41. In any event, as already discussed above, during the hearing of Const. P. No. 17 of 2019, Mrs. Isa made an oral statement on 18.06.2020 through video link that presented her version of the sources of funds used for purchasing the London Properties. She was informed at the outset that her statement will be recorded. She displayed before the camera documents that allegedly explained her sources of funding the London Properties. The Court allowed her to address the Bench for roughly 30 minutes but declined to consider her plea and documents on the ground that jurisdiction to ascertain the facts about the funds used for acquiring the London Properties lay with two fora in her case, namely, FBR (in her capacity as a taxpayer) and SJC (as a witness) both of which were available to her to do. Her statement clearly reflected her knowledge of the crucial issue, namely, her means for acquiring the London Properties and her plea on the subject i.e., her independent means for purchasing the same and her willingness to substantiate this claim. After hearing her, the Court decided to refer Mrs. Isa to a competent forum, the FBR, to explain the nature and source of the funds utilised for buying the London Properties. By following this process, the essential ingredients of the right to be heard, namely, prior notice of the subject-matter and opportunity of hearing to articulate her plea, were complied with [ref: Ali Muhammad v. State (PLD 2010 SC 623) at para 11 and Michael Francis Hamilton v. Peter Charles Forrest ([1981] AC 1038) at pg.1045]. As a result, the due process requirements of Article 10A of the Constitution were fulfilled.

Malice in Fact

42. The learned petitioner argued that the finding recorded in the Detailed Reasons dated 23.10.2020 that the respondents were not guilty of malice in fact was an error apparent on the face of the record. He submitted that the filing of the review petitions against the Dharna Judgment, the leaking of the Reference to the public, his vilification at the hands of the respondents and, subsequent to the Short Order, the temporary appointment of the Chairman FBR on 04.07.2020 for a period of 3 months (or till the posting/ appointment of a regular incumbent) [refer to pg.23 of C.R.P. No.296 of 2020] and the selection of Mr. Zulfiqar Ahmad as the relevant CIR, Islamabad all pointed to the irresistible conclusion that the entire exercise against him was motivated by malice in fact.

43. Since the learned petitioner has raised several allegations to justify his plea, these are dealt with separately. The temporary appointment of the Chairman FBR and the selection of Mr. Zulfiqar Ahmad as CIR to scrutinise Mrs. Isa's record for ascertaining the source of funding of the London Properties are events that occurred subsequent to the Short Order dated 19.06.2020. These developments are independent of our Short Order and therefore outside the ambit of review jurisdiction. It is well-settled that in review proceedings the Court can examine only those events which existed at the time when the order was passed. In this regard, reliance is placed on a decision of the Privy Council in Rajah Kotagiri Venkata Subbamma Rao v. Rajah Vellanki Venkateama Rao [(1900) LR 27 IA 197]:

"10. ...In the opinion of their Lordships, the ground of amendment must at any rate be something which existed at the date of the decree, and the section does not authorize the review of a decree which was right when it was made on the ground of the happening of some subsequent event..."

This view was affirmed by the Indian Supreme Court in State of W.B. v. Kamal Sengupta [(2008) 8 SCC 612] at para 17. Therefore, both the executive acts of replacing Chairman FBR and choosing Mr. Zulfiqar Ahmad as CIR, Islamabad are irrelevant for indicating the malice in fact of the respondents in filing the Reference.

44. Having said that, even if we ignore the aforenoted defect, the plea raised by the learned petitioner, that the changes in the personnel of the FBR were carried out to continue the persecution of the learned petitioner and his family, is still liable to fail because it is based on unfounded claims. The learned petitioner has alleged that para 9 of the Short Order does not require the contents of the Report of the Chairman FBR to be based on the findings recorded in the CIR's Assessment Order. This provides the former with the opportunity to manipulate his Report to the detriment of the learned petitioner. It appears, however, that the learned petitioner has ignored the express direction in para 9 of the Short Order that the Chairman FBR should append with his report the entire record of the proceedings conducted before the CIR, Islamabad for submission to the Secretary of SJC. Therefore, any unsubstantiated or biased finding noted in the Report would be easily verifiable from the record. Likewise, para 11 of the Short Order preserves Mrs. Isa's rights of appeal under the Ordinance providing her the full opportunity of challenging the alleged partiality of Mr. Zulfiqar Ahmad, CIR, if she so wished, before the relevant appellate fora. In such circumstances these particular allegations of malice in fact are completely fictional, without merit and of no relevance for reviewing the Majority Judgment (especially, as discussed later in the judgment, since the learned petitioner himself after getting these documents summoned in Court objected to their perusal).

45. Insofar as the other allegations of malice are concerned, it may be noticed that the same have been thoroughly examined in the Detailed Reasons dated 23.10.2020. Reference is made to paras 53-55 thereof which discuss the effect of the Dharna Judgment and paras 59-61 which are concerned with the leaking of the Reference. Agitating points that have already been answered in the Majority Judgment amounts to an appeal/re-hearing of the issues involved. This is specifically prohibited in review jurisdiction [noted in para16(v)]. Consequently, these contentions of the learned petitioner also fail the test of error apparent on the face of the record.

C. Arguments of Counsel on Phase II Not Heard

46. Lastly, learned petitioner objected to the Court passing the Short Order dated 19.06.2020 and the Detailed Reasons dated 23.10.2020 without hearing his counsel on phase II of the arguments, namely, the allegation about the mala fides of SJC. Learned petitioner stated that in his Constitution Petition he had framed 55 questions of law, out of which 32 were focused on the conduct of SJC. Therefore, he submitted that by ignoring the arguments on this crucial aspect of the case, particularly when learned counsel had specifically reserved his right to argue on phase II, a factually and legally incorrect judgment had been delivered. The learned petitioner placed reliance on certain submissions made by Mr. Munir A. Malik, Sr. ASC, during the hearings of the Constitution Petition inter alia on 17.06.2020 and 18.06.2020 (loose copies of the transcripts were filed during the hearings of the review petitions) to show that learned counsel intended to argue on phase II.

47. Learned petitioner maintained that his counsel's statements confirm that the latter had in no way given up his right to argue on phase II. The point urged by the learned petitioner is factually correct but it gives an incomplete account. The hearing of 19.06.2020 contains the outcome of the learned counsel's stance:

"19 June 2020

Mr. Munir A. Malik: If I recall from the Iftikhar Chaudhry case, the case was heard at length for days on what I call both phase 1 and phase 2 of the proceeding. Extensive arguments were made on phase 2 as well. In its infinite wisdom the Supreme Court recorded finding only on phase 1 while it heard arguments on the mala fides of phase 2.

Justice Umar Ata Bandial: You are talking about the attribution of mala fide to the Supreme Judicial Council.

Mr. Munir A. Malik: Yes.

Justice Umar Ata Bandial: Do you you want to do that today?

Mr. Munir A. Malik: May I make a submission?

Justice Umar Ata Bandial: No, no but we would we would like that clarified sir.

Justice Umar Ata Bandial: Because there are certain red lines I have.

Mr. Munir A. Malik: I spoke of the principle of institutional harmony. It was out of respect for this principle that I had proposed to your Lordships that I will take the piecemeal approach and only address arguments on phase 1 but during the course of argument your Lordship, Justice Bandial had observed that your Lordships had invited me to address on the Show Cause Notice but I had declined. Most respectfully sir I had not declined. I had only sought a postponement. I am hoping that it will not be necessary for me to go into phase 2. I am hoping so I am in line with my earlier proposal confining myself to arguments on phase 1.

Justice Umar Ata Bandial: I think that's a good idea, good idea.

Mr. Munir A. Malik: If I prevail, if I am able to persuade your Lordships then I would rather rest my case there."

(emphasis supplied)

48. This discourse shows that two hurdles prevented learned counsel from arguing phase II:

i. The legal bar contained in Article 211 of the Constitution that had to be crossed before any finding could be given on phase II (this is perhaps why the three learned Minority Judges also did not touch upon phase II in their opinions); and

ii. Learned counsel's own desire to accord due respect to the principle of institutional harmony.

Additionally, learned counsel submitted that if he succeeded in persuading the Bench to pass a favourable order, he would not touch upon phase II. Thus, in effect learned counsel purported to make submissions before the Bench conditionally depending on the outcome of the case. In the absence of either a preliminary issue being framed in this regard or an order by the Court allowing the suggested format, such a presumptuous strategy had no foundation because it was transactional in its purport. The expectation of learned counsel was therefore fanciful. Nevertheless, this was the course adopted by Mr. Munir A. Malik, Sr. ASC on 19.06.2020. Having made the decision to not argue phase II, learned counsel abandoned the same. Consequently, learned petitioner cannot now plead that his counsel was not heard on phase II.

D. Status of SJC

49. One of the main points canvassed by Mr. Hamid Khan, Sr. ASC, during arguments was that once the Reference was quashed by the Short Order dated 19.06.2020 the SJC had become functus officio and could not proceed further with the matter. According to him, for the SJC to be able to consider the Report of the Chairman FBR it would need to be constituted in terms of Article 209(2) of the Constitution (which details the composition of the SJC) . Implicit in the submission is the assumption that SJC is not a permanent body; rather it is a transitory one. However, this view reflects a misunderstanding of the function of the SJC and the scheme of Article 209.

50. The SJC first came into existence by virtue of Article 128(2) of the 1962 Constitution. Prior thereto, Judges of the Supreme Court could only be removed on an address of the National Assembly [Article 151(1) of the 1956 Constitution]. The rationale for creating this autonomous body was to ensure judicial accountability but away from the reach of the Government (ref: Assembly Debates, National Assembly of Pakistan, 07.04.1973) . The incumbent Constitution has retained the SJC (Article 209). As already mentioned above, the composition of SJC has been fixed in Article 209(2) which reads as follows:

"209. Supreme Judicial Council.

(2) The Council shall consist of-

(a) the Chief Justice of Pakistan;

(b) the two next most senior Judges of the Supreme Court; and

(c) the two most senior Chief Justices of High Courts.

Explanation---For the purpose of this clause, the inter se seniority of the Chief Justices of the High Courts shall be determined with reference to their dates of appointment as Chief Justice otherwise than as acting Chief Justice, and in case the dates of such appointment are the same, with reference to their dates of appointment as Judges of any of the High Courts."

Similarly, Article 209(3) identifies the course of action that has to be adopted if any member of the SJC is unable to perform his/her functions because he/she is the subject-matter of a complaint, is un-well or absent for any other reason. Clearly then, Article 209 caters for every contingency that can arise in relation to the composition of the SJC. Additionally, the SJC works continuously in the performance of its duties and functions. This includes its substantive duty of hearing and deciding actionable information received against Judges and its preliminary duty of processing and collecting material for evaluating the cognisability of an information. It also has the responsibility of updating judicial standards of conduct by amending the CoC. Indeed, Parliament (since 1962) has not found it necessary to delegate to any authority the power to constitute the SJC on a case-to-case basis because the SJC already stands constituted as a permanent body empowered to perform its substantive duties, including matters ancillary thereto.

51. Additionally, when the Constitution intends any of its provisions to be immediately operational '[so that] the right which it grants may be enjoyed and protected, or the duty which it imposes may be enforced without the aid of a legislative enactment' such provisions are termed self-executory [ref: Hakim Khan v. Government of Pakistan (PLD 1992 SC 595) at para 16]. The test to determine whether a Constitutional provision is self-executing was also explained in the same case:

"16. ...The question whether a Constitutional provision is self-executing is always one of intention, and to determine intent, the general rule is that Courts will consider the language used, the objects to be accomplished by the provision, and surrounding circumstances. Extrinsic matters may be resorted to where the language of the Constitution itself is ambiguous."

(emphasis supplied)

Having regard to the level of detail with which Article 209 is drafted,the object that it sets out to achieve, namely, judicial accountability and the manner and circumstances in which the SJC has been functioning since its inception in 1962, it is evident that in respect of the SJC's formation Article 209 is self-executory giving the body a permanent status.

52. Insofar as the argument of functus officio is concerned, it first needs to be examined what this phrase entails. Black's Law Dictionary (10th Edn) defines this term as follows:

"Pg.787: [Latin "having performed his or her office"]... (Of an officer or official body) without further authority or legal competence because the duties and functions of the original commission have been fully accomplished."

(emphasis supplied)

Similarly, Jowitt's Dictionary of English Law (5th Edn) states:

"An expression applied to a judge, magistrate or arbitrator who has given a decision or made an order or award so that his authority is exhausted..."

(emphasis supplied)

Likewise, Stroud's Judicial Dictionary (10th Edn) explains functus officio to mean:

"Functus officio means no more than that a judicial, ministerial or administrative actor has performed a function in circumstances where there is no power to revoke or modify it..."

(emphasis supplied)

53. What becomes clear from these definitions is that a body (or an authorised person) only becomes functus officio once it has passed an order or made a decision which is final so that no power is left with the said body to take any further action. This was confirmed in Iqbal Pervaiz v. Harsan (2018 SCMR 359):

> "8. ...Once a case is finally decided, the Court becomes functus officio. The only provision which allows to make change in the final order is the provision of review, scope of which is very limited i.e. to correct an error that is floating on the face of the record..."

However, in the present case the SJC never issued a final decision regarding the learned petitioner's alleged misconduct. Prior to any verdict of the SJC the learned petitioner filed a Constitution Petition before this Court challenging the Reference pending in the SJC. The fact that by our Short Order dated 19.06.2020 the Reference was quashed and its proceedings in the SJC were abated simply means that the SJC cannot proceed further in the Reference and not that it has become functus officio. The Short Order also did not destroy the admitted information. Instead, the same was specifically preserved and forwarded by the Court to the FBR for verification. Any contrary interpretation of the directions given in the Short Order is erroneous. A summary of these directions is set out below:

i. The admitted information was preserved;

ii. The said information was referred to the FBR for verification;

iii. The subsequent Assessment Order of the CIR and its record together with the Report of the Chairman FBR were to be forwarded to the SJC as 'information' under Article 209 of the Constitution; and

iv. It was left to the discretion of the SJC to either proceed with the matter or file the information.

Since the FBR's findings would only supplement the admitted information, such consolidated information (which had not previously been available) was sent to the SJC for its perusal. In these circumstances, the SJC which has not previously expressed its views on such information cannot legally be said to have become functus officio.

E. Jurisdiction of the SJC

54. The next argument by learned counsel that the Short Order has authorised the SJC to proceed against Mrs. Isa and her children is based on a misconception. The jurisdiction of the SJC under Article 209(5) is limited to inquiring into matters concerning a Judge of the Superior Courts. Only to the extent that the financial matters and activities of the family are intertwined with the affairs of a Judge, does such information become cognisable by the SJC. Otherwise, the SJC does not have jurisdiction to investigate into the affairs of a Judge's family members. This is why the Majority Judgment has not entrusted any matter in this behalf to the SJC. Para 145 of the Detailed Reasons (reproduced above in para 37) explicitly acknowledges that if the SJC finds that the Report of the Chairman FBR justifies any action, it can proceed of its own volition against the learned petitioner. No mention in this respect is made of the learned petitioner's family members.

55. Be that as it may, it is clarified that whilst the SJC only has jurisdiction to examine the conduct and/or capacity of Judges of the Superior Courts, it may secure the attendance of any relevant person or the discovery/ production of any document whilst conducting an inquiry against a Judge (ref: Article 210 of the Constitution). Therefore, in exercise of this power the SJC may yet examine persons, who are not Judges, or their record for understanding or deciding a pending information.

F. Directions by this Court

56. Learned counsel also criticised the direction issued in the Short Order dated 19.06.2020 that the SJC could proceed against the learned petitioner on the basis of the findings recorded in the Report of the Chairman FBR. Two primary objections were taken:

i. The Supreme Court cannot be a source of information under Article 209(5) of the Constitution; and

ii. In Muhammad Ikram Chaudhry v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1998 SC 103), this Court categorically held that Article 209(5) ibid does not permit the filing of a Constitution Petition praying for a direction to either the SJC or the President to initiate an inquiry against a Judge of the Superior Courts (para 11).

57. With regard to the first point, Article 209(5) reads:

"209. Supreme Judicial Council.

(5) If, on information from any source, the Council or the President is of the opinion that a Judge of the Supreme Court or of a High Court---

(a) may be incapable of properly performing the duties of his office by reason of physical or mental incapacity; or

(b) may have been guilty of misconduct, the President shall direct the Council to, or the Council may, on its own motion, inquire into the matter."

(emphasis supplied)

It is a basic rule of interpretation that words are generally to be given their ordinary and natural meaning except when such construction gives rise to absurdity or renders certain words meaningless [ref: Federation of Pakistan v. Durrani Ceramics (2014 SCMR 1630) at para 31]. Unless the aforesaid exceptional consequences follow, the basic rule must be adhered to. The term 'any' in Article 209(5) is of significance in the present context. It has been defined by Stroud's Judicial Dictionary (10th Edn) as follows:

" ...a word which excludes limitation or qualification...; "as wide as possible...""

It may be noticed from the above-stated meaning that 'any' is a comprehensive term. Since the legislature itself consciously chose to keep the source of information in Article 209 open-ended, it will be contrary to the spirit of the provision to hold otherwise and prevent the Superior Courts from taking judicial notice of information and/or from forwarding the same for perusal and consideration of the SJC when no such restriction exists in Article 209(5) itself.

58. With regards to the case of Muhammad Ikram Chaudhry (supra), that is authority for the proposition that if a person has a grievance against a particular Judge the appropriate forum for redressal is the SJC (and not the Supreme Court) and that neither the Supreme Court nor the High Court can record even a tentative finding that a Superior Court Judge has committed misconduct. There can be no cavil with this ruling of the Court. However, in the instant case no adverse finding has been recorded against the learned petitioner and no direction has been issued to the SJC to take any action against him on the basis of the information forwarded by the FBR (refer to para 37 for a detailed discussion on this topic). Therefore, in the absence of such a finding and/or direction to the SJC, the principle laid down in the Muhammad Ikram Chaudhry case (supra) has not been contravened.

G. Report of Chairman FBR

59. Learned counsel then submitted that no proceedings could be initiated against the learned petitioner based on the Chairman FBR's Report because it does not express a final opinion and so cannot qualify as information under Article 209(5). It was argued that the said Report was based on the order of the CIR which was amenable to appeal (and was in fact appealed against by Mrs. Isa). There was a possibility that the findings recorded by the CIR may be set aside rendering the Report of the Chairman FBR irrelevant. However, this concern has already been answered in the Detailed Reasons:

"146. ...To our minds, the two directions, namely, the filing of the report by the Chairman FBR before the SJC and the protection of the affected persons right to appeal, issued by us were necessary in the interests of justice. The jurisdiction of the FBR is concerned with taxing income whereas the jurisdiction of the SJC is related only with the misconduct of a Judge. Therefore, the proceedings and/or the outcome before one forum do not affect those of the other forum. However, the SJC may if so inclined in the exercise of its suo motu jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution take into consideration any proceedings before the tax authorities or orders passed by them."

60. The above-quoted extract notes that the respective jurisdiction, object and authority of the SJC and FBR differ significantly. Consequently, the findings of the CIR and the Report based thereon by Chairman FBR merely provide information and have no binding effect on the SJC. The apprehension of learned counsel that the findings of FBR and SJC may differ and therefore the Short Order has created an anomalous situation is fanciful. In its proceedings against a learned Judge the SJC scrutinises the factual narrative presented by an information. In the present case the Report of the Chairman FBR and the material attached to it would verify and present the facts from a tax perspective. This information may or may not satisfy the parameters for the SJC to take cognisance of the matter. There is nothing in the Short Order of 19.06.2020 that expects the SJC to accept the contents of that Report to be a binding depiction of the facts or as actionable material for its purposes. The outcome regarding tax liability (if any) imposed on Mrs. Isa in the hierarchy of tax fora does not concern the SJC. Such a determination has remedies before higher fora, as have been availed by Mrs. Isa.

61. It is also trite law that proceedings based on the same factual matrix and pending in different legal fora may arrive at divergent outcomes because the jurisdiction, object and authority of each forum may be distinct under the Constitution and the applicable law. A common example of this can be seen in the concurrent initiation of criminal and disciplinary proceedings in relation to service matters [ref: Muhammad Iqbal v. District Police Officer, Sahiwal (2011 SCMR 534) at para 8]. Therefore, the fate of the CIR's findings, if any on the sources of funds used for purchasing the London Properties, in the appellate tax for a will have no bearing on how the SJC evaluates such information, in the shape of Chairman FBR's Report, for its own purpose and jurisdiction. Accordingly, the objection raised by learned counsel is without force.

H. Person Specific Legislation

62. Lastly, learned counsel argued that the direction to the FBR to proceed against Mrs. Isa and her children was tantamount to person specific legislation. It was further contended that the issuance of a timeline was violative of the Ordinance which does not provide for a deadline for concluding tax proceedings. With respect to the first objection, it has already been noted in para 31 of this judgment that Mrs. Isa had herself questioned why she had not been asked by the FBR at the outset about the London Properties for which she possessed sufficient material to establish her sources of funding. Only the scrutiny of this record could confirm whether or not the learned petitioner had any connection with funding the London Properties, and if so whether he was answerable to the SJC for the same. In view of, inter alia, this background, the Court referred the matter to the FBR, being the relevant and competent fact-finding authority, for verification so that the controversy surrounding the learned petitioner and the Court could be put to rest promptly. In these circumstances, the judicial direction issued to the FBR under Articles 184(3) and 187 of the Constitution was factually and legally well-founded.

63. Precisely for this very reason, the Court also laid down a timeline in the Short Order for the FBR to follow whilst conducting the proceedings against Mrs. Isa. The issuance of such a direction is lawful and valid as exemplified by the judicial precedents of this Court [ref: Imran Ahmed Khan v. Muhammad Nawaz Sharif (PLD 2017 SC 692) at para 14(g) and Muhammad Khalid v. National Accountability Bureau (2017 SCMR 1340) at para 5]. The rationale behind passing these directions is also well-documented and was aptly explained in the case of Muhammad Nawaz Sharif v. Imran Ahmed Khan Niazi (PLD 2018 SC 1):

> "14. ...The argument that the direction to the trial court for deciding the References within 6 months from the date of filing them also tends to prejudice the fair trial of the petitioner is also misconceived as the purpose behind such direction is not to prejudice the trial but to ensure expeditious conclusion of the case which more often than not has been extended even in the past by this Court, if the trial was delayed by any hardship or anything imponderable..."

Conversion of Dissenting View into Majority Opinion

64. After the Reference was quashed, the Majority and Minority differed in their treatment of the admission by the learned petitioner and Mrs. Isa that the latter owned undeclared foreign properties. In this regard, the dissenting opinion held that:

i. The tax information of the learned petitioner and Mrs. Isa as well as their passport details and travel history were illegally collected; and

ii. The learned petitioner and his family were subjected to covert surveillance.

In light of the said findings, the dissenting opinion of two learned Judges concluded that such illegally collected evidence was inadmissible for all purposes and that the acts of the respondents demonstrated their malice in fact. Insofar as the Majority is concerned, the allegations of covert surveillance and malice in fact were dismissed for reasons already stated in the Detailed Reasons (refer to paras 46-64 for malice in fact and paras 78-88 for covert surveillance). However, the Majority also held that the legal and jurisdictional defects in the preparation of the Reference amounted to malice in law. Nevertheless, as such a finding is materially different from malice in fact (refer to paras 140 and 141 of the Detailed Reasons) the admitted information was not destroyed as a result. The said information, therefore, could not be ignored because such admission of the truth cast a shadow on the integrity of the learned petitioner and the Court. Accordingly, the information called for an explanation before the competent forum i.e., the FBR.

65. With regards to the investigation carried out against the learned petitioner by the ARU, the Majority opined that the same was not authorised by the President. Instead, it was the Law Minister who had permitted ARU to inquire into the financial affairs of the learned petitioner. Due to the incompetence of the Law Minister to direct an investigation against a Judge of the Supreme Court, the search of the learned petitioner's and Mrs. Isa's tax records was declared unlawful. Accordingly, such tax records were not considered by the Majority for reaching its decision. During the present hearing, the alleged illegal collection and therefore the inadmissibility of such material was re-emphasised to attack the direction given to the FBR. Consequently, it has now become imperative to consider this issue because statedly it bars the issuance of the impugned direction to the FBR to verify the source of funding of the undeclared London Properties.

66. There are two important aspects of this subject that require our attention:

i. The rule regulating the admissibility of illegally collected evidence in Pakistan and comparable jurisdictions; and

ii. The prohibition against illegal search and seizure prescribed in the Fourth Amendment to the US Constitution.

67. Taking the first point, the general test for admitting evidence in Pakistan and comparable jurisdictions is whether the evidence is relevant to a fact in issue. This is evident from Article 18 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984 (previously this principle was enunciated in Section 5 of the now repealed Evidence Act, 1872) which reads:

"18. Evidence may be given of facts in issue and relevant facts.---Evidence may be given in any suit or proceeding of the existence or non-existence of every fact in issue and of such other facts as are hereinafter declared to be relevant and of no others."

What becomes clear from the aforenoted rule is that ordinarily in both criminal and civil matters evidence which is connected to a fact in issue or a relevant fact is admissible simpliciter. Reliance in this regard is also placed on the jurisprudence and laws of Pakistan, Privy Council, India, United Kingdom, Canada and Australia. A few examples from these jurisdictions are produced below:

i. Pakistan

Bisvil Spinners (Pvt.) Ltd. v. Pakistan (PLD 1992 SC 96) :

" ...if a piece of evidence is otherwise relevant and pertinent for the decision of an issue, it is untenable argument that: notwithstanding the fact that it is genuine and otherwise reliable it should not be made use of because in the process employed for the collection of the material an irregularity or for that matter an illegality was committed." [This dictum was approved in Muhammad Ijaz Ahmad Chaudhry v. Mumtaz Ahmad Tarar (2016 SCMR 1) at para 12].

ii. Privy Council

Kuruma v. The Queen ([ 1955] AC 197):

"In their Lordships' opinion the test to be applied in considering whether evidence is admissible is whether it is relevant to the matters in issue. If it is, it is admissible and the court is not concerned with how the evidence was obtained... There can be no difference in principle for this purpose between a civil and a criminal case. No doubt in a criminal case the judge always has a discretion to disallow evidence if the strict rules of admissibility would operate unfairly against an accused..."

iii. India

R.M. Malkani v. State of Maharashtra (AIR 1973 SC 157):

"24. ...There is warrant for proposition that even if evidence is illegally obtained it is admissible... The Judicial Committee in Kuruma, Son of Kanju v. R. [ 1955] A.C. 197... held... that if evidence was admissible it matters not how it was obtained. There is of course always a word of caution. It is that the Judge has a discretion to disallow evidence in a criminal case if the strict rules of admissibility would operate unfairly against the accused. That caution is the golden rule in criminal jurisprudence."

Pooran Mal v. Director of Inspection (Investigation), New Delhi (AIR 1974 SC 348):

"24. ...Now, if the Evidence Act 1872 which is a law consolidating, defining and amending the law of evidence, no provision of which is challenged as violating the Constitution-permits relevancy as the only test of admissibility of evidence (See Section 5 of the Act) and, secondly, that Act or any other similar law in force does not exclude relevant evidence on the ground that it was obtained under an illegal search or seizure, it will be wrong to invoke the supposed spirit of our Constitution for excluding such evidence..."

iv. United Kingdom

R v. Sang [ 1979] 2 All ER 1222 (HL)

"...However much the judge may dislike the way in which a particular piece of evidence was obtained before proceedings were commenced, if it is admissible evidence probative of the accused's guilt it is no part of his judicial function to exclude it for this reason..."

v. Canada

R v. Grant (2009 SCC 32):

"[71] ...When faced with an application for exclusion under section 24(2), a court must assess and balance the effect of admitting the evidence on society's confidence in the justice system having regard to: (1) the seriousness of the Charter -infringing state conduct (admission may send the message the justice system condones serious state misconduct), (2) the impact of the breach on the Charter - protected interests of the accused (admission may send the message that individual rights count for little), and (3) society's interest in the adjudication of the case on its merits..."

vi. Australia

Evidence Act 1995

"138 Discretion to exclude improperly or illegally obtained evidence

....

(3) Without limiting the matters that the court may take into account under subsection (1) [exercise of discretion to exclude or admit illegally collected evidence], it is to take into account:

(a) the probative value of the evidence; and

(b) the importance of the evidence in the proceeding; and

(c) the nature of the relevant offence, cause of action or defence and the nature of the subject-matter of the proceeding; and

(d) the gravity of the impropriety or contravention; and

(e) whether the impropriety or contravention was deliberate or reckless; and

(f) whether the impropriety or contravention was contrary to or inconsistent with a right of a person recognised by the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; and

(g) whether any other proceeding (whether or not in a court) has been or is likely to be taken in relation to the impropriety or contravention; and

(h) the difficulty (if any) of obtaining the evidence without impropriety or contravention of an Australian law."

68. A perusal of these cases and laws demonstrates that in both criminal and civil matters either there is no bar to the admission of evidence collected by any means [except for the absolute prohibitions enshrined in the Constitution such as the protection against self-incrimination (Article 13(b)), the inviolability of dignity of man (Article 14(1)) and the prohibition of torture for the purpose of extracting evidence (Article 14(2)] as long as it is relevant and genuine (Pakistan, UK, Privy Council and India) or a balancing exercise needs to be carried out by the Courts to determine the admissibility of the disputed evidence (Canada and Australia). However, in neither of these countries is there an absolute bar to the admission of illegally collected evidence.

69. In contrast, the United States follows what is known as the exclusionary rule which outrightly prohibits the admission of evidence collected via an illegal search and seizure. The rationale behind this strict approach is the Fourth Amendment to the US Constitution, inserted in 1791, which reads:

> "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated... but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

The rule, as explained by the Supreme Court in Weeks v. United States [232 US 383 (1914)], was enacted to limit the power of the Government to invade the home and privacy of a citizen and seize his/her private papers under the authority of general warrants. However, the rule has been made applicable only to criminal matters [it was first applied by the Supreme Court in the case of Weeks v. United States (supra)]. This was affirmed by the Supreme Court in United States v. Janis [428 US 433 (1976)]:

> "In the complex and turbulent history of the rule, the Court never has applied it to exclude evidence from a civil proceeding, federal or state."

This dictum was later reiterated by the Supreme Court in INS v. Lopez-Mendoza [468 US 1032 (1984)]. The restrictive application of the exclusionary rule only to criminal matters was explained by the Supreme Court in Pennsylvania Board of Probation and Parole v. Scott [524 US 357 (1998)]:

> " ...Moreover, because the rule is prudential rather than constitutionally mandated, we have held it to be applicable only where its deterrence benefits outweigh its "substantial social costs..."
> Recognizing these costs, we have repeatedly declined to extend the exclusionary rule to proceedings other than criminal trials...
>
> As in Calandra, Janis, and Lopez-Mendoza, we are asked to extend the operation of the exclusionary rule beyond the criminal trial context. We again decline to do so...
>
> Because the exclusionary rule precludes consideration of reliable, probative evidence, it imposes significant costs: it undeniably detracts from the truthfinding process and allows many who would otherwise be incarcerated to escape the consequences of their actions... Although we have held these costs to be worth bearing in certain circumstances, our cases have repeatedly emphasized that the rule's "costly toll" upon truth-seeking and law enforcement objectives presents a high obstacle for those urging application of the rule..."

70. Further, even in the context of criminal proceedings the Courts in the United States have recognised exceptions to the exclusionary rule to allow the admission of illegal evidence in such matters:

i. If the illegal evidence is later discovered from an independent source [ref: Silverthorne Lumber Co., Inc. v. United States (251 US 385 (1920))];

ii. If the illegal evidence would inevitably have been discovered by a lawful mean [ref: Nix v. Williams (467 US 431(1984))];

iii. The chain of causation between the illegal action and the tainted evidence is so attenuated that the taint stands dissipated [ref: Brown v. Illinois (422 US 590 (1975))];

iv. The search warrant was not based on probable cause but was executed by government agents in good faith [ref: United States v. Leon (468 US 897 (1984))]; and

v. To impeach the credibility of the defendant [ref: Walder v. United States (347 US 62 (1954))].

71. The United States by virtue of the Constitutional command in the Fourth Amendment is one of the strongest proponents of the exclusionary rule. Yet it has not transposed the approach of excluding illegal evidence to civil proceedings; and in criminal matters has qualified the severity of the rule due to its adverse effect on discovering the truth. There is no reason why in our jurisdiction where there is no such Constitutional or statutory obligation to exclude illegally collected evidence, the said rule should be adopted mechanically. As already stated, the jurisprudence of Pakistan and other comparable jurisdictions also points towards the admissibility of genuine and relevant evidence, namely, truthful evidence in civil proceedings. Consequently, applying a more stringent criteria for determining the admissibility of illegally collected evidence in removal proceedings against Judges is not justifiable. Moreso, when this Court in the case of Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan (PLD 2010 SC 61) has held that an inquiry against a Judge is merely an administrative matter:

"98. ... I am of the opinion that the true status of the Supreme Judicial Council is the one suggested by Syed Sharif-ud-Din Pirzada... while placing reliance on MR. JUSTICE SHAUKAT ALI'S CASE (PLD 1971 SC 585 at 602) wherein the said status had been determined as under:--

"Moreover, an inquiry into the conduct of a Judge is neither a criminal indictment nor even a quasi-criminal proceedings, but it is, in our opinion, mainly an ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDINGS conducted by a DOMESTIC FORUM to examine the professional fitness of a Judge. The subject-matter of these proceedings is neither civil rights and duties nor criminal liabilities. It is simply the conduct of a Judge which is to be properly reviewed in the interest of the purity and honour of the judiciary..."

72. In the present case, it was argued by the learned petitioner that the search of his and Mrs. Isa's tax records was illegal. The Minority agreed with this contention whereas the Majority did not issue any opinion on this matter because it did not take the tax records into consideration. Instead, it directed the FBR to verify the source of funding of the London Properties in accordance with the Ordinance, specifically Section 216(3)(a) which reads:

"216. Disclosure of information by a public servant-- ...

(3) Nothing contained in subsection (1) shall preclude the disclosure of any such particulars--

(a) to any person acting in the execution of this Ordinance, where it is necessary to disclose the same to him for the purposes of this Ordinance;"

By virtue of this provision CIR, Islamabad could lawfully access the tax records of Mrs. Isa to arrive at the true picture of who funded the London Properties and with what money. Indeed, the Holy Quran has ordained the believers to uphold the balance of justice and equity by seeking the truth because only by relying on the truth can justice be served:

"Surah Al-Ma'idah, Verse 8

O YOU who have attained to faith! Be ever stead fast in your devotion to God, bearing witness to the truth in all equity;"

Maintainability of the Constitution Petition

73. During the hearings of the present review petitions crucial information surfaced which reinforces our direction to the FBR, to verify the source of funding of the London Properties, issued in the Majority Judgment. The new material that has come to light also significantly prejudices the maintainability of the Constitution Petition filed by the learned petitioner. A brief background of what this information is and how it was acquired is set out hereinbelow.

74. Mrs. Isa whilst making her submissions in the review on 19.04.2021 frequently referred to the Assessment Order dated 14.09.2020 passed against her by Mr. Zulfiqar Ahmad, CIR. The primary purpose for quoting from this Assessment Order, as stated by Mrs. Isa, was to show that the FBR had acknowledged that Mrs. Isa had transferred 737,503/- and $17,966/- to the UK between the tax years of 2003-2013 which confirmed that she had the requisite sum of money to purchase the London Properties, namely, 50 Coniston Court; 40 Oakdale Road; and 90 Adelaide Road (total value: 751,000/-). However, she informed that although the Assessment Order was partially favourable to her, she had filed an appeal against it on other points. Additionally, both Mrs. Isa and the learned petitioner complained that they were unaware of the Report sent by Chairman FBR to the Secretary SJC. They had not been provided a copy of his Report even though Mrs. Isa had specifically asked for it (ref: pgs.559 and 562 of C.M.A. No.7602 of 2020 filed by Mrs. Isa). To redress this grievance, the Court passed a unanimous order on 19.04.2021 directing the Secretary of SJC to:

> "2. ...prepare 13 copies of the FBR report along with its attached record submitted to the SJC. He shall ensure that the said documents are made available in Court tomorrow at 11:30 a.m. for the perusal of the learned members of the Bench, the two petitioners and the learned Additional Attorney General."

75. The next day, namely, 20.04.2021 the documents were duly provided to all thirteen concerned persons mentioned in the order of 19.04.2021. These documents included the Assessment Order passed by the CIR, the Report of the Chairman FBR and certain ancillary material such as the banking documents of Mrs. Isa. It was in this data that the relevant information was discovered. The first piece of information which is of significance is a 'Procuration and Delegation of Authority Form' in connection with Mrs. Isa's Foreign Currency Account No.05386055801 in Standard Chartered Bank ("Bank"), World Trade Centre, 10-Khayabane-Roomi, Block-5, KDA Scheme 5, Clifton, Karachi. It is from this very account through which Mrs. Isa transferred 737,503/- and $17,966/- to different accounts in the UK statedly for the purchase of the London Properties. The Form, printed on the Bank's stationery, is signed by both Mrs. Isa and the learned petitioner and is dated 15.12.2003. It grants extensive powers to the learned petitioner, in relation to Mrs. Isa's Foreign Currency Account in the Bank. Some of these are:

i. Issuing cheques on behalf of the account holder;

ii. Depositing cash funds in the account;

iii. Issuing instructions for the transfer of funds from the account; and

iv. Issuing instructions for issuance of statements of account.

76. The Form can be found in Book-IV, Volume No.3, pg. 135 (one of the files in the record forwarded by the SJC) . Similarly, cheques amounting to 125,000/- in value were credited into the Foreign Currency Account of Mrs. Isa by Mr. Ahsan Zahir Rizvi, the learned petitioner's former partner at his law firm. Copies of these cheques are contained in the same Book-IV on pgs.22 and 47: 100,000/- [Cheque No.SA-1736344 drawn on NIB Bank, DHA-26th Street Branch-Khi ("NIB") and deposited on 03.09.2009] and 25,000/- [Cheque No. SA-1736340 drawn on NIB on 11.04.2008].

77. Having perused the material, when the Bench assembled in Court at 11:30 a.m. on 20.04.2021 to resume the hearing of the review, Mrs. Isa commenced her submissions by requesting the Bench to return the material received from the SJC. This request to the members of the Bench was also repeated by the learned petitioner at the very end of the hearing. In the midst of these objections one of us, on the basis of the newly unearthed material received earlier in the day from the SJC, posed three questions to the learned petitioner regarding the Foreign Currency Account in the Bank, Pakistan through which Mrs. Isa had transferred the 737,503/- and $17,966/- that she asserted were later used to purchase the London Properties. For completeness, those three questions are produced below:

i. Did learned petitioner have authority to operate the Foreign Currency Account?

ii. Did learned petitioner have anything to do with the credits made in the Foreign Currency Account?

iii. Did learned petitioner have anything to do with the debits from the Foreign Currency Account?

At this stage, the learned petitioner inquired whether he should answer the questions straightaway or tomorrow. To give the learned petitioner time to recollect his thoughts, the matter was deferred to the next day. Thereafter, a written document was submitted on 21.04.2021 in which the learned petitioner neither answered the questions in the affirmative or negative. Instead, the following response was given:

"20. ...it came as a complete surprise to the petitioner that the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Umar Ata Bandial, just before rising on Tuesday, 20 April 2021, asked a number of questions of fact which apparently emanated from Mr. Zulfiqar Ahmad's order and/or from the FBR Chairman's report; the petitioner was ready to respond but his lordship told him to do so on the next date of hearing which will be 'tomorrow at 9.30'...

21. That since Mrs. Sarina Isa and the petitioner give no credence to Mr. Zulfiqar Ahmad's order and the report of the FBR Chairman, with utmost respect, the questions should not have been put. If the petitioner submits to them and answers them he will effectively be endorsing a patent illegality and undermine his own case that nothing can be added to the Reference. It is further respectfully submitted that it is not appropriate to introduce the report at the stage of hearing of the said review applications..."

78. The purpose of asking these questions was to simply check whether the learned petitioner would admit his connection with Mrs. Isa's Foreign Currency Account, a fact which was by now known to the members of the Bench because of the material produced on Court's order by the SJC. However, since the learned petitioner avoided a response the matter was not pursued further in Court. In any event, a majority of the Bench vide an additional note issued subsequently on or about 05.05.2021, attached to the order of 20.04.2021, returned the documents procured from the SJC and objected to the questions posed to the learned petitioner.

79. What is perhaps puzzling about learned petitioner's refusal to answer the queries is its direct contradiction with his consistent stance (maintained before the SJC and throughout the hearings of Const. P. No.17 of 2019 and the review petitions) that he has no knowledge regarding the funding of the London Properties that are owned by his financially independent wife. Reference is made to his preliminary response, dated 31.07.2019, (para 56, pg.300 of Const. P. No. 17 of 2019, Part III) to the Show Cause Notice ("SCN") issued by the SJC on 17.07.2019:

"56. ...The particulars as to the price of the three properties, payment and matters pertaining thereto would be in the knowledge of their owners. The Respondent neither is, nor has ever been, the owner of the three properties or of any one or more of them..."

A similar statement to this effect can also be found in his Constitution Petition filed before this Court (para 14, pg. 18 of Const. P. No. 17 of 2019, Part I). It would, therefore, appear that if the learned petitioner was in fact unaware of the London Properties and its related details, he simply had to answer 'No' to each question posed to him. But as stated above such a reply was not forthcoming.

80. As has become clear from the discussion in paras 75 and 76, the reluctance of the learned petitioner in answering the Court's questions was his association with and knowledge of Mrs. Isa's Foreign Currency Account. This fact, however, is not reflected in his stand taken before the Court. The said omission adversely affects the maintainability of his Constitution Petition and review petition filed before the Court because knowledge of the Account demolishes the underlying basis of his Constitution Petition that he is not answerable before the SJC as he has no concern with the London Properties. As Mrs. Isa and her children are admittedly the owners of the London Properties, the pivotal issue in the present matter has always been the source of funds used for purchasing these Properties. Mrs. Isa has explained to CIR, Islamabad that the requisite funds were transferred to the UK from her Foreign Currency Account. The Procuration and Delegation of Authority Form in favour of the learned petitioner confers several powers on him giving him access and authority to issue directions regarding movement of funds in the Account (stated above in para 75) . Further, his former partner deposited a large sum of 125,000/- in the said account. It is to be noted that the learned petitioner took oath as Chief Justice of the Balochistan High Court on 05.08.2009. The bulk of the funds, 100,000/- were transferred into the Foreign Currency Account by the learned petitioner's former partner barely a month later, vide cheque deposited on 03.09.2009. Clearly, the learned petitioner had to exit the partnership firm on his assuming public office. Now, when a partner leaves a firm there is a settling of accounts and the outgoing partner has to be given his due from the firm's capital etc. Was this payment into Mrs. Isa's account in substance part of that settlement? Or was it a payment for some bona fide arm's length transaction between the former partner and Mrs. Isa? Either way, it prima facie stretches credulity that the learned petitioner would not be aware of or linked to such a transaction. The other payment, of 25,000/- was made vide cheque drawn on 11.04.2008, when the learned petitioner was a partner at the firm. The question, prima facie, of knowledge if not linkage arises again with regard to this deposit.

81. It goes without saying that according to Mrs. Isa's version the funds that were credited to her Foreign Currency Account could only have contributed towards the acquisition of two of the London Properties in the year 2013 after the learned petitioner assumed public office. The foregoing facts prima facie suggest that in relation to the Foreign Currency Account, the learned petitioner at the very least knew the material facts at all relevant times. That he maybe even had a link with the funds that went into it. Therefore, a discrepancy now exists between the new information (which indicates the connection of the learned petitioner with the London Properties) and the stance of the learned petitioner (that he has no link whatsoever with the funding of the London Properties). These are quite obviously tentative observations and queries in view of what has come to light. They require a clear response or answer before the competent forum. If the matter had been left to the SJC to deal with at its own discretion in terms of the Short Order dated 19.06.2020 then perhaps the controversy could have been resolved.

82. However, the review majority vide the additional note issued on or about 05.05.2021 ordered the return of the material forwarded by the SJC and attempted to restrain various fora and authorities from scrutinising the same vide short order dated 26.04.2021. Nevertheless, this material can be considered by us for two reasons:

i. The review majority's direction cannot stand in our way as Judges sitting in the same Bench (in dissent though we may be) from accessing and evaluating the material which is available on the record, and passing judgment thereon or with reference thereto. This is necessary to protect the Judicial Independence of all members sitting in the Bench. No hurdles on the ability of dissenting Judges to express their views on the basis of available record can be imposed, especially if the dissent is specifically with the direction(s) issued by the majority. In any event, whilst 5 members of the majority have declared the banking information to be illegal and of no legal effect, none of them (including the 6th member) have restrained any forum or authority from considering or acting upon the said information. Therefore, the said material can be examined by us and any relevant forum or authority, including the SJC; and

ii. It may be recalled from para 15(i) that Courts can review a judgment if new and important evidence is produced which although existed at the time when the order was made could not be accessed and therefore produced. In the present case, new material has surfaced during the proceedings of CIR, Islamabad. Both documents that we have referred to (the Procuration and Delegation Form and the cheques issued by the former partner of the learned petitioner) existed on the day the Short Order dated 19.06.2020 was passed. However, as these were confidential documents of Mrs. Isa they were not in the knowledge of the other parties. It was only when the direction to the FBR was issued vide Short Order dated 19.06.2020 to proceed with the verification of the funding of the London Properties owned by Mrs. Isa that the CIR, Islamabad made a request for information to her banks under Section 176 of the Ordinance. The documents produced by Mrs. Isa's Bank revealed the connection of the learned petitioner with her Foreign Currency Account. Resultantly, the perusal of and reliance on these documents in review jurisdiction is competent, relevant and critical for verifying the propriety of this Court's direction to the FBR. Their contents are also crucial for arriving at an informed decision in the review petitions.

83. Be that as it may, by accepting the review petitions and seeking to prevent a consideration of the freshly discovered relevant and genuine information, the review majority has created an anomalous situation whereby a process of this Court in aid of justice has been turned into a process shrouding the truth under legal niceties. Reference is made to Verse 135 of Surah An-Nisa, quoted at the start of this judgment which directs searching for the truth in order to do justice. An unsatisfactory state of affairs, therefore, exists which unless explained casts an impression that the Court has adopted a different standard for one of its own. Judges occupy an exalted position in society as dispensers of justice. They are amongst the elites in society. Therefore, neglecting their duty to search and confront the truth goes against the express command of Almighty Allah who has warned against providing preferential treatment to privileged persons:

"Surah Al-Isra, Verse 16

When We decide to destroy a population, We (first) send a definite order to those among them who are given the good things of this life and yet transgress; so that the word is proved true against them: then (it is) We destroy them utterly."

Translation by Abdullah Yusuf Ali

84. We must not falter in the face of such a powerful command. Judges, like all other persons in the Service of Pakistan and holding public office, are answerable for their errors and omissions. In the instant case there is material that calls for an explanation before the SJC which must be provided to protect the learned petitioner and the Court from aspersions cast on their integrity.

Conclusion

85. In view of what has been discussed, all the nine review petitions are dismissed. Accordingly, the Short Order dated 19.06.2020 and the Detailed Reasons dated 23.10.2020 are upheld in their entirety.

MUNIB AKHTAR, J.---

86. After we had finalized our reasons as above but before the release thereof, our learned colleagues, Justice Maqbool Baqar, Justice Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Justice Amin-ud-Din Khan on the one hand, and Justice Yahya Afridi on the other, released their reasons vide their respective judgments on 29.01.2022. The judgment of the former does not identify any particular learned Judge as the author and therefore, for convenience, I respectfully refer to that decision as "the Four Member Judgment".

87. I of course fully respect the right of my learned colleagues to support their respective short orders with such reasoning in such manner as they deem appropriate. However, I have noted with concern one aspect of the Four Member Judgment. It is that that decision has (and I say this with all due respect) purported to be signed also by our learned former colleague Justice (R) Manzoor Ahmad Malik, who has expressed his agreement with the same. Our learned former colleague was of course a signatory to one of the short orders (as noted above in para 14) but he retired on 30.04.2021, i.e., several months ago. He could not, as a matter of law, have signed the judgment. The justification as to why he could do so is given in para 55 of the Four Member Judgment. In my view, our learned colleagues, with respect, erred in law in presenting/ sending their judgment to our learned former colleague. The matter is important and needs to be addressed. I do so in this additional note appended to our judgment.

88. The reason offered in the aforementioned para 55 is as follows:

"55. ... Our learned brother, Manzoor Ahmed Malik, J., (who has since retired) was a signatory to the above short order; therefore, following the precedents of Al-Jehad Trust v. Federation (PLD 1996 SC 324) and CJP Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan (PLD 2010 SC 61), the office is directed to place these detailed reasons recorded in support of that order before his lordship, for his consideration whether he agrees with the detailed reasons."

For reasons that follow I am, respectfully, unable to concur in what has been said and done. In particular, in my view the cited cases do not offer any precedent as could be applied to, and followed in, the circumstances of the present case.

89. In my view the settled position is that once a Judge of this Court has retired he cannot thereafter give, make or sign any judgment, order or decree, and certainly not in such manner as has, or can have, operative effect. Upon retirement he has left office and thereafter cannot, as it were, return to service, whether of his own volition or at the request of any Judge(s) on the Court, unless the Constitution itself so allows. The Constitution does so provide in Article 182, which relates to ad hoc Judges. It provides, inter alia, that a Judge of this Court who has ceased to hold office (three years having not elapsed since retirement) may be requested "to attend sittings of the Supreme Court as an ad hoc Judge for such period as may be necessary and while so attending an ad hoc Judge shall have the same power and jurisdiction as a Judge of the Supreme Court". Our learned former colleague is not an ad hoc Judge. By efflux of time he retired, period. As a matter of law he could not have signed the Four Member Judgment.

90. Before proceeding to consider the justification offered in the aforementioned para 55 certain points which, while both settled and self-evident, need to be made. Firstly, in any case heard by a multi-member Bench (i.e., a Bench comprising of more than one Judge, whether of even or odd numbered strength) the operative decision (whether judgment, decree or order) must have the support of a majority. Even fifty percent is not enough: that is only a plurality. The majority threshold must be crossed. Of course in most cases there is unanimity. But unanimity is, at least as relevant here, conceptually only a "special" situation of a majority (i.e., all the members of the Bench constitute the "majority"). The "general" rule is that there must be at least a majority. If there is no majority then there is no operative order or decree, or in the case of a judgment no ratio decidendi of the Court, although there is of course a ratio of such judgment(s) as may have been delivered. Secondly, if there are multiple judgments or orders (short or otherwise) it is only the one which commands the support of the majority that has operative effect as the decision of the Court. If there be no such single judgment then it is the commonality (if any) between them such as commands the support of the majority that has operative effect. Anything (whether determination or decision on a legal point in issue, enunciation of any rule or principle of law or order) that falls short of this mark (i.e., is outside or beyond that what is common) is not the decision of the Court and has no operative effect.

91. The points just made can be easily demonstrated by looking at the petitions at hand. They were heard and decided by a 10-member Bench. The majority therefore had to comprise of at least six Judges. Three short orders were made, which have been set out in para 14 above. The short order made by us had the support of only four Judges and can be put to one side. When the remaining two are considered it is seen that one commanded the support of five learned Judges (Justice Maqbool Baqar, Justice Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Justice Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Justice Amin-ud-Din Khan) while the other was made by one learned Judge (Justice Yahya Afridi) . Neither of these short orders had the support of six Judges and hence was not operative in and of itself. Rather, the two orders had to be considered in conjunction. What had operative effect was only that which was common between them. This was because it was only the commonality that commanded the support of a bare majority (i.e., six Judges) and therefore, and for that reason alone, had operative effect. What was it that was in common? For convenience I reproduce the orders in tabular form (emphasis supplied):

| Short order of Maqbool Baqar, Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ. | Short order of Yahya Afridi, J. |
| For the reasons to be recorded later, captioned Review Petitions are allowed and the directions contained in paras 4 to 11 of the impugned short | For the reasons to be recorded later, all review petitions except C.R.P. No. 296 of 2020, are allowed and the directions contained in paragraphs |

| order dated 19.06.2020 passed in Const. Petition No.17/2019 and other connected matters, along with supporting detailed reasons given in the majority judgment of the same date, are recalled and set-aside. All the subsequent proceedings, actions, orders, information and reports in pursuance of the directions contained in the short order dated 19.6.2020 and the detailed reasons thereof, are declared to be illegal and without any legal effect. Resultantly, any such proceedings, actions, orders or reports cannot be considered or acted upon and pursued any further by any forum or authority including the Supreme Judicial Council. | Nos. 4 to 11 of the order dated 19.06.2020 and detail judgment dated 23.10.2020 passed in Constitution Petition No. 17 of 2019 and other connected petitions are recalled. Consequently, all the subsequent proceedings, actions, orders and reports made in pursuance to the said directions are declared to be of no legal effect and/or consequences. |

As is obvious from even a bare perusal, the portion emphasized is not common between the two orders. It therefore did not command the support of the majority, but only of, at most, a plurality (i.e., five Judges). It did not therefore have operative effect. Any relevant forum or authority including the SJC is therefore not precluded or prevented from considering, acting upon or pursuing any information or material contained in or to be obtained from "any such proceedings, actions, orders or reports". Some of that information or material, at least prima facie, may be such as has been identified in paras 75 to 81 above.

92. While the point is clear and self-evident from a bare perusal of the short orders the matter has been put beyond any conceivable doubt by Justice Yahya Afridi in para 13 of his judgment which, as relevant for present purposes, is set out below (emphasis supplied):

> "13. As for the effect of the above declaration qua the allegation of misconduct against the Petitioner Judge, suffice it to state that it does not diminish or dilute the constitutional authority of the Council to consider, on its own motion, an "information" received from "any source", whatever it may be, including the "information" contained in the report received from the tax official, for deciding to initiate an inquiry, or otherwise, into the conduct of the Petitioner Judge...."

93. This brings me to para 55 of the Four Member Judgment and the justification sought to be given, on the basis of two earlier cases, as to why our retired learned colleague could sign the same. I begin with the second cited case, CJP Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan (PLD 2010 SC 61). Now this was a decision of a 13- member Bench. A majority thereon had to comprise of at least 7 Judges. The short order was made by a majority of 10 Judges, with three in dissent. It therefore commanded the support of the majority and had operative effect. By the time the detailed reasons came to be written, the three learned Judges in dissent had retired. It appears that they did not release any reasons, whether before or after retirement. In addition, three of the learned Judges who were part of the 10- member majority had also retired. It was in these circumstances that the learned author-Judge of the main judgment, Justice Khalil-ur-Rehman Ramday, observed as follows:

> "205. I, along with the Chief Justice of Pakistan and some other learned brothers, got restored to office in March, 2009 and it is thereafter that I got down to collecting the lost, the forgotten and the scattered threads and this is what I have been able to produce now.
> 206. But in the meantime, some of us of this Bench had superannuated which includes three Hon. Members of the ten Members forming the Majority view in this case. In the AL-JEHAD TRUST's case (supra), two Hon. Judges who had signed the short judgment, had retired before the detailed reasons were recorded yet they signed the said reasons. Following the said precedent, I am offering these reasons even to the superannuated Honourable Judges, namely, Mr. Justice Muhammad Nawaz Abbasi, Mr. Justice Syed Jamshed Ali and Mr. Justice Hamid Ali Mirza, leaving it to them to decide whether they would or would not like to be party to these detailed reasons."

In the event all three of the learned retired Judges signed the main judgment and one of them (Justice Muhammad Nawaz Abbasi) even sent in a concurrence. In my respectful view, as a matter of law, Justice Khalil-ur-Rehman Ramday could, and ought, not to have sent the judgment to the three learned retired Judges and they could not have signed it. However, be that as it may, the crucial point is that their signatures (and also, with respect, the purported concurrence) were of no legal relevance or consequence. The reason is that the detailed judgment commanded the support of seven learned Judges who were still on the Court, i.e., there was a majority in support thereof regardless of the three retired Judges. Even if all three of the retired Judges had not signed the judgment it would not have made the slightest difference. The main judgment commanded the support of the majority that had heard and decided the case and hence had operative effect, i.e., it was the judgment of the Court. As a matter of law therefore, what was done was a mere courtesy, a gesture that was (respectfully) empty and devoid of any and all operative effect. It made not an iota of difference.

94. I turn to the other case, Al-Jehad Trust v. Federation (PLD 1996 SC 324). As will be seen the circumstances there were much more complex and (with respect) quite different from what was believed by Justice Khalil-ur-Rehman Ramday, as set out in para 206. As I show below, this case did not provide any precedential support for what was done through the aforesaid para. In order to fully satisfy myself, I have examined the original record of the case. The following position emerges.

95. The decision was of a learned 5-member Bench, comprising the then Chief Justice Sajjad Ali Shah, Justice Ajmal Mian, Justice Fazal Ilahi Khan, Justice Manzoor Hussain Sial and Justice Mir Hazar Khan Khoso. A majority therefore had to comprise of at least 3 Judges. Now, the short order was made on 20.03.1996 and, interestingly, was signed by four of the learned Judges. Justice Mir Hazar Khan Khoso did not sign the short order. However, since it commanded the support of the majority it had operative effect. Of the four learned Judges who signed the short order the first three were on the Court at all material times, their respective dates of leaving office being 16.02.1998, 30.06.1999 and 31.12.1997. What is crucial for present purposes is the retirement of Justice Manzoor Hussain Sial, who left office on 24.03.1996. Justice Mir Hazar Khan Khoso was at that time an ad hoc Judge and his term expired on 29.09.1996. Thus, contrary to what Justice Khalil-ur-Rehman believed, there was only one Judge whose retirement date was of any significance.

96. The record shows that on 28.03.1996, Justice Ajmal Mian sent the following note to the office (emphasis supplied):

> "I am enclosing herewith the original judgment in Civil Appeal No. 805 of 1995 and Constitution Petition No.29 of 1994 duly signed by me and by Mr. Justice Fazal Ilahi Khan and Mr. Justice Manzoor Hussain Sial, which is lying with me since 24th March, 1996, awaiting the opinion of Hon. C.J.
> Hon.C.J has told me that his opinion would also be ready by Saturday, the 30th March, 1996 and if the same would not be ready by then, the above joint opinion is to be released to the parties and to the Press on the above date. Since I would be leaving for Lahore on 30.3.1996 at 1.10 p.m., you may get the signature on it of Hon.C.J. on 30.3.1996 and then release the same to the learned counsel for the parties, amicus curiae and to the Press. 20 photostat copies are also enclosed hereto."

As is clear from the foregoing, three learned Judges had already signed the judgment authored by Justice Ajmal Mian, including Justice Manzoor Hussain Sial. Crucially for present purposes, the latter signed the judgment on his last day in office, i.e., when he was still on the Court, which means that the judgment authored by Justice Ajmal Mian commanded the support of the majority of the Bench. While it is not clear when the judgment of the Chief Justice was released it is clear from the foregoing note that that was after the date on which Justice Manzoor Hussain Sial stood retired. I will assume that the date was 30.03.1996. Now, the judgment of the Chief Justice was, in addition to himself, signed by three Judges (see at pg. 411): Justice Ajmal Mian, Justice Fazal Ilahi Khan and Justice Manzoor Hussain Sial. However, Justice Ajmal Mian made the following note above his signature (emphasis supplied):

"I had recorded my separate reasons copy of which sent to H.C.J. HJ(5) and then HJ(6). The latter two agreed with me and signed the same on 24-03-1996. I adhere to my above reasons."

It will be seen that the judgment of the learned Chief Justice was supported by only two Judges who were on the Court on 30.03.1996, being himself and Justice Fazal Ilahi Khan. The signing by Justice Manzoor Hussain Sial could not be taken into account as he had retired by then. Thus, this judgment did not command the support of a majority of the Bench. It is to be noted that Justice Manzoor Hussain Sial also gave his own judgment and indeed specifically noted that he would be doing so when signing the judgments of the Chief Justice and Justice Ajmal Mian (see at pp. 411 and 522). However, with respect, this is of no relevance for present purposes. Finally, for completeness I may note that the record shows that Justice Mir Hazar Khan Khoso gave his own judgment, dated 26.05.1996 (i.e., when he was still an ad hoc Judge). However, the judgment appears not to have been reported. Again, with respect, this judgment is not relevant for present purposes: Justice Mir Hazar Khan Khoso did not sign the judgments of either the Chief Justice or Justice Ajmal Mian.

97. The position that emerges from the foregoing is therefore as follows. There was a judgment, that of Justice Ajmal Mian, which commanded the support of the majority of the Bench as it was signed by three learned Judges all of whom were on the Court when they signed it. The judgment of the learned Chief Justice, it appears, was only supported by two learned Judges. Of the five Judges who comprised the Bench it was the retirement of only one learned Judge (Justice Manzoor Hussain Sial) that had relevance and not two as erroneously concluded by Justice Khalil-ur-Rehman Ramday. Furthermore, this retirement was relevant only in relation to the judgment of the Chief Justice. It was of no consequence for the judgment of Justice Ajmal Mian since the learned Judge signed the same on his last day in office. Two conclusions therefore follow. Firstly, in Al-Jehad Trust v. Federation (PLD 1996 SC 324) there was both an operative short order and an operative judgment of the Court. Secondly, with respect, Justice Khalil-ur-Rehman Ramday did not properly and fully appreciate the circumstances of that case. It is therefore clear, in my respectful view, that it provided no precedent whatsoever to support what his Lordship sought to do in terms of para 206 of his judgment.

98. The situation in the case at hand is however completely different from both decisions. There are in all three judgments. One is of course by us and has the support of four Judges. Like our short order it can be put to one side for present purposes. Of the two remaining judgments one is by one learned Judge, Justice Yahya Afridi. The other is by four learned Judges still on the Court, Justice Maqbool Baqar, Justice Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Justice Amin-ud-Din Khan. There is therefore no judgment that commands the support of the majority of the Judges who heard and decided the review petitions and are still on the Court. In this situation, the (with respect) purported signing of the Four Member Judgment by our retired learned colleague can potentially have a material legal effect. It is not of no legal consequence or significance, and it is not merely by way of a courtesy or a (legally) empty gesture, as was the situation in the second cited case. (The first cited case is of course irrelevant for present purposes.) If the signature of our retired learned colleague is regarded as having legal effect then the situation may be materially altered. This is so because the Four Member Judgment will now have the support of a plurality (five Judges). That of course would still not be a majority, and in and of itself the Four Member Judgment would not be the judgment of the Court. However, now that portion of its reasoning and ratio as is common with the judgment of Justice Yahya Afridi would command the support of a bare majority (six Judges). This commonality would then be the operative judgment or ratio of the Court. As is obvious this would produce a situation materially different from (indeed, at odds with) the two cases cited by way of precedent. There an operative ratio or judgment of the Court came about without taking the retired Judge(s) into any account whatsoever. Here, it would only be with the inclusion of our retired learned colleague that an operative ratio or judgment of the Court could come about; without him it would be impossible. The circumstances of the cited cases were not at all the same as the situation here. They cannot therefore offer any support for the conclusion sought to be drawn in, and what was done through, para 55. I have already set out, in para 89 above, the general rule. In view of the same our learned retired colleague could not, in law, have signed the Four Member Judgment. With respect, his purported act of doing so, and expression of agreement, are in law non est and of no legal consequence, effect or operation. The Four Member Judgment remains precisely that: a judgment that has the support of only four of the Judges who heard and decided the review petitions. It further follows from this that the reasoning and ratio as is common between the Four Member Judgment and the judgment of Justice Yahya Afridi has the support of only a plurality, i.e., five Judges. Since even the commonality does not command the support of the majority it is not the judgment or ratio of the Court.

99. It is obvious that one consequence of the conclusion just reached is that there is no operative reasoning or ratio of the Court. Of course, there is an operative order in the field which, as explained above, is that what was common between the two short orders. It is not therefore the situation that the decision is bereft of any legal effect at all. Rather, the result is that the legally operative "short order" (i.e., the commonality) is not supported by any operative judgment (i.e., reasoning or ratio). This result is certainly startling. It has been brought about by a highly unusual confluence of three facts: that these matters were heard by an even numbered Bench; the decision was by short order for which there was an operative (though bare) majority in terms as explained above; before the detailed reasons could be released one of the Judges retired. That is what the position is. It cannot be altered by the expedient, as it were, of bringing back the retired learned Judge to temporarily fill the office that he has long since vacated. Each of the three judgments has its own ratio and reasoning. There may even be a ratio and reasoning that is supported by a plurality. But that is the extent of it. There is nothing that commands the support of even a bare majority. There is no ratio or reasoning that has operative effect as being that of the Court. With respect, it therefore necessarily follows that neither the Four Member Judgment nor that of Justice Yahya Afridi nor such reasoning or ratio as may be common between them have any binding precedential effect or value. That is where the matter ends, and that is where it must lie.

Let this note be circulated among my learned colleagues.

Talat Ishaq v. NAB PLD 2019 SC 112 ref.

M. Makhdoom Ali Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court and Mohsin Shahwani, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Sattar Awan, Spl. Prosecutor and Kashan, I.O. for Respondent.

Date of hearing: 21st October, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 27.07.2021 passed by the High Court of Sindh on his constitutional petition filed under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution"), whereby the post arrest bail has been denied to him in NAB Reference No. 17 of 2019 pending trial in the Accountability Court, Sukkur for the alleged offence of corruption and corrupt practices, as defined in section 9 and punishable under Section 10 of the National Accountability Ordinance 1999 ("NAB Ordinance").

2. Briefly stated, the allegation against the petitioner, who, having remained a Provincial Minister as well as a Federal Minister, was a "holder of public office" as defined in the NAB Ordinance, is that he, his dependents, i.e., his wives and sons, and his other benamidar own and possess assets that are disproportionate to his known sources of income and which he cannot reasonably account for. The petitioner's stance, mainly, is that all his income and assets, and that of his dependents and independent family members, are duly accounted for in their annual tax returns and declarations of assets, that the value of their assets shown by the NAB is baseless and exorbitant, and that the properties of his alleged benamidar are not his. The petitioner also relies upon the closure of earlier investigation on the same allegations by the then Chairman, NAB and approval of that closure by the High Court in the case reported as Syed Khursheed Ahmad Shah v. National Accountability Bureau (SBLR 2014 Sindh 821).

3. The High Court has declined grant of the relief prayed for to the petitioner with the findings that the incriminating material available on record is "sufficient to connect the petitioner, prima facie, with the alleged offence", and that the delay in conclusion of the trial is "attributable to the petitioner and other co-accused."

4. The learned counsel for the petitioner has submitted that the said findings of the High Court are against the material available on record of the case and are thus perverse and arbitrary - legally not sustainable. On the other hand, the learned counsel for the respondents/NAB has made submissions supporting the impugned order.

5. We have considered the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties, read the case law cited and perused the record of the case. We are only to make a tentative assessment of the material available on record to decide whether there is, or is not, available on record such incriminating material which provides reasonable grounds for believing that the petitioner (accused) is guilty of the alleged offence. This standard of making tentative assessment of the material available on record for deciding the question of detaining an accused in prison, or releasing him on bail, during his trial for the alleged offence under the NAB Ordinance is not borrowed from section 497, Cr.P.C. rather, as held by this Court in the recently decided case of Muhammad Iqbal Khan Noori v. National Accountability Bureau (PLD 2021 SC 916), it emanates from the fundamental rights to liberty, dignity, fair trial and protection against arbitrary detention guaranteed by the Constitution and from the operational scheme of the NAB Ordinance. Needless to mention that this constitutional standard of "reasonable grounds" for depriving a person from his said fundamental rights is to be read in all laws dealing or interfering with his liberty. The material on which tentative assessment is to be made by the court includes material both for and against the accused collected during investigation: see Khalid Javed v. State (PLD 1978 SC 256).

6. Although the NAB has not referred to the substantial material as to the assets of the petitioner and his family members and their sources of income which has now been collected and was not available with the NAB in the earlier investigation, still we have made a fresh tentative assessment of the material available on record of the case, in the interest of justice, to satisfy ourselves whether there is incriminating material available on record which provides reasonable grounds for believing that the petitioner is guilty of the alleged offence. Having done so, we find that there is no sufficient incriminating material to show that the properties held by the persons who are not the family members of the petitioner, but are alleged to be his benamidar, are actually of the petitioner. Although, as held by the constitutional courts of the country that a number of factors are to be considered to determine the question whether a particular transaction is benami in character yet perhaps the most crucial factors, in the criminal law context are: (i) who is in actual possession, or control of possession, of the property, and (ii) who receives the profits arising out of the property. The NAB has failed to deal with these factors nor has pointed out to us, any material, which could reasonably show that the properties alleged to be held by the petitioner, in name of other persons, as his benamidar, are in his actual or constructive possession and/or he receives the profits of those properties.

7. So far as the value of the assets/properties in names of the petitioner and of his family members are concerned, we find that the NAB has determined the same by rejecting their value mentioned in the registered sale deeds without any solid lawful basis, to make a case that their assets are disproportionate to their known sources of income. What is more disturbing is that it has not been specified whether the value determined by the NAB is that of the time when the said properties were purchased by the petitioner and his family members, or the same is their current value. Needless to mention that it is the value of the property at the time of its purchase which is to be compared with the known sources of income of the purchaser at the time of that purchase for determining whether or not the purchase of that property is disproportionate to his sources of income. Further, the NAB has not estimated the agricultural income of the petitioner in accordance with the provisions of rule 3 of the West Pakistan Land Revenue Assessment Rules 1968, nor has included the same in his known sources of the income. As for the transactions of amount credited and debited in the bank accounts of the petitioner and his family members, the petitioner has taken the stance that all the said accounts are disclosed and accounted for in their annual income tax returns and declarations of assets, and the NAB has not pointed out any material available on record to rebut that stance of the petitioner. There is thus no such tangible, sufficient incriminating material available on record of the case against the petitioner which would lead to inference of the guilt of the petitioner for commission of the offence alleged against him; there are, therefore, at this stage no reasonable grounds for believing that the petitioner is guilty of the alleged offence.

8. While the petitioner is found entitled to the grant of bail on merits as discussed above, even as to the delay in conclusion of the trial he cannot be blamed therefor. The petitioner was arrested in the present case on 18.09.2019 and facing trial on an interim reference. Since his arrest a period of more than two years has lapsed but the NAB is yet to file the final reference, thus, the conclusion of the trial is not in sight for no fault of the petitioner. Such a long delay does constitute "inordinate and unconscionable delay", as held in Talat Ishaq v. National Accountability Bureau (PLD 2019 SC 112), justifying the release on bail of the petitioner pending his trial even on this ground as well. It must be remembered that in criminal law, everybody including the co-accused is liable only for his own acts and omissions, not of others. Even otherwise, in a case where the NAB has been unable to show sufficient incriminating material to the Court to justify the detention of the accused, depriving the accused of his liberty and freedom even for a single day is, to say the least, unconscionable and below human dignity.

9. In view of the above tentative findings, we are of the considered view that the further detention of the petitioner in the present case would be without lawful authority and in breach of his fundamental rights, and that it was a fit case for exercise of constitutional jurisdiction by the High Court, under Article 199 of the Constitution, to make an order for release of the petitioner on bail till decision of the case. The High Court has not exercised its discretion judiciously and reasonably. We, therefore, convert this petition into appeal and allow the same. We set aside the impugned order, accept the constitutional petition of the petitioner and make order that the petitioner shall be released on bail subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.10 million with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the Trial Court. Needless to say that the observations made in this order are tentative and shall not influence the trial court while concluding the case after recording evidence.

10. Foregoing are the reasons for our short order dated 21.10.2021, which is reproduced hereunder for completion of record.

> "For reasons to be recorded later, this petition is converted into appeal and allowed. The petitioner is granted bail on the merits of the case subject to his furnishing bail bonds in the sum of Rs.10/- million with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the learned Trial Court. The name of the petitioner shall be placed on the ECL subject to appropriate relief that may be granted by the learned Accountability Court on account of exigencies in his case."

Per Mansoor Ali Shah, J [Majority view]:

Before an accused is burdened with a criminal liability under the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 ( the Act ) of possessing the alleged narcotic drug, a representative sample of that alleged narcotic drug must be drawn and dispatched to be tested and analyzed by the Government Analyst. Testing and analysis of the alleged narcotic drug is a sine qua non for holding the accused liable under the Act, and the accused cannot be saddled with any liability under the Act unless the report of the Government Analyst is in the affirmative. As the severity of the punishment under the Act varies with the quantity of the narcotic drug recovered, it is therefore essential for the prosecution to establish that the entire alleged narcotic drug stood tested and analyzed by the Government Analyst by drawing representative sample(s) of the alleged narcotic drug. The test and analysis of the representative sample of an alleged narcotic drug amounts to test and analysis of the entire quantity of that narcotic drug. The acts of taking and testing of the representative sample become critical as they feed the assumption that the entire quantity from which the sample was drawn stands tested and analyzed. Therefore, the sample to be representative must be drawn for each and every physically independent and separate unit of the alleged narcotic drug recovered from the accused. A separate and independent unit of the alleged narcotic drug cannot be left out from test and analysis on the assumption that a representative sample has been drawn from other similar physically independent and separate units of the alleged narcotic. drug. Any such assumption would offend the fundamental right to fair trial and due process of the accused guaranteed under Article 10A of the Constitution, besides militating against the safe administration of justice.

State v. Iman Bakhsh 2018 SCMR 2039 and Ameer Zeb v. The State PLD 2012 SC 380 ref.

Right to fair trial of the accused under Article 10A of the Constitution requires that the sample drawn from the alleged narcotic drug must be truly representative of the alleged narcotic drug recovered and therefore must be drawn from all the physically separate and independent units of the alleged narcotic drug.

The representative sample can only retain its representative character and be also constitutional compliant, if it is drawn from every physically separate and independent unit of the alleged narcotic drug.

Per Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, J [Minority view]:

Emphasis laid down in the case reported as Ameer Zeb v. The State (PLD 2012 SC 380) is to ensure representative character of the forensic sample and for that it is not essential that every micro part of the contraband in single packet is to be separated for analysis nor is so contemplated by the Control of Narcotic Substances (Government Analysts) Rules, 2001, which even otherwise are merely directory in nature.

Arshad Hussain Yousafzai, Advocate Supreme Court for the State.

Date of hearing: 28th February, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Upon suspicion, the appellant was apprehended by Police, and 25,000 grams of charas was allegedly recovered from the "bori" (big bag) he was carrying on his head. 25 packets of charas were found in the "bori", each packet carrying 14 slabs of charas, and every packet was weighed to be of 1000 grams. In this background, the appellant was booked in case FIR No.1 dated 01.01.2013 registered at Police Station City, Mansehra for the alleged commission of offence punishable under section 9(c) of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 ("CNSA"), for being in possession of 25,000 grams of charas.

2. After a regular trial, the appellant was convicted and sentenced by the trial court to life imprisonment and fine of Rs.200,000/- or in default to suffer simple imprisonment for a term of six months. Benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. was extended to him. On appeal, the said conviction and sentence was up-held by the High Court vide impugned judgment dated 10.02.2016. Leave to appeal was granted by this Court, vide order dated 21.04.2020, to examine whether the courts below have correctly examined the case in the light of State v. Iman Bakhsh (2018 SCMR 2039) and Ameer Zeb v. The State (PLD 2012 SC 380).

3. The main contention of the learned counsel for the appellant is that the samples taken by the Police and sent to the FSL for analysis were not the representative samples of the narcotic drug (charas) allegedly recovered from the appellant; as a result, the appellant could not be burdened with the liability of the entire quantity (weight) of the alleged narcotic drug. He explains that 25 packets of charas were allegedly recovered from the appellant, while every packet had 14 slabs of charas; however, the representative sample collected was only 5 grams charas from each packet, not from every slab found in each packet, which was sent to the FSL and the positive report of the FSL is only with regard to that sample. He submits that the samples had to be taken from each of the 14 slabs allegedly found in each of the 25 packets. He relies, in support of his contention, on the Ameer Zeb s case.

4. Learned counsel for the State, however, supports the impugned judgment and submits that the samples taken were representative in nature and were taken from each of the 25 packets, and there was no further requirement of obtaining samples from every slab of the charas within the 25 packets.

5. We have considered the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties, read the cases cited by the learned counsel for the appellant and examined the record of the case.

6. Section 36 of CNSA provides that a sample of the narcotic drug has to be submitted with the Government Analyst for the test and analysis, while Rule 4 of the Control of Narcotics Substances (Government Analyst) Rules, 2001 ("Rules") provides that reasonable quantity of samples from the narcotic drug shall be drawn and dispatched to the testing laboratory. According to the Ameer Zeb s case, which is a decision of a five-member larger Bench of this Court and thus has the binding effect on this three-member Bench, a representative sample is to be collected from every packet/cake/slab of the alleged narcotic drug and sent for analysis to the Chemical Examiner. The relevant portion of the Ameer Zeb s case is reproduced here for ready reference:

> "...It is our considered opinion that a sample taken of a recovered substance must be a representative sample of the entire substance recovered and if no sample is taken from any particular packet/cake/slab or if different samples taken from different packets/cakes/slabs are not kept separately for their separate analysis by the Chemical Examiner then the sample would not be a representative sample and it would be unsafe to rely on the mere word of mouth of the prosecution witnesses regarding the substance of which no sample has been taken or tested being narcotic substance. It may be true that at least in some situations the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 stipulates disproportionately long and harsh sentences and, therefore, for the purposes of safe administration of criminal justice some minimum standards of safety are to be laid down so as to strike a balance between the prosecution and the defence and to obviate chances of miscarriage of justice on account of exaggeration by the investigating agency. Such minimum standards of safety are even otherwise necessary for safeguarding the Fundamental Rights of the citizens regarding life and liberty which cannot be left at the mercy of verbal assertions of police officers which assertions are not supported by independent evidence provided by a Chemical Examiner.

Thus, in the present case, as every packet contained 14 slabs of the alleged charas, the narcotic drug, samples had to be collected from each and every slab present in the 25 packets.

7. The underlining principle that emerges from the reading of the Act, Rules and the Ameer Zeb s case is that before an accused is burdened with a criminal liability under the Act of possessing the alleged narcotic drug, a representative sample of that alleged narcotic drug must be drawn and dispatched to be tested and analyzed by the Government Analyst. Testing and analysis of the alleged narcotic drug is a sine qua non for holding the accused liable under the Act, and the accused cannot be saddled with any liability under the Act unless the report of the Government Analyst is in the affirmative. As the severity of the punishment under the Act varies with the quantity of the narcotic drug recovered, it is therefore essential for the prosecution to establish that the entire alleged narcotic drug stood tested and analyzed by the Government Analyst by drawing representative sample(s) of the alleged narcotic drug. The test and analysis of the representative sample of an alleged narcotic drug amounts to test and analysis of the entire quantity of that narcotic drug. The acts of taking and testing of the representative sample become critical as they feed the assumption that the entire quantity from which the sample was drawn stands tested and analyzed. Therefore, the sample to be representative must be drawn for each and every physically independent and separate unit of the alleged narcotic drug recovered from the accused. A separate and independent unit of the alleged narcotic drug cannot be left out from test and analysis on the assumption that a representative sample has been drawn from other similar physically independent and separate units of the alleged narcotic drug. Any such assumption would offend the fundamental right to fair trial and due process of the accused guaranteed under Article 10A of the Constitution, besides militating against the safe administration of justice. Right to fair trial of the accused under Article 10A of the Constitution requires that the sample drawn from the alleged narcotic drug must be truly representative of the alleged narcotic drug recovered and therefore must be drawn from all the physically separate and independent units of the alleged narcotic drug. In this regard, the mode of packaging of the alleged narcotic drug by the accused is totally inconsequential; for example, in this case each of the 25 packets have 14 slabs of the alleged narcotic drug, which could have easily been re-packaged as separate 350 packets with one slab each of the alleged narcotic drug or one big packet of 350 slabs of the alleged narcotic drug. The representative sample can only retain its representative character and be also constitutional compliant, if it is drawn from every physically separate and independent unit of the alleged narcotic drug.

8. In the present case, 25 packets were recovered, each having 14 separate slabs of the alleged narcotic drug; thus, in fact, there were 350 (25 x 14) separate physically independent units of the alleged narcotic drug. In order to burden the appellant with the liability of the entire quantity of the alleged narcotic drug recovered, the representative sample had to be taken from every physically separate and independent unit of the alleged narcotic drug, i.e., from all the 350 slabs of the alleged narcotic drug recovered from the appellant. In this case, 25 samples of 5 grams were collected from each of the 25 packets, without specifying whether it was taken from one slab out of the 14 found in each packet, or that each 5-gram sample was obtained from all of the 14 slabs found in one packet. The prosecution has not even argued that the representative sample was taken from each of the 350 slabs, rather it is an admitted fact on part of the prosecution that 5-gram sample was taken from only one slab out of the 14 found in each packet. Thus, the prosecution is found to have proved only those parts of the charas allegedly recovered from the appellant to be the narcotic drug of which samples were taken and sent for analysis to the FSL, that is, about 1785 grams,1 not 25,000 grams as alleged.

9. According to the report dated 24.02.2022 received from the Superintendent, Central Prison, Haripur, the appellant has already served 9-years, 1-Month and 20-Days in prison. In view of the proved quantity of the charas recovered from the appellant, as being a narcotic drug, i.e., 1785 grams, we while maintaining the conviction of the appellant reduce his sentence to imprisonment for the term already undergone while retaining the fine of Rs.200,000/- or in default to suffer simple imprisonment for a term of six months and the benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C as held by the trial court. This appeal is partly allowed in these terms.

10. Foregoing are the reasons for the majority view of short order dated 28.2.2022, which is reproduced hereunder:--

> For reasons to be recorded separately and by majority of two-to one (Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmad, J., dissenting), this criminal appeal is partly allowed in the terms that conviction of the appellant is maintained while the sentence awarded to him is reduced to imprisonment for a term already undergone.

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---By unanimity, we entertain no manner of doubt on appellant's guilt for being in possession of cannabis weighing 25000 grams on the eventful day, nonetheless, opinion divides on quantum of sentence having regard to the number of samples, dispatched to the Chemical Examiner for forensic analysis so as to be in line with the law declared by this Court in the case of Ameer Zaib (PLD 2012 Supreme Court 380).

My profound admiration for his vast and versatile erudition in law, notwithstanding, I have not been able to persuade myself to subscribe to the opinion proposed by Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. with the concurrence of Sardar Tariq Masood, J.

2. The dissent for its contextual clarity necessitates, a reference to the facts, at the cost of some repetition, hopefully tolerable. The prosecution successfully established that the appellant was intercepted by a police contingent within the remit of Police Station City Mansehra with a sack that contained 25 packets, each weighing 1000 grams of cannabis wherefrom 5 grams were separated and sealed for forensic analysis; the contraband is vividly described in the seizure memo, reproduced in extenso for the convenience of reference:--

It unmistakably confirms that the contraband in each packet comprised of integrated layers, inseparably constituting a composite unit and, thus, 5 grams separated from the corner of each packet squarely presented a representative sample to qualify the riders laid down in the supra case, relevant portion whereof, is advantageously reproduced to substantiate the above legal position:-

> "In our considered opinion that a sample taken of a recovered substance must be a representative sample of the entire substance recovered and if no sample is taken from any particular packet/cake/slab or if different samples taken from different packets/cakes/s labs are not kept separately for their separate analysis by the Chemical Examiner then the sample would not be a representative sample "

In the present case samples were not only taken from each packet, these were kept separately for analysis that unambiguously confirmed the narcotic character of the seized contraband and, thus, through no mode of interpretation it can be possibly inferred that the remainder of the parcel was made up of a substance other than cannabis. The emphasis laid down in the supra case is to ensure representative character of the forensic sample and for that it is not essential that every micro part of the contraband in single packet is to be separated for analysis nor is so contemplated by the rules, referred to in the majority opinion, even otherwise merely directory in nature.

The menace of drugs, spreading ubiquitously, targeting our youth has jeopardized the very fabric of the society; it poses existential threat that must be combated with a pragmatic and dynamic judicial response, a responsibility in accord with the legislative intent, articulated under section 29 of the Control of Narcotic Substances Act, 1997 and, thus, in the absence of any express position taken by the convict during the trial to prove the contrary, the proposed reduction in his sentence, in my estimation, is a concession neither conscionable nor expedient.

3. The prosecution has established each limb of its case on the strength of "proof beyond doubt" from safe custody to transmission for forensic confirmation; there is no space to entertain any hypothesis other than appellant's guilt. Sentence awarded to the appellant is mandatory in view of proviso to section 9 of the Act ibid. Appeal fails.

MWA/S-12/SC Order accordingly.

1 Total quantity of 25 packets containing 14 slabs each weighs 25000 grams. Average weight of one slab = 71 grams (14 x 25 + 35 = 350 slabs. 25000/350 = 71 grams). 25 slabs actually tested and analysed weigh = 1785 grams (71 x 25)

----Ss. 4, 5 & 6---Minimum rate of wages, revision of---Provincial Government cannot itself revise the minimum rates of wages; it can only be done on the recommendation of the Minimum Wages Board ( Board )---Sindh Minimum Wages Act, 2015 has made it obligatory for the Government to act on the recommendation of the Board on all occasions of fixation as well as revision of minimum wages.

The (Provincial) Government could only declare the minimum rates of wages on the recommendation of the Minimum Wages Board ( Board ).

