] allows the Constitution to change and evolve over time while still acknowledging its original intentions. The doctrine achieves a balance between two seemingly contradictory goals: predictability and flexibility. To be effective, the Constitution must consist of a predictable set of rules. On the other hand, flexible interpretation accommodates the realities of changing modern life. If the Constitution could not be interpreted this way, it would be frozen in time and become more obsolete than useful. Therefore, contemporary interpreters must focus on what the originators intended it to accomplish rather than what the text actually states before allowing the Constitution to evolve or remain unchanged.[37] I know that stability without change is degeneration. Change without stability is anarchy. The role of a judge is to help bridge the gap between the needs of the society and the law without allowing the legal system to degenerate or collapse into anarchy. The judge must ensure stability with change, and change with stability. Like the eagle in the sky, which maintains its stability only when it is moving, so too is the law stable only when it is moving. The life of law is complex. It is not mere logic. It is not mere experience. It is both logic and experience together.[38] As Roscoe Pound said "the law must be stable, yet it cannot stand still."[39] Progressive interpretation is to preserve the vitality of the constitution: unless interpreted in this way, it would be frozen in time and become more obsolete than useful. Our courts have repeatedly underlined that our Constitution is a living document and encouraged its progressive interpretation.[40] Therefore, the word "Fee" and the phrase "service rendered in return" or "quid pro quo" must also evolve to meet the new fiscal realities of the State. Fee, therefore, under the Constitution today would mean a fiscal levy that clearly and unambiguously describes the service rendered in return, so that Courts don't have to unnecessarily hunt the meaning and nature of the levy in the letter of the law. Secondly, the reciprocal service to be rendered in return or the quid pro quo must be structured to have a reasonably certain and definite timeline. If the constituent of time is missing (the applied part), the service becomes practically non-existent and the levy no more retains the character of Fee and becomes a Tax rendering the levy unconstitutional.

Distinguishing Durrani Ceramics

84. The factual matrix of the instant case is very different from that of Durrani Ceramics. It is settled law that if a new case is dissimilar to an earlier case in ways that seem important, the court will 'distinguish" it and reach a result different from what the precedent would otherwise suggest or even dictate. In common parlance, either the precedent or the pending case may be said to be "distinguished" from the other.[41] In this way, the former decision might be said to be "rerationalized[42]." A precedent, whether persuasive or binding, need not be applied or followed if it can be distinguished; that is, there is a material distinction between the facts of the precedent case and the case in question. According to Zander, 'distinguishing between factual situations and applying the appropriate rule of law is one of the lawyer's and judge's most crucial functions."[43] The technique of distinguishing past case is a powerful engine of legal change.[44] Distinguishing means that each case was decided correctly based solely on its own facts because the facts were materially different. Joseph Raz argues that the boundaries of distinguishing "are far from fixed," he asserts that, the [boundaries] undergo continual change."[45] The crucial question is: Are there any material differences between the facts of the case at bar and the facts of the prior cases to warrant the rule being different? In principle, the distinguishing of an apparent decision presents no problem for the doctrine of precedent.[46] The facts of this case, showing that the gas projects have not even started for almost a decade yet the Fee is being constantly charged since 2011 present us with new facts that were not so gravely present at the time of Durrani Ceramics, hence the said precedent is clearly distinguishable and stands on its own facts.

Cess Rates- discriminatory

85. The Act provides for the following rates for different Industrial Gas consumers:-

SECOND SCHEDULE OF THE ACT

| S.No. | Sector | Maximum Rate of Cess (Rs./MMBTU) |
|---|---|---|
| (1) | (2) | (3) |
| 1. | Fertilizer-Feed (Old) | 300.00 |
| 2. | Fertilizer-Feed (New) | 300.00 |
| 3. | Fertilizer-Fuel | 150.00 |
| 4. | Captive Power | 200.00 |
| 5. | Industry | 100.00 |
| 6. | KESC/GENCO | 100.00 |
| 7. | IPPs | 100.00 |

The purpose of the Act is to raise public finance for the infrastructure development of the gas projects mentioned in section 4 of the Act through levy of Fee on the above-mentioned gas consumers. There appears to be no intelligible differentia amongst the different gas consumers mentioned in the Schedule for the purposes of the Act. One justification for charging different rates from amongst the industrial gas consumers could have been their overall consumption of natural gas. The data provided by the latest Pakistan Energy Year Book 2018[47] shows as follows:

Natural Gas Consumption by Sector 2017-2018

| Sr. No. | Industry | Consumption (%) | Maximum Rate of Cess (Rs./MMBTU) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. | Fertilizer (feedstock) | 12.49% | 300 |
| 2. | Fertilizer (fuel) | 4.57% | 150 |

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 3. | Power | 37.44% | 200 (captive power); 100(IPPs); 100(KESC/GENCO) |
| 4. | Gen. Industry | 18.84% | 100 |
| 5. | Transport (CNG) | 4.84% | 263.56 (Region-I) and 200 (Region-II) |

The above shows that the differentiation of rates is not based on the consumption pattern of the gas consumers. The rates of GIDC fixed for different gas consumers are, therefore, ex-facie discriminatory and cannot be allowed to stand.

86. I, therefore, hold that any fiscal legislation that imposes a Fee, must clearly spell out the nature of service to be rendered and the reasonable timeline for the delivery of such service. The legislation (including subordinate legislation) must provide a complete mechanism including the consequences of stoppage of collection of Fee or extension of time or refund of Fee in case the project is delayed or cannot be executed in the proposed timeline, respectively. The legislation must safeguard and protect the reciprocity behind a Fee (unlike a tax) by providing corresponding obligations and duties on the parties to the levy. The present Act does not meet this fundamental requirement of a Fee levying legislation, resulting in imposing an unconstitutional levy in the garb of a Fee. This unlawful exaction (levy) offends the rights to property, trade and non-discrimination of the appellants and is hereby declared to be unconstitutional and illegal in its present form.

Refund of the amount collected

87. As a consequence, the amount of GIDC collected over the years should be returned and refunded to the payers in full, unless in some cases, it is impractical to so do. The Federal Government shall constitute a Committee to work out a mechanism for refund of GIDC so that payers of GIDC are fully restituted; be it the gas consumers under the Act or the final consumers (people of Pakistan). Even if the gas consumers have passed on the Fee to its customers, technology may be available to credit such customers, so that there is no unjust enrichment on the part of the State. The amount of GIDC that cannot be refunded after exploring all other avenues, shall remain earmarked and be utilized only for the infrastructure development of the gas sector.

Refund after Six Months

88. I cannot lose sight of the fact that Energy is vital to industry, transport, infrastructure, information technology, agriculture, household users and more. Any nation with a growing economy and improving living standards must secure a robust energy supply. The future of economic development hinges on energy security. Shortage of natural gas in the country is still a reality and the Energy Sector is confronted with demand supply gap which needs to be filled up. According to the latest Pakistan Economic Survey, 2019-20 the indigenous natural gas contributes around 38% in total primary energy supply mix of the country. Pakistan produces around 4 Billion Cubic Feet Per Day (Bcfd) against an unconstrained demand of 6 (Bcfd); the gas pipeline projects in question are based on bilateral and multilateral international agreements with other countries; a sum of Rs.295 billion has been collected as GIDC for the last almost 10 years. Keeping these facts in mind, and especially the issue of energy security, in the larger national interest, I allow the Federal Government a period of six months to initiate appropriate legislation in the light of the principles settled in this judgment including a clear description of the services being rendered, provision of a reasonable timeline for the delivery of service (supply of natural gas) to the gas consumers and a statutory mechanism of obligations and consequences that may arise, if the service is delayed or is not delivered at all. In case the Federal Government fails to do so, achieve this during this period, the Federal Government shall refund the amount of GIDC, in the manner mentioned above.

89. These appeals are allowed in the above terms.

Date of hearing: 10th November, 2020.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question that arises in this case is regarding the seniority between the appellants (promotees) vis- -vis the respondents (direct appointees), both appointed to the post of District Population Welfare Officer/Deputy Director (Non-Technical) (BS-18) close in time to each other in the manner described hereunder.