The power of the Government to declare the minimum rates of wages has been qualified to be exercised on the recommendation of the Board. The words subject to such exceptions as may be specified in the notification used in section 6(1)(a) of the Sindh Minimum Wages Act, 2015 ( the Act ) and subject to such modifications and exceptions as may be specified in the notification used in section 6(3) of the Act may refer to exceptions, or modifications in the exceptions, that could be created in view of various classes of workers or industry and should not be understood to mean that the Government could itself alter the minimum rates of wages recommended by the Board in view of a detailed and exhaustive mechanism for fixation of the minimum rates of wages spelled out in sections 4, 5 and 6 the Act.

The Act has made it obligatory for the Government to act on the recommendation of the Board on all occasions of fixation as well as revision of minimum wages. The revision of minimum wage is to be done according to the policy and mechanism laid down in the Act. The Government cannot go against the provisions of the Act and arrogate to itself the function entrusted to the Board.

(b) Sindh Minimum Wages Act, 2015 (VIII of 2016)---

----Ss. 4, 5 & 6 & Preamble---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 3, 9, 14, 37(a) & 38(a)---Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR), Art. 23---Minimum wage---Importance of minimum wage stated.

Minimum wage laws help ensure justice at work. The minimum wage has remained a core element of public policy and the International Labour Organization (ILO) designated the minimum wage as an international labour standard. [p. 304] E

Minimum wage is a primary measure of the social value of work; they bring a change in workplace power balance by giving workers rights vis- -vis employers; and they require employers and consumers to internalize costs of increased wages

The requirement of establishing equitable and egalitarian work based social structures is a Constitutional command. The Constitution emphasizes on distributive justice with constitutional values of social, economic and political justice. It calls for elimination of exploitation and enjoins to protect the economic interests of the workers and ensure equitable adjustment of rights between employers and employees. Right to life including right to livelihood under Article 9 ensures just and favourable remuneration for workers. Right to dignity under Article 14 ensures decent work for workers i.e., working conditions and wages that enhance rather than undermine workers self-respect and social standing. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights also provides that remuneration must be paid to each worker to ensure an existence worthy of human dignity.

Wage fixation is an important social welfare measure to be determined in the light of the economic reality of the situation and the minimum needs of the worker with an eye to the preservation of his efficiency as a worker. It is a delicate task, a fine balance is to be achieved. The demands of social justice, necessitating that the workers receive their proper share in the national income they help to produce, need to be balanced against the depletion, every increase in wages brings in the profits of the industry. The central character in this process remains the worker who deserves to get a fair share in the deal, as far as that can be, without at the same time impinging on the vital interests of the industry whose continuity and success are also the mainstay of labour. Minimum wage may preferably be fixed at a level that is capable of meeting a worker s basic living needs and those of his family, for housing, nourishment, education, health, leisure, clothing, hygiene, transportation and social security, with periodic adjustments to maintain its purchasing power. With the growth and development of national economy, living standards improve and therefore notions about minimum wage need to be more progressive.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The case stems from Notification dated 09.07.2021 ("Notification") issued by the Labour and Human Resource Department, the Government of Sindh ("Government"), under Section 4(1) read with Section 6 (1) (a) of the Sindh Minimum Wages Act, 2015 ("Act"), raising the minimum rates of wages for unskilled adult and juvenile workers employed in all industrial/ commercial establishments in the Province of Sindh to Rs. 25,000/- per month with effect from 01.07.2021.

2. The petitioners are the employers, or organizations of employers, running different industrial/ commercial establishments in the Province of Sindh and are aggrieved of the Notification for the reason that the minimum rates of wages could only be declared on the recommendation of the Minimum Wages Board ("Board") and that the Government and its line Department did not have the authority to itself decide the minimum rates of wages in disregard of the recommendation of the Board. Their challenge to the Notification remained unsuccessful before the High Court of Sindh.

3. We consider in this case whether the Government could itself revise the minimum rates of wages or could it be done only on the recommendation of the Board. For this purpose, it is necessary to refer briefly to relevant provisions of the Act. The Act provides for the regulation of the minimum rates of wages for different categories of workers employed in certain industrial and commercial undertakings and establishments. Under section 3 of the Act, the Government is required to constitute a five member Board with equal representation of employers and workers, one member each to represent the employers and workers, one member each to represent the employer and worker connected with or engaged in such industry plus one independent member who is to serve as chair. Sections 4, 5 and 6 of the Act provide the mechanism for fixation of the minimum rates of wages. The Government, under Section 4 of the Act, makes a reference to the Board and the Board, after such enquiry as it may deem fit, recommends to the Government the minimum rates of wages for adult, skilled and unskilled workers and juvenile and adolescent workers employed in industrial establishments or commercial establishments or both. Section 5 of the Act relates to recommendation of the minimum rates of wages for workers with respect to particular industries. Section 6 provides that the Government may, on receipt of a recommendation of the Board under section 4 or section 5, declare that the minimum rates of wages recommended by the Board for the various workers shall, subject to any exceptions, be the minimum rates of wages.1 Alternatively, if the Government considers that the recommendation of the Board is not, in any respect, equitable to the employers or the workers, it may within thirty days refer the recommendation back to the Board for reconsideration.2 In such an event, the Board is bound to reconsider the recommendation taking into account any comments made and information given by the Government and submit to the Government a revised recommendation3 or the Board could make a report to the Government that no revision or change in the recommendation is called for, stating reasons therefor.4 The Government may then subject to any modifications and exceptions notify the minimum rates of wages as per the fresh recommendation whether revised by the Board or not.5 Any further revision of the minimum rates of wages notified by the Government under section 6 of the Act is also to be based on the recommendation of the Board.6 The Board is also required to periodically review its recommendations if a change in the economic conditions, cost of living and other relevant facts so demand. Such a review is to be considered as recommendation under section 4 or section 5, as the case may be, of the Act.7

4. It is thus evident of the relevant provisions of the Act that the power of the Government to declare the minimum rates of wages has been qualified to be exercised on the recommendation of the Board. We deem it necessary to clarify that the words "subject to such exceptions as may be specified in the notification" used in section 6(1)(a) and "subject to such modifications and exceptions as may be specified in the notification" used in Section 6(3) of the Act may refer to exceptions, or modifications in the exceptions, that could be created in view of "various" classes of workers or industry and should not be understood to mean that the Government could itself alter the minimum rates of wages recommended by the Board in view of a detailed and exhaustive mechanism for fixation of the minimum rates of wages spelled out in Sections 4, 5 and 6 the Act. In this case, the Government decided to revisit the minimum rates of wages and the Board recommended that the minimum rates of wages be increased to Rs. 19,000/- per month. The Government not agreeing with the recommendation of the Board and without sending the matter back to the Board as mandated by the Act, proceeded on its own to issue the Notification after increasing the minimum rates of wages to Rs. 25,000/- per month.

5. In case of disagreement between the Board and the Government, the Act provided a way out: the Government could within thirty days of the receipt of recommendation return it to the Board for reconsideration along with any comments and information, and the Board would be bound to reconsider its recommendation. It could revise it or stick to its earlier recommendation subject to justifying it with supporting reasons. In essence, the Government could only declare the minimum rates of wages on the recommendation of the Board. However, the Government chose to bypass the statutory mechanism by assuming the power vested, under the Act, in the Board and proceeded to declare the minimum rates of wages.

6. The Act has made it obligatory for the Government to act on the recommendation of the Board on all occasions of fixation as well as revision of minimum wages. The employers and the workers have equal representation on the Board in addition to an independent member who acts as chairperson and is expected to take a fair, disinterested and non-partisan view of the matter. The procedure acts as a check against any arbitrary or capricious decision-making by the Government and ensures that the minimum rates of wages be determined in an objective and participatory manner by an independent Board.

7. It is emphasized that we are concerned with the legality, and not the merits of the decision of the Government. No matter how noble the purpose or objective be, the Government cannot skirt around the mandate granted by the legislature. The Act makes the Government responsible for fixing the minimum rates of wages in certain industrial undertakings. It is the Government that takes cognizance of the circumstances necessitating fixation of the minimum rates of wages and sets the ball rolling by either referring the question of fixation of the minimum rates of wages to the Board under Section 4 of the Act or directing the Board under Section 5 of the Act to make recommendations on the said rates of wages and then the Government accepts the recommendations of the Board with or without exceptions or modifications or sends it back for reconsideration. Once the Board submits its recommendations to the Government, the Government cannot but act in a manner prescribed under Section 6 of the Act.8

8. Taking into consideration the provisions of the Act and the objective behind it, we are of the view that the Government travelled beyond its authority to encroach upon the mandate of the Board and issued the Notification without lawful authority. At the same time, it needs to be said that we are not unmoved by the considerations which urged the Government to issue the Notification. Rather, we do appreciate the concern shown by the Government for the welfare of the workers. However, the revision of minimum wage is to be done according to the policy and mechanism laid down in the Act. The Government cannot go against the provisions of the Act and arrogate to itself the function entrusted to the Board.

9. We are conscious of the fact that minimum wage laws help ensure justice at work.9 The minimum wage has remained a core element of public policy and the International Labour Organization (ILO) designated the minimum wage as an international labour standard.10 Minimum wages were originally proposed as a means to combat the proliferation of so-called sweatshops in manufacturing industries and to ensure that the workers received a fair wage for their work.11 Minimum wage is a primary measure of the social value of work; they bring a change in workplace power balance by giving workers rights vis- -vis employers; and they require employers and consumers to internalize costs of increased wages.12 In like manner, the Act seeks to ensure decent work for the workers. More importantly, the requirement of establishing equitable and egalitarian work based social structures is a constitutional command. Our Constitution emphasizes on distributive justice with constitutional values of social, economic and political justice. It calls for "elimination of exploitation"13 and enjoins to protect the "economic interests"14 of the workers and ensure "equitable adjustment of rights between employers and employees."15 Right to life including right to livelihood under Article 9 ensures just and favourable remuneration for workers. Right to dignity under Article 14 ensures decent work for workers i.e., working conditions and wages that enhance rather than undermine workers' self-respect and social standing. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights also provides that remuneration must be paid to each worker to ensure "an existence worthy of human dignity."16

10. Wage fixation is an important social welfare measure to be determined in the light of the economic reality of the situation and the minimum needs of the worker with an eye to the preservation of his efficiency as a worker. It is a delicate task, a fine balance is to be achieved. The demands of social justice, necessitating that the workers receive their proper share in the national income they help to produce, need to be balanced against the depletion, every increase in wages brings in the profits of the industry. The central character in this process remains the worker who deserves to get a fair share in the deal, as far as that can be, without at the same time impinging on the vital interests of the industry whose continuity and success are also the mainstay of labour.17 It is so because it is the worker for whose benefit the Act has primarily been promulgated. Minimum wage may preferably be fixed at a level that is "capable of meeting a worker's basic living needs and those of his family, for housing, nourishment, education, health, leisure, clothing, hygiene, transportation and social security, with periodic adjustments to maintain its purchasing power."18 We also recognize that with the growth and development of national economy, living standards improve and therefore our notions about minimum wage need to be more progressive.

11. For what has been discussed above, we convert these petitions into appeals and allow the same, the impugned judgment of the High Court is set aside, the constitutional petitions of the petitioners are accepted and the Notification is declared to have been issued by the Government without lawful authority and having no legal effect.

12. The objections, if any, of the Government to the recommendations made by the Board for the minimum wage to be Rs. 19,000/- per month may be taken up by the Government with the Board in accordance with Section 6(1)(b) of the Act. Given these circumstances, the Government and the Board shall endeavour to resolve the matter of appropriate minimum wage enforced in the Province with effect from 01.07.2021 within a period of two months from the receipt of this judgement. In the alternative, the Government may, if so inclined, issue a notification in accordance with the said recommendations in exercise of its power under Section 6 (1) (a) of the Act.

13. Till the final resolution of the matter, as there is no material objection by the petitioners to pay a minimum wage of Rs. 19,000/- per month, as recommended by the Board, we direct that subject to the final notification issued by the Government, the recommendations of the Board fixing a minimum wage of. Rs. 19,000/- per month shall be payable by the employers to their eligible workers w.e.f. 01.07.2021. MWA/F-3/SC Order accordingly.

(a) Pakistan Engineering Council Act (V of 1976)---

----Ss. 3A & 25A(c)---B.Sc. (Engineering) program, admission to---Candidates with Diploma of Associate Engineers ("DAE")---Reserved quota of 2% imposed by the Pakistan Engineering Council for admission---Legality---Pakistan Engineering Council or its Governing Body is not empowered to restrict the admission of candidates with Diploma of Associate Engineers ("DAE") to the B.Sc. (Engineering) program by reserving 2% seats for them---Candidates holding an F.Sc. degree and DAE holders were to apply through open competition for a position in B.Sc. (Engineering), and there was no reserved quota for DAE holders---Both the said degrees are at par for admission into B.Sc. (Engineering)---Decision of Pakistan Engineering Council fixing 2% reserved seats for DAE holders is not only unsustainable under the Pakistan Engineering Council Act, 1976 but is also discriminatory.

There is no provision in section 8 of the Pakistan Engineering Council Act, 1976 ('the 1976 Act') that authorizes the Pakistan Engineering Council ('the Council') to reserve admission seats to an engineering program. In the absence of any such power available with the Council, the Governing Body, which under section 3A, exercising the powers of the Council, is also unable to impose such a condition. Perusal of sections 8 and 25A of the 1976 Act shows that the Council or the Governing Body has no power or authority to prescribe reserved seats for DAE for admission into any engineering program.

Decision of the Council reflected in its letter dated 25.03.2015 provides that the Governing Body of the Council has reserved seats upto a maximum of 2% for holders of DAE eligible for admission to B.Sc. (Engineering) program offered by the Engineering Institutions. This decision of the Governing Body does not find support from section 8 or 25A of the 1976 Act.

Other than the fact that the Council or the Governing Body has no power to impose such a condition (of 2% reserved quota), it is also ex-facie discriminatory against the DAE holders, especially when they are considered eligible for the B.Sc. (Engineering) Program along with the F.Sc. degree holders.

Both the holders of F.Sc. and DAE are considered eligible qualifications for the purposes of seeking admission to the B.Sc. (Engineering) program under Article 2 of the 'Regulations for Engineering Education in Pakistan' ('the Regulations'). In the absence of any power to reserve seats for admission to the B.Sc. (Engineering) program, both the set of candidates with F.Sc. and DAE have to be treated at par. This parity is created by equal eligibility of DAE for admission. Therefore, the decision of PEC dated 25-

03-2015 fixing 2% reserved seats for DAE holders is not only unsustainable under the 1976 Act but is also discriminatory. Since the Council cannot reserve seats for any program, the condition of "reserved seats" by the Governing Body under Article 2(c) of the Regulations is also illegal, ultra vires the 1976 Act, having no legal effect.

The best way forward is to allow admissions to B.Sc. (Engineering) on open merit and through open competition amongst the F.Sc. and DAE holders. Such a level playing field encourages competition and allows the best of the best amongst the F.Sc. and DAE to be admitted to the B.Sc. (Engineering) Program. Petitions for leave to appeal were converted into appeals and allowed.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question that has come up for our determination is whether the Pakistan Engineering Council ("PEC") constituted under the Pakistan Engineering Council Act, 1976 ("Act") is empowered to restrict the admission of candidates with Diploma of Associate Engineers ("DAE") to the B.Sc. (Engineering) program by reserving 2% seats for them, as opposed to allowing them to apply on open merit for the said program, like the candidates holding an F.Sc. degree. PEC has imposed the said restriction through its decision communicated vide letter dated 25.03.2015, which has been the main bone of contention between the parties and the main subject of challenge before us.

2. The grievance of the petitioners, who are holders of DAE, having secured more than 81% marks, is that instead of allowing them to apply and be considered on open merit in the B.Sc. (Engineering) program, the impugned decision of PEC dated 25.03.2015 has reserved 2% seats for DAE seeking admission in the B.Sc (Engineering), a power which the PEC does not enjoy under the Act. The learned Single Judge of the High Court allowed the writ petitions of the petitioners holding that the PEC has no authority to reserve seats for the holders of the DAE seeking admission in B.Sc. (Engineering). However, the learned Division Bench of the High Court overturned the decision of the learned Single Judge through the impugned judgment dated 30.11.2020 upholding the restriction of 2% reserved seats for DAE holders applying for admission to the B.Sc. (Engineering) program, hence these petitions.

3. The primary argument of the learned counsel for the petitioners has been that under the Act there is no power with the PEC to reserve seats for DAEs for admission to the B.Sc. Engineering Program. The prime purpose of the PEC under section 25A of the Act is to set minimum qualifications for enrollment to engineering programs and minimum standards for holding admission examinations, hence the impugned decision of PEC dated 25.03.2015 is ultra vires and violative of the Act. Learned counsel for the respondent PEC, however, supporting the impugned judgment reiterated that such a power is available under Article 2(c) of the Regulations for Engineering Education in Pakistan ("Regulations").[1]

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record with their able assistance. The decision of the PEC passed in its 15th Governing Body Meeting communicated through letter dated 25.03.2015 of the PEC, reads as follows:-

> "The maximum reserved seats for relevant DAEs admission to an engineering program shall be upto 2% of the total enrollment in the program for the universities/HEIs offering admissions to DAE students against reserved seats."

We need to examine whether PEC can reserve seats for DAE holder applying for admission into B.Sc. (Engineering). Perusal of the Act reveals that the purpose of the Act and the role of PEC is to regulate the engineering profession which includes engineering education[2] and set standards of professional competence and ethics for engineers and engineering institutions[3] as reflected from its preamble. Sections 3, 8, 9 and 25A of the Act lay down the functions of PEC; the executive power of the Governing Body to act on behalf of PEC and to make regulations. The functions of PEC provided under section 8 of the Act are reproduced hereunder for reference:

8. Functions of the Council.---The following shall be the functions of the Council, namely:---

(a) maintenance of a Register of persons qualified to work as registered engineers, professional engineers, consulting engineers, constructors and operators;

(b) accreditation of engineering qualifications for the purpose of registration of registered engineers, professional engineers;

(c) removal of names from the Register and restoration to the Register of names which have been removed;

(d) laying down of standards of conduct for the members;

(e) safeguarding the interests of the members;

(f) promotion of reforms in the engineering profession;

(g) management of the funds and properties of the Council;

(h) promotion of engineering education and review of courses of studies in consultation with the Universities;

(i) levy and collection of fees from applicants for registration or temporary licences and members;

(j) exercise of such disciplinary powers over the members and servants of the Council as may be prescribed;

(k) formation of such committees and subsidiaries as may be prescribed;

(l) assistance to the Federal Government as a Think Tank;

(m) promotion of engineering profession in totality;

(n) encouragement, facilitation and regulation of working of professional engineering bodies for creativity and as custodian of engineering under the umbrella of the Council;

(o) ensuring and managing of continued professional development through engineering academies and professional bodies;

(p) establishing standards for engineering contracts, cost and services;

(q) facilitating engineering sector industries;

(r) coordinating between various engineering forums and Federal Government;

(s) providing forum for arbitrations, pertaining to disputes in construction and consultancy contracts, and

(t) performance of all other functions connected with, or ancillary or incidental to, the aforesaid functions.

There is no provision in section 8 that authorizes the Council to reserve admission seats to an engineering program. In the absence of any such power available with the Council, the Governing Body, which under section 3, exercising the powers of the Council, is also unable to impose such a condition. Under section 25A of the Act, reproduced hereunder, the Governing Body is authorized to frame regulations:---

25A. Power to make regulations.---The Governing Body may, in consultation with the committee of Vice-Chancellors of the Universities of Engineering and Technology of Pakistan set up by the Higher Education Commission, make regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of the (sic) this Act and the bye-laws, to provide for-

(a) minimum standard of courses of study and practical training for obtaining graduate and post-graduate engineering qualifications to be included in the First and Second Schedules;

(b) minimum requirement for the content and duration of courses of study as aforesaid;

(c) minimum qualifications for admission to engineering institutions offering course of study and laying down minimum standard for holding admission examinations;

(d) qualification and experience required of teachers for appointment in engineering universities, colleges and institutions;

(e) minimum standards of examinations, and duration and standard of practical training, for securing accreditation of engineering qualifications under this Act; and

(f) qualifications and experience required of examiners for professional examinations of accredited engineering qualifications.

Perusal of the above shows that the relevant portion for admissions is section 25A(c), which authorizes the Regulations to provide for minimum qualifications for admission to engineering institutions and minimum standards for holding admission examinations. Section 25A of the Act also does not authorize the Governing Body of PEC to reserve admission seats to the B.Sc. (Engineering) program. The only restriction that can be imposed under section 25A, in the context of the present case, is the minimum qualification for admissions to an engineering institution.

5. The decision of PEC reflected in the letter dated 25.03.2015 provides that the Governing Body of the PEC has reserved seats upto a maximum of 2% for holders of DAE eligible for admission to B.Sc. (Engineering) program offered by the Engineering Institutions. This decision of the Governing Body does not find support from section 8 or 25A of the Act.

6. We now examine the Regulations. Needless to say that Regulations are framed under the Act and have to remain within the four corners of the statutory mandate of the Act. Article 2 of the Regulations provides for the minimum qualifications for admission to BSc (Engineering) programs, while the original Article 2(c) promulgated in the year 1985 provides as follows:-

(c) For admission in Engineering Institution/ University candidates who have passed Diploma of Associate Engineer shall be eligible for admission only against reserved seats.

DAE were eligible for admission only against the reserved seats. Subsequent to the decision of the Governing Body dated 25.03.2015 fixing 2% of the reserved seats for DAE holders, Article 2(c) also underwent a change and was duly amended vide SRO 417(I) of 2016 dated 14.05.2016 in the following manner:

ARTICLE 2. MINIMUM QUALIFICATION FOR ADMISSION TO ENGINEERING BACHELOR'S DEGREE PROGRAMMES OFFERED BY ENGINEERING INSTITUTIONS AND UNIVERSITIES

A candidate seeking admission in an Engineering Institution/ University for working towards Bachelor's Degree in any recognized branch of Engineering must fulfill the following minimum requirements:--

(c) (i) A candidate who has passed the Diploma of Associate Engineer (DAE) Examination, securing at least 60% aggregate marks shall be eligible for applying in admission against reserved seats in relevant discipline of Engineering in which he or she has passed the DAE examination; and the relevancy of DAE will be as determined by Accreditation Committee of this Council; and

(d) ...

While maintaining the condition of reserved seats, additional condition of obtaining 60% aggregate marks in DAE Examination was inserted as a requirement to apply against the reserved seats. Regarding the requirement for applying against reserved seats prescribed in the year 1985, we were informed by the learned counsel for the parties that prior to the amendment in Article 2(c) in 2016, the percentage of reserved seats for DAE holders was not specified and would largely vary from one Engineering Institution to another. Perhaps due to an equitable percentage of reserved seats maintained by the Engineering Institutions for the DAE, it never posed a problem earlier and hence was not challenged since 1985. The impugned restriction of 2% of reserved seats for DAE holders has highlighted the issue and has brought up the question whether admission seats can be reserved by PEC under the Act. Besides petitioners today are aggrieved by it and have challenged the same and cannot be deprived of the right to make this challenge on the ground that earlier students had not challenged the said Regulation. Perusal of sections 8 and 25A of the Act shows that the PEC or the Governing Body has no power or authority to prescribe reserved seats for DAE for admission into any engineering program.

7. Another dimension of the case is that on one side the Regulations provide for the eligibility criteria/qualifications required to be admitted to the B.Sc. (Engineering) program and allow both the F.Sc. and DAE to be eligible to apply for B.Sc. (Engineering) program, subject to meeting the requirement of 60% aggregate marks in the respective examinations. Yet on the other hand, the Regulation puts a clog on the admission of DAE holders by imposing the condition of reserved seats on them. Other than the fact that the PEC or the Governing Body has no such power to impose such a condition, it is also ex-facie discriminatory against the DAE holders, especially when they are considered eligible for the B.Sc. (Engineering) Program along with the F.Sc. degree holders.

8. The issue of equivalence of F.Sc. and DAE also comes to an end, as both the holders of F.Sc. and DAE are considered eligible qualifications for the purposes of seeking admission to the B.Sc. (Engineering) program under Article 2 of the Regulations. The counsel for the respondent also failed to justify why DAE should not be considered at par with the F.Sc. students on open merit when both of them are eligible for admission under the Regulations. In the absence of any power to reserve seats for admission to the B.Sc (Engineering) program, both the set of candidates with F.Sc. and DAE have to be treated at par. This parity is created by equal eligibility of DAE for admission. Therefore, the decision of PEC dated 25.03.2015 fixing 2% reserved seats for DAE holders is not only unsustainable under the Act but is also discriminatory. Since PEC cannot reserve seats for any program, the condition of "reserved seats" by the Governing Body under Article 2(c) of the Regulations is also illegal and ultra vires the Act.

9. The best way forward is to allow admissions to B.Sc (Engineering) on open merit and through open competition amongst the F.Sc. and DAE holders. Such a level playing field encourages competition and allows the best of the best amongst the F.Sc. and DAE to be admitted to the B.Sc. (Engineering) Program. The learned Division Bench of the High Court has failed to appreciate the scope and extent of Sections 8 and 25A of the Act and the unlawful imposition of reserved seats for DAE holders through the decision dated 25.03.2015 and through Article 2(c) of the Regulations.

10. For the above reasons, while upholding the decision of the learned Single Bench dated 13.03.2019 and setting aside the impugned judgment dated 30.11.2020 of the Division Bench of the High Court, we hold and declare that the decision of the PEC passed in its 15th Governing Body Meeting dated 25.03.2015 and the words "reserved seats" in Article 2(c) of the Regulations are ultra vires the Act hence they are set aside, having no legal effect. In this view of the matter, these petitions are converted into appeals and allowed.

11. Foregoing are the reasons for our short order dated 18.10.2021 which for the sake of convenience and for completion of record is reproduced hereunder:-

"For reasons to be recorded later, these petitions are converted into appeals, allowed and the impugned judgment is set aside."

Principal responsibility under the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 to act, appear and plead on behalf of the party is that of the Advocate-on-Record ('AOR'). A case before any court, in particular, before the highest court of the land, ought to be attended to with utmost responsibility and seriousness. ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---This is an application for restoration of the titled petition, which was dismissed for non-prosecution on 06.10.2021. The order of dismissal of the petition records that no one tendered appearance on behalf of the petitioner, the learned AOR or the learned counsel for the petitioner on the said date.

2. The ground for restoration in the instant application is that the learned counsel for the petitioner was present in Court but had stepped out to the wash-room and by the time he returned the case had been dismissed for non-prosecution.

3. Today the learned counsel for the petitioner is not present and the learned AOR has made the above submission. We have examined the record of the case and have noticed that the learned counsel for the petitioner has not sworn an affidavit to certify the above facts. Additionally, the record of the Court Associate for 06.10.2021 does not reflect that the learned counsel or any representative of petitioner was present in court that day. No request was made by the learned counsel for restoring the case after he returned to the court-room that day and no such ground has been pleaded in the instant application. The restoration application also does not give any excuse or justification for the absence of the representative of the petitioner company or the learned AOR. We have recently held in Falah ud Din[1] that "the AOR is defined as an Advocate, who is to act and plead for a party in the Supreme Court. The definition of "party" also include an AOR, when such a party is represented by the AOR. Rule 2 of Order IV states that the AOR is entitled to appear and plead before the Court on signing his respective roll. Rule 6 of the said Order provides that no Advocate other than AOR shall appear and plead on behalf of the party unless he is instructed by the AOR while Rule 15 states that no Advocate other than AOR shall be entitled to act on behalf of a party in any proceedings in the Court. Rules 22 and 26 underline that every AOR on submission of his power of attorney shall act on behalf of the party and that no person having an AOR shall be heard in person except with specific leave of the Court." Order I, Rule-2 and Order IV, Rules 2, 6, 15, 22, 26, 30, 31 and 32 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules") clearly show that the principal responsibility under the Rules to act, appear and plead on behalf of the party is that of the AOR. It is the AOR who engages the ASC and it is on instructions of the AOR that such ASC pleads the case of the party. Engagement of the ASC does not absolve the AOR of his primary responsibility to attend to the case on behalf of the party before the Court and in case the ASC is not available, it is the responsibility of the AOR to appear and plead the case of the party.

4. In the present case, the learned AOR did not appear on the date when the case was dismissed for non-prosecution and there is no reason given in the instant application for his absence. A case before any court, in particular, before the highest court of the land, ought to be attended to with utmost responsibility and seriousness. The concept of enrolling the AOR at the Supreme Court is to ensure that cases filed in the Supreme Court are handled with meticulous care and responsibility and to ensure certainty of representation before the Court. In this case, it is more than evident that the learned AOR has fallen short of his responsibility expected of him under the Rules. He has not even bothered to furnish any explanation in the instant application regarding his absence on the fateful day.

5. For the above reasons, we find that there is no merit in the instant application, which is, therefore, dismissed.

MWA/A-8/SC Application dismissed.

(a) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 14, 20, 22, 25 & Preamble---Minority rights---Freedom to profess and practice religion---Protections and fundamental rights available to minorities in the Constitution with respect to professing and practicing their religion stated.

Constitutional values enshrined in the Preamble to the Constitution require us to be tolerant as a people, believe in freedom, equality and social justice, and respect our minorities and make adequate provisions for them to freely profess and practice their religions and develop their cultures and to safeguard their legitimate interests. All citizens of Pakistan, whether Muslim or non-Muslim, are guaranteed fundamental rights under the Constitution including equality of status, freedom of thought, expression, belief, faith, worship subject to law and public morality.

To deprive a non-Muslim (minority) of the country from holding his religious beliefs, to obstruct him from professing and practicing his religion within the four walls of his place of worship is against the grain of the democratic Constitution and repugnant to the spirit and character of the Islamic Republic. It also deeply bruises and disfigures human dignity and the right to privacy of a non-Muslim minority, who like all other citizens of this country enjoy the same rights and protections under the Constitution. Bigoted behaviour towards minorities paints the entire nation in poor colour, labelling it as intolerant, dogmatic and rigid. It is time to embrace constitutional values and live up to rich Islamic teachings and traditions of equality and tolerance.

----Art. 14---Right to dignity---Scope---Article 14 of the Constitution guarantees right to dignity to every person---Human dignity encapsulates the notion that every person has inherent equal worth; this simple but profound concept has three elements: first, every member of the human family has value - no one can be dismissed, ignored, mistreated or abused as if their humanity means nothing; second, each person's worth is equal to every other person and no one's life is more important than any other person; third, human dignity inheres in the human person and cannot be taken away.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioners seek leave to appeal against the order dated 24.05.2021 of the Lahore High Court, whereby their petition under section 561-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898 ("Cr.P.C."), challenging the alteration/addition of certain offences to the charge framed against them, has been dismissed and the orders dated 04.01.2021 and 03.05.2021 passed by the trial court and the revisional court respectively have been upheld.

2. Briefly stated, the petitioners and one other accused person were booked in case FIR No.352 of 2020 dated 03.05.2020 for the offences punishable under Sections 298-B and 298-C of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 ("P.P.C.") on the allegation that they being Ahmadi/ Qadiani had styled their place of worship as a mosque and displayed sha'air-e-Islam on the walls inside their place of worship including (Arabic) and maintained copies of the Holy Qur'an inside their place of worship. It was also alleged that the design of the place of worship resembled a mosque and its electricity bill described the place of worship as a mosque. On these allegations, the petitioner were put to trial and the learned trial court, i.e., the Court of Magistrate, on 23.11.2020, framed the charge against the petitioners for offences punishable under sections 298-B and 298-C, P.P.C.

3. Later, the complainant filed an application under Section 227, Cr.P.C. for alteration of the charge praying that offences punishable under sections 295-B and 295-C, P.P.C. were also attracted and the same be added to the charge. The trial court, vide its order dated 04.01.2021, held that allegations levelled against the petitioners attracted sections 295-B and 295-C, P.P.C., and therefore allowed the application. The petitioners filed a revision petition against the order of the trial court but the same was dismissed by the Court of Additional Sessions Judge vide order dated 03.05.2021. The petitioners assailed the said orders, through a petition under section 561-A, Cr.P.C., before the High Court, which met the same fate and was dismissed vide the impugned order dated 24.05.2021. Hence, this petition.

4. Learned counsel for the petitioners argued that the allegations levelled in the FIR do not attract the offences punishable under sections 295-B and 295-C, P.P.C. Only the public propagation of the Ahmadi religion by the Ahmadis posing themselves as Muslim or referring to their faith as Islam and the use in public of the epithets, descriptions and titles, etc., reserved for certain holy personages or places of Islam, has been restricted under the law, i.e., sections 298-B and 298-C, P.P.C., as construed in Zaheeruddin v. State[1], but there is no bar on the Ahmadis to privately profess and practice their religion as per their faith. He submitted that in this case, the petitioners were admittedly present inside their private place of worship, and the display of the sha'air-e-Islam was made, and the copies of the Holy Qur'an were placed, inside their private place of worship. He submitted that Ahmadis believe the Holy Quran to be the words of the God Almighty, and the Holy Prophet Muhammad (peace be upon him) to be the messenger of the God Almighty; they therefore cannot even think of defiling or desecrating the Holy Quran or the sacred name of the Holy Prophet. There is no material on record that the petitioners did any of such acts; therefore, sections 295-B and 295-C, P.P.C. are not attracted in the present case.

5. The State prosecutor, as well as, the learned counsel for the complainant also relied on Zaheeruddin case in addition to Majibur Rehman v. Federal Government,[2] Jahangir Joya v. State,[3] Khurshid Ahmad v. Government of Punjab,[4] to submit that the place of worship of the petitioners is a public place and the display of sha'air-e-Islam as well as maintaining copies of the Holy Qur'an and other material recovered from the said place of worship attract sections 295-B and 295-C, P.P.C. They submitted that mere reading of the Kalma and the Holy Qur'an by non-Muslim/Ahmadis constitutes defilement and desecration of the sanctity of the Kalma, the Holy Qur'an and the Holy Prophet.

6. We have given due consideration to the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties and have gone through the record of the case. The question before us is, whether the allegations levelled in the crime report and the material collected in the course of the investigation attract the commission of offences punishable under sections 295-B and 295-C, P.P.C.?

7. Much emphasis was laid on the cases cited above by the learned counsel for the respondents to establish that sections 295-B and 295-C, P.P.C. are attracted in the present case. The three main cases, Majibur Rehman, Khurshid Ahmed and Zaheeruddin, either deal with the constitutional vires of sections 298-B and 298-C, P.P.C. brought about through the Anti-Islamic Activities of the Qadiani Group, Lahori Group and Ahmadis (Prohibition and Punishment) Ordinance, 1984 ("Ordinance") or the administrative orders passed for restraining the public display or propagation of their religion by the Ahmadis. These cases hold that sections 298-B and 298-C, P.P.C. are intra vires the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution"), besides maintaining such administrative orders passed by the local administration to prevent a law and order situation from arising.

8. In Zaheeruddin, this Court held that offences punishable under sections 298-B and 298-C, P.P.C. are intra vires the Constitution and do not offend Article 20 of the Constitution. The main consideration in Zaheeruddin was that the Ahmadis by performing the intended centenary celebrations and ceremonies in public may outrage the feelings of Muslims, generating resentment and hostility amongst them, and thus giving rise to law and order issues leading to serious threat to the life and property of the citizens. The Court further held that only such religious practices are protected by the "freedom of religion" guaranteed under Article 20 of the Constitution which are integral and essential part of the religion, while the appellant (therein) had failed to show that the practices they intended to perform at the centenary celebrations were the essential and integral part of their religion, and the same had to be performed only in public or in the public view, on the roads and streets or at the public places. However, this Court while maintaining the administrative orders that had restrained the Ahmadis to perform the intended centenary celebrations and ceremonies in public, clearly observed that the Ahmadis can perform such activities in private. Abdul Qadeer Chaudhry, J., speaking for the majority, in Zaheeruddin wrote[5]:

> The purpose of the order has also been spelt out in the last direction to say, that no other activity which may directly or indirectly incite or injure the feelings of the Muslims, shall be undertaken. The above restrictions clearly mean such activities which might have been performed in the public or in public view and not those to be performed in the private.

Likewise, in Majibur Rehman, Fakhre Alam CJ spoke for the Full Bench of the Federal Shariat Court of Pakistan in the following words[6]:

> This cannot be tolerated and non-Muslims cannot be allowed to encroach upon the rights and privileges of the Muslim community to utter disintegration of the Ummah. Moreover, this does not affect the rights of the Qadianis to profess their faith in Mirza sahib ... nor does it interfere with their right to practice their religion or to worship or in their place of worship according to its dictates.
> The Muslim Sharia affords full protection to the practice of religion by the non-Muslims as to its profession. ...It is for this reason that the Holy Prophet (P.B.U.H) and his worthy successors agreed to the best terms inter alia in connection with the freedom of religion to the Polytheisis and non-Muslims whether at war with Muslims or not.

Thus, neither Zaheeruddin nor Majibur Rehman imposes any prohibition or restriction on Ahmadis to profess and practice their religion in their place of worship according to their faith.

Constitutional values and fundamental rights

9. The above observations of this Court and of the Federal Shariat Court are in line with the constitutional values enshrined in the preamble to our Constitution which require us to be tolerant as a people, believe in freedom, equality and social justice, and respect our minorities and make adequate provisions for them to freely profess and practice their religions and develop their cultures and to safeguard their legitimate interests. All citizens of Pakistan, whether Muslim or non-Muslim, are guaranteed fundamental rights under the Constitution including equality of status, freedom of thought, expression, belief, faith, worship subject to law and public morality. The Constitution emphasizes that only when we honour these values can we, the people of Pakistan, prosper and attain the rightful and honoured place amongst the nations of the World and make full contribution towards peace, progress and happiness of the humanity.

10. Article 14 of the Constitution guarantees right to dignity to every person. Human dignity encapsulates the notion that every person has inherent equal worth. This simple but profound concept has three elements: first, every member of the human family has value - no one can be dismissed, ignored, mistreated or abused as if their humanity means nothing; second, each person's worth is equal to every other person and no one's life is more important than any other person; third, human dignity inheres in the human person and cannot be taken away.[7] To deprive a non-Muslim (minority) of our country from holding his religious beliefs, to obstruct him from professing and practicing his religion within the four walls of his place of worship is against the grain of our democratic Constitution and repugnant to the spirit and character of our Islamic Republic. It also deeply bruises and disfigures human dignity and the right to privacy of a non-Muslim minority, who like all other citizens of this country enjoy the same rights and protections under the Constitution. Bigoted behaviour towards our minorities paints the entire nation in poor colour, labelling us as intolerant, dogmatic and rigid. It is time to embrace our constitutional values and live up to our rich Islamic teachings and traditions of equality and tolerance.

11. Article 20(a) of the Constitution provides that every citizen shall have the right to profess, practice and propagate his religion subject to law, public order and morality. Article 20(b) provides that every religious denomination or sect shall have the right to establish, maintain and manage its religious intuitions. Under Article 22, the Constitution provides that no person attending any educational institution shall be required to receive religious instruction or take part in any religious ceremony or attend religious worship if such instruction, ceremony or worship relates to a religion other than his own. Article 22(3)(a) provides that no religious community or denomination shall be prevented from providing religious instruction for pupils of that community in any educational institution maintained wholly by that community or denomination. Article 25 underlines that all citizens are equal before the law and are entitled to equal protection of law.

12. Article 260(3) of the Constitution though declares the Ahmadis/ Qadianis as non-Muslim, it neither disowns them as citizens of Pakistan nor deprives them of their entitlement to the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution. The Constitution treats, safeguards and protects all its citizens equally, whether they are Muslims or non-Muslims. Article 4 of the Constitution is an inalienable right of every citizen, including minority citizens of Pakistan, which guarantees the right to enjoy the protection of law and to be treated in accordance with law.

Sections 295-B and 295-C, P.P.C.

13. With this constitutional perspective, we proceed to answer the question as to the applicability of Sections 295-B and 295-C, P.P.C. in the present case. For this purpose, we need to examine the definition of the offences as provided in these Sections, which are reproduced hereunder for convenience of reference:

> 295-B Defiling, etc., of Holy Qur'an: Whoever wilfully defiles, damages or desecrates a copy of the Holy Qur'an or of an extract therefrom or uses it in any derogatory manner or for any unlawful purpose shall be punishable with imprisonment for life.
> 295-C Use of derogatory remarks, etc., in respect of the Holy Prophet. Whoever by words, either spoken or written, or by visible representation or by any imputation, innuendo, or insinua-tion, directly or indirectly, defiles the sacred name of the Holy Prophet Muhammad (peace be upon him) shall be punished with death, or imprisonment for life, and shall also be liable to fine.

To constitute an offence under section 295-B, the reading thereof shows, the accused must have defiled, damaged or desecrated a copy of the Holy Quran or an extract therefrom or use it in any derogatory manner or for any unlawful purpose. There is no allegation in the crime report that attracts the said offence. The courts below have held that mere reading of the Kalima or the Holy Quran by a non-Muslim/Ahmadi attracts section 295-C. This, in our view, is not only far-fetched, but also fails to meet the fundamental constituents of the crime, i.e., mens rea and actus reus. Only that which resides in the mind of a non-Muslim while reading the Holy Quran is not sufficient to constitute the offence. In order to attract section 295-B, P.P.C., there must be an overt act (actus reus) that shows that the copy of the Holy Quran or its extract has been defiled, damaged or desecrated or it has been put to use in a derogatory manner or for an unlawful purpose. There is nothing on the record to establish this, in the present case.

14. Similarly, to constitute an offence under section 295-C, P.P.C., there must be words spoken or written or by visible representation or any imputation, innuendo or insinuation, direct or indirect, which defiles the sacred name of the Holy Prophet Muhammed (peace be upon him). In the instant case, the display of the Kalima, having name of the Holy Prophet Muhammed (peace be upon him) therein, inside the place of worship do not attract the constituents of the said offence. What runs inside the mind of an Ahmadi, while reading the Kalima does not constitute an offence punishable under section 295-C, P.P.C. unless there is some overt act on his part that defiles the sacred name of the Holy Prophet Muhammed (peace be upon him). There is nothing on the record to establish this, in the present case.

15. We feel it necessary to observe that laws in a constitutional democracy objectify public interest and are solicitous of individual liberties and interfere with them as little as possible. Thus, the rule of interpretation has been evolved according to which a penal statute should be strictly construed in favour of the accused. The degree of strictness depends upon the severity of the statute. It would nevertheless be appropriate to clarify that when it is said that all penal statues are to be construed strictly, it only means that the court must see that the act charged is an offence within the plain meaning of the words used and must not strain or stretch the words. In other words, the rule of strict construction requires that the language of the statute should not be so construed so as to include acts within it which do not fall within the reasonable interpretation of the statute. The rule of strict construction, however, must yield to the paramount rule that every statute is to be expounded according to the express or manifest intention of the Legislature.[8] The acts charged in the present case do not attract sections 295-B and 295-C, P.P.C. either by the plain reading of the words of these two provisions or by their construction through the lens of the express or manifest intention of the Legislature behind them.

16. For the above reasons, we are of the view that in the facts and circumstances of the present case, the trial court and the revisional court had not correctly examined the ingredients necessary to constitute the offences punishable under sections 295-B and 295-C, P.P.C. and had failed to correctly appreciate the import of the Zaheerudddin case, and the High Court has legally erred in maintaining those orders. This petition is therefore converted into appeal and allowed: The impugned order is reversed, the petition of the petitioners under section 561-A, Cr.P.C. is accepted and the orders of the trial and revisional courts are set aside. The trial of the petitioners shall proceed on the basis of the charge framed on 23.11.2020 only for offences punishable under sections 298-B and 298-C, P.P.C.

(Against the orders dated 26.08.2021 of the Islamabad High Court, Islamabad passed in W.Ps. Nos. 1244, 1242 and 2862 of 2021)

----Ss. 9(a)(ix) & 9(a)(x)---Companies Act (XIX of 2017), Ss. 84, 264(3), 482, 496(1)(d) & 500---Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan Act (XLII of 1997), Ss. 37 & 41B---Penal Code (XLV of 1860), Ss. 405 & 415---Defrauding and cheating the public at large---Inducing and luring members of the public to invest money in companies by way of a 'Ponzi/pyramid scheme'---Bar contained in sections 37 & 41B of the Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan Act, 1997 and S.482 of the Companies Act, 2017---Scope---Whether National Accountability Bureau (NAB) could inquire into and investigate the commission of the alleged offences without a reference from the Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan ('the SECP')---Held, that in the present case there was no bar for the NAB to inquire into and investigate the commission of alleged offence under section 9 of the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 by the petitioner and to proceed further against him under the said Ordinance---Bar contained in sections 37 & 41B of the Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan Act, 1997 ('the SECP Act') and section 482 of the Companies Act, 2017 ('the Companies Act') were not attracted to the present matter---Question of cheating the public at large and of breach of trust did not fall within the domain of Companies Act or SECP Act, but squarely falls under the NAB Ordinance---Therefore, the SECP sending a reference to the NAB or the NAB taking cognizance on the basis of the reference had little significance in the facts and circumstances of the present case, when NAB could have taken cognizance on their own---Proceedings conducted by the NAB, in the present matter, against the petitioner were not without lawful authority.

As per the material collected by the National Accountability Bureau (NAB) so far, money from the investors has been received not only in the Bank accounts of the registered companies but also in the personal accounts of the accused-petitioner and his family members as well as of their unregistered companies, which does not fall within the domain of the Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan (SECP). The actions taken by the SECP under the Companies Act, 2017 ('the Companies Act') in the present matter, relates to the alleged illegal acts of the registered companies and their directors, not to those alleged illegal acts that have been done by the petitioner and his family members in their personal capacity.

Even as to registered companies, under Section 264 (3) of the Companies Act a person who forms a company for any fraudulent or unlawful purpose, or carries on unauthorized business, is liable to be proceeded against for any other action provided in any other law for the time being in force, in addition to the action taken under subsection (1) of that section. Likewise, under section 500 of the Companies Act a person who acts as a director or officer of the company and is responsible for carrying on any business or any transaction which is ultra vires of the company is also personally liable for the liabilities and obligations arising out of such business or transaction. These provisions leave little doubt to find that there is no bar for the NAB to inquire into and investigate the commission of alleged offence under Section 9 of the NAB Ordinance by the petitioner and to proceed further against him under that Ordinance.

The bar of Section 41B of the Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan Act, 1997 ('the SECP Act') pleaded on behalf of the petitioner is not attracted to the present matter. Section 41B relates to "any regulated activity, regulated securities activity, transaction, process or permission granted under this Act or any administered legislation". The petitioner has failed to show that the allegations against him falls within the scope of any of the said matters. Similarly, the bar of section 37 of the SECP Act and section 482 of the Companies Act pleaded by the petitioner is also not attracted to the investigation of the allegations against him by the NAB or taking cognizance of the alleged offences punishable under the NAB Ordinance by the Accountability Court, as the provisions of the said sections of both the Acts relate to taking cognizance of any offence punishable under those Acts, not to the offences punishable under other laws.

Another contention raised on behalf of the petitioner was that the provisions of the Companies Act and the SECP Act have effect notwithstanding any other law for the time being in force and are to prevail over the provisions of the NAB Ordinance. The question of taking precedence of those Acts over the NAB Ordinance does not arise unless it is shown that the offences of cheating as defined in section 415 of the P.P.C. and thereby dishonestly inducing members of the public at large to deliver any property including money or valuable security to any person and criminal breach of trust as defined in section 405 of the P.P.C. with regard to any property including money or valuable security entrusted by members of the public at large, as defined and made punishable under the NAB Ordinance, are also punishable under the Companies Act and the SECP Act.

The provisions of Section 496(1)(d) of the Companies Act referred to on behalf of the petitioner relate to any fraudulent scheme, artifice or practice that is employed in the course of business of the company. It is not the petitioner's case that it was the business of the petitioner's companies to invite and accept deposits from the public as those companies were admittedly not the banking companies; therefore, the alleged Ponzi scheme was not employed by the companies in the course of business of those companies. Therefore, prima facie the mischief addressed in the Companies Act and SECP Act has a limited scope restricted to invitation of deposits by companies, which can be both through fraud or by a bonafide mistake. Both said laws in no way impede NAB to assume jurisdiction under section 9(a) (ix) & (x) of the NAB Ordinance. The NAB enjoys a totally different jurisdiction, which does not overlap with the Companies Act or SECP Act. The question of cheating the public at large and of breach of trust does not fall within the domain of Companies Act or SECP Act, but squarely falls under the NAB Ordinance. Therefore, the SECP sending a reference to the NAB or the NAB taking cognizance on the basis of the reference has little significance in the facts and circumstances of the case, when NAB could have taken cognizance on their own.

The provisions of section 84 of the Companies Act referred to on behalf of the petitioner relate to mere inviting or accepting deposits from the public; they do not relate to commission of offence of cheating and criminal breach of trust in relation to the money deposited by the public. A company may invite and accept deposits from the public without any intention of committing, or actual commission of, cheating and criminal breach of trust in relation to the deposits of the public. In other words, if cheating and/or criminal breach of trust is not committed, or alleged to have committed, in inviting and accepting deposits, such act of a company and its officer in default is though still punishable under section 84 of the Companies Act, but it is not punishable under the P.P.C. or the NAB Ordinance. And, conversely the offences of cheating and criminal breach of trust in relation to inviting and accepting deposits from the public, which are punishable under the P.P.C. and the NAB Ordinance, are not punishable under section 84 of Companies Act. There is thus no conflict between the provisions of section 84 of the Companies Act and the provisions of Section 9 of the NAB Ordinance, and the question of giving precedence to one over the other does not arise.

It cannot be said that the proceedings being conducted by the NAB, in the present matter, against the petitioner are without lawful authority. Petitions for leave to appeal were dismissed and leave was refused.

(b) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 13(a)---Protection against double punishment---Scope---Double jeopardy, principle of---Scope of Article 13(a) of the Constitution stated.

Article 13(a) of the Constitution provides that no person shall be prosecuted or punished for the same offence more than once. The expressions "prosecuted" and "same offence" used in Article 13 are of vital significance in determining the scope of the protection guaranteed. The expression "prosecuted" means prosecuted on a charge of criminal nature before a Court of law; it does not include prosecution on the basis of breach of some code of conduct by a disciplinary authority or breach of some regulatory framework by an administrative authority. The expression "same offence" means offence constituted of the same ingredients and does not mean "same matter" or "same facts". The ingredients of the offence earlier charged and the offence subsequently charged should be the same, to attract the bar of Article 13, in the sense that the facts constituting the offence earlier charged were also sufficient to justify the conviction of the offence subsequently charged.

Date of hearing: 22nd September, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Briefly, the allegations against the petitioner are that by using the business name of B4U Global (changed to SR Group during the pendency of the inquiry) through social media platforms he induced and lured the members of the general public ("investors") to invest money in "B4U Global" promising them unrealistic profit of 7% to 20% per month (equal to 84% to 240% per year). According to the National Accountability Bureau ("NAB") the lucrative return on investment promised by B4U Global/ SR Group is a ponzi or a pyramid scheme to defraud and cheat the public at large and to deprive them of their money. As a result, the members of the general public enticed by the ponzi scheme of the petitioner, deposited money into various accounts in the names of certain individuals, registered companies and unregistered businesses, all controlled and managed by the petitioner. On the inquiry conducted by the NAB, the petitioner has so far been found to have defrauded the public at large to the tune of Rs.10.86 billion.

2. On receipt of the complaints filed against petitioner, the NAB initiated proceedings under section 9(a)(ix)(x) of the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ("NAB Ordinance"). The NAB issued a notice to the petitioner, the Chief Executive Officer of the B4U Group of companies, under Section 19 of the NAB Ordinance on 3 March 2021, requesting him to furnish certain information relating to the B4U Group and its associate companies. The petitioner did not provide the information sought for. The NAB then issued two call up notices to the petitioner requiring him to appear along with record of the B4U Group of companies, its subsidiary companies and the list of bank accounts maintained by him and the companies of B4U Group, in the NAB office at Islamabad on 12 March 2021 and 19 March 2021 respectively, to make his statement. The petitioner did not turn up before the NAB, rather challenged the legality of the said three notices in the Islamabad High Court by invoking its constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution") through filing two writ petitions: one regarding the information requiring notice and the other regarding the call up notices. The petitioner also prayed for restraining the NAB from arresting him and for grant of bail before arrest, in the said petitions. The High Court issued notice to the NAB on the said writ petitions and meanwhile granted the relief of ad-interim bail before arrest to him, on 1 April 2021.

3. In the aforesaid writ petitions, the petitioner praying for quashing of the said notices inter alia pleaded that he owns private limited companies registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan ("SECP") under valid licenses/certificates; that the SECP has already issued him the show cause notice regarding the same matter of inviting investments, on 25 January 2021, under the relevant laws, namely, the Companies Act, 2017 ("Companies Act") and the Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan Act, 1997 ("SECP Act"), which proceedings are pending before the SECP, the competent authority; that the initiation of proceedings by the NAB amounts to double jeopardy; and that the proceedings initiated by the NAB without a Reference from the SECP are also barred by the specific provisions of section 41-B of the SECP Act.

4. During pendency of the said writ petitions, the proceedings initiated by the SECP were concluded vide orders dated 20.05.2021, and the SECP also made a Reference to the NAB, on 9 July 2021, for proceedings under the NAB Ordinance, in terms of Section 41-B of the SECP Act. Regarding this Reference, the petitioner filed a third writ petition in the High Court praying for quashing of the Reference, mainly on the grounds that the Reference has been sent by the SECP to the NAB to fill the lacuna and defeat the adjudication of his pending two writ petitions; that the proceedings by the NAB on the Reference would amount to double jeopardy and thus infringe his fundamental right guaranteed by Article 13 of the Constitution; and that only the Court of Sessions can take cognizance of any offence under the Companies Act, in terms of Section 37 of the SECP Act and Section 482 of the Companies Act.

5. The High Court dismissed the said three writ petitions of the petitioner, vide its short orders dated 26.08.2021, and also recalled the ad-interim bail before arrest granted to him. The petitioner, therefore, has approached this Court seeking leave to appeal against the said orders of the High Court and praying for the same reliefs that have been declined to him by the High Court.

6. The main stance of the petitioner before the High Court as well as before this Court is that he has not collected any amount for investment from any person; these are his private limited companies registered with the SECP that have received investment of money from the investors. Therefore, the matter falls within the exclusive domain of the SECP. We find the stance is totally misconceived. As per the material collected by the NAB so far, money from the investors has been received not only in the bank accounts of the registered companies but also in the personal accounts of the petitioner and his family members as well as of their unregistered companies, which does not fall within the domain of the SECP. The actions taken by the SECP under the Companies Act, in the present matter, relates to the alleged illegal acts of the registered companies and their directors, not to those alleged illegal acts that have been done by the petitioner and his family members in their personal capacity.

7. Even as to registered companies, under Section 264(3) of the Companies Act a person who forms a company for any fraudulent or unlawful purpose, or carries on unauthorized business, is liable to be proceeded against for any other action provided in any other law for the time being in force, in addition to the action taken under Subsection (1) of that Section. Likewise, under Section 500 of the Companies Act a person who acts as a director or officer of the company and is responsible for carrying on any business or any transaction which is ultra vires of the company is also personally liable for the liabilities and obligations arising out of such business or transaction. These provisions leave little doubt to find that there is no bar for the NAB to inquire into and investigate the commission of alleged offence under Section 9 of the NAB Ordinance by the petitioner and to proceed further against him under that Ordinance.

8. The bar of Section 41B of the SECP Act vehemently pleaded on behalf of the petitioner is not, in our opinion, attracted to the present matter. Section 41B relates to "any regulated activity, regulated securities activity, transaction, process or permission granted under this Act or any administered legislation". The petitioner has failed to show that the allegations against him falls within the scope of any of the said matters. Similarly the bar of Section 37 of the SECP Act and Section 482 of the Companies Act pleaded by the petitioner is also not attracted to the investigation of the allegations against him by the NAB or taking cognizance of the alleged offences punishable under the NAB Ordinance by the Accountability Court, as the provisions of the said Sections of both the Acts relate to taking cognizance of any offence punishable under those Acts, not to the offences punishable under other laws.

9. It has also been argued on behalf of the petitioner that the provisions of the Companies Act and the SECP Act have the effect notwithstanding any other law for the time being in force and are to prevail over the provisions of the NAB Ordinance. We are of the opinion that the question of taking precedence of those Acts over the NAB Ordinance does not arise unless it is shown that the offences of cheating as defined in Section 415 of the P.P.C. and thereby dishonestly inducing members of the public at large to deliver any property including money or valuable security to any person and criminal breach of trust as defined in Section 405 of the P.P.C. with regard to any property including money or valuable security entrusted by members of the public at large, as defined and made punishable under the NAB Ordinance, are also punishable under the Companies Act and the SECP Act.

10. The provisions of Section 496(1)(d) of the Companies Act referred to on behalf of the petitioner relate to any fraudulent scheme, artifice or practice that is employed in the course of business of the company. It is not the petitioner's case before us that it was the business of the petitioner's companies to invite and accept deposits from the public as those companies were admittedly not the banking companies; therefore, the alleged Ponzi scheme was not employed by the companies in the course of business of those companies. Therefore, we are of a prima facie view that the mischief addressed in the aforesaid laws has a limited scope restricted to invitation of deposits by companies, which can be both through fraud or by a bona fide mistake. The aforesaid laws in no way impede NAB to assume jurisdiction under section 9(a) (ix) & (x) of the NAB Ordinance. The NAB enjoys a totally different jurisdiction, which does not overlap with the Companies Act or SECP Act. The question of cheating the public at large and of breach of trust does not fall within the domain of Companies Act or SECP Act, but squarely falls under the NAB Ordinance. Therefore, the SECP sending a reference to the NAB or the NAB taking cognizance on the basis of the reference has little significance in the facts and circumstances of the case, when NAB in our tentative view could have taken cognizance on their own.

11. The provisions of Section 84 of the Companies Act referred to on behalf of the petitioner relate to mere inviting or accepting deposits from the public; they do not relate to commission of offence of cheating and criminal breach of trust in relation to the money deposited by the public. A company may invite and accept deposits from the public without any intention of committing, or actual commission of, cheating and criminal breach of trust in relation to the deposits of the public. In other words, if cheating and/or criminal breach of trust is not committed, or alleged to have committed, in inviting and accepting deposits, such act of a company and its officer in default is though still punishable under Section 84 of the Companies Act, but it is not punishable under the P.P.C. or the NAB Ordinance. And, conversely the offences of cheating and criminal breach of trust in relation to inviting and accepting deposits from the public, which are punishable under the P.P.C. and the NAB Ordinance, are not punishable under Section 84 of Companies Act. There is thus no conflict between the provisions of Section 84 of the Companies Act and the provisions of Section 9 of the NAB Ordinance, and the question of giving precedence to one over the other does not arise.

12. Similarly, the ground agitated by the petitioner that in view of the proceedings conducted by the SECP, the second proceedings by the NAB regarding the same matter would amount to double jeopardy and thus infringe his fundamental right to protection against double punishment guaranteed by Article 13 of the Constitution, is also not legally tenable. Article 13(a) provides that no person shall be prosecuted or punished for the same offence more than once. The expressions "prosecuted" and "same offence" used in Article 13 are of vital significance in determining the scope of the protection guaranteed. The expression "prosecuted" means prosecuted on a charge of criminal nature before a Court of law; it does not include prosecution on the basis of breach of some code of conduct by a disciplinary authority or breach of some regulatory framework by an administrative authority. The expression "same offence" means offence constituted of the same ingredients and does not mean "same matter" or "same facts". The ingredients of the offence earlier charged and the offence subsequently charged should be the same, to attract the bar of Article 13, in the sense that the facts constituting the offence earlier charged were also sufficient to justify the conviction of the offence subsequently charged (See Jehangir Badar v. Chairman, NAB 2004 SCMR 1632 and Hoot Khan v. NIRC PLD 1977 Kar 145). The SECP is not a court of law, nor are the offences under the Companies Act for which it has imposed penalties on the petitioner and his companies constituted, of the same ingredients as that of the offence defined in Section 9 of the NAB Ordinance, as explained above. The shield of Article 13 of the Constitution is therefore not available to the petitioner to prevent the proceedings against him under the NAB Ordinance.

13. In view of the above legal and factual position, it cannot be said that the proceedings being conducted by the NAB, in the present matter, against the petitioner are without lawful authority.

14. So far as the prayer of the petitioner for grant of bail before arrest is concerned, we find no merits in that also. The NAB has recorded the statements of many affectees of the alleged fraud of the petitioners under Section 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898 and collected the credit and debit record of the bank accounts operated by the petitioner and his family members as well as the tax record of the petitioner and his alleged shell companies, and the record of the properties in name of the petitioner. The NAB has found, during inquiry, that about 57 bank accounts have been used for collecting money from the investors: out of which 26 are in name of the petitioner, his wives and son, 18 are in the name of registered companies and 16 in the name of unregistered companies. The petitioner, his wives and son, being the authorized signatories, also operate the accounts in the name of registered and unregistered companies. We find that, in view of the said material collected by the NAB so far, the accusation against the petitioner is well founded, and his custody is also required to the NAB for the purpose of completing investigation of the case. The prayer of the petitioner for grant of bail before arrest is therefore not sustainable.

15. It may be pertinent to mention here that after arguing the case at length, the learned counsel for the petitioner drew our attention to the fact that the High Court has not yet given the detailed reasons in support of the impugned short orders. Although this Court ordinarily waits for the detailed reasons before deciding the appeals or the petitions for leave to appeals filed against the short orders passed by the High Courts, but the peculiar facts and circumstances of a case, as those of the present case, may justify departure from this rule of practice and propriety, which is neither a rule of law nor is an absolute one and, like most of the rules, admits exception(s). The present case involves a bail matter, which is usually considered as an urgent one; the arguments advanced by learned counsel for the parties mainly relates to the scope and applicability of certain legal provisions, and not to deep appraisal of the disputed facts and the evidence thereon; and we having heard the arguments of learned counsel for the parties in detail and perusing the material available on record with their able assistance, have reached a conclusion which is no different from the one arrived at by the High Court in its short orders. In these circumstances, we deem it unnecessary to wait for the detailed reasons to be given by the High Court in support of the impugned short orders before pronouncing the decision we have made. It is not uncommon that this Court maintains the decisions of the High Courts, in several cases, for its own reasons different from that of the High Courts.

16. For all what has been discussed above, we find that the High Court has rightly dismissed the writ petitions filed by the petitioner. The present petitions are meritless; they are therefore dismissed and leave to appeal is declined.

17. These are the reasons for our short order dated 22.09.2021, operative part of which is reproduced here for ease of reference and completion of the record:

> His [petitioner's] contentions on the alleged jurisdictional defects and the merits of the case have been heard and so have the submissions by the Special Prosecutor for NAB. Having examined both aspects of the case and for the reasons to be recorded later, the ad-interim bail before arrest granted to the petitioner on 30.08.2021 is hereby recalled and Civil Petition No.5178 of 2021, Civil Petition No.5179 of 2021 and Civil Petition No.5180 of 2021 are dismissed.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---By this order, we shall decide all the above-captioned petitions as they arise out of the same order of the High Court of Sindh.

2. The Chairman, National Accountability Bureau ("NAB"), through these petitions, seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 22.04.2020 passed by the High Court of Sindh on the constitutional petitions filed by the respondents under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution"), whereby the post and pre arrest bails have been granted to them in NAB Reference No.17 of 2019 pending trial in the Accountability Court, Sukkur for the alleged offence of corruption and corrupt practices, as defined in Section 9 and punishable under Section 10 of the National Accountability Ordinance 1999 ("NAB Ordinance").

3. Briefly stated, the allegation against some of the respondents is that they have abetted the co-accused, Syed Khursheed Ahmad Shah, a former public office holder, ("main accused") in the commission of the alleged offence of corruption and corrupt practices, being his benamidars and ostensibly owning certain properties, while some respondents are alleged to have offered illegal gratification/ kickbacks to the main accused. The High Court has granted them bail mainly on the ground that the material available on record is not sufficient to connect them with the commission of the alleged offence and the case against them is one of further inquiry.

4. We have considered the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties, read the case-law cited and perused the record of the case.

5. The petitioner has invoked the appellate jurisdiction of this Court for the cancellation of bail granted by the High Court to the respondents. The scope of the interference to be made by this Court in its appellate jurisdiction, in such like matters, is well settled and hardly needs reiteration. This Court usually interferes on two grounds: (i) when the impugned order is perverse on the face of it, or (ii) when the impugned order has been made in clear disregard of some principle of the law of bail.[1] A perverse order is the one that has been passed against the weight of the material on the record or by ignoring such material or without giving reasons;[2] such order is also termed as arbitrary, whimsical and capricious. While it is one of the elementary principles of the law of bail that courts are not to indulge in the exercise of a deeper appreciation of material available on record at the bail stage and are only to determine tentatively, by looking at such material, whether or not there exist any "reasonable grounds" for believing that the accused person is guilty of the alleged offence.[3]

1 Zaro v. State 1974 SCMR 11.

2 Sidra Abbas v. State 2020 SCMR 2089.

3 Farid v. Ghulam Hussan 1968 SCMR 924 and Khalid Saigol v. State PLD 1962 SC 495.

6. Needless to mention that in NAB cases, the standard of "reasonable grounds" for making a tentative assessment of the material available on record to decide in constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution, the question of detaining an accused in prison, or admitting him to bail, during his trial for the alleged offence under the NAB Ordinance is not borrowed from section 497, Cr.P.C., rather it emanates from the fundamental rights to liberty, dignity, fair trial and protection against arbitrary detention guaranteed by the Constitution under Articles 9, 10, 10-A and 14 and from the operational scheme of the NAB Ordinance.[4]

7. The arguments of the learned counsel for the petitioner, when considered in the light of the above principles, are found deficient to convince the Court for interfering with and setting aside the impugned order. The whole emphasis of the learned counsel was on the point that the opinion of the High Court regarding the insufficiency of the incriminating material to connect the respondents with the commission of alleged offence and the case being one of further inquiry is not plausible in view of the material available on the record of the case. In this regard, the distinction between a less plausible opinion and a perverse opinion must not be lost sight of. When two opinions can reasonably be formed on the basis of the same material, both pass as a plausible opinion; while it can be argued that one opinion is more or less plausible than the other, none of them can be termed as a perverse opinion. A perverse opinion is the one which no prudent person can reasonably form on the basis of the material available on record.

8. Where two opinions can reasonably be formed on the basis of the same material, the courts should prefer and act upon that which favours the accused person and actualizes his fundamental rights to liberty, dignity, fair trial and protection against arbitrary detention. To err in granting bail is better than to err in declining; for the ultimate conviction and sentence of a guilty person can repair the wrong caused by a mistaken relief of bail, but no satisfactory reparation can be offered to an innocent person on his acquittal for his unjustified imprisonment during the trial.[5]

9. In the present case, the High Court has granted the relief of post and pre arrest bails to the respondents, by considering the alleged role attributed to each of them and the material collected during investigation in support thereof. As to the respondents who are alleged to be the benamidars of the main accused, the High Court has observed that whether they were benamidars of the main accused or had purchased the properties from their own sources would be determined after recording evidence in the trial. We find this observation of the High Court quite reasonable, for there is no sufficient material available on record, at this stage, as to the necessary elements of benami transactions. Further, the respondents who are the family members of the main accused are not alleged to have played any role in the offence of corrupt practices allegedly committed by the main accused, nor are they alleged to have knowledge of his such alleged corrupt practices. About the respondents who are alleged to have offered illegal gratification/ kickbacks to the main accused, the High Court has observed by making a tentative assessment of their version in the light of the material available on record that the real purpose of making payment of certain amounts by them to the main accused can be determined only after recording evidence in the trial. We find this observation of the High Court, also in accordance with, and not against, the weight of the material available on the record of the case. Lastly, but most importantly, the NAB was not able to show sufficient incriminating material on the record of the case to connect the main accused with the commission of offence of corruption and corrupt practices, and therefore he was granted post arrest bail by this Court vide order dated 21.10.2021 passed in C.P. No.4387 of 2021 (titled Syed Khursheed Ahmed Shah v. The State)[6]. Where the main accused has been granted bail, there remains little justification to decline the same relief to his co-accused who are alleged to have merely abetted him in the commission of the offence, as the case against such co-accused is at a lower rung than that against the main accused.

4 Iqbal Noori v. NAB PLD 2021 SC 916.

5 Zaigham Ashraf v. State 2016 SCMR 18 and Tariq Bashir v. State PLD 1995 SC 34.

10. The learned counsel for the petitioner has thus not been able to show that the impugned order is either perverse or against any settled principle of the law of bail, warranting interference by this Court. The petitions for leave to appeal are found meritless; they are therefore dismissed and leave to appeal declined.

Civil Petitions Nos. 1809 to 1814 of 2020, decided on 19th April, 2022.

(Against the judgment of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 10.03.2020, Passed in W.P. No.10586 of 2019 and other connected matters)

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497---National Accountability Ordinance (XVIII of 1999), Ss. 9, 10 & 16(a)---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 4, 9, 10A & 199---National Accountability Bureau Reference---Bail---Grounds---Delay in conclusion of trial---Whether grant of bail on the ground of delay in the conclusion of the trial was permissible under the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ('the NAB Ordinance')---Held, that inordinate or long delay in the conclusion of the trial for no fault of the accused and his protracted detention without determination of his guilt, amount to harassment and abuse of the process of law---Such delay can therefore be a valid ground for releasing the accused on bail and restoring his fundamental right to life and liberty---Inordinate delay in conclusion of the trial of an accused, for no fault on his part, being not envisaged by the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ('the NAB Ordinance') would inevitably attract the constitutional protections under Articles 4, 9 & 10A of the Constitution---In such a situation, it is just, fair and equitable that the prosecution (NAB) should not oppose bail, and if it does so, the courts would consider the opposition as unreasonable and grant bail, enforcing the fundamental rights of the accused.

"Delay" in the conclusion of a criminal trial is antithetic to the very concept of a "fair trial" and "due process" guaranteed by Article 10A of the Constitution. The right to a fair trial is a cardinal requirement of the rule of law. Conclusion of trial within a reasonable time is an essential component of the right to a fair trial. The prolonged pre-trial detention of the accused also defies the presumption of innocence, another essential element of the right to a fair trial, for an accused is presumed innocent until he is proven guilty by proof beyond reasonable doubt.

The European Convention on Human Rights, Article 6 ref.

The National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ('the NAB Ordinance') though does not provide for the release of an accused on bail pending his trial but ensures the expeditious conclusion of the trial, and thereby eliminates the possibility of protracted detention of the accused before his conviction. Under Section 16(a) of the NAB Ordinance, the trial is to proceed on a day-to-day basis and to be concluded within thirty days. The bar on granting bail to the accused under the NAB Ordinance is equitably balanced by providing for the trial to proceed on a day-to-day basis and its conclusion within thirty days. This statutory balance between the bar to grant bail and the expeditious conclusion of the trial would be rendered meaningless if an under-trial accused is detained for a long unexplained and unjustified period without determination of his guilt. While Section 16(a) of the NAB Ordinance that provides for concluding the trial within a period of thirty days is not to be construed strictly and applied rigidly, it manifests clearly the legislative intent for expeditious conclusion of the trial. The Legislature cannot be presumed to have intended an inordinate delay in conclusion of the trial and a prolonged detention of an under-trial accused, as a reasonable intention must always be attributed to the Legislature. Therefore, when the provision of NAB Ordinance requiring conclusion of trial within thirty days is not implemented, the corresponding provision barring grant of bail to the accused would also become proportionally pliant.

Tallat Ishaq v. National Accountability Bureau PLD 2019 SC 112 ref.

Inordinate delay in conclusion of the trial of an accused, for no fault on his part, being not envisaged by the NAB Ordinance would inevitably attract the constitutional protections under Articles 4, 9 and 10A of the Constitution. In such a situation, it is just, fair and equitable that the prosecution (NAB) should not oppose bail, and if it does so, the courts would consider the opposition as unreasonable and grant bail, enforcing the fundamental rights of the accused.

Inordinate or long delay in the conclusion of the trial for no fault of the accused and his protracted detention without determination of his guilt, amount to harassment and abuse of the process of law. Such delay can therefore be a valid ground for releasing the accused on bail and restoring his fundamental right to life and liberty.

Riasat Ali v. Ghulam Muhammad PLD 1968 SC 353 ref.

The case reported as Tallat Ishaq v. National Accountability Bureau PLD 2019 SC 112. ('Tallat Ishaq') also recognizes the ground of "shocking, unconscionable and inordinate delay" in the conclusion of the trial as a ground for granting the accused the relief of bail. Said case, however, does not specify what period of delay would be considered as "shocking, unconscionable and inordinate". It has left to the discretion of the courts to determine it in the peculiar facts and circumstances of each case. Such a discretion must be structured equitably and exercised uniformly. In this regard, the courts can borrow guidance from, and act upon, the legislative wisdom codified in the general criminal law balancing the public interest with the individual rights, and can accordingly give effect to the scheme of the NAB Ordinance and enforce the fundamental rights of the accused to life, liberty, fair trial and due process guaranteed under Articles 9 and 10A of the Constitution.

(b) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 10A---Right to a fair trial and due process---Liberal and progressive interpretation---Incorporation of the right to a fair trial and due process by Article 10-A in the Constitution as an independent fundamental right underscores the constitutional significance of fair trial and due process and like other fundamental rights, it is to receive a liberal and progressive interpretation and enforcement.

(c) National Judicial (Policy Making) Committee Ordinance (LXXI of 2002)---

----Ss. 4(a) & 6---Police Order (No.22 of 2002), Arts. 109 & 111---Inordinate or long delay in the conclusion of trials---General directions issued by the Supreme Court to eradicate the issue of delay in conclusion of trials stated.

Inordinate and endless delay in the conclusion of a criminal trial is the singular most important challenge faced by the criminal justice system and has a devastating effect on the credibility, transparency, public confidence and health of the justice system. To meet this challenge coordinated efforts of all the organs of the Government; the Legislature, the Executive and the Judiciary, are required. One immediate solution is to activate the Provincial Justice Committees constituted under the National Judicial (Policy Making) Committee Ordinance 2002. The Chief Justices of the High Courts, who are the Chairpersons of these Committees, must convene and hold meetings of these Committees at least on quarterly basis. The Vice Chairpersons of the Provincial Bar Councils may also be invited to attend and participate in meetings of these Committees, as the Bar is an important stakeholder in the justice system. Similarly, the District Criminal Justice Coordination Committees established under the Police Order 2002 should also be revitalized for reviewing and improving the operation of the criminal justice system.

Additionally, the High Courts should take up and address, on priority basis, the issues relating to appointments of judges in the District Judiciary against the available vacant posts and consider the creation of new posts, to reduce and rationalize the heavy dockets of cases before the general and special courts.

Ch. Mumtaz Yousaf, D.P.G. for Petitioners. (In all cases).

Nemo for for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 19th April, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The Chairman, National Accountability Bureau ("NAB"), seeks leave to appeal against the judgment dated 10.03.2020 passed by the Lahore High Court, on the writ petitions filed by the respondents under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution"), whereby post-arrest bail has been granted to the respondents in NAB Reference No.17/2018 ("Reference") dated 02.10.2018 for offences under Section 9 (a) (iii), (iv), (vi) and (xii) of the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ("NAB Ordinance")

2. Briefly stated, the Reference alleges that the respondents facilitated in making fake appointments in the Education Department and thereby embezzled and misappropriated funds from public exchequer by paying salaries, allowances, etc., to ghost/bogus employees.

3. Learned counsel for the petitioner contends that the respondents have been granted bail by the High Court, primarily on the ground of delay in the conclusion of the trial, which is not permissible under the NAB Ordinance. In support of his argument, he places reliance on Tallat Ishaq[1].

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioner and have gone through the record of the case, as well as, the cited case law.

5. Perusal of the record shows insufficiency of incriminating material to prima facie establish that the appointments made in the Education Department were fake or that the respondents had gained any monetary benefits as a result thereof. There are thus no reasonable grounds for believing that the respondents are guilty of the alleged offences, hence they were entitled to post arrest bail on this ground alone.

6. So far as the ground of delay in conclusion of the trial is concerned, the High Court has rightly considered the delay unjustifiable and inordinate, thus enlarging the respondents on bail. We also have noticed the long delay in conclusion of the trial, with great concern. The Reference was filed in the year 2018, and the respondents were arrested in the same year. However, till date after lapse of a period of almost four years, the trial has yet not even commenced and no plausible explanation has been put forth by the NAB, in this regard.

7. "Delay" in the conclusion of a criminal trial is antithetic to the very concept of a "fair trial" and "due process" guaranteed by Article 10A of the Constitution. The right to a fair trial is a cardinal requirement of the rule of law. If an accused cannot be tried fairly for an offence, he should not be tried for it at all.[2] Conclusion of trial within a reasonable time is an essential component of the right to a fair trial.[3] The prolonged pre-trial detention of the accused also defies the presumption of innocence, another essential element of the right to a fair trial, for an accused is presumed innocent until he is proven guilty by proof beyond reasonable doubt.[4] Even before the addition of Article 10A in the Constitution, the right to a fair trial and due process was well-entrenched in our jurisprudence and considered to be a part of the right of access to justice enshrined in the constitutional right to be dealt with in accordance with law guaranteed by Article 4 and the fundamental right to life and liberty guaranteed by Article 9 of the Constitution.[5] The incorporation of the right to a fair trial and due process by Article 10-A in the Constitution as an independent fundamental right underscores the constitutional significance of fair trial and due process and like other fundamental rights, it is to receive a liberal and progressive interpretation and enforcement.

8. The NAB Ordinance[6] though does not provide for the release of an accused on bail pending his trial but ensures the expeditious conclusion of the trial, and thereby eliminates the possibility of protracted detention of the accused before his conviction. Under Section 16(a) of the NAB Ordinance, the trial is to proceed on a day-to-day basis and to be concluded within thirty days. The bar on granting bail to the accused under the NAB Ordinance is equitably balanced by providing for the trial to proceed on a day-to-day basis and its conclusion within thirty days. This statutory balance between the bar to grant bail and the expeditious conclusion of the trial would be rendered meaningless if an under-trial accused is detained for a long unexplained and unjustified period without determination of his guilt. While Section 16(a) of the NAB Ordinance that provides for concluding the trial within a period of thirty days is not to be construed strictly and applied rigidly as held in Tallat Ishaq, it manifests clearly the legislative intent for expeditious conclusion of the trial. The Legislature cannot be presumed to have intended an inordinate delay in conclusion of the trial and a prolonged detention of an under-trial accused, as a reasonable intention must always be attributed to the Legislature. Therefore, when the provision of NAB Ordinance requiring conclusion of trial within thirty days is not implemented, the corresponding provision barring grant of bail to the accused would also become proportionally plaint. If the scheme of a law in regard to a vital part fails, the sanctity of the other part, as observed by Salahuddin, J. in Zahur Ilahi[7], must of necessity be affected and what appears to be rigid must give way to flexibility. Inordinate delay in conclusion of the trial of an accused, for no fault on his part, being not envisaged by the NAB Ordinance would inevitably attract the constitutional protections under Articles 4, 9 and 10A of the Constitution. In such a situation, it is just, fair and equitable that the prosecution (NAB) should not oppose bail, and if it does so, the courts would consider the opposition as unreasonable and grant bail,8 enforcing the fundamental rights of the accused.

9. Inordinate or long delay in the conclusion of the trial for no fault of the accused and his protracted detention without determination of his guilt, as held by this Court in Riasat Ali9, amount to harassment and abuse of the process of law. Such delay can therefore be a valid ground for releasing the accused on bail and restoring his fundamental right to life and liberty. No doubt, the right to life and liberty guaranteed by Article 9 of the Constitution is "subject to law" but the law, which can curtail this right, means a law that promotes larger public interest and not a law that impedes "fair trial" and limits "due process". The general criminal law10 has balanced the public interest and individual rights to life and liberty by recognizing the right of an accused to be released on bail, in case the trial against him is not concluded, for no fault on his part, within a specified period from the date of his detention, that is, one year for offences not punishable with death and two years for offences punishable with death. Tallat Ishaq relied upon by the learned counsel for the petitioner also recognizes the ground of "shocking, unconscionable and inordinate delay" in the conclusion of the trial as a ground for granting the accused the relief of bail. Tallat Ishaq, however, does not specify what period of delay would be considered as "shocking, unconscionable and inordinate". It has left to the discretion of the courts to determine it in the peculiar facts and circumstances of each case. Such a discretion must be structured equitably and exercised uniformly. In this regard, the courts can borrow guidance from, and act upon, the legislative wisdom codified in the general criminal law11 balancing the public interest with the individual rights, and can accordingly give effect to the scheme of the NAB Ordinance and enforce the fundamental rights of the accused to life, liberty, fair trial and due process guaranteed under Articles 9 and 10A of the Constitution.

10. The impugned judgment, when viewed in the light of the above principles of law, is found to be in accord therewith. This Court usually interferes in its appellate jurisdiction in such like matters, on two grounds: (i) when the impugned order is perverse on the face of it, or (ii) when the impugned order has been made in clear disregard of some principle of the law of bail. None of these grounds is available to the petitioner in the present case. The petitions for leave to appeal are found meritless; they are therefore dismissed and leave to appeal declined.

General directions to eradicate the evil of delay in conclusion of trials.

11. Inordinate and endless delay in the conclusion of a criminal trial is the singular most important challenge faced by our criminal justice system and has a devastating effect on the credibility, transparency, public confidence and health of our justice system. To meet this challenge coordinated efforts of all the organs of the Government; the Legislature, the Executive and the Judiciary, are required. One immediate solution is to activate the Provincial Justice Committees constituted under the National Judicial (Policy Making) Committee Ordinance, 2002. The Chief Justices of the High Courts, who are the Chairpersons of these Committees, must convene and hold meetings of these Committees at least on quarterly basis. The Vice-Chairpersons of the Provincial Bar Councils may also be invited to attend and participate in meetings of these Committees, as the Bar is an important stakeholder in the justice system. Similarly, the District Criminal Justice Coordination Committees established under the Police Order 2002 should also be revitalized for reviewing and improving the operation of the criminal justice system.

12. Additionally, the High Courts should take up and address, on priority basis, the issues relating to appointments of judges in the District Judiciary against the available vacant posts and consider the creation of new posts, to reduce and rationalize the heavy dockets of cases before the general and special courts. Needless to reiterate that the High Courts have the constitutional mandate, under Article 203 of the Constitution, to supervise and control all courts, whether of general or special jurisdiction, established by law as per Article 175(1) of the Constitution, within their respective jurisdiction.

13. Office shall send copies of this order to the Registrars of all the High Courts and to the Secretaries of all the Federal and Provincial Law Ministries/Departments.

Crl. P. No. 440 of 2022, decided on 22nd June, 2022.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Multan Bench, dated 24.11.2021 passed in Crl. Misc. No.7332-B of 2021)

----S. 497(1), fourth proviso---Bail---Expression "hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal" as used in the fourth proviso to Section 497(1) Cr.P.C.---Scope of the expression "hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal" explained.

The word "criminal" in the phrase "hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal" of the fourth proviso to Section 497(1), Cr.P.C., is not to be construed in the technical sense for a person who has been adjudged guilty of a charge in a Court of law, i.e., a convicted person; it has rather been used in its ordinary sense for a person who violates the law of the land and is accused of committing a crime. Further, the fourth proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. deals with the previously convicted offenders separately. Therefore, in order to bring an accused within the compass of a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, it is not necessary to prove that he has a previous criminal record of conviction. It is thus obvious that the previous criminal record of convictions or of pendency of other criminal cases, though may be taken into consideration as a supporting material, is not an exclusive deciding factor to form an opinion as to whether the accused is a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal. Such an opinion is to be formed by the court mainly on basis of the facts and circumstances of the case, borne out from the material available on record, wherein the bail is applied on the ground of delay in conclusion of the trial, by considering inter alia, the nature of the offence involved, its effects on the victims or the society at large, the role attributed to the accused, the manner in which the offence was committed and the conduct of the accused. The formation and recording of such opinion as to the character of the accused, like the opinion as to reasonable grounds for believing his involvement in the commission of the offence, is of tentative nature, and is thus open to reexamination and final determination on conclusion of the trial.

Moundar v. State PLD 1990 SC 934; Sher Ali v. State 1998 SCMR 190; Jalal v. Allahyar 1993 SCMR 525; Umar Draz v.

State 1997 SCMR 885; Muhammad Hanif v. State PLD 1986 Kar. 437; Hussain v. State 1991 PCr.LJ 26; Sultan Ali v. State 1999 MLD 454; Omair Ahmed v. State 1996 PCr.LJ 22; Ghulam Rasool v. State 1998 MLD 1344; Muhammad Asif v. State PLD 1996 Kar. 385; Shahnawaz v. State 2000 PCr.LJ 630 and Anwar Beg v. State 1999 PCr.LJ 1450 ref.

The words "hardened, desperate or dangerous" point towards a person who is likely to seriously injure and hurt others without caring for the consequences of his violent act and can pose a serious threat to the society if set free on bail, and such tentative opinion as to the character of the accused is to be formed by the court upon careful examination of the facts and circumstances of the case. The court may also refer to any previous criminal record, if available, for forming such opinion but it matters little if the accused does not have a previous criminal record. The very gravity and severity of the act alleged to have been committed by the accused, even though for the first time, may be sufficient to attract the fourth proviso to section 497(1) Cr.P.C. in the peculiar facts and circumstances of a case and may lead the court to form opinion that the accused is a hardened, desperate or a dangerous criminal.

commission of offence and the role attributed to the accused of cutting the nose of his sister-in-law and her alleged paramour were the circumstances which described him as a person who could be harmful and dangerous for the society if released on bail and thus made him to fall within the scope of the expression of "a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal" as used in the fourth proviso to Section 497(1), Cr.P.C.---Accused was therefore not entitled to the benefit of bail on statutory ground of delay in conclusion of his trial, under the third proviso to Section 497(1), Cr.P.C.---Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed, and accused was refused bail.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 24.11.2021, whereby post-arrest bail was denied to him in case FIR No. 180/2020, dated 20.07.2020, registered at Police Station, Shah Saddar Din, District, Dera Ghazi Khan for offences punishable under Sections 336, 334, 367, 354, 342, 148 and 149 of P.P.C.

2. Briefly, the allegation as per the crime report is that the petitioner cut the nose of his bhabi, namely, Haseena Bibi, as well as, Abdul Rasheed, her alleged paramour. Unable to convince us on the merits of the case, the learned counsel mainly sought bail on the statutory ground of delay in conclusion of the trial, under the third proviso to Section 497(1), Cr.P.C. He submitted that the petitioner was arrested on 20.07.2020 and more than two years have passed but the trial has not yet been concluded for no fault of the petitioner. The learned State counsel opposed the grant of bail to the petitioner on this ground with the submission that the petitioner is a hardened, desperate and dangerous criminal and is therefore not entitled to the grant of bail, as per the fourth proviso to Section 497(1), Cr.P.C. Learned counsel for the petitioner, in rebuttal, submitted that the petitioner has no previous criminal record, therefore, he cannot be treated as a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the record of the case with their able assistance.

4. The sole question that needs consideration and determination by us, in the present case, is: whether an accused person may be treated as a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, within the meaning of that expression as used in the fourth proviso to Section 497(1), Cr.P.C., on the basis of the facts and circumstances of the case, when he applies for bail on the statutory ground of delay in conclusion of the trial, or there must necessarily be some previous criminal record of the accused to form such an opinion by the court about him.

5. In order to determine the above question, it is important to revisit the fourth proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C., which is reproduced hereunder for ready reference:

497. When bail may be taken in case of nonbailable offence. (1)

Provided .....

Provided .....

Provided ....

Provided further that the provisions of the foregoing proviso shall not apply to a previously convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or to a person who, in the opinion of the court, is a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal or is accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

The third proviso to Section 497(1) thus does not apply to an accused who is:

(i) a previously convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life; or

(ii) a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, in the opinion of the Court; or

(iii) an accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

Condition (i) denies the relief of statutory bail to the accused because of his previous conviction for an offence punishable with death or life imprisonment. Condition (iii) is also self-explanatory and is attracted when the petitioner is accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life. So while condition (i) is about the past conviction of the accused and condition (iii) deals with the specific act of terrorism, it is condition (ii) which allows the court to make a contemporary assessment of the character of the accused to arrive at an opinion whether he is a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal.

6. The word "criminal" in the phrase "hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal" of the fourth proviso to Section 497(1), Cr.P.C., as held by a five member bench of this Court in Moundar v. State,[1] is not to be construed in the technical sense for a person who has been adjudged guilty of a charge in a Court of law, i.e., a convicted person; it has rather been used in its ordinary sense for a person who violates the law of the land and is accused of committing a crime. Further, the fourth proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. deals with the previously convicted offenders separately. Therefore, in order to bring an accused within the compass of a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, it is not necessary to prove that he has a previous criminal record of conviction.[2] It is thus obvious that the previous criminal record of convictions or of pendency of other criminal cases, though may be taken into consideration as a supporting material, is not an exclusive deciding factor to form an opinion as to whether the accused is a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal. Such an opinion is to be formed by the court mainly on basis of the facts and circumstances of the case, borne out from the material available on record, wherein the bail is applied on the ground of delay in conclusion of the trial,[3] by considering inter alia, the nature of the offence involved,[4] its effects on the victims or the society at large,[5] the role attributed to the accused,[6] the manner in which the offence was committed[7] and the conduct of the accused.[8] Needless to mention that the formation and recording of such opinion as to the character of the accused, like the opinion as to reasonable grounds for believing his involvement in the commission of the offence, is of tentative nature, and is thus open to re-examination and final determination on conclusion of the trial.

7. The meaning and scope of the phrase "hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal" have also been explained in Shakeel Shah,[9] wherein this Court held that the words "hardened, desperate or dangerous" point towards a person who is likely to seriously injure and hurt others without caring for the consequences of his violent act and can pose a serious threat to the society if set free on bail, and such tentative opinion as to the character of the accused is to be formed by the court upon careful examination of the facts and circumstances of the case. We are of the considered view that the court may also refer to any previous criminal record, if available, for forming such opinion but it matters little if the accused does not have a previous criminal record. The very gravity and severity of the act alleged to have been committed by the accused, even though for the first time, may be sufficient to attract the fourth proviso to section 497(1) Cr.P.C. in the peculiar facts and circumstances of a case and may lead the court to form opinion that the accused is a hardened, desperate or a dangerous criminal.

8. In the present case, the nature and manner of the commission of offence and the role attributed to the petitioner of cutting the nose of his bhabi and her alleged paramour are the circumstances which, in our opinion, describe him as a person who can be harmful and dangerous for the society if released on bail and thus makes him to fall within the scope of the expression of "a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal" as used in the fourth proviso to Section 497(1), Cr.P.C. He is therefore not entitled to the benefit of the third proviso to Section 497(1), Cr.P.C. Hence, we are not inclined to interfere in the impugned order. Leave to appeal is declined and the petition is dismissed. We, however, direct the trial court to expedite the proceedings of the case and conclude the trial at the earliest.

(d) Juvenile Justice System Act (XXII of 2018)---

----S. 2(a) & Preamble---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 25(3) & 35---Concept of juvenile justice system explained.

The conceptual framework of juvenile justice system has been carved out of the general criminal justice system. Juvenile justice system is not retributive in character, it is primarily rehabilitative and restorative. Restorative justice is a theory of justice that emphasizes repairing the harm caused by criminal behavior. It rests on the best interest of the child and ensures fulfillment of his basic rights and needs, identity, social well-being, physical, emotional and psychological development. This therapeutic underpinning is the central theme of Juvenile Justice System. Juvenile courts, by their very nature, were designed to be more therapeutic than the adult criminal justice system as juveniles differ from adults in their development and their needs.

Restorative Justice, OFF. OF JUV. JUST. & DELINQ. PREVENTION 1 (Nov. 2010) ref.

The juvenile justice system also finds its ideological roots in the Constitution. Article 25(3) of the Constitution empowers the State to make special provisions for the protection of children even if such protection discriminates against the adults (reverse discrimination). Article 35 of the Constitution provides that the State shall protect the child. Furthermore, the State of Pakistan is a signatory to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Child (UNCRC) and is thus under an international obligation to take special measures for the protection and rehabilitation of the juveniles who come in conflict with law. It was for the compliance of this constitutional mandate and for the fulfilment of this international obligation that the Juvenile Justice System Act, 2018 was enacted by the legislature of Pakistan. The main object of the enactment of the 2018 Act is to modify and amend the law relating to criminal justice system for juveniles by providing special focus on disposal of their cases through diversion and social integration for their rehabilitation.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 17.02.2022 ("impugned order") whereby post-arrest bail was denied to the petitioner by the High Court in case FIR No. 12 of 2021, registered at P.S. Nilore, Islamabad, for the commission of offence of Qatl-i-amd punishable under Section 302/34 of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 ("P.P.C.").

2. Briefly, the allegation against the petitioner in the crime report is that he and his co-accused fired at the brother of the complainant and caused his death. In this background, the petitioner was arrested by the Police on 18.03.2021, he remained in police custody on physical remand till 24.03.2021 and after that he was remanded to judicial custody.

3. The petitioner, who was adjudged to be a juvenile by the trial court vide its order dated 15.11.2021, applied for post arrest bail on merits, as well as, on the ground of delay in conclusion of the trial, but both the trial court and the High Court dismissed his applications. Before us, the learned counsel for the petitioner has pressed only the ground of delay. He contended that the petitioner, a juvenile, is to be released on bail, as of right, under Section 6(5) of the Juvenile Justice System Act, 2018 ("Act") as he has been detained for a continuous period exceeding six months without the trial having been completed and the delay in completion of the trial has not been occasioned by an act or omission of the petitioner or any other person acting on his behalf. Learned State counsel, on the other hand, maintained that Section 6(5) of the Act is not applicable to a case involving a "heinous offence".

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record of the case. The question of law involved in the present case is whether Section 6(5) of the Act is applicable to a case where the juvenile, including a juvenile over sixteen years of age, is involved in a "heinous offence." Under the Act, offences have been categorized into (i) minor offences,[1] (ii) major offences[2] and (iii) heinous offences.[3] The offence of Qatl-i-amd involved in the present case, being serious in character and punishable with death or imprisonment for life under Section 302, P.P.C., is admittedly a "heinous offence" as defined in Section 2(g) of the Act. Section 6 of the Act, for ease of reference, is reproduced as follows:

> 6. Release of a juvenile on bail---(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code, a juvenile accused of bailable offence shall, if already not released under section 496 of the Code, be released by the Juvenile Court on bail with or without surety unless it appears that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the release of such juvenile may bring him in association with criminals or expose him to any other danger. In this situation the juvenile shall be placed under the custody of a suitable person or Juvenile Rehabilitation Centre under the supervision of probation officer. The juvenile shall not under any circumstances be kept in a police station under police custody or jail in such cases.
> (2) The Juvenile Court shall, in a case where a juvenile is not released under subsection (1), direct the police for tracing guardian of such juvenile and where guardian of such juvenile is traced out, the Juvenile Court may immediately handover custody of the juvenile to his guardian.
> (3) Where a juvenile is arrested or detained for commission of a minor or a major offence for the purposes of this Act, he shall be treated as if he was accused of commission of a bailable offence.
> (4) Where a juvenile of more than sixteen years of age is arrested or detained for a heinous offence, he may not be released on bail if the Juvenile Court is of the opinion that there are reasonable grounds to believe that such juvenile is involved in commission of a heinous offence.
> (5) Where the Juvenile Court is of the opinion that the delay in the trial of a juvenile has not been occasioned by an act or omission of such juvenile or any other person acting on his behalf or in exercise of any right or privilege under any law for the time being in force, such juvenile shall be released on bail if he has been detained for a continues period exceeding six months and whose trial has not been completed.

Section 6 of the Act deals with the release of a juvenile on bail falling under different categories of offences. Section 6(3) provides for treating the "minor offences" and "major offences" as bailable, while the provisions for release on bail of a juvenile accused of bailable offences are contained in subsection (1) thereof. These provisions though provide for placing a juvenile accused of a bailable offence under the custody of a suitable person or Juvenile Rehabilitation Centre under the supervision of probation officer if there are reasonable grounds for believing that the release of such juvenile may bring him in association with criminals or expose him to any other danger, but categorically prohibit his detention in a police station under police custody or in a jail. Therefore, a juvenile cannot be detained in a police station or a jail in bailable offences, which include minor offences and major offences as defined under the Act.

5. Section 6(4) of the Act provides that where a juvenile is more than sixteen years of age and is arrested or detained for a heinous offence, he may not be released on bail if the Juvenile Court is of the opinion that there are reasonable grounds to believe that such juvenile is involved in commission of a heinous offence. While Section 6(4) deals with the bail of juveniles under a heinous offence on merits, a separate provision provides for bail to the same juveniles where they have been detained for a continuous period exceeding six months and whose trial has not been completed. Under the Act, only in a case involving "heinous offence" can a juvenile be detained in a police station or a jail. Thus, it can safely be concluded that Section 6(5) of the Act does apply, rather solely applies, to a case involving a "heinous offence", irrespective of the age of the juvenile. Section 6(5) in effect works as a proviso to Section 6(4) and appears to have no other purpose under the scheme of the Act. The approach of the trial court, in the present case, to decline benefit of Section 6(5) of the Act to the petitioner merely by observing that the offence is "heinous" is not legally correct; this subsection is meant for, and only applies to, a case involving "heinous offence". To hold otherwise will render Section 6(5) redundant and unnecessary.

6. In the present case, the petitioner was arrested on 18.03.2021 and he had been detained for a continuous period exceeding six months since his detention and his trial had not been completed when he applied for the relief of bail before the trial court and the High Court. The trial court declined the relief of bail to the petitioner without discussing the fact who was at fault for the delay in completion of the trial. While the High Court noted that the delay occurred due to failure of the Investigating Officer in timely submission of the final report under Section 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898. In the latest report submitted by the trial court, dated 25.05.2022, on requisition of this Court, it has been reported that the delay has occurred due to filing of a private complaint by the complainant. The delay in completion of the trial is thus not attributable to any act or omission of the petitioner or any other person acting on his behalf, and the petitioner is therefore entitled to be released on bail, as of right, under Section 6(5) of the Act.

7. What is more disquieting is that the High Court has declined the relief under Section 6(5) of the Act to the petitioner, by holding in the impugned order that period of six months is to be counted from 15.11.2021 when the petitioner was determined by the trial court to be a juvenile and not from 18.03.2021 when he was arrested. We think that attention of the High Court was not invited to the judgments of this Court delivered in the cases of Nadeem Samson,[4] and Shakeel Shah[5] relating to 3rd proviso to Section 497(1) Cr.P.C., which contains similar provisions, and of Saleem Khan[6] relating to Section 6(5) of the Act; this Court has held in these cases that the period of delay in the conclusion of the trial is to be counted from the date of the detention of the accused in the case. The period of six months mentioned in Section 6(5) of the Act is therefore to be counted from the date of arrest of the juvenile, after determination of his age and not from the date of such determination or adjudication by the Court.

8. It is important to keep in mind the conceptual framework of juvenile justice system which has been carved out of the general criminal justice system. Juvenile justice system is not retributive in character, it is primarily rehabilitative and restorative[7]. Restorative justice is "a theory of justice that emphasizes repairing the harm caused by criminal behavior."[8] It rests on the "best interest of the child"[9] and ensures fulfillment of his basic rights and needs, identity, social well-being, physical, emotional and pschological development. This therapeutic underpinning is the central theme of Juvenile Justice System. Juvenile courts, by their very nature, were designed to be more therapeutic than the adult criminal justice system as juveniles differ from adults in their development and their needs.

9. The juvenile justice system also finds its ideological roots in the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution"). Article 25(3) empowers the State to make special provisions for the protection of children even if such protection discriminates against the adults (reverse discrimination[10]). Article 35 of the Constitution provides that the State shall protect the child. Furthermore, the State of Pakistan is a signatory to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child ("UNCRC") and is thus under an international obligation to take special measures for the protection and rehabilitation of the juveniles who come in conflict with law. It was for the compliance of this constitutional mandate and for the fulfilment of this international obligation that the Act was enacted by the legislature of Pakistan. The main object of the enactment of the Act is to modify and amend the law relating to criminal justice system for juveniles by providing special focus on disposal of their cases through diversion and social integration for their rehabilitation.[11]

10. Article 37(b) of the UNCRC provides that the process of arrest, detention or imprisonment of a juvenile is to be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, while para 28 of the General Comments of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC)[12], which interprets Article 37(b), says that the use of deprivation of liberty, and in particular pre-trial detention, is to be strictly limited. Section 6 of the Act that deals with release of juvenile on bail pending his trial actualizes Article 37 (b) of the UNCRC.

11. In the present case, the courts below have failed to appreciate the scheme of the Act and in particular that of Section 6(5) of the Act, which has been enacted to counter the negative effects of long term detention of the juveniles in jail. The courts below have thus committed a patent error of law by not allowing the benefit of Section 6(5) of the Act to the petitioner, when the delay in completion of the trial was not attributable to any act or omission or of any other person acting on his behalf. The petition is therefore converted into appeal and the same is allowed. The impugned order is set aside and the application for post arrest bail of the petitioner is accepted under Section 6(5) of the Act on the ground of delay in completion of the trial exceeding a period of six months since the date of his arrest in the case. The petitioner is admitted to post arrest bail subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.500,000/- with two sureties in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial court. The trial court shall conclude the trial of the petitioner expeditiously as undertaken by it in the report submitted to this Court.

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 265-K---Power of court to acquit accused at any stage---Scope of Section 265-K, Cr.P.C. stated.

When the trial is near completion, the fate of the case should not ordinarily be decided under section 265-K of the Cr.P.C. There may however be such exceptional circumstances which may justify departure from the said rule, as there is hardly any rule of practice which does not admit exception(s). Even otherwise, section 265-K of the Cr.P.C. provides that the trial court can make an order of acquittal at any stage of the case, and such stage may be an initial stage of the case on taking cognizance before recording of the prosecution evidence, or it may be a later stage of the case after recording of some evidence of the prosecution. No absolute bar, in derogation of the law, can therefore be put on the statutory power of the trial court to entertain an application under section 265-K, Cr.P.C. and decide upon its merits at a later stage of the trial if the exceptional circumstances of the case call for so doing to prevent the abuse of the process of court or to secure the ends of justice.

Ordinarily, an accused, who invokes section 265-K, Cr.P.C. for his acquittal, pleads that there is no probability of his being convicted of any offence in the case on any of the following four grounds: (i) that even if the facts alleged by the prosecution are taken to be true on their face value, they do not make out/constitute the commission of any offence by the accused; (ii) that there is no evidence or incriminating material on record of the case in support of the commission of the alleged offence by the accused; (iii) that the evidence or incriminating material collected during investigation in support of the commission of the alleged offence and proposed to be produced during trial is insufficient and, even if recorded, will not sustain conviction of the accused, of any offence in the case; and (iv) that the prosecution evidence so far recorded does not make out a case for conviction of the accused, of any offence in the case and the remaining prosecution evidence, even if recorded, will not improve the prosecution case against the accused in any manner. It is this fourth ground that attracts the application of the rule of practice and priority that when the trial is near completion, the fate of the case should not ordinarily be decided under section 265-K of the Cr.P.C., and, that too, when the trial is near completion, that is, when almost the whole of the prosecution evidence has been recorded. The wisdom behind the rule is that the appraisal of almost the whole prosecution evidence, when the trial is near completion, for deciding the application under Section 265-K, Cr.P.C. amounts to prejudging the case before the final judgment which not only reduces the sanctity and strength of the final judgment, but may also prejudice the case of the other accused, if any, undergoing trial. Any such exercise does not, therefore, serve the ends of justice. This rule thus has no relevancy or application to the first three grounds, which do not involve the appraisal of the prosecution evidence recorded during trial.

----S. 405---Criminal breach of trust---Entrustment of property---Scope of Section 405, P.P.C. stated.

Although the "entrustment" of property within the meaning of section 405, P.P.C. does not envisage the creation of a formal trust with all the technicalities of the law of trust, it does contemplate that to constitute entrustment the accused must have held the property in a fiduciary capacity. The word "trust" has been used in section 405 in the ordinary sense of that word, and covers not only the relationship of trustee and beneficiary but also that of bailer and bailee, master and servant, pledger and pledgee, guardian and ward, and all other relations that postulate the existence of a fiduciary relationship between the complainant and the accused. The entrustment of property implies that the ownership of the entrusted property vests in a person other than the one who is entrusted with it. If the property belongs to and is owned by the accused in his own right, it cannot be said that he was entrusted with that property and that by using or disposing of that property he committed the offence of criminal breach of trust. "Entrustment" is an essential ingredient of the offence of criminal breach of trust as defined in section 405, P.P.C.; therefore, where there is no entrustment of property, there can be no criminal breach of trust.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---This judgment decides both the above-captioned petitions as they arise out of the same NAB Reference No. 16 of 2018.

2. Briefly stated, as per the NAB Reference the allegation against Abbas Haider Naqvi and Yasser ul Haq Effendi ("Petitioners"), who are the employees of Shell Pakistan Limited ("SPL"), is that they, in connivance with the other co-accused who are the CEO and Directors of Aerolube Pakistan Limited ("APL"), illegally sold the aviation fuel, also called Jet Propulsion ("JP-I"), as Super Kerosene Oil ("SKO") in the open market instead of supplying the same to aviation customers only, during the years 2013-2016. And thereby they caused a loss of Rs.2.37 billion to the public exchequer, as certain duties/taxes did not apply to the sale of JP-I but were levied on the sale of SKO. The NAB Reference states that by doing the said act, the Petitioners and their co-accused persons committed the offence of corruption and corrupt practices as defined under Section 9(a)(x)(xi)&(xii), and punishable under Section 10 of the National Accountability Ordinance 1999 ("NAB Ordinance").

C.P. No. 620 of 2021

3. The Petitioners seek, through this petition, leave to appeal against the order dated 08.01.2021 passed by the High Court of Sindh, dismissing their constitutional petition filed under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution") against the order of the Accountability Court, dated 15.04.2019, whereby the Accountability Court had dismissed their application under Section 265-K of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 ("Cr.P.C.").

4. The Petitioners, in their application under Section 265-K, Cr.P.C., prayed for acquittal mainly on the grounds that no offence cognizable under the NAB Ordinance, 1999 is made out against them, that the matter complained of does not spell out any offence, that the allegation levelled against them relates to an activity regulated under the Oil and Gas Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ("OGRA Ordinance") and thus falls within the exclusive domain of the Oil and Gas Regulatory Authority ("OGRA"), and that there is no probability of their conviction of any offence under the NAB Reference.

5. The Accountability Court dismissed their application, with the observations that the act of the Petitioners as alleged in the NAB Reference constitutes the offence as defined under Section 9 of the NAB Ordinance, that the recording of the prosecution evidence is underway and the evaluation of the evidence collected by the Investigating Officer at this stage may prejudice the case of either side, and that the object and purpose of the NAB Ordinance and the OGRA Ordinance are different, therefore, the contention that the OGRA Ordinance has an overriding effect does not have any substance.

6. The High Court dismissed the constitutional petition of the Petitioners and maintained the order of the Accountability Court, with the reasons that the contention of the Petitioners that no offence punishable under the NAB Ordinance is made out, can only be decided after deep appreciation of the prosecution evidence which is not permissible under the constitutional jurisdiction, that the trial of the Petitioners is near completion and expressing an opinion on merits of the case at this stage would prejudice the case of the parties and defeat the ends of justice, and that the proceedings against the Petitioners under the NAB Ordinance and the imposition of fine-penalty on SPL[1], the employer-company of the Petitioners, under the OGRA Ordinance do not attract the protection against double jeopardy guaranteed by Article 13 of the Constitution and Section 403 of the Cr.P.C. Hence, the present petition is for leave to appeal.

7. Through this petition, the Petitioners seek leave to appeal against the order dated 11.02.2022 passed by the High Court of Sindh, dismissing their constitutional petition filed under Article 199 of the Constitution against the order of the Accountability Court, dated 27.11.2021, whereby the Accountability Court had dismissed their application for transfer of the case to the Court of Special Judge (Customs and Taxation).

8. The Petitioners, in their application, prayed for transfer of their case from the Accountability Court to the Court of Special Judge (Customs and Taxation) on the ground that the allegation made in the NAB Reference relates to the alleged evasion of petroleum levy and sale tax payable on the sale of SKO, which falls within the domain of the Court of Special Judge (Customs and Taxation). The Petitioners relied, in this regard, on the amendments made in the NAB Ordinance by the NAB (Second and Third Amendments) Ordinances 2021, under which substituted Section 4(2)(a) of the NAB Ordinance provides that the provisions of the NAB Ordinance shall not be applicable to all the matters pertaining to federal, provincial or local taxation, other levies or imposts, including refunds, or loss of exchequer pertaining to taxation, and substituted Section 4(3) of the NAB Ordinance provides that all pending inquiries, investigations, trials or proceedings under the NAB Ordinance relating to such matters shall stand transferred to the concerned authorities, departments and Courts under the respective laws.

9. The Accountability Court dismissed the said application, with the observation that the allegation against the Petitioners of illegal sale of the JP-I in the open market, does not fall within the ambit of substituted Section 4(2)(a) and Section 4(3) of the NAB Ordinance. The High Court maintained the order of the Accountability Court and dismissed the constitutional petition of the Petitioners, with the reason that the Petitioners by their alleged act of illegally selling the JP-I in the open market committed the breach of trust which is an offence under Section 9(a)(x)&(xi) of the NAB Ordinance, and that the case is not of tax evasion, in essence. Hence, this petition is for leave to appeal.

10. We have heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties and perused the record of the case with their able assistance.

11. First of all, we would like to state that there can be no cavil to the rule of practice and propriety, referred to by the High Court, that when the trial is near completion, the fate of the case should not ordinarily be decided under Section 265-K of the Cr.P.C.[2] There may however be such exceptional circumstances which may justify departure from the said rule, as there is hardly any rule of practice which does not admit exception(s). Even otherwise, Section 265-K of the Cr.P.C. provides that the trial court can make an order of acquittal at any stage of the case, and such stage may be an initial stage of the case on taking cognizance before recording of the prosecution evidence,[3] or it may be a later stage of the case after recording of some evidence of the prosecution.[4] No absolute bar, in derogation of the law, can therefore be put on the statutory power of the trial court to entertain an application under Section 265-K, Cr.P.C. and decide upon its merits at a later stage of the trial if the exceptional circumstances of the case call for so doing to prevent the abuse of the process of court or to secure the ends of justice. The High Court has, however, failed to appreciate that the said rule has no application to a ground pleaded by an accused for his acquittal under Section 265-K of the Cr.P.C., which does not require appraisal of the prosecution evidence recorded during trial, such as, the ground pleaded by the Petitioners in the present case.

12. Ordinarily, an accused, who invokes Section 265-K[5] Cr.P.C. for his acquittal, pleads that there is no probability of his being convicted of any offence in the case on any of the following four grounds: (i) that even if the facts alleged by the prosecution are taken to be true on their face value, they do not make out/constitute the commission of any offence by the accused;[6] (ii) that there is no evidence or incriminating material on record of the case in support of the commission of the alleged offence by the accused;[7] (iii) that the evidence or incriminating material collected during investigation in support of the commission of the alleged offence and proposed to be produced during trial is insufficient and, even if recorded, will not sustain conviction of the accused, of any offence in the case;[8] and (iv) that the prosecution evidence so far recorded does not make out a case for conviction of the accused, of any offence in the case and the remaining prosecution evidence, even if recorded, will not improve the prosecution case against the accused in any manner.[9] It is this fourth ground that attracts the application of the rule of practice and priority referred to by the High Court and, that too, when the trial is near completion, that is, when almost the whole of the prosecution evidence has been recorded. The wisdom behind the rule is that the appraisal of almost the whole prosecution evidence, when the trial is near completion, for deciding the application under Section 265-K, Cr.P.C. amounts to prejudging the case before the final judgment which not only reduces the sanctity and strength of the final judgment, but may also prejudice the case of the other accused, if any, undergoing trial. Any such exercise does not, therefore, serve the ends of justice. This rule thus has no relevancy or application to the first three grounds, which do not involve the appraisal of the prosecution evidence recorded during trial.

13. In the present case, the Petitioners have pleaded ground (i) for maintaining their application under Section 265-K of the Cr.P.C. They have argued that the matter complained of does not make out any cognizable offence under the NAB Ordinance, 1999, even if the alleged facts are taken to be correct on their face value. The trial court, i.e., the Accountability Court, and the High Court have rejected this ground with the findings that the Petitioners' alleged act of illegally selling JP-I in the open market constitutes the commission of a criminal breach of trust which is an offence under Section 9(x) and (xi) of the NAB Ordinance. The Petitioners have impugned before us these findings, contending that the same are not legally correct.

14. We, therefore, proceed to examine the legality of the said findings of the Accountability Court and the High Court. For this purpose, we reproduce here the provisions of Section 9(a)(x) and (xi) of the NAB Ordinance:

> 9 Corruption and corrupt practices: (a) A holder of a public office, or any other person, is said to commit or to have committed the offence of corruption and corrupt practices-
> (x) if he commits the offence of criminal breach of trust as defined in section 405 of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 (Act XLV of 1860) with regard to any property including money or valuable security entrusted to him by members of the public at large;
>
> (xi) if he, in his capacity as a banker, merchant, factor, broker, attorney or agent, commits criminal breach of trust as provided in section 409 of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 (Act XLV of 1860) in respect of property entrusted to him or over which he has dominion;

The above provisions of the NAB Ordinance refer to Sections 405 and 409 of the Pakistan Penal Code 1860 ("P.P.C."); therefore, the provisions of these Sections of the P.P.C. are also cited here for ease of reference:

> 405. Criminal breach of trust: Whoever, being in any manner entrusted with property or with any dominion over property, dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use that property, or dishonestly uses or disposes of that property in violation of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust is to be discharged, or of any legal contract, express or implied, which he has made touching the discharge of such trust, or wilfully suffers any other person so to do, commits "criminal breach of trust".
> 409. Criminal breach of trust by public servant, or by banker, merchant or agent: Whoever, being in any manner entrusted with property, or with any dominion over property in his capacity of a public servant or in the way of his business as a banker, merchant, factor, broker, attorney or agent, commits criminal breach of trust in respect of that property, shall be punished with imprisonment for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

The bare reading of Section 9(a)(x) of the NAB Ordinance shows that it applies only to the commission of the offence of criminal breach of trust with regard to a property entrusted to the accused by members of the public at large, while Section 9(a)(xi) of the NAB Ordinance relates to the commission of the offence of criminal breach of trust in respect of a property which was entrusted to the accused in his capacity as a banker, merchant, factor, broker, attorney or agent.

15. In the present matter, it is not the case of the prosecution (NAB) that JP-I, allegedly sold by the Petitioners in the open market illegally, was entrusted to them or their employer-company, SPL, by members of the public at large or entrusted to SPL by the Oil Refinery Companies in the capacity as a banker, merchant, factor, broker, attorney or agent. There was no "entrustment" of property (i.e., JP-I) in the present case at all that could have made the case against the Petitioners fall within the scope of the provisions of Section 405, P.P.C. and consequently constituted an offence under Section 9(a)(x)&(xi) of the NAB Ordinance.

16. Although the "entrustment" of property within the meaning of Section 405, P.P.C. does not envisage the creation of a formal trust with all the technicalities of the law of trust, it does contemplate that to constitute entrustment the accused must have held the property in a fiduciary capacity. The word "trust" has been used in Section 405 in the ordinary sense of that word, and covers not only the relationship of trustee and beneficiary but also that of bailer and bailee, master and servant, pledger and pledgee, guardian and ward, and all other relations that postulate the existence of a fiduciary relationship between the complainant and the accused.[10] The entrustment of property implies that the ownership of the entrusted property vests in a person other than the one who is entrusted with it. If the property belongs to and is owned by the accused in his own right, it cannot be said that he was entrusted with that property and that by using or disposing of that property he committed the offence of criminal breach of trust. "Entrustment" is an essential ingredient of the offence of criminal breach of trust as defined in Section 405, P.P.C.; therefore, where there is no entrustment of property, there can be no criminal breach of trust.

17. In the present case, SPL, the employer-company of the Petitioners, purchased JP-I from the Oil Refinery Companies, in its own right. The Oil Refinery Companies had not entrusted SPL with JP-I in its capacity of their banker, merchant, factor, broker, attorney or agent. Having purchased JP-I from the Oil Refinery Companies, SPL had become the owner thereof and there was no entrustment. Thus the act of selling JP-I owned by their employer-company, SPL, in the open market by the Petitioners, even if accepted to be true, does not constitute the offence either under Section 405 or under 409 of the P.P.C. When the primary offence of criminal breach of trust under section 405, P.P.C. is not made out, the charge for the offences under Section 9(a)(x)&(xi) of the NAB Ordinance cannot sustain.[11]

18. The prosecution (NAB) has, however, in disregard of the scope and extent of Sections 405 and 409 of the P.P.C., based its case against the Petitioners on the minutes of a Product Review Meeting, dated 04.08.2010, wherein the Director (L&M) of the Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Resources, Government of Pakistan, which reiterated the "directives/priority of JP-I supplies" and instructed the Oil Marketing Companies (which include SPL) to follow that "directives/ priority" and to make the supply of JP-I to Defence, local carriers (PIA, Shaheen, etc) and scheduled carriers. The Accountability Court and the High Court have also relied on the same. The prosecution (NAB) has referred to Rule 43C of the Pakistan Petroleum (Refining, Blending and Marketing) Rules 1971 ("1971 Rule"). This Rule provides that the Authority may, if it is of the opinion that public interest so requires, by order in writing, direct any refinery, marketing company or its agent or dealer, or a blending plant (or reclamation plant) to supply such quantity of any petroleum product to such person as may be specified in the order. As per Rule 2(b) of the 1971 Rules, the "Authority" referred to in Rule 43C means the Director General of Oil, and not the Director (L&M). As the Director (L&M) is mentioned to have reiterated the "directives/priority of JP-I supplies", in the minutes of a Product Review Meeting, dated 04.08.2010, and not to have issued the said "directives/priority" by himself, any such "directives/priority" issued by the Director General (Oil), is neither available on the record of the case nor has it been otherwise produced before us. Irrespective of the said "directives/ priority", if any, it will not make the case against the Petitioners to fall within the definition of the offence of criminal breach of trust under Sections 405 and 409 of the P.P.C., or of the offence of corruption and corrupt practices under Section 9(a)(x)&(xi) of the NAB Ordinance. Any such directives have no bearing on the transfer of ownership of the sold JP-I from the seller (Oil Refinery Companies) to the purchaser (SPL) and does not make the contract of sale, a contract of trust. A violation of such directive, if any, may entail some other legal consequences, but cannot constitute an offence of criminal breach of trust under Section 405 of the P.P.C.

19. In a welfare State, the legislature enacts laws in public interest for the regulation of some trades or businesses by statutory bodies or Government functionaries.[12] Such regulation may involve obtaining of licenses and permits to conduct a certain trade or business; impose reasonable terms and conditions as to how that trade or business is to be conducted; and control the production, distribution and consumption of any commodity during the conduct of that trade or business. The control on the production, distribution and consumption of some commodity, however, does not affect any change in the legal relationship between the contracting parties, nor does it alter the legal character, substance and consequence of the commercial transactions.[13] Such regulation does not change the private nature of the trade or business.

20. No offence under Section 9(a)(x)&(xi) of the NAB Ordinance is thus made out of the Petitioners' alleged act of illegally selling JP-I in the open market, even if the same is taken to be true on its face value. The findings of the Accountability Court and the High Court, having been made without examining the essential ingredients of the offence under Sections 405 and 409 of the P.P.C. and of the offence under Section 9(a)(x)&(xi) of the NAB Ordinance, are found legally incorrect.

21. Since no offence under Section 9(a)(x)&(xi) or any other part of that Section of the NAB Ordinance is made out of the facts alleged in the NAB Reference against the Petitioners, there is no probability of their conviction for any offence in the NAB Reference. The Accountability Court had legally erred in dismissing the application of the Petitioners under Section 265-K of the Cr.P.C. and the High Court wrongly declined to correct that legal error in the exercise of its constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution. We, therefore, convert Civil Petition No.620 of 2021 into appeal and allow the same. The impugned order of the High Court is set aside and the constitutional petition of the Petitioners is allowed: while setting aside the order of the Accountability Court and accepting the application of the Petitioners under Section 265- K, they are acquitted of the charge in NAB Reference No. 16 of 2018.

22. The Petitioners have prayed also for quashment of the NAB Reference in their constitutional petition before the High Court, in addition to challenging the order of the Accountability Court passed on their application under Section 265-K of the Cr.P.C. We have found that no offence cognizable by the NAB and triable by the Accountability Court under the NAB Ordinance is involved in the present case. In this background, Civil Petition No.620/2021 is converted into appeal and allowed. Resultantly, the proceedings pending before the Accountability Court in NAB Reference No.16 of 2018, are hereby quashed being without jurisdiction.

23. Alleged violation of "directives/priority", if any, may entail its own consequences and having quashed the proceedings of NAB Reference No.16 of 2018, the Civil Petition No.444 of 2022 has become infructuous and is therefore disposed of accordingly.

(Against the order dated 06.07.2022 of the Registrar, declining to register the Constitution Petition of the Appellant).

Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.III, R. 10(a), O. V, R.1(6) & O.VII, R. 7---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 184(3)---Constitutional petition under Article 184(3) filed before the Supreme Court---Maintainability, question of---Registrar (Supreme Court), powers of---No provision in the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 empowered the Registrar to touch upon the maintainability of a constitutional petition filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, other than ensuring its proper form and presentation as per the practice and procedure of the Court provided in the Rules---Maintainability and the merits of a petition were justiciable issues, and fell within the domain of the Court.

Under the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ('the Rules'), the Registrar of the Supreme Court is to perform certain functions that are mostly administrative and ministerial in nature. In performing the administrative function of "registration of petitions, appeals, suits and other matters" under Rule 1(6) of Order V of the Rules, the Registrar has been conferred: (i) the power under Rule 10(a) of Order III "to require any plaint, petition of appeal, petition for leave to appeal or other matters" presented to the Court, to be amended in accordance with the practice and procedure of the Court, and (ii) the power under Rule 7 of Order VII to "decline to receive any document" which is presented otherwise than in accordance with the Rules. The powers of the Registrar under Rule 10 of Order III along with Rule 7 of Order VII of the Rules are purely administrative in character, which allow him to enforce the practice and procedure of the Court in relation to presentation of cases and ensure that the form of the pleadings and the documents filed therewith is as per the Rules. The justiciability of the legal and factual questions raised in the petitions is a matter for the Court to deal with and decide upon. Registrar enjoying administrative powers under the Rules cannot assume the core adjudicatory role of the Court under the Constitution. There is no provision in the Rules that empowers the Registrar to touch upon the maintainability of a petition, other than ensuring its proper form and presentation as per the practice and procedure of the Court provided in the Rules. The maintainability and the merits of a petition are justiciable issues, and fall within the domain of the Court.

Farman Ali v. Muhammad Ishaq PLD 2013 SC 392 and P. Surendran v. State 2019 SCC Online SC 507 ref.

Certain miscellaneous matters, that are also essentially procedural in character, regarding which the Registrar can exercise the powers of the Court are listed in Rule 1 of Order V of the Rules, but the matters listed there (sub-rules 1 to 31) do not authorize the Registrar to decide upon the maintainability of a constitution petition filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. Objections raised by the Registrar, which touch upon the questions of maintainability and merits of the case, can only be examined by the Court through a judicial determination and not by the Registrar or a Judge hearing an appeal-in-chambers, against the order of the Registrar, on the administrative side.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Through this appeal under Order V, Rule 3 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules"), the appellant has challenged the order of the Registrar of this Court, dated 06.7.2022, whereby the constitution petition filed by the appellant under Article 184(3) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") has not been entertained and registered by the Registrar on the following grounds:

a. That the petitioner is invoking the extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution for the redressal of an individual grievance, which is not permissible in terms of judgment reported as 1998 SCMR 793 titled as "Zulfiqar Mehdi v. PIA, etc."

b. That notice issued to the respondent is not properly drawn as it is neither mentioned therein that for what purpose this Constitution Petition is being filed before this Court nor copy of petition has been provided to the respondent.

c. That the petitioner has not pointed out as to what questions of public importance in the instant case are involved with reference to enforcement of any of the Fundamental Rights guaranteed under the Constitution, so as to directly invoke jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution.

d. That the petitioner has not approached any other appropriate forum available under the law for the same relief and has also not provided any justification for not doing so.

e. That ingredients for invoking extra ordinary jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution have not been satisfied.

f. That the certificate provided at page 32 of this Constitution Petition does not fulfill the requirements of Rule 6 of Order XXV of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980. Moreover, the same contains over writing/cuttings.

2. I have heard the learned counsel for the appellant and have carefully examined the impugned order and the Rules. Under the Rules, the Registrar is to perform certain functions that are mostly administrative and ministerial in nature. In performing the administrative function of "registration of petitions, appeals, suits and other matters" under Rule 1(6) of Order V of the Rules, the Registrar has been conferred: (i) the power under Rule 10(a) of Order III "to require any plaint, petition of appeal, petition for leave to appeal or other matters" presented to the Court, to be amended in accordance with the practice and procedure of the Court, and (ii) the power under Rule 7 of Order VII to "decline to receive any document" which is presented otherwise than in accordance with the Rules. It is in exercise of these powers that the Registrar has made the impugned order. The powers of the Registrar under Rule 10 of Order III along with Rule 7 of Order VII of the Rules are purely administrative in character, which allow him to enforce the practice and procedure of the Court in relation to presentation of cases and ensure that the form of the pleadings and the documents filed therewith is as per the Rules. The justiciability of the legal and factual questions raised in the petitions is a matter for the Court to deal with and decide upon. Registrar enjoying administrative powers under the Rules cannot assume the core adjudicatory role of the Court under the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973. There is no provision in the Rules that empowers the Registrar to touch upon the maintainability of a petition, other than ensuring its proper form and presentation as per the practice and procedure of the Court provided in the Rules. The maintainability and the merits of a petition are justiciable issues, and fall within the domain of the Court.[1]

3. Certain miscellaneous matters, that are also essentially procedural in character, regarding which the Registrar can exercise the powers of the Court are listed in Rule 1 of Order V of the Rules, but the matters listed there (sub-rules (1) to (31) do not authorize the Registrar to decide upon the maintainability of a constitution petition filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. Therefore, grounds/objections (a), (c), (d) and (e) of the impugned order of the Registrar, which touch upon the questions of maintainability and merits of the case, can only be examined by the Court through a judicial determination and not by the Registrar or a Judge hearing an appeal-in-chambers, like the present one against the order of the Registrar, on the administrative side. Such an exercise of power by the Registrar falls outside his domain under the Rules. Grounds (a), (c), (d) and (e) of the impugned Order of the Registrar are, therefore, overruled. They may be determined by the Court on the judicial side. As far as grounds (b) and (f) are concerned, they fall within the administrative powers exercised by the Registrar and are found justified, therefore sustained. The appellant shall meet these objections, to the satisfaction of the Registrar, within two weeks. Once the needful is done, the office shall register the constitution petition of the appellant and fix it before an appropriate Bench on the judicial side. The appeal is partly allowed in these terms. MWA/Q-2/SC Order accordingly.

----S. 5, Sched.---Muslim Family Laws Ordinance (VIII of 1961), Ss.9 & 10---Dower (mehr)---Entries in columns Nos.13 and 16 of the Nikahnama---Entries in said columns are to be interpreted on the basis of the intention between the parties rather than the headings of the columns, in particular when there is a dispute between the value of the dower and items.

Respondent (wife) instituted a suit in the Family Court wherein amongst other things she sought recovery of her dower i.e. agriculture land (mentioned in column No. 16 of her Nikahnama). Family Court observed that the dower mentioned in column No.16 of the Nikahnama was payable only if the dower specified in column No.13 i.e. seven tolas of gold worth Rs. 1,60,000/- had not been paid, and as the respondent admitted to have received the dower of seven tola gold ornaments specified in column No.13, she was not entitled to claim the dower mentioned in column No.16 of the Nikahnama. The District Court, in appeal, endorsed this finding with the observation that agriculture land mentioned in column No.16 was to be given only in lieu of seven tola gold ornaments specified as dower in column No.13 of the Nikahnama, which the respondent had admittedly received. The High Court held that the facts and circumstances of the case clearly showed that the dower mentioned in column No.16 was in addition to, not in lieu of, the one specified in column No.13 of the Nikahnama.

Family Court and District Court acted on what the heading of column 16 prima facie suggested, i.e., the mentioning of any property that is given "in lieu of the whole or any portion of the dower", without ascertaining the intent of the parties. This approach of the said Courts is not in consonance with the settled principles of construction of contracts. Nikahnama is a deed of marriage-contract entered into between the parties, husband and wife, and the contents of its clauses/columns, like clauses of other contracts, are to be construed and interpreted in the light of intention of parties. The High Court rightly ascertained the intent of the parties for mentioning four Kanal agriculture land in column No.16 of the Nikahnama, irrespective of its placement in a particular column.It is a matter of common knowledge that the persons who solemnize Nikah or the Nikah Registrars are mostly laymen, not well-versed of legal complications that may arise from mentioning certain terms agreed to between the parties in any particular column of the Nikahnama. Therefore, it becomes the foremost duty of courts dealing with disputes arising out of the terms entered in the Nikahnama, to ascertain the true intent of the parties and give effect thereto accordingly, and not be limited and restricted by the form of the heading of the particular columns wherein those terms are mentioned.

Abdul Haq v. WAPDA 1991 SCMR 1436; HBFC v. Shahinshah Humayun 1992 SCMR 19 and Sandoz Limited v. Federation 1995 SCMR 1431 ref.

The figures (1) and (2) mentioned in columns Nos.13 and 16 respectively leave little room to guess what the true intention of the parties was; they clearly show that both (1) seven tola gold ornaments mentioned as dower in column No.13 and (2) four Kanal agriculture land mentioned in column No.16 were the dower. The figures (1) and (2) need not be mentioned if only one of them was to be payable as dower. Further, seven tola gold ornaments and four Kanal agriculture land have no parity of value to be agreed as an alternate of each other. Petition for leave to appeal filed by husband was dismissed with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---"This is a male-dominated society; men since ages have always been more concerned about their rights by using religion for their own convenience, especially in matrimonial matters, but forget religion when it comes to their duty and obligation towards their women"[1], this seems to hold true in the present case. This case where a husband disputes the payment of maintenance and dower to his wife, provides an occasion to underline the principles, duties and obligations of a husband towards his wife under the Islamic law with regard to maintenance and dower.

2. The respondent, Naheed Begum, instituted a suit, in the Family Court, Tangi Charsadda, for recovery of her dower i.e., 1-Jarab[2] of agriculture land (mentioned in column No. 16 of her Nikahnama) and maintenance for herself and her five minor children (three daughters and two sons) against the petitioner, her husband, who had contracted a second marriage and was living with his second wife. The Family Court decreed the suit to the extent of her claim for maintenance of her minor children, but rejected her claims for recovery of her dower and maintenance. The District Court dismissed her appeal, maintaining the judgment of the Family Court. She then invoked the constitutional jurisdiction of the Peshawar High Court, under Article 199 of the Constitution of Pakistan, for redress of her grievance against the judgments of the Courts below. The High Court allowed her constitution petition, reversed the judgments of the Courts below, and decreed her claims of dower and maintenance, vide its judgment dated 09.03.2020. It is against this judgment of the High Court that the petitioner, Haseen Ullah, has filed the present petition for leave to appeal.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioner in detail and with his able assistance, perused the record of the case minutely.

4. The High Court and the Courts below have differed on interpreting the entries of columns Nos. 13 to 16 of the Nikahnama of the parties, which are reproduced hereunder for ready reference:

English translation:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 13 | Amount of dower: | 7-tola gold ornaments valuing Rs.1,60,000/- |
| 14 | How much of the dower is mu'ajjal (prompt) and how much is ghair mu'ajjal (deferred): | [blank] |

|---|---|---|
| 15 | Whether any portion of the dower was paid at the time of marriage, If so, how much: | Almost [all] |
| 16 | Whether any property was given in lieu of the whole or any portion of the dower, if so, its specification and price agreed to between the parties: | (2) 1-Jarab land in Kashmirabad near Khadi Kalay |

The Family Court observed that the dower mentioned in column No. 16 of the Nikahnama was payable only if the dower specified in column No. 13 had not been paid, and as the respondent admitted to have received the dower of seven tola gold ornaments specified in column No.13, she was not entitled to claim the dower mentioned in column No.16 of the Nikahnama. The District Court, in appeal, endorsed this finding with the observation that four Kanal agriculture land mentioned in column No. 16 was to be given only in lieu of seven tola gold ornaments specified as dower in column No. 13 of the Nikahnama, which the respondent had admittedly received. The High Court has held that the facts and circumstances of the case clearly show that the dower mentioned in column No. 16 was in addition to, not in lieu of, the one specified in column No. 13 of the Nikahnama.

5. We find that the Family Court and District Court have acted on what the heading of column 16 prima facie suggest, i.e., the mentioning of any property that is given "in lieu of the whole or any portion of the dower", without ascertaining the intent of the parties. This approach of the said Courts is not in consonance with the settled principles of construction of contracts. Needless to say that Nikahnama is a deed of marriage-contract entered into between the parties, husband and wife, and the contents of its clauses/ columns, like clauses of other contracts, are to be construed and interpreted in the light of intention of parties.[3] The High Court has rightly ascertained the intent of the parties for mentioning four Kanal agriculture land in column No. 16 of the Nikahnama, irrespective of its placement in a particular column. It is a matter of common knowledge that the persons who solemnize Nikah or the Nikah Registrars are mostly laymen, not well-versed of legal complications that may arise from mentioning certain terms agreed to between the parties in any particular column of the Nikahnama. Therefore, it becomes the foremost duty of courts dealing with disputes arising out of the terms entered in the Nikahnama, to ascertain the true intent of the parties and give effect thereto accordingly, and not be limited and restricted by the form of the heading of the particular columns wherein those terms are mentioned.

6. We, on our own independent appraisal of the facts and circumstances of the case, agree with the finding of the High Court, which is not only supported by the contents of the compromise deed dated 18.12.2012 executed by both the petitioner and the respondent, but also by the contents of the entries of columns Nos. 13 and 16 of the Nikahnama. The figures (1) and (2) mentioned in columns Nos. 13 and 16 respectively leave little room to guess what the true intention of the parties was; they clearly show that both (1) seven tola gold ornaments mentioned as dower in column Nos. 13 and (2) four Kanal agriculture land mentioned in column No. 16 were the dower. The figures (1) and (2) need not be mentioned if only one of them was to be payable as dower. Further, seven tola gold ornaments and four Kanal agriculture land have no parity of value to be agreed as an alternate of each other. Therefore, the finding of the High Court on the issue of dower is perfectly correct and is in consonance with the principles of law enunciated by this Court in the cases of Asma Ali[4] and Yasmeen Bibi.[5]

7. As for the claim of the respondent for her maintenance, the Family Court and the District Court held that since the respondent is not residing with the petitioner she is not entitled to maintenance. The High Court has overturned these findings and held the respondent entitled to receive maintenance from the petitioner, while observing that the respondent showed her willingness to go with the petitioner during hearing the petition, but the petitioner, who had contracted second marriage, flatly refused to take her to his house. We find nothing wrong in the decision of the High Court. A wife who is willing to, but cannot, discharge her marital obligations for no fault of her own, rather is prevented to do so by any act or omission of her husband is legally entitled to receive her due maintenance from her husband, and the latter cannot benefit from his own wrong.

8. As per Section 2 of the West Pakistan Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Application Act 1962, the questions regarding dower are to be decided, subject to the provisions of any enactment for the time being in force, in accordance with Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) in cases where the parties are Muslims. It hardly needs reiterating that the Holy Quran and the Sunnah of the Prophet of Islam (pbuh) are the primary sources of Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) in Islam. The payment of dower (mahr) at the time of marriage was a customary practice in Arabia before the advent of Islam, but it was paid to the guardians of the bride, such as, her father or other male relative, as bride-price and the bride herself did not receive a penny of it. This practice of paying dower as bride-price to the male guardians of the bride was reformed by the Islam through the Quranic commands[6] of paying dower as the bride-wealth to the bride herself, who becomes the sole owner of it. The Holy Quran also forbids the Believers to take back anything from their wives out of the paid dower even it be a great sum.[7] In Islam, the payment of dower to bride at marriage is an obligation that is imposed by the God Almighty, and is thus an intrinsic and integral part of a Muslim marriage. It is considered an obligatory bridal gift offered by the bridegroom to the bride graciously as a manifestation of his love and respect for her. Some Muslim men compliment the obligatory bridal gift, dower, with other gifts and presents as per their financial capacity.[8]

9. Under the Islamic law a wife's right to be maintained by her husband is absolute so long as she remains faithful to him and discharges, or is willing to discharge, her own matrimonial obligations. A Muslim husband is bound to maintain his wife even if no term in this regard is agreed to between them at the time of marriage or she can maintain herself out of her own resources[9]. The Holy Quran[10] enunciates that men are the protectors and maintainers of women because the God Almighty has given the one more strength than the other and because they support them from their money. And the Holy Prophet of Islam (pbuh) has instructed Muslim men to provide their wives with maintenance in a fitting manner[11] and declared it to be the right of the women[12].

10. We note that the petitioner, instead of paying the maintenance and giving the dower to the respondent willingly and graciously, has been evading his legal as well as moral obligation on one and the other pretext, as he first totally denied to have agreed to, and mentioning in Nikahnama, the term of giving four Kanal agriculture land as dower to the respondent, in his written statement, and later started opposing it with the argument that it was an alternate to be given only if seven tola gold ornaments mentioned in column No. 13 had not been paid. It is regrettable that the petitioner, an educated person who belongs to the noble profession of teaching, does not realize his obligation to pay the dower agreed upon by him at the time of marriage with the respondent, not only under the law of the land but also under the commandments of the God Almighty given in the Holy Quran to persons who proclaim to be Muslim. He has by his such conduct forced his wife to fight for her right to receive her maintenance and dower in four courts, from the Family Court to the Supreme Court. His such conduct is highly deplorable.

11. For the above reasons, we find the present petition baseless and vexatious and therefore dismiss it with costs throughout.

MWA/H-8/SC Petition dismissed.

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497(2)---Bail---Cross-version FIRs---Further inquiry---Scope and meaning of "cross-version" in a bail matter.

Mere existence of a cross-version is not a valid ground for holding the case one of further inquiry to grant bail under Section 497(2), Cr.P.C., unless it is supported by the material available on record of the case and on tentative assessment of that material, the court either finds it prima facie true or remains unable to determine even tentatively which one of the two versions is prima facie true. It is in the latter situation where the court remains unable to determine even tentatively, which one of the parties is aggressor and which one is aggressed upon, that the case against both parties falls within the scope of further inquiry under Section 497(2), Cr.P.C. The determination of "the aggressor and the aggressed upon", whether tentatively at bail stage or finally on conclusion of trial, is relevant to decide culpability of a party for the occurrence as this determination consequently decide which one of the parties was assailant and which one acted in self-defence. When a court cannot decide even tentatively, at bail stage, such culpability of a party on the basis of material on record of the case, it leaves this matter for determination on conclusion of the trial after recording the prosecution evidence and the defence evidence, if produced, and gives the benefit of the requisite further inquiry to both parties by granting them bail under Section 497(2), Cr.P.C. If the courts start considering every case involving a cross-version as one of further inquiry without any tentative assessment of the worth of the cross-version, it can encourage an accused to concoct a false or fabricated cross-version so as to bring his case within the ambit of further inquiry and thereby get bail. That is why the courts are to make a tentative assessment of the material, if any, available on record of the case in support of the cross-version at bail stage and should not readily accept it as a valid ground to treat the case one of further inquiry under Section 497(2), Cr.P.C.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner (complainant) seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 21.02.2022 of the Lahore High Court, whereby post arrest bail was granted to respondent No.2 (accused Muhammad Farooq) in case FIR No.498/2020 dated 09.08.2020 registered at Police Station, Saddar Hafizabad, for offences punishable under Sections 302, 324, 337 F(v), 337 F(i), 337-A(i), 337 A(ii), 341, 148 and 149, P.P.C. The petitioner seeks cancellation of the same through the present petition.

2. Briefly stated, as per the crime report the allegation against respondent No.2 is that he along with other co-accused launched a murderous attack on the complainant party by going over to their place, where he made a fire shot which hit Atiq-ur-Rehman on his head and proved fatal. On the other side, respondent No.2 and his co-accused presented a cross-version of the occurrence during investigation that the complainant party had abducted the accused Hussain, and they had gone to the place of the complainant party to rescue him. Though the Police found the cross-version false, the High Court has granted the relief of post arrest bail to respondent No.2 on the basis thereof, with the observation that "it will be determined by the learned trial court after recording of evidence that as to who was aggressor and who was aggressed upon and at present the case of the prosecution against the petitioner is one of further inquiry".

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record of the case.

4. The well-settled principle of law as to the effect of a cross-version of the occurrence involved in a case, at bail stage, is that mere existence of a cross-version is not a valid ground for holding the case one of further inquiry to grant bail under Section 497(2), Cr.P.C.,[1] unless it is supported by the material available on record of the case and on tentative assessment of that material, the court either finds it prima facie true or remains unable to determine even tentatively which one of the two versions is prima facie true. It is in the latter situation where the court remains unable to determine even tentatively, which one of the parties is aggressor and which one is aggressed upon, that the case against both parties falls within the scope of further inquiry under Section 497(2), Cr.P.C.[2] The determination of "the aggressor and the aggressed upon", whether tentatively at bail stage or finally on conclusion of trial, is relevant to decide culpability of a party for the occurrence as this determination consequently decide which one of the parties was assailant and which one acted in self-defence. When a court cannot decide even tentatively, at bail stage, such culpability of a party on the basis of material on record of the case, it leaves this matter for determination on conclusion of the trial after recording the prosecution evidence and the defence evidence, if produced, and gives the benefit of the requisite further inquiry to both parties by granting them bail under section 497(2), Cr.P.C. If the courts start considering every case involving a cross-version as one of further inquiry without any tentative assessment of the worth of the cross-version, it can encourage an accused to concoct a false or fabricated cross-version so as to bring his case within the ambit of further inquiry and thereby get bail.[3] That is why the courts are to make a tentative assessment of the material, if any, available on record of the case in support of the cross-version at bail stage and should not readily accept it as a valid ground to treat the case one of further inquiry under Section 497(2), Cr.P.C.

5. The cross-version pleaded in the present case by the accused party (respondent No.2 and his co-accused), when examined in the light of the above principle, is prima facie found not to be true on the basis of the tentative assessment of the material available on record of the case. Their version that the complainant party had abducted the accused Hussain is not supported by any cogent material available on record of the case. The petitioner and his co-accused had gone over to the place of the complainant party and the occurrence had admittedly taken place there. Further, the version of the complainant party is supported by the statements of the injured witnesses and other witnesses recorded under Section 161, Cr.P.C. as well as by the medical evidence and recoveries of the alleged weapons of offence. The tentative assessment of the said and other material available on record of the case prima facie shows that it is the accused party that were the aggressor. The version of the complainant party thus prima facie appears to be true. The shot that proved fatal for the deceased is attributed to respondent No.2 and the incriminating material available on record of the case provides reasonable grounds for believing that respondent No.2 has committed the offence of Qatl-i-amd punishable under Section 302, P.P.C., which falls within the prohibitory clause of Section 497(1), and there are no sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt as envisaged by Section 497(2), Cr.P.C. The High Court has erred in law while placing reliance upon the cross-version of the accused party for holding the case against respondent No.2 to be one of further inquiry, without referring to any material available on record of the case supporting it.

6. Although this Court ordinarily refrains from interfering with bail granting orders of the High Courts, it does not shy away to perform its constitutional obligation to set the matter right for the safe administration of criminal justice when a High Court has made such an order in derogation of some settled principle of law, or when the order is found to be perverse or arbitrary.[4] In the present case, while allowing the bail petition of respondent No.2 and making the impugned order the High Court has acted against the above said settled principle of law, and its finding recorded on the basis of an unsubstantiated cross-version is perverse, that is, against the weight of the material available on record of the case. Therefore, we convert this petition into appeal and allow the same: the impugned bail granting order is set aside and the bail petition of respondent No.2 is dismissed. Respondent No.2 shall surrender before the trial court.

7. Needless to mention that the observations made and findings recorded in this order are of tentative nature, which shall have no effect upon final determination of the case by the trial court on conclusion of the trial.

MWA/M-50/SC Bail cancelled.

C.M. Appeals Nos.39 and 41 of 2021 in Civil Appeals No. Nil of 2021, decided on 10th August, 2022.

(Against the order dated 22.03.2021 of the Registrar, declining to entertain and register the Civil Appeals of the Appellant).

Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.III, R.10, O.V, R. 1(6), O.VII, R. 7 & O.XVII, Rr. 5 & 12---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 191---Registrar Supreme Court, powers of---Scope---Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ('the Rules') empower the Registrar to ensure that the form and presentation of the petitions or the appeals are in order according to the Rules---Registrar does not enjoy any power under the Rules to decide upon the maintainability of a petition or an appeal---Even if a petition or an appeal is prima facie non-maintainable under the provisions of the Constitution, a law or the Rules referred to by the petitioner or appellant for filing the same, still the question of maintainability of the petition or the appeal under the referred provisions is to be adjudicated by the Court on the judicial side and not by the Registrar on the administrative side.

Under the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ('the Rules'), the powers of the Registrar are primarily covered under Order III, Rule 10, Order V, Rule 1(6), Order VII, Rule 7 and Order XVII, Rule 5, which simply regulate the practice and procedure of the Court and are merely administrative in character. The Rules empower the Registrar to ensure that the form and presentation of the petitions or the appeals are in order according to the Rules. The Registrar does not enjoy any power under the Rules to decide upon the maintainability of a petition or an appeal. The question of maintainability of a petition or an appeal is a justiciable issue that calls for adjudication, which is solely the prerogative of the Court in the exercise of its judicial power. A limited exception is, however, provided under Order V Rule 1 of the Rules where the Registrar enjoys the powers of the Court in deciding certain applications, etc., in pending cases. The power to deal with these applications, also appears to be procedural in nature and prima facie do not impinge upon the judicial power of the Court so as to decide upon the substantive justiciable issue(s) involved in the petitions or appeals.

Farman Ali v. Muhammad Ishaq PLD 2013 SC 392; P. Surendran v. State 2019 SCC Online SC 507 and Qausain Faisal v. Federation of Pakistan (Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 87 of 2022) ref.

Issue as to the maintainability of an appeal cannot be decided by the Registrar in the exercise of its administrative powers under the Rules nor can it be decided by a Judge hearing an administrative appeal against an administrative order of the Registrar.

A.P.N.S. v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2004 SC 600 ref.

Order XVII, Rule 5 of the Rules provides that the Registrar may refuse to receive a petition on the ground that it is "frivolous". Frivolity of the petition is to be viewed by the Registrar in the overall constitutional construct of the Rules under Article 191 of the Constitution and within the administrative scheme of the Rules. A "frivolous" petition within the meaning of this Rule is limited to its form and presentation and no more. A petition whose form and presentation falls short in material particulars or which fails to refer to any provision of the Constitution, the law or the Rules under which it is purportedly filed will pass as "frivolous". The Registrar in such a case can refuse to receive the petition unless the petitioner fixes the form and presentation of the petition. The said Rule, however, does not vest judicial power in the Registrar to adjudicate the justiciable issue of maintainability of a petition or appeal on the ground of it being frivolous.

Fazal Muhammad v. State PLD 1987 SC 273 ref.

Even if a petition or an appeal is prima facie non-maintainable under the provisions of the Constitution, a law or the Rules referred to by the petitioner or appellant for filing the same, still the question of maintainability of the petition or the appeal under the referred provisions is to be adjudicated by the Court on the judicial side and not by the Registrar on the administrative side. Mere, prima facie non-maintainability of a petition or an appeal does not vest the jurisdiction in the Registrar to adjudicate upon the question of maintainability of such a petition or an appeal. Nor can the administrative powers of the Registrar under the Rules be employed to refuse receiving and registering such petitions or appeals which appear to him as non-maintainable. However, the (Supreme) Court can discourage the filing of outright non-maintainable, frivolous and vexatious, petitions or appeals by imposing costs on the unscrupulous petitioners or appellants under Order XVII, Rule 12 of the Rules.

Date of hearing: 10th August, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Both the listed civil miscellaneous appeals are being disposed of through this consolidated order as common questions of law and facts are involved therein.

2. Through these appeals under Order V, Rule 3 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules"), the appellant has challenged the objection orders of the Registrar of this Court, dated 22.3.2021, whereby the appeals filed by the appellant under Article 63-A(5) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") have been returned being not entertainable on the ground that appeal under Article 63-A(5) of the Constitution only lies before this Court in a case where the Election Commission decides upon the declaration made by the Party Head, under Article 63-A of the Constitution, regarding the defection of a Member of Parliament or Provincial Assembly. However, the present cases pertain to disqualification of the Members of the Parliament and Provincial Assembly under Article 63 of the Constitution, as they arise out of the orders of the Election Commission dated 05.01.2021 passed on the Election Petitions filed by the appellant under Articles 63(1) and 225 of the Constitution seeking disqualification of the respondents as Members of the Parliament and Provincial Assembly, on the ground of alleged concealment of their assets.

3. I have heard the appellant, who has appeared in person, and have examined the record of the cases.

4. Article 191 of the Constitution provides that the Supreme Court may make rules regulating the practice and procedure of the Court. The rules made under the said Article by the Supreme Court are called the Supreme Court Rules 1980 ("Rules"). Under the said Rules, the powers of the Registrar are primarily covered under Order III Rule 10, Order V Rule 1(6), Order VII Rule 7 and Order XVII Rule 5, which simply regulate the practice and procedure of the Court and are merely administrative in character. The Rules empower the Registrar to ensure that the form and presentation of the petitions or the appeals are in order according to the Rules. The Registrar does not enjoy any power under the Rules to decide upon the maintainability of a petition or an appeal. The question of maintainability of a petition or an appeal is a justiciable issue that calls for adjudication[1], which is solely the prerogative of the Court in the exercise of its judicial power.[2] A limited exception is, however, provided under Order V Rule 1 of the Rules where the Registrar enjoys the powers of the Court in deciding certain applications, etc., in pending cases. The power to deal with these applications, which though not under examination in the present cases, also appears to be procedural in nature and prima facie do not impinge upon the judicial power of the Court so as to decide upon the substantive justiciable issue(s) involved in the petitions or appeals.

5. In the present cases, the Registrar has decided that the appeals filed by the appellant are not maintainable under the provisions of Article 63-A(5) of the Constitution, while the appellant argues that they are maintainable under the said provisions of the Constitution. This issue as to the maintainability of the appeals of the appellant could not have been decided by the Registrar in the exercise of its administrative powers under the afore-referred rules nor can it be decided by a Judge hearing an administrative appeal against an administrative order of the Registrar.[3]

6. Order XVII, Rule 5 of the Rules provides that the Registrar may refuse to receive a petition on the ground that it is "frivolous". Frivolity of the petition is to be viewed by the Registrar in the overall constitutional construct of the Rules under Article 191 of the Constitution and within the administrative scheme of the Rules. A "frivolous" petition within the meaning of this Rule is limited to its form and presentation and no more. A petition whose form and presentation falls short in material particulars or which fails to refer to any provision of the Constitution, the law or the Rules under which it is purportedly filed will pass as "frivolous."[4] The Registrar in such a case can refuse to receive the petition unless the petitioner fixes the form and presentation of the petition. The said Rule, however, does not vest judicial power in the Registrar to adjudicate the justiciable issue of maintainability of a petition or appeal on the ground of it being frivolous.

7. It is underlined that even if a petition or an appeal is prima facie non-maintainable under the provisions of the Constitution, a law or the Rules referred to by the petitioner or appellant for filing the same, still the question of maintainability of the petition or the appeal under the referred provisions is to be adjudicated by the Court on the judicial side and not by the Registrar on the administrative side. Mere, prima facie non-maintainability of a petition or an appeal does not vest the jurisdiction in the Registrar to adjudicate upon the question of maintainability of such a petition or an appeal. Nor can the administrative powers of the Registrar under the Rules be employed to refuse receiving and registering such petitions or appeals which appear to him as non-maintainable. However, the Court can discourage the filing of outright non-maintainable, frivolous and vexatious, petitions or appeals by imposing costs on the unscrupulous petitioners or appellants under Order XVII, Rule 12 of the Rules.

8. In this background, without touching upon the question of maintainability of the main appeals filed by the appellant under Article 63-A(5) of the Constitution, these miscellaneous appeals against the administrative orders of the Registrar are allowed, and the objection orders of the Registrar dated 22.3.2021 are set aside. The office shall register the main appeals of the appellant and fix them before the appropriate Bench on the judicial side.

9. The appellant has further submitted that he had filed the main appeals on 02.02.2021 and since then a year and a half has passed but the matter is still lingering on the administrative side and prayed that his appeals may be fixed for an early date. The prayer appears genuine and justified, and is therefore allowed. The office shall fix the appeals of the appellant immediately after the summer vacations.

MWA/M-53/SC Appeals allowed.

Criminal Petition No. 636 of 2022, decided on 10th August, 2022.

(Against the order of the Lahore High Court, Lahore, dated 28.04.2022 passed in Crl. Misc. No.20132-B of 2022).

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----Ss. 497(1), third proviso, 497(2) & 561-A---Offences in Respect of Banks (Special Courts) Ordinance (IX of 1984), Ss. 5(6) & 12---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9, 10A, 14 & 199---Scheduled offences under the Offences in Respect of Banks (Special Courts) Ordinance, 1965---Bail---Delay in conclusion of the trial---Principles relating to grant of post arrest bail on the ground of delay in the conclusion of trial in respect of offences falling under the Offences in Respect of Banks (Special Courts) Ordinance, 1984 ('the Ordinance') and the Constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court to grant bail stated.

Section 5(6) of the Offences in Respect of Banks (Special Courts) Ordinance, 1984 ('the Ordinance') has borrowed the language of the second part of Section 497(1), Cr.P.C., which extends to offences falling under the prohibitory clause, and has made it applicable to all the scheduled offences under the Ordinance. However, the exceptions of prohibitory clause of Section 497(1), Cr.P.C. have not been so adopted and made applicable to the scheduled offences under the Ordinance. Therefore, the only ground for grant of bail in a schedule offence under the Ordinance is that which is provided in Section 497(2) Cr.P.C., that is, if the court finds that there are no reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed the Scheduled Offence and that there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt.

Allied Bank of Pakistan v. Khalid Farooq 1991 SCMR 599 and Chaudhry Shujat Hussain v. State 1995 SCMR 1249 ref.

Delay in the conclusion of a criminal trial is antithetic to the very concept of a fair trial and due process guaranteed by Article 10A of the Constitution. Conclusion of trial within a reasonable time is an essential component of the right to a fair trial. The prolonged pre-trial detention of the accused also defies the presumption of innocence, another essential element of the right to a fair trial.

Chairman, NAB v. Nasar Ullah PLD 2022 SC 497 ref.

In appropriate cases, a High Court can grant bail on the ground of delay in conclusion of the trial, similar to that which is available under the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C., under its inherent powers under section 561-A, Cr.P.C. to secure the ends of justice or to prevent the abuse of the process of court, but going further, a High Court also enjoys constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199(1)(c) of the Constitution for the enforcement of fundamental rights. This constitutional jurisdiction of High Courts cannot be abridged by any sub-constitutional legislation. So, while section 5(6) of the Ordinance is binding on the Special Court, it is not so on a High Court which fashions its jurisdiction on the basis of the enforcement of the fundamental rights under the Constitution. Undue delay in the trial of the accused infringes his fundamental rights to liberty, fair trial and dignity under Articles 9, 10A and 14 of the Constitution, if the delay cannot be attributed to him.

Chaudhry Shujat Hussain v. State 1995 SCMR 1249 ref.

If a High Court observes that the conclusion of the trial has been unduly delayed for no fault of the accused, thereby depriving the accused of his fundamental rights to liberty, fair trial and due process, it may, rather should, interfere to enforce these fundamental rights of the accused. In order to assess the reasonable time for the conclusion of the trial, the High Court may be guided by, and structure its discretion on the basis of, the statutory timeframe provided in the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C.

(b) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----Ss. 497 & 498---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9, 10A, 14 & 199---Bail---Constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court to grant bail---Scope---High Court while hearing a bail petition under Sections 497/ 498, Cr.P.C, other than possessing inherent jurisdiction under Section 561-A, Cr.P.C., also enjoys its constitutional jurisdiction as a guardian of the fundamental rights of the accused---Such protective constitutional jurisdiction of the High Courts cannot be circumscribed by any sub-constitutional legislation---If a High Court while hearing a bail petition is of the view that the facts and circumstances of the case offend and impair the fundamental rights of the accused, it can grant bail in exercise of its constitutional jurisdiction without being limited by the legislation that regulates the grant of bail in the offence.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 28.04.2022 passed by the Lahore High Court, whereby the second post-arrest bail petition of the petitioner, based on the ground of delay in the conclusion of the trial was dismissed in case FIR No.52/2019 dated 30.01.2019, offences under sections 420, 468, 471, 409 P.P.C. read with Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 registered at Police Station FIA, Gujranwala.

2. Briefly, as per the crime report, it is alleged that the petitioner while posted as an officer (OG-II) at the National Bank of Pakistan, Main Branch, Hafizabad, Punjab, misappropriated a large sum of money from the Bank. The first post-arrest bail petition of the petition was declined on merits on 24.03.2021. The second bail petition on the basis of the statutory ground under the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. was rejected through the impugned order.

3. Learned D.A.G. and the learned counsel for respondent Bank at the outset raised a preliminary objection that the grant of bail on the ground of delay in the conclusion of the trial under the third proviso to section 497(1) of the Cr.P.C. is not available to the petitioner under the Offences in respect of Banks (Special Courts) Ordinance, 1984 ("Ordinance"). Referring to sections 5(6) and 12 of the Ordinance, they pointed out that a limited ground of bail is provided under the Ordinance and the petitioner cannot claim bail on the ground of delay in conclusion of the trial under the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. They relied on the cases of Khalid Farooq[1] and Chaudhry Shujat Hussain[2] in support of their contention. Learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that the High Court enjoys the power to grant bail under the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. using its inherent powers under section 561-A, Cr.P.C. to secure the ends of justice and also relied on Allied Bank[3] for this contention. He further contended that the petitioner has been behind bars for almost two years now and the undue delay in the conclusion of the trial cannot be attributed to the conduct of the petitioner.

4. The Ordinance provides for speedy trial of certain offences committed in respect of banks and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto.[4] A Special Court has been established under the Ordinance to try Scheduled Offences, which are offences specified in the First Schedule of the Ordinance and alleged to have been committed in respect of or in connection with the business of a bank.[5] The offences involved in the present case punishable under sections 420, 468, 471, 409, P.P.C. and section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 form part of the Scheduled Offences under the Ordinance.[6]

5. For attending to the preliminary objections raised by the respondents, we examine the relevant provisions of the Ordinance. section 5(6) of the Ordinance and section 497(1) of the Cr.P.C. are reproduced hereunder in a comparative chart for ease of reference and convenience of understanding:

| Section 497(1) of the Cr.P.C: 497. When bail may be taken in cases of non-bailable offence. (1) When any person accused of any non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer-in-charge of a police station, or appears or is brought before | Section 5(6) of the Ordinance: 5(6) An accused person shall not be released on bail by a Special Court, or by any other Court, if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of a scheduled offence; nor shall an accused |

| a Court, he may be released on bail, but he shall not be so released if there appears reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or imprisonment for ten years: Provided that the Court may direct that any person under the age of sixteen years or any woman or any sick or infirm person accused of such an offence be released on bail: Provided further that a person accused of an offence as aforesaid shall not be released on bail unless the prosecution has been given notice to show cause why he should not be so released: Provided further that the Court shall, except where it is of the opinion that the delay in the trial of the accused has been occasioned by an act or omission of the accused or any other person acting on his behalf, direct that any person shall be released on bail--- (a) Who, being accused of any offence not punishable with death, has been detained for such offence for a continuous period exceeding one year or in case of a woman exceeding six months and whose trial for such offence has not concluded; or (b) Who, being accused of an offence punishable with death, has been detained for such offence for a continuous period exceeding two years and in case a woman exceeding one year and whose trial for such offence has not concluded. Provided further that the provisions of the foregoing proviso shall not apply to a previously convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or to a person who, in the opinion of the Court, is a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal or is accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life. | person be so released unless the prosecution has been given notice to show cause why he should not be so released. |

The first part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. provides that if a person accused of a non-bailable offence is arrested, he may be released on bail. Because of the enabling expression, "may be released on bail", used in this part, read with the basic principles of criminal justice,[7] the grant of bail in a non-bailable offence that does not fall within the second part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. is said to be a rule and refusal, an exception. The second part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. provides that an accused shall not be released on bail if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or imprisonment for ten years. This part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. which prohibits the grant of bail in certain offences is popularly known as the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C.

6. Bail in offences that fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. may be granted under section 497(2), Cr.P.C. if there are no reasonable grounds for believing that the accused committed the offence, but there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt. The other grounds of bail in such offences is available under the first and third provisos to section 497(1), Cr.P.C., on the grounds of being a minor, or a woman or a person who is sick or infirm and undue delay in the conclusion of the trial.

7. Section 5(6) of the Ordinance has borrowed the language of the second part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C., which extends to offences falling under the prohibitory clause, and has made it applicable to all the scheduled offences under the Ordinance. However, the exceptions of prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. have not been so adopted and made applicable to the scheduled offences under the Ordinance. Therefore, the only ground for grant of bail in a schedule offence under the Ordinance is that which is provided in section 497(2), Cr.P.C., that is, if the court finds that there are no reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed the Scheduled Offence and that there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt. In Khalid Farooq, this Court held:

Section 5(6) of the Ordinance clearly states that an accused shall not be released if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of a scheduled offence. The provisions of this section have effect, notwithstanding, anything contained in the Code. The first and third provisos to subsection (1) of section 497 of the Code, which create exceptions to the rule contained in that subsection, cannot be read into subsection (6) of section 5 of the Ordinance. Where the law-maker wanted to provide an exception or departure to the rule contained in section 5(6) of the Ordinance, he did so by adding such words akin to the second proviso to subsection (1) of section 497 of the Code. Where the law-maker did not desire to provide further exceptions to the rule, such as those akin to the first and the third provisos to the same subsection, he did not add specific words similar to those provisos in subsection (6) of section 5. ... Therefore, whilst the provisions of the first and third provisos to subsection (1) of section 497 of the Code may be treated as not available to the Special Court or the High Court, such a situation would not apply to subsections (2) to (5) of section 497 of the Code, as they do not affect the rule stated in subsection (6) of section 5 of the Ordinance.

This view was reiterated by this Court in Chaudhry Shujat Hussain. However, dealing with the third proviso to Section 497(1), Cr.P.C, this Court in Khalid Farooq held:

...The position of the third proviso to subsection (1) of section 497 of the Code is somewhat nebulous. Though its provisions provide an exception to the rule contained in subsection (1) of section 497, it is founded in public policy, namely, that an accused shall not be made to suffer for the long delay arising out of the commencement of his trial, unless the same has been occasioned by his own conduct, and assuming that the same is also not available, the possibility of its application through section 561-A of the Code to prevent an abuse of the process of the Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice, cannot be totally excluded.

Thus, in appropriate cases, a High Court can grant bail on the ground of delay in conclusion of the trial, similar to that which is available under the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C., under its inherent powers under section 561-A, Cr.P.C. to secure the ends of justice or to prevent the abuse of the process of court as held in Khalid Farooq but going further, a High Court also enjoys constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199(1)(c) of the Constitution for the enforcement of fundamental rights. This constitutional jurisdiction of High Courts cannot be abridged by any sub-constitutional legislation.[8] So, while section 5(6) of the Ordinance is binding on the Special Court, it is not so on a High Court which fashions its jurisdiction on the basis of the enforcement of the fundamental rights under the Constitution. Undue delay in the trial of the accused infringes his fundamental rights to liberty, fair trial and dignity under Articles 9, 10A and 14 of the Constitution, if the delay cannot be attributed to him.

8. "Delay in the conclusion of a criminal trial is antithetic to the very concept of a fair trial and due process guaranteed by Article 10A of the Constitution. The right to a fair trial is a cardinal requirement of the rule of law. If an accused cannot be tried fairly for an offence, he should not be tried for it at all. Conclusion of trial within a reasonable time is an essential component of the right to a fair trial. The prolonged pre-trial detention of the accused also defies the presumption of innocence, another essential element of the right to a fair trial, for an accused is presumed innocent until he is proven guilty by proof beyond reasonable doubt. Even before the addition of Article 10A in the Constitution, the right to a fair trial and due process was well-entrenched in our jurisprudence and considered to be a part of the right of access to justice enshrined in the constitutional right to be dealt with in accordance with law guaranteed by Article 4 and the fundamental right to life and liberty guaranteed by Article 9 of the Constitution."[9]

9. It is therefore underlined that a High Court while hearing a bail petition under sections 497/498, Cr.P.C., other than possessing inherent jurisdiction under section 561-A, Cr.P.C., also enjoys its constitutional jurisdiction as a guardian of the fundamental rights of the accused. This protective constitutional jurisdiction of the High Courts cannot be circumscribed by any sub-constitutional legislation, including section 5(6) of the Ordinance. If a High Court while hearing a bail petition is of the view that the facts and circumstances of the case offend and impair the fundamental rights of the accused, it can grant bail in exercise of its constitutional jurisdiction without being limited by the legislation that regulates the grant of bail in the offence. If a High Court observes that the conclusion of the trial has been unduly delayed for no fault of the accused, thereby depriving the accused of his fundamental rights to liberty, fair trial and due process, it may, rather should, interfere to enforce these fundamental rights of the accused. In order to assess the reasonable time for the conclusion of the trial, the High Court may be guided by, and structure its discretion on the basis of, the statutory timeframe provided in the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C.

10. Under clause (a) of the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C., an accused is entitled to bail if there is a delay in the conclusion of the trial, for no fault of the accused, for a period exceeding one year, in cases of offences not punishable with death. In the present case, according to the latest report of the Special Court, the petitioner was arrested on 20.11.2020, the trial commenced on 28.06.2021 and the last date of hearing was 26.07.2022. In this span of almost two years, out of 22 prosecution witnesses only 12 witnesses have been recorded so far. A close perusal of the Report shows that the conduct of the petitioner is not the reason for the delay in the conclusion of the trial. He was, therefore, entitled to be released on bail by the High Court in exercise of its inherent powers under section 561-A, Cr.P.C. to secure the ends of justice or to prevent the abuse of the process of court, as well as in exercise of its constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution to enforce his fundamental rights. However, the High Court has not exercised both the jurisdictions vested in it.

11. For above reasons, we converted this petition into appeal and allow the same: the impugned order of the High Court is set aside and the bail petition of the petitioner is allowed. He is admitted to bail subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.100,000/- with two sureties in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial court.

(Against the order of Islamabad High Court, Islamabad dated 14.06.2022 passed in Crl. Misc. No. 733-B of 2022).

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497(1), first proviso---Non-bailable offence---Bail---Female accused---Scope and extent of the first proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. stated.

The first part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. provides that if a person accused of a non-bailable offence is arrested, he may be released on bail. Because of the enabling expression, "may be released on bail", used in this part, read with the basic principles of criminal justice, the grant of bail in a non-bailable offence that does not fall within the second part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. is said to be a rule and refusal, an exception. The second part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. provides that an accused shall not be released on bail if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or imprisonment for ten years. This part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. which prohibits the grant of bail in certain offences is popularly known as the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C.

However, the first proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. provides that the Court may direct that any person under the age of sixteen years or any woman or any sick or infirm person accused of such an offence be released on bail. The expression "such an offence" used in this proviso refers to the offence mentioned in the second part (prohibitory clause) of section 497(1), Cr.P.C., as for all other non-bailable offences the Court is already empowered to release the accused on bail under the first part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The first proviso has thus made equal the power of the Court to grant bail in the offences of prohibitory clause alleged against an accused under the age of sixteen years, a woman accused and a sick or infirm accused, to its power under the first part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. This means that in cases of women, etc., as mentioned in the first proviso to Section 497(1), irrespective of the category of the offence, bail is to be granted as a rule and refused as an exception in the same manner as it is granted or refused in offences that do not fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C.

Fazal Elahi v. Farah Naz 1979 SCMR 109; Liaquat Ali v. Bashiran Bibi 1994 SCMR 1729 and Zakir Jaffer v. State 2021 SCMR 2084 ref.

The exceptions for refusing bail in offences that do not fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. are therefore also applicable to the accused who pray for bail under the first proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. in an offence falling within the prohibitory clause. These exceptions are well settled. They are likelihood of the accused: (a) to abscond to escape trial; (b) to tamper with the prosecution evidence or influence the prosecution witnesses to obstruct the course of justice; or (c) to repeat the offence keeping in view his previous criminal record, nature of the offence or the desperate manner in which he has prima facie acted in the commission of offence.

----S. 497(1), first proviso---Penal Code (XLV of 1860), Ss. 395 & 412---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Dacoity---Female accused---Bail, grant of---In cases of women as mentioned in the first proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C, irrespective of the category of the offence, bail was to be granted as a rule and refused as an exception---Persons involved in the commission of offences of robbery or dacoity were usually professional criminals and there was a likelihood that they would repeat the offence if enlarged on bail, but the case of the present female-accused was distinguishable as she was working as a maid in the house of the complainant as per his own version, therefore, she did not appear to be a professional robber or dacoit and the Court did not find likelihood of her repeating the offence if released on bail---Petition for leave to appeal was converted onto appeal and allowed, and accused was admitted to post-arrest bail.

Muhammad Shahzad Siddiqui, Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioner.

Date of hearing: 19th August, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the order of the Islamabad High Court, dated 14.06.2022, whereby post-arrest bail has been denied to her in case FIR No.795, dated 16.12.2021, registered at P.S. Lohi Bher, Islamabad, for offences punishable under sections 395 and 412, P.P.C.

2. Briefly, the allegations in the crime report are that five unknown accused entered the house of the complainant, forcibly detained the complainant and his family member along-with their maid (allegedly, the petitioner). They robbed the family of cash, jewellery, mobiles, etc., and also took the maid with them. Subsequently, through a supplementary statement made on the same day, the complainant implicated the petitioner to be a partner of the said five unknown accused who had committed dacoity in his house.