2. Briefly the facts are that the direct appointees (respondents) were recommended by the Punjab Public Service Commission (PPSC) and appointed vide order dated 03.12.2003 as Deputy Director/District Population Welfare Officer (Non-Technical) in BS-18. On the other hand the appellants were recommended for promotion by the Departmental Promotion Committee (DPC) on 24.11.2003, however, their notifications for promotion were issued successively as follows: the promotion notification of Dr. Naureen Asghar was issued on 2.12.2003, while that of Dr. Zohra Jabeen and Dr. Farkhanda Almas, who were recommended for promotion in the same DPC but subject to the completion of their ACRs for the year 2001-2002 were notified for promotion on 10.4.2004 and 24.11.2004, respectively. Dr. Zubda Riaz (appellant No.3), however, was initially deferred in the DPC held on 24.11.2003 and was later on considered in the DPC held on 12.10.2007 and notified for promotion on 26.4.2008. The seniority list prepared by the department placed the appellants over the respondents, who were appointed through direct recruitment. The respondents made a representation before the Chief Secretary, which was dismissed on 27.9.2010, whereafter they preferred an appeal before the Punjab Service Tribunal, which was allowed through the impugned judgment, holding that the respondents were senior to the appellants, with the direction to the department to re-draw the seniority list accordingly. To consider the question of seniority between the appellants and the respondents, leave was granted by this Court on 20.12.2012.

3. To answer the question regarding seniority between the appellants and the respondents, proviso to section 7(2) of the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974 ("Act") and Rule 8(2) along with its Explanation under the Punjab Civil Servants (Appointment and Conditions of Service) Rules, 1974 ("Rules") need to be examined. Both the provisions are reproduced hereunder:

"Section 7. Seniority.---(1)

(2) Seniority in a post, service, or cadre to which a civil servant is promoted shall take effect from the date of regular appointment to that post:

Provided that civil servants who are selected for promotion to a higher post in one batch shall on their promotion to the higher post retain their inter-se seniority in the lower post.

Rule 8. The seniority inter se of persons appointed to posts in the same grade in a functional unit shall be determined:

(2) The seniority of the persons appointed by initial recruitment to the grade vis- -vis those appointed otherwise shall be determined with reference to the date of continuous appointment to the grade; provided that if two dates are the same, the person appointed otherwise shall rank senior to the person appointed by initial recruitment; provided further that inter se seniority of person belonging to the same category will not be altered.

Explanation- In case a group of persons is selected for initial appointment at one time, the earliest date on which any one out of the group joined the service will be deemed to be the date of appointment of all persons in the group. Similarly in case a group of persons is appointed otherwise at one time in the same office order the earliest date on which any one out of the group joined the service will be deemed to be the date of appointment of all persons in the group. And the persons in each group will be placed with reference to the continuous date of appointment as a group in order of their inter se seniority."

According to the above provisions, if civil servants are selected for promotion in a "batch[1]" or as a "group of persons[2]" then the date of promotion of all the persons in the batch or the group shall be the date when anyone of them was first promoted to the post and they shall retain their inter se seniority. The word "batch" used in section 7 of Act has been interchangeably used as "group of persons" in Rule 8. Ordinary dictionary meaning of the word 'batch" is "people dealt with as a group or at the same time".[3] Therefore, appellants, in the same grade, when considered and recommended for promotion for the next grade in the same Departmental Promotion Committee (DPC) pass for a "batch" or "group of persons" and therefore as per the above provisions will be considered to have been promoted from the date when the first amongst the batch was promoted and will also retain their inter se seniority of the lower post. In this legal background, the three appellants were recommended for promotion to BS-18 in DPC dated 24.11.2003. One of them i.e., Dr. Naureen Asghar was promoted on 2.12.2003, thus the entire batch of appellants/promotees who were recommended for promotion in the same DPC namely Dr. Zohara Jabeen and Dr. Farkhanda Almas shall be considered to have been appointed w.e.f 2.12.2003, the date of promotion of Dr. Naureen Asghar, one of the promotees, from the same batch or group of persons. Further their inter se seniority amongst the promotees shall be the same as maintained in the lower post as per the provisions discussed above. However, Dr. Zubda Riaz (appellant No. 3) who was deferred in the DPC held on 24.11.2003 on the ground that she was on a long leave and was subsequently recommended in the DPC held on 12.10.2007 (after almost four years) and promoted on 26.4.2008 cannot be considered to be from the same batch as that of the other appellants selected in the year 2003 and therefore the above provisions do not come to her rescue. Her seniority will be fixed according to the date of her promotion. The respondents were appointed through initial appointment on 03.12.2003, a day after the promotion of the first promottee out of the batch of promotes, hence the respondents will fall under the appellants. Therefore, the seniority of the appellants Nos.1 and 2 shall be re-fixed above the respondents in the manner discussed above and of appellant No.3 according to her date of promotion. For the above reasons the impugned judgment of the Tribunal dated 26.03.2012 is set aside and these appeals are allowed accordingly.

MWA/Z-9/SC Appeals allowed.

(a) Interpretation of statutes---

---- Directory and mandatory provisions---Principles and tests to determine whether a provision in a statute was directory or mandatory in nature.

In order to determine whether a provision was directory or mandatory, the duty of the court was to try to unravel the real intention of the legislature. The ultimate test was the intent of the legislature and not the language in which the intent was clothed. The object and purpose of enacting the provision provided a strong and clear indicator for ascertaining such intent of the legislature. The intention of the legislature must govern and this was to be ascertained not only from the phraseology of the provision but also by considering its nature, its object, and the consequences which would follow from construing it one way or the other. This exercise entailed careful examination of the scheme of the Act in order to discover the real purpose and object of the Act. A provision in a statute was mandatory if the omission to follow it rendered the proceedings to which it related illegal and void, while a provision was directory if its observance was not necessary to the validity of the proceeding.

Collector of Sales Tax v. Super Asia 2017 SCMR 1427; State v. Imam Baksh 2018 SCMR 2039 and Crawford, Statutory Construction, pp. 515-516 ref.

One of the important test that must always be employed in order to determine whether provision was mandatory or directory in character was to consider whether the noncompliance of a particular provision caused inconvenience or injustice and, if it did, the court would say that that provision must be complied with and that it was obligatory in its character. There were three fundamental tests, which were often applied with remarkable success in the determination of this question. They were based on considerations of the scope and object, sometimes called the scheme and purpose, of the enactment in question, on considerations of justice and balance of convenience and on a consideration of the nature of the particular provision, namely, whether it affected the performance of a public duty or related to a right, privilege or power in the former case the enactment was generally directory, in the latter mandatory.

(b) Punjab Employees Efficiency, Discipline and Accountability Act (XII of 2006)---

----S. 21, proviso---Retired employee---Departmental proceedings, finalization of---Time frame---Scope---In terms of proviso to S. 21 of the Punjab Employees Efficiency, Discipline and Accountability Act, 2006 departmental proceedings initiated against a retired employee shall be finalized not later than two years of his retirement---Said proviso was mandatory in nature, therefore, insertion of the same had a specific purpose; to conclude the proceedings against a retired employee not later than two years of his retirement---Any proceedings after the said statutory period shall stand abated and any orders passed after the efflux of the said time period were void and had no legal effect.

The focus of the Punjab Employees Efficiency, Discipline and Accountability Act, 2006 ( the Act ) was on the employees that were managing the affairs of the Government or the Corporation rather than those who had retired. Further, any long drawn departmental proceedings against a retired employee would be an unnecessary drain on the resources of the Government and would also distract the Government from its prime objective of regulating its employees. The scheme of the Act seemed to support the public policy that an employee who had served the Government all his life must enjoy his retirement in peace and must be spared from undergoing long drawn departmental proceedings during his retired life.

The importance of the proviso to section 21 of the Act could be gauged by supposing that there was no such proviso. As a consequence, there would be no statutory timeline for the conclusion of the departmental proceedings against a retired employee, as was the case with an (in service) employee under the Act. Therefore, the insertion of the proviso had a specific purpose; to conclude the proceedings against a retired employee not later than two years of his retirement.

Where a public official could impose liability on a retired employee if the power was exercised within a certain statutory timeframe and there was a delay in the exercise of such power on the part of a public official, no such liability could be imposed after the lapse of the statutory period..

The phrase not later than two years used in the proviso to section 21 of the Act passed for a negative phrase and gave an imperative effect. Such negative phrases or words were prohibitive in essence, and were ordinarily used as a legislative device to make a provision in a statute mandatory.

Finalization of the departmental proceedings not later than two years of the retirement of the employee under the proviso to section 21 of the Act was a mandatory provision and any proceedings after the said statutory period shall stand abated and any orders passed after the efflux of the said time period were void and had no legal effect. The Government must ensure that cases of retired employees were fast tracked so that they were concluded within the prescribed statutory timeframe allowing the retired employees to enjoy their retired life and the Government to save unnecessary expense and time in pursing matters against retired employees.