3. Learned counsel for the petitioner submits that in the crime report one Sidra is mentioned as being the maid in the house of the complainant and detained along with the family of the complainant. There is no material on the record to show that the petitioner was the said maid. Further, according to the crime report the maid Sidra has not been ascribed any role in the commission of dacoity. The petitioner being a woman is also entitled to the relief of bail. Conversely, learned Advocate General, Islamabad submits on behalf of the prosecution that the petitioner was in league with the other co-accused who had committed dacoity in the house of the complainant and some items of the stolen property, i.e., artificial jewellery and two mobiles, have also been recovered from her.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record of the case. The point that has attracted our attention is that the petitioner being a woman her prayer for post arrest bail should have been examined under the first proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. also, if she was not found entitled to bail under section 497(2), Cr.P.C. The courts below have not adverted to it. Thus, the interest of justice requires us to examine it. For this purpose, we need to see first what is the scope and extent of the said proviso. Section 497(1) and its first proviso are reproduced hereunder for convenience of reference:

497. When bail may be taken in cases of non-bailable offence.

(1) When any person accused of any non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer-in-charge of a police station, or appears or is brought before a Court, he may be released on bail, but he shall not be so released if there appears reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or imprisonment for ten years:

Provided that the Court may direct that any person under the age of sixteen years or any woman or any sick or infirm person accused of such an offence be released on bail.

The first part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. provides that if a person accused of a non-bailable offence is arrested, he may be released on bail. Because of the enabling expression, "may be released on bail", used in this part, read with the basic principles of criminal justice,[1] the grant of bail in a non-bailable offence that does not fall within the second part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. is said to be a rule and refusal, an exception. The second part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. provides that an accused shall not be released on bail if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprison-ment for life or imprisonment for ten years. This part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. which prohibits the grant of bail in certain offences is popularly known as the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C.

5. However, the first proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. provides that the Court may direct that any person under the age of sixteen years or any woman or any sick or infirm person accused of such an offence be released on bail. The expression "such an offence" used in this proviso refers to the offence mentioned in the second part (prohibitory clause) of section 497(1), Cr.P.C., as for all other non-bailable offences the Court is already empowered to release the accused on bail under the first part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The first proviso has thus made equal the power of the Court to grant bail in the offences of prohibitory clause alleged against an accused under the age of sixteen years, a woman accused and a sick or infirm accused, to its power under the first part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. This means that in cases of women, etc., as mentioned in the first proviso to section 497(1), irrespective of the category of the offence, bail is to be granted as a rule and refused as an exception[2] in the same manner as it is granted or refused in offences that do not fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C.

6. The exceptions for refusing bail in offences that do not fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. are therefore also applicable to the accused who pray for bail under the first proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. in an offence falling within the prohibitory clause. These exceptions are well settled by several judgements[3] of this Court. They are likelihood of the accused: (a) to abscond to escape trial; (b) to tamper with the prosecution evidence or influence the prosecution witnesses to obstruct the course of justice; or (c) to repeat the offence keeping in view his previous criminal record, nature of the offence or the desperate manner in which he has prima facie acted in the commission of offence.

7. We have examined the record of the case and do not find any material that would attract any of the above exceptions in order to refuse bail to the present petitioner. We are cognizant of the fact that the persons involved in the commission of offences of robbery or dacoity are usually the professional criminals and there is a likelihood that they would repeat the offence if enlarged on bail. But the case of the present petitioner is distinguishable as she was working as a maid in the house of the complainant as per his own version, therefore, she does not appear to be a professional robber or dacoit and we do not find a likelihood of her repeating the offence if released on bail. The impugned order passed by the High Court is, thus, not sustainable under the law and calls for interference by this Court. This petition is, therefore, converted into appeal and the same is allowed: the impugned order is set aside and the petitioner is admitted to post-arrest bail subject to her furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.50,000/- with two sureties in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial court.

8. Needless to mention that this concession of bail may be cancelled by the competent court under section 497(5), Cr.P.C., if the petitioner misuses it in any manner, including causing delay in the expeditious conclusion of the trial.

MWA/T-5/SC Bail granted.

----S. 9---Controller Incharge of Pakistan Television Corporation (PTV) News---Allegation of molesting and sexually harassing female anchorpersons---Minor penalty of censure and payment of compensation imposed by the Federal Ombudsperson---President enhancing said penalty to major penalty of removal from service---Legality---In the facts and circumstances of the case, the enhancement of punishment by the President, of the respondent (accused) who had a previous service record involving moral turpitude and had caused harassment, in the present case, to the female employees working under his supervision and control, at different times, was completely justified for creating a safe working environment for women and for fulfilling the objectives of the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act, 2010---High Court had wrongly interfered with and set aside the President's order.

For enhancing the penalty of the respondent, the President had observed that the respondent (accused) was involved in the molestation and harassment of the petitioners (female victims); that the petitioners had no grudge to falsely implicate the respondent in such heinous allegation; that the petitioners were respectable women, working for several years in PTV, and had never lodged any complaint of sexual harassment against any of their colleagues or superiors; that the petitioners were well-educated women and leading happy family lives, and it was not expected from them to level such allegations against the respondent without substance; that the respondent was in habit of using filthy and threatening language for his subordinates and colleagues; that the conduct of the respondent had remained immoral throughout his service career; and that the purpose of punishment was not only reformatory but also creating deterrence against heinous crimes, such as, the sexual harassment at the workplace. High Court in its impugned order failed to appreciate that the President had given due and judicious consideration to the facts and circumstances of the case for enhancing the punishment of the respondent. In view of the said observations of the President, the ground furnished by the High Court for setting aside the President's order was legally not sustainable.

Respondent had meanwhile retired from service and stayed mostly out of the country. In view of this development, and in order to effectively implement the punishment awarded to the respondent and to recover the compensation from the pension of the respondent in case he failed to pay it, Supreme Court converted his punishment from 'removal from service' into 'compulsory retirement' along with payment of Rs.500,000/ as compensation to be paid by him to each of the petitioners, including a pro forma respondent, who was also his victim, to best serve the ends of justice in the present case. Supreme Court directed that amount of compensation shall be recovered from arrears of pay (if any), pension emoluments or any other source (property) of the respondent.

----S. 8(1)---Complaint filed before the Ombudsperson---Delay in filing complaints for incidents of harassment---Such delay is not material due to social taboos---Courts, tribunals and authorities concerned must take a lenient view on the delay in filing the complaint by the victim and decide the case on merits.

Delay in lodging complaints for incidents of harassment is understandable. In our social and cultural setting where prevailing notions of family honour and taboos play a dominant role, it is not easy for a woman to speak up about such deeply disturbing incidents. There is also the apprehension of counter allegations hurled against her character by the delinquent. For these and other reasons, many cases of sexual harassment remain unreported. Victims of sexual harassment who exhibit the courage to report the matter against all odds should not, therefore, be turned away on the ground of delay in lodging the complaint. The courts, tribunals and authorities concerned must take a lenient view on the delay in filing the complaint by the victim and decide the case on merits. This will encourage victims to come forward to seek justice. The principle enunciated by the Supreme Court in several criminal cases involving sexual assault, that delay in reporting the incident to the police in such cases is not material, equally applies to the complaints of sexual harassment made under the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act, 2010.

----Preamble---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 34---Objectives of the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act 2010, highlighted.

As evident from its Statement of Objects and Reasons, Preamble and substantive provisions, the objective of the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act, 2010 ('the Act') is to actualize the right of women to join a profession or occupation of their choice, where they are treated as an equal with dignity and honour, and feel safe that their working environment is free of harassment, abuse and intimidation. The Act gives effect to Article 34 of the Constitution which provides that "steps shall be taken to ensure full participation of women in all spheres of national life". The Act opens pathways for women to participate more fully in the development of the country at all levels, and ensures equal opportunity for them to earn their livelihood in a safe working environment. The Act also promotes the standards set by international commitments of Pakistan under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR), the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), and the ILO Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention.

----Preamble---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9, 14, 18 & 25---Constitutional foundations of rights to 'gender equality' and 'safe working environment', explained.

Viewing the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act, 2010 ('the Act') on a constitutional plane, the right to a safe working environment for all genders including male, female and transgender, free of harassment, abuse and intimidation draws its real strength from the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution: right to life includes the right to livelihood, and thus assumes the right to a safe working environment for everyone, especially women, for earning such a livelihood; intimidating, hostile, abusive and offensive workplace environment offends the right to livelihood and the right to life of a person; right to liberty includes the right to agency, choice and freedom to join any profession or occupation of ones choice; right to enter upon any lawful profession or occupation, carries an inbuilt protection to make and execute such a choice. Any act of harassment done by any person that affects the free choice to enter and continue any lawful profession or occupation would amount to threatening the safety of the working environment. Only a safe working environment meets the constitutional standard of fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 9 and 18 of the Constitution. These rights read with the rights to dignity, equality and protection against discrimination on the basis of sex under Articles 14 and 25 construct the constitutional foundations of 'gender equality' which ensures safe working environment for all genders, free from all forms of harassment, including sexual harassment.

(i) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 14---Right to dignity---Meaning and scope of right to 'dignity', stated.

Dignity is an inherent and inseparable right of a human being and has thus been guaranteed by the Constitution as an absolute, non-negotiable and inviolable fundamental right that is not subject to any qualification, restriction or regulation. Dignity values the worth of each person and requires the recognition of each person's worth to be held in equal measure for all. It is harmed when individuals are marginalized, ignored or devalued, and is enhanced when the full place of all individuals within the society is recognized. The universal value of human dignity provides that "all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. It shuns patriarchy, misogyny and the age-old archaic and dogmatic social norms, and nurtures progressive and forward-looking constitutional ideals of liberty, equality and social justice.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---"Our lives begin to end the day we become silent about things that matter."[1] In this case, a few brave women decided to break the silence by coming forward to speak up about sexual harassment they faced at their workplace, praying that the perpetrator be taken to task. This reminds us of our celebrated revolutionary poet, Faiz, who said: "Speak, for your lips are free; Speak, your tongue is still yours, Your upright body is yours-Speak, your life is still yours."[2]

2. Briefly stated, the facts of the case are that Ms. Uzma Naveed Chaudhary and four other female anchorpersons of PTV ("Petitioners")[3] lodged a complaint, on 15.06.2016, against Mr. Ather Buttar ("Respondent"), the Controller Incharge of the PTV News Centre Islamabad, under the Protection against Harassment of Women at Workplace Act, 2010 ("Act"), before the Federal Ombudsman. They alleged in the complaint that the respondent had been continuously harassing them individually at their workplace over a long period of time. The alleged sexual advances made to the petitioners included comments and acts like: she is looking hot and offering her to book a room in a hotel, winking at her and making indecent gestures, sending a phone message expressing his love for her, visiting her at her house uninvited, asking her out for dinner and upon her refusal threatening her to suffer the consequences, promising to make her a star if she would have friendship with him, and attempting physical assault on her in his office.

3. The respondent filed his written reply to the complaint, denying the allegations levelled against him. The Federal Ombudsman, after recording evidence of both the parties, held the respondent liable for harassing the petitioners and by allowing the complaint, imposed upon him the minor penalties of censure and payment of compensation Rs.250,000/- to the petitioners, vide her decision dated 20.10.2016.

4. Both the petitioners and the respondent filed their representations to the President of Pakistan against the decision of the Federal Ombudsman: the petitioners prayed for enhancement of the punishment and the respondent, for his exoneration from the allegations. The President rejected the representation of the respondent and accepted that of the petitioners, vide his order dated 30.12.2016, and thereby modified and converted the punishment of the respondent into that of major penalty of removal from service instead of the minor penalties imposed by the Federal Ombudsman.

5. The respondent challenged the order of the President before the Islamabad High Court by invoking its constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution") through a writ petition. The High Court partially accepted the writ petition of the respondent, and set aside the order of the President but maintained the decision of the Federal Ombudsman, vide the impugned judgment. Hence, the present petitions have been filed by both the petitioners and the respondent. The petitioners pray for restoration of the order of the President and the respondent, for setting aside the decision of the Federal Ombudsman.

6. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at some length and with their able assistance have perused the record of the case.

7. We have gone through the decision of the Federal Ombudsman and the order of the President, and found that both have minutely examined and thoroughly discussed the evidence of the parties. We find no misreading or non-reading of any material evidence of the parties that could have constituted an error of law to justify interference with the said findings of facts by the High Court in its constitutional jurisdiction. Needless to state that a High Court cannot interfere, in its constitutional jurisdiction, with findings of fact recorded by the competent courts, tribunals or authorities unless such findings are the result of misreading or non-reading of the material evidence or based on no evidence, which amounts to an error of law and thus justifies, rather calls for, interference.[4] In absence of any misreading or non-reading of the material evidence, the High Court has rightly not interfered with the concurrent findings of facts recorded by the Federal Ombudsman and the President, regarding the culpability of the respondent.

8. However, we find that the observation of the High Court for setting aside the order of the President as to the enhancement of the punishment, on the ground that no reason was provided by the President for enhancing the punishment, is against the record. The High Court has quoted para 28 of the order of the President in the impugned judgment, which is the operative part of the order, and has missed to note that para 27 thereof contains: (i) the discussion on the evidence of the parties for confirming the finding of fact as to the culpability of the respondent, and (ii) the reasons for enhancement of the punishment. As the High Court has maintained the concurrent findings of facts recorded by the Ombudsman and the President on the culpability of the respondent, we do not find it necessary to rediscuss and reappraise the evidence of the petitioners. The reasons for imposing a particular penalty (punishment), after the determination of culpability (conviction), though are distinct and separate from the proof of the allegation (charge), but they need not bear a separate heading or be narrated in a listed or compact form. Such reasons may, and ordinarily do, form part of the discussion on the overall facts and circumstances of the case, as has been done by the President in the present case in para 27 of his order. For enhancing the penalty of the respondent, the President has observed that the respondent was involved in the molestation and harassment of the petitioners; that the petitioners have no grudge to falsely implicate the respondent in such heinous allegation; that the petitioners are respectable women, working for several years in PTV, and have never lodged any complaint of sexual harassment against any of their colleagues or superiors; that the petitioners are well-educated women and leading happy family lives, and it is not expected from them to level such allegations against the respondent without substance; that the respondent was in habit of using the filthy and threatening language for his subordinates and colleagues; that the conduct of the respondent has remained immoral throughout his service career; and that the purpose of punishment is not only reformatory but also creating deterrence against heinous crimes, such as, the sexual harassment at the workplace. The High Court has failed to appreciate that the President has given due and judicious consideration to the facts and circumstances of the case for enhancing the punishment of the respondent. In view of the said observations of the President, the ground furnished by the High Court for setting aside the President's order is found legally not sustainable.

9. So far as the objection of the respondent that there is a long delay in lodging the complaint by the petitioners against him after the alleged incidents of harassment is concerned, the President has rightly rejected the same and observed that delay in such cases is understandable. In our social and cultural setting where prevailing notions of family honour and taboos play a dominant role, it is not easy for a woman to speak up about such deeply disturbing incidents. There is also the apprehension of counter allegations hurled against her character by the delinquent. For these and other reasons, many cases of sexual harassment remain unreported. Victims of sexual harassment who exhibit the courage to report the matter against all odds should not, therefore, be turned away on the ground of delay in lodging the complaint. The courts, tribunals and authorities concerned must take a lenient view on the delay in filing the complaint by the victim and decide the case on merits. This will encourage victims to come forward to seek justice. The principle enunciated by this Court in several criminal cases[5] involving sexual assault, that delay in reporting the incident to the police in such cases is not material, equally applies to the complaints of sexual harassment made under the Act.

10. As evident from its Statement of Objects and Reasons, Preamble and substantive provisions, the objective of the Act is to actualize the right of women to join a profession or occupation of their choice, where they are treated as an equal with dignity and honour, and feel safe that their working environment is free of harassment, abuse and intimidation. The Act gives effect to Article 34 of the Principles of Policy under our Constitution which provides that "steps shall be taken to ensure full participation of women in all spheres of national life". The Act opens pathways for women to participate more fully in the development of the country at all levels, and ensures equal opportunity for them to earn their livelihood in a safe working environment. The Act also promotes the standards set by international commitments of Pakistan under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR), the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), and the ILO Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention.

11. Lately, the Parliament of Pakistan has further enlarged the scope of the Act, to realize its objective more effectively, by enacting the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace (Amendment) Act 2022 ("Amendment Act"). The Amendment Act has extended the application of the Act by adding in the definition of "employee" the informal workers without a contract, freelancers, domestic workers, interns, trainees, apprentices, students, performers, artists, sportspersons, etc., and by extending the definition of "workplace" to anyplace where services are rendered or performed by professionals, including educational institutions, gigs, concerts, studios, performance facilities, courts, highways, sporting facilities, gymnasiums etc. The Amendment Act has also redefined the expression "harassment" and has included therein "discrimination on the basis of gender, which may or may not be sexual in nature, but which may embody a discriminatory and prejudicial mindset or notion, resulting in discriminatory behavior on basis of gender against the complainant". Although it is evident from the words, "demeaning attitude", that the expression "sexually demeaning attitude" used in the definition of "harassment" means demeaning attitude on the basis of sex, the Amendment Act has further clarified it by providing that it includes "any gesture or expression conveying derogatory connotation" that causes "interference with work performance or creating an intimidating, hostile or offensive work environment", and covers conduct that discriminates against persons because of their gender and creates an intimidating or hostile working environment. Any conduct that is rooted in gender-based discrimination and creates an abusive and hostile working environment is harassment under the Act, which is not restricted only to conduct that is related to the act of sex. Many forms of pervasive harassment in the workplace, including denial of equal opportunities as well criticism of one's abilities on the basis of gender, also comes within the ambit of harassment.

12. The Amendment Act has substituted the expression "a woman or man" with "any person" in the definition of "complainant" and has thus made applicable the protection of the Act to transgender persons also. The scope of the Act is not restricted to women only but it protects everyone - male, female and transgender persons. This change in the Act is commendable, as it would now extend the protection to transgender persons also, who are often the most vulnerable to different forms of harassment. The amendments introduced in the Act, we hope, would play an important role to realize the constitutional ideals and values of liberty, dignity, equality and social justice for women and transgender persons in Pakistan.[6]

13. Viewing the Act on a constitutional plane, we note that the right to a safe working environment for all genders including male, female and transgender, free of harassment, abuse and intimidation draws its real strength from the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution: right to life includes the right to livelihood,[7] and thus assumes the right to a safe working environment for everyone, especially women, for earning such a livelihood; intimidating, hostile, abusive and offensive workplace environment offends the right to livelihood and the right to life of a person; right to liberty includes the right to agency, choice and freedom to join any profession or occupation of ones choice; right to enter upon any lawful profession or occupation, carries an inbuilt protection to make and execute such a choice. Any act of harassment done by any person that affects the free choice to enter and continue any lawful profession or occupation would amount to threatening the safety of the working environment. Only a safe working environment meets the constitutional standard of fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 9 and 18 of the Constitution. These rights read with the rights to dignity, equality and protection against discrimination on the basis of sex under Articles 14 and 25 construct the constitutional foundations of 'gender equality' which ensures safe working environment for all genders, free from all forms of harassment, including sexual harassment.

14. It is underlined that dignity is an inherent and inseparable right of a human being and has thus been guaranteed by our Constitution as an absolute, non-negotiable and inviolable fundamental right that is not subject to any qualification, restriction or regulation.[8] Dignity values the worth of each person and requires the recognition of each person's worth to be held in equal measure for all.[9] It is harmed when individuals are marginalized, ignored or devalued, and is enhanced when the full place of all individuals within the society is recognized.[10] The right to dignity under Article 14 and the construct of "gender equality" turns "sexual harassment" on its head and buries it deep underground. The universal value of human dignity provides that "all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights."[11] It shuns patriarchy, misogyny and the age-old archaic and dogmatic social norms, and nurtures progressive and forward-looking constitutional ideals of liberty, equality and social justice. It is time to bid farewell to gender biases and prejudices, and pave the way towards the actualization of these robust and unwavering constitutional ideals and values by embracing the participation of women in all spheres of life with honour and dignity. "No nation can rise to the height of glory", in the words of the Founder of our Nation, Muhammed Ali Jinnah, "unless your women are side by side with you. We are victims of evil customs. It is a crime against humanity that our women are shut up within the four walls of the houses as prisoners. There is no sanction anywhere for the deplorable condition in which our women have to live."[12]

15. Reverting to the merits of the present case, we find that in the facts and circumstances of the case, the enhancement of punishment by the President, of the respondent who had a previous service record involving moral turpitude and had caused harassment, in the present case, to the female employees working under his supervision and control, at different times, was completely justified for creating a safe working environment for women and for fulfilling the objectives of the Act. The High Court has wrongly interfered with and set aside the President's order. We have also been informed that the respondent has meanwhile retired from service and stays mostly out of the country (currently, in Canada). In view of this development, and in order to effectively implement the punishment awarded to the respondent and to recover the compensation from the pension of the respondent in case he fails to pay it, we convert his punishment from 'removal from service' into 'compulsory retirement' along with payment of Rs.500,000/ as compensation to be paid by him to each of the petitioners including Ms. Qurat-ul-Ain, the pro forma respondent No.6, to best serve the ends of justice in the present case.

16. We, therefore, convert the Civil Petition No.1655/2019 of the petitioners into appeal and allow the same in the said terms, by setting aside the impugned judgment of the High Court, while the Civil Petition No.1347/2019 of the respondent is dismissed. The amount of compensation shall be recovered from arrears of pay (if any), pension emoluments or any other source (property) of the respondent as per section 4(i)(d) of the Act.

MWA/U-1/SC Order accordingly.

Syeda B.H. Shah, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Sardar Usman Sharif Khosa, Advocate Supreme Court for the Complainant.

Date of hearing: 1st September, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Through the present jail petition for leave to appeal, the petitioner impugns the judgment dated 31.01.2018 of the Lahore High Court, whereby the appeal of the petitioner filed against the judgment of the trial court has been dismissed. The trial court had convicted the petitioner for the offence of committing murder of the complainant's son, Muhammad Ilyas, and sentenced him to imprisonment for life, under section 302(b), P.P.C.

2. Learned counsel for the petitioner submits that one Rasool Bakhsh, not Ghulam Rasool, was mentioned in the FIR to have caused the injury to the deceased (Muhammad Ilyas) and there is no explanation on record of the case that the petitioner, Ghulam Rasool, is the same person mentioned in the FIR as Rasool Bakhsh. Therefore, she contends, it creates a reasonable doubt as to the involvement of the petitioner in the commission of the alleged offence, which entitles the petitioner to be acquitted while giving him the benefit of this doubt. We are not impressed by this contention. The complainant and the petitioner are residents of the same vicinity, and throughout the proceedings of the case from the arrest of the petitioner till his conviction, no question as to the identity of the petitioner was ever raised. It is a matter of common knowledge that in rural areas of Punjab, people are usually known by their nicknames (aliases), and their exact names are often not known to others. The petitioner's alias, Rasoola, was also mentioned in the FIR together with name Rasool Bakhsh. The petitioner, in the present jail petition[1], has himself mentioned his name as Ghulam Rasool alias Rasoola. His name, Ghulam Rasool alias Rasoola, is mentioned in the investigation proceedings including the recovery memos, in the Challan, in the statements of the prosecution witnesses and in his own statement recorded under section 342, Cr.P.C. The contention as to doubt of the identity of the petitioner is therefore found baseless.

3. The next contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is that the injury on the neck of the deceased, which led to his death, could not have been caused by a simple knife (churri) allegedly recovered from the petitioner. Dr. Abdul Rehman (PW-12), who conducted the post-mortem examination of the deceased, deposed in cross-examination that any sharp-edged weapon might cause the injury found on the neck of the body of the deceased. In view of the statement of PW-12, this contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner does not detract from the prosecution's case that the recovered churri was the weapon of offence.

4. Having heard the learned counsel for the parties at some length and examined the record of the case, we find that both the trial court and the High Court have concurrently recorded their findings of fact as to the culpability of the petitioner, after a thorough examination of the prosecution evidence. It is a well-settled principle[2] in regard to the exercise of discretionary jurisdiction vested in this Court under Article 185(3) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973, that in the matter of granting leave to appeal, this Court does not function as an ordinary court of appeal, and in order to justify the grant of leave to appeal it must be shown that the case involves some important question of law or the impugned finding of fact is the result of gross misreading or non-reading of the material evidence or is so shocking or improbable that no reasonable person could have arrived at it on the basis of the evidence available on the record of the case. The learned counsel for the petitioner has not been able to point out any misreading or non-reading of the material evidence that could justify interference with the concurrent findings of fact, nor does the case involve any important question of law for determination by this Court. The leave to appeal is therefore declined and the petition, dismissed.

MWA/G-16/SC Petition dismissed.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question of law before us is whether the respondent taxpayers enjoyed exemption from the payment of minimum tax charged under section 80D of the repealed Income Tax Ordinance, 1979 ("Ordinance") by virtue of section 6 of the Protection of Economic Reforms Act, 1992 ("Act") read with clause 122C, Part-I of the Second Schedule to the Ordinance.

2. Briefly the common facts are that the respondent taxpayers were assessed for minimum tax on income under section 80D of the Ordinance by the tax officer. The said assessment order was approved by the CIT (Appeals). However, upon appeal the Tribunal set aside the said assessment and deleted the amount of minimum tax on income on the ground that the respondents enjoyed exemption from tax under section 6 of the Act read with clause 122C, Part-I of the Second Schedule to the Ordinance. The Department agitated the matter before the High Court by filing Tax References which were decided against the Department on different dates through separate orders on the ground that the industrial undertakings of the respondents having been setup after 07.11.1990 were entitled to the relief under section 6 of the Act. The listed civil appeals, with the leave of the court, challenge these orders of the High Court.

3. Learned counsel for the Department submits that the respondents are not entitled to exemption from minimum tax on income under section 80D of the Ordinance by virtue of section 6 of the Act as it does not grant cover to fiscal incentives under clause 122C of Part-I of the Second Schedule to the Ordinance. He adds that date of setting up of the plant by the taxpayer is not relevant but what is relevant is the date of the announcement, promulgation and implementation of the fiscal incentive by the Government. On the other hand, learned counsel for the respondent taxpayers relying on Elahi Cotton Mills[1] and Zaman Cotton Mills[2] submitted that the respondent taxpayers were entitled to the exemption from the levy of minimum tax on income under section 80D of the Ordinance by virtue of section 6 of the Act read with clause 122C of Part-I of the Second Schedule to the Ordinance.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at some length and have examined the case record and the law on the subject. Examining the relevant provisions of law in a chronological order helps understand the scheme of the law.

5. The Second Schedule to the Ordinance deals with "Exemptions from Total Income" under section 14(1) of the Ordinance. One such exemption was introduced under Clause 122C of the Second Schedule on 22.01.1987[3] which provided as under: -

(122C) Profits and gains derived by an assessee from an industrial undertaking set up between the first day of January, 1987 and the thirtieth day of June, 1988, both days inclusive, for a period of ten years beginning with the month in which the undertaking is set up for commercial production is commenced, whichever is later. (emphasis supplied)

Subsequently, section 80D (minimum tax on income) was introduced through Finance Ordinance, 1991 and is reproduced hereunder:

80D. Minimum tax on income of certain persons. (1) Not-withstanding anything contained in this Ordinance or any other law for the time being in force, where no tax is payable or paid by a company or a registered firm, an individual, an association of persons, an unregistered firm or a Hindu undivided family which, not being a company, does not qualify for assessment under the self assessment scheme under subsection (1) of section 59 resident in Pakistan or the tax payable or paid is less than on-half per cent of the amount representing its turnover from all sources, the aggregate of the declared turnover shall be deemed to be the income of the said company or a registered firm, an individual, an association of persons, an unregistered firm or a Hindu undivided family which, not being a company, does not qualify for assessment under the self assessment scheme under subsection (1) of section 59 and tax thereon shall be charged in the manner specified in subsection (2).

Explanation.- For the removal of doubt, it is declared that the expression "where no tax is payable or paid" and "or the tax payable or paid" apply to all cases where tax is not payable or paid for any reason whatsoever including any loss of income, profits or gains or set off of loss of earlier years, exemption from tax, credits or rebates in tax, and allowances and deductions (including depreciation) admissible under any provision of this Ordinance or any other law for the time being in forced.

Section 80D of the Ordinance introduced in the year 1991[4], much after the insertion of Clause 122C, is a non-obstante provision and therefore overrides the other provisions of the Ordinance including any tax exemption granted under the Ordinance prior to the introduction of section 80D[5]. Additionally, according to the learned counsel for the appellant the industrial undertakings were set up after 07.11.1990 which is after the timeframe provided in clause 122C.

6. Now let us see if the promulgation of the Protection of Economic Reforms Act, 1992[6] on 28.07.1992 provides any additional protection to clause 122C by diluting the effect of section 80D of the Ordinance. Sections 2(b), 3, 6 and the Schedule to the Act require examination and are, thus, reproduced hereunder:-

Section 2(b)

"economic reforms" means economic policies and programmes, laws and regulations announced, promulgated or implemented by the Government on and after the seventh day of November, 1990, relating to privatization of public sector enterprises, and nationalized banks, promotion of savings and investments, introduction of fiscal incentives for industrialization and deregulation of investment, banking, finance, exchange and payments systems, holding and transfer of currencies; and

Section 3

Act to override other laws.--This Act shall have effect notwithstanding anything contained in the Foreign Currency Accounts (Protection) Ordinance, 2001 (L of 2001).

Section 6

Protection of fiscal incentives for setting up of industries.---The fiscal incentives for investment provided by the Government through the statutory orders listed in the Schedule or otherwise notified shall continue in force for the term specified therein and shall not be altered to the disadvantage of the investors.

The Schedule (See section 6)

1. Notification No. SRO 1283(I)/90, dated the 13th December, 1990, issued under subsection (2) of section 14 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 1979 (XXXI of 1979)

2. Notification No. SRO 1284(I)/90, dated the 13th December, 1990, issued under section 19 of the Customs Act, 1969 (IV of 1969).

The purpose of the Act as per its preamble is to provide legal protection to economic reforms that have already been introduced and are in the process of being introduced in order to create confidence in the establishment and continuity of the liberal economic environment created by these economic reforms. Collective reading of the above re produced provisions show that "economic reforms" which are protected under the Act are the ones that were announced, promulgated or implemented by the Government on or after the 7th day of November, 1990. "Economic reforms" also include "fiscal incentives for industrialization"[7]. Section 6, simply protects the "economic reforms" already introduced for a specified term and mandates that they shall not be altered to the disadvantage of the taxpayer. The fiscal incentives (part of the "economic reforms") that are protected under section 6 are the fiscal incentives that were announced, promulgated and implemented by the Government on or after 07.11.1990. Therefore, the two notifications mentioned in the Schedule to the Act are tax incentives announced in December 1990. Section 6 also protects other fiscal incentives notified under the statutes mentioned in section 3 of the Act but the condition precedent for the "economic reforms" (including the fiscal incentives) to enjoy the protection of the Act is that they must have been announced, promulgated or implemented by the Government on or before 07.11.1990. In this case the fiscal incentive under clause 122C of Part-I of the Second Schedule was promulgated in 1987. The argument of the learned counsel for the taxpayer that the industrial undertaking set up by the respondents was after 07.11.1990 is immaterial. It is the promulgation of the fiscal incentive by the Government that has to be on or before 07.11.1990 and not the actual setting up of the industrial undertaking. Even otherwise, if the industrial undertaking was setup after 07.11.1990 then clause 122C does not apply as it only applied to industrial undertaking setup between January 1987 to June, 1988.

7. The reliance by the learned counsel for the respondents on Elahi Cotton and Zaman Cotton is also misconceived. The relevant finding of this Court in Elahi Cotton for the purpose of this case, which was simply followed by Zaman Cotton, is as follows:

54. In our view, since the provisions of Act XII of 1992 are subsequent in time and as they are contained in a special statute, they shall prevail over the provisions of section 80-D of the Ordinance, which was enacted through Finance Act, 1991, which was an earlier statute and which was part of general statute. In this view of the matter, assesses who fulfil the conditions of the notifications referred to in the Schedule to section 6 of Act XII of 1992, are entitled to the protection.

The above shows that protection of the Act was extended to the notification under the Schedule of the Act which was dated 13.12.1990 and therefore met the requirement of the relevant date i.e., 07.11.1990. There is no cavil with the law settled by Elahi Cotton that the Act protects fiscal incentives otherwise taken away by section 80D provided the fiscal incentives in question must have been announced, promulgated or implemented by the Government on or after 07.11.1990, which is not so in the present case.

8. For the above reasons, the impugned orders are set aside and these appeals are allowed. The connected civil petitions are also converted into appeals and allowed in the same terms.

MWA/C-22/SC Appeals allowed.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts of the case are that petitioner was a student of Peshawar Girls Model High School No.1, Warsak Road, Peshawar and after passing her 9th class, she started her 10th class. In the new academic year,[1] as the petitioner remained absent for a fortnight from 05.11.2018, she was expelled from school vide letter dated 23.11.2018. The Letter stated two grounds for her expulsion: (i) non-payment of fee since June, 2018 and (ii) for being continuously absent from school w.e.f 5th November, 2018. The petitioner did not attend the classes for the remaining academic year. Subsequently, the request of the petitioner to send her name for the final examination of the 10th class was refused by the school. Aggrieved, the petitioner challenged the said refusal before the Peshawar High Court through a constitutional petition. Initially interim relief was granted to the petitioner and she sat the examination, which she subsequently passed. Later on the constitutional petition was dismissed by the High Court on the ground that petitioner failed to meet the requirement of 66% attendance required by a female student to qualify to sit the examination.

2. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have gone through the case record. According to the learned counsel for the school, as well as, the representative of the Board of Intermediate and Secondary Education, Peshawar ("Board"), the attendance of a female student must be 66% to be allowed to sit the examination as per Explanation (a) to Rule-2 of Chapter-IV of the Calendar of the Board of Intermediate and Secondary Education NWFP, 1995. In the case of the petitioner her attendance during the academic year was 45% as per the record. Learned counsel for the petitioner vehemently agitated that the petitioner got married during the academic year and hence missed some of her classes and asserted that the petitioner still had an attendance of 67.46%. In support of this he referred to letter dated 16.12.2021 issued by the Principal of the school. He also urged the Court to examine the case of the petitioner on humanitarian grounds. Learned counsel representing the school submitted that the letter dated 16.12.2021 is not in accordance with the record and also seriously disputed the veracity of the said document. We have gone through the attendance sheets placed on the record by the petitioner, which support the contention of the learned counsel for the school. There is nothing on the record that the petitioner wanted to resume her classes after 5th November, 2018 and she was not allowed to do so by the school. The rule regarding 66% attendance for female students under the Calendar of the Board of Intermediate and Secondary Education NWFP, 1995 is clear and carries no ambiguity.

3. Courts must sparingly interfere in the affairs of academic institutions[2]. Hamoodur Rahman, J. speaking for this Court in Zakir Ahmed case[3] held that "...we are not unmindful of the necessity of maintaining discipline in educational institutions... where the maintenance of discipline is essential for the orderly conduct of the institution... nor are we unmindful of the fact that persons in charge particularly of educational institutions must be given the fullest authority to correct those placed in their charge in the same manner as a parent or guardian would be able to do." It is, therefore, best to leave the disciplinary, administrative and policy matters of educational institutions to the professional expertise of the people running them, unless of course there is a blatant violation of any of the fundamental rights or the law.

4. Learned counsel for the petitioner, as an alternate plea, urged before us that the petitioner be treated on humanitarian grounds with compassion. No humanitarian ground has been urged before us except that the petitioner was married off during the academic year and that she passed the final examination under the interim order passed by the High Court, therefore her result of the 10th class be accepted. It is important to highlight that judges are to decide disputes before them in accordance with the Constitution and the law and not on the basis of their whims, likes and dislikes or personal feelings or mere humanitarian grounds. While justice is tempered with mercy but not at the expense of overriding the clear letter of the law. Compassion and hardship, therefore, may be considered by courts for providing relief to an aggrieved person, but only when there is scope in the relevant law to do so, not in breach of the law[4]. The requirement of 66% attendance of classes to be entitled to sit for the final examination under the Calendar of the Board is a requirement of law which does not provide any margin of relaxation. Therefore, no court enjoys the power or jurisdiction to ignore or sidetrack the clear letter of the law at the altar of compassion.

5. For the above reasons, we see no reasons to interfere with the impugned order of the High Court. Leave is, therefore, refused and this petition is dismissed.

Longstanding and consistent practice of the Supreme Court is that any person who challenges the judgment of the High Court through a petition or appeal, but has not been a party to the proceedings before the High Court, first prefers a separate application seeking leave of the Court to maintain such a petition or appeal. The wisdom behind the said practice is; firstly, that it ensures that the Court is put on notice that the petitioner was not a party in the proceedings before the High Court; and secondly, the petitioner, before addressing the merits of the case, has to establish before the Court that he is aggrieved of the impugned judgment. Once these conditions are met and the application is allowed, by the Court, the petition or appeal is duly numbered and fixed to be heard on merits. Such practice has been tacitly a part of Order XXXIII, Rule 7 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 for a long time and promotes transparency, openness and good judicial governance. Supreme Court endorsed such practice and reiterated the principle to such effect laid down in the case of H. M. Saya & Co. v. Wazir Ali Industries Ltd. PLD 1969 SC 65.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---

Civil Petition No.3509 of 2021: The main case has been decided by the Sindh High Court vide order dated 02.06.2021, therefore, the instant matter arising out of an interim order has become infructuous and is disposed of accordingly.

Civil Petition No.1494-K of 2021: We have noticed that the petitioner was not a party before the High Court as his application for impleadment was dismissed vide order dated 27.5.2021 and subsequently the main petition was decided on 02.6.2021, which has been challenged before us by the said petitioner.

Application by a person who was not a party in the proceedings before the High Court:

2. This Court in H.M. Saya[1] has held in 1969 that "a person who is not a party to a suit or a proceeding may prefer an appeal if he is affected by the judgment, decree or order of the trial Court provided he obtains leave from the Court of appeal". Since then it has been a longstanding and consistent practice of this Court that any person who challenges the judgment of the High Court through a petition or appeal, but has not been a party to the proceedings before the High Court, first prefers a separate application seeking leave of the Court to maintain such a petition or appeal. The wisdom behind the said practice is; firstly, that it ensures that the Court is put on notice that the petitioner was not a party in the proceedings before the High Court; and secondly, the petitioner, before addressing the merits of the case, has to establish before the Court that he is aggrieved of the impugned judgment. Once these conditions are met and the application is allowed, by the Court, the petition or appeal is duly numbered and fixed to be heard on merits. This practice has been tacitly a part of Order XXXIII, Rule 7 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 for a long time and promotes transparency, openness and good judicial governance. We, therefore, reiterate the principle in H.M. Saya and endorse the said practice of the Court.

3. In the instant case, learned counsel for the petitioner has frankly pointed out that he wishes to prefer such an application. Let the same be done. However, the office shall de-number the petition and first entertain the aforesaid application, which shall be put up before the Court for appropriate orders.

4. Office shall also submit a report for our perusal in chambers as to how the petition was entertained and numbered in absence of any application seeking permission to file this civil petition in the wake of such a long standing practice of this Court.

MWA/K-17/SC Order accordingly.

Terms "civil servant" and "government servant", having almost the same meaning and scope, are commonly used interchangeably in the civil service laws of the country. The term "public servant" as defined in section 21 of the P.P.C. for the purpose of application of that law is, however, of wide import and scope than those terms. It cannot, therefore, be referred to or used as an equivalent or synonym of them, in the context of a person's civil status, capacity or position. In the ordinary English language, the words "civil servant" and "public servant" may have the same meaning, but this is not so in the legal language as commonly used in the laws of the country (Pakistan). It may be said that in legal parlance, particularly of the service and criminal laws, all civil servants are public servants as defined in section 21 of the P.P.C., but not all such public servants are civil servants.

The definition of "public servant" as provided in section 21 of the P.P.C. is only for the purpose of application of the provisions of that substantive criminal law, as well as of the related procedural criminal law, the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898, and the extended definition of that term as given in Explanation of section 161 (which brings the employees of any corporation or other body or organisation set up, controlled or administered by, or under the authority of, the Federal Government, within the ambit of the term "public servant") is only for the purpose of application of that section and sections 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169 and 409 of the P.P.C. These definitions do not confer any civil status, capacity or position on the persons falling in the scope thereof. The reference to the definition of "public servant" as provided in a criminal law, the P.P.C., for claiming the civil status of being a government servant/officer is therefore misconceived.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The present case stems from a Notification dated 30.12.2015 ("Notification") issued by the Finance Division (Internal Finance Wing), with the concurrence of the Law Division, Government of Pakistan, whereby it has been clarified that National Bank of Pakistan ("NBP") is a body corporate and its employees are not "civil servants" nor have they been declared as "public servants" within the meaning of section 21 the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 ("P.P.C."). Pursuant to the said Notification, the Head Office of the NBP informed this legal position to all employees of the NBP through an Information Circular, dated 15.01.2016 ("Circular"), and asked the employees having passports with an entry of their occupation as a "Government Officer", to get changed the same immediately to prevent the liability of any offence under the Passports Act, 1974.

2. The petitioner, an employee of the NBP, challenged the said Notification and Circular in the Peshawar High Court through a writ petition, asserting that the employees of the NBP are government servants/officers as they fall within the scope of the definition of "public servant" provided in clause ninth of section 21 and Explanation of section 161 of the P.P.C. The High Court dismissed the writ petition, vide its judgment dated 01.10.2019 ("impugned judgment"), by holding that the NBP is a statutory body and its employees are not civil servants or government servants. The petitioner has sought leave to appeal against this judgment of the High Court, through the present petition.

3. We have heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the petitioner and examined the record of the case.

4. First of all, it would be appropriate to make it clear that the terms "civil servant" and "government servant", having almost the same meaning and scope, are commonly used interchangeably in the civil service laws of Pakistan.[1] The term "public servant" as defined in section 21 of the P.P.C. for the purpose of application of that law is, however, of wide import and scope than those terms. It cannot, therefore, be referred to or used as an equivalent or synonym of them, in the context of a person's civil status, capacity or position. In the ordinary English language, the words "civil servant" and "public servant" may have the same meaning, but this is not so in the legal language as commonly used in the laws of Pakistan. It may be said that in legal parlance, particularly of the service and criminal laws, all civil servants are public servants as defined in section 21 of the P.P.C., but not all such public servants are civil servants.

5. The definition of "public servant" as provided in section 21 of the P.P.C. is only for the purpose of application of the provisions of that substantive criminal law, as well as of the related procedural criminal law, the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and the extended definition of that term as given in Explanation of section 161 (which brings the employees of any corporation or other body or organisation set up, controlled or administered by, or under the authority of, the Federal Government, within the ambit of the term "public servant") is only for the purpose of application of that section and sections 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169 and 409 of the P.P.C.[2] These definitions do not confer any civil status, capacity or position on the persons falling in the scope thereof. In the present case, the matter relates to the civil status of the employees of the NBP to be mentioned in their passports, not to the application of certain provisions of the criminal laws to them or to the functions performed by them. The reference by the petitioner to the definition of "public servant" as provided in a criminal law, the P.P.C., for claiming the civil status of being a government servant/officer is therefore misconceived.[3] The NBP, as per section 3(2) of the National Bank of Pakistan Ordinance, 1949, is a body corporate, and its employees are employees of a statutory corporation, not of the Federal Government. They are therefore not "government servants" or "civil servants" as defined in the Civil Servants Act, 1973.[4]

6. We are cognizant of the legal position that the NBP, being a statutory corporation, is amenable to the writ jurisdiction of the High Courts under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973,[5] and its employees when are governed or proceeded against under the statutory rules can also avail the recourse to the writ jurisdiction for the redressal of their grievances in respect of their service matters.[6] However, this legal position does not merge the NBP, a separate juristic person, into the Federal Government, nor in any manner blur the distinction between NBP a Statutory Corporation and the Federal Government, a constitutional body or in any manner turn the employees of the NBP into the employees of the Federal Government.[7]

7. For the above reasons, we agree with the conclusion of the impugned judgment. The petition is meritless. It is, therefore, dismissed and the leave to appeal is declined.

----Arts. 4, 5 & 25---Civil service---Right to equality---Scope---Appointment---Eligibility criteria---Any unlawful act cannot be made a standard for enforcing the right to equality guaranteed by the Constitution---Any person aspiring for the appointment to a post has to pass the eligibility criteria prescribed in the relevant law for that post and cannot be absolved from fulfilling those criteria on the ground that some other person who was allowed to compete for or appointed to such post also did not meet the prescribed criteria.

Article 25 of the Constitution guarantees the equal protection of law, not the equal protection of lawlessness, by declaring that all citizens are equal before law and are entitled to equal protection of law. An unlawful act, therefore, cannot be made a standard for enforcing the right to equality guaranteed by the Constitution. One illegality cannot be allowed to be compounded by applying the right to equality. The extension of the right to equality to the acts done in violation of law would amount to perpetuating previous unlawful acts and motivating the commission of further illegalities. Article 25 of the Constitution has no application to a claim based upon other unlawful acts and illegalities. It comes into operation when some persons are granted a benefit in accordance with law but others, similarly placed and in similar circumstances, are denied that benefit. Such other persons cannot be discriminated against to deny the same benefit, in view of their right to equality before law and equal protection of law guaranteed by Article 25 of the Constitution. But where a person gains, or is granted, a benefit illegally, other persons cannot plead, nor can the court accept such a plea, that the same benefit must be allowed to them also in violation of law.

One wrongdoing cannot be permitted, defended or condoned by citing the example of another wrongdoing. If unlawful acts are allowed or acknowledged on the basis of the right to equality and non-discrimination, it would negate the rule of law mandated by Articles 4 and 5 of the Constitution. The one who wants the court to grant him the relief prayed for must base his claim on his own legal right, not on the wrongful gains of others. Any person aspiring for the appointment to a post has to pass the eligibility criteria prescribed in the relevant law for that post and cannot be absolved from fulfilling those criteria on the ground that some other person who was allowed to compete for or appointed to such post also did not meet the prescribed criteria.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioners seek leave to appeal against a consolidated judgment of the Federal Service Tribunal, dated 10.01.2020 ("impugned judgment"), whereby their appeals filed against the decisions of the departmental authority have been dismissed. The departmental authority had declined the petitioners' request for permission to appear in the departmental competitive exam for appointment to the posts of Assistant Superintendent.

2. Briefly, the facts of the case are that the petitioners, Muhammad Yasin and Mehboob Khan, are serving in the Pakistan Post Office Department as Clerk and Postmaster, respectively. They applied to the departmental authority for permission to appear in the departmental competitive exam for appointment to the posts of Assistant Superintendent, which was declined to them on the ground that they were above 45 years of age and as such were not eligible for appointment to the said post under the relevant rules. The petitioners made appeals in the Tribunal, which were dismissed by the impugned judgment. Hence, they have filed these petitions for leave to appeal.

3. The petitioners concede that as per the relevant rules, which prescribe the method, qualifications and other conditions for appointment to the posts of Assistant Superintendent, the officials applying for that appointment must not be more than 45 years of age on the last date fixed for receipt of the applications. Their only contention, before us, is that some other official was allowed to appear in an earlier exam for the same post, despite that he was also above 45 years of age at that time; therefore, they are entitled to equal treatment and same relief as per Article 25 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution").

4. We have considered the contention of the petitioners, read the relevant rules and examined the record of the case.

5. Article 25 of the Constitution guarantees the equal protection of law, not the equal protection of lawlessness, by declaring that all citizens are equal before law and are entitled to equal protection of law. An unlawful act, therefore, cannot be made a standard for enforcing the right to equality guaranteed by the Constitution. One illegality cannot be allowed to be compounded by applying the right to equality. The extension of the right to equality to the acts done in violation of law would amount to perpetuating previous unlawful acts and motivating the commission of further illegalities. Article 25 of the Constitution has no application to a claim based upon other unlawful acts and illegalities. It comes into operation when some persons are granted a benefit in accordance with law but others, similarly placed and in similar circumstances, are denied that benefit. Such other persons cannot be discriminated against to deny the same benefit, in view of their right to equality before law and equal protection of law guaranteed by Article 25 of the Constitution. But where a person gains, or is granted, a benefit illegally, other persons cannot plead, nor can the court accept such a plea, that the same benefit must be allowed to them also in violation of law.

6. If some other person ineligible for the appointment to the post of Assistant Superintendent, whose case is not before us, had been permitted to appear in an earlier exam for the said post in violation of law (the relevant rules), this fact does not confer any right on the petitioners to claim the similar permission by repeating the violation of law. As the proverb goes: "Two wrongs don't make a right". One wrongdoing cannot be permitted, defended or condoned by citing the example of another wrongdoing. If unlawful acts are allowed or acknowledged on the basis of the right to equality and non-discrimination, it would negate the rule of law mandated by Articles 4 and 5 of the Constitution. The one who wants the court to grant him the relief prayed for must base his claim on his own legal right, not on the wrongful gains of others. Any person aspiring for the appointment to a post has to pass the eligibility criteria prescribed in the relevant law for that post and cannot be absolved from fulfilling those criteria on the ground that some other person who was allowed to compete for or appointed to such post also did not meet the prescribed criteria. The petitioners, thus, cannot dispute the decision of the departmental authority, declining to them the permission sought, on the ground of their right to equal treatment and non-discrimination.

7. For the above reasons, we find that the contention of the petitioners is absolutely misconceived. The departmental authority and the Tribunal have correctly decided the present matter in accordance with law. These petitions are meritless; they are, therefore, dismissed and the leave to appeal, declined.

MWA/M-4/SC Petitions dismissed.

(b) National Disaster Management Act (XXIV of 2010)---

----Ss. 3(2)(p), 6, 8, 13 & 18---Flood management in Province of Sindh---Citizens Committee in every Taluka of flood affected Division---Said Committees were constituted on orders of the High Court with the direction that such Committees be headed by a Civil Judge and that the said committees work under the supervision of the concerned District and Sessions Judge---Constitutionality---Role assigned to the judicial officers of overseeing the work of the executive by heading the Citizens Committees essentially meant that the judicial officers were performing executive functions which was against the principle of separation of powers---Inclusion of the members of the District Judiciary in the said Committees was not required given that there was an entire legal framework under the National Disaster Management Act, 2010.

The issue before the Court essentially is the exercise of jurisdiction by the High Court while creating the citizens committees and placing judges from the District Judiciary on these committees to oversee the work, being done by the committees. The role assigned to the judicial officers of overseeing the work of the executive by heading the citizens committees essentially means that the judicial officers are performing executive functions which is against the principle of separation of powers. The Constitution does not contemplate assumption of functions by one organ that essentially belongs to another. Moreover planning and strategy, coordination, monitoring and implementation are the functions of the executive and is best left for them to fulfil their duty and obligations in this regard. Furthermore, the work of these committees is a fulltime job which will require the judicial officers to spend time on these committees which in turn take them away from their judicial work that is also not practical nor expedient.

The relevant law on the subject is the National Disaster Management Act, 2010 ('the Act'), which establishes a National Disaster Management Commission (Commission) for the purposes of policy making. This Commission not only lays down the policy on disaster management but also approves a National Plan and Guidelines to be followed by the Federal and Provincial authorities in the event of a natural disaster.

Formation of the citizens committees by the High Court, in principle, was to facilitate relief efforts in different areas within the Province, however, the inclusion of the members of the District Judiciary was not required given that there is an entire legal framework under the Act to ensure relief work right down to the district level. Supreme Court modified the impugned orders of the High Court to the extent that the Citizens Committee shall no more be headed by a Civil Judge notified by the District Judge concerned and the citizens committee shall no more work under the supervision of the concerned District and Sessions Judge.

(c) National Disaster Management Act (XXIV of 2010)---

----Ss. 3(2)(p), 6, 8, 13 & 18---Flood management in Province of Sindh---Citizens Committee in every Taluka of flood affected Division constituted on orders of the High Court---Participation of public and civil society in the National Disaster Management Authority (Authority), the Provincial Disaster Management Authority (PDMA), the District Disaster Management Authority (DDMA), and the National Disaster Management Commission (Commission)---Significance and benefits---Community participation is not only necessary for planning disaster management but also for implementing and monitoring purposes as it gives people the right to participate in the decisions that affect their lives; this creates more awareness and a sense of ownership and responsibility which is required, particularly in disaster management so to enhance effectiveness and engage the people with their communities to provide rescue, relief and rehabilitation efforts---Importance of inclusion of civil society in disaster management stated.

As per the scheme of the National Disaster Management Act, 2010, members of the civil community which include volunteers, NGOs, doctors and others can be made part of the Provincial and District Management Authorities to help relief efforts.

Participation by the public in the Provincial Disaster Management Authority (PDMA) and District Disaster Management Authority (DDMA) and even at the National Disaster Management Commission (Commission) level ensures that the flood affectees are able to bring first hand their vulnerabilities and priorities, which results in a more measured response and proper allocation of resources where required. It also gives the National Disaster Management Authority (Authority) greater insight into the affected communities enabling them to work more effectively and produce better result. Community participation is not only necessary for planning disaster management but also for implementing and monitoring purposes as it gives people the right to participate in the decisions that affect their lives. This creates more awareness and a sense of ownership and responsibility which is required, particularly in disaster management so to enhance effectiveness and engage the people with their communities to provide rescue, relief and rehabilitation efforts. Hence, citizens' participation in the PDMA and DDMA can improve coordination and response which will enable the government authorities to provide relief work in a more effective and efficient manner. It is fundamental to the composition of the Commission, the Authority, the PDMA and the DDMA that members of civil society are included in it.

To deal with the issue in hand, the Citizens Committees can work with DDMA to the extent of monitoring, coordination efforts and ensure that relief work reaches the affectees, who do not have sufficient assistance at the moment. The committees can also facilitate the PDMA and the DDMA of the Province in providing necessary information and data with reference to relief work and what is required which will improve the Authority's coordination with affected areas and communication with affected areas especially due to the challenges of accessibility and communication failure. The Citizens Committee can, therefore, monitor the efforts of the PDMA and the DDMA which will not only lead to better results in the relief work but will also create awareness within the affectees as to the manner in which the relief effort is being carried out and will encourage them to participate. This participatory approach to a natural disaster humanizes the work of the authorities so that affectees are provided with real time relief that they need and not what the paperwork suggests.

Supreme Court directed that the Citizens Committees shall oversee the work of the government authorities and provide necessary information and data to facilitate the work of the authorities; that the Citizens Committee itself shall not engage in directing or controlling the relief work being undertaken but shall participate in the process put in place by the DDMA to make it more effective and inclusive.

(d) National Disaster Management Act (XXIV of 2010)---

----Ss. 6, 8 & Chapts. III, IV---National Policy Guideline on Vulnerable Groups in Disasters 2014 (Policy Guidelines)---Flood management in Province of Sindh---Inclusion of women in disaster management, importance of---Citizens Committee in every Taluka of flood affected Division constituted on orders of the High Court---National Policy Guideline on Vulnerable Groups in Disasters 2014 (Policy Guidelines) requires the participation of women in disaster management plan at all levels to ensure integration of the gender perspective---Importance of inclusion of women in disaster management stated.

National Policy Guideline on Vulnerable Groups in Disasters 2014 (Policy Guidelines)requires the participation of women in disaster management plan at all levels to ensure integration of the gender perspective. As per the Policy Guidelines, women are at a greater risk from natural disasters than men. They are vulnerable and victims in natural disasters but also play a significant role throughout the disaster management cycle, without being adequately recognized and included in the decision making. Therefore, in line with the policies formulated, it is imperative that the citizens committees include women, older persons and persons with disabilities so that the required response is ensured and provided and that the Policy Guidelines formulated be implemented real time. In this context, the affected areas require maternity and healthcare for women so there is an increased need for female doctors, trainers and caretakers to attend to the health concerns. Women are often subjected to gender-based violence and harassment in times of such calamities, therefore safety and security concerns are also of significance for which appropriate response is also required. In this context, although the framework exists, an effort must go into ensuring that it actually functions and fulfils its mandate. Accordingly, the Citizens Committee should ensure the representation of the vulnerable groups, particularly of women, in order to strengthen its perspective.

Supreme Court directed that the Citizens Committees shall continue to operate with the given composition including that of vulnerable groups, particularly women for monitoring the relief work and provide necessary information to the District Disaster Management Authority (DDMA) to improve their efforts.

(e) National Disaster Management Act (XXIV of 2010)---

----Ss. 6(2)(g), 10(3)(a) & 17(3)(b)---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9 & 14---Climate change adaptation plan ---- Observations and directions recorded by the Supreme Court regarding importance of a climate change adaptation plan stated.

In view of the unprecedented damage (due to floods) and the likelihood of its recurrence, it is imperative that serious and practical efforts are undertaken for prevention and adaptation against such disasters induced by climate change. It is expected that existing policies or mechanisms catering to food insecurity etc. are mobilized as soon as possible and if no such policies or mechanisms exist, then the respective State functionaries should take urgent action to formulate such policies and create such mechanisms to prevent further exacerbation of the losses and damage already suffered due to the floods and for sustainable rehabilitation.

Climate justice was an important consideration at the 27th Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change ("COP27") which concluded with a significant and positive development through the formation of a loss and damage fund for climate-vulnerable developing countries. Soon funds will be allocated to countries that have suffered loss and damage due to climate change. It is high time to develop a mechanism for the allocation of these funds and the identification of key adaptation infrastructural projects that will help build national climate resilience, especially against floods in the years to come. It is expected that the Ministry of Climate Change, Government of Pakistan shall drive this initiative and frame a policy and set up a mechanism to effectively and efficiently utilize such funds. It is therefore essential that these global funds are invested in building national climate resilience so that climate induced disasters can be minimized.

Climate Change is perhaps the most serious threat to the fundamental rights of the people in Pakistan. In order to protect their right to life and above all their right to dignity under Articles 9 and 14 of the Constitution, a climate resilient adaptation plan including a detailed mechanism for utilization of financial support coming to Pakistan from the loss and damage fund, is the need of the hour. Having failed to learn from the past floods, as has become apparent from the magnitude of the destruction caused by the recent floods, it is pivotal that effective steps are taken to prevent such catastrophes in the future.

JUDGMENT

AYESHA A. MALIK, J.---The instant Civil Petition (C.P. No.943-K of 2022) along with connected Petitions impugns interim orders dated 01.09.2022 and 06.09.2022, passed by the High Court of Sindh, Bench at Sukkur and Circuit Court Larkana (High Court). The orders have been passed in petitions filed by the Respondents in relation to the relief work carried out by the Petitioners in the flood affected areas of Sindh, mainly Khairpur, Ghotki and Naushahro Feroze.

2. The Petitioners before the Court are the Province of Sindh and Director General, Provincial Disaster Management Authority (PDMA), amongst others, whose grievance against the impugned orders is that the Court has directed the relevant Commissioners to constitute a citizens committee in every Taluka of Sukkur Division, Larkana Division, Shaheed Benazirabad Division and Naushahro Feroze District and directed that such citizens committee be headed by a Civil Judge and that the said committees work under the supervision of the concerned District and Sessions Judge. The Petitioners are also aggrieved with the directions given that the citizens committees are to look after the affairs of the tent city. Mr. Hassan Akhtar, Advocate General Sindh, argued that the impugned orders have placed the Provincial and District administration, responsible for disaster management including the provision of relief work under the control of the citizens committees which are headed by Civil Judges. Consequently, the Court has exceeded its jurisdiction as it has directed judges to enter the domain of the executive by requiring them to oversee relief work. He adds that the orders were beyond the court's jurisdiction and have placed relief efforts in the hands of the citizens committee. He explained that the Petitioners are striving hard to ensure that adequate relief is provided to the affected areas and that any lapse or deficiencies in the same are not on account of negligence or ineffective management by the Petitioners but are due to vastness of the area which is affected by the flooding coupled with the lack of resources. He elaborates that access to these areas is also an issue as roads, railway lines, bridges have been damaged or destroyed and large parts of these areas are under water. Despite these challenges, he states, that best efforts are being made and that these committees will hamper progress. He explained that distribution of relief items to the calamity affected areas is the responsibility of the District Disaster Management Authority (DDMA) and the PDMA coordinates all relevant departments for actions required in response to the floods. As per the record of the Government of Sindh, there has been an unprecedented amount of rainfall in the month of July and August 2022 with 307% and 561% over and above the annual average, respectively. He stated that the recent spell of rain has impacted the entire Province of Sindh such that 30 districts are under water which has led to loss of infrastructure and resources and has brought about a humanitarian crisis. He further submits that there is a legal framework in place under the National Disaster Management Authority Act, 2010 (Act) whereby the PDMA and the DDMA are functional and are carrying out relief work. He added that as per notification dated 24.06.2014 issued by the Government of Sindh, Services, General Administration and Coordination Department, two representatives from the business community, three representatives from the civil society organisations and two representatives from the agriculture sector are nominated as members of the DDMA. Hence, he states, that civil society is already a part of the existing framework and so there was no reason to make a citizens committee.

3. On behalf of the Respondents, who are affectees of the calamity affected areas of districts of the Province of Sindh, it is stated that no relief work is being provided in their area, hence, petitions were filed seeking directions that the Petitioners take immediate action to provide food and shelter to the residents of the area and also to drain out the water from the lands of the Respondents so that they are able to inhabit and cultivate their lands once again. Discriminatory acts of the PDMA Sukkur have been highlighted by the Respondents; one of them, has also stated that the government hierarchy is only saving the lands of the political elite by diverting water towards the villagers' land; that half of the draining disposal machines are out of order; that proper evaluation of loss of the affected areas is also required for rehabilitation purposes. Ghulam Shabbir, Advocate High Court, one of the residents of Dadu District, has filed C.M.A. No.7960 of 2022 for impleading him as party to bring on record the destruction of his district and failure of the government in its rehabilitation. He adds that there is no presence of the PDMA or the DDMA in his district despite the fact they have prepared documents relating to contingency plan and disaster management plan yet nothing has been implemented in this area.

4. Mr. Faisal Siddiqui, ASC was appointed as amicus curiae by the Court vide order dated 05.10.2022 to assist on the issue of the courts' jurisdiction to establish citizens committee. He has submitted his report and argued that the issue raised by the Petitioners is the role assigned to judicial officers in the impugned orders and the controlling powers given to the District and Sessions Judge to supervise the citizens committees as well as the work of the tent city/relief camp. He states that the courts are always reluctant to interfere in ad interim orders except in exceptional circumstances. As per his opinion, the citizens committees are in the nature of commissions which this Court has established as was seen in cases reported as Marvi Memon v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2011 SC 854) where a commission was established, following the floods of 2010, for fact finding and submitting recommendations for relief efforts; Petition regarding miserable condition of the schools: in re C.P. No.37 of 2012 (2013 SCMR 764) where multiple commissions were established to carry out surveys of school functioning for fact finding purposes in order to assess the conditions and workings of the said schools; Dr. Akmal Saleemi and others v. Federal Government and others (2013 SCMR 103) where a commission was established for fact finding in a matter concerning extra judicial killings in the premises of Lal Masjid and Jamia Hafsa; and Suo Motu Case No.16 of 2011 along with C.M.As. (PLD 2013 SC 443) where a commission was constituted for fact finding purposes in order to assess if the lease agreements were legally sound. He stated that commissions are used for fact finding purposes, for putting together technical experts and also to propose sustainable solutions in environmental issues. He stated that commissions help build capacity to deal with extraordinary circumstances, as in the present case, and it will only facilitate relief work and not hamper it. He further stated that the directions of this Court vide its order dated 05.10.2022 requiring the citizens committee to continue their oversight of relief work should continue both with reference to relief efforts and the management of the tent cities as doing so will not only improve coordination efforts in this time of crisis but will also ensure that the ground-level issues are raised before the relevant authorities.

5. We have heard all parties at length. The orders impugned are interim orders and this Court normally does not interfere with the interim orders of the High Court except in exceptional circumstances, as held in the cases reported as Federation of Pakistan through Secretary, Ministry of Energy (Power Division), Islamabad and others v. Shafiq ul Hassan and others [2021 PLC (C.S.) 292] and Dossani Travels Pvt. Ltd and others v. Messrs Travels Shop (Pvt.) Ltd. and others (PLD 2014 SC 1). Without a doubt, it is noted that, these are exceptional circumstances. While the interim orders exceed the jurisdiction of the Court to the extent of the role assigned to the judicial officers, the plight of the affectees of the 2022 floods needs attention in order to meet the needs of the flood affected population in Sindh. The biggest hindrance appears to be coordination and time frames for relief work as notwithstanding efforts made, it is neither sufficient nor is it effectively managed. The issue before the Court essentially is the exercise of jurisdiction by the High Court while creating the citizens committees and placing judges from the District Judiciary on these committees to oversee the work, being done by the committees. The role assigned to the judicial officers of overseeing the work of the executive by heading the citizens committees essentially means that the judicial officers are performing executive functions which is against the principle of separation of powers. The Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 does not contemplate assumption of functions by one organ that essentially belongs to another. Moreover planning and strategy, coordination, monitoring and implementation are the functions of the executive and is best left for them to fulfil their duty and obligations in this regard. Furthermore, the work of these committees is a fulltime job which will require the judicial officers to spend time on these committees which in turn take them away from their judicial work that is also not practical nor expedient.

6. We are informed that the relevant law on the subject is the Act, which establishes a National Disaster Management Commission (Commission) for the purposes of policy making. This Commission not only lays down the policy on disaster management but also approves a National Plan and Guidelines to be followed by the Federal and Provincial authorities in the event of a natural disaster. The Act also establishes a National Disaster Management Authority (NDMA) which is responsible for implementing, co-ordinating and monitoring the National Plan and Policy. As per section 13 of the Act, a Provincial Disaster Management Commission (PDMC) is established in each of the provinces, which lays down the Provincial Disaster Management Policy and also establishes the PDMA for the implementation, co-ordination and monitoring of the national as well as provincial plan in the event of a natural disaster. Section 18 of the Act constitutes the DDMA which works at the district level and is responsible for the preparation of Disaster Management Plan for the district, as well as implementing, coordinating and monitoring the National, Provincial and District plans at the district level. As per the powers and functions of the DDMA, they are required to provide relief to the community in response to any disaster, which includes shelter, food, drinking water and essential provisions, healthcare and services. They are also required to establish emergency communication systems and carry out relief efforts along with rescue operations in the area. Subsequent to the creation of the NDMA, a National Disaster Risk Reduction Policy was passed in 2013, which seeks to reduce vulnerabilities and increase resilience in the event of a natural disaster. It also provides guidelines for timely intervention and for reducing disaster risk. Additionally, a Disaster Management Strategy (2015 to 2022) was framed and a National Policy Guideline on Vulnerable Groups in Disasters 2014 (Policy Guidelines) was framed which stresses on the importance of dealing with vulnerable members of the community in the face of a natural disaster.

7. Despite the legal framework formed under the Act, the real issue is the lack of coordination and information with respect to the relief efforts being made by the Petitioners. It was argued before us that there are many parts of the Province of Sindh where relief efforts have not reached and where there is no food or drinkable water, nor any health care. Some of the causes of concern voiced by the Respondents was that roads, drainage, irrigation systems and sanitation systems are damaged or destroyed by the heavy rains and flooding. The supply of provisions and drinkable water is not enough; families have been evacuated but face diseases in the tent cities such as dengue, malaria and gastroenteritis. The Petitioners have admitted that there is difficulty not only on account of accessibility but also on account of resources including human resources to deal with the unprecedented floods. In this background, we find that the formation of the citizens committees by the High Court, in principle, was to facilitate relief efforts in different areas within the Province of Sindh, however, the inclusion of the members of the District Judiciary was not required given that there is an entire legal framework under the Act to ensure relief work right down to the district level. As per the scheme of the Act, members of the civil community which include volunteers, NGOs, doctors and others can be made part of the Provincial and District Management Authorities to help relief efforts. The record shows that they have been included in the DDMA vide notification dated 24.06.2014, however, there is no information on whether they actually participated. Section 3(2)(p) of the Act provides that National Commission shall also consist of representatives of civil society or any person appointed by the Prime Minister. As this is the policy making body, the inclusion of members of civil society on this Commission is imperative because for effective and efficient disaster management the inclusion of people likely to be affected is necessary not only for coordination, data collection and creating awareness but also to combine the efforts of the community and the authority in the event of a natural disaster. This gives civil society an opportunity to become part of the implementation, co-ordination and monitoring plan which only makes the work of the authority more effective. The Act also provides under Section 8 that the NDMA shall consist of members as may be prescribed by its chairperson. This Authority is headed by the Prime Minister, who can include any member as he deems appropriate. Similarly, at the provincial as well as the district level, the Act provides in its sections 13 and 15 that members to the PDMA and DDMA may be nominated by the Chief Minister and by the District Authority to include any member as they deem appropriate. Under these provisions, members of civil society can be included not only on the Commission but also in the Authorities to ensure that relief work is carried out where required and to help in mitigating the effects of the natural disaster as well as work on rehabilitation of the affectees. Hence, inclusion of civil society is necessary.

8. These are unprecedented times, as per the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, more than 33 million people have been affected by the floods of which 14.5 million are in Sindh alone (ECHO Daily Flash of 25 October 2022 - Pakistan). Furthermore, despite the fact that the Act has provided its framework since 2010, the efficiency and effectiveness of the PDMA and DDMA is questioned by affectees. There is merit in this argument as there appears to be no monitoring system in place. In this context, participation by the public in the PDMA and DDMA and even at the Commission level ensures that the affectees are able to bring first hand their vulnerabilities and priorities, which results in a more measured response and proper allocation of resources where required. It also gives the Authority greater insight into the affected communities enabling them to work more effectively and produce better result. Community participation is not only necessary for planning disaster management but also for implementing and monitoring purposes as it gives people the right to participate in the decisions that affect their lives. This creates more awareness and a sense of ownership and responsibility which is required, particularly in disaster management so to enhance effectiveness and engage the people with their communities to provide rescue, relief and rehabilitation efforts. Hence, citizens' participation in the PDMA and DDMA can improve coordination and response which will enable the government authorities to provide relief work in a more effective and efficient manner. Moving forward, it is fundamental to the composition of the Commission, the NDMA, the PDMA and the DDMA that members of civil society are included in it.

9. At present to deal with the issue in hand, the citizens committees can work with DDMA to the extent of monitoring, coordination efforts and ensure that relief work reaches the affectees, who do not have sufficient assistance at the moment. The committees can also facilitate the PDMA and the DDMA of Sindh in providing necessary information and data with reference to relief work and what is required which will improve the Authorities' coordination with affected areas and communication with affected areas especially due to the challenges of accessibility and communication failure. The citizens committee can, therefore, monitor the efforts of the PDMA and the DDMA which will not only lead to better results in the relief work but will also create awareness within the affectees as to the manner in which the relief effort is being carried out will encourage them to participate. This participatory approach to a natural disaster humanizes the work of the authorities so that affectees are provided with real time relief that they need and not what the paperwork suggests.

10. In this regard, we also note that the impugned orders have directed that the citizens committees should comprise of medical superintendents of the Taluka Hospital, Mukhtiarkar, focal person of PDMA and the President of the Taluka Bar Association. In this context, we find that the Policy Guidelines requires the participation of women in disaster management plan at all levels to ensure integration of the gender perspective. As per the Policy Guidelines, women are at a greater risk from natural disasters than men. They are vulnerable and victims in natural disasters but also play a significant role throughout the disaster management cycle, without being adequately recognized and included in the decision making. The Policy Guidelines also emphasizes on ensuring equal access to relief opportunities for victims without any discrimination which requires the needs of vulnerable groups to be targeted to ensure that their needs are attended, safeguarded and protected. As per the Policy Guidelines, women, children, older persons, persons with disabilities are all defined as vulnerable groups in disaster. The NDMA and National Disaster Risk Reduction Policy all emphasize on reducing risks and vulnerabilities of those who are marginalized which include women, children, older person, persons with disabilities and minorities, however, there is no report available on the actual efforts made during the last six months. A National Gender and Child cell framework was also formulated in 2013 to work towards the disaster preparedness and disaster risk reduction for which again there is no information on its working in the 2022 floods. Therefore, in line with the policies formulated, it is imperative that the citizens committees include women, older persons and persons with disabilities so that the required response is ensured and provided and that the Policy Guidelines formulated be implemented real time. In this context, we note that the affected areas require maternity and healthcare for women so there is an increased need for female doctors, trainers and caretakers to attend to the health concerns. Women are often subjected to gender-based violence and harassment in times of such calamities, therefore safety and security concerns are also of significance for which appropriate response is also required. In this context, although the framework exists, an effort must go into ensuring that it actually functions and fulfils its mandate. Accordingly, we find that the citizens committee should ensure the representation of the vulnerable groups, particularly of women, in order to strengthen its perspective.

11. In view of the aforesaid, the impugned orders are modified to the extent that the citizens committee shall no more be headed by a Civil Judge notified by the District Judge concerned and the citizens committee shall no more work under the supervision of the concerned District and Sessions Judge. However, the citizens committees shall continue to operate with the given composition including that of vulnerable groups, particularly women for monitoring the relief work and provide necessary information to the DDMA to improve their efforts. Furthermore, the direction given in the impugned orders that the citizens committee shall look after the affairs of tent cities is modified in the manner that the citizens committees shall oversee the work of the government authorities and provide necessary information and data to facilitate the work of the authorities. In this regard, we clarify that the citizens committee itself shall not engage in directing or controlling the relief work being undertaken but shall participate in the process put in place by DDMA to make it more effective and inclusive. The requirement of filing reports before the High Court by the PDMA and DDMA with respect to the work and progress of the relief work shall be filed bi-weekly to ensure efficiency. Further, the requirement of filing reports before this Court with respect to the composition of the citizens committee shall be filed within three weeks to ensure necessary compliance.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---I have read the judgment authored by my learned colleague, Mrs. Justice Ayesha A. Malik and I am in complete agreement with the same. However, I would be remiss if the dimension of climate change is not highlighted in the backdrop of the recent floods. Climate change is undoubtedly the most serious existential threat faced by Pakistan and the major cause of the recent floods. Therefore, any post-floods strategy must first and foremost propose a national strategy to deal with climate change today and tomorrow. The primary responsibility falls on the shoulders of the Ministry of Climate Change, Government of Pakistan, as well as, the National Disaster Management Authority (NDMA) to propose a national adaptation plan to avert the horrific devastation caused by floods this year and also to safeguard and protect the fundamental rights of the people from the wrath of climate change. I, therefore, feel compelled to append this additional note in public and national interest.

2. Pakistan was ranked in the top 10 most vulnerable countries on the "Global Climate Risk Index 2021"[1] and the devastation caused by the recent floods in 2022 is distressing proof of the same. Research has found that the 5-day maximum rainfall over Sindh and Balochistan (Provinces of Pakistan) had become 75% more intense than it would have been had the climate not warmed by 1.2 C, thereby directly connecting global warming to be a major cause of the recent floods of 2022 and the likelihood of its recurrence in the years to come[2]. The probability of such heatwaves has now substantially increased due to climate change, with future heatwaves being even more hotter compared to 2022[3], therefore, chances of similar extreme rainfall have also become more likely. According to the "Pakistan Floods 2022 Post-Disaster Needs Assessment" prepared by the Ministry of Planning Development and Special Initiatives, Government of Pakistan with the assistance of other international bodies such as the World Bank etc., the total damage from the floods is evaluated to be at PKR 3.2 trillion (US$14.9 billion), total loss at PKR 3.3 trillion (US$15.2 billion), and total needs for recovery and reconstruction at PKR 3.5 trillion (US$16.3 billion)[4]. The resulting food and health insecurity, the risk of food shortage and diseases pose challenges that need serious and urgent attention[5]. In view of this unprecedented damage and the likelihood of its recurrence, it is imperative that serious and practical efforts are undertaken for prevention and adaptation against such disasters induced by climate change. It is also expected that existing policies or mechanisms catering to food insecurity etc. are mobilized as soon as possible and if no such policies or mechanisms exist, then the respective State functionaries should take urgent action to formulate such policies and create such mechanisms to prevent further exacerbation of the losses and damage already suffered due to the floods and for sustainable rehabilitation.

3. The existing climate change framework of Pakistan indicates that the Ministry of Climate Change, Government of Pakistan has formulated a National Climate Change Policy, updated in 2021, devising policy measures for climate change adaptation and mitigation. Furthermore, the Climate Change Act of 2017 ("Climate Change Act") has established the Pakistan Climate Change Council and the Pakistan Climate Change Authority. The latter has been empowered to formulate adaptation and mitigation policies, plans etc., including the National Adaptation Plan, which the former shall approve and monitor. However, it seems that no substantial policies or plans have been formulated or implemented under the Climate Change Act. It is apparent that the measures in place are insufficient to cater to rapidly changing climate and its dire effects, therefore, there is a need for a coordinated joint effort in this regard. The National Disaster Management Act, 2010 ("Act") itself does not expressly cater to climate change, nonetheless, the Act does provide for taking measures for prevention of disasters and mitigation. Section 6(2)(g) of the Act provides that the National Disaster Management Commission ("Commission") may 'take such other measures for the prevention of disaster or the mitigation or for preparedness as it may consider necessary'. Prevention and mitigation have also been provided under provisions stipulating powers and functions of the Provincial Disaster Management Commission, the Provincial Disaster Management Authority and the District Disaster Management Authority established under the Act. Similarly, section 10(3)(a) stipulates that the National Plan shall include 'measures to be taken for the prevention of disasters or the mitigation of their effects' and section 17(3)(b) of the Act stipulates that the Provincial Plan shall include "the measures to be adopted for prevention and mitigation of disasters". Although the National Disaster Management Plan, 2012 does refer to the increase in climate-related natural disasters, however, it falls short of devising any meaningful steps/directions to suggest adaptation measures to address and guard against the changing climate. Similarly, one of the policy objectives of the National Disaster Risk Reduction Policy, 2013 includes promoting development planning that considers and addresses risks alongside environmental and climate change concerns but there appears to be no plan or strategy on the ground that has been formulated and put out in the public domain that deals with adaptation measures to be taken by the Government or the respective authorities in order to ensure that the floods of 2022 are not repeated next year. The rehabilitation work has to be climate resilient and it must be a part of a master adaptation plan. The Pakistan Climate Crises Charter 2022 ("Charter") published by the WWF provides a roadmap with the following actions:

i. Advocate for loss and damage financing internationally
ii. Address institutional governance issues
iii. Develop an effective local government system
iv. Map climate risks and vulnerabilities
v. Prioritize and mainstream local level adaptation
vi. Incorporate nature-based solutions in the development paradigm
vii. Address vulnerabilities in disadvantaged communities viii. Mainstream crisis response across local communities
ix. Address population management concerns

The said Charter has been prepared in consultation with some of the following:-

a) National Disaster Risk Management Fund
b) Ministry of Planning, Development and Special Initiatives
c) Ministry of Climate Change
d) Pakistan Council for Research in Water Resources
e) Centre for Disaster Management, University of Management and Technology, Lahore
f) Population Council
g) International Union for Conservation of Nature (Pakistan)
h) World Wide Fund for Nature Pakistan
i) Sustainable Development Policy Institute
j) International Water Management Institute

k) Global Water Partnership

l) Pakistan Academy of Sciences

m) Sustainable Development Policy Institute

n) Global Change Impact Studies Centre

Yet there is no policy or directive from the concerned Ministry supporting the said Charter or moving in this direction.

4. Climate justice was an important consideration at the recent 27th Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change ("COP27") which concluded with a significant and positive development through the formation of a loss and damage fund for climate-vulnerable developing countries[6]. Soon funds will be allocated to countries that have suffered loss and damage due to climate change. It is high time to develop a mechanism for the allocation of these funds and the identification of key adaptation infrastructural projects that will help build national climate resilience, especially against floods in the years to come. It is expected that the Ministry of Climate Change, Government of Pakistan shall drive this initiative and frame a policy and set up a mechanism to effectively and efficiently utilize such funds. Additionally, under section 11 of the Act, subject to the directions of the Commission, the National Disaster Management Authority ("NDMA") is to lay down guidelines for minimum standards of relief to be provided to persons affected by disaster. The NDMA has formulated guidelines under this provision, such as the NDMA Guidelines for Minimum Ex-Gratia Assistance to the Persons Affected by Natural and Man-Made Disasters, 2016, and State functionaries, while operating under the said guidelines, are expected to promptly formulate a mechanism for provisioning of immediate relief to persons affected by climate-related disasters. It is therefore essential that these global funds are invested in building national climate resilience so that climate induced disasters can be minimized. Climate Change is a perhaps the most serious threat to the fundamental rights of the people in Pakistan. In order to protect their right to life and above all their right to dignity under Articles 9 and 14 of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973, a climate resilient adaptation plan including a detailed mechanism for utilization of financial support coming to Pakistan from the loss and damage fund, is the need of the hour. Having failed to learn from the floods in 2010, as has become apparent from the magnitude of the destruction caused by the recent floods, it is pivotal that effective steps are taken to prevent such catastrophes in the future. I hope the Federal Government will act with speed in this regard because in the words of Greta Thunberg,[7] "our house is on fire."

Date of hearing: 19th January, 2023.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The civil revision filed by the petitioner before the High Court was dismissed for non- prosecution on 30.03.2019. The petitioner filed an application for restoration of the said revision on 15.10.2019. The said application was dismissed by the High Court through the impugned order dated 29.09.2020 passed in C.Ms. Nos.1 and 2 of 2019 on the ground that it was barred by time.

2. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record of the case. The application for restoration of the civil revision of the petitioner was dismissed on the basis of Article 168 (mistakenly mentioned in the impugned order as Article 169) of the Third Division of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, 1908 ("The Act"), which provides for a period of thirty days for maintaining such an application in case of an appeal. Perusal of the First Schedule of the Act reveals that Article 163 deals with application for restoration of the suits dismissed for non-prosecution and provides for a period of thirty days from the date of dismissal for filing such an application, while Article 168 provides for readmission of an appeal dismissed for want of prosecution and provides a period of limitation of thirty days from the date of dismissal for filing an application for restoration. There is, however, no specific article, which deals with the application for restoration of civil revision dismissed in default, therefore, reliance has to be placed on Article 181 of the First Schedule to the Act, which provides that for an application for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the Schedule the period of limitation is three years from the date when the right to apply accrues. In the present case Article 181 is attracted and a period of three years is available to the petitioner to make an application for restoration of the civil revision. See Ghulam Qadir and others v. Sh. Abdul Wadood and others (PLD 2016 SC 712).

3. In this background of the matter, the impugned order is set aside. This petition is converted into appeal and allowed.

4. We, however, express our concern that for applications for restoration of a suit and an appeal, the period of limitation under the Act is 30 days, whereas the period for filing an application for restoration of a civil revision is three years. The logic for such differentiation is not clear and may be taken up in some appropriate case for consideration as this distinction has not been questioned in the instant case.

Date of hearing: 26th January, 2023.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Respondent No.1 through a constitutional petition challenged the initiation of inquiry against him on the charges of which he already stood exonerated in three previous inquiries. He contended before the High Court that the Chief Minister's Inspection Team has no authority to initiate the said inquiry against him. On the basis of these submissions the High Court issued notices to other side and granted interim relief to respondent No.1 on 03.1.2020 to the effect that no adverse orders be passed against him. The said interim relief was further extended vide order dated 04.2.2020.

2. It is the settled policy of this Court not to readily interfere in the interim orders passed by the High Court. It is desirable that the court hearing the case finally decides the same before it is brought before this court as piecemeal adjudication is not desirable. The only exception is when the interim relief granted by the High Court is arbitrary or unreasonable or reflects abuse of power or wanton exercise of discretion resulting in miscarriage of justice[1]. We have examined the impugned interim order and find that it does not suffer from any grave illegality or abuse of process or gross injustice. We are, therefore, not inclined to interfere in the impugned order. Accordingly, this petition is dismissed and leave refused.

(b) Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----S. 107---Convention between the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and the Kingdom of Denmark for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income, Art. 8---Convention between the Kingdom of Belgium and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income, Art. 8---Income arising from container detention charges ("CDC"), container service charges ("CSC") and terminal handling charges ("THC")---Such income falls within the category of "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic" in the context of double taxation conventions concluded between Pakistan and Denmark, as well as between Pakistan and Belgium.

The Commentary on Article 8 of the OECD Model Convention ("OECD MC") provides guidance about qualifying activities and related profits with respect to income falling under the head of "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic". The expression "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic" also covers profits from activities directly connected with such operations as well as profits from activities which are not directly connected with the operation of the enterprise's ship in international traffic as long as they are ancillary to such operation – activities that the enterprise does not need to carry on for the purposes of its own operation of ships in international traffic but which make a minor contribution relative to such operation and are so closely related to such operation that they should not be regarded as a separate business or source of income of the enterprise should be considered to be ancillary to the operation of ships in international traffic.

The objective scope of Article 8 of the OECD MC and the UN Model Convention ("UN MC") with its reference to "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic" covers not only profits directly obtained by the enterprise from the transportation of passengers or cargo by ships that it operates in international traffic, but also, profits from activities directly connected with such operations as well as profits from activities which are not directly connected with the operation of the enterprise's ships in international traffic as long as they are ancillary to such operation. Activities are to be considered ancillary to the operation of ships in international traffic if (i) the enterprise does not need to undertake them for the purposes of its own operation of ships in international traffic but which otherwise (ii) make a minor contribution relative to such operation and (iii) are so closely related to such operation that they should not be regarded as a separate business or source of income. Article 8 OECD and UN MC therefore applies not only to profits directly obtained in international traffic e.g. transport of passengers or cargo, sales of tickets of the enterprise, leasing of ships, but also to profits directly connected with international traffic and to profits ancillary to international traffic e.g. inland transport, interest, code sharing and slot chartering, haulage services and catering services, provision of goods and services to other enterprises, sales of tickets on behalf of other enterprises, advertising on behalf of other enterprises, letting of immovable property, rental of containers.

Georg Kofler, in Reimer and Rust (eds), Klaus Vogel on Double Taxation Conventions (5th edn 2021) vol 1, art 8, paras 33, 35 ref.

Profits arising from short-term storage of containers or from detention charges for the late return of containers, are covered within the purview of “profits from the operation of ships in international traffic”. Further, special remuneration for services ancillary to container operations are covered within the ambit of shipping income from international traffic. Income derived from services provided for cargo handling is also considered part of shipping income from international traffic when directly connected or ancillary to the operation of ships in international traffic.Thus, profits arising from container detention charges (“CDC”), container service charges (“CSC”) and terminal handling charges (“THC”) are connected with and ancillary to the operation of ships in international traffic. Consequently, these profits squarely fall within the purview of the expression “profits from the operation of ships in international traffic”. Therefore, CDC, CSC, and THC collected by the respondents (non-resident cargo shipping companies incorporated in Denmark and Belgium) are part of the revenue earned in shipping in international traffic and are to be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of the Pakistan-Denmark Double Taxation Convention and the Pakistan-Belgium Double Taxation Convention, as the case may be.

Dr. Shahnawaz, Advocate Supreme Court and Abdul Wahid, Addl. Commissioner, FBR for Petitioner (in all cases).

Khalid Javed Khan, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents (Through V.L. Karachi Registry) (In all cases).

Date of hearing: 12th January, 2024.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question before us is whether income arising from container detention charges ("CDC"), container service charges ("CSC") and terminal handling charges ("THC") falls within the category of "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic" in the context of double taxation conventions concluded between Pakistan and Denmark, as well as between Pakistan and Belgium.

2. The respondents are non-resident companies, one incorporated in Denmark and the other in Belgium. They are involved in cargo shipping activities, conducting their business operations within Pakistan through the authorized agent, M/s Maersk Pakistan (Private) Limited. The respondents filed income tax returns, accounting for income derived from freight charges, CDC, CSC and THC. They claimed entitlement to tax benefits under Article 8 of the Convention between the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and the Kingdom of Denmark for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income ("Pakistan-Denmark Convention"), and similarly, under Article 8 of the Convention between the Kingdom of Belgium and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income ("Pakistan-Belgium Convention"), as the case may be.

3. The Deputy Commissioner Inland Revenue disagreed with the aforementioned assessment, asserting that CDC, CSC, and THC were not eligible under the beneficial provisions of the Pakistan-Denmark Convention and the Pakistan-Belgium Convention. The Deputy Commissioner reasoned that these charges were not explicitly covered under Article 8 of either Convention, which addresses beneficial taxation in relation to "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic". The respondents remained unsuccessful both in the appeal before the Commissioner Inland Revenue (Appeals) and in the subsequent appeal before the Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue. Nevertheless, the High Court, in its decision given in Income Tax References filed by the respondents, concluded that profits arising from CDC, CSC, and THC fell within the scope of the term "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic" as stipulated in Article 8 of the two Conventions. Consequently, such profits were deemed eligible for the benefit of favourable taxation. The Department is now seeking leave to appeal the High Court's determination, challenging the inclusion of CDC, CSC, and THC under the umbrella of "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic" and their eligibility for beneficial taxation envisaged in Article 8 of the two Conventions.

4. We have heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties and have carefully gone through the record.

5. The respondents, being tax residents of Denmark and Belgium, are entitled to the benefits and concessions under the Pakistan-Denmark Convention and the Pakistan-Belgium Convention, as the case may be, in line with the provisions of Section 107 of the Income Tax Ordinance 2001 ("Ordinance"). Under subsection 2(c) of Section 107 of the Ordinance, the taxability of the respondents' income is to be determined under the provisions contained in the two Conventions which override the Ordinance. These Conventions provide for allocation of taxing jurisdiction to the contracting States in respect of different heads of income. With respect to the income falling under the head of "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic" which is dealt with under Article 8 in both the Conventions, the allocation of jurisdiction to the contracting States is not identical. The Pakistan-Belgium Convention assigns the sole right to tax profits from operating ships in international traffic to the residence State. In contrast, the Pakistan-Denmark Convention permits the source State to tax these profits, but only to the extent derived from sources within that State, in accordance with its domestic law. However, this difference is not relevant for the purposes of the dispute before us. The issue before us, common to both the Conventions, relates to the nature of profits arising from CDC, CSC, and THC: whether these profits fall within the scope of the term "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic" or not. If this question is decided in the affirmative, the respondents' profits resulting from CDC, CSC, and THC will be subjected to taxing provisions contained in Article 8 of the respective Conventions. Otherwise, profits resulting from CDC, CSC, and THC will not be considered as shipping income eligible to be dealt with under Article 8 of the two Conventions.

6. Notably, the matter at hand involves the interpretation of international tax conventions. Recently, this Court in Snamprogetti[1] emphasized the distinctiveness of international tax treaties, their specific interpretive framework, and the importance of equitable outcomes in cross-border taxation. International tax treaties, conventions or agreements, given their unique nature, as held in Snamprogetti, require a distinct interpretive approach compared to the one used while interpreting domestic legislation. These agreements being international treaties are governed by the rules of interpretation outlined in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. Tax treaties differ from domestic tax laws in language, application, and purpose. These treaties are relieving in nature and seek to avoid double taxation, while domestic tax law imposes tax in specific situations. Tax treaties require a broad purposive interpretation, and their interpretation may be more liberal than domestic law. Treaty interpretation is a separate subject from statutory interpretation, accentuating the need to interpret tax treaties independently of domestic law. The role of a State in a bilateral agreement is more of implementing the terms of such agreement rather than that of interpreting the same and that too in a unilateral manner. Given that the primary purpose of tax treaties is to avoid and relieve double taxation through equitable and acceptable distribution of tax claims between the countries, it is important that the provisions of these treaties are interpreted in a common and workable manner, taking into account international tax language, legal decisions of other countries, model treaties[2], along with their commentaries, developed by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development ("OECD")[3] and the United Nations ("UN")[4], and scholarly academic works where appropriate.

7. We see that the operation of ships in international traffic has been given special tax treatment in Pakistan-Denmark Convention and the Pakistan-Belgium Convention in accord with the OECD Model Convention ("OECD MC") and the UN Model Convention ("UN MC"). The general policy underlying the special rule for international shipping and the deviation from the allocation of taxing rights based on the permanent establishment principle has its roots at the very beginning of tax treaty law. Maritime shipping was viewed as an activity that warrants a special rule. Having regard to the distinct nature of activities carried on by shipping (air transport was also added to this category later) entities which operate across different routes spread across several countries and the complexity of apportioning profits arising from such business across numerous countries, it was felt that general provisions dealing with business profits would result in taxation of fragmented profits in numerous countries, thereby possibly leading to double taxation. Accordingly, it was considered necessary to introduce a separate provision in the OECD MC, and also in the UN MC, to specifically deal with profits from operations of shipping and air transport business in international traffic. The provision relating to shipping and air transport takes precedence over the general rule relating to business profits and the permanent establishment principle is not applied to profits falling within its scope of application i.e. profits arising from the operation of ships and aircraft in international traffic. More importantly, this provision also takes into account the fact that shipping and air transport enterprises invariably carry on a large variety of activities to permit, facilitate or support their international traffic operations.[5]

8. The issue before us pertains to the characterization of income arising from CDC, CSC, and THC. Let us have a look at the meaning of CDC, CSC, and THC in order to understand the nature of these incomes. The High Court has observed, and there exists no contention between the parties on this point, that CDC is the amount collected on account of rent of container, which is charged if a customer holds the said container beyond the stipulated time required to discharge the goods at the intended port of disembarkation; CSC is collected by shipping lines on account of services in respect of containers which may be required due to discharge of goods at the destination; and THC is collected by shipping lines on account of terminal charges incurred at the port of disembarkation. With this understanding of the aforementioned sources of income viz. CDC, CSC and THC, we proceed to examine whether such income aligns with the expression "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic".

9. The Commentary on Article 8 of the OECD MC provides guidance about qualifying activities and related profits with respect to income falling under the head of "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic". It provides that the profits covered consist in the first place of the profits directly obtained by the enterprise from the transportation of passengers or cargo by ships that it operates in international traffic such as any activity carried on primarily in connection with the transportation, by the enterprise, of passengers or cargo by ships that it operates in international traffic. It is then recognized that with the evolution of international transport, shipping enterprises invariably carry on a large variety of activities to permit, facilitate or support their international traffic operations. The expression "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic" therefore also covers profits from activities directly connected with such operations as well as profits from activities which are not directly connected with the operation of the enterprise's ship in international traffic as long as they are ancillary to such operation - activities that the enterprise does not need to carry on for the purposes of its own operation of ships in international traffic but which make a minor contribution relative to such operation and are so closely related to such operation that they should not be regarded as a separate business or source of income of the enterprise should be considered to be ancillary to the operation of ships in international traffic.[6] We also note that since 2017, the UN MC Commentary fully reproduces the OECD guidance.

10. The objective scope of Article 8 of the OECD MC and the UN MC with its reference to "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic" covers not only profits directly obtained by the enterprise from the transportation of passengers or cargo by ships that it operates in international traffic, but also, profits from activities directly connected with such operations as well as profits from activities which are not directly connected with the operation of the enterprise's ships in international traffic as long as they are ancillary to such operation. Activities are to be considered ancillary to the operation of ships in international traffic if (i) the enterprise does not need to undertake them for the purposes of its own operation of ships in international traffic but which otherwise (ii) make a minor contribution relative to such operation and (iii) are so closely related to such operation that they should not be regarded as a separate business or source of income. Article 8 OECD and UN MC therefore applies not only to profits directly obtained in international traffic e.g. transport of passengers or cargo, sales of tickets of the enterprise, leasing of ships, but also to profits directly connected with international traffic and to profits ancillary to international traffic e.g. inland transport, interest, code sharing and slot chartering, haulage services and catering services, provision of goods and services to other enterprises, sales of tickets on behalf of other enterprises, advertising on behalf of other enterprises, letting of immovable property, rental of containers.[7]

11. The issue in question concerns income arising from three sources: CDC, CSC, and THC. Notably, two of these sources involve charges imposed for services related to containers, whereas the third pertains to charges associated with terminal services for cargo handling. In the context of such income sources, Vogel, a recognized authority, emphasizes the widespread use of containers in international transport. Profits arising from short-term storage of containers or from detention charges for the late return of containers, according to Vogel, are covered within the purview of "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic". Further, special remuneration for services ancillary to container operations are covered within the ambit of shipping income from international traffic. Income derived from services provided for cargo handling is also considered part of shipping income from international traffic when directly connected or ancillary to the operation of ships in international traffic.[8]

12. We thus reach the conclusion that profits arising from CDC, CSC and THC are connected with and ancillary to the operation of ships in international traffic. Consequently, these profits squarely fall within the purview of the expression "profits from the operation of ships in international traffic". Therefore, CDC, CSC, and THC collected by the respondents are part of the revenue earned in shipping in international traffic and are to be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of the Pakistan-Denmark Double Taxation Convention and the Pakistan-Belgium Double Taxation Convention, as the case may be. As a result, we do not feel inclined to interfere with the judgment of the High Court. These petitions are therefore dismissed.

MWA/C-1/SC Petitions dismissed.

Civil Petition No. 2045 of 2019, decided on 18th November, 2022.

(Against the judgment of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 08.03.2019, passed in W.P. No. 20429 of 2016)

----Arts. 9, 14, 18, 20, 22, 26, 27, 36, 37(a), 38(b), 38(d) & Preamble---Constitutional protections for minorities and persons with disabilities (PWDs) stated.

The Preamble of the Constitution provides that it is the "will of the people" of Pakistan to establish an "Order". The term "will of the people of Pakistan" is an inclusive term signifying all citizens irrespective of religion, caste, creed, race, sex, place of birth or personal abilities. Therefore, such a "will" is incomplete without including the will of the minorities and persons with disabilities ("PWDs").

The word "minorities" signifies merely a statistical number, representing a class of people in the country who are Non-Muslims and in no manner does it imply that they are lesser citizens or in any manner less entitled to the fundamental rights under the Constitution.

The minimum right to dignity of the minorities and PWDs is that they ought to be considered equally with the rest of the majority of Muslims and the majority of persons with fuller abilities. Under the Constitution there is no distinction and therefore, the fundamental rights are fully available to the minorities and PWDs in the country as they are available to all other citizens of Pakistan.

The Constitution uplifts PWDs, gives them additional protection so that every effort (reasonable accommodation) is made to bring differently-abled persons at par with fully-abled persons. Similarly, it mandates that minorities are equal citizens of Pakistan and must be protected from all kinds and forms of discrimination. The Constitution, therefore, not only caters to minorities and PWDs as equal citizens of Pakistan, having equal rights and safeguards, it also provides extra protection to them.

People with disabilities are segregated from community life and face discrimination due to pervasive attitudinal and systemic barriers that the law, policy and practice frameworks have failed to remove, such as inaccessible or unequal facilities of housing, transport and education, segregated settings, barriers in accessing justice and legal systems, and employment and health discrimination. The effects of such discrimination are further expounded when intersecting with sexism, ageism, racism and other forms of inequality.

Disabled People's Organization Australia, Segregation of People with Disability is Discrimination and Must End, Position Paper (September, 2020). https://dpoa.org.au/wp-content/uploads/2020/11/ Segregation-of-People-with Disability_Position-Paper.pdf ref.

Lower rates of employment are persistently observed for PWDs. Lower education levels coupled with discrimination, stigma, negative attitudes, inaccessible transport and workplaces, and limited availability of accommodations for PWDs, play a significant role in limiting job opportunities. Due to these reasons, PWDs are pushed backwards and depressed at the hands of an unfriendly and unaccommodating ecosystem, making them fall under the rubric of the backward and depressed classes, as recognized by the Constitution. Under the Constitution, it is the obligation of the State to attend to the legitimate interests of these classes. Legitimate interests are all those interests which can help PWDs actualize their fundamental rights under the Constitution and enable them to become effective members of the society.

Union of India, AIR 1993 SC 477 and Muhammad Yousaf v. Chairman, FPSC PLD 2017 Lah. 406 ref.

In order to safeguard the rights of the minorities and PWDs and to provide equality of status and opportunities, the State has to endeavor to bridge the gap and ensure that the differently-abled persons and the Non-Muslim minority in our country get to enjoy their fundamental rights under the Constitution with the same fervour and force as enjoyed by the Muslim majority and majority of persons with fuller abilities.

(b) Disabled Persons (Employment and Rehabilitation) Ordinance (XL of 1981)---

----S. 10---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 14 & 36---Persons With Disabilities (PWDs)---Minorities---Seats reserved for PWDs and minorities in the Combined Competitive Examination conducted by the Punjab Public Service Commission---Constitutional right of PWDs and minorities---Other than the general seats, the additional provision of quota for the PWDs and the minorities reaffirms the constitutional commitment---In case the seats reserved for PWDs and the Non-Muslim minority are not filled by PWDs and the non-Muslim minority in a particular year, it was not permissible to open and make the said seats available to general quota as it would offend constitutional values, fundamental rights and the Principles of Policy---Seats earmarked for minorities or PWDs must be retained and carried forward; this quota is their constitutional right and cannot be reversed or made available to other citizens---Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed and leave was refused with the direction to respective governments that they shall ensure that the employment quota of the minorities is maintained at all levels and to strictly avoid discriminatory and demeaning advertisements (for posts) flouting the dignity and self-respect of the minorities.

(c) Disabled Persons (Employment and Rehabilitation) Ordinance (XL of 1981)---

----S. 10---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 14---Persons With Disabilities (PWDs)---Combined Competitive Examination conducted by the Punjab Public Service Commission (PPSC) --- Use of the word 'disabled' in advertisements for posts---Supreme Court directed that the word "disabled" has already been put to disuse in the judgment reported as Malik Ubaidullah v. Government of Punjab and others (PLD 2020 SC 599) and, therefore, the PPSC shall ensure that the word "disabled" is not used and instead persons with disabilities or persons with different abilities is put to use---Supreme Court observed that it was hopeful that in the future these terms will be incorporated in the official correspondence as well as relevant notifications, including public advertisements, issued by the Government.

PLD 2020 SC 599 ref.

Petitioner in person.

Nemo for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 18th November, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner has challenged the seats reserved for minorities and persons with disabilities ("PWDs") in the Combined Competitive Examination, 2015 ("CCE") conducted by the Punjab Public Service Commission, Lahore ("PPSC"). In the advertisement issued by the PPSC for the post in the Provincial Management Service (BS-17) ("PMS") under the Services and General Administration Department, Government of the Punjab ("S&GAD"), out of 62 posts, 53 posts were on open merit, 06 posts for PWDs and 03 posts for minorities. The petitioner challenges the legality of the allocation and reservation of seats for the above two classes of persons and also prays that if this quota remains unfilled in a particular year, the seats reserved against this special quota be made available to other deserving candidates applying under the general quota on open merit. The said claim of the petitioner was dismissed by the High Court through the impugned judgment dated 08.03.2019. Hence this petition.

2. We have heard the petitioner and have gone through the record of the case. It is important to begin with the constitutional scheme. The preamble of our Constitution[1] provides that it is the "will of the people" of Pakistan to establish an "Order". The term "will of the people of Pakistan" is an inclusive term signifying all citizens irrespective of religion, caste, creed, race, sex, place of birth or personal abilities. Therefore, such a "will" is incomplete without including the will of the minorities and PWDs. The "Order" is a result of our collective vision and aspirations. The "Order" established by the "will of the people" is pillared on principles which form our constitutional values, providing for freedom, equality, tolerance, social justice and democracy; adequate provision for the minorities to freely profess and practice their religions and develop their cultures; safeguards to protect the legitimate interests of minorities, backward and depressed classes; fundamental rights including equality of status and opportunity, social, economic and political justice; freedom of thought, expression, belief, faith, worship and association, subject to law and public morality. Tolerance, freedom, equality, social justice and democracy are central to our constitutional values which promote inclusion and abhor apartheid, exclusion, apartness, racism, bias and bigotry. These constitutional principles and values form an integral part of the Objectives Resolution which is a substantive part of the Constitution under Article 2-A and is to be given effect accordingly. The Constitution is, therefore, a shared voice of its citizenry.

3. The Constitutional values specifically provide for "equality of status, of opportunity," which means that every person in Pakistan has equal human status and worth and enjoys equal access to opportunities without discrimination based on caste, creed, race, sex, place of birth, etc. Undeniably, equality of status and opportunity includes access to employment to earn a decent livelihood.

4. Fundamental rights under the Constitution actualize these constitutional values; Article 9 provides that every person shall have a right to life and liberty subject to law. "Life" includes all the attributes of a healthy and a meaningful life, while the right to "liberty" provides freedom, agency and choice to a person to be able to design his or her life in any manner he or she wants. Life and liberty of any person in Pakistan is protected and there is no distinction between persons on the basis of religion, sex or creed; Article 14 provides that the dignity of a person is inviolable; Article 18 provides that everyone has a right to a lawful profession or occupation. Articles 20, 22, 26 and 27 of the Constitution provide further safeguards for minorities. Amongst fundamental rights, the right to dignity stands at the top, like a jewel in the crown of fundamental rights. This unique place is because the right to dignity is an absolute right, is non-negotiable and is not subject to any law. Therefore, the minimum right to dignity of the minorities and PWDs is that they ought to be considered equally with the rest of the majority of Muslims and the majority of persons with fuller abilities. Under the Constitution there is no distinction and therefore, these fundamental rights are fully available to the minorities and PWDs in the country as they are available to all other citizens of Pakistan. Article 36 of the Principles of Policy under the Constitution provides that the State shall safeguard the legitimate rights and interests of minorities including their due representation in the Federal and Provincial services. Article 37(a) proves that the State shall promote with special care the educational and economic interest of backward classes. Article 38(b) of the Constitution provides that all citizens (which undoubtedly includes minorities and PWDs) to be provided within the available resources of the country, facilities for work and adequate livelihood. Article 38(d) provides that the State shall provide basic necessities of life to all citizens (which once again undoubtedly includes PWDs) who are unable to earn their livelihood on account of infirmity or sickness. Review of the above constitutional scheme unfolds that the Constitution uplifts PWDs, gives them additional protection so that every effort (reasonable accommodation) is made to bring differently-abled persons at par with fully-abled persons. Similarly, it mandates that minorities are equal citizens of Pakistan and must be protected from all kinds and forms of discrimination. The Constitution, therefore, not only caters to minorities and PWDs as equal citizens of Pakistan, having equal rights and safeguards, it also provides extra protection to them.

5. "Backward" and "depressed" classes are not defined in the Constitution, therefore going by their simple meaning, they include any class of people who are marginalized, underprivileged, disadvantaged, lacking choice, agency, autonomy, level-playing field and opportunity. The marginalization and discrimination experienced by PWDs is arguably considered to be similar to the apartheid system in terms of segregation and discrimination based on a particular characteristic, leading to limited access to education, employment, and other opportunities, as well as social and economic marginalization, thereby, marginalizing individuals and communities. People with disabilities are segregated from community life and face discrimination due to pervasive attitudinal and systemic barriers that the law, policy and practice frameworks have failed to remove, such as inaccessible or unequal facilities of housing, transport and education, segregated settings, barriers in accessing justice and legal systems, and employment and health discrimination.[2] The effects of such discrimination are further expounded when intersecting with sexism, ageism, racism and other forms of inequality.[3] Albie Sachs, the celebrated South African Judge writes: "If there is one thing that the struggle against apartheid has taught us, it is how important it is to manage difference in society. Difference was used as the basis for apartheid. Difference became an instrument of domination and control. What if we can turn difference around to become a source of vitality, of variability, of richness?"[4] The United Nations, Department of Economic and Social Affair's flagship "Disability and Development Report"[5] highlights that the professional potential of PWDs is often misunderstood and remains untapped due to misconceptions, negative societal attitudes and inaccessibility of workplaces, training and vocational skills centers. Lower rates of employment are persistently observed for PWDs. Lower education levels coupled with discrimination, stigma, negative attitudes, inaccessible transport and workplaces, and limited availability of accommodations for PWDs, play a significant role in limiting job opportunities.[6] Due to these reasons, PWDs are pushed backwards and depressed at the hands of an unfriendly and un accommodating ecosystem, making them fall under the rubric of the backward and depressed classes, as recognized by the Constitution. Under the Constitution, it is the obligation of the State to attend to the legitimate interests[7] of these classes. Legitimate interests are all those interests which can help PWDs actualize their fundamental rights under the Constitution and enable them to become effective members of the society.[8]

6. The word "minorities" on the other hand, signifies merely a statistical number, representing a class of people in the country who are Non-Muslims and in no manner does it imply that they are lesser citizens or in any manner less entitled to the fundamental rights under the Constitution. 96.5 % of Pakistan's population is Muslim. Minorities make up approximately 3% of the population.[9] Our national flag, our badge of honour and national unity, shows the minorities in the white along with the green signifying the majority Muslim population. The majority (Muslims) and the minority (Non-Muslims) of Pakistanis together constitute the paradigm of Pakistan. Our national flag stands higher because it represents both the Muslims and the Non-Muslims. Moving towards an inclusive society is getting closer to realizing our constitutional values. "If society is intolerant, embarrassed, exclusionary, its own imaginative heart is being restricted. Its capacity for human empathy is being denied. Exclusion damages the way we understand and characterize the world we live in. Inclusion enhances our humanity."[10]

7. Quaid-e-Azam, Muhammad Ali Jinnah repeatedly affirmed that as a foundational principle of Pakistan, rights of all minorities shall be safeguarded and all citizens of Pakistan are equal and have equal rights irrespective of their religion, colour, caste or creed. He assured and asserted that "minorities to whichever community they may belong, will be safeguarded. Their religion or faith or belief will be secure. There will be no interference of any kind with their freedom of worship. They will have their protection with regard to their religion, faith, their life, their culture. They will be, in all respects, the citizens of Pakistan without any distinction of caste or creed".[11] At the time of the inception of Pakistan, while asserting the above said principle as the first President of the Constituent Assembly of Pakistan, Quaid-e-Azam unequivocally stated that "you are free; you are free to go to your temples, you are free to go to your mosques or to any other place of worship in this State of Pakistan. You may belong to any religion or caste or creed - that has nothing to do with the business of the State ... we are starting with this fundamental principle that we are all citizens and equal citizens of one State".[12] He was conscious of the fact that equal treatment of minorities was not only important for the prosperity and growth of Pakistan, it was a duty cast upon all Muslims by Islam as "the tenets of Islam enjoin on every Musalman to give protection to his neighbours and to the minorities regardless of caste and creed[13] ... in Islam there is no difference between man and man. The qualities of equality, liberty and fraternity are the fundamental principles of Islam."[14]

8. In order to actualize the constitutional mandate and the vision of our founding father, we have the Disabled Persons (Employment and Rehabilitation) Ordinance, 1981 ("Ordinance") which, post 18th amendment, has translated into provincial laws.[15] Provisions of the Ordinance are pari materia to the Punjab Law. Section 10 of the Ordinance, as applicable in Punjab, provides that not less than three percent (3%) of the total number of persons employed by an establishment at any time shall be PWDs in the manner and procedure provided under the said Ordinance. Similarly, notification dated 27.3.2010, issued under section 23 of the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974 by the S&GAD (Regulations Wing), 5% quota has to be reserved for minorities (Non-Muslims) against the total number of posts advertised in the future, including posts to be filled on the basis of competitive examination to be conducted by the PPSC. Later on through an amendment[16] brought about in the said notification, the vacancies reserved for minorities for which qualified candidates are not available at the time of a particular recruitment process, shall be carried forward and filled through appointment of persons belonging to minorities (Non- Muslims). We have noted with concern that according to the fact finding report titled "Unequal Citizens, Ending Systemic Discrimination against Minorities" ("Report")[17] published in May, 2022 by the National Commission of Human Rights ("NCHR") established under the National Commission for Human Rights Act, 2012 with the mandate to promote and protect human rights as provided for in the Constitution and the various international instruments to which Pakistan is a State party or shall become a State party, advertisements published in major newspapers all over the country show that religious minorities have been recruited exclusively for sanitary work. The Report shows that in the advertisements, under eligibility requirements, there is often a clause that states 'Only Non-Muslims Apply.' Such discriminatory advertisements and employment selection process limiting the job quota only for low level posts is offensive to the constitutional values, the fundamental rights of the minorities and the notification mentioned above. The Report recommends ending discrimination against minorities in the employment quota, ending the practice of publishing discriminatory advertisements and ensuring public transparency in the number of minority posts filled across each level of the government.[18] We fully support the said recommendations of the NCHR in the Report and accordingly direct that the respective governments shall ensure that the employment quota of the minorities is maintained at all levels and to strictly avoid discriminatory and demeaning advertisements flouting the dignity and self-respect of the minorities.

9. In order to safeguard the rights of the minorities and PWDs and to provide equality of status and opportunities, the State has to endeavor to bridge the gap and ensure that the differently-abled persons and the Non-Muslim minority in our country get to enjoy their fundamental rights under the Constitution with the same fervour and force as enjoyed by the Muslim majority and majority of persons with fuller abilities. Hence other than the general seats, the additional provision of quota for the PWDs and the minorities reaffirms the constitutional commitment.

10. The argument of the petitioner that in case the said seats are not filled by PWDs and the Non-Muslim minority in a particular year, the said seats should be opened and made available to general quota. This is not permissible as it would offend constitutional values, fundamental rights and the Principles of Policy as discussed above. The seats earmarked for minorities or PWDs must be retained and carried forward. This quota is their constitutional right and cannot be reversed or made available to other citizens.

11. For the above reasons we agree with the final conclusion arrived at by the High Court in the impugned judgment and for the reasons given above, this petition is accordingly dismissed and leave is refused.

12. It is also pointed out that the word "disabled" has already been put to disuse in Malik Ubaidullah[19] and, therefore, the PPSC is directed to ensure that the word "disabled" is not used and instead persons with disabilities or persons with different abilities is put to use. We are hopeful that in the future these terms will be incorporated in the official correspondence as well as relevant notifications, including public advertisements, issued by the Government. A copy of this order shall be dispatched to the Chief Secretary, Government of the Punjab as well as the Chief Secretaries of other provinces to ensure that this order is complied with in letter and spirit at the national level.

13. Before parting with this order, we would like to appreciate and commend the valuable assistance provided to us by Muhammad Hassan Ali, Law Clerk in rendering this order.

Civil Petition No. 4806 of 2019, decided on 7th December, 2022.

(Against the judgment of the Lahore High Court, dated 21.11.2019, passed in I.C.A. No.1412 of 2016)

Civil service---

----Appointment---Eligibility criteria---Judicial review by Courts---Overqualified candidates---Autonomy, agency and free choice of the employing institution must be respected and be allowed to recruit according to the criteria advertised and anyone overqualified for the said post, if not entertained by the employing institution, the same being an institutional policy, the Court must refrain from interfering in the internal governance of institutions.

While prescribing qualifications for a post and determining eligibility criteria, the employing institution is best suited to assess its needs based on the function and nature of the post; the aptitude or suitability to fulfill such requirements and the qualification required for the post. Where one of the policy decisions of the recruiting company is that a candidate must possess a specific qualification and anyone overqualified will not be inducted, this being an internal policy decision of the company, judicial review must tread warily and must not be extended to expand the ambit of the prescribed eligibility criteria.

Zahoor Ahmad Rather v. Imtiyaz Ahmad (2019) 2 SCC 404; Asaf Fasihuddin v. Government of Pakistan 2014 SCMR 676 and Abdul Hameed v. WAPDA 2021 SCMR 1230 ref.

In the absence of any such stipulation in the advertisement or the recruitment policy of the employing company, it is not possible for the Court to draw an inference that a higher qualification presupposes the acquisition of a lower qualification or that a candidate having a higher qualification is better suited for the post as opposed to a candidate possessing the requisite qualification that has been expressly prescribed in the advertisement according to the nature of the post and the requirement of the employer. It is not for the Court to examine the qualification and eligibility in a recruitment process. The Court, at best, can look into the legality of the recruitment process but cannot delve deeper into the design and need of the employing institution or second guess their selection criteria and job requirement. It is also not open to the Courts to embark upon comparing various degrees held by the applicants/candidates with the advertised qualifications and carry out the function of an employer by carrying out the comparison of the said qualifications. The power of judicial review by the Courts cannot be extended to determine equivalence or comparison of academic qualifications for a post or assume the role of a human resource department of an employing institution. It is a specific expert area and can be best resolved by the institution itself according to the suitability and requirements of a certain post as designed and desired by the employer. It is an area for which the Courts are not best suited.

Zahoor Ahmad Rather v. Imtiyaz Ahmad (2019) 2 SCC 404 and P.M. Latha v. State of Kerala (2003) 3 SCC 541 ref.

Furthermore, inducting candidates possessing a higher qualification than the advertised criteria would also have a social impact as it would deprive people with lesser education of employment opportunities and encourage people with higher qualification. It will cause injustice to those applicants who possessed a lower prescribed qualification in the advertisement, because applicants with a higher qualification would seek automatic preference based on their qualification even when such qualification is not prescribed in the advertisement. It will also disrupt the working of the institution by having overqualified people and affect their hierarchy in the organization. The Court must take into account socio-economic perspectives in order to ensure that employment opportunities are created for at all tiers of the society.

Sakhawat Ali v. Deputy Commissioner/Chairman Recruitment Committee, Narowal, 1998 PLC (C.S.) 19 and Zahoor Ahmad Rather v. Imtiyaz Ahmad (2019) 2 SCC 404 ref.

The autonomy, agency and free choice of the employing institution must be respected and be allowed to recruit according to the criteria advertised and anyone overqualified for the said post, if not entertained by the employing institution, the same being an institutional policy, the Court must refrain from interfering in the internal governance of institutions.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts of the case are that the petitioners applied for the post of Line Superintendent Grade-I (BPS-15) ("LS") at LESCO in pursuance of an advertisement in 2015. The petitioners were not considered for the said post on the ground that they did not meet the eligibility criteria/ selection requirement as per the advertisement. The refusal on behalf of the respondent company was challenged by the petitioners through a constitutional petition, which was allowed by the learned Single Judge and the respondent company was directed to appoint the petitioners to the said post. The respondents challenged the same before the Division Bench of the High Court through an Intra Court Appeal, which was allowed through the impugned judgment dated 21.11.2019 by holding that the petitioners did not meet the requirement of the advertisement and secondly that the petitioners being overqualified for the post were not suitable for the said position. Petitioners have assailed the said judgment through this petition.

2. The learned counsel for the petitioners submits that the petitioners hold a BS in Electrical Engineering ("BS degree") and are overqualified for the post advertised as the required qualification for the post is a Diploma in Associate Engineering (Electrical) ("DAE") with "B" Grade from any Government Poly Technical Institute. He submits that being overqualified does not debar them from applying for the said post and the policy of the respondent company as well as the impugned judgment are, therefore, not sustainable.

3. The learned counsel for the respondent company on the other hand submits that respondent company clearly specified the eligibility criteria and qualification for the post of LS. The requirement being Matric with 3-years DAE with "B" Grade from any Government Poly Technical Institute plus 3-years' experience of trade in any supervisory post in any electric concern. As far as the qualification is concerned, he submits that it is not within the domain of the Court to compare the BS degree with the DAE and further that the petitioners do not have the three years' experience of trade of any supervisory post in any electric concern. Therefore, having failed to meet the criteria advertised, the petitioners are not entitled to be appointed to the post of LS. He submits that it is not within the purview of the Court to judge equivalence of a higher degree and carry out comparison with the qualification advertised for the post. He further submits that the said posts are for people with less qualification and, therefore, the respondent company does not encourage persons who are overqualified to apply for the said job. He further submits that it is an internal policy matter of the respondent company to attract and target a specific set of people for the post of LS and anyone having qualification over and above that what is advertised for the post is considered not suitable by the company. The learned counsel for the respondents relied on Sakhawat Ali[1], P.M Latha[2], Yogesh Kumar[3], Anita[4] and Zahoor Ahmad Rather[5] in support of his contentions.

4. Learned counsel for the respondent company, however, submits that the petitioners have an unblemished service record of six years with the respondent company, therefore, he does not now oppose their appointments at this stage, but supports the impugned judgment in principle and prays that the impugned judgment be maintained by this Court for future appointments.

5. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the record and the case law submitted by the learned counsel. We have noticed that the respondent company, publically advertised various posts, including 89 posts of LS, clearly specifying the eligibility criteria/ qualification requirement for the said posts. The eligibility criteria settled by the respondent company and duly advertised in the public advertisement represents a policy decision of the respondent company. While prescribing qualifications for a post and determining eligibility criteria, the employing institution is best suited to assess its needs based on the function and nature of the post; the aptitude or suitability to fulfill such requirements and the qualification required for the post. One of the policy decisions of the respondent company is that a LS must be a DAE holder and anyone overqualified will not be inducted. This being an internal policy decision of the respondent company, judicial review must tread warily and must not be extended to expand the ambit of the prescribed eligibility criteria, as has been rightly held in the impugned judgment[6].

6. It is also important to note that in the absence of any such stipulation in the advertisement or the recruitment policy of the respondent company, it is not possible for the Court to draw an inference that a higher qualification presupposes the acquisition of a lower qualification or that a candidate having a higher qualification is better suited for the post as opposed to a candidate possessing the requisite qualification that has been expressly prescribed in the advertisement according to the nature of the post and the requirement of the employer[7]. As stated above, it is not for the Court to examine the qualification and eligibility in a recruitment process. The Court, at best, can look into the legality of the recruitment process but cannot delve deeper into the design and need of the employing institution or second guess their selection criteria and job requirement. It is also not open to the Courts to embark upon comparing various degrees held by the applicants with the advertised qualifications and carry out the function of an employer by carrying out the comparison of the said qualifications. The power of judicial review by the Courts cannot be extended to determine equivalence or comparison of academic qualifications for a post or assume the role of a human resource department of an employing institution. It is a specific expert area and can be best resolved by the institution itself according to the suitability and requirements of a certain post as designed and desired by the employer. It is an area for which the Courts are not best suited[8]. Therefore, there is no force in the contention that since the petitioners possess a higher qualification than what has been advertised, they are to be necessarily considered eligible for the post.

7. Furthermore, inducting candidates possessing a higher qualification than the advertised criteria for LS would also have a social impact as it would deprive people with lesser education of employment opportunities and encourage people with higher qualification[9]. It will cause injustice to those applicants who possess a DAE, the prescribed qualification in the advertisement, because applicants with a higher qualification would seek automatic preference based on their qualification even when such qualification is not prescribed in the advertisement. It will also disrupt the working of the institution by having overqualified people as LS and affect their hierarchy in the organization. The Court must take into account socio-economic perspectives in order to ensure that employment opportunities are created for at all tiers of the society[10]. The Division Bench of the High Court has, therefore, rightly repelled the contention of discrimination by placing reliance on judgments of this Court[11]. The eligibility criteria, advertised in accordance with the recruitment policy of the respondent company, creates a distinct class of persons who are DAE holders and are eligible to apply for the post of LS. Whereas, the petitioners who do not hold such qualification do not belong to the said class of candidates. As such, there is no discrimination if the employing institution decides to only consider candidates who hold the prescribed qualification of DAE instead of the petitioners who do not possess the same and are over or differently qualified. Consequently, it cannot be held that the respondent company's policy of not inducting applicants with a higher qualification to the post of LS is discriminatory or arbitrary. Infact such an internal policy provides social justice by opening up employment at different tiers.

8. Recruitments, therefore, are to be made strictly in accordance with the criteria in the advertisement and the recruitment policy of the respondent company, and any deviation therefrom, would allow entry to ineligible persons and deprive many eligible candidates. The employing institution could have prescribed a BS degree as the qualifying criteria, however, the fact that it did not, indicates that the candidates with the prescribed qualification criteria i.e. DAE were required and would be deemed as eligible to apply[12]. The prescribed qualification in the advertisement being a DAE is an essential requirement which cannot be dispensed with. Applicants not possessing such qualification, albeit possessing some other higher qualification, are ineligible unless the employing institution's recruitment policy catered for applicants that possessed a higher qualification.

9. In this view of the matter, we hold that the autonomy, agency and free choice of the employing institution must be respected and be allowed to recruit according to the criteria advertised and anyone overqualified for the said post, if not entertained by the employing institution, the same being an institutional policy, the Court must refrain from interfering in the internal governance of institutions.

10. In the present case, the petitioners also do not have three years working experience and on this score alone do not meet the advertised criteria. However, the learned counsel for the respondent company have been gracious enough and have stated that the petitioners having worked for the institution for the last six years with an unblemished service record, they do not oppose their appointment at this stage of their career. Learned counsel for the respondents, however, pray that this is to be considered as a one-time concession and is not to be considered as a precedent in future as long as the impugned judgment is maintained.

11. In the above background, this petition is disposed of with the observation that the impugned judgment for the reasons given in this judgment, is upheld. However, this shall not affect the appointment of the petitioners who shall continue to work as per the terms and conditions of their appointment as agreed by the respondent company. Disposed of in the above terms.

MWA/W-1/SC Order accordingly.

Rule 12.2(3) of the Police Rules, 1934 ('the Rules') provides for two stages for determining the seniority, one is prior to the probationary period and is to be reckoned from the first appointment and the final seniority is settled from the date of confirmation which is once the period of probation is successfully completed. Period of probation is important as the officers have to undergo various courses (A, B, C and D) and qualify the same. Once police officer has successfully undergone the said courses he stands confirmed at the end of the probationary period. The seniority is once again settled, this being the final seniority from the date of confirmation. The said rule is, therefore, very clear that final seniority list of Inspectors will be reckoned from the date of confirmation of the officers and not from the date of appointment.

(c) Police Order (22 of 2002)---

----Preamble---Police Rules, 1934---Service matters relating to police---Interference by Courts in limited circumstances only---Disputes, if any, amongst the police officers must first be resolved by the Inspector General of Police or his representatives---Only in case of any legal interpretation or blatant abuse of the process provided under the Police Order or Rules should the courts interfere in the working of the Police force so that the force can maintain its functioning, autonomy, independence and efficiency.

It is best if the Police force is allowed to be regulated by its statutory framework i.e. the Police Order, 2002 and the Police Rules which provide a complete code of internal governance. Disputes, if any, amongst the police officers must first be resolved by the Inspector General of Police or his representatives. Only in case of any legal interpretation or blatant abuse of the process provided under the Police Order or Rules should the courts interfere in the working of the Police force so that the force can maintain its functioning, autonomy, independence and efficiency which is essential for Police which is charged with the onerous responsibility of maintaining law and order and with the onerous obligation to protect the life and property of the citizens of the country. More than any other organization, it is imperative that the Police must function as a rule based organization which is fully autonomous and independent in regulating its internal governance. Strong and smart Police force requires organizational justice firmly entrenched in the institution so that its officers are assured that they work for an institution that firmly stands for rules, fairness, transparency and efficiency. This upholds the morale of the police officers, especially junior police officers who are required to undertake dangerous and strenuous assignments on a daily basis and also uplifts the institution by making it more vibrant and progressive. The issues of posting, transfer and seniority must be settled within the department strictly in accordance with the Rules and only matters requiring legal interpretation may come up before the Courts. Several junior officers approaching the courts for redressal of their grievance reflects poorly on the internal governance of the Police department when the elaborate Police Rules and the Police Order provide for such eventualities in detail.

Supreme Court observed that it was sanguine that in future the Police department will take charge of its internal governance strictly in accordance with law and will restore a Rule-based approach in addressing the grievances of the police officers so that courts are not unduly burdened.

----Arts. 4(1), 14(1), 18, 25, 37 & 38---Civil service---Organizational justice---Concept of organizational justice and its importance stated.

Organizational justice focuses on how employees judge the behavior of the organization and how this behavior is related to employees' attitudes and behaviors regarding the organization. The employees are sensitive to decisions made on a day-to-day basis by their employers, both on the small and large scale, and will judge these decisions as unfair or fair. Decisions judged as unfair, lead to workplace deviance. Employees also believe procedures are fair when they are consistent, accurate, ethical, and lack bias. Organizational justice is concerned with all matters of workplace behaviour, from treatment by superiors to pay, access to training and gender equality. Ensuring organizational justice should be a priority for any organization - it can reduce the incidence of workplace deviance, absence, disengagement and counterproductive workplace behaviours and also encourage positive attributes like trust and progressive communication.

Organizational justice stands firmly on the constitutional values and fundamental rights ensured to any person under the Constitution. The constitutional principle of social and economic justice read with due process and right to dignity, non-discrimination and right to a carry out a lawful profession and the right to livelihood are basic ingredients of organizational justice.

----Preamble---Police force---Promotion and career progression---Organizational justice---Importance of organizational justice in the police force stated.

Organizational justice is necessary for the police officers to perform their duties with complete commitment, dedication and fidelity, because they must perceive that the institution is fair and just towards them. Police officers who have such perceptions of fairness would demonstrate less cynicism towards the job and are also likely to have a more amiable attitude towards the public. Uncertainty in the promotion structure and delay in promotions weakens such perceptions of serving police officers, resulting in inefficiency, likelihood of misconduct and low morale, thereby, also adversely impacting the trust of the public in the police. Therefore, for an efficient and effective police force, it is necessary to ensure the provision of organizational justice in the police as an institution, especially with regards to career progression and promotion. As such, there must be no ambiguity in the promotion structure and any grievance with regards to career progression/promotion must be redressed expeditiously under the law.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---There are three sets of police officers before us: (i) Appellants (Hammad Nabi and others); (ii) Respondents (Atta Muhammad and others); (iii) Impleaders through applications (CMAs) (Jaseem Ahmad, Shujaat Ali Babar and others).

2. Appellants belong to a batch of direct Sub-Inspectors ("SI") who were selected in BS-14 through the Punjab Public Service Commission ("Commission") in October, 1997. The order of appointment of Hammad Nabi (appellant) was issued in Multan Region on 30-10-1997. He was subjected to probation[1] for three years and after successful completion of probationary courses[2] (A, B, C and D), he was confirmed in the same rank i.e., Sub-Inspector with effect from 28.11.2000 by DIG/Multan vide order dated 29.11.2000. By this time, this Court in Qayyum Nawaz[3] held that the date of confirmation is the same as the date of appointment. The Inspector General of Police ("IGP") in order to implement Qayyum Nawaz issued circular dated 10-03-2004 that stated that date of appointment and confirmation shall be the same. In consequence thereof, Hammad Nabi was confirmed as SI from the date of his appointment i.e. 30-10-1997 vide order dated 07-04-2004 passed by the DIG/Multan. In addition, Hammad Nabi was admitted to Seniority List F (that is maintained for the promotion to the post of Inspectors)[4] with effect from 21-11-2002 and was also promoted to the rank of Inspector with effect from 07-01-2003 vide order dated 14-01-2005. The officer was kept at Seniority List F and his name was notified in the List regularly. Before the implementation of the impugned judgment of Punjab Service Tribunal ("Tribunal"), the Seniority List of Inspectors was displayed on 07-02-2019 showing Hammad Nabi at Seniority No. 281 of the Seniority List F. However, after the implementation of the impugned judgment of the Tribunal, the Seniority List F notified on 13-03-2020 placed the Appellant at Seniority No. 323. This relegation of Hammad Nabi from Seniority No. 281 to Seniority No. 323 is a result of the implementation of impugned judgment of the Tribunal which is under challenge before us. Accordingly, the Appellant has prayed to set aside the impugned judgment dated 30-11-2018 passed by the Tribunal.

3. Respondent Atta Muhammad, along with other officers arrayed as respondents, belongs to a batch of officers which were selected as direct Assistant Sub-Inspectors (ASIs) in BS-9 by the Commission on 10-11-1993. He was assigned to the Punjab Constabulary (PC), a reserve police unit within the Punjab Police that was treated at par with a Range for legal purposes. The officer was subjected to three years probationary period[5] and after successful completion of his training courses (A, B, C and D)[6], he was confirmed on 16-03-1999 and his name was placed on Seniority List E maintained by DIG/Commandant/Range/Regional Police Officer with effect from 18-11-1996. Later on, due to administrative arrangements within the Punjab Police, the officer was assigned to Rawalpindi Range/Region by the IGP vide order dated 13-08-2002. He was promoted as an Officiating Sub-Inspector in Rawalpindi Range/ Region on 27-08-2003. Atta Muhammad obtained his revised confirmation with effect from 10-11-1993 (his date of appointment) as a result of implementation of Qayyum Nawaz (supra). Thereafter, he agitated that he stood senior to the promotee ASI Muhammad Arshad (who had by now reached to the rank of Inspector). His argument was that he was senior to Muhammad Arshad due to his date of appointment/confirmation which was 10-11-1993 as compared to the date of appointment/confirmation of Muhammad Arshad on 13-11-1993. The legal requirements of three years probationary period and completion of training courses (A, B, C and D) for direct ASIs was not appreciated by any fora while comparing cases of Atta Muhammad and Muhammad Arshad. His claim on the basis of Muhammad Arshad was accepted and his standing on List E was revised with effect from 01-02-1996. Based on this revision of his standing at List E, he was granted revised promotion to the rank of SI with effect from 22-12-1996 by the Commandant PC on 07-08-2006. He was admitted to Seniority List F with effect from 21-11-2002 and promoted to the rank of Inspector with effect from 07-01-2003. As a result, whereas before implementation of impugned judgment, he was not listed on Seniority List and was treated as a SI, after implementation of the impugned judgment of the Tribunal, he was placed at Seniority No. 241 of the Seniority List of Inspectors dated 13-03-2020. Amongst the Impleaders some support the case of the Appellants while the others support the case of the Respondents. The Comparative Table hereunder gives a tabular representation of the service record of the parties for better understanding the dispute in hand.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and Mr. Kamran Adil, DIG (Legal) at some length and have carefully gone through the case law[7] cited at the bar, as well as, the Police Rules, 1934 ("Police Rules") and Police Order, 2002. The question before us is the mode of determination of seniority of a police officer holding the post of Inspector in the Punjab Police under the Police Rules. The answer to the said question is clearly provided under Rule 12.2(3) of the Police Rules, which is reproduced hereunder for convenience:

12.2. Seniority and probation.---(1) The seniority of Assistant Superintendents of Police is regulated by the orders passed from time to time by the Secretary of State and the Central Government.

No Probationary Assistant Superintendent of Police shall be permanently appointed as an Assistant Superintendent of Police until he has passed the prescribed departmental examinations.

A Probationary Assistant Superintendent of Police who does not qualify by passing these examinations within two years, or at the first examination after two years, from the date of his joining the service, will be removed from Government service; provided that the Provincial Government shall have power to relax this rule in special cases, when the Probationary Assistant Superintendent of Police is likely to make a good police officer.

(2) The rules governing the probation and seniority of Deputy Superintendents of Police are contained in Appendix 12.1.

(3) All appointments of enrolled police officers are on probation according to the rules in this chapter applicable to each rank.

Seniority in the case of upper subordinates[8], will be reckoned in the first instance from date of first appointment, officers promoted from a lower rank being considered senior to persons appointed direct on the same date, and the seniority of officers appointed direct on the same date being reckoned according to age. Seniority shall, however, be finally settled by dates of confirmation, the seniority inter se of several officers confirmed on the same date being that allotted to them on first appointment. Provided that any officer whose promotion or confirmation is delayed by reason of his being on deputation outside his range or district shall, on being promoted or confirmed, regain the seniority which he originally held vis- -vis any officers promoted or confirmed before him during his deputation.

The seniority of lower subordinates shall be reckoned from dates of appointment, subject to the conditions of rule 12-24 and provided that a promoted officer shall rank senior to an officer appointed direct to the same rank on the same date.

Rule 12.2(3) provides that in the first instance the seniority of the upper subordinates shall be reckoned from date of first appointment, officers promoted from a lower rank being considered senior to persons appointed direct on the same date, and the seniority of officers appointed direct on the same date being reckoned according to age. The sub-Rule further provides that seniority shall be finally settled by dates of confirmation, the seniority inter se of several officers confirmed on the same date being that allotted to them on first appointment. Rule 12.2(3) provides for two stages for determining the seniority, one is prior to the probationary period and is to be reckoned from the first appointment and the final seniority is settled from the date of confirmation which is once the period of probation is successfully completed.[9] Period of probation is important as the officers have to undergo various courses (A, B, C and D)[10] and qualify the same. Once police officer has successfully undergone the said courses he stands confirmed at the end of the probationary period. The seniority is once again settled, this being the final seniority from the date of confirmation. The above rule is, therefore, very clear that final seniority list of Inspectors will be reckoned from the date of confirmation of the officers and not from the date of appointment.

5. The Appellants in this case had a probationary period of three years while the probationary period of the Respondents was two years[11] and their dates of confirmation are different. It is submitted that the clarity of the said Rule has been muddled over the years due an earlier pronouncement of this Court in Qayyum Nawaz.[12] We have gone through Qayyum Nawaz and find that it is a leave-refusing order (described as a judgment), which has neither decided any question of law nor enunciated any principle of law in terms of Article 189 of the Constitution. Such leave-refusing orders do not constitute binding precedents.[13] The impression that a leave-refusing order endorses the statements of law made in the impugned orders and thus enhances the status of those statements as that of the apex court is fallacious. This impression is based on inference drawn from the leave-refusing orders, while 'a case is only an authority for what it actually decides' and cannot be cited as a precedent for a proposition that may be inferred from it.[14] The judgment of the Tribunal in Qayyum Nawaz totally ignores Rule 12.2(3) of the Rules as well as the earlier pronouncement of this Court in Mushtaq Warriach[15] which underlines the difference between the date of appointment and the date of confirmation. Therefore, reliance on Qayyum Nawaz to hold that there is no difference between the date of appointment and date of confirmation under the Police Rules is absolutely misconceived and strongly dispelled.

6. The impugned judgment of the Tribunal before us also relies on Qayyum Nawaz when the said judgment does not pass as a precedent and settles no principle of law. The impugned judgment has misread Rule 12.2(3) and has ignored its substantive part which clearly deals with the formulation of the final seniority list which is to be settled from the date of confirmation of the Police Officers. The Tribunal through the impugned judgment has without any justification dismissed from consideration M. Yousaf[16] which holds that seniority must be determined in accordance with the rules. For these reasons the impugned judgment is not sustainable.

7. It is also underlined that much water has flown under the bridge since Qayyum Nawaz. This Court has put an end to out of turn promotions in Contempt Proceedings Against the Chief Secretary, Sindh and others[17] followed by Ali Azhar Khan Baluch[18]. The practice of ante dated confirmations and promotions have been put down in Raza Safdar Kazmi[19] and delay in confirmations after the probationary period have been regulated in Gul Hasan Jatoi[20].

8. It is best if the Police force is allowed to be regulated by its statutory framework i.e. the Police Order, 2002 and the Police Rules which provide a complete code of internal governance. Disputes, if any, amongst the police officers must first be resolved by the Inspector General of Police or his representatives. Only in case of any legal interpretation or blatant abuse of the process provided under the Police Order or Rules should the courts interfere in the working of the Police force so that the force can maintain its functioning, autonomy, independence and efficiency which is essential for Police which is charged with the onerous responsibility of maintaining law and order and with the onerous obligation to protect the life and property of the citizens of this country. More than any other organization, it is imperative that the Police must function as a rule based organization which is fully autonomous and independent in regulating its internal governance. Strong and smart Police force requires organizational justice firmly entrenched in the institution so that its officers are assured that they work for an institution that firmly stands for rules, fairness, transparency and efficiency. This upholds the morale of the police officers, especially junior police officers who are required to undertake dangerous and strenuous assignments on a daily basis and also uplifts the institution by making it more vibrant and progressive.

9. The importance of organizational justice cannot be undermined. It focuses on how employees judge the behavior of the organization and how this behavior is related to employees' attitudes and behaviors regarding the organization. The employees are sensitive to decisions made on a day-to-day basis by their employers, both on the small and large scale, and will judge these decisions as unfair or fair. Decisions judged as unfair, lead to workplace deviance. Employees also believe procedures are fair when they are consistent, accurate, ethical, and lack bias[21]. Organizational justice is concerned with all matters of workplace behaviour, from treatment by superiors to pay, access to training and gender equality[22]. Ensuring organizational justice should be a priority for any organization - it can reduce the incidence of workplace deviance, absence, disengagement and counterproductive workplace behaviours and also encourage positive attributes like trust and progressive communication.[23]

10. Organizational justice is necessary for the police officers to perform their duties with complete commitment, dedication and fidelity, because they must perceive that the institution is fair and just towards them[24]. Police officers who have such perceptions of fairness would demonstrate less cynicism towards the job and are also likely to have a more amiable attitude towards the public[25]. Uncertainty in the promotion structure and delay in promotions weakens such perceptions of serving police officers, resulting in inefficiency, likelihood of misconduct and low morale, thereby, also adversely impacting the trust of the public in the police[26]. Therefore, for an efficient and effective police force, it is necessary to ensure the provision of organizational justice in the police as an institution, especially with regards to career progression and promotion. As such, there must be no ambiguity in the promotion structure and any grievance with regards to career progression/ promotion must be redressed expeditiously under the law. Organizational justice, therefore, stands firmly on the constitutional values and fundamental rights ensured to any person under the Constitution[27]. The constitutional principle of social and economic justice read with due process and right to dignity, non-discrimination and right to a carry out a lawful profession and the right to livelihood are basic ingredients of organizational justice.

11. Given the primacy of Police in the criminal justice system, organization justice must be ensured in the Police service. The issues of posting, transfer and seniority must be settled within the department strictly in accordance with the Rules and only matters requiring legal interpretation may come up before the Courts. Several junior officers approaching the courts for redressal of their grievance reflects poorly on the internal governance of the Police department when the elaborate Police Rules and the Police Order provide for such eventualities in detail. We are sanguine that in future the Police department will take charge of its internal governance strictly in accordance with law and will restore a Rule-based approach in addressing the grievances of the police officers so that courts are not unduly burdened.

12. In this background, all the parties before us are in agreement that their seniority be worked out according to Rule 12.2(3) of the Police Rules and submit that the competent authority be directed to follow the said Rule in letter and spirit and make necessary amendments in the seniority list of the police officers before us. We, therefore, direct the IGP to constitute a committee to look into the question of seniority of the parties before us in terms of Rule 12.2(3) and in the light of this judgment. The said committee shall also address the grievance(s) of other Police Officers, if any, who are not before us but belong to the same batch of officers as the parties before us.

13. It is also noted that the Inspector General of Police, Punjab ("IGP") enjoys administrative powers over the Police organization under Article 10 of the Police Order, 2022 read with Rule 12.1 of the Police Rules, therefore, he is under an obligation to exercise his legal powers within the organization to ensure that the police officers are dealt with in accordance with law within the statutory timelines. In case there is any unexplained delay in following the timeline the concerned Police Officers be held accountable and any action taken or penalty imposed upon them be duly reflected in their performance evaluation reports. The IGP may also consider constituting a standing committee headed by an Additional Inspector General of Police or any appropriate officer to regularly address the concerns of junior police officers with respect to their inter se seniority so that a police officer feels empowered that there is organizational justice in his organization. This will lead to developing a more robust, efficient and strong police force in the country.

14. For the above reasons, the impugned judgment is set aside and the listed appeals are allowed in the above terms. The connected listed Civil Petitions are also converted into appeals and allowed in the same terms.

MWA/H-1/SC Appeals allowed.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. (Majority view)

Respondent instituted a suit for recovery of damages against the petitioner alleging the commission of his defamation by the petitioner. The petitioner filed his written statement. After the close of the pleadings, the trial court fixed the case for pre-trial proceedings of discovery and inspection under Order XI of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 ("C.P.C."). Both the parties delivered their respective interrogatories. The respondent later withdrew some questions and delivered the amended interrogatories, with permission of the trial court. The respondent filed the answers to the interrogatories of the petitioner. The petitioner, however, filed objections (application) for rejection of the interrogatories of the respondent, instead of filing the answers thereto. The trial court observed that an application for rejection of the interrogatories could be filed under Rule 7 of Order XI, C.P.C. within seven days after service of the interrogatories, while the petitioner had first sought several adjournments for submitting the answers to the interrogatories and then filed such application (objections) after the lapse of about two months without any lawful justification and without seeking condonation of the delay. With these observations, the trial court overruled the objections of the petitioner and directed him to submit his answers to the interrogatories of the respondent, vide its order dated 20.10.2022. The petitioner was, thereafter, provided with several opportunities to file the answers to the interrogatories, but he failed to avail them. Consequently, the trial court struck out the right of defence of the petitioner under Rule 21 of Order XI, C.P.C., vide its order 24.11.2022, due to his non-submission of the answers to the said interrogatories. The petitioner challenged both the orders of the trial court by filing two revision petitions in the High Court, which petitions were dismissed by the impugned order and order of trial court was upheld.

Suit was instituted by the respondent, on 07-07-2017. The petitioner appeared in the suit through his counsel, on 09-09-2017. Petitioner and respondent filed several applications during proceedings of the case, wherein the petitioner was given warnings of "last and final" and "absolute last and final" opportunities to advance his arguments. Petitioner was provided with nine opportunities to file his written statement, again with warnings of "last and final" and "absolute last and final" opportunities. At last, the petitioner filed his written statement on 27-07-2021 after a period of about four (4) years since his appearance in the suit on 09-09-2017, which should have been filed by him till 09.10.2017 within a period of thirty days from the day of his appearance in the suit. Summary of the proceedings of the case in the trial court made during a period of four years, from the date of appearance of the petitioner on 09-09-2017 till 22-09-2021, gave credence to the contention of the respondent that the conduct of the petitioner had remained contumacious throughout the proceedings of the case in the trial court. The way the proceeding was prolonged by the petitioner at every stage of the case in the trial court, to delay the decision of the case, was more than evident.

Survey of the proceedings of the trial court as to delivering and answering the interrogatories by the parties under Order XI, C.P.C., from 05-01-2022 to 20-10-2022, showed the same delaying tactics of the petitioner by which he had been hindering the progress of the suit earlier.

Trial court had provided the petitioner with more than sufficient opportunities to submit his answers to the interrogatories of the respondent, before taking the penal action under Rule 21 of Order XI, C.P.C.

Overall conduct of the petitioner showed that he had protracted the proceedings of the case at every stage in the trial court, to delay the decision of the case.

Conduct of the petitioner had remained willfully contumacious and disobedient throughout the proceedings of the case in the trial court. Trial court had not committed any illegality or material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction by dismissing the objections (application) of the petitioner for rejection of the interrogatories of the respondent and directing him to submit the answers to those interrogatories and subsequently by striking out the right of defence of the petitioner due to non-submission of the answers to the said interrogatories. Petitions for leave to appeal were dismissed and leave was refused.

Per Ayesha A. Malik, J. (Minority view)

The basic question in the present case was to determine whether there was willful default on the part of the petitioner whereby he deliberately and intentionally disobeyed the order of trial court requiring him to file answers to the interrogatories. Present case was not a case of willful default and the failure on the part of the petitioner to file his answers was due to circumstances beyond his control. On 03-11-2022, the petitioner, while leading a political rally, was shot at and was taken to the hospital where he was operated upon. This fact was shown on all national news channels and covered by the print media and was not denied by the respondent. The trial court itself accepted the reason of hospitalization and injury on 08-11-2022 as well as 17-11-2022 which was evident from its orders. Under the circumstances, there was sufficient cause for seeking the adjournment and the Court acted in haste by issuing a warning on 17-11-2022 and thereafter incorrectly recorded in its order of 24-11-2022 that there was no lawful justification for the grant of adjournments especially since it accepted these reasons on 08.11.2022 and 17-11-2022. Accordingly, there was sufficient ground to give the adjournment, and the default was not willful. Under these circumstances, it could not be said that there was willful default and it also could not be said that the conduct of the petitioner was willfully contumacious, obstinate and disobedient. Further it also could not be said that during the period from 08-11-2022 to 24-11-2022, the adjournments were sought with the intent to delay the proceedings.

Power for striking out of the defence under Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C. can be exercised where the defaulting party fails to attend the hearing or is guilty of prolonged or inordinate and inexcusable delay which may cause substantial or serious prejudice to the opposite party; however, it is expected that before making an order for striking out of defence, the court must consider all the reasons given for the default which merits due consideration and assessment of facts. This is because the effect of striking out of the defence is that it will deprive the party of its ability to defend itself in the case which is a serious matter. In the present case, the court had other alternatives, at its disposal, to regulate the pace of the proceedings as well as the conduct of the petitioner, one of which was to impose costs which would not only serve as a form of deterrence but would also lay the foundation for expeditious justice and promote a smart legal system.

Qazi Naveed ul Islam v. District Judge 2023 SCP 32 ref.

In this case the trial court exercised its power mechanically and more importantly, the order by which the right of defence of the petitioner was struck out, did not state that it was based on the history of the case or the overall conduct of the petitioner in the case. In the event that the trial court was of the opinion that the conduct of the party suggested that there was willful disobedience or deliberate attempt to delay the proceedings then it had to record its findings accordingly. The trial court focused on the dates subsequent to the order by which it dismissed the objections (application) of the petitioner for rejection of the interrogatories of the respondent and directed him to submit the answers to those interrogatories, and not on the overall conduct of the petitioner, and reasoned that the adjournments were sought without cause and sufficient opportunities had been granted, i.e. the adjournments from 08-11-2022 to 24-11-2022. However, the order sheet did show that there were many adjournments, it also showed that oftentimes, the court had proceeded in a routine manner without much focus on the reasons for the adjournments.

The petitioner's recent public shooting and injury at a political rally justified the grant of an adjournment for a reasonable time under the circumstances. The right to defence could not be struck out without considering all relevant factors, and the court must weigh the balance between a fair trial and the circumstances at hand. The order sheet showed that the court proceeded in a mechanical manner with the case, and granted numerous adjournments without so much as imposing cost so as to discourage the same.

The striking out of the petitioner's right to defence, at present stage, while ignoring the legitimate factors in play, would be a gross injustice. The balancing act of justice must be upheld, and under these circumstances, the right to a fair defence must prevail. Accordingly, the impugned order of the trial court, whereby right of defence of petitioner was struck out, was set aside; and the case was remanded to the trial court to grant reasonable opportunity to the petitioner to file answers to the interrogatories and thereafter to proceed with the case in accordance with law.

----O. XVII--- Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 10A & 37(d)---Adjournments---Scope---Conclusion of litigation process within reasonable time period---Significance---Leniency shown on part of judges of Trial Court in the matter of accommodating unjustified requests for adjournment, even at the cost of disregarding the timelines provided in the relevant laws, is unwarranted---Peremptory order of the court, which specifies a time to do a certain act in the proceedings of the case with a warning of last opportunity, must be followed by the legal consequences prescribed by the relevant law for its non-compliance---Orders granting repetitive adjournments with warnings of "last and final" and "absolute last and final" opportunity become meaningless and shatter the confidence of the litigant public in the court orders and consequentially weaken the authority and fiat of the court---Toothless court is the worst form of injustice---Radical approach is required to tackle the problem of delay in the litigation process by enforcing a court-controlled case management system, which should ensure that once a litigant has entered the litigation process, his case proceeds in accordance with a timetable as prescribed by rules of court---Rules containing time limits for doing the specified acts necessary for the progress of a case are intended to accomplish the constitutional goal of fair trial and expeditious dispensation of justice by concluding the litigation process within a reasonable timeframe---Such rules should, therefore, be observed. (e) Administration of justice---

----Procedural law--- Timeframes provided in procedural law---Interpretation---Procedural rule prescribing the timeframe for doing a certain act in the course of the proceedings of a case should be followed as a rule and the departure therefrom can be made only as an exception in exceptional circumstances beyond the control of the party concerned.

The provisions of a procedural law are ordinarily directory in nature and are construed liberally to advance the cause of justice, as their main purpose is to facilitate the administration of justice. The same purposive approach is to be adopted while construing and applying a procedural provision which provides a timeframe for doing a certain act necessary to the further progress of the case. The main purpose of providing a timeframe in procedural rules is to expedite the hearing and conclusion of the case and to avoid unnecessary adjournments. Such rules are, therefore, to be adhered to for giving effect to the purpose of their making, else the non-compliance therewith would frustrate the objective of expeditious decision of the cases sought to be achieved by the legislature or the rule-making authority, as the case may be. The procedural rule prescribing the timeframe for doing a certain act in the course of the proceedings of a case should, therefore, be followed as a rule and the departure therefrom can be made only as an exception in exceptional circumstances beyond the control of the party concerned. The court may also ask for the filing of an affidavit or the necessary documents, depending on the facts and circumstances of the case, in support of those exceptional circumstances.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---(For himself and Amin-ud-Din Khan, J.) Through the present petitions, the petitioner seeks leave to appeal against a consolidated order of the Lahore High Court, dated 07.12.2022 ("impugned order"), whereby his two revision petitions filed against the orders of the trial court, dated 20.10.2022 and 24.11.2022, have been dismissed. The trial court had, by its order dated 20.10.2022, dismissed the objections (application) of the petitioner for rejection of the interrogatories of the respondent and directed him to submit the answers to those interrogatories and by its order dated 24.11.2022, struck out the right of defence of the petitioner due to non-submission of the answers to the said interrogatories.

2. Briefly, the facts of the case are that the respondent instituted a suit for recovery of damages against the petitioner, on 07.07.2017, alleging the commission of his defamation by the petitioner. The petitioner filed his written statement, on 27.07.2021. After the close of the pleadings, the trial court fixed the case for pre-trial proceedings of discovery and inspection under Order XI of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 ("C.P.C."). Both the parties delivered their respective interrogatories: the respondent, on 02.02.2022 and the petitioner, on 03.02.2022. The respondent later withdrew some questions and delivered the amended interrogatories, with permission of the trial court, on 08.03.2022. The respondent filed the answers to the interrogatories of the petitioner, on 16.03.2022. The petitioner, however, filed objections (application) for rejection of the interrogatories of the respondent, on 09.05.2022, instead of filing the answers thereto.

3. The trial court observed that an application for rejection of the interrogatories could be filed under Rule 7 of Order XI, C.P.C. within seven days after service of the interrogatories, while the petitioner had first sought several adjournments for submitting the answers to the interrogatories and then filed such application (objections) after the lapse of about two months without any lawful justification and without seeking condonation of the delay. With these observations, the trial court overruled the objections of the petitioner and directed him to submit his answers to the interrogatories of the respondent, vide its order dated 20.10.2022. The petitioner was, thereafter, provided with several opportunities to file the answers to the interrogatories, but he failed to avail them. Consequently, the trial court struck out the right of defence of the petitioner under Rule 21 of Order XI, C.P.C., vide its order 24.11.2022, due to his non-submission of the answers to the said interrogatories. The petitioner challenged both the orders of the trial court by filing two revision petitions in the Lahore High Court. After examining the record of the proceedings of the trial court, the High Court observed that the petitioner had failed to point out any illegality or material irregularity, or any jurisdictional defect, calling for interference in the orders passed by the trial court, in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. With these findings, the High Court dismissed both the revision petitions by the impugned order and upheld the orders of the trial court. Hence, the petitioner has filed these petitions for leave to appeal.

4. The learned counsel for the petitioner has mainly contended that the trial court did not perform its duty, under Rule 1 of Order XI, C.P.C., to examine the interrogatories of the respondent for determining whether or not they were relevant to the case; that the time of seven days mentioned in Rule 7 of Order XI, C.P.C. for making an application for setting aside the interrogatories is not mandatory; that the trial court had itself been extending the time for submitting the answers to the interrogatories, therefore, it could not have penalised the petitioner for its own acts; that before taking any penal action under Rule 21 of Order XI, there must be an order of the court, under Rule 11 of Order XI, requiring answers to the interrogatories, but no such order had been passed by the trial court in the present case; that the penal action of striking out the right of defence for non-submission of the answers to the interrogatories can be taken by a court only on an application of a party, not suo motu, and no such application had been filed by the respondent in the present case; that the penal provisions of Rule 21 of Order XI are not to be invoked lightly and before applying them an opportunity should be granted to do the needful, but no such opportunity was granted by the trial court to the petitioner in the present case; and that the technicalities should not be allowed to defeat justice, therefore, the petitioner may be provided with an opportunity to file the answers to the interrogatories of the respondent, in the interest of justice.

5. On the other hand, in addition to refuting the contentions of the petitioner, the learned counsel for the respondent has taken us through the record of the proceedings of the trial court, to submit that the conduct of the petitioner had remained contumacious throughout every stage of the proceedings, as much as he filed the written statement on 27.07.2021, after a period of about four years since his appearance in the suit on 09.09.2017, which was otherwise to be filed within thirty days from such appearance under Rule 1 of Order VIII, C.P.C.; that in the proceedings so far conducted in the trial court, the petitioner has sought eighty (80) adjournments; that the trial court had committed no illegality or material irregularity in making the orders dated 20.10.2022 and 24.11.2022, as has been observed by the High Court in the impugned order, and the revision petitions of the petitioner have rightly been dismissed by the High Court.

6. We have considered the contentions of the learned counsel for the parties, read the cases cited by them and examined the record of the case.

7. As the jurisdiction of this Court under Article 185(3) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 to grant the leave to appeal is discretionary,[1] the conduct of a petitioner has a substantial bearing on the question of granting or declining such leave to him.[2] The conduct of a party is also material for the purpose of exercising the court's discretion under Rule 21 of Order XI, C.P.C. the court takes the penal action of dismissing the suit of the plaintiff or striking out the defence of the defendant when the party concerned is guilty of contumacious conduct by disregarding the specific order of the court, for compliance of which the court has granted a reasonable time and a sufficient opportunity.[3] However, it is not only a deliberate failure to comply with a specific order of the court by a party that is regarded as his contumacious conduct but a series of separate inordinate delays caused by him at different stages of the proceedings of the case is also a convincing proof of such conduct.[4]

8. In light of the above principles, we have gone through the copies of the complete order sheet of the trial court submitted on behalf of the respondent in support of the contention that the conduct of the petitioner has remained willfully contumacious and disobedient throughout the proceedings of the case in the trial court. We have noted that the suit was instituted by the respondent, on 07.07.2017. The petitioner appeared in the suit through his counsel, on 09.09.2017 and was provided with two opportunities, on his request, to submit the written statement within a period of thirty days as per Rule 1 of Order VIII, C.P.C. On 09.10.2017, when the case was fixed for filing of written statement as a second opportunity within the permissible time limit of thirty days, the petitioner instead of presenting his written statement filed an application under Rule 10 of Order VII, C.P.C. for returning the plaint to the respondent on the ground of lack of territorial jurisdiction of the trial court. The respondent filed his written reply to that application on the very next date, i.e., on 19.10.2017. Thereafter, several opportunities were given to the petitioner for arguments on the said application till 29.09.2018 during the period of about one year; many of them were with warnings of "last and final" and "absolute last and final" opportunities. On 29.09.2018, instead of advancing arguments on his application under Rule 10 of Order VII, the petitioner made another miscellaneous application under Rule 16 of Order XI, C.P.C. for the production of certain documents by the respondent. In the next seven months, the petitioner was provided with several opportunities to advance arguments on the said applications, again with warnings of "last and final" and "absolute last and final" opportunities; which were not advanced and after protracting the proceedings of the case for about seven months, the application under Rule 10 of Order VII was withdrawn by the petitioner on 04.05.2019. Thereafter, the hearing of the case was adjourned on several dates for arguments on the application of the petitioner under Rule 16 of Order XI, C.P.C., for a period of about six months. On 30.10.2019, the respondent filed two applications: the one under Rule 10 of Order VIII, C.P.C. for closing the right of the petitioner to file his written statement and the second under section 151, C.P.C. read with section 14 of the Defamation Ordinance, 2002 for the early decision of the suit. Again, the petitioner was provided with several opportunities to file written replies to the said two applications of the respondent, with warnings of "last and final" and "absolute last and final" opportunities, which were filed on 18.02.2020 after delaying the proceedings of the case on this matter for a period of about four months. After this, the petitioner was provided with several opportunities to advance arguments on the said applications of the respondent as well as on his own application under Rule 16 of Order XI, C.P.C. till 24.04.2021, again with warnings of "last and final" and "absolute last and final" opportunities. The arguments on the application of the petitioner under Rule 16 of Order XI, C.P.C. were heard on 24.04.2021 and the said application was dismissed by the trial court on 26.04.2021. In the next about three months, the petitioner was provided with nine opportunities to file his written statement, again with warnings of "last and final" and "absolute last and final" opportunities. At last, the petitioner filed his written statement on 27.07.2021 after a period of about four (4) years since his appearance in the suit on 09.09.2017, which should have been filed by him till 09.10.2017 within a period of thirty days from the day of his appearance in the suit as per Rule 1 of Order VIII, C.P.C. After filing the written statement, the petitioner first pressed before the trial court to decide upon his objection taken in the written statement as to the territorial jurisdiction on three dates of hearing, and then on the fourth date, i.e., 22.09.2021, his counsel made the statement that the said objection may be decided after recording evidence. The trial court, on the said date, also disposed of the above-mentioned two applications of the respondent, with the observations that as the petitioner had filed his written statement, the application for closing his right to file the written statement became infructuous and that from then onward, short dates would be fixed in the case to decide it expeditiously.

9. The above summary of the proceedings of the case in the trial court made during a period of four years, from the date of appearance of the petitioner on 09.09.2017 till 22.09.2021, gives credence to the contention of the respondent that the conduct of the petitioner has remained contumacious throughout the proceedings of the case in the trial court. The way the proceeding was prolonged by the petitioner at every stage of the case in the trial court, to delay the decision of the case, is more than evident.

10. Before proceeding further to examine the conduct of the petitioner during the proceeding of delivering and answering the interrogatories under Order XI, C.P.C., we think it appropriate to observe here that although we are cognizant of the fact that the judges of the trial courts perform the onerous task of dispensing justice at the grassroots in the stressful and challenging conditions and in a difficult and demanding environment,[5] the leniency shown on their part in the matter of accommodating unjustified requests for adjournment, even at the cost of disregarding the timelines provided in the relevant laws, is unwarranted. No doubt, all judges including the trial court judges should be courteous and polite while interacting with the members of the bar and the litigant public appearing before them but at the same time, they must be firm in conducting the proceedings of the cases in accordance with law. A "peremptory order"[6] of the court, which specifies a time to do a certain act in the proceedings of the case with a warning of last opportunity, must be followed by the legal consequences prescribed by the relevant law for its non-compliance. Orders granting repetitive adjournments with warnings of "last and final" and "absolute last and final" opportunity become meaningless and shatter the confidence of the litigant public in the court orders and consequentially weaken the authority and fiat of the court. Toothless court is the worst form of injustice. A court, no matter how high or low in the pyramidical court system, is still a court of law and must not shy away from exercising its authority under the law. Effective and efficient court house is the basic foundation of rule of law in any constitutional democracy. In this regard, we fully agree and endorse the following observations of a two-member bench of this Court made in the Moon Enterpriser case[7] in regard to an order for producing evidence and are of the view that these observations apply not only to the orders of producing evidence but also to all types of the court orders:

In our view it is important for the purpose of maintaining the confidence of the litigants in the court systems and the presiding officers that where last opportunity to produce evidence is granted and the party has been warned of the consequences, the court must enforce its order unfailingly and unscrupulously without exception. Such order would in our opinion not only put the system back on track and reaffirm the majesty of the law but also put a check on the trend of seeking multiple adjournments on frivolous grounds to prolong and delay proceedings without any valid or legitimate rhyme or reason. Where the Court has passed an order granting the last opportunity, it has not only passed a judicial order but also made a promise to the parties to the lis that no further adjournments will be granted for any reason. The Court must enforce its order and honour its promise. There is absolutely no room or choice to do anything else. The order to close the right to produce evidence must automatically follow failure to produce evidence despite last opportunity coupled with a warning. The trend of granting (Akhri Mouqa) then (Qatai Akhri Mouqa) and then (Qatai Qatai Akhri Mouqa) make a mockery of the provisions of law and those responsible to interpret and implement it. Such practices must be discontinued, forthwith.

The inordinate delay in the conclusion of cases is the main challenge faced by the judiciary, which has a devastating effect on the credibility of the justice system and the public confidence reposed in it. A radical approach is required, as said by Lord Griffiths,[8] to tackle the problem of delay in the litigation process by enforcing a court-controlled case management system, which should ensure that once a litigant has entered the litigation process, his case proceeds in accordance with a timetable as prescribed by rules of court. Litigants and their legal advisors must recognise that any delay, which occurs due to non compliance with the prescribed timetables, is assessed not only from the point of view of the prejudice caused to a particular litigant in whose case it occurs but also in relation to the negative effect it has on the overall administration of justice. It is in the interests of litigants as a whole that the court's time is not unnecessarily absorbed in dealing with "satellite litigation" which failure to comply with the prescribed timetables creates.[9] The rules containing time limits for doing the specified acts necessary for the progress of a case are intended to accomplish the constitutional goal of fair trial and expeditious dispensation of justice by concluding the litigation process within a reasonable timeframe.[10] These rules should, therefore, be observed.

11. To tackle the problem of delay in the process of civil litigation, the Lahore High Court, in the exercise of its rule-making power under section 122 of the C.P.C., has made substantial changes in the rules of civil procedure contained in the First Schedule to the C.P.C. in 2018, on several matters including the process of interrogatories. "Interrogatories", i.e., the written questions, are delivered by one party to his opponent party for answering them on oath in the form of an affidavit. The interrogatories differ from the pleadings: the object of the pleadings is to ascertain what the issues are, while the main object of the interrogatories is to save time and expense by enabling a party to obtain an admission of certain facts from his opponent, which narrows down the issues for trial and thus reduces the burden of proof.[11] However, as a party need not mention in his pleading the evidence by which he is to prove the facts asserted by him for making his claim or defence, a party cannot ask through an interrogatory his opponent party as to what evidence the latter would produce in support of his claim or defence.[12] The interrogatories when delivered by the parties to each other at a pretrial stage of the case, on the facts which are directly in issue or on such facts the existence or non-existence of which is relevant to the existence or non-existence of the facts directly in issue, can obviate the expensive and time-consuming process of proving certain facts, dispose of some issues even before trial and lessen the number of witnesses to be recorded in the case.[13] The fair use of the process of interrogatories, therefore, ultimately results in an overall shortening of the trial and thus helps achieve the constitutional goal of the inexpensive and expeditious dispensation of justice. Interrogatories therefore play a vital role in making the civil trial court system more effective and efficient.

12. Turning to the examination of the conduct of the petitioner during the proceeding of delivering and answering the interrogatories under Order XI, C.P.C. in the present case, we find it appropriate to first cite here the relevant Rules of Order XI, C.P.C.:

Rule 1. Discoveries by interrogatories.

The Court shall direct the parties to deliver interrogatories in writing for the examination of the opposite parties or any one or more of such parties stating clearly which of such interrogatories each of such person is required to answer, provided that the Court may reject an interrogatory or part thereof which, in its opinion, is not relevant to the case.

(as amended by the Lahore High Court in 2018)

Rule 2. Communication of interrogatories.

On receipt of the interrogatories under rule 1, the Court shall deliver the interrogatories to the concerned person for submitting the answer within such time as the Court may specify.

(as amended by the Lahore High Court in 2018)

Rule 6. Objections to interrogatories by answer.

Any objection to answering any interrogatory on the ground that it is scandalous or irrelevant or not exhibited bona fide for the purpose of the suit, or that the matters inquired into are not sufficiently material at that stage, or on any other ground, may be taken in the affidavit in answer.

Rule 7. Setting aside and striking out interrogatories.

Any interrogatories may be set aside on the ground that they have been exhibited unreasonably or vexatiously, or struck out on the ground that they are prolix, oppressive, unnecessary or scandalous; and any application for this purpose may be made within seven days after service of the interrogatories.

Rule 8. Affidavit.

The interrogatories shall be answered by an affidavit to be filed within the time specified by the Court.

(as amended by the Lahore High Court in 2018)

Rule 11. Order to answer or answer further.

Where any person interrogated submits an insufficient or an evasive answer, the Court may require him to submit the proper answer within the time specified by the Court.

(as amended by the Lahore High Court in 2018)

Rule 21. Non-compliance with order for discovery.

Where any party fails to comply with any order to answer interrogatories, or for discovery or inspection of documents, he shall, if a plaintiff, be liable to have his suit dismissed for want of prosecution, and, if a defendant, to have his defence, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended, and the party interrogating or seeking discovery or inspection may apply to the Court for an order to that effect, and an order may be made accordingly.

The perusal of the order sheet of the trial court shows that on 05.01.2022, the trial court directed the parties to deliver their interrogatories, in accordance with Rule 1 of Order XI, C.P.C. Both the parties delivered their respective interrogatories: the respondent, on 02.02.202 and the petitioner, on 03.02.2022. The respondent later withdrew some questions and delivered the amended interrogatories, with permission of the trial court, on 08.03.2022 and the hearing was adjourned to 16.03.2016 for filing answers by the parties to the interrogatories of each other. The respondent filed the answers to the interrogatories of the petitioner, on 16.03.2022, while the petitioner requested another opportunity, which was granted and the hearing of the case was adjourned to 26.03.2022. The petitioner did not file his answers to the interrogatories till that date and the hearing was adjourned to 09.04.2022. On 09.04.2022, 20.04.2022 and 26.04.2022, the petitioner requested further opportunities for filing the answers to the interrogatories, which were accordingly granted to him and in the order dated 26.04.2022, the trial court also made a warning of last opportunity to file the answers to the interrogatories and adjourned the hearing to 09.05.2022. On 09.05.2022, instead of filing the answers for which the petitioner had earlier been requesting opportunities, the petitioner filed the objections (application) for rejection of the interrogatories of the respondent. The respondent filed his written reply to the said objections (application) of the petitioner, on 14.05.2022. On 21.05.2022, 30.05.2022, 08.06.2022, 05.07.2022, 27.07.2022 and 05.10.2022, the hearing of the case was adjourned on request of the petitioner for arguments on the said objections (application). The arguments were heard on 19.10.2022 and vide its order dated 20.10.2022, the trial court overruled the objections of the petitioner and directed him to submit his answers to the interrogatories of the respondent, with the observations that an application for rejection of the interrogatories could be filed under Rule 7 of Order XI, C.P.C. within seven days after service of the interrogatories, while the petitioner had first sought several adjournments for submitting the answers to the interrogatories and then filed such application (objections) after the lapse of about two months without any lawful justification and without seeking condonation of the delay.

13. The above survey of the proceedings of the trial court as to delivering and answering the interrogatories by the parties under Order XI, C.P.C., from 05.01.2022 to 20.10.2022, shows the same delaying tactics of the petitioner by which he had been hindering the progress of the suit earlier. The learned counsel for the petitioner has contended that the time of seven days mentioned in Rule 7 of Order XI, C.P.C. is not mandatory rather it is directory, and that strict compliance is required only of a mandatory provision while substantial compliance with a directory provision is sufficient.

14. It is true that the provisions of a procedural law are ordinarily directory in nature and are construed liberally to advance the cause of justice, as their main purpose is to facilitate the administration of justice. The same purposive approach is to be adopted while construing and applying a procedural provision which provides a timeframe for doing a certain act necessary to the further progress of the case. The main purpose of providing a timeframe in procedural rules is to expedite the hearing and conclusion of the case and to avoid unnecessary adjournments. Such rules are, therefore, to be adhered to for giving effect to the purpose of their making, else the non-compliance therewith would frustrate the objective of expeditious decision of the cases sought to be achieved by the legislature or the rule-making authority, as the case may be. The procedural rule prescribing the timeframe for doing a certain act in the course of the proceedings of a case should, therefore, be followed as a rule and the departure therefrom can be made only as an exception in exceptional circumstances beyond the control of the party concerned. The court may also ask for the filing of an affidavit or the necessary documents, depending on the facts and circumstances of the case, in support of those exceptional circumstances.[14]

15. In the present case, no request was made by the petitioner under section 148, C.P.C. seeking an extension of the time for filing his objections (application), or condonation of the delay as observed by the trial court in its order dated 20.10.2022.