(c) Interpretation of statutes---

----Mandatory and directory provisions---Statutes regulating exercise of power by public officials---Principles to determine whether a provision in such a statute was directory or mandatory in nature.

As a general principle, a statute which regulated the manner in which public officials exercised the power vested in them was construed to be directory rather than mandatory, especially when neither private or public rights were injured or impaired thereby. But if the public interest or private rights called for the exercise of the power vested in a public official, the language used, though permissive and directory in form, was in fact peremptory or mandatory as a general rule. Where a public officer was directed by a statute to perform a duty within a specified time, the provision as to time were only directory. This general principle, however, did not apply where the phraseology of the provision, or the nature of the act to be performed, or the consequence of performing or failing to perform it within the prescribed timeframe was such that the prescription of timeframe was actually a limitation on the power of the public functionary. Or where a public functionary was empowered to create liability against a citizen only within the prescribed time, the performance of such a duty within the specified timeframe was mandatory.

Date of hearing: 26th November, 2020.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The substantial question of law of public importance in terms of Article 212(3) of the Constitution that arises in these petitions is whether the proviso to section 21 of the Punjab Employees Efficiency, Discipline and Accountability Act, 2006 ( Act ) is directory or mandatory? Under the said proviso departmental proceedings initiated against a retired employee shall be finalized not later than two years of his retirement.

2. In Civil Petition No.1554-L/2020, brief facts of the case are that the Respondent while working as Forest Guard was departmentally proceeded against under the Act by way of show cause notice dated 19.12.2009 and was awarded major penalty vide order dated 23.10.2012. During the course of the said inquiry the petitioner retired from service on 15.04.2010. The departmental proceedings initiated against the petitioner on 19.12.2009 continued and were finalized on 23.10.2012, more than two years after his retirement. Similar facts are involved in rest of the listed cases.

3. Proviso to section 21 of the Act provides as under:

Section 21. Proceedings under this Act - Subject to this Act, all proceedings initiated against the employees having retired or in service, shall be governed by the provisions of this Act and the rules made thereunder:

Provided that in case of retired employee, the proceedings so initiated against him shall be finalized not later than two years of his retirement.

B

In order to determine whether the aforesaid proviso is directory or mandatory, the duty of the court is to try to unravel the real intention of the legislature. The ultimate test is the intent of the legislature and not the language in which the intent is clothed. The object and purpose of enacting the provision provide a strong and clear indicator for ascertaining such intent of the legislature.1 The intention of the legislature must govern and this is to be ascertained not only from the phraseology of the provision but also by considering its nature, its object, and the consequences which would follow from construing it one way or the other.2 This exercise entails careful examination of the scheme of the Act in order to discover the real purpose and object of the Act. A provision in a statute is mandatory if the omission to follow it renders the proceedings to which it relates illegal and void, while a provision is directory if its observance is not necessary to the validity of the proceeding. One of the important test that must always be employed in order to determine whether a provision is mandatory or directory in character is to consider whether the non-compliance of a particular provision causes inconvenience or injustice and, if it does, the court would say that that provision must be complied with and that it is obligatory in its character.3 There are three fundamental tests, which are often applied with remarkable success in the determination of this question. They are based on considerations of the scope and object, sometimes called the scheme and purpose, of the enactment in question, on considerations of justice and balance of convenience and on a consideration of the nature of the particular provision, namely, whether it affects the performance of a public duty or relates to a right, privilege or power in the former case the enactment is generally directory, in the latter mandatory.4

4. Examining the scheme and object of the Act we notice that the preamble to the Act provides that the law has been promulgated with the object to improve the efficiency, discipline and accountability of employees in government and corporation service in order to achieve good governance. Further section 1(4)(iii) provides as follows:

Section 1. Short title, extent, commencement and application.- (1) This Act may be called the Punjab Employees Efficiency, Discipline and Accountability Act, 2006.

(4) It shall apply to-

(iii) retired employees of government and corporation service; provided that proceedings under this Act are initiated against them during their service or within one year after their retirement.

The above provision shows that the main purpose of Act is to enhance good governance in service matters and provide measures for improvement of efficiency, discipline and accountability of the employees. Employee5 is defined as a person who is in employment either in a Corporation or in the Government service. Employee (a person in service) is, therefore, the blue-eyed boy of the Act and the central focus of the law, which revolves around improving governance through improvement of efficiency, discipline and accountability of the serving employees. A retired employee, however, falls outside the focus and theme of the Act except a limited category of retired employees. The presence of a retired employee under the Act is recognized for the first time in the definition of the term accused6 under the Act, which provides for a person who is or has been an employee and against whom an action has been initiated under the Act. Retired employee is only recognized if there are disciplinary proceedings initiated against him and not otherwise. Section 1 (4) (iii) provides that the Act is applicable only to a retired employee against whom departmental proceedings have been initiated either while he was in service or within a period of one year after his retirement. Therefore, an employee who has retired for over an year and no departmental action has been initiated against him falls outside the mischief of the Act. Proviso to section 21 of the Act provides an upper time limit for finalizing the departmental proceedings initiated against a retired employee i.e., no later than two years from the date of his retirement. The scheme of the Act shows that a retired employee recognized by the Act has a restrictive meaning i.e., a person against whom departmental proceedings have been initiated and finalized within certain strict statutory timelines. First, those retired employees, against whom departmental proceedings have been initiated either in service or within one year of their retirement. Second, against whom departmental proceedings have been finalized within two years of their retirement. A retired employee falling outside these two timelines falls outside the mischief of the Act.

5. The aim of interpretation in law is to realize the purpose of the law. The objective purpose of the statute means the interests, values, objectives and policy that the law should realize. The focus of the Act is on the employees that are managing the affairs of the Government or the Corporation rather than those who have retired. Further, any long drawn departmental proceedings against a retired employee would be an unnecessary drain on the resources of the Government and would also distract the Government from its prime objective of regulating its employees. The scheme of the Act seems to supports the public policy that an employee who has served the Government all his life must enjoy his retirement in peace and must be spared from undergoing long drawn departmental proceedings during his retired life. It is only those employees against whom inquiry has been initiated prior to their retirement or within one year of their retirement that are relevant for the purposes of the Act. The Act further provides that any such departmental proceedings shall be finalized not later than two years of the retirement of the employee. The importance of the proviso can be gauged by supposing that there was no proviso to section 21. As a consequence there would be no statutory timeline for the conclusion of the departmental proceedings against a retired employee, as is the case with an (in service) employee under the Act. Therefore, the insertion of the proviso has a specific purpose; to conclude the proceedings against a retired employee not later than two years of his retirement.

6. On a more textual level, as a general principle, a statute which regulates the manner in which public officials exercise the power vested in them is construed to be directory rather than mandatory, especially when neither private or public rights are injured or impaired thereby. But if the public interest or private rights call for the exercise of the power vested in a public official, the language used, though permissive and directory in form, is in fact peremptory or mandatory as a general rule.7 According to Sutherland;8 where a public officer is directed by a statute to perform a duty within a specified time, the provision as to time are only directory. This general principle, however, does not apply where the phraseology of the provision, or the nature of the act to be performed, or the consequence of performing or failing to perform it within the prescribed timeframe is such that the prescription of timeframe is actually a limitation on the power of the public functionary. Or where a public functionary is empowered to create liability against a citizen only within the prescribed time, the performance of such a duty within the specified timeframe is mandatory.9 Where a public official can impose liability on a retired employee if the power is exercised within a certain statutory timeframe and there is a delay in the exercise of such power on the part of a public official, no such liability can be imposed after the lapse of the statutory period.

. At a more granular level, the effect of a qualifying proviso, according to the ordinary rules of construction, is to qualify something enacted in the preceding portion of the enactment.10 The word shall, used in the proviso, is commonly construed as mandatory. The phrase not later than two years in the proviso passes for a negative phrase and gives an imperative effect. Such negative phrases or words are prohibitive in essence, and are ordinarily used as a legislative device to make a provision in a statute mandatory. Therefore, negative words used in a provision that prescribes some statutory requirement makes, as a general rule, that requirement mandatory even if no penalty is prescribed for non-compliance of that requirement.11

8. The Guidebook12 for conducting inquiry, issued under the Act is to eliminate, as far as possible, chances of delay by removing bottlenecks in inquiry proceedings. According to the Guidebook the following points should be kept in mind while conducting proceeding under the Act;

(4) Points to be considered for proceeding under the PEEDA Act, 2006

(i) (xviii)

(xix) Inquiry against retired employees

(a) As per section 21 of the PEEDA Act, 2006, a retired employee can be proceeded under PEEDA Act, 2006 within one year of his retirement, provided that inquiry has already been initiated during his service under PEEDA Act 2006 and it should be finalized within two years of his retirement.