16. As for his contention that the trial court did not perform its duty of determining the relevancy of the interrogatories under Rule 1 of Order XI before delivering the same under Rule 2 for submitting the answers, we find that there is nothing on record from which it can be inferred that the trial court did not make such examination of the interrogatories of the parties before delivering the same to each other and requiring them to submit the answers thereto. The presumption of regularity is attached to judicial proceedings; therefore, in absence of the contrary material, it is to be presumed that the trial court delivered the interrogatories and required submission of their answers after making such examination. Secondly, if it is assumed that the trial court did not make such examination of the interrogatories, even then it has no legal effect and consequences as the parties still had ample opportunity to raise objections to the interrogatories of each other under Rule 6 or 7. The power of the trial court under Rule 1 to examine the interrogatories before delivering the same to the party concerned under Rule 2 and to reject any irrelevant interrogatory at that stage, is permissive, not obligatory. The non-exercise of which does not vitiate the order of the court delivering the interrogatories to the party concerned under Rule 2 for submitting the answers. It is a matter of common knowledge that our trial courts are overburdened with high pendency of cases and therefore cannot be expected, in the prevailing circumstances, to make such examination of the interrogatories in every case, under Rule 1. Rather, it appears to us to be more practicable in the prevailing circumstances and in our system of administration of civil justice, which is primarily adversarial, that the party concerned should invite the attention of the trial court for such examination, either (i) by making an application under Rule 7 of Order XI if all or most of the interrogatories delivered appear to be irrelevant by specifying the particular objection taken to each of such interrogatories separately, or (ii) by answering those interrogatories which he thinks are relevant and taking objection to those which he thinks are irrelevant as per Rule 6 of Order XI, C.P.C. In the present case, the petitioner opted for the first mode but not in a bona fide, proper and prescribed manner, as he first lingered on the matter by requesting several opportunities to submit the answers to the interrogatories and then instead of submitting the answers filed objections (application) for rejection of the interrogatories after a period of about two months instead of the prescribed period of seven days, and that too without seeking an extension of the time under section 148 of the C.P.C. by showing sufficient reason (exceptional circumstance), nor did he specify the particular objection to each of the interrogatories separately rather made general objections to all of them jointly, though he attempted to fill up the lacuna in his written arguments submitted on 05.07.2022 which too were after the lapse of the prescribed time under Order XI, Rule 7, C.P.C. The adjournments sought by the petitioner for advancing arguments on his own objections (application) also strengthen the impression that in making the said objections he was acting in furtherance of his design to prolong the proceedings of the case on one pretext or another. Thus, we do not see any illegality or material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction by the trial court in overruling the objections of the petitioner and directing him to submit the answers to the interrogatories of the respondent vide its order dated 20.10.2020, which may have called for interference by the High Court in its revisional jurisdiction under section 115, C.P.C.

17. Proceeding further to the examination of the conduct of the petitioner after the order of the trial court, dated 20.10.2022, we have noted that vide its order dated 20.10.2022, the trial court directed the petitioner to submit his answers to the interrogatories of the respondent till 26.10.2022. On 26.10.2022, 08.11.2022 and 17.11.2022, three further opportunities were given to the petitioner, on requests of his counsel, to submit the answers to the interrogatories of the respondent. In its order dated 17.11.2022, the trial court made a clear warning of the last opportunity and also specified the consequence of non-compliance with the court order, thus:

At request of learned counsel for the defendant, one more adjournment is hereby granted to submit replies by the defendant regarding concerned interrogatories of the plaintiff's side. File be put up on 24.11.2022 for submission of requisite replies by the defendant's side regarding concerned interrogatories of the plaintiff in the form of one more opportunity. It is hereby clarified that in case of non-submission of requisite replies by the defendant's side regarding concerned interrogatories of the plaintiff's side on the next date, the right of defence of the defendant shall be struck out.

Despite the above warning of the trial court, the petitioner did not submit his answers to the interrogatories of the respondent on 24.11.2022, rather he made an application for further adjournment this time on the ground that he intended to file a revision petition against the order of the trial court dismissing his objections (application) for rejection of the interrogatories. The ground pleaded for seeking adjournment was misconceived and untenable, as on the last four dates, the petitioner had been seeking adjournments for filing his answers to the interrogatories. The conduct of the petitioner was the same as it had been throughout the proceedings of the case and as was his previous conduct when at an earlier stage, he had filed the objections (application) for rejection of the interrogatories after seeking several opportunities for submitting his answers. The trial court rejected the application of the petitioner for further adjournment and struck out his right of defence, under Rule 21 of Order XI, vide its order dated 24.11.2022. In view of the noted facts and circumstances, we do not find any illegality or material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction by the trial court in making the said order.

18. The learned counsel for the petitioner has contended that before taking any penal action under Rule 21 of Order XI, there must be an order of the court under Rule 11 requiring answers to the interrogatories, but no such order had been passed by the trial court in the present case. We are afraid, this contention is oblivious of the substitution of Rules 2 and 11 of Order XI, C.P.C. by the Lahore High Court amendments made in 2018, and the cases cited in support of the said contention are also not relevant, for the same reason. The expression, "any order to answer interrogatories", used in Rule 21 of Order XI includes both orders of the court: (i) the order of the court made under the substituted Rule 2, requiring the first submission of the answer to the interrogatories, and (ii) the order of the court made under the substituted Rule 11, requiring submission of the proper answer, in case the first submitted answer is found insufficient or evasive. In the present case, the petitioner did not submit any answer to the interrogatories of the respondent in compliance with the order of the trial court made under Rule 2; therefore, there was no occasion for the trial court to make an order directing the petitioner under Rule 11 for submitting the "proper answer."

19. As far as the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that the penal action under Rule 21 of Order XI can be taken by a court only on an application of the party, not suo motu, and his reference to two judgments[15] of the High Courts of the neighbouring jurisdiction are concerned, we are of the considered view that the said contention is untenable and the said reference is inapt as the learned counsel has made the same without appreciating the changes made by the Lahore High Court in the rules contained in Order XI on the process of delivering interrogatories and requiring answers thereto. Through the Lahore High Court amendments, the role and importance of interrogatories in a civil trial has been enhanced by empowering the trial court to be more active and controlling in the matter of interrogatories: the newly inserted Rule 1 of the Order IX-A mandates the trial court to fix a day, after the close of the pleadings, for the proceedings of discovery and inspection under Order XI; the substituted Rules 1 and 2 of Order XI require the trial court to direct the parties to deliver their interrogatories and on receipt thereof, to deliver the same to the party concerned for submitting the answers within such time as it may specify. In the wake of this paradigm shift in the civil procedure code, interrogatories have to be viewed as an essential constituent of civil trial. These amendments would be rendered useless if the trial court enjoys no power to enforce its order by first issuing the warning of the proposed penal action and then to take the said action if its order is not complied with despite that warning, without an application of the party. The trial court, in our opinion, does have the power to take the penal action on its own if its order is not complied with despite giving the warning of last opportunity for compliance. The interpretation put to the provisions of Rule 21 by the High Courts of the neigbouring jurisdiction is no more relevant in the Province of Punjab where the Lahore High Court has amended the overall scheme of the process of delivering interrogatories and requiring their answers.

20. Even otherwise, it has been held in one[16] of the cases referred to by the learned counsel for the petitioner, that the expression "apply" used in Rule 21 includes oral application (request) also, and the application need not be in the written form necessarily. In the present case, the respondent had opposed on several occasions the requests of the petitioner seeking adjournments for submitting answers to the interrogatories. Such opposition of the respondent amounts to his oral request (application) for taking penal action against the petitioner under Rule 21 for non-submission of the answers to the interrogatories, else there remains no meaning of that opposition of the respondent to the requests made by the petitioner for adjournments. The recording of the warning in its order dated 17.11.2022 by the trial court to strike out the right of defence of the petitioner in case he failed to submit his answers to the interrogatories of the respondent till the next date also shows the making of an oral request on behalf of the respondent for such penal action against the petitioner.

21. The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that the penal provisions of Rule 21 of Order XI are not to be invoked lightly and before applying them an opportunity should be granted to do the needful, but no such opportunity was granted by the trial court to the petitioner before applying them in the present case, is absolutely unsustainable, as the trial court had provided the petitioner with more than sufficient opportunities to submit his answers to the interrogatories of the respondent, before taking the penal action under Rule 21 of Order XI, C.P.C. Similarly, his contention that the trial court had itself been extending the time for submitting the answers to the interrogatories, therefore, it could not have penalised the petitioner for its own acts, appears to us to be completely untenable, as the trial court had been granting the adjournments on request of the petitioner, not because of its own reasons.

22. Lastly, the learned counsel for the petitioner has submitted that the technicalities should not be allowed to defeat justice, therefore, the petitioner may be provided with an opportunity to file the answer to the interrogatories of the respondent, in the interest of justice. We have thought over this submission deeply and come to the considered opinion that it cannot be entertained, especially in view of the overall conduct of the petitioner by which he had protracted the proceedings of the case at every stage in the trial court, to delay the decision of the case. The power of the trial court under Rule 1 of Order XVII of the C.P.C. to grant an adjournment on being shown the sufficient cause is discretionary; therefore, an appellate court cannot interfere with the order of the trial court, either granting or refusing adjournment, unless it is found that the discretionary power has been exercised perversely or arbitrarily. We see no perversity or arbitrariness in the order of the trial court, dated 24.11.2022, rejecting the application of the petitioner for a further adjournment, rather find it completely reasonable and justified, as the ground pleaded for seeking adjournment was legally untenable and thus did not constitute a "sufficient cause" within the meaning of that term as used in Rule 1 of Order XVII and as more than sufficient opportunities (adjournments) had already been granted to the petitioner. Further, by accepting such a submission, we would be doing the same thing for which this Court has deprecated the trial courts in the Moon Enterpriser case[17] for granting further adjournments even after recording the warning of the last opportunity, by first giving last opportunity (Akhri Mouqa) then final last opportunity (Qatai Akhri Mouqa) and then absolute final last opportunity (Qatai Qatai Akhri Mouqa). This Court has observed in the said case that the practice of granting adjournments in this manner amounts to making a mockery of the law and the court orders, and that such practice must be discontinued. We cannot, by accepting the submission, create a double standard: one for this Court and the other for the trial courts.

23. Having examined the contentions of the parties in the light of the record of the case, we find that the contentions of the learned counsel for the respondent are correct, that the conduct of the petitioner has remained willfully contumacious and disobedient throughout the proceedings of the case in the trial court, and that the trial court had not committed any illegality or material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction by making the orders dated 20.10.2022 and 24.11.2022, therefore, the High Court has rightly declined to interfere with them in its revisional jurisdiction under section 115, C.P.C. In addition to the said conduct of the petitioner that disentitles him for the indulgence of this Court in its discretionary jurisdiction under Article 185(3) of the Constitution, we find his petitions are without substance on merits as well. The present petitions are, therefore, dismissed and the leave to appeal, declined.

24. Before parting with the order, we find it necessary to observe that interrogatories serve as a useful tool to shorten litigation and reduces litigational expenses, However, the process of interrogatories has unfortunately been abused in the present case and infact misused to prolong the trial and add to the expenses. Such an abuse of the process of interrogatories has to be curbed with a heavy hand. The fair use of the process of interrogatories, as said by Justice Walsh,[18] should be encouraged, for it would result in considerable saving of time and money and thus be beneficial to the parties of the case as well as to the administration of justice in general. It is high time that our civil courts prove Justice Walsh right!

25. This is the majority view, on the basis whereof short order dated 29.12.2022 was passed, which, for completion of record, is reproduced hereunder:-

For the reasons to be recorded later these petitions are dismissed and leave refused by a majority of two-to-one (Ayesha A. Malik, J., dissenting).

AYESHA A. MALIK, J.---I have had the opportunity of going through the majority judgment authored by Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J., and agree with the conclusion drawn with respect to Civil Petition No.3436-L of 2022. However, after having perused the facts and record of Civil Petition No.3437 of 2022, I find myself in disagreement with the conclusion reached therein which finds that the conduct of the Petitioner was willfully contumacious and disobedient throughout the proceedings of the case in the trial and, therefore, warranted action under Order XI Rule 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (C.P.C.) and further that the Lahore High Court, Lahore (High Court) rightly declined to interfere with the order of 24.11.2022 in its revisional jurisdiction.

2. The basic facts of the case have been narrated in paragraphs 2 to 5 of the majority's opinion, however, for the sake of easy reference, the essential facts are reiterated and divided into three parts.

(i) A suit for recovery of rupees ten billion as damages for defamation under sections 4 and 9 of the Defamation Ordinance, 2002 (Ordinance) was filed by the Respondent against the Petitioner on 07.07.2017. The Petitioner entered appearance on 09.09.2017 and the case was fixed for filing of the written statement on 25.09.2017 and 09.10.2017. The written statement was not filed on either date. The Respondent objected to the fact that the Petitioner had not filed his written statement on 09.10.2017 within the 30 days requirement, instead the court granted time for submission of the written statement on 09.10.2017. From 09.10.2017 until 26.04.2021 there is no direction by the trial court to file the written statement. On 26.04.2021, 17.05.2021, 31.05.2021, 05.06.2021, 16.06.2021, 26.06.2021, 29.06.2021, 06.07.2021 and 16.07.2021 directions were given to file the written statement. On 17.05.2021 and 05.06.2021, the last and final opportunity was granted to the Petitioner for filing the written statement. It was eventually filed on 27.07.2021 after a delay of four years.

(ii) During this four-year period, the Petitioner filed applications under Order VII, Rule 10, C.P.C. and Order XI, Rule 16, C.P.C. The Respondent filed two applications; one, under section 151, C.P.C. read with section 14 of the Ordinance for early decision in the suit, and second, under section 151, C.P.C. read with Order VIII, Rules 1 and 10, C.P.C., for closing the Petitioner's right to file his written statement, respectively. The trial court proceeded on the various applications pending before it until 04.05.2019 when the application under Order VII, Rule 10, C.P.C. was withdrawn and then on 26.04.2021, the application under Order XI, Rule 16, C.P.C. was dismissed. On 22.09.2021, the Respondent's applications were disposed of. From 06.10.2021 to 16.11.2021, the case proceeded in the case management conference. On 16.11.2021 to 18.12.2021, the case proceeded for submission of Form No. 13 and for examination of parties under Order X, C.P.C. On 18.12.2021, the case was fixed for discovery and inspection under Order XI, C.P.C. and on 05.01.2022 the parties were directed to file their interrogatories.

(iii) The interrogatories were filed by the Petitioner and the Respondent, on 02.02.2022 and 03.02.2022, respectively. On 11.02.2022, the Respondent sought time to amend his interrogatories which amendment was allowed and consequently on 08.03.2022 the amended interrogatories were filed by the Respondent on which date the Petitioner was directed to file his reply to the interrogatories. After the first direction, the Petitioner sought three adjournments for filing his reply on 09.04.2022, 20.04.2022 and 26.04.2022, and filed objections to the interrogatories on 09.05.2022. The objections were overruled on 20.10.2022 on which date, the Petitioner was directed to file his reply to the interrogatories. The Petitioner sought adjournments on 26.10.2022, 08.11.2022 and 17.11.2022 and his right to defence was struck out on 24.11.2022 under Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C.

3. Civil Petition No.3436 of 2022 was filed with respect to the order of 20.10.2022 whereby the objections of the Petitioner were overruled by the trial court. The trial court rejected the objections as the same were filed after the seven days period prescribed under Order XI, Rule 7, C.P.C. I agree with the majority judgment regarding this matter to the extent that the Petitioner's objections were time barred, and therefore, the same were rightly dismissed.

4. The issue before the Court in Civil Petition No.3437 of 2022 is whether the trial court was justified in striking out the defence of the Petitioner under Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C., based on the non-compliance with its direction in the order dated 20.10.2022 to file answers to the interrogatories.

5. The impugned order dated 07.12.2022 of the High Court finds that the trial court has jurisdiction to strike out the right of defence of a defaulting party for non-compliance with the provisions of the law or the orders of the court and that such orders are necessary to prevent substantial or serious prejudice to the opposite party due to negligence or inexcusable delay. The argument of the counsel for the Petitioner is that the provisions of Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C. are penal and before invoking the same, the court should satisfy itself that punitive action is necessary as the party has willfully disobeyed an order of the Court. That failure to comply with an order in genuine circumstances where adequate reasons are given does not amount to being willful and cannot be construed as a default under Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C. Further that the Court can condone the non-compliance simpliciter or else impose costs if need be and is not obligated to take penal action. He argued that since penal provisions contemplate severe consequences, discretion should be exercised cautiously as it affects the Petitioner's constitutional rights to due process and fair trial. In support of this contention, reliance is placed on the case reported as Mirza Ali Khan v. Mst. Shahida Parveen and others (1992 SCMR 2112). The counsel also argued that penalty for non compliance with an order as per Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C. must be strictly construed to be applied only in extreme cases where there is obstinacy, contumacy or a willful attempt to disregard the orders of the court. In the present case, there was a sufficient cause for the non-compliance which was neither intentional nor willful and was beyond the control of the Petitioner. He stated that the Petitioner on 03.11.2022, while leading a political rally, was shot at and was taken to the hospital where he was operated upon. The counsel further stated that this fact was shown on all national news channels and covered by the print media and was stated as the reason by the counsel of the Petitioner for the adjournments on 08.11.2022, 17.11.2022 and 24.11.2022. Learned counsel submitted that there was no willful attempt on the part of the Petitioner to disregard the order of the court as he was hospitalized and due to security reasons, his counsel was unable to contact him and obtain the reply and affidavit for filing answers to the interrogatories. He argued that these were genuine grounds for seeking the adjournments which were also accepted by the trial court, however, it gave insufficient time in circumstances, within which the reply could not be filed (from 08.11.2022 to 24.11.2022). He stated that striking out the right of defence of the Petitioner vide the order of 24.11.2022 which has been upheld by the High Court, amounts to a wrongful exercise of discretion as the settled principle of law is that lis should be decided on its merits and technicalities should not stand in the way of administration of justice.

6. The Respondent's counsel relied on the conduct of the Petitioner throughout the suit stating that the Petitioner resorted to delaying tactics by not filing the written statement within the prescribed 30 days and instead filed frivolous applications and sought unnecessary adjournments over a period of four years; that he changed his lawyers several times and thereby hampered the case from proceeding as per law. He argued that the Petitioner was obligated to file a reply to the interrogatories and was given sufficient opportunity to file his answers after which the court was well within its discretion to regulate its proceedings and strike out the defence of the Petitioner for non-compliance with its orders.

7. Rule 21 of Order XI, C.P.C. is reproduced hereunder:

"21. Non-compliance with order for discovery. Where any party fails to comply with any order to answer interrogatories or for discovery or inspection of documents, he shall, if a plaintiff, be liable to have his suit dismissed for want of prosecution, and, if a defendant, to have his defence, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended, and the party interrogating or seeking discovery of inspection may apply to the Court for an order to that effect and an order may be made accordingly."

The said Rule prescribes penal consequences where a party fails to comply with an order to answer interrogatories, or for discovery or inspection of documents. This provision has two requirements: firstly, an order for the discovery of documents or the filing of answers to interrogatories must be made, and secondly, such an order must not be complied with. The provisions of this Rule impose a penalty for non-compliance with a court order such that the suit can be dismissed if it is the plaintiff or the defence can be struck out if it is the defendant. The consequence of non- compliance with an order of the Court directing for answers to the interrogatories, discovery or inspection is grave which is why the law is settled on this point that penal provisions should be strictly construed and used with caution where circumstances mandate the same (Messrs United Bank Limited v. Yousuf Haji Noor Muhammad Dhadhi (1988 SCMR 82). What the Court is essentially looking for under Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C. is a default on the part of the plaintiff or defendant to comply with its order to file its answer to the interrogatories or for discovery, or for inspection of documents. The test to ascertain whether there has been a default in compliance with an order of the Court is to see whether such default was done willfully. In this respect in the case reported as Messrs Babar Sewing Machine Company v. Tirlok Nath Mahajan ((1978) 4 SCC 188) the court elaborates that an order under Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C. ought not to be made unless the court is satisfied that the party was willfully withholding information by refusing to answer interrogatories. The act of being willful means that it is done deliberately and intentionally and cannot be something that is done by accident or inadvertently or for reasons beyond the control of the party. Essentially, it goes directly to the conduct of a person with reference to the order for filing the answers to interrogatories, or for discovery or inspection and the intent behind such conduct. The underlying consideration for the Court before invoking Rule 21 of Order XI, C.P.C. is to satisfy itself that non-compliance with its order was willful, deliberate and intentional, being contumacious. This Court in the case reported as Messrs United Bank Limited (supra) stated that the provisions of Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C. being penal in nature are to be strictly construed and the same can only be invoked and penalty imposed on a party only if such party has failed to file an affidavit in spite of an order passed by the court to that effect. Thus, to invoke Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C. there must be an order for compliance and there must be willful default in its compliance.

8. In the case before us, for the purposes of order 24.11.2022 where the right of the Petitioner's defence was struck out, the facts of the case do not establish that the Petitioner committed willful default or intentionally and deliberately disobeyed an order of the Court. The facts of the case make this position apparent. On 20.10.2022, the objections filed by the Petitioner against the interrogatories were dismissed and vide this order the Petitioner was directed to file his answers to the interrogatories. The next date of hearing was 26.10.2022 on which date the Petitioner sought an adjournment which was granted by the Court. The next date of hearing was 08.11.2022 on which date again an oral request for adjournment was made on the ground that the Petitioner was injured on account of the incident of 03.11.2022 and was hospitalized. This fact is recorded in the order of 08.11.2022 as being a ground for the grant of adjournment, in the following term:

The next date of hearing was fixed for 17.11.2022 when again a request for adjournment was made on the ground that the counsel for the Petitioner was not able to establish contact with the Petitioner due to his hospitalization and security concerns. Therefore, once again answers to the interrogatories could not be filed. This fact is also recorded in the order of 17.11.2022 in the following terms:

"Learned counsel for the defendant has requested for one more adjournment to submit replies of the concerned interrogatories of the plaintiff's side due to his non contact with the defendant. Learned counsel for the plaintiff has vehemently opposed the said request for adjournment with the submission that costs be imposed upon the defendant in case of adjournment. This court does not deem it proper to impose costs upon the defendant regarding adjournment sought by learned counsel for the defendant today. At request of learned counsel for the defendant one more adjournment is hereby granted to submit replies by the defendant regarding concerned interrogatories of the plaintiff's side. File be put up on 24.11.2022 for submission of requisite replies by the defendant's side regarding concerned interrogatories of the plaintiff in the form of one more opportunity. It is hereby clarified that in case of non submission of requisite replies by the defendant's side regarding concerned interrogatories of the plaintiff's side on the next date, the right of defence of the defendant shall be struck out."

It is noted that on this date Respondent's counsel opposed the adjournment and requested that cost be imposed on account of the adjournment, however, the Court did not deem it proper to impose costs and instead gave the Petitioner an opportunity to submit his reply by 24.11.2022 with a warning that in case of failure, the right of defence of the Petitioner would be struck out. On 24.11.2022 once again the counsel appeared to state that he could not file the reply for the same reasons. On this date, an application for adjournment was also filed in which they stated that they were going to assail the dismissal of the objection petition by way of filing a civil revision before the High Court. As per the arguments made the counsel stated that the hospitalization of the Petitioner, his injury and security issues were all informed orally to the court. The trial court, however, did not grant time and instead held that no lawful justification existed for a further grant of adjournment as a reasonable number of opportunities have been provided to the Petitioner to submit his answer to the interrogatories which he has failed to do. Consequently, the defence of the Petitioner was struck out in terms of Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C.

9. The basic question is to determine whether there was willful default on the part of the Petitioner whereby he deliberately and intentionally disobeyed the order of 20.10.2022 requiring him to file answers to the interrogatories. The answer here would be that this is not a case of willful default and that the failure on the part of the Petitioner to file his answers was due to circumstances beyond his control. The incident of 03.11.2022 was widely shown on national news channels and covered by the print media and was not denied by the Respondent. The Court itself accepted the reason of hospitalization and injury on 08.11.2022 as well as 17.11.2022 which is evident from its orders. Under the circumstances, there was sufficient cause for seeking the adjournment and the Court acted in haste by issuing a warning on 17.11.2022 and thereafter incorrectly recorded in its order of 24.11.2022 that there was no lawful justification for the grant of adjournments especially since it accepted these reasons on 08.11.2022 and 17.11.2022. Accordingly, there was sufficient ground to give the adjournment, and the default was not willful. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that there was willful default and it also cannot be said that the conduct of the Petitioner was willfully contumacious, obstinate and disobedient and it also cannot be said that during the period from 08.11.2022 to 24.11.2022, the adjournments were sought with the intent to delay the proceedings.

10. Compliance with rules of procedure is fundamental to the pace and course of the litigation. When construing penal provisions, the exercise of judicial discretion by the Court has to be based on sound reasons that the circumstances justify. Judicial discretion in itself has inbuilt restraint which means that the Court cannot ignore facts and circumstances prevailing at the time and where such error can be corrected or condoned for adequate reasons, the court can condone the non-compliance in furtherance of justice because there has been no deliberate attempt to ignore an order of the court (Asha Rani Gupta v. Vineet Kumar (2022 SCC OnLine SC 829)). The court should recognize that this is an exceptional step which should be invoked after due consideration of the facts (Miss Santosh Mehta v. Om Prakash and others (1980) 3 SCC 610). Further penal provisions do not mandate that they be applied in a mechanical way in every case rather it must be a thoughtful step, based on circumstances, that indicates willful failure, deliberate default and intentional non-performance. The Indian Supreme Court in the case reported as Bilmal Chand Jain v. Sri Gopal Agarwal ((1981) 3 SCC 486) has held that serious responsibility rests on the court where the power to strike out defence is concerned and that it will always be a matter for the judgment of the court to decide whether on the material before it, notwithstanding absence of a representation defence should or should not be struck out. What this means is that the provision merely vests power with the court to strike out the defence and does not oblige it to do so in every case. In the case of Miss Santosh Mahta (supra), the Indian Supreme Court concluded that the deliberate failure or willful default is necessary in order to invoke penal provisions and that the power to strike out defence should not be used where, despite default, there are good and adequate reasons. Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C. is penal in nature and does not mandate a mechanical consequence for failure to comply with an order, rather it leaves it to the discretion of the court to decide if penal consequences should follow. This power for striking out of the defence under Order XI, Rule 21, C.P.C. can be exercised where the defaulting party fails to attend the hearing or is guilty of prolonged or inordinate and inexcusable delay which may cause substantial or serious prejudice to the opposite party; however, it is expected that before making an order for striking out of defence, the court must consider all the reasons given for the default which merits due consideration and assessment of facts. This is because the effect of striking out of the defence is that it will deprive the party of its ability to defend itself in the case which is a serious matter. In this case, the court had other alternatives, at its disposal, to regulate the pace of the proceedings as well as the conduct of the Petitioner, one of which is to impose costs which would not only serve as a form of deterrence but would also lay the foundation for expeditious justice and promote a smart legal system which view was taken by this Court in its recent judgment rendered in the case reported as Qazi Naveed ul Islam v. District Judge (2023 SCP 32).

11. In the case before us, this power was exercised mechanically and more importantly, the order of 24.11.2022 itself does not state that it is based on the history of the case or the overall conduct of the Petitioner in the case. In the event that the trial court is of the opinion that the conduct of the party suggests that there is willful disobedience or deliberate attempt to delay the proceedings then it has to record its findings accordingly. The trial court focused on the dates subsequent to the order of 20.10.2022 and not on the overall conduct of the Petitioner, and reasoned that the adjournments were sought without cause and sufficient opportunities had been granted being the adjournments from 08.11.2022 to 24.11.2022. However, the order sheet does show that there were many adjournments, it also shows that oftentimes, the court had proceeded in a routine manner without much focus on the reasons for the adjournments.

12. In a case plagued by adjournments since 2017, the court must weigh the balance between a fair trial and the legitimate grounds for the latest request for adjournment. The courts are entrusted with the responsibility to dispense justice, for which they are under a duty to ensure a timely trial, which duty may have been overlooked in some of the previous instances of adjournment where requests were granted mechanically and without due consideration. However, the Petitioner's recent public shooting and injury at a political rally justified the grant of an adjournment for a reasonable time under the circumstances. The right to defence cannot be struck out without considering all relevant factors, and the court must weigh the balance between a fair trial and the circumstances at hand. The order sheet shows that the court proceeded in a mechanical manner with the case, and granted numerous adjournments without so much as imposing cost so as to discourage the same. No doubt that the courts are overburdened with work and judges are faced with the daunting task of handling a vast number of cases every day, nevertheless, it is the court's responsibility to manage each case before it diligently by applying the provisions of the procedural law. The striking out of the Petitioner's right to defence, at this stage, while ignoring the legitimate factors in play, would be a gross injustice. The balancing act of justice must be upheld, and under these circumstances, the right to a fair defence must prevail.

13. Accordingly, the impugned order dated 07.12.2022 of the High Court and order dated 24.11.2022 of the trial court are set aside; the case is remanded to the trial court to grant reasonable opportunity to the Petitioner to file answers to the interrogatories in compliance with the order of 20.10.2022 and thereafter to proceed with the case in accordance with law.

C.P. No. 2337 of 2019, decided on 16th January, 2023.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Multan Bench dated 12.04.2019, passed in W.P. No. 1574 of 2019)

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 516-A---Superdari of vehicle---Registered owner of a vehicle is prima facie entitled to the temporary custody (superdari) of that vehicle unless the dispute as to the title to the vehicle is decided by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Petitioner lodged an FIR for an offence under section 406, P.P.C. alleging therein that he handed over the subject car to a car dealer, for sale, who allegedly sold the car to respondent/alleged purchaser but did not pay the consideration amount to the petitioner nor was he returning his car to him. Thereafter, the petitioner, as well as, respondent (the alleged purchaser of the car) filed their respective applications for superdari of the said car, which was allowed by the Magistrate in favour of respondent.

Sindh Motor Vehicle Registration Authority ("Authority") placed on record report along with documents, which disclosed that the petitioner was the registered owner of the vehicle and there was no application for transfer of ownership of the vehicle in the name of respondent. The original papers of the vehicle had been sent to the petitioner as per report of the Authority. The argument that respondent had in his possession the original registration book of the vehicle was not sufficient to show that he was the lawful purchaser of the vehicle because the very allegation of the petitioner was that he had given the car for sale to the car dealer, who had not paid the consideration amount of the vehicle to the petitioner and had thus committed criminal breach of trust, therefore, any sale made by the car dealer in favour of respondent without a valid transfer deed executed by the petitioner, the registered owner, was prima facie of no consequence in respect of transferring the ownership of the vehicle. A registered owner of the vehicle was prima facie entitled to the temporary custody (superdari) of that vehicle unless the dispute as to the title to the vehicle was decided by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, with the direction that the vehicle shall be handed over on superdari to the petitioner, subject to his furnishing surety bonds in the sum of Rs.2,000,000/ - (rupees two millions) with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial court.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---This case relates to superdari of Car Registration No.AZM-722 Maker Toyota Model 2013 Engine No.Y-806335 Chassis No.NZE-140-2166732.

2. Brief facts are that the petitioner lodged an FIR No.269/2018 dated 19.04.2018 for an offence under section 406, P.P.C. registered at Police Station Kot Addu, District Muzaffargarh alleging therein that he handedover the aforesaid car to Haji Azhar Habib, a car dealer, for sale, who allegedly sold the car to Rana Abdul Jabbar but did not pay the consideration amount to the petitioner nor was he returning his car to him. Thereafter, the petitioner, as well as, respondent No.4 (the alleged purchaser of the car) filed their respective applications for superdari of the said car, which was allowed by the Magistrate in favour of respondent No.4 on 31.01.2018. The revision petition against the said order filed by the petitioner was dismissed on 20.11.2018 and the same order was upheld by the High Court through impugned order dated 12.04.2019.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record. On 01.11.2022 we had issued notice to the Sindh Motor Vehicle Registration Authority ("Authority") to verify who is the registered owner of the vehicle as per its record. Through C.M.A. No.87/2022, the said Authority has placed on record report along with documents, which discloses that the petitioner is the registered owner of the vehicle and there is no application for transfer of ownership of the vehicle in the name of respondent No.4. The original papers of the vehicle have been sent to the petitioner as per report of the Authority. The argument that respondent No. 4 has in his possession the original registration book of the vehicle is not sufficient to show that he is the lawful purchaser of the vehicle because the very allegation of the petitioner is that he had given the car for sale to the accused person mentioned above, who has not paid the consideration amount of the vehicle to the petitioner and has thus committed criminal breach of trust, therefore, any sale made by the said accused in favour of respondent No.4 without a valid transfer deed executed by the petitioner, the registered owner, is prima facie of no consequence in respect of transferring the ownership of the vehicle. Needless to say that a registered owner of the vehicle is prima facie entitled to the temporary custody (superdari) of that vehicle unless the dispute as to the title to the vehicle is decided by a court of competent jurisdiction.

4. Learned counsel for respondent No.4 submits that duplicate book of the vehicle has been obtained through fraud by the petitioner and submits that respondent No.4 may be allowed to initiate proceedings against the petitioner in this regard. Needless to say that respondent No.4 is free to avail any remedy, in accordance with law and does not require the blessing of this Court. It is, however, noted that any observations made in this order other than reliance on the record of the Authority, will not influence any such proceedings, if initiated by the said respondent.

5. For the above reasons, the impugned orders are set aside and this petition is converted into appeal and the same is allowed. The vehicle shall be handed over on superdari to the petitioner, subject to his furnishing surety bonds in the sum of Rs.2,000,000/- (rupees two millions) with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial court.

MWA/M-7/SC Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts of the case are that petitioner, pursuant to the public advertisement dated 10th February 2015, applied for the post of Assistant Director (BPS-17) at the National Accountability Bureau (NAB). The petitioner (a wheelchair user) participated in the selection process and was successfully appointed to the post vide offer letter dated 16.07.2015 and assumed the charge on 10.08.2015. The appointment of the petitioner was subject to the condition that he be declared medically fit by the Civil Surgeon of the Federal Government[1]. After joining the petitioner submitted his Medical Fitness Certificate issued by the Civil Surgeon, Federal Government Poly Clinic, Postgraduate Medical Institute, Islamabad. The Certificate stated that the petitioner was found "fit for office job". The Certificate, additionally recorded that the petitioner is "fit against disable quota, if any, otherwise as department likes". In the wake of the Certificate, NAB vide letter dated 12.08.2015 informed the petitioner that he has "not so far provided an unequivocal medical fitness certificate (conditional medical certificate is not acceptable)" therefore the petitioner was asked to report back to the parent department. The petitioner preferred a departmental appeal which was also turned down on 28.10.2015, however, on a new ground that as the Medical Certificate described the petitioner to be "fit against disable quota," and as there is no "disabled quota" in NAB against the post of Assistant Director, therefore the appeal of the petitioner could not succeed. The petitioner challenged the same through constitutional petition before the Islamabad High Court but was not successful and has challenged the judgment of the High Court through this petition.

2. We have heard the learned Counsel for the parties and have gone through the record of the case. The appointment of the petitioner was subject to being declared medically fit by the Civil Surgeon. The Medical Certificate issued by the Civil Surgeon found the petitioner FIT FOR OFFICE JOB. The jurisdiction of the Civil Surgeon is to declare a person fit or otherwise for a job in the Government Service. Having declared the petitioner to be "fit for office job", the additional observation that the petitioner is "fit against disable quota" is totally inconsistent to the earlier evaluation. "Fit for office job" does not fall under the disability quota and the petitioner could have been easily considered against any office job. The additional comment made by the Civil Surgeon being unnecessary has no legal value. The petitioner having been found medically fit by the Civil Surgeon for an office job had to be considered as a regular candidate for appointment and his appointment could not have been withdrawn on the ground that the petitioner has "not provided an unequivocal medical fitness certificate (conditional medical certificate is not acceptable)." Even otherwise there is no requirement of an "unequivocal medical fitness certificate". A person being medically fit for an office job fully qualifies to be considered against an office job as a fit and a regular candidate. National Accountability Bureau enjoys no authority to second guess the validity of the medical declaration and unilaterally label it to be short of an unequivocal medical fitness certificate. Without prejudice to the above, even if the additional comments made in the Certificate to the effect that the petitioner was "fit against disable quota" are considered to be valid, still the respondents were under an obligation to consider him against the quota earmarked for persons with disabilities (PWDs).

3. The contention of the respondent NAB that a person has to be fully fit to be appointed to NAB and a person who is a user of wheel chair does not fit the job description of an Assistant Director is belied by the record. We called upon the Director, Human Resource, NAB to explain the job description of an Assistant Director. He elaborated that NAB has several departments where a newly appointed Assistant Director can be assigned. These departments include Investigation, Human Resource Management, Budget and Finance, Awareness and Prevention, Training and Research, and Prosecution. He also placed before us the job descriptions of Assistant Directors in these departments which include scrutiny and submission of documents, examination of budgets, proposals, and coordination of office work which are purely desk/office assignments and could be easily performed by a person using a wheelchair, therefore, the petitioner could have been easily allocated to one of these departments as an Assistant Director as per the medical fitness certificate.

4. Letter dated 12.08.2015 issued by NAB relieving the petitioner from his job on the ground that the petitioner does not have an unequivocal medical fitness certificate is not only insensitive and harsh but also deprives the petitioner to earn a livelihood and carry out a lawful profession, offending the fundamental rights guaranteed to the petitioner under Articles 9 and 18 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution"). By denying petitioner, a user of wheelchair and a person fit for an office job, the right to such a job on the pretext that he uses a wheelchair also offends the right to dignity of the petitioner. It is underlined that right to dignity is a non-negotiable constitutional right guaranteed under Article 14 of the Constitution.

5. While initially NAB withdrew the offer of appointment of the petitioner on the ground that the petitioner was not medically fit but while dismissing the departmental appeal of the petitioner, the ground urged by NAB was that there was no disability quota against the post of Assistant Director in NAB. Under section 10 of the Disabled Persons' (Employment and Rehabilitation) Ordinance, 1981[2] establishments (including NAB) are to employ persons with disabilities "not less than 3% of the total number" of persons employed at any time by the said establishment. Learned Counsel for NAB referred to an opinion sought from the Establishment Division of the Federal Government which states that the disability quota shall be for posts BS-15 and below. The said letter clearly offends the provisions of the Ordinance. There is no limitation or distinction of grade in allocating 3% quota for persons with disabilities in any organization. The 3% quota for persons with disability applies across the board in an organization, covering all tiers of posts in an organization and goes upto to the highest post including that of the Chairman, NAB. The letter issued by the Establishment Division besides being without jurisdiction is blatantly against the law and therefore has no legal sanctity. Persons with disabilities (PWDs) are an integral part of society and their importance in the workforce must be understood and never understated.

7. At present, we are informed that NAB has 741 sanctioned posts for Assistant Director. Under the Ordinance, 3% of these posts are to be earmarked for PWDs which comes out to 22 posts. The 3% quota for PWDs must co-exist alongside the general category of posts. Given the variety of posts with different qualifications, skillsets, and descriptions it is only appropriate that the disability quota be apportioned and allocated against the sanctioned strength of various categories which have a separate selection criterion.[3] National Accountability Bureau is directed to immediately comply with the provisions of the Ordinance and earmark posts representing 3% quota for PWDs across the institution at all tiers and submit a compliance report with the Additional Registrar (Judicial) of the this Court within a month. In case the said report is not filed, the officer shall fix this case before the Court for appropriate orders against the Chairman NAB.

8. It is important for the public and private sector institutions (including NAB) to understand that within Pakistan, the population of persons with disabilities (PWDs) varies between 3.3 million to 27 million.[4] The World Health Organization (WHO) has stated that an estimated 16% of the global population experiences significant disabilities today,[5] most of whom are of working age.[6] As such, it remains pivotal to consider the importance of PWDs towards human capital development, particularly towards employment. Should inclusion and accessibility be made towards employment there would be improvements at the societal level and for the families of PWDs.[7] Employment is important to all persons, without which inclusion in society and economic freedom would not be possible. Without employment, there is a greater risk of detrimental effects to the physical and mental health of the individual.[8] Work and contribution to society has been central to human society and holds great power over the self-esteem of those participating in society. For PWDs this would be greater given the stigmatization typically associated with them. The social model views disability in the context of systematic barriers, social exclusions, and negative societal attitudes leading to the loss or limitation of opportunities to participate in political, economic, and social activities on equal footing with those who do not have disability.[9]

9. Employment of PWDs is not a charity but a right. Our constitutional values of equality and social justice, the fundamental rights to life, to carrying out a profession and to non-discrimination also extend to PWDs and make no distinction between PWDs and others. Therefore, any law or policy relating to PWDs is rights-based and is not to be viewed as charity or pity or mercy. The universality, indivisibility, interdependence and interrelatedness of constitutional values and fundamental rights fully encompass the persons with disabilities and guarantees them full protection without discrimination.

10. Further, the United Nations Convention on Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD), to which Pakistan is a party, protects the right of PWDs, in particular, their right to employment. It states that employment and career advancement of PWD's is to be promoted, and discrimination based on disability in all forms of employment is prohibited.[10] It is high time that public and private sector institutions in Pakistan wake up to this realization and protect the constitutional and legal rights of the persons with the disabilities in the country and extend them the care, sensitivity and priority they deserve in their policies and executive decisions.

11. For the above reasons, the impugned judgment as well as the departmental orders are set aside with the direction to NAB to appoint the petitioner as per the offer letter w.e.f. 16.07.2015 as an Assistant Director in an appropriate wing of NAB that is fit for an office job. For the above reasons this petition is converted into an appeal and allowed.

12. Office shall dispatch a copy of this judgment to Chairman NAB and heads of all the public sector institutions to ensure that the disability quota is maintained in their institution as per law and that the internal polices of the institution are sensitized to fully recognize the presence and the rights of persons with disabilities (PWDs). MWA/W-2/SC Appeal allowed.

Jawad Mehmood Pasha, Advocate Supreme Court (through video-link from Lahore) for Petitioners.

Nemo for Respondent.

Date of hearing: 28th November, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts of the case are that respondent was appointed as Pointsman in BS-5 by the Pakistan Railways in the year 2001. During his service he was incapacitated and suffered from visual impairment and was declared unfit to serve as a Pointsman. According to the Pakistan Railways

Personnel Manual if an officer in service is incapacitated he is to be adjusted to another post which is most suitable and appropriate keeping in view the degree and level of his incapacitation. In the present case the respondent was adjusted in a lower grade of BS-3 against which he filed departmental representation and finally an appeal before the Federal Service Tribunal ("Tribunal"). His appeal was allowed vide impugned judgement dated 30.9.2019. The Tribunal considering the clauses of Pakistan Railways Personnel Manual moved the respondent to an equivalent grade of BS-5 against the post of Ticket Collector Grade-I ("TCR"). The petitioner, Pakistan Railways, is aggrieved of the said order on the ground that post of TCR is a selection post and the respondent had to go through the process of promotion to be entitled to the said post.

2. Clauses 510 and 512 of the Personnel Manual of the Pakistan Railways specifically deal with the incapacitation of officers in service, particularly, the incapacitation relating to vision. The relevant portions of the said clauses are reproduced here under:-

510. (a) Men incapacitated for service in any class by accident, ill health, failure of eyesight, etc., may be transferred to another class but no guarantee can be given of their employment as this must depend on vacancies. Endeavours will, however, be made to find for them posts for which they, in their incapacitated state, may be suitable and in which they can be usefully and efficiently employed without risk of injury to themselves, their fellow-workers and the travelling public and with due regard to the following considerations:-

(i) The appointment made does not in any way deprive an efficient and deserving employee who can reasonable (sic) look forward to advancement in that line.

(ii) The pay of an employee when appointed to a lower grade shall be fixed on the maximum of the grade or at a stage in that grade equivalent to or not below the rate of pay he is actually in receipt of, whichever is less.

(iii) ...

(iv) ...

(v) ...

512. (1) The absorption of vision failed staff should not be left to chance vacancies but every endeavor should be made to find suitable alternative appointments for such staff with due regard to the interests of deserving men who may be looking forward to advancement in their own line. Thus if a Driver is working temporarily as a Shedmen, he should revert to the foot plate to provide a Shedman's vacancy for a suitable member of the Loco Running Staff failing in the vision test.

Perusal of these clauses reveals that in order to protect and safeguard the interest and right to employment of an officer who unfortunately has been incapacitated during service, such an employee can be transferred or accommodated against a post in the organization which is more suitable and appropriate to his condition or disability. Under the said Manual efforts are to be made to ensure that the employee gets transferred to a post in an equivalent grade. In the instant case the respondent developed visual impairment (the degree of his visual impairment has not been brought on record by the Pakistan Railways) and as a result was transferred to a post of lower grade against which the respondent agitated and finally the Tribunal transferred him to a post of an equivalent grade i.e. TCR.

3. The UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities ("CRPD"), to which Pakistan is a party, recognizes and protects the "inherent dignity, worth, equality and inalienable rights of all members of human family as the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world".[1] The convention seeks to ensure the protection and promotion of full and equal enjoyment of all human rights by persons with disabilities ("PWDs"). CRPD defines "Discrimination on the basis of disability" to be a distinction, exclusion or restriction on the basis of disability which would hinder enjoyment of equal human rights and fundamental freedoms. Further, the Convention defines "Reasonable accommodation" as necessary and appropriate modification and adjustments not imposing a disproportionate or undue burden, where needed in a particular case, to ensure to persons with disabilities the enjoyment or exercise on an equal basis with others of all human rights and fundamental freedoms. CRPD in Article 27 provides that the work and employment of a person suffering from disability must be protected and reasonable accommodation required to make the said adjustment must be ensured by the State. Article 27, "prohibits discrimination on the basis of disability" concerning "all forms of employment" including "continuance of employment, career advancement and safe and healthy working conditions". Further it emphasizes the necessity to provide on "equal basis with others, just and favorable conditions of work" and to promote employment opportunities and advancements. As such it is the duty of an employer to ensure that reasonable accommodation is provided to PWDs and that those with disabilities are not discriminated against.

4. We have also gone through the job description of the TCR provided in clause 6.18 of the Commercial Manual of Pakistan Railways and do not see any reason why the visual impaired officer cannot carry out the duties of TCR, as provided in the said Manual. Even otherwise it is important that in case an officer develops physical incapacitation the department has to reach out to said officer to ensure the best possible option available for the officer in his condition to continue to serve the department. The said transfer to another suitable post of the respondent is as a special case and is over and above the regular process of transfer, appointment or promotion. Such a special transfer is to provide "reasonable accommodation" to an employee who has been incapacitated during service and for no fault of his own suffers from a disability. Any such "reasonable accommodation" is a priority action item for the department and must be addressed at the earliest. Suitability of the new post must factor in the earlier job description as well as the grade so that the employee is not worse off in financial terms. This finds support from Articles 9 and 38(d) of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan ("Constitution") which provide for right to life, which includes right to a meaningful livelihood as an integral part of life and policies must be made by the State to safeguard the interest of persons suffering from infirmity or sickness.

5. Learned counsel for the petitioners has not been able to point out as to why the post of TCR is inappropriate for the respondent. He has also failed to place on record the medical fitness certificate to highlight the degree of visual impairment suffered by the respondent. We are, therefore, not inclined to interfere in the impugned judgement. We also direct Pakistan Railways to revisit the Personnel Manual in the light of the fundamental rights and principles of policy enshrined in the Constitution, as well as, the CRPD, in particular Article 27 thereof, so that the Personnel Manual is constitution compliant and meets the international standards when dealing with persons with disabilities.

6. In view of the foregoing, leave is refused, and this petition is dismissed.

MWA/D-1/SC Petition dismissed.

C.P. No. 1336-L of 2021 to C.P. 1340-L of 2021, decided on 6th January, 2023.

(Against the consolidated order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 14.04.2021, passed in W.P. No. 121 of 2021/BWP, etc.)

(a) Agricultural Pesticides Ordinance (II of 1971)---

----Ss. 13, 16 & 17---Pakistan National Accreditation Council Act (VI of 2017), Ss. 4(a) & 4(d)---Punjab Agricultural Pesticides Rules, 2018, R. 22---Pesticide laboratory---Accreditation and certification---Rule 22 of the Punjab Agricultural Pesticides Rules, 2018 ('the 2018 Rules'), vires of---Laboratories (in Pakistan) can only be accredited or certified by Pakistan National Accreditation Council ("PNAC")---Rule 22 of the 2018 Rules to the extent where it requires that the pesticide laboratory shall be duly certified by ISO is not reconcilable with Section 13 of the Agricultural Pesticides Ordinance, 1971, and section 4 of the Pakistan National Accreditation Council Act, 2017 ('the 2017 Act')---Applying the principle of reading down, the Supreme Court saved the legality of Rule 22 of the 2018 Rules by directing that that the phrase "the pesticide laboratory shall be duly certified by International Organizations for Standardization (ISO)" is to be read down to mean that the pesticide laboratory shall follow the national and international standards as accredited by Pakistan National Accreditation Council ("PNAC") under 2017 Act.

Rule 22 of the Punjab Agricultural Pesticides Rules, 2018 ('the 2018 Rules') provides that the pesticide laboratory has to be duly certified by the International Organization for Standardization (ISO).However, under the Pakistan National Accreditation Council Act, 2017 ('the 2017 Act') the conformity assessment bodies or laboratories in the country, including pesticide laboratories, have to be accredited and certified by the Pakistan National Accreditation Council ("PNAC") to follow and implement national and international standards. Thus, Rule 22 of the 2018 Rules requiring the certification to be done by ISO is offensive to the provisions of the 2017 Act. In Pakistan laboratories can only be accredited or certified by PNAC.

Muhammad Asghar and 3 others v. Station House Officer and 2 others PLD 2020 Lah. 87 distinguished.

International Organization for Standardization (ISO) only sets standards, which are then adopted by the national accreditation body. Under the 2017 Act, PNAC establishes internationally recognized accreditation system inline with national and international standards. ISO does not perform certification of laboratories. ISO only develops international standards and is not involved in their certification and does not issue certificates. Thus a company or organization cannot be certified by ISO.

Rule 22 of the 2018 Rules to the extent where it requires that the pesticide laboratory shall be duly certified by ISO is not reconcilable with section 13 of the Agricultural Pesticides Ordinance, 1971 ('the Ordinance'), and section 4 of the 2017 Act, and in such a situation rule being a subordinate provision must give way.

Maxwell, Interpretation of Statutes, 11 ed, p 50 ref.

Applying the principle of reading down, the Supreme Court saved the legality of Rule 22 of the 2018 Rules by directing that that the phrase "the pesticide laboratory shall be duly certified by International Organizations for Standardization (ISO)" is to be read down to mean that the pesticide laboratory shall follow the national and international standards as accredited by PNAC under 2017 Act. Supreme Court further directed the Provincial Government to review Rule 22 of the 2018 Rules, and bring the same in conformity with the provisions of the Ordinance and 2017 Act. Petitions for leave to appeal were partly allowed.

(b) Interpretation of statutes---

----Rules made under a statute---Reconciling Rules with the parent statute---Scope---No rule can be framed so as to be in conflict with or in derogation from the statute under which it is framed or in conflict with any other statute, which is not inconsistent with the parent statute under which the rule is framed---However, before declaring so, the court should endeavour to reconcile the rule, that is to say, the rule may be so read, if the phraseology permits it, as to make it consistent with the provisions of the statute.

NS Bindra, Interpretation of Statutes, 10th edition, p.560 ref.

(c) Interpretation of statutes---

----Reading down a provision in a statute or a Rule---Concept of reading down stated.

The golden rule behind the rule of reading down is to recognize and respect the wisdom of the legislature and assume that legislature would never have intended to legislate an invalid law. The same principle applies to subordinate legislation as it is not expected that the subordinate legislating authority will frame rules in violation to the parent Act or any other statute. Rule of reading down a statutory provision is now well recognized rule of interpretation. This rule avoids striking down of statute or rule which carries curable constitutional or legal vice and instead by reading them down achieves to harmonize the statute or the rule with the general scheme of the Act and the Rules. It is a rule of harmonious construction under a different name. It is generally used to straighten the crudities or ironing out the creases to make a statute or a rule workable. The rule of reading down is used for a limited purpose of making a particular provision workable and to bring it in harmony with other provisions of the statues.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---This consolidated judgment shall decide Civil Petitions Nos. 1336-L of 2021 to 1340-L of 2021 as these petitions involve common questions of law and facts.

2. Brief facts of the case are that the respondents are pesticide[1] dealers duly registered under "The Agricultural Pesticides Ordinance, 1971" ("Ordinance"). As per sections 16 and 17 of the Ordinance, sample of the pesticide distributed by the respondents can be collected by the Agriculture Department and sent for examination to the pesticide laboratory for analysis. Exercising their power under the aforesaid provisions samples of pesticides namely Acephate and Sulphate of Potassium ("SOP") were collected by the Agricultural Department from the respondents and sent for analysis to the pesticide laboratory. The Report of the pesticide laboratory dated 30.09.2020 declared the aforesaid products to be "sub standard and fake". The said Report was challenged by the respondents before the High Court through writ petitions on different grounds. The jurisdictional ground taken by the respondents was that the pesticide laboratory in question was not duly certified by the International Organization for Standardization ("ISO") as per Rule 22 of the Punjab Agricultural Pesticides Rules, 2018 ("Rules"), as a consequence the Report of the said pesticide laboratory can neither be relied upon by the Agriculture Department nor criminal proceedings can be initiated against the respondents, under Chapter IV of the Ordinance. In support of their claim respondents relied upon Muhammad Asghar[2]. The High Court allowed the said writ petitions relying on Muhammad Asghar to hold that the pesticide laboratories had to be certified by the ISO and in the absence thereof their Reports cannot be relied upon or form basis of any criminal proceedings against the respondents, hence the instant civil petitions.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record. It is noticed that the High Court has only decided the jurisdictional question regarding the competence of the pesticide laboratory to carry out the analysis and test of pesticides under Rule 22 of the Rules and has not adverted to the other grounds raised in the writ petitions. Therefore, the only question of law before us is whether the pesticide laboratory established under section 13 of the Ordinance is required to be certified by the ISO as prescribed in Rule 22 of the Rules.

4. We have examined the provisions of the Ordinance[3], the Rules and the Pakistan National Accreditation Council Act, 2017 ("Act, 2017"). The Ordinance regulates the import, manufacture, sale, distribution and use of pesticides, which are duly registered under the Ordinance. Section 13 of the Ordinance provides for the establishment of pesticide laboratories. Section 13 is reproduced hereunder for convenience:-

"S. 13. Pesticide Laboratory.---(1) As soon as may be after the commencement of this Ordinance, the Government shall set up a Pesticide Laboratory or, in consultation with the provincial government, declare a provincial laboratory as pesticide laboratory which may be suitably equipped to carry out the functions entrusted to it by or under this Ordinance.

(2) The functions of the Pesticide Laboratory and the mode of submission of samples for analysis or test to the Laboratory shall be such as may be prescribed.

(3) The secrecy of the formula of pesticides, samples of which are submitted to the Pesticide Laboratory for analysis or test, shall be duly safeguarded in the manner prescribed."

The above shows that the pesticide laboratory is to be set up by the Provincial Government, which is to carry out its functions entrusted to it by or under the Ordinance. Section 13(2) provides that the functions of the pesticide laboratory and the mode of submissions of samples for analysis or test to the Laboratory shall be such as may be "prescribed". The word "prescribed" under section 3(o) means as prescribed under the Rules. Under section 13(2) of the Ordinance Rules can only provide the procedure for the functions of the pesticide laboratory and the mode of submissions of samples for analysis or tests, while the laboratory is set up as a pesticide laboratory under section 13 by the Provincial Government. Rules enjoy no power to set up or establish the pesticide laboratory, which is the sole prerogative of the Provincial Governments under section 13(1) of the Ordinance. The power to make Rules under section 29 of the Ordinance also does not authorise the Provincial Government to make Rules regarding the setting up of the pesticide laboratory. Rule 22 provides as follows:-

"Rule 22. Pesticide laboratory.---(1) The pesticide laboratory shall be duly certified by international organization for standardization (ISO) and perform the following functions: (a) analyze and test samples of pesticides; and (b) carry out such duties as may be, entrusted by the Secretary Agriculture;" (emphasis supplied)

The above Rule shows that the pesticide laboratory has to be duly certified by the International Organization for Standardization (ISO). Certification of the pesticide laboratory is a matter relating to its setting up and cannot be regulated by the Rules as the prerogative of setting up the pesticide laboratory is that of the Provincial Government under section 13. Further, under the Act, 2017 the Pakistan National Accreditation Council ("PNAC") has been established for providing accreditation/certification of Conformity Assessment Body (Laboratories) across the country in order to enable the laboratories to assure the quality of products, services and management system in accordance with national and international standards for sustainable socio economic development. Two main functions of the PNCA under section 4(a) and (d) of Act, 2017 are to establish an internationally recognized accreditation system and accredit the conformity assessment bodies. Therefore, under the Act, 2017 the conformity assessment bodies or laboratories in the country have to be accredited and certified by the PNAC. Rule 22 requiring the certification to be done by ISO is offensive to the provisions of Act, 2017. In Pakistan laboratories can only be accredited or certified by PNAC. Reliance on Muhammed Asghar is also misplaced as the said opinion revolves around the mandatory and directory nature of Rule 22 and does not discuss the vires of the Rule when compared with the provisions of the Ordinance and the Act, 2017. The said opinion is also silent regarding the fact that ISO is not a certifying or a conformity assessment organization but an organization that only develops standards as discussed hereunder.

5. Another important dimension of the case is that the Director General, PNAC who appeared before us on 12.08.2021 stated that the ISO is based in Switzerland and is not a certification organization, therefore, it does not certify or accredit any laboratory anywhere in the world. ISO only sets standards, which are then adopted by the national accreditation body. Under the Act, 2017, PNAC establishes internationally recognized accreditation system inline with national and international standards.

6. We have also gone through the website[4] of ISO and have found that ISO does not perform certification of laboratories. ISO only develops international standards and is not involved in their certification and does not issue certificates. Thus according to the website of ISO, a company or organization cannot be certified by ISO.[5]

7. Rule 22 of the Rules to the extent where it requires that the pesticide laboratory shall be duly certified by ISO is not reconcilable with section 13 of the Ordinance and section 4 of the Act, 2017 in such a situation rule being a subordinate provision must give way[6]. No rule can be framed so as to be in conflict with or in derogation from the statute under which it is framed or in conflict with any other statute, which is not inconsistent with the parent statute under which the rule is framed. However, before declaring so, the court should endeavour to reconcile the rule, that is to say, the rule may be so read, if the phraseology permits it, as to make it consistent with the provisions of the statute[7]. Therefore, in order to ensure that the harmonious functionality of the Ordinance, Act, 2017 and the Rules is maintained, we propose to read down Rule 22. The golden rule behind the rule of reading down is to recognize and respect the wisdom of the legislature and assume that legislature would never have intended to legislate an invalid law. The same principle applies to subordinate legislation as it is not expected that the subordinate legislating authority will frame rules in violation to the parent Act or any other statute. Rule of reading down a statutory provision is now well recognized rule of interpretation. This rule avoids striking down of statute or rule which carries curable constitutional or legal vice and instead by reading them down achieves to harmonize the statute or the rule with the general scheme of the Act and the Rules.[8] It is a rule of harmonious construction under a different name. It is generally used to straighten the crudities or ironing out the creases to make a statute or a rule workable. The rule of reading down is used for a limited purpose of making a particular provision workable and to bring it in harmony with other provisions of the statues[9]. In this case the object of Rule 22(1) is to ensure that the pesticide laboratory follows international standards set by ISO, which is admittedly being achieved through PNAC, the accrediting organization in the country under the Act, 2017. Therefore, applying the principle of reading down, we save the legality of Rule 22 to the extent that the phrase "the pesticide laboratory shall be duly certified by International Organizations for Standardization (ISO)" is to be read down to mean that the pesticide laboratory shall follow the national and international standards as accredited by PNAC under Act, 2017. Additionally, we direct the Provincial Government to review the said Rule and bring the same in conformity with the provisions of the Ordinance and Act, 2017. Admittedly, the pesticide laboratories in these cases are duly certified by PNAC and function under an internationally recognized accreditation system, therefore the analysis and test reports issued by the said laboratories can be relied upon by the Agriculture Department to take further proceedings under the law. The other factual and legal grounds challenging the veracity and validity of the Reports other than the jurisdictional ground have not been addressed by the High Court. Therefore, we hold that the pesticide laboratories in these cases are duly certified under the law as a result the impugned judgment of the High Court is set aside and the cases are remanded to the High Court. The writ petitions of the respondents shall be deemed to be pending before the High Court which shall decide the same after addressing all the other grounds of law and facts raised by the petitioners before it.

8. In this background the impugned orders are set aside and the titled petitions are partly allowed in the above terms. (d) Service Tribunals Act (LXX of 1973)---

----S. 5---Service Tribunal, powers of---Limited power of the Service Tribunal to reduce penalty imposed by the department on a civil servant---Scope---Test of proportionality for interfering in quantum of penalty/punishment---Scope---Only in exceptional circumstances, i.e. where it is against the law or is unreasonable or fails the test of proportionality, that the Tribunal can interfere in the penalty imposed by the department and that too supported by detailed reasons---Where the Tribunal or the Court interferes in the quantum or nature of the penalty imposed by the competent authority by terming the same as unreasonable, perverse or harsh, or by exercising leniency, such interference is, in effect, only made when the Tribunal or the Court concludes that the penalty is disproportionate to the misconduct proved by employing the test of proportionality---Only where the penalty imposed by the department is so shockingly disproportionate to the misconduct or inefficiency proved that to let it stand would be unfair, unjust and inequitable, that the same would justify interference based on the test of proportionality.

Imposition of punishment under the law is primarily the function and prerogative of the competent authority and the role of the Tribunal or the Court is secondary unless it is found to be against the law or is unreasonable. This is because the department/competent authority, being the fact finding authority, is best suited to decide the particular penalty to be imposed keeping in view a host of factors such as the nature and gravity of the misconduct, past conduct, the nature and the responsibility of the duty assigned to the delinquent, previous penalty, if any, and the discipline required to be maintained in the department, as well as any extenuating circumstances. The question of interference with relation to the quantum or the nature of the penalty imposed by the department only arises when the Tribunal or the Court, in consonance with the decision of the competent authority, has also found the delinquent guilty of the same or some form misconduct or inefficiency. It is, therefore, only in the above exceptional circumstances, i.e. where it is against the law or is unreasonable, that the Tribunal or the Court can interfere in the penalty imposed by the department. The imposition of the penalty being against the law would entail that it cannot be held as legally sustainable, such as, when misconduct or inefficiency for which the penalty has been imposed has not been proved and a lesser form of misconduct or inefficiency, in the opinion of the Tribunal or the Court, is proved, or the procedure provided under the law for imposing the penalty has not been followed or the penalty imposed has not been provided for in the law or rules applicable, and therefore, the imposition of the penalty itself is not sustainable under the law, thereby, justifying interference. However, where the Tribunal or the Court comes to the conclusion that the misconduct or inefficiency, for which the penalty has been imposed by the department, has been proved, the procedure under the law has been followed and the penalty imposed is provided for under the law amongst other penalties for the like misconduct or inefficiency, interference in the discretion exercised by the department in imposing a certain penalty would only be possible if the penalty imposed is considered to be starkly unreasonable.

Secretary/Chairman, Ministry of Railways 2007 PLC (C.S.) 247 and Member (ACE & ST), FBR v. Muhammad Ashraf 2008 PLC (C.S.) 1161 ref.

Where the Tribunal or the Court interferes in the quantum or nature of the penalty imposed by the competent authority by terming the same as unreasonable, perverse or harsh, or by exercising leniency, such interference is, in effect, only made when the Tribunal or the Court concludes that the penalty is disproportionate to the misconduct proved by employing the test of proportionality. However, the application threshold of the proportionality test remains high and interference in the penalty imposed by the department cannot be based on mere conjectures or surmises. Interference with the penalty imposed by the department has to be exercised cautiously and with circumspection where the order imposing the penalty is wholly perverse or ex facie so demonstrably disproportionate and excessive for the misconduct, that to let it stand would be unfair, unjust and inequitable. Merely observing that the penalty imposed is not commensurate with the offence is not enough and constitutes arbitrary capricious and unstructured exercise of jurisdiction on part of the Tribunal. The order must show that the Tribunal has applied its mind to the facts and circumstances of the case and exercised its discretion in a structured, lawful and regulated manner, duly supported by legally sustainable reasoning. Therefore, it is only where the penalty imposed by the department is so shockingly disproportionate to the misconduct or inefficiency proved that to let it stand would be unfair, unjust and inequitable, that the same would justify interference based on the test of proportionality.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question that has come up for determination before us is with regards to the power of the Federal Service Tribunal ("Tribunal") of reducing the penalty imposed by the department on a civil servant.

2. The brief facts of the case are that respondent No. 1, a Mail Peon working for the Postmaster General, was proceeded against departmentally on the charge of misappropriation of government money amounting to Rs. 1,24,305/- that he collected, while he was working as an officiating Counter Clerk Utility Bills Collection, on account of electricity bills from the consumers but did not deposit the same with the Government exchequer. The said misappropriation surfaced after receipt of complaints from the consumers. The record shows that respondent No.1 collected the said amount on 28.7.2018 and 30.7.2018 and retained the same before depositing it on 18.8.2018 and 20.8.2018. For the said misappropriation, the department imposed a major penalty of "Removal from Service" on respondent No.1 vide order dated 31.10.2019 against which he preferred a departmental appeal, which was rejected on 17.2.2020. Thereafter, on an appeal filed by respondent No.1 before the Tribunal, the penalty was reduced from "Removal from Service" to "reduction to three stages lower in pay scale for two years" vide the impugned judgment dated 30.8.2022. The Tribunal held that the respondent had committed misappropriation/ embezzlement but termed the same as "temporary misappropriation" and declared that the punishment of "Removal from Service" was too harsh. The instant petition has been filed seeking leave to appeal from the said impugned judgment.

3. The learned Additional Attorney General appearing on behalf of the petitioner submits that the Tribunal, once holding that the respondent had committed misappropriation, could not have reduced and converted the penalty of "Removal from Service" to that of "reduction to three stages lower in pay scale for two years" without giving any reason. He relied on Syed Farhan[1], Muhammad Afzal[2] and Allah Bakhsh[3] to submit that such a reduction in penalty was without lawful authority.

4. The learned counsel for the respondent took pains to explain the merits of the case to us and pointed out that the respondent never admitted to the charges against him; that the inquiry was not conducted in accordance with law; and that the respondent never collected or deposited the money.

5. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have also perused the record with their assistance. We are afraid we cannot go into the facts of the case as far as the determination of the question of embezzlement/misappropriation is involved as the respondent has not challenged the impugned judgment of the Tribunal which affirms this fact, thereby, acquiescing to the said findings. Besides, this Court has already held that the Tribunal is the final forum for the purpose of determination of facts and this Court cannot go into the reappraisal of the said facts.[4] We, therefore, proceed to examine the legal question regarding reduction of penalty by the Tribunal. For the said purposes, it would be useful to reproduce the following excerpt from the impugned judgment wherein the Tribunal has held that:-

"7. ... Only temporary embezzled amount of Rs. 123,405/-[5] was not deposited in the Government Accounts which was subsequently made good by him ... There is no doubt that there is no loss to the department and that the impugned amount was deposited on two dates i.e. 18.08.2018 and 20.08.2018, which shows a kind of temporary misappropriation which is clear as per impugned and appellate impugned orders as per record. The basic question is of breach of trust of the public and the department. He received Wapda electricity bill amounts from several consumers but did not deposit in time rather they did late, so was imposition of embezzled amount for quite some time. This also amounts to misconduct and inefficiency as rightly pointed out in impugned orders. Though the procedure is fraught with lacunas and false as pointed out by the learned counsel for the appellant but this cannot mitigate his commission of breach of trust and misconduct. However, proportion of punishment is too harsh as compared to commission of this act."

At the outset, we are surprised by the use of the term "temporary misappropriation" by the Tribunal. We understand that embezzlement or misappropriation constitutes misconduct and the duration of such embezzlement or misappropriation has little relevance. In this case, as per the record, the respondent misappropriated a sum of Rs. 1,24,305/- on account of electricity bills he collected from consumers on 28.7.2018 and 30.7.2018 before depositing the said amount on 18.8.2018 and 20.8.2018 after almost 23 days. The Tribunal has approved the inquiry report which contains conceding statements on behalf of the respondent dated 18.8.2018 and 20.8.2018, admitting that he had retained the said amount as he needed it because he was constructing a house, and therefore, did not deposit the same on time. The duration of this misappropriation, or the amount involved, is irrelevant as the act itself is sufficient to constitute misconduct.[6]

6. The Tribunal, after holding that the respondent had committed embezzlement/ misappropriation, proceeded to modify the punishment of "Removal from Service" to "reduction to three stages lower in pay scale for two years". We hereunder examine the exercise of powers of the Tribunal to reduce penalties in a particular case.

7. Under section 5 of the Service Tribunals Act, 1973 ("Act") the Tribunal is empowered to confirm, set aside, vary or modify the order appealed before it, however, such powers are to be exercised carefully, judiciously and after recording reasons for the same.[7] This Court has repeatedly held that the Tribunal has no jurisdiction to grant arbitrary relief to any person as the powers of the Tribunal under section 5 of the Act are neither unqualified and nor unlimited.[8] It is also settled law that the imposition of punishment under the law is primarily the function and prerogative of the competent authority and the role of the Tribunal or the Court is secondary unless it is found to be against the law or is unreasonable.[9] This is because the department/competent authority, being the fact finding authority, is best suited to decide the particular penalty to be imposed keeping in view a host of factors such as the nature and gravity of the misconduct, past conduct, the nature and the responsibility of the duty assigned to the delinquent, previous penalty, if any, and the discipline required to be maintained in the department, as well as any extenuating circumstances.[10] The question of interference with relation to the quantum or the nature of the penalty imposed by the department only arises when the Tribunal or the Court, in consonance with the decision of the competent authority, has also found the delinquent guilty of the same or some form misconduct or inefficiency. It is, therefore, only in the above exceptional circumstances, i.e. where it is against the law or is unreasonable, that the Tribunal or the Court can interfere in the penalty imposed by the department.

8. The imposition of the penalty being against the law would entail that it cannot be held as legally sustainable, such as, when misconduct or inefficiency for which the penalty has been imposed has not been proved and a lesser form of misconduct or inefficiency, in the opinion of the Tribunal or the Court, is proved[11], or the procedure provided under the law for imposing the penalty has not been followed[12] or the penalty imposed has not been provided for in the law or rules applicable[13], and therefore, the imposition of the penalty itself is not sustainable under the law, thereby, justifying interference. However, where the Tribunal or the Court comes to the conclusion that the misconduct or inefficiency, for which the penalty has been imposed by the department, has been proved, the procedure under the law has been followed and the penalty imposed is provided for under the law amongst other penalties for the like misconduct or inefficiency, interference in the discretion exercised by the department in imposing a certain penalty would only be possible if the penalty imposed is considered to be starkly unreasonable.

9. Reasonableness for the purposes of assessing the quantum or nature of a penalty imposed by the department is to be gauged by applying the test of proportionality. In Sabir[14] it was held that proportionality is a standard that examines the relationship between the objective the executive branch wishes to achieve, which has the potential of infringing upon a human right, and the means it has chosen in order to achieve that infringing objective. It was also observed that a more sophisticated version of proportionality provided for a structured test, whereby it will firstly be assessed whether the measure taken is suitable in attaining the identified ends (the test of suitability, which includes the notion of "rational connection" between the means and ends) and then whether the measure is necessary or if a less restrictive or onerous method could have been adopted (the test of necessity). In essence, an administrative decision must not be more drastic than necessary and therefore, it follows that the penalty imposed must be commensurate with the misconduct or inefficiency that has been proved.[15] Where the Tribunal or the Court interferes in the quantum or nature of the penalty imposed by the competent authority by terming the same as unreasonable, perverse or harsh, or by exercising leniency[16], such interference is, in effect, only made when the Tribunal or the Court concludes that the penalty is disproportionate to the misconduct proved by employing the test of proportionality.

10. However, the application threshold of the proportionality test remains high and interference in the penalty imposed by the department cannot be based on mere conjectures or surmises. Interference with the penalty imposed by the department has to be exercised cautiously and with circumspection where the order imposing the penalty is wholly perverse or ex facie so demonstrably disproportionate and excessive for the misconduct, that to let it stand would be unfair, unjust and inequitable.[17] Merely observing that the penalty imposed is not commensurate with the offence is not enough and constitutes arbitrary capricious and unstructured exercise of jurisdiction on part of the Tribunal. The order must show that the Tribunal has applied its mind to the facts and circumstances of the case and exercised its discretion in a structured, lawful and regulated manner[18], duly supported by legally sustainable reasoning.[19] Therefore, it is only where the penalty imposed by the department is so shockingly disproportionate to the misconduct or inefficiency proved that to let it stand would be unfair, unjust and inequitable, that the same would justify interference based on the test of proportionality.

11. Being relevant to the instant case, another question that arises is with regards to the applicability of the test of proportionality to interfere with a penalty imposed for misconduct which involves moral turpitude. "Moral turpitude" was defined in Imtiaz Ahmed[20] as "the act of baseness, vileness or the depravity in private and social duties which man owes to his fellow man, or to society in general contrary to accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man." In Ghulam Hussain[21], it was held that moral turpitude includes anything which is done contrary to the good principles of morality, any act which runs contrary to justice, honesty, good moral values or established judicial norms of a society. Therefore, for all intents and purposes, misappropriation or embezzlement of public funds while in Government service would be considered as gross misconduct involving moral turpitude.

12. The modern notion of proportionality requires that the punishment ought to reflect the degree of moral culpability associated with the offence for which it is imposed.[22] In order to render punishment compatible with justice, it is not enough to restrict punishment to the deserving, but also to restrict the degree of punishment to the degree that is deserved.[23] The degree of wrongfulness is described variously as the "moral culpability", "gravity" or "depravity" associated with the offence.[24] Therefore, along with the gravity of the misconduct, interference on the grounds of proportionality in the penalty imposed for misconduct is also assessed in view of the depravity or moral culpability associated with the same. The test of proportionality is, therefore, more stringent in cases of misconduct involving moral turpitude in view of the depravity or moral culpability involved.

13. We, therefore, hold that the Tribunal exercising its powers under section 5 of the Act to reduce the penalty imposed by the department on a civil servant can only do so if the said penalty is either against the law or fails the test of proportionality and that too supported by detailed reasons. In the instant case, the respondent admittedly misappropriated public funds for almost a period of 23 days i.e. from 28.7.2018 to 20.8.2018 before depositing the same in the Government exchequer without any remorse. The Tribunal has not given any reasons or explanation to examine the penalty imposed by the department on the touchstone of proportionality and with a stroke of a pen has reduced the said penalty from "Removal from Service" to "reduction to three stages lower in pay scale for two years". Such casual interference by the Tribunal in the penalty imposed by the department cannot be sustained. Even otherwise, in the facts and circumstances of the case, we are of the view that the penalty imposed by the department does not offend the law or the test of proportionality.

14. In view of the above, we set aside the impugned judgment and restore the order passed by the department dated 31.10.2019 whereby the major penalty of "Removal from Service" was awarded to respondent No. 1. This petition is converted into an appeal and allowed accordingly.

MWA/D-3/SC Appeal allowed.

C.P. No. 4835 of 2019, decided on 30th January, 2023.

(Against the judgment of the Punjab Service Tribunal (at Rawalpindi), dated 21.10.2019, passed in Appeal No. 3087 of 2019)

Civil service---

----Period of absence from duty after imposition of penalty---Such period has no bearing on the penalty and it does not undo the penalty imposed.

In view of the legal consequence of the absence from duty, a disciplinary authority, or an appellate authority, tribunal or court, when imposes a penalty lesser than dismissal or removal from service on a delinquent civil servant for his misconduct of being absent from duty, it has to make an incidental order as to what treatment should be given to the period of his absence for the purpose of giving continuity to his service; otherwise, the whole past service of the civil servant will stand forfeited, which would be the imposition of an additional penalty neither prescribed by the law nor imposed by the authority. The best possible incidental order, which may be made in such a situation, is therefore to make a fictional arrangement to account for such period of absence from duty in the service record of the civil servant by treating (deeming) the same as an extraordinary leave without pay, rather than any other kind of leave; as in case of treating the said period as a leave of some other kind of leave (even if found due), the delinquent civil servant may claim pay of that period also, which would amount to awarding him a benefit rather than awarding a penalty for his fault. Thus, after imposing a penalty other than dismissal or removal from service, the making of an incidental order as to treating (deeming) the period of absence from duty as an extraordinary leave without pay, in no way, washes out the misconduct committed.

LDA v. Nadeem Kachloo 2006 SCMR 434; Director-General, I.B. v. Muhammad Javed 2012 SCMR 165 and Sharif Abbasi v. WAPDA 2013 SCMR 903 over ruled.

NAB v. Muhammad Shafique 2020 SCMR 425 agreed with.

Imtiaz Lali v. Returning Officer PLD 2008 SC 355; Muhammad Ali Bukhari v. Federation of Pakistan 2008 SCMR 214; Federation of Pakistan v. Mamoon Malik 2020 SCMR 1154 and NBP v. Zahoor Mengal 2021 SCMR 903 ref.

Where the civil servant who is unauthorizedly absent does not resume duty and offer any satisfactory explanation, or where the explanation offered by him is not satisfactory, the departmental authority is to initiate the disciplinary proceedings and impose an appropriate penalty, which may range from a major penalty of dismissal or removal from service to a minor penalty of censure or withholding of increment for a specific period, mainly depending upon the nature of service, the position (duty) of the civil servant in that service, the period of absence and the cause for the absence. Where the penalty imposed on the delinquent civil servant is dismissal or removal from service, it may not be necessary to pass any incidental order relating to the period of absence, unless it is deemed necessary to recover any amount of pay, or other service benefits, received by the civil servant during the period of his absence from duty; but where any other penalty is awarded for the unauthorized absence from duty, it will be necessary to pass some incidental order as to how the period of absence should be accounted for and dealt with in the service record of the civil servant. If the unauthorized absence from duty remains unaccounted for, it will result in an interruption in service of the civil servant, thereby forfeiting his whole past service and affecting his seniority, pension etc. Such incidental order directing how the period of absence should be treated in the service record of the civil servant is thus an administrative arrangement, which does not affect or supersede the order imposing the penalty.

M. Bashir Khan, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Date of hearing: 30th January, 2023.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against a judgment of the Punjab Service Tribunal, dated 21.10.2019 ("impugned judgment"), whereby the Tribunal while maintaining the findings of the departmental authorities as to his guilt on the charge of willful absence from duty, has partly allowed his appeal by reducing his penalty from forfeiture of two-year service to forfeiture of one year service.

2. Briefly, the facts of the case are that the petitioner was a Junior Clerk in the Department of Livestock and Dairy Development (L&DD), Government of Punjab, and posted in the office of the District Officer Livestock, Chakwal. He remained absent from his duty from 02.02.2016 to 11.06.2016. Upon report of the inquiry officer holding the petitioner guilty of the charge of willful absence from duty and recommending for the imposition of a major penalty, the departmental competent authority imposed the major penalty of dismissal from service on the petitioner under section 4(b)(vi) of the Punjab Employees Efficiency, Discipline and Accountability Act, 2006 ("PEEDA Act"). The departmental appellate authority, however, on appeal of the petitioner converted the penalty of his dismissal from service into forfeiture of his past two-year service and reinstated him in service. The departmental appellate authority also ordered that the intervening period from the starting date of his absence from duty, i.e., 02.02.2016, to the date of his rejoining service upon reinstatement would be treated as an extraordinary leave without pay. The petitioner preferred a service appeal to the Tribunal, which was partly allowed to the extent of reducing his penalty from forfeiture of two-year service into forfeiture of one-year service, by maintaining the findings of the departmental authorities as to his guilt on the charge of willful absence from duty. The petitioner, being not satisfied with the judgment of the Tribunal, has filed the present petition for leave to appeal.

3. The sole contention made before us by the learned counsel for the petitioner is that as the departmental appellate authority had ordered to treat the period of absence of the petitioner from duty as an extraordinary leave without pay, therefore, the petitioner could not have been held guilty of misconduct and punished for the said absence from duty. He has placed reliance, in support of his contention, on LDA v. Nadeem Kachloo (2006 SCMR 434), Director-General, I.B. v. Muhammad Javed (2012 SCMR 165) and Sharif Abbasi v. WAPDA (2013 SCMR 903).

4. On the other hand, the learned counsel for the respondents submits that once the departmental appellate authority had converted the penalty of dismissal for service into that of forfeiture of his two-year past service and had thus reinstated the petitioner into service, the period of his absence from duty had to be given some treatment for the purpose of regularizing his reinstatement in service, and such treatment does not wash out the guilt of the petitioner. In this regard, he has relied upon DIG, NH&MP v. Ghulam Mustafa (2019 SCMR 95) and NAB v. Muhammad Shafique (2020 SCMR 425).

5. We have considered the contentions of the learned counsel for the parties, read the cases cited by them and examined the record of the case.

6. The unauthorized absence of a civil servant from his duty is an act which is prejudicial to 'good order' and 'service discipline', and thus constitutes misconduct for taking disciplinary action against him.[1] section 2(n)(vii) of the PEEDA Act has explicitly included the act of 'absence from duty without prior approval of leave' in the definition of 'misconduct' for the purpose of application of that Act. And, as per Rule 2.11 of the Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1955, a Government servant forfeits his past service in case of his absence from duty without leave. Similarly, Article 420 of the Civil Service Regulations states that an interruption in the service of an officer entails forfeiture of his past service subject to certain exceptions mentioned therein. In view of this legal consequence of the absence from duty, a disciplinary authority, or an appellate authority, tribunal or court, when imposes a penalty lesser than dismissal or removal from service on a delinquent civil servant for his misconduct of being absent from duty, it has to make an incidental order as to what treatment should be given to the period of his absence for the purpose of giving continuity to his service; otherwise, the whole past service of the civil servant will stand forfeited, which would be the imposition of an additional penalty neither prescribed by the law nor imposed by the authority. The best possible incidental order, which may be made in such a situation, is therefore to make a fictional arrangement to account for such period of absence from duty in the service record of the civil servant by treating (deeming) the same as an extraordinary leave without pay, rather than any other kind of leave; as in case of treating the said period as a leave of some other kind of leave (even if found due), the delinquent civil servant may claim pay of that period also, which would amount to awarding him a benefit rather than awarding a penalty for his fault. Thus, after imposing a penalty other than dismissal or removal from service, the making of an incidental order as to treating (deeming) the period of absence from duty as an extraordinary leave without pay, in no way, washes out the misconduct committed. It may be underlined here that although section 4(b)(iii) of the PEEDA Act provides for the penalty of forfeiture of past service for a specific period, it has also limited the same to a maximum of five year period and thus does not permit the forfeiture of the whole past service exceeding a period of five years. In the present case, had the departmental appellate authority not ordered to treat the period of absence of the petitioner from his duty as an extraordinary leave without pay, his whole past service would have been forfeited, instead of the imposed penalty of forfeiture of past service of two years (reduced to one year by the Tribunal).

7. In case of an unauthorized absence of a civil servant from his duty, two courses are open to the departmental authority: (i) to condone the unauthorized absence by accepting his explanation (if found justified) and sanction the ex-post facto leave under the relevant leave rules, or (ii) to initiate the disciplinary proceedings against him and impose a penalty for the misconduct. Therefore, a civil servant who remains absent from his duty may apply for condonation of the absence by offering an explanation and seek the sanction of ex -post facto leave for that period. If the departmental authority is satisfied that there was a sufficient cause for his absence, it may condone the absence and sanction the leave ex-post facto. If leave is so sanctioned, then the departmental authority cannot initiate disciplinary proceedings against the civil servant for that absence from duty. However, where the civil servant who is unauthorizedly absent does not resume duty and offer any satisfactory explanation, or where the explanation offered by him is not satisfactory, the departmental authority is to initiate the disciplinary proceedings and impose an appropriate penalty, which may range from a major penalty of dismissal or removal from service to a minor penalty of censure or withholding of increment for a specific period, mainly depending upon the nature of service, the position (duty) of the civil servant in that service, the period of absence and the cause for the absence. Where the penalty imposed on the delinquent civil servant is dismissal or removal from service, it may not be necessary to pass any incidental order relating to the period of absence, unless it is deemed necessary to recover any amount of pay, or other service benefits, received by the civil servant during the period of his absence from duty; but where any other penalty is awarded for the unauthorized absence from duty, it will be necessary to pass some incidental order as to how the period of absence should be accounted for and dealt with in the service record of the civil servant. If the unauthorized absence from duty remains unaccounted for, it will result in an interruption in service of the civil servant, thereby forfeiting his whole past service and affecting his seniority, pension etc. Such incidental order directing how the period of absence should be treated in the service record of the civil servant is thus an administrative arrangement, which does not affect or supersede the order imposing the penalty.[2]

8. The learned two-member benches of this Court in Nadeem Kachloo, Muhammad Javed and Sharif Abbasi referred to by the learned counsel for the petitioner have, it is most respectfully observed, mistakenly mingled the two distinct concepts of: (i) the grant of ex-post facto leave to the civil servant who remained absent from his duty, by accepting his explanation (if found justified), and (ii) the fictional treatment given to the period of his absence from duty after holding him guilty of the misconduct for that absence and imposing a penalty other than his dismissal or removal from service, for continuity of his service. The statement of law made therein, that by treating the period of absence from duty as an extraordinary leave without pay, the ground of unauthorized absence no more remains available for awarding any penalty, does not state the correct legal position. These cases, so as far as they make the said statement of law either expressly or impliedly, are overruled, while the contra view of a three-member bench of this Court in Muhammad Shafique is respectfully agreed to. Muhammad Shafique has differentiated between the retrospective grant of extraordinary leave without pay for the absence under Rule 9(3) of the Revised Leave Rules, 1980 and the treatment given to the period of absence after imposition of the appropriate penalty for the misconduct of being absent from duty, and rightly held that treating the period of absence in the latter case as extraordinary leave without pay does not undo the penalty imposed.[3]

9. In view of the above legal position, the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is found meritless. The impugned judgment does not call for any interference. The petition is therefore dismissed and the leave to appeal, declined.

----Performance Evaluation Report---Scope and significance---Countersigning Officer and Reporting Officer---Significance of Performance Evaluation Report (PER) and the obligations of Countersigning Officer and Reporting Officer in preparation of the same stated.

Performance Evaluation Reports (PERs) are the most important documents in the service record of civil servants. They help the competent authorities in making informed decisions with regards to personnel administration matters, such as, selections for training, appointments/transfers, promotions, confirmations or screening of civil servants. An officer's promotion and retention in service mostly depends on what has been recorded in his/her PER. It is, therefore, essential that the PERs are written by the Reporting and Countersigning Officers most carefully and responsibly. The PER forms that elaborate the criteria against which the performance of a subordinate officer is to be evaluated, and the instructions issued with regards to properly recording the PERs, are designed to ensure reporting on an officer's strong and weak points more objectively, as only objective reporting can effectively serve the true purpose of such reports. If the Reporting or the Countersigning Officer is partial, his opinion is likely to cause incalculable damage to the officer reported upon, and if a PER is ambiguous or carelessly written, it would not serve the true purpose of recording PERs. Therefore, the Reporting and Countersigning Officers should evaluate the performance of the officer reported upon in a detached and objective manner, in accordance with the instructions issued on the subject.

Recording of PERs must be undertaken with complete objectivity and fairness, and with a view to improve individual and organizational productivity.

----Performance Evaluation Report---Assessment by Countersigning Officer and Reporting Officer---Interference by Service Tribunal or Supreme Court---Grounds---Evaluation of the performance of a subordinate officer by his Reporting or Countersigning Officer, primarily being a matter of personal assessment based on the direct observation of the work of the officer concerned, is not to be usually interfered with by the Tribunal or the Supreme Court unless mala fide with full particulars, or the gross violation of the instructions, on the part of the Reporting or Countersigning Officer, as the case may be, is shown.

----Performance Evaluation Report---Countersigning Officer and Reporting Officer---Prior counseling of subordinate officer---Requirement of prior counselling of subordinate officer before recording adverse remarks against him in his PER elaborated.

According to clauses 2.13(i)(ii) and 3.3(ii)(iv) of the Instructions contained in "A Guide to Performance Evaluation" (Edition 2004) published by the Establishment Division, as a general rule, an officer is to be apprised if his Reporting or Countersigning Officer is dissatisfied with his work, and the communication of such dissatisfaction with advice or warning should be prompt so that the officer may eradicate the fault and improve his performance. That is why it is emphasised that the Reporting or Countersigning Officers should not ordinarily record adverse remarks as to the performance of an officer without prior counselling. They are thus expected to apprise the officer concerned about his weak points and advise him/her how to improve, and to record the adverse remarks in the PER when the officer fails to improve despite counselling. The supervisory officers under whose supervision other officers work, must realise that the supervision does not mean cracking the whip on finding a fault in their performance, rather the primary purpose of the supervision is to guide the subordinates officers in improving their performance and efficiency, and that their role is more like a mentor rather than a punishing authority. As the purpose of counselling is to improve the performance of the officer and not to insult or intimidate him, the supervisory officers are also to see, having regard to the temperament of the officer concerned, whether the advice or warning given orally or in written form, or given publically in a general meeting of the officers or privately in a separate meeting with the concerned officer only, would be beneficial for the officer in improving his performance. The directions contained in the instructions, in this regard, on paying great attention to the manner and method of communicating advice or warning should be adhered to.

Raja M. Shafqat Khan Abbasi, D.A.G., Mrs. Ayesha Wani, Joint Secretary, Amin Tareen, Deputy Secretary and Sajid-ul-Hassan, Section Officer, Establishment Division, GOP for Petitioner.

Respondents in person.

Date of hearing: 7th February, 2023.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against four judgments of the Federal Service Tribunal, all dated 16.06.2022 ("impugned judgments"), whereby the Tribunal, while allowing the appeals of the respondents, has expunged the adverse remarks recorded by the Countersigning Officer in their Performance Evaluation Reports ("PERs") of certain periods and restored the assessment of their performance made by the Reporting Officers.

2. Briefly, the facts of the case are that the respondents, Riaz-ul-Wahab and Surkharu Khan, joined the Intelligence Bureau as Assistant Directors (BS-17) in 2001 and 2003 respectively, and having an unblemished and meritorious service record, they were promoted as Deputy Director (BS-18) and Director (BS-19) in due course. In the PERs of the respondent, Riaz-ul-Wahab, for the periods of about three months of 2019 and of about nine months of 2020, his Reporting Officer evaluated his performance as "very good" and "outstanding" and also recorded him as "fit for promotion"; and in the PERs of the respondent, Surkharu Khan, for the periods of about three months of 2018 and of about six months of 2019, his Reporting Officer evaluated his performance as "good" and "very good" and also recorded him as "fit for promotion". However, their Countersigning Officer downgraded their performance evaluation as "average" and also declared them "unfit for promotion". The respondents preferred departmental appeals against the remarks of the Countersigning Officer. The appeals of the respondent, Riaz-ul-Wahab, were not responded to while that of the respondent, Surkharu Khan, were rejected. They, therefore, filed appeals before the Tribunal, which were allowed through the impugned judgments and the remarks recorded by the Countersigning Officer were expunged while the assessments of their performance made by the Reporting Officers were restored. Hence, the petitioner has filed the present petitions for leave to appeal.

3. During the hearing, we called the representative of the Establishment Division, Government of Pakistan, to explain to the Court the obligations of a Countersigning Officer in the matter of recording adverse remarks in the PER of a subordinate officer, especially when he disagrees with the evaluation recorded by the Reporting Officer. Mrs. Ayesha Wani, Joint Secretary, Establishment Division has appeared and referred us to clauses 2.13(i)(ii) and 3.3(ii)(iv) of the Instructions contained in "A Guide to Performance Evaluation" (Edition 2004) published by the Establishment Division. She explained that as per the said instructions, if the Countersigning Officer disagrees with the evaluation of the Reporting Officer, he has to give reasons for the same, and before recording adverse remarks in the PER, the Reporting Officer and the Countersigning Officer, as the case may be, should, as a general rule, first do counselling of the officer concerned by either giving advice or administering a warning to the officer. The instructions referred to by her are reproduced here for ready reference:

2.13. Instructions for the Countersigning Officers-

(i) The Countersigning Officers should weigh the remarks of the RO against their personal knowledge of the officer under report and then give their assessment in Part V. In case of disagreement, the Countersigning Officers should give specific reasons in Part V. Similarly, if the Countersigning Officers differs with the grading or remarks given by the Reporting Officer in Part III they should score it out and give their own grading by initialing the appropriate box.

(ii) The Countersigning Officers should make an unbiased evaluation of the quality of performance evaluation made by the RO by categorizing the reports as exaggerated, fair or biased. This would evoke a greater sense of responsibility from the reporting officers.

Instructions Regarding Adverse Remarks-

3.3 The following principles are laid down for guidance:

(ii) as a general rule in no case should an officer be kept in total ignorance for any length of time that his superiors after sufficient experience of his work are dissatisfied with him; in cases where a warning might eradicate or help to eradicate a particular fault, the advantages of prompt communication are obvious; where criticism is proposed to be withheld, the final authority to consider the report should record instructions, with reasons, according to the nature of the defects discussed as to the period for which communication is to be kept back;

(vi) great attention should be paid to the manner and method of communication in order to ensure that the advice given and the warning or the censure administered, having regard to the temperament of the officer concerned, may be most beneficial to him. The adverse remarks may be communicated in writing or verbally. In the latter case, the fact of communication should be recorded on the evaluation report and, if the officer so requests, the remarks should be given in writing;

(Emphasis added)

The respondents have asserted that no advice or warning was ever given to them by the Countersigning Officer before recording the adverse remarks, and there is nothing on the record of the case to controvert their said assertion.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioner and the respondents in person, read the cases cited by them and the relevant instructions on the subject, and have also examined the record of the case.

5. PERs are the most important documents in the service record of civil servants. They help the competent authorities in making informed decisions with regards to personnel administration matters, such as, selections for training, appointments/transfers, promotions, confirmations or screening of civil servants. An officer's promotion and retention in service mostly depends on what has been recorded in his/her PER. It is, therefore, essential that the PERs are written by the Reporting and Countersigning Officers most carefully and responsibly. The PER forms that elaborate the criteria against which the performance of a subordinate officer is to be evaluated, and the instructions issued with regards to properly recording the PERs, are designed to ensure reporting on an officer's strong and weak points more objectively, as only objective reporting can effectively serve the true purpose of such reports.[1] If the Reporting or the Countersigning Officer is partial, his opinion is likely to cause incalculable damage to the officer reported upon, and if a PER is ambiguous or carelessly written, it would not serve the true purpose of recording PERs. Therefore, the Reporting and Countersigning Officers should evaluate the performance of the officer reported upon in a detached and objective manner, in accordance with the instructions issued on the subject.[2]

6. According to "Performance Management in the Public Administration - Seven Success Factors" published in 2021,[3] the seven success factors to enhance performance management in the public sector include; improving manager judgment and diversifying the sources of evaluation for performance appraisals to ensure objectivity and fairness in assessment, such as through 360-degree evaluations[4] and by acknowledging and addressing bias; and enabling staff performance through adequate opportunities for growth and development, such as through regular feedback and coaching. Therefore, much importance is extended to proper and effective performance appraisals and assessment of employees in public administration, which in Pakistan is mainly undertaken through recording PERs, for successful performance management in public administration as a means to increase public sector productivity. This further necessitates that recording of PERs must be undertaken with complete objectivity and fairness, and with a view to improve individual and organizational productivity.

7. It is true that the evaluation of the performance of a subordinate officer by his Reporting or Countersigning Officer, primarily being a matter of personal assessment based on the direct observation of the work of the officer concerned, is not to be usually interfered with by the Tribunal or this Court unless mala fide with full particulars, or the gross violation of the instructions, on the part of the Reporting or Countersigning Officer, as the case may be, is shown.[5] In the present case, the Tribunal has interfered with and expunged the remarks recorded by the Countersigning Officer mainly on the ground of gross violation of the instructions on the subject of recording adverse remarks in PERs.

8. According to the relevant instructions cited above, as a general rule, an officer is to be apprised if his Reporting or Countersigning Officer is dissatisfied with his work, and the communication of such dissatisfaction with advice or warning should be prompt so that the officer may eradicate the fault and improve his performance. That is why it is emphasised that the Reporting or Countersigning Officers should not ordinarily record adverse remarks as to the performance of an officer without prior counselling.[6] They are thus expected to apprise the officer concerned about his weak points and advise him/her how to improve, and to record the adverse remarks in the PER when the officer fails to improve despite counselling. The supervisory officers under whose supervision other officers work, must realise that the supervision does not mean cracking the whip on finding a fault in their performance, rather the primary purpose of the supervision is to guide the subordinates officers in improving their performance and efficiency, and that their role is more like a mentor rather than a punishing authority. As the purpose of counselling is to improve the performance of the officer and not to insult or intimidate him, the supervisory officers are also to see, having regard to the temperament of the officer concerned, whether the advice or warning given orally or in written form, or given publically in a general meeting of the officers or privately in a separate meeting with the concerned officer only, would be beneficial for the officer in improving his performance. The directions contained in the instructions, in this regard, on paying great attention to the manner and method of communicating advice or warning should be adhered to. It must also be pointed out that such guidance, through counselling, for improving the performance and efficiency of a subordinate officer, can ultimately benefit the organization as it enables identifying and addressing performance issues before they become major problems, thereby, leading to increased productivity and better performance so that the organization's goals and objectives are effectively achieved.[7]

9. In the present case, the Countersigning Officer did not mention in the PERs that he had counselled the respondents for improving their performance nor did he justify his departure from the above general rule of making prior counselling before recording the adverse remarks. He has also not given the required specific reasons for his disagreement with the evaluation of the Reporting Officers. There was, thus, a gross violation of the instructions by the Countersigning Officer in recording the adverse remarks in the PERs of the respondents. The Tribunal has rightly expunged the same.

10. For the above reasons, we find no legal flaw in the impugned judgments of the Tribunal. The present petitions are meritless. They are, therefore, dismissed and the leave to appeal, declined.

First proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. makes the power of the court to grant bail in the offences of prohibitory clause of section 497(1) alleged against an accused under the age of sixteen years, a woman accused and a sick or infirm accused, equal to its power under the first part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. It means that in cases of women accused etc. as mentioned in the first proviso to section 497(1), irrespective of the category of the offence, the bail is to be granted as a rule and refused only as an exception in the same manner as it is granted or refused in offences that do not fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The exceptions that justify the refusal of bail are the likelihood of the accused, if released on bail: (i) to abscond to escape trial; (ii) to tamper with the prosecution evidence or influence the prosecution witnesses to obstruct the course of justice; and (iii) to repeat the offence.

----Ss. 497(1) & 497(2)---Bail---Grant of bail under section 497(1) and under section 497(2), Cr.P.C.---Distinction explained.

Grant of bail to the accused under section 497(2), Cr.P.C., is granted as of right if it appears to the court that there are no reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed the offence alleged against him rather there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt. For the purpose of deciding the prayer for grant of bail in exercise of the discretionary power of the court under section 497(1), Cr.P.C., the availability of a sufficient incriminating material to connect the accused with the commission of the offence alleged against him is not a relevant consideration.

Arshad H. Yousafzai, Advocate Supreme Court for the Complainant.

Date of hearing: 22nd February, 2023.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.- The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against an order of the Peshawar High Court, dated 19.12.2022, ("impugned order") whereby the High Court while dismissing the bail application of the petitioner has denied to her the post arrest bail in case FIR No.968 registered at Police Station Sher Garh, District Mardan, for the offences under sections 302, 325, 200, 201, 182, 109 and 34 of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 ("P.P.C.") and the offence under section 15 of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Arms Act, 2013.

2. Briefly stated, the allegation against the petitioner is that she in connivance with the co-accused, Imran Ullah, has caused death of her husband, Muhammad Arif.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record of the case.

4. No doubt, the offence of Qatl-i-amd (intentional murder) punishable under section 302, P.P.C. alleged against the petitioner falls within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898

("Cr.P.C.") but being a women, the petitioner's case is covered by the first proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The said proviso, as held in Tahira Batool case,[1] makes the power of the court to grant bail in the offences of prohibitory clause of section 497(1) alleged against an accused under the age of sixteen years, a woman accused and a sick or infirm accused, equal to its power under the first part of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. It means that in cases of women accused etc. as mentioned in the first proviso to section 497(1), irrespective of the category of the offence, the bail is to be granted as a rule and refused only as an exception in the same manner as it is granted or refused in offences that do not fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The exceptions that justify the refusal of bail are also well settled by several judgments of this Court.[2] They are the likelihood of the accused, if released on bail: (i) to abscond to escape trial; (ii) to tamper with the prosecution evidence or influence the prosecution witnesses to obstruct the course of justice; and (iii) to repeat the offence.

5. That being the legal position, we have asked the learned Additional Advocate General and the learned counsel for the complainant to show how the petitioner's case falls in any of the said three well-established exceptions. They, however, could not explain and satisfy the Court as to which one of the said exceptions is attracted to the petitioner's case. Their only response was that there is a sufficient incriminating material available on record of the case to connect the petitioner with the commission of the alleged offence. We are afraid, the response is misconceived. The Court is not considering the grant of bail to the petitioner under section 497(2), Cr.P.C., under which the bail is granted to an accused as of right if it appears to the court that there are no reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed the offence alleged against him rather there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt. For the purpose of deciding the prayer for grant of bail in exercise of the discretionary power of the court under section 497(1), Cr.P.C., the availability of a sufficient incriminating material to connect the accused with the commission of the offence alleged against him is not a relevant consideration.

6. In view of the facts and circumstances of the case, we do not find that there is a likelihood that the petitioner if released on bail, after securing sufficient sureties, would abscond to escape trial, or tamper with the prosecution evidence or influence the prosecution witnesses to obstruct the course of justice, or repeat the offence. Her case, thus, does not fall within any of the three well-established exceptions that may have justified refusing bail to her.

7. For the above reasons, we find that the High Court has passed the impugned order while disregarding the settled principles of law regulating the discretion of the courts in regard to the grant of bail to women accused. The present petition is, therefore, converted into appeal and the same is allowed. The bail application of the petitioner is accepted and she is admitted to bail subject to her furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.100,000/- with two sureties in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial court.

8. Needless to mention that this concession of bail may be cancelled by the trial court in the exercise of its power under section 497(5), Cr.P.C. if the petitioner misuses it in any manner, including the causing of delay or otherwise hindering the expeditious conclusion of the trial.

MWA/G-2/SC Bail granted.

(d) Service Tribunals Act (LXX of 1973)---

----S. 5(2)---Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Ss. 12(2), 35B, 141, 151 & O. XLI, R. 35(3)---Costs of Litigation Act (XVII of 2017), Preamble---Appeal/application filed before the Federal Service Tribunal---'Special costs'---No upper limit---While deciding an appeal under the Service Tribunals Act, 1973 or an application under section 12(2) of the C.P.C., the Federal Service Tribunal ("Tribunal") has the powers to impose special costs, without any upper limit of amount, on a party to that appeal or application as the case may be, keeping in view the peculiar facts and circumstances of a particular case---Determining the appropriate amount of special costs has been left to the discretion of the court concerned---Tribunal is to exercise this discretion, like all other discretions, on the principles of fairness, equity and justice, not arbitrarily or perversely, while keeping in view the peculiar facts and circumstances of a particular case.

(e) Practice and procedure---

----Costs---Frivolous and vexatious cases---Unscrupulous litigants---Purpose and benefits of imposing costs on litigants stated.

Courts and tribunals should regularly exercise their powers to impose reasonable costs to curb the practice of instituting frivolous and vexatious cases by unscrupulous litigants, which has unduly burdened their dockets with a heavy pendency of cases, thereby clogging the whole justice system. The possibility of being made liable to pay costs is a sufficient deterrence to make a litigant think twice before putting forth a false or vexatious claim or defence before court. The imposition of these costs plays a crucial role in promoting fairness, deterring frivolous lawsuits, encouraging settlement, and fostering efficient use of resources: (i) promoting fairness: imposing costs in litigation helps to create a level playing field for both plaintiffs and defendants. By requiring both parties to bear the financial burden of litigation, the system encourages parties to consider the merits of their case before initiating legal action. This helps to ensure that only those with legitimate grievances pursue legal recourse, reducing the possibility of abuse; (ii) deterring frivolous lawsuits: imposing costs can discourage parties from filing baseless or frivolous claims, as the risk of incurring significant financial losses may outweigh any potential gains. This helps to protect defendants from having to defend themselves against meritless claims, reducing strain on the court system and preserving judicial resources; (iii) encouraging settlement: when parties are aware of the potential costs associated with litigation, they may be more inclined to engage in settlement negotiations or alternative dispute resolution methods. This can result in more efficient resolution of disputes, lower costs for all involved, and a reduced burden on the court system; (iv) fostering efficient use of resources: imposing costs in litigation incentivizes parties to focus on the most relevant and important aspects of their case, as both parties will want to minimize their expenses. This can lead to more efficient use of legal resources, including court time and the expertise of legal professionals, and may result in more focused and streamlined proceedings. The practice of imposing costs would thus cleanse the court dockets of frivolous and vexatious litigation, encourage expeditious dispensation of justice, and promote a smart legal system that enhances access to justice by taking up and deciding genuine cases in the shortest possible timeframe.

Qazi Naveed ul Islam v. District Judge PLD 2023 SC 298 ref.

Aftab Alam Yasir, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Nemo for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 12th April, 2023.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The sole question that has come up for our consideration in the present case is: whether the Federal Service Tribunal ("Tribunal") while deciding an appeal under the Service Tribunals Act, 1973 ("Act"), or any application including an application under section 12(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 ("C.P.C."), can award costs.

2. Briefly, the facts are that the petitioner was proceeded against departmentally for misconduct and awarded major penalty of compulsory retirement. Thereafter, the petitioner embarked upon a long journey of unending litigation, which is described hereunder in a tabular form for convenience and clarity as under:

| No. | Nature of proceedings | Court | Decision | Date |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | Service appeal | Tribunal | Dismissed | 09.01.2008 |

| 9 | Constitution petition under Article 184(3) | Supreme Court | Returned with office objection | 07.10.2017 |

| 10 | Misc. appeal against office order | Supreme Court | Dismissed | 30.10.2017 |
| 11 | Application under section 12(2), C.P.C. | Supreme Court | Dismissed as withdrawn | 02.05.2019 |
| 12 | Application under section 12(2), C.P.C. | Tribunal | Dismissed | 13.06.2019 |
| 13 | Application under section 12(2), C.P.C. | Tribunal | Dismissed | 28.07.2020 |

The last mentioned order dated 28.07.2020 is impugned in the present petition for leave to appeal, whereby the Tribunal dismissed the application under section 12(2), C.P.C. of the petitioner with costs of Rs.50,000/-. The said application was filed by the petitioner against the order of the Tribunal, dated 09.01.2008.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioner and examined the record of the case.

4. Section 5(2) of the Act provides for the powers of the Tribunal and is reproduced hereunder for ease of reference:

5. Powers of Tribunals.

(1) .....

(2) A Tribunal shall, for the purpose of deciding any appeal, be deemed to be a civil court and shall have the same powers as are vested in such court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (Act V of 1908), including the powers of -

(a) enforcing the attendance of any person and examining him on oath;

(b) compelling the production of documents; and

(c) issuing commission for the examination of witnesses and documents.

A bare reading of the above provision shows that for the purpose of deciding an appeal, the Tribunal is deemed to be a civil court and has the same powers as are vested in a civil court under the C.P.C. Needless to mention that all courts exercising civil jurisdiction (whether original/ trial, appellate or revisional) under the C.P.C. read with the Civil Courts Ordinance, 1962, are referred to as "civil courts." But as the powers of a civil court have been conferred on the Tribunal for the purpose of deciding appeals, the reference in section 5(2) of the Act to the powers of a civil court under the C.P.C. is to be taken as a reference to the powers of an appellate civil court under the C.P.C. And since the Tribunal can interfere with the findings of facts recorded by the departmental authorities, in addition to correcting any legal error committed by them, the appeals filed before it are in the nature of first appeals as provided in the C.P.C. Thus, the principles governing first appeals under the C.P.C. apply to appeals before the Tribunal, and the powers of the first appellate court under the C.P.C. are available to it.[1]

5. A first appellate court can award the actual costs incurred in appeal as per provisions of rule 35(3) of Order XLI, C.P.C. and can also impose special costs in the exercise of its inherent powers under section 151, C.P.C. if the facts and circumstances of the case necessitate the making of such an order to secure the ends of justice or to prevent the abuse of the process of the court.[2] Therefore, both these powers are also available to the Tribunal while deciding an appeal under the Act. Similarly, a first appellate court can award not only the actual costs incurred on an application under section 12(2), C.P.C. by virtue of section 35 read with section 141,[3] C.P.C. but also compensatory costs under section 35A, C.P.C. or special costs under section 151, C.P.C. Thus, the Tribunal can also exercise these powers in awarding costs while deciding an application under section 12(2), C.P.C. or any other application.

6. It may be elaborated that actual costs are awarded by a civil court under section 35 of the C.P.C. to reimburse the successful party the expenses incurred by him in the assertion or defence of his rights before the court and compensatory costs are granted under section 35A to compensate him for undergoing unnecessary litigation due to false or vexatious claim or defence made by his opponent. Whereas special costs are imposed, under section 151, for deterrent purposes on a party who initiates a proceedings, particularly the appellate proceedings, in complete disregard of the obvious factual or legal position, and thereby wastes the precious court time and abuses the process of the court.

7. In the present case, the Tribunal which has imposed special costs on the petitioner, while dismissing his application under section 12(2) of the C.P.C., is situated in Islamabad and thus has the powers available to the first appellate civil courts in Islamabad, where the amended provisions of sections 35, 35A and 35B, C.P.C. are applicable under the Costs of Litigation Act, 2017. By notification dated 14 March 2018, the Costs of Litigation Act, 2017 has been enforced and made applicable to all courts in Islamabad in respect of all proceedings including suit, appeal, review, revision, execution or any other proceedings and any matter incidental thereto. The 2017 Act has, in fact, consolidated the two types of costs, compensatory and special, in the newly added section 35B under one head of "special costs" by removing the upper limit on the amount of such costs. It has left to the discretion of the court concerned to determine the appropriate amount of special costs. It may be underlined that a civil court or the Tribunal as the case may be, is to exercise this discretion, like all other discretions, on the principles of fairness, equity and justice, not arbitrarily or perversely, while keeping in view the peculiar facts and circumstances of a particular case.

8. In view of the legal position stated above, we find that while deciding an appeal under the Act or an application under section 12(2) of the C.P.C., the Tribunal has the powers to impose special costs, without any upper limit of amount, on a party to that appeal or application as the case may be, keeping in view the peculiar facts and circumstances of a particular case. In the present case, the Tribunal has imposed special costs of Rs.50,000/- on the petitioner for wasting the precious public time of the Tribunal by making a vexatious application under section 12(2), C.P.C. Such exercise of discretion by the Tribunal in imposing the costs is fully justified in the facts and circumstances of the case stated in para 2 above, and in no manner does it tantamount to an arbitrary or perverse exercise of discretion. The present petition is thus found meritless. It is therefore dismissed and the leave to appeal is declined. We may mention here that we have abstained to impose additional costs, in the exercise of powers of this Court under the Supreme Court Rules, 1980, while dismissing the present petition as the petitioner has not pressed the merits of his application under section 12(2), C.P.C. before us and argued his grievance only to the question as to the powers of the Tribunal to impose costs.

9. Before parting with the order, we find it necessary to emphasise that it is high time that courts and tribunals should regularly exercise their powers to impose reasonable costs to curb the practice of instituting frivolous and vexatious cases by unscrupulous litigants, which has unduly burdened their dockets with a heavy pendency of cases, thereby clogging the whole justice system. The possibility of being made liable to pay costs is a sufficient deterrence to make a litigant think twice before putting forth a false or vexatious claim or defence before court. The imposition of these costs plays a crucial role in promoting fairness, deterring frivolous lawsuits, encouraging settlement, and fostering efficient use of resources: (i) promoting fairness: imposing costs in litigation helps to create a level playing field for both plaintiffs and defendants. By requiring both parties to bear the financial burden of litigation, the system encourages parties to consider the merits of their case before initiating legal action. This helps to ensure that only those with legitimate grievances pursue legal recourse, reducing the possibility of abuse; (ii) deterring frivolous lawsuits: imposing costs can discourage parties from filing baseless or frivolous claims, as the risk of incurring significant financial losses may outweigh any potential gains. This helps to protect defendants from having to defend themselves against meritless claims, reducing strain on the court system and preserving judicial resources; (iii) encouraging settlement: when parties are aware of the potential costs associated with litigation, they may be more inclined to engage in settlement negotiations or alternative dispute resolution methods. This can result in more efficient resolution of disputes, lower costs for all involved, and a reduced burden on the court system; (iv) fostering efficient use of resources: imposing costs in litigation incentivizes parties to focus on the most relevant and important aspects of their case, as both parties will want to minimize their expenses. This can lead to more efficient use of legal resources, including court time and the expertise of legal professionals, and may result in more focused and streamlined proceedings. The practice of imposing costs would thus cleanse the court dockets of frivolous and vexatious litigation, encourage expeditious dispensation of justice, and promote a smart legal system that enhances access to justice by taking up and deciding genuine cases in the shortest possible timeframe.[4]

Civil Petitions Nos. 3286 to 3289 of 2017, decided on 2nd August, 2022.

(a) Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----S. 107---International tax conventions, agreements or treaties---Interpretation---Reasons as to why treaty interpretation rules differ from domestic tax rules stated.

International tax conventions or agreements or treaties are of a special nature and the role of a state (being party to such a bilateral agreement) is more of implementing the terms of such agreement rather than that of interpreting the same and that too in a unilateral manner. Treaty interpretation rules differ from domestic tax rules for the following among other reasons:

(a) As international treaties, the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23rd May 1969 ("VCLT") governs double tax agreements. Therefore, their interpretation is based on the rules of interpretation under customary international law. As these principles and procedures of interpretation of agreements differ from rules applied to domestic legislation, an interpretation under the domestic law as a taxing statute may be misleading and unsuitable;

(b) Unlike the domestic law which contains highly technical legislative language relevant to a specific jurisdiction, tax treaties are based on the mutual understanding among two or more contracting states. Moreover, more than one language may be involved. They must be applied by the tax authorities and the courts in each contracting state in auniform way (common interpretation) that may differ from the domestic laws and practices in each state;

(c) Tax treaties are primarily relieving in nature and do not impose tax, while the domestic tax law seeks to impose tax in specific circumstances. A treaty specifies general taxing principles to avoid double taxation. Moreover, as the life of a treaty can be long it must be flexible enough to adapt to changes in the domestic law while continuing to reflect the original negotiated balance of obligations and concessions;

(d) Tax treaties tend to be less precise and require a broad purposive "substance over form" interpretation. Therefore, they are often interpreted more liberally than domestic law in the context of their object and purpose. On the other hand, in states that prefer a liberal, purposive interpretation of their domestic law, the interpretation of the tax treaties may be stricter under the statutes. In both cases, a neutral interpretation and common understanding requires the use of an international fiscal language, which may not be found in the domestic laws and may provide a definition quite independent from domestic laws;

(e) Treaty interpretation is a subject in itself and not merely an extension of statutory interpretation despite the fact that treaties may be enforceable only when made part of the domestic law under a statute in certain countries. Therefore, tax treaties should be kept as free as possible from the interpretation rules under domestic law, unless specified in the treaty itself.

(b) Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----S. 107(2)(c)---Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income'

("Convention"), Arts. 5 & 7---Non-resident company---Engineering services provided by the petitioner (non-resident company) to a local company---Exemption from tax under the domestic tax regime of Pakistan---Petitioner (non-resident company) and the local company did not have a contractual relationship ascribing any building, construction, installation, assembly project or supervisory activities role to the former---Rather, the role of the petitioner was limited to providing engineering services only---Tax department failed to bring on record any evidence satisfying the threshold requirement of Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention that the petitioner had furnished services within Pakistan through employees or other personnel for a period or periods aggregating 'more than four months within any twelve months period', which was necessary for any activity of furnishing services to constitute a permanent establishment---Petitioner was entitled to the exemption provided in the Convention, and the income derived by the petitioner from providing the services to the local company was exempt from income tax in Pakistan because of not fulfilling the conditions necessary to constitute a permanent establishment as set out in Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention.

The petitioner-company, being a tax resident of the Netherlands, is entitled to the benefits and concessions under the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income' ("Convention"), in line with the provisions of section 107 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('Ordinance'). Under subsection (2)(c) of section 107 of the Ordinance, the taxability of the petitioner's income is to be determined under the provisions contained in the Convention which override the Ordinance. The Convention involved in the present case was signed and enforced by Pakistan and the Netherlands in 1982. Its Article 7 provides that the business profits of an enterprise of one of the states shall be taxable in the other state only if the enterprise maintains a permanent establishment in the latter state and only to the extent that the profits are attributable to the permanent establishment.

The contract between the petitioner-company and the local company reflects that the petitioner was hired for the provision of engineering services only. The scope of the petitioner's work consisted of providing engineering services for the plants as well as for the procurement of two years' spare parts. The petitioner's obligations mainly included: (i) carrying out the work exercising due skill, care and diligence in accordance with good and internationally acceptable engineering, design and procurement practices; (ii) furnishing five sets of the final version of the engineering documents to the local company; (iii) providing on an ongoing basis engineering data including computer files to the local company for review of the work being performed by the petitioner; and (iv) witnessing at its own expense at the place of manufacture all such tests and inspections of the equipment and materials and other parts of work, as specified in the contract to ensure that they comply with the engineering developed by the petitioner on the basis of the desired standards. It is expressly clarified in the contract that notwithstanding anything to the contrary, the petitioner shall not be responsible for the construction and the overall management activities of the project which shall be the exclusive responsibility of the local company. The local company was to perform or cause to be performed the construction and erection activities for the implementation of the plants and be responsible for the management and administration of such activities and any associated cost and time schedule. The local company was to use an expert and competent construction contractor and was required to ensure that construction would be performed according to acceptable standards. All work excluded from the petitioner's work was the local company's responsibility to perform or cause to be performed.

The burden of proving the fact that the petitioner had a permanent establishment in Pakistan and must, therefore, suffer tax from the business generated from such permanent establishment was initially on the department. The recitals of the contract adequately show that the petitioner and the local company did not have a contractual relationship ascribing any building, construction, installation, assembly project or supervisory activities role to the former. Rather, the role of the petitioner was limited to providing services only. The Assessing Officer's view about the actual involvement of the petitioner in the construction activity is not supported by any material on record. Clause 3 of Article 5 of the Convention has, therefore, no relevance to the petitioner's case.

Assistant Director of Income Tax v. E-Funds IT Solution Inc. (2018) 13 SCC 294 and DIT (International Taxation), Mumbai v. Morgan Stanley and Co. Inc. (2007) 7 SCC 1 ref.

However, the petitioner's case may fit in the category identified under Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention if the petitioner had rendered services through its employees in Pakistan provided the services were rendered for a specified period. Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention provides that permanent establishment shall "encompass the furnishing of services including consultancy services, by an enterprise through employees or other personnel, engaged by the enterprise for such purpose, but only where activities of that nature continue (for the same or a connected project) within the country for a period or periods aggregating more than four months within any twelve month period." The view of the Assessing Officer about the impossibility of the implementation of the contract without the physical presence of the petitioner in Pakistan appears irrational and purely assumptive because he failed to take note of the fact that the employees/representatives of the petitioner admittedly stayed in Pakistan for 97 days only.

The language used in Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention with respect to calculating the period of four months necessary for any activity of furnishing services to constitute a permanent establishment shows that there may be a number of periods, interspersed with breaks, during which services are furnished by an enterprise. If the aggregate of these periods crosses the threshold of four months within any twelve-month period, a permanent establishment will stand constituted. The department has failed to bring on record any evidence satisfying the threshold requirement of Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention that the petitioner had furnished services within Pakistan through employees or other personnel for a period or periods aggregating more than four months within any twelve-month period. The furnishing of services as envisaged under the Convention does not, of itself, create a permanent establishment unless it continues for a period or periods aggregating more than four months within any twelve-month period.

The income derived by the petitioner from the provision of engineering services to the local company being not attributable to a permanent establishment located in Pakistan is not taxable in Pakistan as long as it is not covered by other Articles of the Convention that would allow such taxation. The petitioner is entitled to the exemption provided in the Convention, and the income derived by the petitioner from providing the services to the local company is exempt from income tax in Pakistan because of not fulfilling the conditions necessary to constitute a permanent establishment as set out in Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention. Petitions for leave to appeal were converted into appeals and allowed accordingly.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Snamprogetti Engineering B.V. ("petitioner"), a company incorporated in the Netherlands, entered into an engineering contract dated 14.03.2007 ("contract") with Engro Chemicals Pakistan Limited ("local company"), a company incorporated in Pakistan, to provide "engineering services[1]" for the plants[2] and for the procurement of spare parts[3] regarding the project i.e., construction of a fertilizer complex at Daharki, District Ghotki, Pakistan. The petitioner was a non-resident company under the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("Ordinance").[4] Clause 3.18 of the contract provided that notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the contract, the petitioner would not be responsible for the construction and the overall management activities of the project. Engineering services as agreed to between the parties in the contract were duly provided by the petitioner to the local company.

2. The petitioner filed tax returns for tax years 2007, 2008 and 2009, declaring that the income arising from such engineering services was exempt from being taxed under the domestic tax regime of Pakistan. The tax returns were treated as assessment orders deemed to have been issued in terms of section 120(1) of the Ordinance. The department took exception to the exemption claimed by the petitioner. Show cause notices were issued to the petitioner under section 122(9) read with section 122(5A) of the Ordinance. The Assessing Officer amended the assessment orders under section 122(5A) of the Ordinance. Tax was consequently ordered to be charged on the income which had been declared exempt by the petitioner.

3. The petitioner assailed the said orders in appeal before the Commissioner (Appeals) and the latter set aside the orders passed by the Assessing Officer on the ground that the petitioner did not have a "permanent establishment" in Pakistan in the context of the 'Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income' ("Convention") so as to be amenable to the jurisdiction of domestic tax regime with regard to their business profits relating to such engineering services. The department successfully challenged the order of the Commissioner (Appeals) before the Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue ("Tribunal"). The tax references filed by the petitioner remained unsuccessful in the High Court. So, the petitioner seeks leave of this Court to appeal against the decision of the High Court.

4. The sole question that has come up for determination before us is whether the income derived by the petitioner from providing afore- referred engineering services to the local company is exempt from income tax in view of the Convention or is it liable to be taxed under normal tax regime of Pakistan.

5. We have heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties on the said question and have carefully gone through the record.

6. International taxation treaties aim to avoid and relieve double taxation through equitable (and acceptable) distribution of tax claims between the countries. The purpose of these treaties has significant relevance as to how their provisions are to be interpreted.[5] The reason is that the efficacy of such treaties depends on common and workable interpretation of the treaty terms.[6] Such an interpretation requires taking into consideration the international tax language and terminology and placing reliance on legal decisions and practices in other countries, where appropriate, because these materials form part of the legal context. Model treaties developed by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development ("OECD")[7] and the United Nations ("UN")[8] to provide standard frameworks of guidance for treaty negotiation, and official commentaries thereon, are of high persuasive value in terms of defining the parameters of double taxation treaties and have world-wide recognition as basic documents of reference in the negotiation, application and interpretation of multilateral or bilateral tax conventions.[9] Most countries accept the common interpretation principles of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23rd May 1969 ("VCLT") under customary international law, and thus the VCLT and not the domestic law of the contracting states, usually governs the interpretation of such treaties.

7. It is perhaps necessary to mention at the outset that international tax conventions or agreements or treaties are of a special nature and the role of a state (being party to such a bilateral agreement) is more of implementing the terms of such agreement rather than that of interpreting the same and that too in a unilateral manner. Treaty interpretation rules[10] differ from domestic tax rules for the following among other reasons:

(a) As international treaties, the VCLT governs double tax agreements. Therefore, their interpretation is based on the rules of interpretation under customary international law. As these principles and procedures of interpretation of agreements differ from rules applied to domestic legislation, an interpretation under the domestic law as a taxing statute may be misleading and unsuitable;

(b) Unlike the domestic law which contains highly technical legislative language relevant to a specific jurisdiction, tax treaties are based on the mutual understanding among two or more contracting states. Moreover, more than one language may be involved. They must be applied by the tax authorities and the courts in each contracting state in a uniform way (common interpretation) that may differ from the domestic laws and practices in each state;

(c) Tax treaties are primarily relieving in nature and do not impose tax, while the domestic tax law seeks to impose tax in specific circumstances. A treaty specifies general taxing principles to avoid double taxation. Moreover, as the life of a treaty can be long it must be flexible enough to adapt to changes in the domestic law while continuing to reflect the original negotiated balance of obligations and concessions;

(d) Tax treaties tend to be less precise and require a broad purposive "substance over form" interpretation. Therefore, they are often interpreted more liberally than domestic law in the context of their object and purpose.[11] On the other hand, in states that prefer a liberal, purposive interpretation of their domestic law, the interpretation of the tax treaties may be stricter under the statutes. In both cases, a neutral interpretation and common understanding requires the use of an international fiscal language, which may not be found in the domestic laws and may provide a definition quite independent from domestic laws;

(e) Treaty interpretation is a subject in itself and not merely an extension of statutory interpretation despite the fact that treaties may be enforceable only when made part of the domestic law under a statute in certain countries. Therefore, tax treaties should be kept as free as possible from the interpretation rules under domestic law, unless specified in the treaty itself.

8. The petitioner, being a tax resident of the Netherlands, is entitled to the benefits and concessions under the Convention in line with the provisions of section 107 of the Ordinance. Under subsection (2)(c) of section 107 of the Ordinance, the taxability of the petitioner's income is to be determined under the provisions contained in the Convention which override the Ordinance. The Convention involved in the present case was signed and enforced by Pakistan and the Netherlands in 1982. Its Article 7 provides that the business profits of an enterprise of one of the states shall be taxable in the other state only if the enterprise maintains a permanent establishment in the latter state and only to the extent that the profits are attributable to the permanent establishment. The concept of permanent establishment is used in bilateral tax treaties to determine the right of a state to tax the profits of an enterprise of the other state. According to Klaus Vogel, an eminent academic in the field of international taxation and recognized as an authority on the interpretation of double taxation treaties, the permanent establishment threshold has been commonly used since 1920s in double taxation treaties to determine whether a particular kind of income shall or shall not be taxed in the country from which it originates.[12]

9. The term 'permanent establishment' is dealt with under Article 5 of the Convention. The structure of this Article as per the OECD and UN Model Conventions has been explained in Klaus Vogel's treatise, which is regarded as the international gold standard on the law of tax treaties, as a multi-level structure and can be read from more than one starting point. Clause 1 of Article 5 of the Convention gives a general or classic definition of the term permanent establishment as a fixed place of business through which the business of an enterprise is wholly or partly carried on. Clause 2 contains a non-exhaustive list of examples which could be regarded as permanent establishments. Clause 3 expressly provides that a building site, construction, installation, assembly project or supervisory activities constitute a permanent establishment only if they last more than six months. Clause 4 relates to services and provides that the furnishing of services would fall in the ambit of permanent establishment if activities of that nature continue for a period or periods aggregating more than four months within any twelve-month period. Clause 5 lists a number of business activities which are treated as exceptions to the general definition. Clauses 6 and 7 are deeming provisions referring to situations where an enterprise is deemed to have a permanent establishment in one of the states. And, clause 8 provides an instance that a company which is a resident of one of the states and controls or is controlled by a company which is a resident of the other state or which carries on business in the other state shall not of itself constitute either company a permanent establishment of the other.

10. The Assessing Officer while dealing with the question of permanent establishment was of the view that the petitioner's case was covered by clauses 3 and 4 of Article 5 of the Convention. He observed that the petitioner was not only engaged in providing the designing and engineering services but was also performing the construction work at the plant site and that the implementation of the contract was not possible without the physical presence of the petitioner in Pakistan. The decision of the Assessing Officer was set aside by the Commissioner (Appeals) and though the decision of the Commissioner (Appeals) was reversed by the Tribunal which was then maintained by the High Court as well, the latter two forums did not reinstate the Assessing Officer's observation about the petitioner's case being covered by Clause 3 of Article 5 of the Convention.

11. The contract reflects that the petitioner was hired for the provision of engineering services only. The scope of the petitioner's work consisted of providing engineering services for the plants as well as for the procurement of two years' spare parts. The petitioner's obligations mainly included: (i) carrying out the work exercising due skill, care and diligence in accordance with good and internationally acceptable engineering, design and procurement practices;[13] (ii) furnishing five sets of the final version of the engineering documents to the local company;[14] (iii) providing on an ongoing basis engineering data including computer files to the local company for review of the work being performed by the petitioner;[15] and (iv) witnessing at its own expense at the place of manufacture all such tests and inspections of the equipment and materials and other parts of work, as specified in the contract to ensure that they comply with the engineering developed by the petitioner on the basis of the desired standards.[16] It is expressly clarified in the contract that notwithstanding anything to the contrary, the petitioner shall not be responsible for the construction and the overall management activities of the project which shall be the exclusive responsibility of the local company.[17] The local company was to perform or cause to be performed the construction and erection activities for the implementation of the plants and be responsible for the management and administration of such activities and any associated cost and time schedule.[18] The local company was to use an expert and competent construction contractor and was required to ensure that construction would be performed according to acceptable standards.[19] All work excluded from the petitioner's work was the local company's responsibility to perform or cause to be performed.[20]

12. The burden of proving the fact that the petitioner had a permanent establishment in Pakistan and must, therefore, suffer tax from the business generated from such permanent establishment was initially on the department.[21] The above-referred recitals of the contract adequately show that the petitioner and the local company did not have a contractual relationship ascribing any building, construction, installation, assembly project or supervisory activities role to the former. Rather, the role of the petitioner was limited to providing services only. The Assessing Officer's view about the actual involvement of the petitioner in the construction activity is not supported by any material on record. Clause 3 of Article 5 of the Convention has, therefore, no relevance to the petitioner's case.

13. However, the petitioner's case may fit in the category identified under Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention if the petitioner had rendered services through its employees in Pakistan provided the services were rendered for a specified period.[22] Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention provides that permanent establishment shall "encompass the furnishing of services including consultancy services, by an enterprise through employees or other personnel, engaged by the enterprise for such purpose, but only where activities of that nature continue (for the same or a connected project) within the country for a period or periods aggregating more than four months within any twelve month period." The view of the Assessing Officer about the impossibility of the implementation of the contract without the physical presence of the petitioner in Pakistan appears irrational and purely assumptive because he failed to take note of the fact that the employees/representatives of the petitioner admittedly stayed in Pakistan for 97 days only.

14. The High Court, the Tribunal and the Commissioner (Appeals) all reckoned that the case of the petitioner was covered by Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention. However, they used different approaches to calculate the period of four months, necessary for any activity of furnishing services to be categorized as a permanent establishment. The Commissioner (Appeals), in view of the admitted position that the employees/representatives of the petitioner stayed in Pakistan for 97 days only, came to the conclusion that the stay of the petitioner's employees/representatives in the country was less than four months in each year and, therefore, did not correspond with the profile of permanent establishment given in Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention. The Tribunal, however, reasoned that it was not the presence but the activity which mattered; that the whole project was indivisible and taxability of project execution must be taken in entirety; and that the entire period of implementation of the project which was far longer than the prescribed period of four months was to be counted. The High Court recognized that the obligations of the petitioner under the contract were in the nature of furnishing of services and the employees/representatives of the petitioner had indeed stayed in Pakistan for 97 days only. Yet the High Court observed that the furnishing of services described in the contract was not dependent on the number of visits by the employees/representatives of the petitioner or their physical presence at the site. What was relevant, the High Court observed, was the continuation of furnishing of services and the activities relating thereto within Pakistan for a period or periods aggregating more than four months within any twelve-month period. The High Court elaborated that the plants were constructed and commissioned at Daharki, District Ghotki, Pakistan while the engineering services were being rendered by the petitioner in relation thereto and the activities of that nature had definitely continued in Pakistan. The petitioner, therefore, was held to have a permanent establishment within the meaning of Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention.

15. We are unable to subscribe to the reasoning provided for calculating the time period by the Tribunal and the High Court. Rather, we believe that the Commissioner (Appeals) had taken a correct and logical approach to calculating the period of four months necessary for any activity of furnishing services to constitute a permanent establishment. The language used in Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention with respect to time period shows that there may be a number of periods, interspersed with breaks, during which services are furnished by an enterprise. If the aggregate of these periods crosses the threshold of four months within any twelve-month period, a permanent establishment will stand constituted. What could be the way to separate breaks from periods of activity other than counting the days of the actual physical presence of employees or other personnel engaged in furnishing services by an enterprise in the source country. We agree with the High Court that the engineering services for which the contract was executed were in relation to the construction and installation of fertilizer plants but we disagree with the High Court as regards the finding that the obligations of the petitioner relating to furnishing of services were in respect of the construction of the plants at the site and continued for the entire period of the validity of the contract. We do not see that contracts covering activities other than engineering services were concluded with the petitioner or related persons. The nature of the work involved in engineering services and construction activity could not be said to be the same. It has not been shown that the same employees rendered engineering services and performed construction activities under different contracts. Nor has it been brought on record that engineering services and construction activities would have been covered by a single contract except for tax planning considerations.

16. The department has failed to bring on record any evidence satisfying the threshold requirement of Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention that the petitioner had furnished services within Pakistan through employees or other personnel for a period or periods aggregating more than four months within any twelve-month period. The furnishing of services as envisaged under the Convention does not, of itself, create a permanent establishment unless it continues for a period or periods aggregating more than four months within any twelve-month period.

17. The representatives of the petitioner admittedly stayed in Pakistan for 97 days only which falls short of the requirement of continuation of services for four months in each year and, therefore, the provision of engineering services by the petitioner could not be placed in the category of permanent establishment set out in Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention. The income derived by the petitioner from the provision of engineering services to the local company being not attributable to a permanent establishment located in Pakistan is not taxable in Pakistan as long as it is not covered by other Articles of the Convention that would allow such taxation. We, therefore, reach the conclusion that the petitioner is entitled to the exemption provided in the Convention, and the income derived by the petitioner from providing the afore-referred services to the local company is exempt from income tax in Pakistan because of not fulfilling the conditions necessary to constitute a permanent establishment as set out in Clause 4 of Article 5 of the Convention.

18. In view of the above answer to the question under consideration, we convert these petitions into appeals and allow the same: the impugned judgment of the High Court and order of the Tribunal are set aside while that of the Commissioner (Appeals) is restored and the bank guarantee dated 14.02.2022 in the sum of Rs. 20 million furnished by the petitioner with the Deputy Registrar of this Court shall be returned to the petitioner.

19. Foregoing are the reasons for our short order dated 02.08.2022, which is reproduced here for convenience:- For reasons to be recorded later, these petitions are converted into appeals and allowed. The bank guarantee dated 14.02.2022 in the sum of Rs.20 million furnished by the petitioner with the Deputy Registrar of this Court shall be returned to the petitioner.

Civil Petition No. 2009 of 2020, decided on 13th April, 2023.

(Against the judgment of the Punjab Service Tribunal, Lahore, dated 10. 12.2019 passed in Appeal No. 243 of 2008)

Punjab Service Tribunals Act (IX of 1974)---

----Ss. 4(1)(a) & 5(1)---Appeal filed before the Service Tribunal after departmental authority fails to decide representation within 90 days---Service Tribunal, powers of---Scope---Once the appeal, application of review or representation, as the case may be, of a civil servant is not decided by the departmental authority within a period of 90 days and he has elected to approach the Tribunal through preferring an appeal after lapse of that period, then his appeal has to be decided on merits and the Tribunal cannot dispose of that appeal by issuing direction to the departmental authority to decide the appeal, application for review or representation of the appellant, because the said remedy already stands exhausted by virtue of the lapse of time.

If the departmental appeal, review or representation of a civil servant is not decided within a period of 90 days, the aggrieved civil servant need not endlessly wait for the decision of the departmental appeal, review or representation and can straight away approach the Tribunal by filing an appeal for the redressal of his grievance. The Punjab Service Tribunals Act, 1974 ('the Act') encourages a civil servant to first avail the remedy of departmental appeal, review or representation so that the matter can best be decided at the departmental level. However, if no progress is made on such departmental remedy within 90 days, the Act provides the civil servant with a higher remedy in the shape of an appeal before the Tribunal to agitate his grievance. When the aggrieved civil servant avails the higher remedy of appeal before the Tribunal after lapse of the prescribed period of 90 days, the departmental remedy of appeal, review or representation loses its significance and automatically comes to an end. Once the matter is brought before the Tribunal in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the Act, the departmental remedy stands exhausted. Under section 5 of the Act, the Tribunal on appeal can only confirm, set aside, vary or modify the order appealed against. The Tribunal has no power under the Act to direct the departmental authorities to decide the departmental appeal, application for review or representation of the civil servant, which remained undecided for a period of 90 days.

Falak Sher v. Government of Punjab 1995 SCMR 962 ref.

Once the appeal, application of review or representation, as the case may be, of a civil servant is not decided by the departmental authority within a period of 90 days and he has elected to approach the Tribunal through preferring an appeal after lapse of that period, then his appeal has to be decided on merits and the Tribunal cannot dispose of that appeal by issuing direction to the departmental authority to decide the appeal, application for review or representation of the appellant, because the said remedy already stands exhausted by virtue of the lapse of time.

Petitioner in person.

Sanaullah Zahid, Additional A.G., Punjab, M. Safdar Abbasi, N.S., Waqar Malik, L.A. and Riaz Ahmed Muazzmi, Law Officer HED for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 13th April, 2023.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---This case has a somewhat chequered history. The petitioner filed a service appeal in the year 2008 under section 4 of the Punjab Service Tribunals Act 1973 ("Act"), agitating the question of his "promotion" before the Punjab Service Tribunal ("Tribunal"). Instead of deciding the appeal of the petitioner on merits, the Tribunal vide its order dated 27.03.2008 directed that the departmental representation filed by the petitioner before the Chief Secretary, Government of Punjab be decided first. The Tribunal in the same order reserved the right of the petitioner to file a fresh appeal, if any adverse order is passed against him on that representation, and disposed of the appeal as not pressed.

2. As the representation of the petitioner was not decided despite direction of the Tribunal, the petitioner filed an application for restoration of the said appeal, which was allowed by the Tribunal and the appeal was restored vide order dated 29.06.2011. The said order was not challenged by the respondents and attained finality. Thereafter, the appeal remained pending before the Tribunal till 2019 when through the impugned order dated 10.12.2019 the Tribunal held that the service appeal of the petitioner was not maintainable as it stood disposed of in the year 2008 and could not have been restored.

3. We have heard the petitioner and the learned Additional Advocate-General for the respondents, and examined the record of the case.

4. At the very outset, the attention of the learned Additional Advocate-General has been drawn to order dated 29.06.2011 passed by the Tribunal whereby the service appeal of the petitioner was restored. The said order was not challenged by the respondents and therefore had attained finality. Learned Additional Advocate-General has had no plausible explanation to render in defense of the impugned order. He, however, has drawn the attention of the Court to an important legal issue that not only arises in the instant case but also is a matter of concern in many other cases decided by the Tribunal. He submits that under the Act the Tribunal can only decide the service appeals filed before it but instead of deciding the appeals on merits, the Tribunal has, as in the instant case, started directing the departmental authorities to decide the pending departmental appeals, applications for review and representations of the civil servants and with such directions, the appeals are being deposed of. According to the learned Additional Advocate-General, once a civil servant approaches the Tribunal after his departmental appeal, review or representation remains unattended for a period of 90 days, the Tribunal can only decide the appeal and cannot direct the departmental authorities to decide the pending appeal, review or representation, as the case may be. Any such direction, he argues, offends the object of the Act as it delays adjudication of service matters of the civil servants, which the Act in the first instance aims to remedy.

5. Article 212 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ("Constitution") authorizes the appropriate legislature to provide for establishing the Administrative Tribunals to exercise exclusive jurisdiction relating to matters pertaining to the terms and conditions of persons in the service of Pakistan. Under the said constitutional provision, the jurisdiction of the regular courts stands barred to entertain such matters. The purpose and object of establishing an Administrative Service Tribunal is to keep the matters of persons in the service of Pakistan out of the regular courts to provide them with a more efficient and specialized forum for the speedy resolution of the disputes arising from the terms and conditions of their service. Efficient dispute resolution system within the civil bureaucracy is a key to good and effective administration. The Tribunals strive to provide an efficient and timely resolution of disputes. They enjoy specialized knowledge and expertise in public service matters, which can lead to quicker and more accurate decision-making. The Tribunals provide an accessible, fair, and efficient system for resolving disputes arising from public service employment. They ensure consistency and transparency, and maintain high standards in the public service sector. Additionally, efficient dispute resolution of civil servants through service tribunals is important for maintaining employee morale and productivity, enhancing government credibility, strengthening institutional capacity, reducing the burden on the judiciary and preventing the escalation of conflicts. These factors collectively contribute to better governance and administration within the Government. Thus, an efficient dispute settlement mechanism through an Administrative Service Tribunal is necessary for civil servants to maintain public trust in the civil service, and ultimately contributes to the overall effectiveness and efficiency of the Government.

6. The constitutional mandate of an Administrative Service Tribunal has been actualized through sections 4 and 5 of the Act, which are reproduced here for ease of reference:

4. Appeal to Tribunals.---(1) Any civil servant aggrieved by any final order, whether original or appellate, made by a departmental authority in respect of any of the terms and conditions of his service may, within thirty days of the communication of such order to him or within six months of the establishment of the appropriate Tribunal, whichever is latter, prefer an appeal to the Tribunal.

Provided that-

(a) where an appeal, review or representation to a departmental authority is provided under the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974, or any rules against any such order no appeal shall lie to a Tribunal unless the aggrieved civil servant has preferred an appeal or application for review or representation to such departmental authority and a period of ninety days has elapsed from the date on which such appeal, application or representation was so preferred;

(b) ...

5. Powers of Tribunals.---(1) A Tribunal may, on appeal, confirm, set aside, vary or modify the order appealed against.

As per section 4 of the Act, the right to prefer an appeal to the Tribunal can be invoked subject to the fulfilment of two pre-conditions: (i) in case a departmental appeal, review or representation is provided under the law, no appeal to the Tribunal shall lie unless such a remedy is availed by the aggrieved civil servant; and (ii) a period of 90 days has elapsed since such departmental appeal, review or representation has been preferred. Therefore, if the departmental appeal, review or representation of a civil servant is not decided within a period of 90 days, the aggrieved civil servant need not endlessly wait for the decision of the departmental appeal, review or representation and can straight away approach the Tribunal by filing an appeal for the redressal of his grievance. The Act encourages a civil servant to first avail the remedy of departmental appeal, review or representation so that the matter can best be decided at the departmental level. However, if no progress is made on such departmental remedy within 90 days, the Act provides the civil servant with a higher remedy in the shape of an appeal before the Tribunal to agitate his grievance. When the aggrieved civil servant avails the higher remedy of appeal before the Tribunal after lapse of the prescribed period of 90 days, the departmental remedy of appeal, review or representation loses its significance and automatically comes to an end. Once the matter is brought before the Tribunal in accordance with the provisions of Section 4 of the Act, the departmental remedy stands exhausted. Under section 5 of the Act, the Tribunal on appeal can only confirm, set aside, vary or modify the order appealed against. The Tribunal has no power under the Act to direct the departmental authorities to decide the departmental appeal, application for review or representation of the civil servant, which remained undecided for a period of 90 days. We are fortified by an earlier view of this Court in Falak Sher[1].

7. We, therefore, hold that once the appeal, application of review or representation, as the case may be, of a civil servant is not decided by the departmental authority within a period of 90 days and he has elected to approach the Tribunal through preferring an appeal after lapse of that period, then his appeal has to be decided on merits and the Tribunal cannot dispose of that appeal by issuing direction to the departmental authority to decide the appeal, application for review or representation of the appellant, because the said remedy already stands exhausted by virtue of the lapse of time.

8. In the present case, the appeal of the petitioner which was filed in the year 2008, was illegally disposed of by the Tribunal vide its order dated 27.03.2008 by issuing a direction to the departmental authority to decide his representation. Despite that direction of the Tribunal, the representation of the petitioner was not decided and his appeal before the Tribunal was therefore restored in the year 2011 on his application. The order of restoration of appeal was not challenged by the respondents and thus attained finality. The restored appeal remained pending before the Tribunal since 2011 to 2019 and through the impugned order dated 10.12.2019, the Tribunal dismissed the appeal as not maintainable on the ground that it had been disposed of in the year 2008 without considering its earlier order of restoration of the appeal. In these facts and circumstances of the case, and the legal position stated above, the impugned order cannot be legally sustained. We, therefore, set aside the impugned order dated 10.12.2019 and direct the Tribunal to decide the appeal of the petitioner on merits within three months from the date of receipt of copy of this judgment. This petition is converted into an appeal and the same is allowed in the said terms.

An arbitration Award is a final determination of the dispute between the parties. The grounds for challenging an Award are very limited. There are three broad areas on which an arbitration Award is likely to be challenged i.e. firstly, jurisdictional grounds (non-existence of a valid and binding arbitration agreement); secondly, procedural grounds (failure to observe principles of natural justice) and thirdly, substantive grounds (arbitrator made a mistake of law).

The court is not supposed to sit as a court of appeal and must confine itself to the patent illegalities in the Award, if any.The jurisdiction of the Court under the Arbitration Act, 1940 is supervisory in nature. ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The sole question before us is to examine whether the Arbitrators in granting the Award dated 20.2.2010 ("Award") misconducted themselves in terms of section 30(a) of the Arbitration Act, 1940 ("Act").

2. Brief facts of the case are that parties entered into a Contract Package No. 07 ("Contract") regarding "Rehabilitation of National Highway N-5 from Mian Channu to Sahiwal 46 Km Road". During the execution of the Contract, the Engineer instructed the respondent/ company Messrs Sambu for construction of New Jersey Barriers and provision of Kerb Stones in some sections of the project, which was not part of the original scope of work. As a result, respondent claimed Rs.65,40,226/- for this new/additional work, which was done in pursuance of the instructions of the Engineer. The dispute arose when the said work was considered by the petitioner/National Highway Authority ("NHA") as part of the original scope of work and refused to pay any additional amount for this work to respondent. The matter was referred to Arbitrators; one nominated by each party. Through the unanimous Award dated 20.2.2010, the Arbitrators awarded Rs.65,40,226/- plus eight percent simple interest in favour of the respondent. The civil court decreed the said amount without interest and thereafter executed the decree and respondent received the said amount on 08.10.2018. Petitioner filed an FAO against the order of the civil court, which was dismissed by the Islamabad High Court on 21.9.2020 against which the instant petition has been filed by the petitioner.

3. The contentions raised by the learned counsel for petitioner are that minutes of the pre-bid meeting do not form part of the Contract and, therefore, the Arbitrators wrongly relied on pre-bid meeting in which petitioner had clarified that the Kerb Stones are not included in scope of the work. He also submitted that New Jersey Barriers were also included in the outline drawing. Learned counsel for the respondent submitted that the minutes of the pre-bid meeting formed part of the Contract document and referred to Contract dated 24.6.2005 along with the list of documents and submitted that petitioner vide letter dated 29.6.2005 issued signed Contract documents. The said Contract documents included pre-bid minutes of the meeting; hence the minutes of the pre-bid meeting are part of Contract. He submitted that the Arbitrators rightly noted that pre-bid minutes of meeting are part of Contract as mentioned in para-5 of Award. He submitted that petitioner also admitted that pre-bid minutes of meeting formed part of documents and filed before the Civil Court. He submitted that petitioner made a wrong statement before this Court on the basis of which notices were issued to respondent. He submitted that reference to clause 19.4 of the Contract by petitioner is misplaced and addendum to bid documents is only necessary if clarification given in pre-bid meeting requires any change in the bidding documents. Since no addition was required to be made, petitioner only clarified and confirmed in the pre-bid meeting that Kerb Stones is not part of original scope of work, hence there was no need for any addendum and, therefore, clause 14.2 referred by the petitioner is also misplaced. Further, since Kerb Stones or New Jersey Barriers were not mentioned in the schedule of pricing in bid document, hence no price was ever paid and it was never mentioned in the scope of work.

4. The arguments have been heard and the record perused. The record reveals that the main thrust of the argument of the parties have been on the moot point; whether the minutes of the pre-bid meeting dated 14.02.2005 are to be considered as an integral part of the Contract? It is pertinent here to mention that the minutes of pre-bid meeting and the addendum No. 2 were issued by the petitioner vide its letter No. 2(4)

GM(P&CA)/NHA/05/292, dated 1.03.2005. The minutes of pre-bid meeting and addendum No. 2 had several contractual cross-references. For instance, the whole concept of pricing the Contract was based on the information provided in item 7(a) and 7(1) of the minutes of pre-bid meeting. The pre-bid meeting and its minutes thereof were a natural corollary of the Instructions to the Bidders/Tenderer (ITB) which formed an important part of the Contract documents. Therefore, it is obvious that the minutes of pre-bid meeting are an integral part of the Contract Document, which fact is further duly established by including the same as a part of 327 certified pages of Contract Document duly signed by both the parties under the Contract. The question by the respondent under item 14 of the minutes of pre-bid meeting was "On Contract-7 (Mian Channu to Sahiwal) has no Kerb Stone shown on the drawing". The response by the petitioner was "It is clarified that this is not included in the scope of work under the package". Relying on the premise as claimed by the respondent they did not factor in the cost for these items presuming that these items were not required under the Contract. The minutes of the pre-bid meeting very clearly stated that Kerb Stone was not included under the scope of the works under the Contract. The cost of the same could not, therefore, had been catered for under the Contract. Additionally, nowhere in the Contract documents, the provision of Kerb Stone, retaining wall topped with New Jerssey Barrier was mentioned.

5. We have also examined the Award with the help of the learned counsel for the parties and find that the contentions of the petitioner are misplaced. The Award clearly deals with all the contentions raised by the petitioner and rightly holds that the pre-bid meeting forms part of the Contract document. Besides, we agree with the interpretation of clauses 19.4 and 14.2 as given by the Arbitrators. We are also mindful of the fact that there is a limited scope of judicial review of the 'Award' announced by an Arbitrator. An arbitration Award is a final determination of the dispute between the parties. The grounds for challenging an Award are very limited. There are three broad areas on which an arbitration Award is likely to be challenged i.e. firstly, jurisdictional grounds (non-existence of a valid and binding arbitration agreement); secondly, procedural grounds (failure to observe principles of natural justice) and thirdly, substantive grounds (arbitrator made a mistake of law).[1] The review of an arbitration Award cannot constitute a re-assessment or reappraisal of the evidence by the court. An over-intrusive approach by courts in examination of the arbitral Awards must be avoided.[2] The court is not supposed to sit as a court of appeal and must confine itself to the patent illegalities in the Award, if any.[3] The jurisdiction of the Court under the Act is supervisory in nature. Where two findings are possible the Court cannot interfere with the Award by adopting its own interpretation. Interference is only possible if there exists any breach of duty or any irregularity of action which is not consistent with general principles of equity and good conscience.[4] The arbitrator alone is the judge of the quality as well as the quantity of the evidence. He is the final arbiter of dispute between the parties. He acts in a quasi-judicial manner and his decision is entitled to utmost respect and weight.[5] By applying the afore-noted principles of law on the subject and considering the petitioner's objections within the limited scope of court's jurisdiction in testing the validity of Award this court is not supposed to sit as a court of appeal and make a roving inquiry and look for latent errors of law and facts in the Award. The arbitration is a forum of the parties' own choice its decision should not be lightly interfered by the court, until a clear and definite case within the purview of the section 30 of the Act is made out. We do not find any jurisdictional, procedural or substantive error patently floating on the record that could justify interference by this Court.

6. As far as the question of misconduct by Arbitrators is concerned, it would not be out of place to mention here that a misconduct of an Arbitrator in the judicial sense means failure to perform his essential duty or any conduct inconsistent with his duties, resulting in substantial miscarriage of justice between the parties.[6] We have gone through the objection petition filed by the petitioner against the Award and find that all the objections substantially relate to the merits of the case. Even the particulars and other necessary details of any misconduct were not given by the petitioner in their objection petition. Also, the petitioner failed to point out any conduct of the Arbitrators that was inconsistent with their essential duty or any breach of duty resulting in substantial miscarriage of justice between the parties. The allegations against the Arbitrators are vague and nebulous. No substantial grounds with precision are pleaded which could be construed to be misconduct by the Arbitrators to the satisfaction of this Court.[7] We find no illegality in the Award or misconduct on the part of the Arbitrators in deciding the issues. The decision of the Arbitrators on all the issues are logical, convincing, based on cogent evidence and supported by reasons. The Contract and its documents have been examined by the Arbitrators and interpreted by them and this Court has no jurisdiction to substitute the evaluation done by the Arbitrators. Since the petitioner had failed to make out a case of misconduct before learned trial and High Court on the part of the Arbitrators, and so is the case before this Court; hence, we are also not inclined to examine the factual controversy under Article 185(3) of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan. In these circumstances, leave is refused and this petition is dismissed. We, however, highlight that the arbitration falls within the domain of alternate dispute resolution ("ADR") and the parties having once recoursed to out of court dispute resolution, they must abide by the decision of the Arbitrators rather than challenging the same in the court of law, as it defeats the purpose of ADR. In this case, the petitioner challenged the Award in the civil court thereafter in the High Court and now before us. The Award was announced in the year 2010 and the petitioner is still litigating the matter in 2023, totally undermining the purpose of ADR. Such practice must be strictly curbed.

7. Before parting with this order, we have observed that the petitioner has dragged the Award in the courts for over last 10 years, which passes for vexatious litigation; wasting the time of all courts below as well as this Court. Such frivolous litigation clogs the pipelines of justice causing delay in deciding genuine claims pending before us. Such vexatious and frivolous petitions add to the pendency of cases which over-burdens the Court dockets and slows down the engine of justice. Such vexatious and frivolous litigation must be dealt with firmly and strongly discouraged.[8] We, therefore, are minded to impose costs on the petitioner in the sum of Rs. 300,000/- which shall be paid to the respondent within a month and in case of its failure to pay the said costs, the same shall be recoverable as a money decree.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The main Civil Petition (CPLA No.3884/2019) was filed by Muhammad Sahrif Janjua, AOR and drawn by Muhammad Ramzan Khan, ASC. It was dismissed for non-prosecution vide order dated 12.10.2022. The instant restoration application has been filed by Ahmed Nawaz Chaudhry, AOR and drawn by Syed Amjad Shah, ASC. Both of them have been newly appointed by the petitioner for filing the instant restoration application.

2. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioner, and examined the record and the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("SC Rules"). We have noticed that the instant application is barred by 46 days and application for condonation of delay does not disclose any sufficient cause. Additionally, we have also noticed that the instant application has not been filed by the original AOR or drawn by the original ASC but by the newly appointed AOR and ASC. We have drawn the attention of the learned counsel to Rules 6, 15, 23 and 24 of Order IV of the SC Rules, which are reproduced hereunder for ready reference.

6. No Advocate other than an Advocate-on-Record shall appear or plead in any matter unless he is instructed by an Advocate-on Record.

15. No Advocate other than an Advocate-on-Record shall be entitled to act for a party in any proceedings in the Court.

23. No person having an Advocate-on-Record shall file a power of attorney authorizing another Advocate-on-Record to act for him in the same case save with consent of the former Advocate-on-Record or by leave of the Court, unless the former Advocate-on-Record is dead, or is unable by reason of infirmity of mind or body to continue to act.

24. No Advocate-on-Record shall without leave of the Court withdraw from the conduct of any case by reason only of non-payment by his client of fees, costs and other charges.

The contents of the restoration application, as well as, the submissions made by the learned counsel fail to meet the requirement of the above SC Rules. The restoration application is not only silent regarding the legal requirements mentioned in the SC Rules but is also in violation of the same. The application fails to show how the present ASC (Syed Amjad Shah, ASC) has appeared in this case without the instructions of the earlier AOR (Muhammad Sharif Janjua) as required under Rule 6; the application does not disclose as to why the application was not filed by the earlier AOR as per Rule 15; how did the petitioner authorize and how did the new AOR file his power of attorney without the consent of the earlier AOR or the without the leave of the Court as required under Rule 23; it is also not clear as to how the earlier AOR has been removed as no AOR can withdraw from the case without the leave of the Court as provided under Rule 24. The above shows that the instant application has been filled in violation of the SC Rules and neither the Petitioner, the AOR nor the ASC have bothered to pay any heed to the SC Rules before filing this application. This is most disconcerting especially because the new AOR (Ahmed Nawaz Chaudhry) has totally overlooked and bypassed the SC Rules. This restoration application being in flagrant disregard of the SC Rules is not maintainable. It is, therefore, dismissed with costs of Rs.20,000/- in terms of Order XXVIII, Rule 3 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 for being frivolous and having wasted the time of the Court. The costs shall be deposited with the Deputy Registrar (Judicial) of this Court within a fortnight from today, which shall then be paid to the respondents.

4. We, however, in the interest of justice, allow the petitioner to move an application for restoration of the aforesaid Civil Petition, if so advised, strictly in accordance with the SC Rules, which if filed, will be taken up on its own merits including the question of limitation. Copy of this order shall be dispatched to the respondents for information and shall also be placed on the record of this case so that it is available when any fresh restoration application is filed by the petitioner.

MWA/F-10/SC Application dismissed.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The legal question before us is as to whether the powers of the Commissioner under section 122(5A) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("Ordinance") can be delegated to the Additional Commissioner Inland Revenue under section 210 of the Ordinance.

2. Brief facts of the case are that the petitioner furnished its income tax return for the tax year 2013, which was deemed as an assessment order under section 120 of the Ordinance. Subsequently, a show cause notice was issued to the petitioner on 16.01.2014 by the Additional Commissioner Inland Revenue under section 122(5A) of the Ordinance, along with notice dated 16.04.2014 under section 122(9) of the Ordinance. The deemed assessment order was then amended vide order dated 28.02.2014. Aggrieved of the same, the petitioner filed an appeal before the Commissioner Inland Revenue, Appeal-I, Lahore which was partly allowed vide order dated 16.06.2014, however, with regards to the legal question before us, it was dismissed. Both the petitioner and the department then filed cross appeals before the Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue, Lahore, which were disposed of on merits vide order dated 09.06.2022, however, on the legal question mentioned above, the appeal of the petitioner was again dismissed. The petitioner then filed an Income Tax Reference under section 133 of the Ordinance and articulated the above legal question in the following manner:

I. Whether the Tribunal was correct in law in endorsing assumption of jurisdiction by [the] Additional Commissioner under section 122(5A) of the Income Tax Ordinance?

II. Whether [the] legal obligation of "consideration" imposed by the legislature on [the] Commissioner in section 122(5A) of [the] Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 can be delegated to any other authority below the rank of a Commissioner?

The Income Tax Reference was decided against the petitioner vide the impugned judgment dated 20.10.2022, hence, the instant petition for leave to appeal.

3. The learned counsel for the petitioner has argued that the deemed assessment is made under section 120 of the Ordinance by the Commissioner and the amendment under section 122(5A) of the Ordinance is based on the said assessment if it is considered that it is erroneous or prejudicial to the interest of revenue, and therefore, only the Commissioner could amend the said order in terms of section 122(5A) of the Ordinance and the said power cannot be delegated to the Additional Commissioner. He further submits that the discretion of the Commissioner to "consider" that the assessment order is erroneous in so far as it prejudicial to the interest of revenue cannot be delegated.

4. On the other hand, the learned counsel for the department submits that the authority to delegate the powers of the Commissioner under section 122(5A) is specifically provided for under section 210(1A) of the Ordinance and further refers to section 211 of the Ordinance to point out that the powers and functions of the Commissioner delegated under section 210 of the Ordinance shall be treated as having been exercised and performed by the Commissioner. He also referred to the definition of "Commissioner" provided in section 2(13) of the Ordinance which includes any other authority vested with all or any of the powers or functions of the Commissioner. Therefore, according to the learned counsel, under section 210 of the Ordinance the powers of the Commissioner can be delegated to the Additional Commissioner Inland Revenue, the exercise of which would be treated as having been exercised and performed by the Commissioner.

5. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have gone through the impugned judgment of the High Court and the record of the case. The only question that requires determination is as to whether the powers exercised by the Commissioner under section 122(5A) of the Ordinance to amend or further amend an assessment order, if he considers that the assessment order is erroneous in so far as it is prejudicial to the interest of the revenue, could be delegated to the Additional Commissioner under section 210 of the Ordinance. The answer to the said question can be ascertained simply through a conjunctive reading of sections 2(13), 122(5A), 210 and 211 of the Ordinance.

6. Section 122(5A) of the Ordinance stipulates that subject to subsection (9), which requires that the taxpayer must be provided with an opportunity to be heard, the Commissioner may amend, or further amend, an assessment order if he considers the assessment order as erroneous is so far as it is prejudicial to the interest of revenue. Section 210(1) of the Ordinance specifically empowers the Commissioner to delegate all or any of the powers or functions conferred upon or assigned to the Commissioner under the Ordinance to any officer of Inland Revenue subordinate to the Commissioner, except the power of delegation. Importantly, section 210(1A) removes any ambiguity as to the power of the Commissioner to delegate his powers provided under section 122(5A) by stipulating that the Commissioner shall not delegate the powers of the amendment of assessment contained in section 122(5A) to an officer of Inland Revenue below the rank of Additional Commissioner Inland Revenue. Section 211(1) of the Ordinance then further fortifies that where by virtue of an order under Section 210 of the Ordinance, an officer of the Inland Revenue exercises a power or performs a function of the Commissioner, such power or function shall be treated as having been exercised or performed by the Commissioner. This is further aided by section 2(13) of the Ordinance which defines "Commissioner" as a person appointed as such under section 208 and includes any other authority vested with all or any of the powers and functions of the Commissioner.

7. The learned counsel for the petitioner has attempted to interpret and read the above provisions in isolation and has argued that as a general principle of propriety, the Additional Commissioner, being junior to the Commissioner, cannot revise an order passed by the Commissioner. We are afraid that we cannot agree with the said submission of the counsel in view of the above clear provisions of the Ordinance. The legislature has specifically empowered the Commissioner under Section 210 of the Ordinance to delegate all or any of the powers or functions conferred upon him under the Ordinance, other than the power of delegation, to any officer of Inland Revenue subordinate to him. Any ambiguity regarding delegation of the powers provided under section 122(5A) is clearly dealt with under section 210(1A) of the Ordinance which specifically provides that the said powers to amend an assessment order cannot be delegated to an officer of Inland Revenue below the rank of Additional Commissioner Inland Revenue. Section 211(1) of the Ordinance then declares and affirms that where an officer of Inland Revenue exercises or performs such delegated powers or functions, such power or function shall be treated as having been performed by the Commissioner himself. This is further supported by the definition of "Commissioner" provided in section 2(13), as pointed out above. It is well settled that a literal approach is to be adopted while interpreting fiscal or taxing statutes, and the Court cannot read into or impute something when the provisions of a taxing statute are clear. While interpreting a taxing statute, the Court must look to the words of the statute and interpret it in light of what is clearly expressed therein, and it cannot imply something which is not expressed or import provisions in the statute so as to support any assumed deficiency.[1]

8. According to De Smith's Judicial Review[2], even though, based on the maxim delegatus non potest delegare[3], it is a general principle of public law that where the legislature vests powers in a person, indicating that trust is being placed in his individual judgment and discretion, that person is prima facie required to exercise that power personally, however, the said principle is not absolute and yields to the language, scope and object of the statute conferring the said powers. A legislation may expressly provide for a statutory procedure to delegate such powers vested in an administrative authority, after the exercise of which, the delegate can then exercise the delegated power in their own right. The above express provisions in the Ordinance clearly allow the Commissioner to delegate his functions and powers, which includes the power to "consider" and decide, under section 122(5A) to the Additional Commissioner, and consequently, they must be read as such. Therefore, the argument of the learned counsel for the petitioner with regards to delegation of the discretion of the Commissioner is devoid of force.

9. We have also observed that the question of law raised in the instant petition has also already been dealt with by a 3-Member Bench of this Court in an unreported judgment rendered in The Bank of Punjab[4], wherein the assumption of jurisdiction by the Additional Commissioner under section 122(5A), through delegation, has been affirmed. The said judgment upholds the view taken by the various High Courts in Pak Telecom[5], Pakistan Tobacco[6] and Shell[7]. It was also noted therein that a redressive remedy against an order passed by the Additional Commissioner under section 122(5A) is available under section 127 of the Ordinance before the Commissioner (Appeals), therefore, there is no prejudice caused to an aggrieved party. Consequently, the said judgment, being binding, also settles the matter and must be adhered to, including for the reasons provided for therein.

10. In view of the above, we see no reason to interfere in the well-reasoned order of the High Court. Therefore, leave is refused and this petition is dismissed.

----O. IV, R. 19 & O. III, R. 9---Mode and manner of informing the Advocates regarding fixation of the cases by the Supreme Court stated.

The process of informing the Advocates regarding fixation of case is through the supply of the cause list to the respective Advocate-on-Records (AORs) under Order IV, Rule 19 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules"). Otherwise, informally as a matter of tradition and by way of standing practice, the cause lists are also put up in the Bar Rooms and SMS messages are also sent to the Advocates by the Court. However, the procedure covered by the Rules is the supply of cause list to the AORs. In case of a petitioner in person, notices are served to the petitioner under Order III, Rule 9 of the Rules.

The present application for restoration of Civil Petition, which was dismissed for non-prosecution, does not agitate that the above mentioned procedure was not followed. In addition, copy of the cause list has not been placed on record to show that the case or the name of counsel did not appear therein. Further, the application states that the AOR failed to inform the counsel, as well as, the petitioner about fixation of the case, however, it does not furnish any reason as to why the AOR, who had knowledge of the fixation of the case, failed to appear in the case himself. There is no affidavit filed by the AOR affirming the facts mentioned in the application. There is no sufficient ground for allowing the present application, which is accordingly dismissed.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---This is an application for restoration of the titled petition, which was dismissed for non-prosecution on 04.10.2022. The sole ground taken in the application is that the petitioner, as well as, the learned counsel for the petitioner did not receive any information regarding the fixation of the case on 04.10.2022.

2. It is clarified that the process of informing the Advocates regarding fixation of case is through the supply of the cause list to the respective Advocate-on-Records (AORs) under Order IV, Rule 19 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules"). Otherwise, informally as a matter of tradition and by way of standing practice, the cause lists are also put up in the Bar Rooms and SMS messages are also sent to the learned Advocates by the Court. However, the procedure covered by the Rules is the supply of cause list to the AORs. In case of a petitioner in person, notices are served to the petitioner under Order III, Rule 9 of the Rules.

3. The instant application does not agitate that the above procedure was not followed. In addition, copy of the cause list has not been placed on record to show that the case or the name of learned counsel did not appear therein. Further, the application states that the AOR failed to inform the learned counsel, as well as, the petitioner about fixation of the case, however, it does not furnish any reason as to why the AOR, who had knowledge of the fixation of the case, failed to appear in the case himself. There is no affidavit filed by the AOR affirming the facts mentioned in the application.

4. For the above reasons, there is no sufficient ground for allowing the titled application, which is accordingly dismissed.

Semayne case (1604) 5 Coke 91 ref.

Khalid Anwar Afridi, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

DSP Khalid Mehmood Awan, Inspector and Ashiq Shah, I.O. for the State.

Complainant in person.

Date of hearing: 24th May, 2023.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against an order of the Islamabad High Court, dated 28.03.2023, whereby the High Court has dismissed his application for post-arrest bail in case FIR No. 01/2023 registered at Police Station Aabpara, Islamabad, for the offences punishable under sections 302, 311, 324, 452, 365, 337-A(ii), 148 and 149 of the Pakistan Penal Code 1860 ("P.P.C.").

2. Briefly, the facts as alleged in the crime report (FIR) are that the petitioner, Hilal Khattak, and the complainant, Akbar Ali, are paternal cousins. The petitioner's daughter, Rabia Khattak, married the complainant's son, Talha Akbar, without the consent of the petitioner. On 1st January 2023 in the early hours of the morning at about 06:45, the petitioner along with some other persons, all armed with pistols, trespassed into the complainant's house by scaling over the wall of the house. Some of them besieged the complainant and his family members at gunpoint. The petitioner and another person (allegedly Tufail Khattak, brother of the petitioner) dragged Rabia Khattak into the street by grabbing her hair. Talha Akbar attempted to rescue her, but was shot in his left ribs by the other person. He fell down injured and later on succumbed to his injury. The petitioner made a fire at the complainant, which however did not hit him. Another person, accompanying the petitioner, injured the complainant's younger son, Huzaifa, on his head. The petitioner and other persons then took Rabia Khattak with them.

3. On making a tentative assessment of the material collected during the investigation, the courts below found that sufficient incriminating material was available on record to connect the petitioner with the commission of the alleged offences and thus declined the relief of post-arrest arrest bail.

4. It has been argued by the learned counsel for the petitioner that there is no sufficient incriminating material against the petitioner to connect him with the commission of the alleged offences. In the alternative, he argued that the offence of qatl-i-amd (intentional homicide) punishable under section 302 of the P.P.C. is not attributed to the petitioner, and his vicarious liability under section 149 of the P.P.C. for that offence can only be determined after recording evidence in the trial. And since the other offences punishable under sections 452 and 365 of the P.P.C. do not fall within the prohibitory clause, he submitted, the petitioner may be allowed post-arrest bail under subsection (1) of section 497, Cr.P.C.

5. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioner, as well as the complainant and the investigating officer, and examined the record of the case.

6. The allegations against the petitioner as to his involvement in the crime are supported by the statements of witnesses recorded by the investigating officer under section 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 ("Cr.P.C."), which include the statements of the injured witness, Huzaifa, and three female residents of the house where the incident took place, in addition to the statement of the complainant whose son has died in the incidence. The incident is further supported by the footage recorded on the CCTV camera of a neighbouring house. Sufficient incriminating material is thus available on the record of the case to connect the petitioner with the commission of the alleged offences. The findings of the courts below in this regard are not perverse or arbitrary, which could have justified interference by this Court. The petitioner, therefore, has no case for grant of bail under subsection (2) of section 497, Cr.P.C.

7. Although the question of vicarious liability of an accused can also be looked into at the bail stage[1] and it is not an absolute rule that it must always be left to be determined in trial, we find that in the facts and circumstances of the case the petitioner is not entitled to the relief of bail even if the question of his vicarious liability for the offence of qatl-i -amd is left to be determined in trial.