(b) ..

(c) on completion of two years from the date of retirement, the proceedings under the PEEDA Act, 2006 abate and no penalty can be imposed under PEEDA Act, 2006.

(emphasis supplied)

9. It is also important to highlight that closure of departmental proceedings after retirement of an employee under the Act is not a new concept and finds historical support and reference in Fundamental Rules (FR), the Civil Service Regulations (CSR), Punjab Civil Service Pension Rules, 1955 and Civil Establishment Code (ESTA CODE) in the following manner:

FR 54-A states:

54A. If a Government servant, who has been suspended pending inquiry into his conduct attains the age of superannuation before the completion of inquiry, the disciplinary proceedings against him shall abate and such government servant shall retire with full pensionary benefits and the period of suspension shall be treated as period spend on duty.

This Court in Muhammed Zaheer Khan13 held that the plain reading of F.R.54-A is clear that the disciplinary proceedings against an officer abate if the latter attains the age of superannuation. The Rule entitles such officer to retire with full pensionary benefits and period of suspension is bound to be treated as period spent on duty. It was held that the fundamental principle laid down in FR.54-A postulates that the case of the appellant cannot be remanded to the authority for holding de novo proceedings, after eleven years of his superannuation. In Muhammed Anwar Bajwa14, it was held that Rule 54-A shows that if a disciplinary action is initiated against the Government servant and the said action remains inconclusive during the course of his service and he retires on attaining the age of superannuation in the meanwhile, not only the un-concluded disciplinary action shall abate against such a Government servant but that he shall also be entitled to full pensionary benefits. In Munir Hussain Shah15, this Court held that time limit has also been fixed for such departmental proceedings inasmuch as no such inquiry can be held after one year of the retirement of a pensioner. Similarly, in Muhammed Akhtar,16 it was held that the disciplinary inquiry could not have been initiated after a lapse of one year of the retirement of the respondent.

10. The Civil Service Regulations (CSR) provide as under:-

351-A. The President reserves to himself the right to order the recovery from the pension of an officer who entered service on or after 23rd February, 1939 of any amount on account of losses found in judicial or departmental proceedings to have been caused to Government by the negligence or fraud of such officer during his service:

Provided that

(1) such departmental proceedings, if not instituted while the officer was on duty,-

(i) shall not be instituted save with sanction of the President;

(ii) shall be instituted before the officer's retirement from service or within a year from the date on which he was last on duty whichever is later;

(iii) shall be in respect of an event which took place not more than one year before the date on which the officer was last on duty and:

(iv) shall be conducted by such authority and in such places whether in Pakistan or elsewhere, as the President may direct;

(2) all such departmental proceedings shall be conducted, if the officer concerned so requests, in accordance with procedure applicable to departmental proceedings on which an order of dismissal from service may be made; and

(3) such judicial proceedings, if not instituted while the officer was on duty, shall have been instituted in accordance with sub-clauses (ii) and (iii) of clause (1).

351-B The Government may, within one year from the date of issue of Pension Payment Order, recover any of its dues from the pension granted to a civil servant, subject to the condition that no recovery shall be made from the pension without the personal order of the Head of the Ministry or Division or Head of the Department, declared as such under S.R.2(10) and included in Appendix No.14, Vol. II of the Compilation of the Fundamental Rules and Supplementary Rules, as the case may be.

417-A. If an officer, who has been suspended pending inquiry into his conduct, attains the age of superannuation before completion of the inquiry, the disciplinary proceedings against him shall abate and such officer shall retire with full pensionary benefits and the period of suspension shall be treated as period spent on duty.

11. Under Rule 1.8 (b) of the Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1955, Government reserves the right of recovery from the pension of Government pensioner on account of losses found in judicial or departmental proceedings to have been caused to Government by the negligence, or fraud of such Government pensioner during his service, provided that such departmental proceedings shall not be instituted after more than a year from the date of retirement of the Government pensioner. In Muhammed Said Khan17, the reason for the limitation of one year in clause (b) of Rule 1.8 of the Civil Services Pension Rules was that the Government reserved to itself the right to recover from the pension any sum which it had suffered by way of loss while the pensioner remained in service. It was held that this right could not have been available to the Government for all times to come. After the judgment in Muhammed Said Khan the following letter was issued by the Government:

No.SOR-I(S&GAD) 4-38/97

Dated the 10th January, 1998

Subject: WITHHOLDING / WITHDRAWAL OF PENSIONER ANY PART OF IT, FOR GRAVE MISCONDUCT DURING SERVICE

I am directed to refer to this Department s letter No.SORI(S&GAD)7-1/72 dated 23rd October, 1973, on the subject noted above and to say that in pursuance of Supreme Court s pronouncement in their decision of Government appeal titled the Government of N.W.F.P. versus Mr. Muhammad Saeed Khan and another vide PLD 1973-SC-514, though interpretation of rule 1.8 of Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules was issued vide circular letter referred to above, yet the departments are seeking interpretation time and again. The important provisions of the instructions under reference are reproduced below for facility of reference:

(a) Each of the clauses (a) and (b) of this rule is a self-contained and independent provision designed to cater for two different situations. Under clause (a), maintenance of Good Conduct is made an inseparable condition for the grant or continuance of pension to a government servant and the Govt. reserves to itself the plenary power to with-hold or withdraw a pension or any part thereof if the pensioner is convicted for serious crime or is found guilty of grave misconduct whether during or after completion of his service. However, clause (b) cannot be used to effect a penal recovery if there be a case of fraud or negligence during the service thought it may be made a ground for a finding that the service has not been thoroughly satisfactory.

(b) Clause (b) ibid empowers the Government to order recovery from the pension, of the whole or part of any pecuniary loss, caused to the Government if the pensioner is found in departmental or judicial proceedings, to have been guilty of grave misconduct or negligence during his service. Under clause (b) the Government reserves to itself the right to recover from the pension the amount of any pecuniary loss which it has suffered while the pensioner was in service. It is, however, to be noted that this power cannot be resorted to after efflux of one year from the date of retirement of the pensioner.

c) On general principles as also on the wording of rule 1.8(a), the Executive has the exclusive power to determine whether on the facts of the case the officer/official concerned was guilty of gross misconduct and this applies equally to the serving officers as well as to those who have retired but whose pensionary claims are yet to be settled.

(d) Except as a result of the inquiry contemplated under clause (a) the Government has no power under the rules to suspend the payment of whole or any part of the pension of a Government servant otherwise admissible, pending inquiry against him. It follows > that any order in that behalf in anticipation of the result of the inquiry, will be without any valid basis.

> 2. The above interpretation of rule 1.8 of the Pension Rules by the Supreme Court in PLD 1973 SC 514, may kindly be brought to the notices of all concerned for information and guidance so as to avoid unnecessary correspondence in the matter. (emphasis supplied)

12. Under the Civil Establishment Code (ESTACODE),18 the following instructions have been issued for quick disposal of disciplinary proceedings pending against Government Servants who are about to superannuate:

Sl. No. 31.619

It has come to the notice of government that inquiry proceedings against civil servants under the Government Servants (Efficiency and Discipline) Rules, 1973 (Sl.No.23) tend to be unduly protracted for various avoidable reasons causing hardships to the affected government servants on the one hand and defeating the purpose of speedy disposal of cases in others. This is obviously against dictates of justice.

2. The disposal of disciplinary proceeding assumes vital importance especially in cases against government servants who are about to attain the age of superannuation. It goes without saying that delay in disposal of such cases not only causes hardships to the affected persons but also puts the administration to unnecessary criticism.

3. It is, therefore, requested that disciplinary proceedings against government servants nearing the age of superannuation in future should be disposed of before they superannuate. All the agencies working under the administrative control of the Ministry concerned should be advised accordingly.

Sl. No. 31.720

Reference Estt. Division's O.M.No.12/2/88-R.3, dated the 3rd October, 1988 (Sl No.31.6) on the subject mentioned above, wherein all the Ministries/Divisions were requested that disciplinary proceedings against Government Servant nearing the age of superannuation should in future be disposed of before they superannuate. Despite this, instances have come to the notice of this Division wherein the disciplinary cases have been delayed to such an extent that these stood abated due to non-finalization thereof before the age of superannuation of the accused civil servants, which is not a happy state of affairs.

2. In order to guard against recurrence of such instances, it is once again requested that the instructions (Sl. No. 143) may please be brought to the notice of all concerned for strict compliance to ensure that the State's interests are fully protected and the civil servants really guilty of misdemeanor of any sort do not go unpunished due to the inefficiency and/or connivance of the departmental personnel in finalizing the Efficiency and Discipline cases before the accused's superannuation.

13. The legislative intent and the purposive interpretation of the Act read with the supportive material discussed above, it is clear that the finalization of the departmental proceedings not later than two years of the retirement of the employee under the proviso to section 21 of the Act is a mandatory provision and any proceedings after the said statutory period shall stand abated and any orders passed after the efflux of the above time period are void and have no legal effect.

14. In the instant cases, the departmental proceedings against the respondent have been finalized after a period of two years of his retirement, the departmental proceedings, therefore, have no legal consequence and the subsequent departmental orders are void and have no legal effect. For this reason we take no exception to the impugned judgments and are of the view that they do not warrant any interference. Leave is, therefore, declined and these petitions are dismissed. For future, the Government must ensure that cases of retired employees are fast tracked so that they are concluded within the aforesaid statutory timeframe allowing the retired employees to enjoy their retired life and the Government to save unnecessary expense and time in pursing matters against retired employees.

15. The abovementioned proviso does not apply in these cases, as the departmental proceedings were finalized within a period of two years from the date of retirement. Office shall separate these petitions and fix them for hearing in the next session to be decided on merit.

MWA/P-7/SC Order accordingly.

----S. 9(c)---Possession and transportation of 45 kilograms of charas---Reappraisal of evidence---Safe custody and transmission of samples of the narcotic from the warehouse to the chemical examiner not established---Held, that the letter of the Superintendent Preventive Service written to the Chemical Examiner stated that 43 sealed samples were being forwarded to the chemical examiner---Author of said letter was not produced as a witness---In the absence of the statement of the warehouse in-charge and the statement on behalf of the complainant (the official who recovered the narcotics),regarding the delivery of the samples of the narcotic drugs to the office of the chemical examiner, it could not be ascertained whether the narcotic drugs and the representative samples were deposited in the warehouse by the complainant; when and who collected the representative samples from the warehouse; and who delivered them by hand to the office of the Chemical Examiner---Such facts revealed that the chain of custody had been compromised and was no more safe and secure, therefore, reliance could not be placed on the Report of the Chemical Examiner to support conviction of the accused---Conviction and sentence recorded against the accused-lady were set aside in circumstances and she was acquitted of the charge---Appeal was allowed.

----Rr. 4, 5 & 6---Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXV of 1997), S. 9(c)---Possession of narcotics---Report of Chemical Examiner---Safe custody and transmission of samples of the narcotic from the police to the chemical examiner---Scope---Chain of custody or safe custody and safe transmission of narcotic drug began with seizure of the narcotic drug by the law enforcement officer, followed by separation of the representative samples of the seized narcotic drug, storage of the representative samples and the narcotic drug with the law enforcement agency and then dispatch of the representative samples of the narcotic drugs to the office of the chemical examiner for examination and testing---Such chain of custody must be safe and secure, because, the Report of the Chemical Examiner enjoyed critical importance under the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 and the chain of custody ensured that correct representative samples reached the office of the Chemical Examiner---Any break or gap in the chain of custody i.e., in the safe custody or safe transmission of the narcotic drug or its representative samples made the Report of the Chemical Examiner unsafe and unreliable for justifying conviction of the accused---Prosecution, therefore, had to establish that the chain of custody had been unbroken and was safe, secure and indisputable in order to be able to place reliance on the Report of the Chemical Examiner.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---During snap checking on 26.11.2014, Customs officers stopped a vehicle on the RCD Highway, Karachi loaded with three LCD TVs, two room heaters and one washing machine. The driver of the vehicle was Abdul Ghaffar (since acquitted) and the appellant was the only passenger in the vehicle. Upon thorough examination of the body frames of the three LCD TVs, two room heaters and one washing machine, 45 Kgs (gross) of charas was recovered hidden in the body frames of these items. The appellant along with co-accused were booked in FIR No.150 dated 27.11.2014, for an offence under section 9(c) of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 ("CNSA").

2. After regular trial, the appellant was convicted under section 9(c), CNSA and sentenced to imprisonment for life and to pay fine of Rupees One million or in default thereof to suffer simple imprisonment for five years, while benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C was also extended to the appellant. The co-accused Abdul Ghaffar was acquitted of the charge by the trial court being a taxi driver having no involvement in the matter. The appellant challenged her conviction and sentence before the Sindh High Court, where her appeal was dismissed and the conviction and sentence of the trial court was maintained. Leave was granted by this Court vide order dated 04.3.2020 for reappraisal of the entire evidence so as to ensure safe administration of criminal justice.

3. We have gone through the record of the case with the assistance of learned counsel for the parties. We have noticed that according to the statement of the complainant Muhammad Younus Sabir (PW-1), SPO, Customs Preventive, he recovered the narcotic drugs from the items mentioned above on 26.11.2014 and prepared the memo of recovery along with inventory (Ex-9/A & Ex-9/A-1) and deposited the same in the warehouse. Zulfiqar Ali (PW-3), PO, Customs Preventive, stated that SO Khalid was Incharge of the warehouse, however, the said incharge was not produced by the prosecution to confirm the safe custody of the narcotic drugs after its recovery on 26.11.2014. The Report of the Director Laboratories and Chemical Examiner (Ex-11A/1) reveals that the narcotic drugs were received by hand in the office on 28.11.2014 through ASO Muhammad Younas Sabir. No "ASO" Muhammad Younas Sabir was produced before the court. Considering it to be SPO Muhammed Younas Sabir, wrongly mentioned as ASO in the Report, even SPO Muhammed Younas Sabir, while appearing as PW-1 never stated that he delivered by-hand the narcotic drugs at the office of the Director Laboratories and Chemical Examiner. Infact he stated that:

> "we had sent 43 samples sent (sic) for chemical examiner with the letter of superintendent of customs."

The letter of the Superintendent Preventive Service dated 27-11-2014 (Ex 9/B) written to the Chemical Examiner states that 43 sealed samples are being forwarded to the chemical examiner. The author of this letter was not produced as a witness. In the absence of the statement of the warehouse in-charge and the statement on behalf of Muhammed Younas Sabir (PW-1) regarding the delivery of the samples of the narcotic drugs to the office of the chemical examiner, it cannot be ascertained whether the narcotic drugs and the representative samples were deposited in the warehouse by PW-1; when and who collected the representative samples from the warehouse; and who delivered them by hand to the office of the Chemical Examiner. The chain of custody or safe custody and safe transmission of narcotic drug begins with seizure of the narcotic drug by the law enforcement officer, followed by separation of the representative samples of the seized narcotic drug, storage of the representative samples and the narcotic drug with the law enforcement agency and then dispatch of the representative samples of the narcotic drugs to the office of the chemical examiner for examination and testing. This chain of custody must be safe and secure. This is because, the Report of the Chemical Examiner enjoys critical importance under CNSA and the chain of custody ensures that correct representative samples reach the office of the Chemical Examiner. Any break or gap in the chain of custody i.e., in the safe custody or safe transmission of the narcotic drug or its representative samples makes the Report of the Chemical Examiner unsafe and unreliable for justifying conviction of the accused. The prosecution, therefore, has to establish that the chain of custody has been unbroken and is safe, secure and indisputable in order to be able to place reliance on the Report of the Chemical Examiner.

4. The facts of the present case reveal that the chain of custody has been compromised and is no more safe and secure, therefore, reliance cannot be placed on the Report of the Chemical Examiner to support conviction of the appellant. See Imam Bakhsh1 and Ikramullah.2 For the above reasons we allow this appeal and set aside the conviction and sentence of the appellant. The appellant is directed to be released forthwith, if not required in any other case.

5. Foregoing are the reasons for the short order dated 06.1.2021, which is reproduced hereunder for convenience:-

> "For reasons to be recorded later, the instant criminal appeal is allowed. The conviction and sentence of appellant Mst. Sakina Ramzan is set aside. She is acquitted of the charge framed against her. She is behind the bars and is ordered to be released forthwith, if not required to be detained in any other case."

6. Before parting with the judgment we wish to place our appreciation on record for the pro bono assistance rendered by Mr. Hassan Mahmood Mandivala, Advocate representing the appellant on behalf of Legal Aid Committee for the Welfare of the Prisoners.

MWA/S-4/SC Appeal allowed.

----Ss. 22(4) & 22(5)---Reports of Government Analysts---Provincial Quality Control Board ---Discretion to allow or reject a request for re-testing---Scope---Question as to whether the Provincial Quality Control Board ("Board"), etc. enjoyed the "discretion" under S. 22(5) of the Drugs Act, 1976 ('the 1976 Act') to either allow or reject the request of the accused or the complainant for re-testing of the drug---Held, that other than the suo motu power enjoyed by the Board, etc. to send the drug for retesting, the Board, etc. also enjoyed the discretion to allow or disallow the request for re-testing by the accused or the complainant---Board, etc. enjoyed independent discretion to allow or disallow the request of the accused or the complainant for re-testing after considering the grounds against the Report and by passing a speaking order in such regard.

Perusal of sections 22(4) and 22(5) of the Drugs Act, 1976 ('the 1976 Act') showed that once the Report was received by the person, from whom the sample was taken (referred to as an accused in subsection (5), he could within ten days file, in writing, before the Inspector, or the Board, etc. where his case was pending, his intention to adduce evidence in contravention of the Report. This intention of adducing evidence in contravention of the Report actually was in the nature of a complaint against the Report specifying the grounds of contravention of the Report, on the basis of which, the person proposed to adduce evidence later on. Unless, subsection (5) was invoked, the complaint against the Report took its lawful course and the matter was finally concluded by the Board, etc. which had received such a complaint.

However, before the matter regarding the Report was concluded under subsection (4), subsection (5) of section 22 of the 1976 Act provided yet another avenue to the accused, as well as, the complainant. Once the complaint was filed against the Report by the accused within ten days as required by section 22(4), the Board or any other authority, before whom such a complaint against the Report was pending, could on its own motion or in its discretion on the request of the accused or the complainant may allow re-testing of the drug from the Federal Drug Laboratory, etc. Other than the suo motu power enjoyed by the Board, etc. to send the drug for retesting, the Board, etc. also enjoyed the discretion to allow or disallow the request for re-testing by the accused or the complainant. The request would be examined on the basis of the grounds already raised by the accused against the Report filed within ten days under section 22(4) of the 1976 Act. The said request, did not stand alone and must be preceded with a complaint under section 22(4) of the 1976 Act. There was no timeframe under the law for filing such a request but according to the scheme of the law such a request was to be made prior to the decision of the complaint filed by the accused against the Report under section 22(4). On the whole, the Board, etc. enjoyed independent discretion to allow or disallow the request of the accused or the complainant for re-testing after considering the grounds against the Report and by passing a speaking order in such regard.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question that requires determination by us revolves around the interpretation of section 22 subsections (4) and (5) of the Drugs Act, 1976 ("Act"). The question is whether the Provincial Quality Control Board ("Board"), etc. enjoys the "discretion" under section 22(5) of the Act to either allow or reject the request of the accused or the complainant for re-testing of the drug. The occasion of re-testing arises only when the drug has already been tested and the Report of the Government Analyst has been challenged within ten days1 before the Board, etc. by the person from whom the sample has been taken or the warrantor of the drug.

2. Learned Additional A.G. representing the petitioners submits that it is the discretion of the Board, etc. to allow or disallow such a request as has been clearly provided under section 22(5) of the Act. While on the other hand, learned counsel for the respondent companies argues that if the Report of the Government Analyst ("Report") is challenged by the accused or his warrantor within 10 days of the receipt of the said Report in terms of section 22(4) of the Act, the subsequent request by the accused for retesting of the drug from the Federal Drug Laboratory, etc. is a mere mechanical requirement and the Board, etc. has no discretion to disallow such a request for re-testing.

3. We have heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties and have examined section 22 subsections (4) and (5) of the Drugs Act, 1976 (Punjab Amendment), which are reproduced hereunder for ready reference:-

> "Section 22. Reports of Government Analysts.---(1) The Government Analyst to whom a sample of any drug has been submitted for test and analysis under subsection (3) of section 19 shall deliver to the Inspector submitting it a signed report in quadruplicate in the prescribed form and forward one copy thereof to the authority as may be prescribed.
>
> (4) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, any document purporting to be a report signed by a Government Analyst [or the Notified Drugs Laboratory] shall be admissible as evidence of the facts stated therein without formal proof and such evidence shall be conclusive unless the person from whom the sample was taken or the said warrantor has, within [ten days] of the receipt of a copy of the report notified in writing to the Inspector or [Provincial Quality Control Board or, as the case may be, the Central Licensing Board or the Registration Board or the Drug Court] before which any proceedings in respect of the sample are pending that he intends to adduce evidence in contravention of the report.
> (5) Where a person has, under subsection (4), notified his intention of adducing evidence in contravention of a [report of Government Analyst or of Notified Drugs Laboratory] [Provincial Quality Control Board or, as the case may be, the Central Licensing Board or the Registration Board or the Drug Court] may, of its own motion or in its discretion at the request either of the complainant or the accused, cause the sample of the drug lying with the Board concerned under sub-section (3) of section 19 to be sent for test or analysis to the Federal Drug Laboratory or any other laboratory specified for the purpose by the Federal Government [or the Provincial Government] which shall make the test or analysis and report in writing signed by, or under the authority of, the person for the time being Incharge of the Federal Drug Laboratory, or, as the case may be, such other laboratory, the result thereof and such report shall be conclusive evidence of the facts stated therein."

Perusal of the above provision shows that once the Report is received by the person, from whom the sample was taken (referred to as an accused in subsection (5), he can within ten days file, in writing, before the Inspector, or the Board, etc. where his case is pending, his intention to adduce evidence in contravention of the Report. This intention of adducing evidence in contravention of the Report actually is in the nature of a complaint against the Report specifying the grounds of contravention of the Report, on the basis of which, the person proposes to adduce evidence later on. Unless, subsection (5) is invoked, the complaint against the Report takes its lawful course and the matter is finally concluded by the Board, etc. which has received such a complaint.

4. However, before the matter regarding the Report is concluded under subsection (4), subsection (5) of section 22 provides yet another avenue to the accused, as well as, the complainant. Once the complaint is filed against the Report by the accused within ten days as required by section 22(4), the Board or any other authority, before whom such a complaint against the Report is pending, can on its own motion or in its discretion on the request of the accused or the complainant may allow re-testing of the drug from the Federal Drug Laboratory, etc. Other than the suo motu power enjoyed by the Board, etc. to send the drug for retesting, the Board, etc. also enjoys the discretion to allow or disallow the request for re-testing by the accused or the complainant. The request will be examined on the basis of the grounds already raised by the accused against the Report filed within ten days under section 22(4) of the Act. The said request, does not stand alone and must be preceded with a complaint under section 22(4) of the Act as discussed above. There is no timeframe under the law for filing such a request but according to the scheme of the law such a request is to be made prior to the decision of the complaint filed by the accused against the Report under section 22(4). On the whole, we are of the view that the Board, etc. enjoys independent discretion to allow or disallow the request of the accused or the complainant for re-testing after considering the grounds against the Report and by passing a speaking order in this regard.

5. The view expressed by the High Court that the Board, etc. does no enjoy any such discretion in the matter of re-testing the drug is not correct. We, therefore, set aside the impugned judgments and direct the Board, etc. or (where ever the matter is pending) to decide the request of the respondent accused, in accordance with law and in the light of this judgment, by passing a speaking order within a month from the receipt of this order.

6. For the above reasons, the impugned orders passed by the High Court are set aside and these petitions are converted into appeals and allowed in the above terms.

MWA/P-4/SC Petition allowed.

Criminal Petition 742-L of 2019 and Criminal Petition 629-L of 2019, decided on 21st January, 2021. (Against the judgment of Lahore High Court, Multan Bench, dated 13.03.2019, passed in Crl. A. No.908/2017)

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----Ss. 172(1) & 172(2)---Police diary, contents of---Purpose and admissibility.

Section 172(1), Cr.P.C. mandates every Police Officer making investigation of a case to maintain a diary (commonly known as 'police dairy' or 'case dairy') of proceedings conducted by him in the course of that investigation, by requiring him to enter in that dairy: (i) the time at which any information relating to the offence under investigation reaches him on a particular day; (ii) the time at which he begins and closes his investigation on a particular day; (iii) the place or places visited by him on a particular day, concerning the investigation of the case; and (iv) a statement of the circumstances ascertained on a particular day through his investigation. The object to require recording of the said details in the police dairy appears to be to enable the courts to check the method and manner of investigation undertaken by the investigating officer. Until the honesty, the capacity, the discretion and the judgment of the Police can be thoroughly trusted, it is necessary for the protection of the public against criminals, for the vindication of the law, and for the protection of those who are charged with having committed a criminal offence that the Magistrate or Judge before whom the case is for inquiry or for trial should have the means of ascertaining what was the information (true, false, or misleading) which was obtained from day to day by the Police Officer who was investigating the case, and what were the lines of investigation upon which such Police Officer acted. A properly kept police diary would afford such information, and such information would enable the Magistrate or Judge to determine whether persons referred to in the police diary, but not sent up as witnesses by the Police, should be summoned to give evidence in the interests of the prosecution or of the accused. It is the duty of the Magistrate or of the Judge before whom a criminal case is, to ascertain the truth and to decide accordingly. It is axiomatic that a Police Officer who is investigating a criminal case, receives all sorts of information: true, false or misleading. The formulation of opinion on the basis of investigation by the Police Officer can also range from correct and fair opinion to a premature, biased, influenced or incorrect opinion. It is to check these infirmities that may creep into police investigation that it is essential that the Magistrate or the Judge, who is to hold the scales of justice evenly between the State and the accused, should have some means of ascertaining the quality of information obtained by the Police Officer during the course of investigation every day.

Queen v. Mannu, (1897) ILR 19 All 390 ref.

Section 172(2), Cr.P.C. empowers a Criminal Court to send for the police diaries of a case under inquiry or trial in that Court and permits use of such diaries to aid it in such inquiry or trial, but the provisions thereof expressly prohibit the use of such dairies as evidence in the case. The expression "to aid it in such inquiry or trial" indicates that it can be used by the Court for the purpose of enabling itself to have a better understanding of the evidence brought on the record of the case by the prosecution. Inspection of the police diaries can reveal sources of further inquiry, viz, the pointation of some important witnesses that the court can summon, or how the evidence produced was collected to better understand the links between the evidence on the record. The Court can thus use the police dairies in the course of inquiry or trial for resolving obscurities in evidence through questioning the relevant witnesses or for bringing relevant facts on record to secure the ends of justice through legally admissible evidence, e.g., by summoning as witness those persons who are though referred to in the police diary but not sent up as witnesses by the investigating officer and whose testimony appears to be relevant in the inquiry or trial, or by calling production of some document that appears to be relevant to the matter under inquiry or trial. The Court, however, cannot take the facts and statements recorded in police dairies as material or evidence for reaching a finding of fact: these diaries by themselves cannot be used either as substantive or corroborative evidence. The police diary is itself not the evidence and therefore inadmissible for having no evidentiary value; it is, however, just a source to help understand the undiscovered or misunderstood aspects of the evidence existing on the record, if any, and introduce new dimensions to the case, leading to discovery and production of new evidence, if required to meet the ends of justice. Whatever the court infers from a police diary must translate into admissible evidence in accordance with law, and the court cannot simply rely on, and adjudicate upon the charge on the basis of, statements made in the police dairy.

(b) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----Ss. 4(1)(l), 169, 170, 173(3), 204(1) & Chapt. XIV---Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984), Art. 59---Investigating Officer, opinion of---Admissibility in evidence.

The opinion of a Police Officer who has investigated the case as to the guilt or innocence of an accused person is not a relevant fact, and is therefore not admissible, under the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984; as he is not an "expert" within the meaning of that term as used in Article 59 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984. Even the Criminal Procedure Code (Cr.P.C.) does not authorize him to form such an opinion. To determine guilt or innocence of an accused person alleged to be involved in the commission of an offence is a judicial function that can only be performed by a court of law. This judicial function cannot be delegated to the Police Officer investigating the case. The Police Officers are empowered under the provisions of Chapter XIV of the Cr.P.C., only to investigate the non-cognizable offence with the order of a Magistrate and the cognizable offence without such order. This power of investigation, in no way, includes the power to determine guilt or innocence of the accused persons. An investigation, as defined in section 4(1)(l) of the Cr.P.C., includes all proceedings under the Cr.P.C. for the collection of evidence conducted by a Police Officer or by any other person authorized by a Magistrate. This definition makes it clear that the assignment of a Police Officer conducting an investigation is limited to the collection of evidence, and the evidence when collected has to be placed by him before the competent court of law. Only the court has the power and duty to form an opinion about the guilt or innocence of an accused person and to adjudicate accordingly on the basis of evidence produced before it. An opinion formed by the investigating officer as to the non-existence or existence of sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the forwarding of an accused person to a Magistrate under sections 169 and 170 of the Cr.P.C. does not tantamount to opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused person. And despite such opinion of the investigating officer, the final determination even as to the existence or non-existence of sufficient ground for further proceeding against the accused person is to be made by the Magistrate under sections 173(3) and 204(1) of the Cr.P.C. on examining the material available on record, and not on the basis of that opinion of the investigating officer.

JUDGMENT

Criminal Petition No.742-L of 2019:-

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Three alleged assailants, Muhammad Asif, Muhammad Idrees and Muhammad Saleem, were booked in FIR No.263/2015 dated 12.08.2015 for committing the murder of Saif Ullah, under sections 302, 109 and 34, P.P.C. Later on, the name of Rasheed Ahmed was also added as having abetted the crime, hence these four accused were sent up for trial. Rasheed Ahmed was acquitted by the trial court, Muhammad Asif was declared a proclaimed offender (PO); however, Muhammad Saleem and Muhammad Idrees were convicted under section 302(b), P.P.C. and sentenced to imprisonment for life and directed to pay compensation of Rs.100,000/- each under section 544-A, Cr.P.C. to the legal heirs of deceased and in case of default to undergo six months simple imprisonment. The benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. was also extended to the accused. On appeal before the High Court by Muhammad Saleem and Muhammad Idrees, the High Court vide impugned judgment dated 13.03.2019 acquitted Muhammad Saleem and maintained the conviction and sentence of Muhammad Idrees (Petitioner in Crl. P. No.742-L of 2019).

2. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the record of the case with their able assistance. While going through the impugned judgment of the Lahore High Court we have noticed that it has placed reliance on the contents of the police diary and the opinion of the investigating Police Officer while deciding upon the guilt of the accused. The relevant portions of the High Court judgment are reproduced hereunder:

> Para 13:---I have gone through the police file for my moral satisfaction in order to sift the grain from the chaff, have reached the conclusion of the case and found that the appellant Muhammed Saleem has been implicated in this case falsely due to a trend in our society of implicating all the near and dear of the actual culprit. (emphasis supplied)
> Para 15.---He [Muhammed Idress] was found guilty by the investigating officer to be fully connected with the commission of offence. Although the opinion of the police is inadmissible > in evidence, however, under Police Rules, it is duty of the police to found [sic] out the truth while investigate the matter, therefore, the conclusion of the investigating officer cannot be discarded slightly [sic] because he is the person who while discharging his official obligations, has the opportunity of inquiring having the first visual touch not only with the place of the occurrence but also had an opportunity of inquiring/questioning the persons available to him during the course of investigation for drawing his inference from their statements, their body language and his own observations which are made by him on the strength of his efforts for tracing the criminals.

Therefore, before examining the merits of the case, it would be useful to discuss the scope and extent of section 172, Cr.P.C, especially, the meaning of phrase, "and may use such diaries, not as evidence in the case, but to aid it in such inquiry or trial."

Police diary, its purpose and admissibility

3. Section 172(1), Cr.P.C. mandates every Police Officer making investigation of a case to maintain a diary (commonly known as 'police dairy' or 'case dairy') of proceedings conducted by him in the course of that investigation, by requiring him to enter in that dairy: (i) the time at which any information relating to the offence under investigation reaches him on a particular day; (ii) the time at which he begins and closes his investigation on a particular day; (iii) the place or places visited by him on a particular day, concerning the investigation of the case; and (iv) a statement of the circumstances ascertained on a particular day through his investigation. The object to require recording of the said details in the police dairy appears to be to enable the courts to check the method and manner of investigation undertaken by the investigating officer. Until the honesty, the capacity, the discretion and the judgment of the Police can be thoroughly trusted, it is necessary for the protection of the public against criminals, for the vindication of the law, and for the protection of those who are charged with having committed a criminal offence that the Magistrate or Judge before whom the case is for inquiry or for trial should have the means of ascertaining what was the information (true, false, or misleading) which was obtained from day to day by the Police Officer who was investigating the case, and what were the lines of investigation upon which such Police Officer acted. A properly kept police diary would afford such information, and such information would enable the Magistrate or Judge to determine whether persons referred to in the police diary, but not sent up as witnesses by the Police, should be summoned to give evidence in the interests of the prosecution or of the accused. It is important to remember that it is the duty of the Magistrate or of the Judge before whom a criminal case is, to ascertain the truth and to decide accordingly. It is axiomatic that a Police Officer who is investigating a criminal case, receives all sorts of information: true, false or misleading. The formulation of opinion on the basis of investigation by the Police Officer can also range from correct and fair opinion to a premature, biased, influenced or incorrect opinion. It is to check these infirmities that may creep into police investigation that it is essential that the Magistrate or the Judge, who is to hold the scales of justice evenly between the State and the accused, should have some means of ascertaining the quality of information obtained by the Police Officer during the course of investigation every day.[1]

4. Section 172(2), Cr.P.C. empowers a Criminal Court to send for the police diaries of a case under inquiry or trial in that Court and permits use of such diaries to aid it in such inquiry or trial, but the provisions thereof expressly prohibit the use of such dairies as evidence in the case. The expression "to aid it in such inquiry or trial" indicates that it can be used by the Court for the purpose of enabling itself to have a better understanding of the evidence brought on the record of the case by the prosecution. Inspection of the police diaries can reveal sources of further inquiry, viz, the pointation of some important witnesses that the court can summon, or how the evidence produced was collected to better understand the links between the evidence on the record. The Court can thus use the police dairies in the course of inquiry or trial for resolving obscurities in evidence through questioning the relevant witnesses or for bringing relevant facts on record to secure the ends of justice through legally admissible evidence, e.g., by summoning as witness those persons who are though referred to in the police diary but not sent up as witnesses by the investigating officer and whose testimony appears to be relevant in the inquiry or trial, or by calling production of some document that appears to be relevant to the matter under inquiry or trial. The Court, however, cannot take the facts and statements recorded in police dairies as material or evidence for reaching a finding of fact: these diaries by themselves cannot be used either as substantive or corroborative evidence.[2] It is important to underline that the police diary is itself not the evidence and therefore inadmissible for having no evidentiary value; it is, however, just a source to help understand the undiscovered or misunderstood aspects of the evidence existing on the record, if any, and introduce new dimensions to the case, leading to discovery and production of new evidence, if required to meet the ends of justice. Whatever the court infers from a police diary must translate into admissible evidence in accordance with law, and the court cannot simply rely on, and adjudicate upon the charge on the basis of, statements made in the police dairy. Therefore, reference by the High Court to the police file for reaching the conclusion that the accused Muhammed Saleem has been implicated in this case falsely was legally invalid and uncalled for.

Opinion of the investigating officer - not admissible

5. The opinion of a Police Officer who has investigated the case as to the guilt or innocence of an accused person is not a relevant fact, and is therefore not admissible, under the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984; as he is not an "expert" within the meaning of that term as used in Article 59 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984. Even the Criminal Procedure Code (Cr.P.C) does not authorize him to form such an opinion. To determine guilt or innocence of an accused person alleged to be involved in the commission of an offence is a judicial function that can only be performed by a court of law. This judicial function cannot be delegated to the Police Officer investigating the case. The Police Officers are empowered under the provisions of Chapter XIV of the Cr.P.C, only to investigate the non-cognizable offence with the order of a Magistrate and the cognizable offence without such order. This power of investigation, in no way, includes the power to determine guilt or innocence of the accused persons. An investigation, as defined in section 4(1)(l) of the Cr.P.C., includes all proceedings under the Cr.P.C. for the collection of evidence conducted by a Police Officer or by any other person authorized by a Magistrate. This definition makes it clear that the assignment of a Police Officer conducting an investigation is limited to the collection of evidence, and the evidence when collected has to be placed by him before the competent court of law. Only the court has the power and duty to form an opinion about the guilt or innocence of an accused person and to adjudicate accordingly on the basis of evidence produced before it. An opinion formed by the investigating officer as to the non-existence or existence of sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the forwarding of an accused person to a Magistrate under sections 169 and 170 of the Cr.P.C does not tantamount to opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused person. And despite such opinion of the investigating officer, the final determination even as to the existence or non-existence of sufficient ground for further proceeding against the accused person is to be made by the Magistrate under sections 173(3) and 204(1) of the Cr.P.C. on examining the material available on record, and not on the basis of that opinion of the investigating officer.[3] Therefore, the reference to and reliance on the opinion of the investigating officer by the High Court in its judgment was also legally untenable.

Merits of the case

6. Coming back to the merits of the instant case, we have noticed that according to the crime report and the ocular account of eye-witnesses (PW-9) and (PW-10), the complainant party immediately took Saif Ullah (deceased), who was seriously injured to DHQ Layyah, where he passed away and later on his dead body was brought to the THQ Hospital, Fateh Pur. The statement of Dr. Umair Gul (DW-1), which states that immediately after the incident the deceased was brought to the THQ Hospital, Fatehpur and examined by him. He stated that while realizing the seriousness of the injuries, he was referred to the DHQ Hospital Layyah and before reaching the said Hospital the deceased passed away around 06:30 p.m. The time given in the postmortem also confirms the statement of (DW-1). The statement of Doctor Umair Gul (DW-1), an independent witness, shakes the credibility of the two eye-witnesses (PW-9) and (PW-10) leading to the conclusion that they were not present at the scene of the crime. We further note that the ocular account of (PW-9) and (PW-10) has been disbelieved by the High Court, which we find was rightly disbelieved, against Muhammad Saleem who was alleged to have played a similar role in the occurrence, and he stands acquitted. Therefore, the same evidence cannot be relied upon to convict Muhammad Idrees, unless there is an independent corroboration of it to the extent of his involvement in commission of the offence. Recovery being inconsequential there is no corroborative evidence to distinguish the case of the petitioner from that of the acquitted accused. The ocular account and the contents of the crime report are inconsistent with the medical evidence on the record. According to the case set up by the prosecution through ocular account, six fire shots were made on the two thighs of the deceased, three on the left thigh and three on the right thigh; however, according to the medical evidence, the right thigh has three entry wounds and one exit wound, while the left thigh has only two fire wounds. In the above facts and circumstances of the case, we are of the view that the prosecution has failed to establish its case against the petitioner beyond reasonable doubt. Hence, this petition is converted into appeal and allowed. Resultantly, the conviction and sentence of the petitioner Muhammad Idrees is set aside. He is acquitted of the charge and shall be released forthwith unless required to be detained in some other case.

Criminal Petition No.629-L of 2019:-

7. Through this petition, the complainant has challenged the acquittal of Muhammad Saleem. For the reasons given above, the prosecution has failed to establish its case beyond reasonable doubt. Therefore, this petition is dismissed and leave refused.

C.P. No. 2717-L of 2015, decided on 23rd December, 2020.

(Against the order of Federal Service Tribunal dated 14.09.2015, passed in MP No. 23/2015 in Appeal No. 99(L)CE/2004)

(a) Service Tribunals Act (LXX of 1973)---

----S. 4---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 4, 10, 14, 23 & 24---Appeal filed by a civil servant in the Federal Service Tribunal ("Tribunal")---Question as to whether such an appeal would abate on death of civil servant or his legal heirs could pursue the same---Held, that abatement of proceedings on the death of a civil servant, in a case, where the cause of action carried a survivable interest would unduly deprive the deceased civil servant, as well as, his legal heirs of their constitutional rights to livelihood, property, dignity and fair trial---Other than pecuniary and pensionary benefits that inured to the benefit of the legal heirs (of a civil servant), the right to restore one's reputation was also a survivable right and flowed down to the legal heirs to pursue and take to its logical conclusion.

Service disputes were not always attached merely with the person of a civil servant as an individual but more often than not with some benefits which could potentially be enjoyed by the successors of the civil servant in accordance with law which were contingent on the adjudication of the controversy.

The question whether after the death of the civil servant proceedings would abate would primarily depend on the nature of cause of action and the relief claimed in the peculiar facts of each case. Service benefits may be enjoyed by the successors of the deceased civil servant. Some of those were inheritable which formed part of the estate of the deceased while others were grants to be distributed among his family members according to law. Such a claim did not extinguish with the death of civil servant. Letting the claim lapse on the basis of an ultra textualist interpretation of the Service Tribunals Act, 1973 would be denying the heirs the right to seek adjudication on merits.