Exceptions to rule of granting bail in non -prohibitory clause offences

8. The argument of the learned counsel for the petitioner, we find, is based on a mistaken understanding of the legal position regarding grant of bail in offences that do not fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. It is true that in such offences, bail is to be granted as a rule, but not as of right. Bail can be refused in such offences when the case of the accused falls within any of the three well-established exceptions: (i) likelihood to abscond to escape trial; (ii) likelihood to tamper with the prosecution evidence or influence the prosecution witnesses to obstruct the course of justice; and (iii) likelihood to repeat the offence.[2]

9. In the present case, the petitioner being the father of the alleged abductee appears to have had the real motive for the commission of the alleged offences while the others abetted him in his cause. Most of the other accused persons are absconders, and the police have so far only succeeded to bring the petitioner and another accused person to justice. There is thus a likelihood that the petitioner may also abscond if he is released on bail. Further, and more importantly, the alleged abductee Rabia Khattak has not yet been recovered. No one knows whether she is alive or not. There is a possibility that the petitioner may cause her harm or may coerce her to influence her evidence concerning the facts of this case if he is released on bail. The exceptions of likelihood of repeating the offence and influencing the witness are thus also attracted. The case of the petitioner, therefore, attracts not one but almost all the three exceptions which justify the declining of bail even in offences that do not fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C.

Applicability of section 458, P.P.C. and gravity of the offence of house breaking by night

10. Even otherwise, we are of the view that the facts alleged in the FIR prima facie constitute the offence of house-breaking by night after preparation for causing hurt, punishable under section 458 of the P.P.C., instead of section 452 of the P.P.C. The petitioner and his accomplices allegedly committed house-breaking, that is, trespassed into the complainants' house by scaling over the wall of the house, as defined in clause 2 of section 445 and that housebreaking was also committed by night, that is, after sunset and before sunrise, as defined in section 446, P.P.C.. The offence under section 458 of the P.P.C. being punishable with imprisonment upto fourteen years falls within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1) of the Cr.P.C. Therefore, even, if the actual role of the petitioner is considered, his case also falls within the prohibitory clause.

11. We may observe here that it is the sanctity and privacy of home, as guaranteed by Article 14 of the Constitution of Pakistan, that the offences of house-breaking committed after having made preparation for causing hurt or fear of hurt have been categorised by the legislature as grave offences under section 455 (when committed at daytime) and section 458 (when committed at night), punishable with imprisonment upto ten years and fourteen years respectively. It is said that 'the house of everyone is to him as his castle and fortress as well as for his defence against injury and violence as for his repose'[3]. It would be the worst position of a society if its people do not feel safe and secure even within their houses. Failure to provide protection to its citizens in their houses would amount to the failure of the State. All the organs of the State, including the judiciary, should therefore enforce the laws protecting the privacy of home strictly in letter and spirit.

12. For the above reasons, we find no legal fault in the order of the High Court declining post-arrest bail to the petitioner in the present case. The petition is found meritless. It is, therefore, dismissed and the leave to appeal is refused. However, it is clarified that the observations and findings made in this order as well as in the orders of the lower courts are of tentative nature, which shall have no effect upon final determination of the case by the trial court on conclusion of the trial.

13. Before parting with the order, we feel constrained to observe that the non-recovery of the alleged abductee, Rabia Khattak, despite the lapse of a period of about five months since the day of occurrence, is a serious matter, which demands the immediate attention of the superior police officers of the Islamabad Police. We, therefore, direct the Inspector-General, Islamabad Police, to personally look into the matter and depute a police officer not below the rank of Superintendent of Police to supervise the investigation of the case and to ensure recovery of the alleged abductee at the earliest. On recovery of the alleged abductee, she may be lodged in Dar-ul-Aman (or some other similar institution) in Islamabad for at least two days before recording her statement as to the facts of the case. So that she may be in a position to make her statement voluntarily without the undue influence of anyone, and her statement should preferably be recorded by the Magistrate concerned under section 164, Cr.P.C. Copy of this order be dispatched to the Inspector General, Islamabad Police for necessary action.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against an order of the Lahore High Court, dated 08.12.2020, whereby the High Court has dismissed his writ petition and upheld the order of the revisional court, dated 20.11.2020. By its order, the revisional court had dismissed the revision petition of the petitioner filed against the order of the trial court, dated 27.10.2020, dismissing the application of the petitioner for rejection of the plaint in a suit filed by respondent No.3, Ch. Muhammad Ashiq, ("respondent"). All three courts below have thus decided the matter against the petitioner.

2. Briefly, the factual background of the case is that on 2 June 2007, the petitioner filed a suit for recovery of the amount of Rs.174,406,250/- against the respondent. In his suit, the petitioner asserted that he and his late father paid the said amount to the respondent, vide agreements dated 06.08.2003, 26.05.2004 and 13.07.2004 and certain receipts, to purchase for them some land and plots in different phases of DHA, Lahore; but the respondent did not fulfil the commitment nor did he return the said amount. Meanwhile, the National Accountability Bureau ("NAB") also took cognizance of the alleged commission of the offence by the respondent, of defrauding the members of the public and inducing them to deliver him a huge amount of money on the pretext of procuring plots for them in DHA, Lahore. The affectees of the alleged offence included the petitioner; therefore, in the trial of that offence the petitioner appeared as a witness and also tendered the said agreements and receipts allegedly executed by the respondent, in the prosecution evidence. While relying on the prosecution evidence, which included the testimony of the respondent as well as the said agreements and receipts, the Accountability Court convicted the respondent vide its judgment dated 27.11.2012. The respondent preferred an appeal against the judgment of the Accountability Court before the Lahore High Court, which is pending adjudication.

3. In addition to that appeal, the respondent also instituted a suit for declaration on 7 June 2013 against the petitioner, wherein he asserted that the agreements and receipts on the basis of which the petitioner had instituted the suit for recovery of the amount against him are forged, fabricated and fictitious. In the suit, he prayed that the said agreements and receipts may be declared to be so and thus ineffective against his rights. The trial court consolidated the proceedings of the suit of the respondent with the suit of the petitioner and framed consolidated issues. The respondent produced his evidence on the consolidated issues, and the hearing of the case was fixed for evidence of the petitioner when he filed on 2 September 2020 an application under Rule 11 of Order VII of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 ("C.P.C."), for rejection of the plaint in the suit of the respondent.

4. The application of the petitioner for rejection of the plaint was mainly based upon two grounds: (i) the suit of the respondent is time-barred, and (ii) the suit is not maintainable in view of the judgment of the Accountability Court, wherein the agreements and receipts have been relied upon for convicting the respondent. The trial court dismissed the application on 27 October 2020 by holding that in the circumstances of the case, the question of limitation could not be decided without recording evidence, and that the scope of the jurisdiction of a civil court and that of a criminal court in regard to the documents in question (agreements and receipts) was different. The revision petition filed by the petitioner was dismissed by the District Court on 20 November 2020. And by the impugned judgment passed on 8 December 2020 in the writ petition of the petitioner, the High Court upheld the orders of the courts below. The High Court observed that in the present case, the question of limitation was a mixed one of law and facts, which was not to be decided summarily but rather after recording evidence of the parties, and that the civil and criminal proceedings regarding the veracity of the documents could be conducted simultaneously.

5. Before us, the learned counsel for the petitioner pressed onlythe second ground and contended that once a matter (validity of the agreements and receipts) is decided by a criminal court, the same cannot be re-agitated in a suit before a civil court. Such a suit, he contended, is barred by law. In support of his contention, he placed reliance on three judgments: Olas Khan v. Chairman NAB (PLD 2018 SC 40), Zahida Sattar v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2002 SC 408) and Hunter v. Chief Constable of West Midlands ([1981] 3 All ER 727).

6. On the other hand, the learned counsel for the respondent submitted that civil proceedings are distinct from criminal proceedings and can be conducted simultaneously, and that civil courts have plenary jurisdiction to decide upon all matters of civil nature unless it is shown that their jurisdiction is either expressly or impliedly barred. He relied upon Jan Muhammad v. Nazir Ahmad (2004 SCMR 612), Province of Punjab v. Yaqoob Khan (2007 SCMR 554), Nazir Khan v. Ahmad (2008 SCMR 539), Hashmat Ullah v. State (2019 SCMR 1730) and SNGPL v. Noor CNG Filling Station (2022 SCMR 1501).

7. We have considered the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties, read the cases cited by them and examined the record of the case.

8. It hardly needs reiteration that the object of a civil proceeding is to enforce civil rights and obligations while that of a criminal proceeding is to punish the offender for the commission of an offence. It is, therefore, a well-established legal position in our jurisdiction that both the civil proceeding and criminal proceeding relating to one and the same matter can be instituted and ordinarily proceeded with simultaneously.[1] Although there is no bar to the simultaneous institution of both proceedings, the trial in the criminal proceeding may be stopped in certain circumstances.[2] And the guiding principle in this regard is also well-defined. It is that where the criminal liability is dependent upon or intimately connected with the result of the civil proceeding and it is difficult to draw a line between a bona fide claim and the criminal act alleged, the trial in the criminal proceeding may be postponed till the conclusion of the civil proceeding.[3] Thus, where either of these two conditions is not fulfilled, i.e., where the subject matter of civil proceeding and that of criminal proceeding are distinct, not intimately connected,[4] or where the civil proceeding is instituted mala fide to delay the criminal prosecution, not bona fide,[5] the criminal proceeding may not be stayed.

9. It is notable that the whole jurisprudence on the subject, as briefly stated above, has developed while dealing with the question of staying criminal proceeding till the conclusion of the connected civil proceeding. Not a single case is brought to our notice wherein the question of staying civil proceeding till the culmination of the criminal proceeding had been raised. The reason is not far to see. The decision of a civil court as to any right, title or status, which only that court can finally decide, may have a substantial bearing upon a constituent ingredient of the offence being tried by the criminal court.[6] On the other hand, any finding of a criminal court on a fact constituting the offence tried by that court is irrelevant in a civil proceeding to decide the same fact in the course of adjudicating upon and enforcing civil rights and obligations.[7] The petitioner has even gone a step farther than that. As he has not prayed that the civil proceeding may be stayed till a final decision in the criminal proceeding but rather for quashing the civil proceeding by rejecting the plaint therein, on the basis of some findings of facts recorded in the criminal proceeding by the criminal trial court.

10. Section 9, C.P.C., provides that the civil courts shall have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred. And as per clause (d) of Rule 11 of Order VII, C.P.C., a plaint can be rejected where the suit appears to be barred by any law. Thus, to succeed in his plea for rejection of the plaint in the suit of the respondent, the petitioner is to show under which law the suit of the respondent is either expressly or implied barred. The petitioner has pointed out no such law.

11. The reliance of the petitioner on the case of Zahida Sattar is misconceived. In that case, this Court upheld the order of the civil court rejecting the plaint by observing that Section 13 of the National Accountability Ordinance 1999 ("NAB Ordinance") conferred exclusive jurisdiction on the Accountability Court to adjudicate upon the matter that was agitated in the civil suit and the jurisdiction of the civil court to try that matter was impliedly barred. Section 13 of the NAB Ordinance has no application to the matter involved in the suit filed by the respondent.

12. Similarly, the reliance of the petitioner on the case of Olas Khan is misplaced. In that case, the Court was dealing with the question on the jurisdiction of the High Court to grant bail to an accused arrested for an offence under the NAB Ordinance. The question of any express or implied bar on the jurisdiction of the civil court to try a matter was neither raised nor decided therein. Nothing turns out of a passing remark made in that case, and referred to by the learned counsel for the petitioner, that the NAB Ordinance is a special statute hybrid in nature and is a fusion of criminal liability and civil obligations. The learned counsel for the petitioner did not pinpoint any provision of the NAB Ordinance, which confers exclusive jurisdiction on the Accountability Court to enforce civil obligations. He only referred to section 33-E of the NAB Ordinance, which provides that any fine or other sum due under the Ordinance, or as determined to be due by a Court, shall be recoverable as arrears of land revenue. Similar provisions are contained in section 544-A(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 ("Cr.P.C.") for recovery of the compensation awarded under subsection (1) of that Section. It has never been urged that a criminal court enforces civil obligations by taking proceedings to recover the amount of compensation as an arear of land revenue under section 544-A. Rather, section 546, Cr.P.C. envisages the institution of a civil suit relating to the same matter, despite the recovery of the compensation under section 544-A.

13. The third case relied upon by the learned counsel for the petitioner is that of Hunter decided by the U.K. House of Lords. In Hunter, the House of Lords essentially held that a civil action by a person to prove that the confession on the basis of which he was convicted in the criminal trial had been procured by force, in the disguise of a claim for damages, is an abuse of the process of the court and such a civil action is liable to be struck out. The learned counsel for the petitioner, by taking an analogy from that case, argued that as a piece of evidence (confessional statement) found valid and relied upon in the criminal proceeding was not allowed to be challenged in a civil action in Hunter, the evidence of the agreements and receipts found valid and relied upon by the Accountability Court in the present case cannot be challenged in a civil suit by the respondent. We find the analogy to be in correct. While certain agreements and receipts, such as those involved in the present case, may give rise to civil rights and obligations, a confessional statement made in a criminal case does not. Therefore, the suit that challenges the validity of such agreements and receipts is a suit of a civil nature within the meaning and scope of section 9, C.P.C., but the suit challenging the validity of such a confessional statement is not. Further, the bar on the jurisdiction of the civil court to try a suit of civil nature or on the maintainability of a suit envisaged by section 9 or clause (d) of Rule 11 of Order VII, C.P.C. is that which is created either expressly or impliedly by some statutory law enacted by the legislature. The courts in Pakistan, as held by this Court in Akram v. Farman Bi,[8] cannot import an implied bar from another country's jurisprudence.

14. Needless to mention that the standard of proof required in civil and criminal proceedings is different. In the former, a mere preponderance of probability is sufficient to decide the disputed fact but in the latter, the guilt of the accused must be proved beyond any reasonable doubt.[9] There are, therefore, chances of giving divergent judgments by the civil and criminal courts on the facts that give rise to both civil and criminal liabilities.[10] The contention made in the present case by the petitioner appears surprising to us in that it has the potential of causing detriment to his claim. The judgment of the Accountability Court on which the petitioner is now relying is under judicial scrutiny of the first appellate court, i.e., the High Court, and any judgment passed by the High Court may further be challenged in this Court. What if the High Court or this Court comes to a conclusion contrary to that of the trial court and acquits the respondent of the charge giving him the benefit of any reasonable doubt? Would the claim of the petitioner against the respondent for recovery of the amount come to an end? Not, in our view. The petitioner will still have the chance of success in his claim in the civil proceeding if the civil court finds that the preponderance of probability tilts in his favour.

15. For the above reasons, we find no legal error in the concurrent orders of the three courts below. This petition is found meritless. It is therefore dismissed and the leave to appeal is declined.

(Against the judgment dated 03.03.2022, passed by the Islamabad High Court, Islamabad in W.P. No. 3563 of 2017)

Federal Ombudsmen Institutional Reforms Act (XIV of 2013)---

----S. 14(4)---Federal Ombudsmen Institutional Reforms (Processing of Representations) Rules, 2014, Rr. 2(1)(b) & 8(3)---Officer nominated by the President under section 14(4) of the Federal Ombudsmen Institutional Reforms Act, 2013, powers of---Such officer only processes the representations filed before the President---Decision-making powers of the President are not delegated to the said officer as the final decision on the representation is taken only by the President.

The nominated officer under section 14(4) of the Federal Ombudsmen Institutional Reforms Act, 2013 ('the Act') only processes the representation before sending the case to the President for his decision. Processing the representation comprises of the actions or steps towards achieving the required objective i.e. a decision on the representation by the President. The views so expressed by the nominated officer in the form of recommendations/proposals form part of the procedure to process the representation before the case is sent to the President and the final decision thereon is taken only by the President.

President is specifically authorized to nominate an officer to process a representation by preparing the case and giving his/her views on the said representation, which are likely to be only in the shape of recommendations/proposals, and in no manner can it be stated that the nominated officer is deciding the representation. The case is then placed before the President for decision thereon and the power to decide the representation resides solely with and is exercised only by the President after due application of mind.

Power to process a representation, by preparing the case, and the power to decide that representation, after due application of mind, are inherently distinct functions and cannot be equated or conflated. The function of processing a representation by the nominated officer is only ancillary to the main objective of decision on the representation by the President.

For practical purposes, the role of the nominated officer is only to consolidate and simplify the record, and prepare the case before him so that it can be presented before the President for his decision. This in no manner dilutes the decision-making powers of the President because the discretion to accept or reject a representation is retained and vested entirely in the President himself, who, while deciding the representation, may agree with the recommendations/proposals so forwarded by the nominated officer, by adopting the reasons given by the nominated officer and/or also for his own reasons, or disagree with them for his own reasons and decide the representation after assessing the available record and independently applying his mind to the matter. Consequently, the power of the President to decide the representation himself remains intact and cannot be said to have been delegated to any other officer nominated by him under section 14(4) of the Act.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The matter involved in the instant case is with regards to the interpretation of section 14(4) of the Federal Ombudsmen Institutional Reforms Act, 2013 ("Act of 2013"), which provides that a representation made to the President shall be "processed" in the office of the President by a person who has been or is qualified to be a Judge of the Supreme Court or has been a Wafaqi Mohtasib or Federal Tax Ombudsman. This raises the question whether, in the absence of any specific power to delegate decision-making powers of the President under the Act of 2013, the word "processed" means that the decision-making powers of the President have been delegated to the said officer under section 14(4) and the President stands divested of the said powers.

2. Briefly, the facts of the case are that respondent No. 1, an Associate Professor of Botany at the Hazara University, Mansehra, alleged harassment at her workplace by the petitioners. After her departmental complaint was not processed, she filed a complaint before the Federal Ombudsman under section 8(1) of the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act, 2010 ("Act of 2010"). The complaint was allowed on 20.03.2017 by imposing a minor penalty of censure on the petitioners along with a fine of Rs. 1,00,000/- each payable by the petitioners to respondent No.1. Against the said order of the Ombudsman, petitioners Nos. 2 and 3, and respondent No.1 filed their respective representations before the President under section 9 of the Act of 2010, with the former seeking setting aside of the order of the Ombudsman and the latter seeking enhancement of the minor penalties to major penalties. Vide order dated 17.07.2017, the President accepted the representations of the petitioners and dismissed the representation of respondent No. 1. Respondent No. 1 then filed a writ petition before the High Court assailing the order of the President. The writ petition was disposed of vide the impugned judgment dated 03.03.2022 whereby, without adverting to the merits of the case, it was held that the President could not have delegated his decision-making authority to any other person or official, therefore, the order of the President dated 17.07.2017 was set aside and the matter was remanded with the directions that after the representation has been processed, it shall be placed before the President for his consideration and decision.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and respondent No.1 in person, and have perused the record with their able assistance. We have noted that the representations made to the President were processed by the Consultant (Legal Affairs), who forwarded the case, along with his recommendation/proposal regarding the representations, to the President on 06.06.2017 for decision of the President. Thereafter, the President, after examining the recommendation/proposal and the record of the case, approved the said recommendation/proposal on 13.07.2017, thereby, deciding the representations by accepting the representations of the petitioners and dismissing the representation filed by respondent No. 1, which was communicated to the parties vide order dated 17.07.2017.

4. We have gone through section 14 of the Act of 2013. Section 14(1) stipulates that any person aggrieved by a decision, order, findings or recommendations of an Ombudsman may file a representation to the President within 30 days of the decision, order, findings or recommendations. Section 14(4) of the Act of 2013 provides that the representation shall be "processed" in the office of the President by a person who had been or is qualified to be a Judge of the Supreme Court or has been a Wafaqi Mohtasib or Federal Tax Ombudsman. For the purposes of "processing" representations, as provided for under section 14(4) of the Act of 2013, the Federal Government has notified the Federal Ombudsmen Institutional Reforms (Processing of Representations) Rules, 2014 ("Rules") which stipulate the procedure of processing a representation.[1]

5. Under Rule 3(1) of the Rules, a person who fulfills the conditions provided in section 14(4) of the Act of 2013 and is nominated by the President as such, shall process the representations. Rule 4 provides that this nominated officer may authorize an officer from amongst his supporting staff to correspond with the offices of the Federal Ombudsman and agencies, complainants and other organizations for processing representations, including summoning of record, inviting comments, communicating the decision of the President and other allied matters.[2] Under Rule 6, this authorized officer shall summon the relevant record from the concerned office of the Ombudsman, which includes the complaint, reply thereto etc. Under Rule 7(1), the authorized officer shall provide a copy of the representation with annexures, if any, to the other party, inviting its comments thereon. Rule 7(2) provides that where no such comments are received, the matter shall be processed and decided on the basis of the available record. Therefore, the above rules indicate that before the representation is processed, it is initially dealt with on the administrative side.

6. Rule 8(1) then provides that on receipt of the record, the authorized officer shall pass on the same to the nominated officer for processing the representation. Under Rule 8(2), the nominated officer may seek assistance from experts and other officers to reach at the right conclusion for decision on merit by the President. Importantly, Rule 8(3) stipulates that after processing the representation, the nominated officer shall, "expressing his views" thereon, send the case to the Secretary to the President for decision by the President. As per the language of the Rule 8(3), it is mandatory on the nominated officer to express his views on the representation, which naturally would include the reasons upon which the said views are based. Rule 9(1) then further fortifies that the Secretary to the President shall then place the case before the President "for his decision" under the Act of 2013 and the relevant legislation.

7. In view of the above, it is apparent that the nominated officer only processes the representation before sending the case to the President for his decision. "Process" is defined as "a series of actions or steps towards achieving a particular end"[3] or "a mode, method, or operation, whereby a result or effect is produced"[4]. Processing the representation therefore comprises of the actions or steps towards achieving the required objective i.e. a decision on the representation by the President. The views so expressed by the nominated officer in the form of recommendations/proposals form part of the procedure to process the representation before the case is sent to the President and the final decision thereon is taken only by the President. For this purpose, even though not being necessary, the President may also give a personal hearing to the parties, if required, as can be inferred from section 15 of the Act of 2013.

8. It is important to note that the power to process a representation, by preparing the case, and the power to decide that representation, after due application of mind, are inherently distinct functions and cannot be equated or conflated. The function of processing a representation by the nominated officer is only ancillary to the main objective of decision on the representation by the President. According to De Smith's Judicial Review[5], Courts have even conceded that an authority has an implied power to entrust to a group of its own members with the authority to investigate, to hear evidence and make recommendations in a report, provided that (a) it retains the power to make decisions in its own hands[6] and receives a report full enough to enable it to comply with its duty to "hear" before deciding, and (b) the context does not indicate that it must perform the entire adjudicatory process itself. Where there are express statutory provisions to this effect, the Court has to consider whether the Minister or Governor or, as in this case, the President, had to act "judicially" in some respect and has failed to do so. The respect in which he has to observe judicial procedure or act judicially will depend on the statutory or other provisions under which the matter arises.[7] For the purposes of the question raised in the instant matter, it is apparent from the provisions noted above that the President is specifically authorized to nominate an officer to process a representation by preparing the case and giving his/her views on the said representation, which are likely to be only in the shape of recommendations/ proposals, as in the instant case, and in no manner can it be stated that the nominated officer is deciding the representation. The case is then placed before the President for decision thereon and the power to decide the representation resides solely with and is exercised only by the President after due application of mind.

9. It is also evident that the object of the requirement of the nominated officer, a person of high legal standing who has acted or is qualified to act in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity, to process the representation, which might involve significant substantive and technical legal questions, and to express his views on the said representation before sending the case to the President for decision thereon, is only to assist the President in deciding the representation. The President may or may not be a person with a legal background[8] and, along with deciding representations filed under other diverse laws,[9] has various other overbearing and important functions and duties as head of State, which include the functions, powers and duties of the President under the Constitution[10], and under other laws.[11] As such, in view of the demanding and arduous position that the President holds, and, therefore, for practical purposes, the role of the nominated officer is only to consolidate and simplify the record, and prepare the case before him so that it can be presented before the President for his decision. This in no manner dilutes the decision-making powers of the President because the discretion to accept or reject a representation is retained and vested entirely in the President himself, who, while deciding the representation, may agree with the recommendations/ proposals so forwarded by the nominated officer, by adopting the reasons given by the nominated officer and/or also for his own reasons, or disagree with them for his own reasons and decide the representation after assessing the available record and independently applying his mind to the matter.

10. To this effect, two decisions of the President have also been placed on the record for reference purposes by the representative of the President's office. In the first decision[12] the President had disagreed with the recommendations of the nominated officer, gave a personal hearing to the parties, and decided the representations giving detailed reasons for the same. The second decision[13] indicates that even though the President had agreed with the recommendations of the nominated officer, he also gave his own reasons for deciding the representation in the said manner, indicating due application of mind while deciding the matter. As such, it is apparent that even though the views of the nominated officer in the form of such recommendations/proposals may assist the President in coming to a decision regarding the representation, however, it is only the President who decides the representation after conscious application of independent mind on the strength of tangible and material evidence, as is required under the law.[14] Consequently, the power of the President to decide the representation himself remains intact and cannot be said to have been delegated to any other officer nominated by him under section 14(4) of the Act of 2013.

11. In view of the above, we cannot agree with the High Court that the processing of the representation, as provided under section 14(4) of the Act of 2013 and supplemented and explained through the Rules, amounts to delegation of the decision-making powers of the President while deciding a representation. Therefore, the impugned judgment, having failed to take into account the provisions mentioned above, and premised on the ground that the representation had been decided by the nominated officer, who had processed the representation, instead of the President, cannot be sustained.

12. Resultantly, this petition is converted into an appeal and is disposed of in the terms that the impugned judgment is set aside and the matter is remanded to the High Court to decide the writ petition of respondent No.1 on merits.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----Ss. 94 & 265-C---Summons to produce documents---Powers of Trial Court under section 94, Cr.P.C.---Scope--- Even before the commencement of the trial, an accused can apply to the Trial Court to exercise its power under section 94, Cr.P.C., and direct the prosecution or the complainant to produce a document, in its or his possession or power, which is not covered under section 265-C, Cr.P.C., if the production of that document is necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial---Even before entering on his defence, an accused can make an application for the production of a document under section 94, Cr.P.C. despite the provisions of section 265-F(7), Cr.P.C., which provides a similar opportunity to him at the stage of defence evidence.

A bare reading of section 94, Cr.P.C. shows that there is no limitation as to the stage of the inquiry or trial when a court can, in the exercise of its power under this Section, make an order for the production of any document. The only condition for the exercise of the power under section 94 is that the production of the document must be necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial before the court. The word 'whenever' in section 94 clearly indicates that a court can exercise the power of requiring the production of any document under this section at any stage of the inquiry or trial.

Further, section 94 does not restrict as to whose point of view, whether of the prosecution or the accused, the required document may be necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial. A court being a neutral arbiter does not act for either the prosecution or the accused but for the dispensation of justice. And for the dispensation of justice, the court is to ascertain the truth in respect of the matter under inquiry or trial before it. The production of a document that would facilitate the court in this regard is to be considered necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial. It is immaterial whether the production of such a document would support the prosecution case or the defence of the accused. Therefore, any party may at any stage of the inquiry or trial apply to the court, under section 94, for the production of a document and is entitled to its production if it satisfies the court that the production of that document is necessary or desirable for the purposes of such inquiry or trial.

Muhammad Rahim v. Emperor AIR 1935 Sindh 13 ref.

There may be cases in which owing to dishonesty, negligence or any other reason, the prosecution does not produce certain documents with the police report, which may establish that there is no probability of the accused being convicted of any offence or the charge against the accused is groundless, and the production thereof is thus necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial. But because such documents are not filed with the police report, the same will not be supplied to the accused under section 265-C, Cr.P.C. In such cases, it would not be just and fair to the accused to reject his application for the production of such documents and to let him undergo the ordeal of protracted trial proceedings and wait for the stage of defence evidence. Similarly, the documents which are not produced by the prosecution with the police report but are relevant to the matter under the inquiry or trial and to use them for his defence, the accused is legally required to confront the prosecution witnesses with those documents in their cross-examination. In such a circumstance also, it would be in the interest of justice that the application of the accused made under section 94 for their production is allowed. Otherwise, it would incur unnecessary delay, expense and inconvenience to recall the prosecution witnesses at the stage of defence evidence only for the purpose of confronting them with such documents.

The provision of subsection (7) of section 265-F, Cr.P.C., under which the accused, after entering on his defence, can apply to the trial court to issue any process for compelling the production of any document, does not in any way affect the power of the trial court under section 94(1), Cr.P.C. The provisions of section 94(1) have not been made subordinate by the legislature by the use of the expression, 'Subject to the other provisions of this Code', nor have the provisions of section 265-F(7) been given any overriding effect by using therein the expression, 'Notwithstanding anything contained in other provisions of this Code'. Section 265-F(7), therefore, neither controls nor limits the power of a court under section 94(1). In essence, the provisions of these two Sections differ from each other in their extent and scope. They are not opposed to each other. Section 94(1) affords both the parties to an inquiry or trial (not to the accused alone) the opportunity of causing the production of any document at any stage of such inquiry or trial, with the condition that the party applying for it must satisfy the court that the production of the required document is necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial. Section 265-F(7), on the other hand, only gives the accused another similar opportunity at the stage of his defence subject to a lesser condition, which is that his application should not be for the purpose of vexation or delay or defeating the ends of justice.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against a judgment of the Islamabad High Court, dated 15.01.2020, (impugned judgment) whereby the High Court has accepted the revision petition of the respondent filed against an order of the trial court, dated 14.05.2019. The trial court had, by its order, dismissed an application of the respondent filed under section 265-C read with section 94 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Cr.P.C.) for the production of certain documents. By the impugned judgment, the High Court has set aside the order of the trial court and allowed the said application of the respondent.

2. Briefly, the facts necessary to be stated for the decision of the present petition are that the respondent, along with other accused persons, was facing trial for certain offences punishable under the Drug Regulatory Authority of Pakistan Act, 2012 and the Drugs Act, 1976. The trial court delivered to the accused persons, including the respondent, the copies of the documents relied upon by the prosecution as mandated by section 265-C, Cr.P.C., and adjourned the hearing for framing of the charge. However, before the charge was framed, the respondent made an application under section 265-C read with section 94 of the Cr.P.C., for directing the Drug Regulatory Authority of Pakistan, on whose complaint the criminal proceedings had been initiated, to produce 23 documents mentioned in the application. The respondent asserted in the application that the Drug Regulatory Authority of Pakistan Act and the Drugs Act provided a legal mechanism for launching any prosecution thereunder, and that the said documents were necessary for the purpose of forming an opinion by the court as to whether the prosecution was lawful under the said Acts.

3. By its order dated 14.05.2019, the trial court dismissed the application of the respondent with the observation that in compliance with section 265-C, Cr.P.C., the copies of the documents relied upon by the prosecution had been supplied to all the accused persons and that it was the prosecution which had to lead its evidence at first and thereafter the accused persons would be provided an opportunity to adduce or summon the evidence required for their defence. The respondent challenged the order of the trial court in the High Court invoking its revisional jurisdiction. The High Court observed that the trial court had not given any valid justification for withholding the production of the documents mentioned in the application, which were necessary to enable the respondent to ask the relevant questions to the prosecution witnesses in their cross-examination. The High Court, thus, allowed the revision petition of the respondent and accepted his application for the production of the documents by the impugned judgment. Hence, the State, i.e., the prosecution, filed the present petition.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record of the case.

5. The questions of law that have fallen for our consideration are: (i) whether before the commencement of the trial, an accused can apply to the trial court to exercise its power under section 94, Cr.P.C., and direct the prosecution or the complainant to produce any document, in its or his possession or power, which is not covered under section 265-C, Cr.P.C. and (ii) whether before entering on his defence, an accused can make an application for the production of any document under section 94 despite the provisions of section 265-F(7), Cr.P.C., which provides a similar opportunity to him at the stage of defence evidence.

6. Before embarking upon the discussion on these questions, we find it appropriate to reproduce the relevant provisions of sections 94(1) and 265-F(7), Cr.P.C., for the convenience of reference:

94. Summons to produce document or other thing: (1) Whenever any Court, or, any officer incharge of a police-station considers that the production of any document or other thing is necessary or desirable for the purposes of any investigation, inquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code by or before such Court or officer, such Court may issue a summons, or such officer a written order, to the person in whose possession or power such document or thing is believed to be, requiring him to attend and produce it or to produce it, at the time and place stated in the summons or order: .....

265-F. Evidence for prosecution: .....

(7) If the accused, or any one of several accused, after entering on his defence, applies to the Court to issue any process for compelling the attendance of any witness for examination or the production of any document or other thing, the Court shall issue such process unless it considers that the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or defeating the ends of justice, such ground shall be recorded by the Court in writing.

A bare reading of section 94 shows that there is no limitation as to the stage of the inquiry or trial when a court can, in the exercise of its power under this Section, make an order for the production of any document. The only condition for the exercise of the power under section 94 is that the production of the document must be necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial before the court. The word 'whenever' in section 94 clearly indicates that a court can exercise the power of requiring the production of any document under this Section at any stage of the inquiry or trial.

7. Further, section 94 does not restrict as to whose point of view, whether of the prosecution or the accused, the required document may be necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial. A court being a neutral arbiter does not act for either the prosecution or the accused but for the dispensation of justice. And for the dispensation of justice, the court is to ascertain the truth in respect of the matter under inquiry or trial before it. The production of a document that would facilitate the court in this regard is to be considered necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial. It is immaterial whether the production of such a document would support the prosecution case or the defence of the accused. Therefore, any party may at any stage of the inquiry or trial apply to the court, under section 94, for the production of a document and is entitled to its production if it satisfies the court that the production of that document is necessary or desirable for the purposes of such inquiry or trial.

8. There may be cases in which owing to dishonesty, negligence or any other reason, the prosecution does not produce certain documents with the police report, which may establish that there is no probability of the accused being convicted of any offence or the charge against the accused is groundless, and the production thereof is thus necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial. But because such documents are not filed with the police report, the same will not be supplied to the accused under section 265-C, Cr.P.C. In such cases, it would not be just and fair to the accused to reject his application for the production of such documents and to let him undergo the ordeal of protracted trial proceedings and wait for the stage of defence evidence. Similarly, the documents which are not produced by the prosecution with the police report but are relevant to the matter under the inquiry or trial and to use them for his defence, the accused is legally required to confront the prosecution witnesses with those documents in their cross-examination. In such a circumstance also, it would be in the interest of justice that the application of the accused made under section 94 for their production is allowed. Otherwise, it would incur unnecessary delay, expense and inconvenience to recall the prosecution witnesses at the stage of defence evidence only for the purpose of confronting them with such documents.

9. The provision of subsection (7) of section 265-F, Cr.P.C., under which the accused, after entering on his defence, can apply to the trial court to issue any process for compelling the production of any document, does not in any way affect the power of the trial court under section 94(1), Cr.P.C. The provisions of section 94(1) have not been made subordinate by the legislature by the use of the expression, 'Subject to the other provisions of this Code', nor have the provisions of section 265-F(7) been given any overriding effect by using therein the expression, 'Notwithstanding anything contained in other provisions of this Code'. Section 265-F(7), therefore, neither controls nor limits the power of a court under section 94(1). In essence, the provisions of these two Sections differ from each other in their extent and scope. They are not opposed to each other. Section 94(1) affords both the parties to an inquiry or trial (not to the accused alone) the opportunity of causing the production of any document at any stage of such inquiry or trial, with the condition that the party applying for it must satisfy the court that the production of the required document is necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial. Section 265-F(7), on the other hand, only gives the accused another similar opportunity at the stage of his defence subject to a lesser condition, which is that his application should not be for the purpose of vexation or delay or defeating the ends of justice.

10. We thus answer both the questions in affirmative and conclude on question (i) that even before the commencement of the trial, an accused can apply to the trial court to exercise its power under section 94, Cr.P.C., and direct the prosecution or the complainant to produce a document, in its or his possession or power, which is not covered under section 265-C, Cr.P.C., if the production of that document is necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial and on question (ii) that even before entering on his defence, an accused can make an application for the production of a document under section 94 despite the provisions of section 265-F(7), Cr.P.C., which provides a similar opportunity to him at the stage of defence evidence.

11. When we examine the order of the trial court and the judgment of the High Court in the light of the above legal position, we find that the trial court erred in principle in dismissing the application of the respondent without correctly understanding the scope of the provisions of section 94, Cr.P.C., whereas the High Court though correctly understood the scope of these provisions but fell into an error in applying the same to the facts of the case by allowing the application of the respondent without first determining how the production of each of the 23 documents mentioned in the application was necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial. The respondent has asserted in the application that the Drug Regulatory Authority of Pakistan Act and the Drugs Act provide a legal mechanism for launching any prosecution thereunder, and that the said documents are necessary for the purpose of forming an opinion by the court as to whether the prosecution was launched lawfully under the said Acts. The order allowing or dismissing the application of the respondent, either in part or in toto, must address these assertions of the respondent in respect of each of the documents sought to be produced with reference to the relevant provisions of the said Acts. As this has not been done in the impugned judgment, the same is not legally sustainable. Further, we find that after explaining the scope of the provisions of section 94, Cr.P.C. and pointing out the error in the approach of the trial court, the High Court should have directed the trial court to decide the application of the respondent afresh instead of proceeding to decide the same by itself as there was no finding of the trial court whether or not the production of the documents, or any of them, sought to be produced is necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry or trial.

12. For the above reasons, we convert this petition into an appeal and partly allow the same. The impugned judgment of the High Court is partly maintained and partly set aside: the part whereby it set aside the order of the trial court is maintained while the part allowing the application of the respondent is set aside, and the trial court is directed to decide the application of the respondent afresh.

MWA/S-21/SC Order accordingly.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks review of our judgment dated 15.01.2020 passed in Criminal Appeal No.01-L of 2015. The main ground for review pressed by the learned counsel for the petitioner before us is that the instant matter stood dismissed by this Court vide order dated 24.08.2009 and thereafter Criminal Appeal No.01-L of 2015 could not have been decided through judgment under review dated 15.01.2020.

2. Taken aback by this submission, we perused the entire record of the case minutely. Examination of the record reveals that the High Court vide judgment dated 31.07.2002 confiscated the properties of Tasneem Jalal under section 37 of the Control of Narcotic Substances Ordinance, 1995 ("Ordinance") on the ground that he stood convicted and sentenced by the District Court of New Jersey, USA on 26.09.1993 for the offence of possessing and distributing heroin.

3. Against the judgment of the High Court dated 31.07.2002, Criminal P. No.722-L/2002 was filed before this Court by Tasneem Jalal. During the pendency of the said petition, Tasneem Jalal was murdered in the year 2003. As a result the criminal petition stood abated vide order dated 22.06.2004.

4. On the other hand ANF approached the High Court in the light of the judgment dated 31.07.2002 for the possession of the forfeited properties of Tasneem Jalal, this petition was allowed vide judgment dated 15.03.2006. The legal heirs of Tasneem Jalal filed a Criminal Petition No. 288-L/2006 before this Court against the said judgment.

5. The legal heirs of Tasneem Jalal also filed a review petition (C.R.P. No. 6-L/2004) against order of abatement dated 22.06.2004. The review was allowed vide order dated 26.07.2006 and both the criminal petitions (722-L/2002 and 288-L/2006) were allowed to be fixed for hearing.

6. Both the criminal petitions were dismissed on 24.08.2009. Against the same review was filed (C.R.P. No. 41-L/2009) which was allowed on 10.6.2013 and the Criminal Petition No. 722-L/2002 was revived. It appears that review was not filed in Criminal Petition No. 288-L/2006, which arose from a subsequent order of the High Court dated 15.03.2006. As the legal heirs were duly represented in Criminal P. No.722-L/2002, hence non filing of the review in Criminal P. 288-L/2006 as agitated by the learned counsel is immaterial.

7. Criminal Petition No. 722-L/2002 came up for hearing on 26.01.2015 when leave was granted in the matter and thereafter the appeal (Appeal No. 1-L/2015) came up for hearing on 15.01.2020 when the judgment under review was passed, declaring the forfeiture of the properties of Tasneem Jalal (represented through his legal heirs) to be unlawful and hence set-aside.

8. In this background the contention of the petitioner that this matter had earlier been decided is not only incorrect but amounts to misrepresentation before the court. We are saddened by the fact that learned counsel for the petitioner repeatedly misled the Court; first, on 01.03.2022 when notices were issued to the respondents and for the second time, today.

9. Having failed to convince the Court on the factual front, learned counsel moved on to the legal argument by submitting that the assets of the respondents could also have been forfeited under the provisions of Dangerous Drugs Act, 1930 ("Act") and it did not matter that section 37 of the Ordinance was promulgated on 07.8.1995 after the conviction and sentence against Tasnim Jalal in the USA in the year 1993. This submission is absolutely misconceived. Section 35-C of the Act does not envisage foreign conviction, which was for the first time introduced in section 37 of the Ordinance in 1995, hence the offence committed in the USA in the year 1993 could not possibly attract section 37 of the Ordinance of 1995. This aspect has been dealt with in the judgment under review in great detail and the petitioner cannot be allowed to re-argue the case in review jurisdiction.

10. For the above reason, we see no merit in the instant petition. We also find with regret that the learned counsel for the petitioner tried to mislead the Court not once but twice. We find that there is no ground made out for the review of the impugned judgment, hence this petition is dismissed, subject to costs in the sum of Rs.10,000/-, imposed under Order XVII, Rule 12 and Order XXVIII, Rule 3 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980. The costs shall be deposited by the learned counsel for the petitioner with any approved, recognized and well-known Charitable Organization and receipt thereof be submitted with the Deputy Registrar (Judicial) of this Court within a fortnight from the release of this order. In case of failure to deposit the aforesaid amount within the stipulated period, the file of the case shall be put up before the Bench, on the administrative side, for appropriate orders.

Per Qazi Faez Isa, J

Per Sardar Tariq Masood, J

I was also not consulted by the Chief Justice before putting me on the present Bench. Surprisingly, present petitions in this Bench have been fixed when just a day earlier one of the petitioners himself along with his counsel met the Chief Justice in his Chamber and thereafter on the next day these petitions have been fixed without any consultation or ascertaining my availability. If this practice is allowed then question is whether every petitioners/appellants whose petitions/appeals are lying in the Supreme Court since years can be allowed to meet the Chief Justice in the Chamber for getting fixed their cases on the very next day.

I was awaiting the decision in the petitions through which the Supreme Court (Practice and Procedure) Act, 2023 ( the Act') has been challenged and expected that they would be decided soon as interim ex-parte stay order was issued which had suspended the operation of the then bill and the proposed Act. Section 3 of the Act stipulates that "any matter invoking exercise of original jurisdiction under clause (3) of Article 184 of the Constitution shall be first placed before the Committee constituted under section 2 for examination and if the Committee is of the view that a question of public importance with reference to enforcement of any of the Fundamental Rights conferred by Chapter 1 of Part II of the Constitution is involved, it shall constitute a Bench comprising not less than three Judges of the Supreme Court of Pakistan which may also include the members of the Committee, for adjudication of the matter . However, the present matter was not referred to the Committee, of which I am a member. Only by presuming that the Act will be struck down, the mechanism provided in section 3 of the Act has been disregarded.

Surprisingly present nine Members Bench was constituted on the assumption that the Act will be struck down because if it is not, than any party who is not satisfied with its decision, their right to appeal under section 5 of the Act would be made redundant because such an appeal is to be heard by a larger bench of the Supreme Court. Presently, the Supreme Court comprises of fifteen Judges and the Chief Justice, which makes a total of sixteen Judges. However, if the full court comprising of sixteen judges and the Chief Justice is available i.e. seventeen judges then an appeal would be heard by minimum of ten Judges which is not possible in the present situation, so the appeal if filed by either party would not be heard.

I have not recused from the Bench, hence there was no question to sign the purported order in which it has been mentioned that new Bench will be constituted whereas my point of view was that present petitions be heard after the decision of the petitions which have been filed against the Act.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J

In the recent past there has been a consistent pattern and reluctance of not constituting the Full Court Bench (but instead Special Benches of some Judges) in cases of immense public importance that have far-reaching impact on the political, social and economic life of the people of Pakistan and their fundamental rights. The non-formation of the Full Court Bench has severely undermined the authority of the Court and the legitimacy of its judgments. The constitutional significance of the matter involved in the present case and its potential ramifications, call for the highest level of judicial scrutiny. Collective deliberations and diverse insights by all the judges in cases of public importance helps the Court arrive at a sound judgment and reinforces public confidence and trust in the Supreme Court.

Additionally until the Supreme Court decides the constitutionality of the Supreme Court (Practice and Procedure) Act, 2023, Section 3 of which prescribes the procedure for invoking the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, all such matters under this jurisdiction must be heard by the Full Court Bench of the Supreme Court.

Per Yahya Afridi, J

The entire edifice of a credible justice system is based on public trust. What is most serious and cannot be disregarded is that there are objections in writing from within the members of the Bench, to the very constitution of the Bench hearing the present petitions. In this regard, the Senior Puisne Judge has recorded in writing his said objections, and the same are by now in the public domain. Thus, the matter of the present composition of the Bench warrants urgent attention and reconsideration by the Chief Justice, lest it may dampen public trust in the justice system.

As a first step, the appropriate measure, would be that a Full Court Bench of the Supreme Court should be constituted to hear the present petitions. Without taking such a measure, any judgment rendered in present petitions by the present Bench may lead to the diminishing of the deference the decision requires and deserves. It is, therefore, most earnestly urged that the Chief Justice may consider the reconstitution of the present Bench, and refer the present petitions to a Full Court Bench.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J

Although in a constitutional court, it is only for the judge concerned to decide according to his own conscience whether to recuse himself from hearing a case or not, he must in so deciding consider that his decision should not undermine the public trust in the impartiality of the court. For the appearance of his partiality would not only demean his reputation but also that of the institution of which he is a part. The insistence on the appearance of impartiality in the dispensation of justice is not some artificial attempt to mask imperfection in the judicial process, but rather an essential means of ensuring the reality of a fair adjudication. Both the appearance and reality of impartial justice are necessary to the public legitimacy of judicial pronouncements and thus to the rule of law itself. Judicial impartiality upholds public trust, engenders predictability in the law, ensures fair trial, upkeeps the rule of law, and safeguards democracy. The principle of judicial impartiality, therefore, is not merely a moral imperative but a practical necessity to ensure justice, uphold democratic values, protect citizens' rights, and maintain societal order.

Williams v. Pennsylvania 579 U.S. 1 (2016) per Justice Anthony Kennedy (Majority view) ref.

Judges should not readily accede to the request for their recusal from hearing a case and decide the matter of their recusal after properly weighing the ground agitated for making such request. Where it is apparent that the perception of impartiality is being created for some ulterior motive without any sound basis, the judge must not yield to such strategy and abdicate performance of his duty. But if such a request is based on some reasonable ground which may genuinely raise doubt in the mind of a common person about the impartiality of the judge, the safest course for the judge is to accept such request in the larger interest of upholding public trust in the integrity and impartiality of the Court. In the present case, as one of the petitioners is admittedly my relative, a common person may not understand the difference between a petition filed in the public interest and a petition filed for personal interest. I, therefore, in the present case, find it preferable to accept the request and recuse myself from hearing the case. In order to safeguard the public trust in the integrity and impartiality of the Court, I recuse myself from hearing these petitions.

Regarding Suo Motu Case No. 4 of 2022

1. Mr. Ishrat Ali, a Federal Government employee, who was sent on deputation to the Supreme Court to work as Registrar, was `withdrawn' by the Federal Government vide notification dated 3 April 2023[1] and 'directed to report to the Establishment Division, with immediate effect.' But, Mr. Ishrat Ali refuses to abide by the order of the Federal Government.

2. On 4 April 2023, Mr. Ishrat Ali mis-described himself as Registrar , and purported to sign and issue 'Court Roster for Tuesday 4th April, 2023' in Suo Motu Case No. 4/2022 ( Case No. 4') and further purported to constitute a 'Larger Bench' at 2:00 p.m.' This was stated to have been done 'By Order of HCJ , that is, Hon'ble Chief Justice.

The illegal Circular

3. Case No. 4 was fixed before a three-member Bench[2] on 15 March 2023 and an order was announced on 29 March 2023.[3] Rather than complying with the order of the Supreme Court, Mr. Ishrat Ali (when he was still the Registrar) did something out of the ordinary; he issued a Circular,[4] stating that any observation made in this order of the Supreme Court 'is to be disregarded'. I wrote to Mr. Ishrat Ali that his Circular 'purports to negate, undo, disobey and violate order dated 29 March 2023 of a three-member Bench of the Supreme Court, passed in Suo Motu Case No. 4 of 2022'. He was also informed that, The Registrar does not have the power or authority to undo a judicial order, and the Chief Justice cannot issue administrative directions with regard thereto'. The letter was also copied to the Hon'ble Chief Justice. Till date no reply has been received to my letter.

What constitutes the Supreme Court

4, The Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ( the Constitution ) establishes the Supreme Court, and defines it as consisting of the Chief Justice of Pakistan and Judges of the Supreme Court.[5] Order dated 29 March 2023 which was passed in Case No. 4 had pointed out the constitutional and legal position, and that the Chief Justice could not unilaterally assume all the powers of the Supreme Court. It would be appropriate to reproduce paragraphs 27 and 28 of the order dated 29 March 2023:

27. The Supreme Court is empowered to make makes rules attending to the aforesaid matters. The Supreme Court comprises of the Chief Justice and all Judges. The Constitution does not grant to the Chief Justice unilateral and arbitrary power to decide the above matters. With respect, the Chief Justice cannot substitute his personal wisdom with that of the Constitution. Collective determination by the Chief Justice and the Judges of the Supreme Court can also not be assumed by an individual, albeit the Chief Justice.

28. The interest of citizens therefore will be best served to postpone the hearing of this case, and of all other cases under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, till the matters noted hereinabove are first attended to by making requisite rules in terms of article 191 of the Constitution.'

The purported Larger Bench was presumably constituted when it was realized that the Circular was patently unconstitutional and illegal, and that the Chief Justice could not have given legal instructions to issue it.

Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court

5. The Constitution stipulates that, 'No court shall have any jurisdiction save as is or may be conferred on it by the Constitution or by or under any law.'[6] The Constitution does not bestow unlimited jurisdiction on the Supreme Court, let alone on its Chief Justice. The Constitution confers only the following jurisdictions on the Supreme Court: (1) original jurisdiction,[7] (2) appellate jurisdiction,[8] (3) advisory jurisdiction,[9] (4) power to transfer cases jurisdiction,[10] (5) review jurisdiction,[11] (6) contempt jurisdiction[12] and (7) appellate jurisdiction with regard to decisions of administrative courts and tribunals.[13]

Clarifying further the constitutional position

6. To further clarify the above vital point about jurisdiction, let it be assumed that the Supreme Court conducts a murder trial, and then convicts or acquits the accused. This would be of no legal effect, because neither the Constitution nor any law bestows jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to conduct a criminal trial. However, such a trial could be conducted by a Sessions Judge, who is two-steps below Judges of the Supreme Court. And, to cite a civil law example, a Family Judge presiding over a Family Court, can decide family law matters, a jurisdiction which does not vest in the Supreme Court.

Larger Bench and order dated 4 April 2023

7. The Constitution does not confer jurisdiction on a bench or on Judges of the Supreme Court (no matter how many in number) to sit in appeal over an order of the Supreme Court. Therefore, the so called Larger Bench was wrongly constituted purportedly to hear Case No. 4. The Larger Bench did not constitute a (constitutional) court; it did not possess any of the abovementioned jurisdictions, and could not pass an order. The purported 'order' dated 4 April 2023 cannot be categorized as an order of the Supreme Court; it is of no constitutional or legal effect. It would be legally incorrect to refer to it as an order; therefore, it shall be referred to as the 4 April Note .

Could the order dated 29 March 2023 be reviewed?

8. Can then the 4 April Note be construed as an order reviewing order dated 29 March 2023? The answer is that the said Larger Bench could not do so. If the review jurisdiction was to be invoked then Case No. 4 would have to be listed for hearing before the same Judges who had earlier heard it on 15 March 2023[14] but this was not done.

Procedural Irregularities

9. In addition to disregarding the abovementioned constitutional provisions the following procedural irregularities were also committed:

(1) The roster was issued for the same day, which is only done when there is an extraordinary emergency, but in the instant matter there was none;

(2) The very day the case roster was issued the matter was also listed, and after court-time;

(3) No prior notice of the listing of the matter was issued;

(4) Notice was not issued to the Attorney-General for Pakistan as per Order XXVIIA of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908;

(5) Notice to the Attorney-General had not been issued, yet the April 4 Note records that the Additional Attorney-General was 'On Court's Notice'; and

(6) The counsel of PMDC[15] was in attendance (without prior notice), which meant he was verbally or telephonically sent for, contrary to usual practice.

Responsibility of senior Judges

10. Six Judges were hurriedly assembled. The learned Judge heading the bench and the next senior Judge[16] concluded the matter within a few minutes. Immediately, on the very same day, the 4 April Note, comprising of 8 pages, was issued. If the matter had been listed for hearing in the ordinary course as per normal procedure, sufficient notice had been given, and it was properly deliberated upon, then the four Hon'ble junior Judges may have realized that what their seniors were doing did not accord with the Constitution and the law.

The Note relies on yet another earlier note

11. Paragraph 7 of the 4 April Note refers to what three of the same Judges had earlier done in a similar situation.[17] Then, I had written a 15 page note[18] trying to explain to my distinguished colleagues the different jurisdictions of the Supreme Court and that the Constitution did not grant them unlimited jurisdiction. However, and unfortunately, the 4 April Note overlooks what was pointed out earlier and the very same mistake was again committed. We learn from each other, but the authors of the 4 April Note disregarded a 15 page explanatory note that would have been helpful. Despite practicing law (as an advocate and Judge) for 40 years I still consider myself a student of law. Hubris destroys institutions.

The reasoning applied in the 4 April Note

12. The Note designates the Chief Justice of Pakistan as the `Master of Rolls',[19] a term not found in the Constitution, in any law or even in the Supreme Court Rules, 1980. And, on the pretext that the Chief Justice is the Master of Rolls and empowered to do as he pleases the 4 April Note proceeds to rely on an earlier note (authored by Munib Akhtar, J), stating that it 'clearly and categorically lays down the rule that the suo motu jurisdiction of this Court can only and solely be invoked by the HCJP. The majority order also appears to be in violation of the well settled rule of law, which is axiomatic, that Chief Justice is the master of the roster.' With respect, the Hon'ble Justice Munib Akhtar's earlier note was not a legal precedent. In any event the said reasoning is without a constitutional or legal foundation. The stated rule of law was not enacted pursuant to a law nor can it by its own self-serve itself to be categorized as rule of law, particularly when it contravenes the Constitution, which does not grant to the Chief Justice such powers.

13. The reasoning, with respect, is otherwise flawed too. The order dated 29 March 2023 had noted the lack of procedural rules with regard to cases filed or taken notice of under article 184(3) of the Constitution. However, in Case No. 4 notice under Article 184(3) of the Constitution had already been taken (with regard to the matter of grant of additional marks). Ironically, in a matter in which the so called Larger Bench had wrongly assumed jurisdiction the 4 April Note stated that order dated 29 March 2023 'was therefore both without and beyond jurisdiction'. The 4 April Note has no constitutional or legal validity as it seeks to supplant the Constitution.

The Constitution

14. The Constitution was unanimously passed with the votes of 196 members out of 200 of the National Assembly fifty years ago, on 10 April 1973.[20] Not a single vote was cast against it.[21] The Constitution's credibility and longevity rests on its democratic foundations, and it is the document which holds the Federation together.

The Judicature

15. The Constitution establishes the Judicature.[22] The Constitution also established the trichotomy of powers; the Legislature, Executive and Judiciary. The Judiciary is given the responsibility to decide cases in accordance with the Constitution and the law[23] and by applying due process[24] requirements. Every Judge before entering office takes oath: 'I will discharge my duties, and perform my functions, honestly, to the best of my ability, faithfully in accordance with the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and the law.' Judges also swear to 'preserve, protect and defend the Constitution'. The Constitution alone grants jurisdiction and empowers courts to decide cases, therefore, if non- existing jurisdiction is assumed then the oath to act in accordance with the Constitution is violated.

Islamic Injunctions

16. The Chief Justice is deserving of respect but he is not a master; such servitude is also alien to Islam, and the Constitution stipulates that all laws must be brought in conformity with the Injunctions of Islam,[25] the State religion of Pakistan.[26] The Constitution opens with two of the most beautiful names of the Almighty Allah (Ar-Rahman, the most Beneficent, and Ar-Rahim, the most Merciful) and stipulates that, 'sovereignty over the entire Universe belongs to Almighty Allah alone' and the exercise of authority is a sacred trust.[27] Order dated 29 March 2023 required that rules in respect of the stated matters be made by Supreme Court through consultation. The Holy Qur'an also mandates consultation, 'Do that which is in agreement amongst the people'.[28] Qur'anic exegetes[29] down the ages are unanimous in the interpretation of this verse, and say that consultation is obligatory in respect of all matters pertaining to more than one person. Because: (a) no one should impose their will on others, (b) imposing one's will on others either means that one does not give importance to others or that one deems oneself to be more intelligent, both of which are morally evil and (c) deciding an issue that pertains to the people is a serious thing and one should fear Allah. They derive the following principles from this verse: (1) all requisite information be provided, (2) appointments should not be made on the basis of fear or favour, (3) leaders should seek advice from advisors, (4) advisors must give their honest and well considered opinion and (5) matters should preferably be resolved consensually, failing which through majority opinion.

17. That even Almighty Allah's prophet, Muhammad (peace and blessings be upon him), was ordained to consult the people in their affairs.[30] And, it is reported by his companion, 'None was more apt to seek council of his companions than the Messenger of Allah'.[31]

Absolute Power

18. The world has also been moving away from the days when monarchs and dictators wielded absolute power. The Kingdom of Bhutan, until recently, was one of the few remaining countries ruled by a monarchy having absolute power. However, the enlightened King Wangchuk voluntarily gave up his powers, saying, 'I do not believe that a system of absolute monarchy, wholly dependent on one individual is a good system for the people in the long run... the destiny of the nation lies in the hands of the people, we cannot leave the future of the country in the hands of one person.'[32] Bhutan now is governed by a constitution.[33] History witnesses, that when in an individual power is concentrated, disastrous consequences invariably follow.

Dangers and pitfalls

19. Irreparable damage will be caused to the Judiciary and to the people of Pakistan if the legitimacy, integrity and credibility of the Judiciary is undermined, because without it the people (who it serves) will lose their trust. The surest way for this to happen is when cases are not decided in accordance with the Constitution. Pakistan was first ravaged when a bureaucrat Governor-General unconstitutionally dismissed the Constituent Assembly and the unanimous judgment of the Chief Court of Sindh[34] was set aside by the Federal Court.[35] The Federal Court's decision enabled future dictators to overthrow civilian governments. Regretfully more than once Chief Justice and Judges of the Supreme Court facilitated dictators. The country with the largest Muslim population broke apart because constitutional deviations were justified.

Conclusion

20. Since the gathering in a court of six distinguished judges was not permissible under the Constitution or under any law, the Supreme Court's order dated 29 March 2023 passed in Case No. 4 could not have been set aside by the 4 April Note. Decisions emanating from a courtroom overcast with the shadow of autocracy cannot displace the Constitution.

1. A note has been put up to me by the 'Registrar' dated 16 May 2023 which states that the Hon'ble Chief Justice has enquired how long 1 would 'like to remain on Chamber work'. This is a question which is better answered by the Hon'ble Chief Justice. Let me proceed to state why.

2. Constitutional Petitions Nos. 6 to 8 of 2023, filed on 12 April 2023, sought to set aside the Supreme Court (Practice and Procedure) Bill, 2023 ( the Bill'). The petitions were filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, which stipulates that 'the Supreme Court shall, if it considers that a question of public importance with reference to the enforcement of any of the Fundamental Rights conferred by Chapter 1 of Part II is involved, have the power to make an order of the nature mentioned in the said Article' (199 of the Constitution).

3. The first petition (C.P. No. 6 of 2023) was filed by two Lahore based lawyers represented by Messrs Khawaja Ahmad Tariq Rahim and Imtiaz Rashid Siddiqui. The Office of the Supreme Court had noted five legal objections. The first two are reproduced hereunder:

a. That the petitioners have not pointed out as to what questions of public importance in the instant case are involved with reference to enforcement of any of the Fundamental Rights guaranteed under the Constitution, so as to directly invoke jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution.

b. That ingredients for invoking extra ordinary jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution have not been satisfied.'

An eight-member bench proceeded to hear these petitions. However, none of the three orders passed till date (Orders dated 13 April 2023, 2 May 2023 and 8 May 2023) attend to the office objections, nor state that the petitions are maintainable under Article 184(3) of the Constitution,

4. The order dated 13 April 2023, which is an ad-interim ex-parte order, reads as a final decision. With respect, it is most unusual, if not unprecedented, to give categorical findings on legislation which does not exist, and to do so without hearing the other side. The seven-page order holds:

'Prima facie, this approach is a serious encroachment upon, interference with and intrusion into the independence of the judiciary'.

'Any intrusion in the practice and procedure of the Court, even on the most tentative of assessments, would appear to be inimical to the independence of the judiciary, no matter how innocuous, benign or even desirable the regulation may facially appear to be.'

'Prima facie therefore, when the Bill and the Act that is soon to come into being, is examined on the anvil of the most fundamental principles that underpin the Constitution, it can be regarded as seriously wanting in constitutional competence.'

...there is a substantial, immediate and direct interference with the independence of the judiciary in the form of multiple intrusions, in the guise of regulating the practice and procedure of this Court and conferring upon it a jurisdiction that appears not to be permissible under any constitutional provision.'

Notice under Order XXVIIA of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, was issued to the Attorney-General but notices were not issued to the Advocates-General of the Provinces, even though the law under challenge applies throughout Pakistan. However, notices were issued to eight political parties despite the Bill not affecting any of their rights/privileges.

5. On 21 April 2023 the Bill became the Supreme Court (Practice and Procedure) Act, 2023 ( the Act'). Section 2 of the Act stipulates that:

(1) Every cause, appeal or matter before the Supreme Court shall be heard and disposed of by a bench constituted by the Committee comprising the Chief Justice of Pakistan and two most senior judges, in order of seniority.

(2) The decisions of the Committee shall be by majority.'

Section 3 of the Act attends to the original Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. Section 4 stipulates that wherever the interpretation of a constitutional provision is involved, the case should be heard by not less than five judges of the Supreme Court. Section 5 provides for an appeal against a decision of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3). Section 6 enables any Advocate of the Supreme Court to file a review petition (under Article 188 of the Constitution). Section 7 requires that urgent cases should be fixed no later than 14 days from the date of filing. And, section 8 is in the nature of a non obstante clause.

6. Another three petitions (Constitutional Petitions Nos. 10 to 12 of 2023) were filed, seeking the same relief, and when all six petitions came up for hearing on 2 May 2023, it was ordered 'That injunction continues and shall continue to be enforced against the Act till further orders'. On 8 May 2023, the petitions were adjourned to 1 June 2023, that is, after 24 days.

7. Leaving aside:

(1) Whether the said petitions seek the enforcement of any Fundamental Right (none has been mentioned in any order);

(2) Whether a law not yet enacted, can be suspended under Article 184(3), and it be further ordered that when the Bill becomes the Act it too shall stand suspended;

(3) Whether at the very outset (through an ad-interim ex-parte order) the operation of a law can be suspended;

(4) Whether independence of the judiciary was threatened merely because the burden of responsibility on the Honourable Chief Justice was henceforth to be shared with two other senior judges;

(5) Why the petitions, which were taken to be of such utmost importance and urgency, and which necessitated the passing of an ad interim ex-parte order were then not listed for day-to-day hearing, but with a delay of 24 days;

(6) Whether it was appropriate for the Hon'ble Chief Justice to hear cases pertaining to his own powers;

(7) Whether Article IV of the Judges Code of Conduct - 'A Judge must decline resolutely to act in a case involving his own interest', was attracted; and

(8) If the petitions were to be dismissed, what will happen in the interregnum when section 2 of the Act was not complied with.

8. In paragraph 11 of the order dated 13 April 2023, Article 191 of the Constitution was 'explained by adopting for present purposes a dictum from one of the most famous cases of American constitutional law (McCulloch v Maryland 17 US 316 (1119)): the power to regulate involves the power to destroy'. However, the actual quote is - 'That the power to tax involves the power to destroy'. The power to tax is altogether different from the power to regulate. In any event the US Supreme Court in that case was concerned with clashing sovereignty of the legislative powers of Congress with that of a state legislature, and it held that the state legislature by taxing could not 'pull down what there is an acknowledged right in another [Federal Congress] to build up'. The US Supreme Court confirmed the supremacy of Congress:

The result is a conviction that the states have no power, by taxation or otherwise, to retard, impede, burden, or in any manner control the operations of the constitutional laws enacted by Congress to carry into execution the powers vested in the central government. This is, we think, the unavoidable consequence of that supremacy which the constitution has declared.'

9. The oath of office of a Chief Justice and of every Judge requires them to discharge their duties and perform their functions 'in accordance with the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and the law' [emphasis added]. And, Article 189 of the Constitution stipulates that the decisions of the Supreme Court are 'binding on all other courts of Pakistan' [emphasis added]. The Constitution does not give pre eminence to an ad-interim order of the Supreme Court over the oath of office, and as noted Article 189 stipulates that decisions of the Supreme Court are only binding on other courts.

10. On the one hand section 2 of the Act requires compliance, but on the other hand this Court has suspended the operation of the Act. The petitions will either be allowed or dismissed. If the petitions were to be dismissed wouldn't conducting court in the interregnum be a violation of section 2 of the Act?

11. The Hon'ble Chief Justice and my distinguished colleagues have placed me in a quandary, which can now only be resolved when the said six petitions are decided. It is prudent to await the Court's decision. It is not for me to decide, let alone 'like' whether to continue with Chamber work. The Hon'ble Chief Justice is much better placed to answer the question he has posed to me, since he knows better when the petitions will be decided.

12. Lest it be misconstrued, throughout the period of Chamber work I have been working; writing judgments in Civil Appeal No. 2015/2022, in Civil Appeal No. 1139-L/2019 and in 41 Customs cases being Civil Appeals No. 565/2011, etc. I have also decided Suo Motu Review Petition No. 3203/2017. I now only have one case to write a judgment in (CPLA No. 3203/2017) and in another to consider whether I agree with Hon'ble Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. I have also attended to the meetings concerning appointments with regard to the Federal Shariat Court, have worked from morning till night to attend to the hundreds of long pending applications of advocates seeking enrolment as ASCs, and attended to all other matters assigned to me.

13. In conclusion, let me categorically state that how my distinguished colleagues decide the pending petitions is their discretion. All that I look for, and which the country undoubtedly expects, is the earliest possible determination of the matter. I have been compelled to write this note in response to the aforesaid query of the Hon'ble Chief Justice. Since a number of my colleagues have enquired why I am not sitting in Court, I shall also be sharing this note with them.

Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----Ss. 107 & 133(1)---Income Tax Ordinance (XXXI of 1979) [since repealed], Ss. 163 & 136(1)---Convention Between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income, 1982, Arts.7, 12, paras. (3)(a), (3)(b), 22, 23 & 24---Concept of "Royalties"--- Scope--- Business profits---Non-resident foreign company---Exemption from income tax---Income/royalties earned by the non-resident company in Pakistan for the lease of certain software---Whether such income was business profits and thus exempt from payment of income tax in Pakistan under Article 7 of the Convention Between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income ('the Convention'), or the same constituted "royalties" as defined in paragraph 3 of Article 12 of the Convention and was liable to tax.

Per Qazi Faez Isa, J. (Majority view)

The respondent, a company incorporated in the Netherlands and thus a non-resident for Pakistan income tax purposes, and another company ('SSI'), which had a place of business in Pakistan, entered into an 'Agreement for Lease of FLIC Tapes' dated 1 February 1986 and a 'Software Rental Agreement' dated 1 January 1995 (respectively 'the 1986 Agreement', 'the 1995 Agreement' and collectively 'the Agreements'). In the 1986 Agreement 'SSI' is described as the lessee and in the 1995 Agreement it is described as the customer. The tax returns filed by the respondent claimed that the said receipts were business profits and exempt from payment of income tax in Pakistan under Article 7 of the Convention Between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income ('the Convention'). However, the appellant's (tax department's) case was that the receipts were royalties under Article 12 of the Convention and the respondent was liable to pay income tax thereon at the rate of fifteen percent. The Income Tax Officer, Commissioner of Income Tax (Appeals) and the Income Tax Appellate Tribunal unanimously determined that the receipts of payments by the respondent constituted royalties in terms of paragraph 3 (a) and (b) of Article 12 of the Convention and were liable to income tax. The respondent then assailed the assessment orders, the appellate orders and the judgments of the Tribunal before the High Court by filing references. The High Court decided in favour of the respondent, and held that the amounts received by the respondent for leasing FLIC tapes (software programs) did not fall within the definition of income arising from royalties.

The respondent did not clearly set out its case and did not provide the following information, documents and facts or provided misleading information:

(1) The respondent did not explain what each Agreement dealt with, which was necessary in view of their technical nature and as the language used therein was not self-evident, particularly the terms mentioned in the schedules thereto;
(2) The respondent did not state that the 1986 Agreement, the duration of which was for four years, still subsisted, yet referred to FLIC tapes which were only mentioned therein (FLIC tapes were not mentioned in the 1995 Agreement);
(3) The respondent did not itemize the nature of the receipts and then on the basis thereof claim that they did not constitute royalties (under Article 12 of the Convention) and that the same constituted business profits (under Article 7 of the Convention);
(4) The respondent in its reply to the notices sent by the Income Tax Officer did not deny certain components of royalties (mentioned in paragraph 3 of Article 12 of the Convention);
(5) The respondent did not specifically state under which Agreement it had received payment, and for what; and
(6) The respondent had relied upon Article 12 of the 'Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development Model Convention' ('OECD MC'), its Commentary and textbook explanation/interpretation thereof, and did so despite the fact that the Convention's Article 12 had applied Article 12 of the 'United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries' ('UN MC'), and not Article 12 of the OECD MC.
There were also the following drawbacks and legal shortcomings in the respondent's case:
(1) The respondent did not present its case to the competent authority of its country (the Netherlands) under Article 24 of the Convention, and thus its point of view did not come forth and could not be considered;
(2) If the respondent had presented its case (as stated above) and if the competent authority of the Netherlands had supported the respondent's contention there was the possibility of the two countries resolving the matter and/or making regulation/s with regard thereto in terms of the Convention;
(3) That by foregoing (1) and (2) (above) a very technical matter came before the High Court, which the High Court proceeded to determine without having the requisite technical expertise and without being provided it; and
(4) The respondent had invoked the jurisdiction of the High Court under section 136(1) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 1970 ('ITO 1979') and section 133(1) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('ITO 2001') which was restricted to questions of law, however, factual determination of whether the receipts constituted royalties was considered despite three forums (below) concurrently deciding the same against the respondent.
The High Court erred with regard to the following:
(1) The High Court overlooked the fact that the High Court's jurisdiction under section 136(1) of the ITO 1979 and section 133(1) of the ITO 2001 was limited to considering and deciding questions of law, however, the instant cases were filed to overturn the factual determination made by three qualified forums (below) which had determined that the receipts were not royalties in terms of Article 12 of the Convention;
(2) The High Court did not appreciate, as probably it was not explained to by the respondent, that there was no mention of FLIC tapes in the 1995 Agreement, and presumed that the receipts were payment for temporary use of FLIC tapes, which were only mentioned in the 1986 Agreement;
(3) The High Court proceeded on an incorrect assumption that Article 12 of the Convention was based on Article 12 of the OECD MC, whereas in fact it was based on Article 12 of the UN MC, whereunder royalties earned in Pakistan were taxable;
(4) The High Court did not consider the matter and the Convention holistically, including comprehensively considering Articles 7 and 12 thereof, and overlooked its Articles 22, 23 and 24;
(5) The High Court without setting out the nature of the receipts, let alone doing so in detail, assumed that they did not constitute royalties in terms of Article 12 of the Convention, and did so without analogizing the receipts against the definition of royalties in paragraph 3 (a) and (b) of Article 12 of the Convention;
(6) The High Court failed to appreciate that the Convention was a complete document, each term whereof had to be considered, and instead proceeded to interpret it in the light of precedents and textbook explanations of general terms (which were not so used in the Convention), and also did so without appreciating that the Convention's Article 12 was based on Article 12 of the UN MC and not on Article 12 of the OECD MC;

(7) The High Court also (apparently) failed to appreciate that if the respondent was taxed in Pakistan under paragraph 2 of Article 12 of the Convention its tax liability to such extent would have been accordingly adjusted in the Netherlands, and the respondent would not have been double taxed;

(8) The High Court appears not to have considered that the receipts that were taxed were the respondent's earnings in Pakistan, and to have kept this under consideration when considering the applicability of Article 12 of the Convention; and

(9) The High Court did not abide by the recognized principle of interpretation that the State in which payment is made (under the Convention) is generally entitled to tax such payment.

A. P. Moller v Commissioner of Income Tax 2012 SCMR 557 ref.

Impugned Judgments of the High Court in all appeals are not sustainable nor are the reasons given by the High Court to set aside the assessment orders, the appellate orders and the Tribunal's judgments, which are accordingly restored. Consequently, present appeals are allowed by setting aside the impugned Judgments of the High Court.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. (Minority view)

The character of payments received in transactions involving the transfer of computer software depends on the nature of the rights that the transferee acquires under the particular arrangement regarding the use and exploitation of the program. For a payment to constitute royalty under the Convention, it must fall at least in one of the three categories provided in Article 12(3) of the Convention. One can start by narrowing down the possibilities envisaged in Article 12(3) of the Convention. The agreement for the use of FLIC tapes (software programs) concluded between the respondent and the lessee on 1 February 1986 ("Agreement") did not involve payments made for the use of or the right to use any patent, trademark or trade name, design or model, or cinematograph films and tapes for television and broadcasting. The next issue is whether the Agreement involved payments made for the use of or the right to use any industrial, commercial or scientific equipment. 'Equipment' consists of tangible movable objects and since the software itself is only comprised of instructions and is pure intangible information, it is not covered by the equipment clause. It follows that the Agreement also did not involve payments made for the use of or the right to use any industrial, commercial or scientific equipment.

Matthias Valta and Stella Langner, in Reimer and Rust (eds), Klaus Vogel on Double Taxation Conventions (5th edn 2021) vol 1, art. 12, paras 160-162, 173-174 ref.

As regards the remaining possibilities envisaged in Article 12(3) of the Convention, insofar as the present case is concerned, with the payments made for the use of or the right to use secret formula or process, information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience or a copyright of a literary, artistic or scientific work. A secret formula or process comprises all kinds of company secrets, also known as industrial or trade secrets. The key element here is secrecy. This information must be confidential, meaning it is not widely known or easily accessible to those who typically deal with such information. It should have commercial value because of its secrecy and should be actively protected by the person who rightfully controls it through reasonable efforts. In the Agreement under the definition clause, the term 'FLIC tapes' means the full set of the respondent's proprietary software programs developed for use in oilfield data processing and log interpretation, including the software programs set out in the schedule attached to the Agreement, together with the related FLIC/VAX Handbook. Notably, however, what is not included is "any other related documentation such as, but not limited to, source code listings, program specifications, system flow charts, logic diagrams, system manuals or other documentation underlying and supporting the FLIC tapes". The reason for this exclusion is the respondent's intention that users shall have no knowledge of how FLIC tapes operate. It shows that the Agreement did not envisage supplying of information about the ideas and principles underlying the program, such as logic, algorithms or programming languages or techniques. The transaction between the respondent and the lessee cannot, therefore, be said to be a transfer of secret formulas or process behind the software.

Concerning the question of information regarding industrial, commercial or scientific experience which is also known as know-how, it is seen that it is legally unprotected, not-secret-but-undisclosed knowledge that has been attained through experience. Such experience knowledge must go beyond the pure technical progress; it is related to persons having gained the knowledge by their activities. Such experience cannot be obtained simply by using the goods and services that are produced with the knowledge. Experience-based knowledge extends beyond mere technical progress and is tied to individuals who have acquired it through their activities. No such experience was shared between the parties under the Agreement. When know-how is shared, it cannot be taken back and its use cannot be prohibited. The transfer of the use cannot be distinguished from a transfer of full ownership. However, in this case, the lessee, on termination of the Agreement, and the lease granted under it, was bound to deliver up the FLIC tapes to the respondent together with all copies of any part of the FLIC tapes held or made by the lessee. Moreover, know-how beyond software can only be the specific programming design and structure such as algorithms and not the program itself. This means that the chance of the Agreement to involve payments for the use of or the right to use information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience is also eliminated.

Matthias Valta and Stella Langner, in Reimer and Rust (eds), Klaus Vogel on Double Taxation Conventions (5th edn 2021) vol 1, Art. 12, paras 163-168 and Matthias Valta and Stella Langner, in Reimer and Rust (eds), Klaus Vogel on Double Taxation Conventions (5th edn. 2021) vol 1, art 12, para 175 ref.

Finally it has to be determined if the case falls under the last possibility: whether the payments were made to the respondent in consideration for the use of or the right to use a copyright of a literary, artistic or scientific work. The Agreement between the respondent and the lessee did not contemplate any licence to reproduce and distribute to the public software incorporating the copyrighted program, or to modify and publicly display the program. Therefore, there wasn't any transfer of rights to use the program in a manner that would, without such licence, constitute an infringement of copyright. Nor was there any transfer of the full ownership of the rights in the FLIC tapes. The rights acquired by the lessee comprised of partial rights in the copy of the program. Income from the renting out of software is not covered by Article 12 but by Article 7 of the UN Model Convention ("UN MC") and OECD Model Convention ("OECD MC"). In view of this, what follows is that no copyrights were leased out to the lessee which merely acquired a program copy of FLIC tapes for its operations. Matthias Valta and Stella Langner, in Reimer and Rust (eds), Klaus Vogel on Double Taxation Conventions (5th edn 2021) vol 1, art. 12, para 174; Geoquest Systems B.V. Gevers Deyootweg v. Director of Income Tax (2010) 327 and Engineering Analysis Centre of Excellence Private Limited v The Commissioner of Income Tax 2022 (3) SCC 321 ref.

The reliance placed by the High Court on the OECD MC and its Commentary, in order to decipher the true nature of payments received by the respondent and to understand the concept of royalties in the context of double taxation makes no material difference to the adjduciation of the case in hand. Notably, the UN MC Commentary on paragraph 3 of Article 12 includes the entire extract of the OECD MC Commentary on the question whether payments received as consideration for computer software are to be classified as royalties or not.

The majority judgment (of the present case) without definitively addressing whether the amounts received by the respondent constitute royalties, instead embarks upon a discussion which was not in contention between the parties. Thus the remark (in the majority judgment) that if the respondent was not taxed in Pakistan, it might still be subject to taxation in the Netherlands, is not a pertinent consideration for a court tasked with adjudicating a legal dispute. Once it is established that the income earned by the respondent non-resident Dutch company for leasing software in Pakistan does not qualify as royalty, delving into irrelevant factors serves no useful purpose. Furthermore, the majority asserts that the High Court's jurisdiction in this case was limited to addressing and deciding questions of law. It is worth noting that the sole point of contention between the parties revolved around whether the amounts received by the respondent constituted royalties or not, a matter which is a question of law squarely within the purview of the High Court.

The majority judgment suggests that the respondent had an alternative remedy under Article 24 of the Convention to present its case to the competent authority in its own country. It is said that if the competent authority in the respondent's country agreed, it could then take up the matter with the competent authority in Pakistan. However, this provision of the Convention neither precludes the respondent from pursuing a remedy available under the laws of Pakistan, nor does it prevent the Supreme Court from adjudicating a question coming before it in its lawful jurisdiction.

Respondent is correct in claiming that there is distinction between the use of copyright and the use of copyright product. No copyrights were leased out to the lessee which merely acquired a program copy of FLIC tapes (software programs) for its operations. Further, the transaction of lease of FLIC tapes software programs between the respondent and the lessee did not involve payments made for the use of or the right to use secret formula or process, or information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience. Income resulting from the lease of FLIC tapes amounts to business profits and cannot be treated as income arising from royalties. Therefore, Article 12 of the Convention is not applicable to this case. Judgment of the High Court did not warrant any interference.

JUDGMENT

Qazi Faez Isa, J. The High Court of Sindh at Karachi decided fourteen income tax references which had been filed by the respondent respectively under section 136(1) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 1979 and section 133(1) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('References', 'ITO 1979', 'ITO 2001' and collectively 'the Ordinances' respectively). A Divisional Bench of the High Court decided thirteen of these references though a common judgment dated 12 October 2007 and one was decided vide judgment dated 11 November 2010, which relied on its earlier judgment.

2. The respondent is a company incorporated in and having its principal place of business in the Netherlands. The respondent has no place of business in Pakistan. The respondent files its income tax returns in Pakistan under national tax number 14-11-069875-7 ('the Returns'). The Returns have different headings and under the heading Income Claimed to be Exempted and not Included in Total Income the respondent sought exemption in respect of its receipts in respect of Rental from Lease FLIC Software computer program which it stated was exempt under article 7 of the Agreement for Avoidance of Double Taxation between Pakistan and Netherlands. However, the Income Tax Officer did not accept the respondent's contention, and was of the opinion that, such income constitute royalty and is assessable under Article 12-3(a)(b) of the Tax Treaty between Pakistan and Netherlands, and called upon the respondent to explain why the same may not be taxed as royalty income @ 15%.

3. The Income Tax Officer sent notices to the respondent and in response the respondent stated that the said income was business profits, and thus exempt under Article 7 of the said tax treaty. And with regard to the contention of the Income Tax Officer that the income (exemption whereof was claimed) were royalties, which were not exempted under Article 12 of the treaty, the respondent straight away proceeded to explain what constitutes royalties without first explaining the nature of the receipts, what they were for, the agreement they were paid under and the particular item of its schedule and what it entailed:

'3. The term 'Royalty' as defined in Article 12 of the Tax treaty is as follows:

Payment of any kind received as consideration for the use of, or the right to use:

i. a patent, trademark or tradename, secret formula or process design or model, or information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience;

ii. Industrial, commercial or scientific equipment, cinematograph films and tapes for television and broadcasting;'

'From the above extract, it is clear that the rentals paid for tapes and software by SSI are neither in the nature of patent, trademark, or tradename, secret process or formula, design or model, nor any equipment, films and tapes for television and broadcasting. The Article includes only tapes for television and broadcasting as Royalty. Had the intention been otherwise, the Article would have referred to all sorts of films or tapes. Consequently, the rentals do not come within the ambit of the above definition of "Royalties".'

It is also important to note that software cannot be classified as goods. A similar issue came up for consideration before the Income Tax Appellate Tribunal (ITAT) in a case where the question was whether the software payments are subject to tax withholding under section 50(4) of the repealed 1979 Ordinance applicable on 'supply of goods'. The ITAT after considering the various definition of 'computer software' categorically held that by any definition or connotation of the term, it cannot be treated as "Goods".'

5. Classification of Software payments

5.1 With regard to consideration for computer software, whether the payments are to be classified as 'Royalties' or 'Business Income' or 'Capital Gains' guidelines has to be taken from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) commentary on Article 12 of the Tax treaties, as amended in 2000 to refine the principles by which the classification issues of computer software transaction can be resolved.

5.2 We would inform you that the character of payments involving the transfer of computer software mainly depends on the nature of rights the transferee acquires under the particular arrangement regarding the use and exploitation of the programme. Since the software is not in the nature of goods as such the rights in computer programme are in the nature of intellectual property, which are normally protected in most of the countries under copyright laws.

5.3 Transfer of rights in relation to software occur in many different ways ranging from outright alienation of the entire rights in the copyright in a programme to the usage of a product which is subject to restrictions on the use to which it is put. A distinction should, however, be borne in mind between the copyright in the programme and software incorporating a copy of the copyright programme.

The transferee's rights normally, consist of partial or complete rights in:

a) The underlying copyright; or

b) copy of the programme (programme copy), whether or not such a copy is embodied in a tangible medium or provided electronically.'

'6. The payments made for the acquisition of partial rights in (a) above can be treated as Royalty, subject to the condition that the programme should be used in a manner that would, without such authorisation, constitute an infringement of copyright. The examples of such arrangement include:

license to reproduce and distribute to the public, software incorporating the copyrighted programme; or modification and public display of programme.

In these kind of cases, it is apparent that the consideration would be for the right to use the copyright in the programme, which otherwise would be commercial exploitation i.e. under the copyright laws.'

'7. In other types of transactions covered in (b) above, the rights acquired in relation to the copyright are limited to the extent of enabling the user to operate the programme. This commonly happens in acquisition of a programme copy where the transferee is granted limited right to reproduce the programme e.g. to copy the programme on user's computer hard drive or for archival purpose. Such act is, of course, essential in utilizing the programme, therefore, rights in relation to the act of copying merely for enabling the operation of the programme by the user would not give rise to 'Royalty'. In such cases, the consideration received will retain the character of 'Business Income'.

We submit that all that the company had granted to SSI was the use of its software. Under the Agreement, SSI is not entitled to amend or to make any changes. The income from such activities cannot be treated as Royalty as payment of royalty would have entitled SSI to make amendments/changes in the software according to its specific circumstances. SSI was not given the back-up of the process or the formula used in these software. It was only entitled to apply the same in its business and to obtain the results computed on the basis of inbuilt formula. It is further submitted that had the software been given to SSI on royalty basis, then SSI would also have gained the back-up information and a right to make amendments or exploit the software i.e. to sub-let it to third parties.'

4. The Income Tax Officer did not accept the aforesaid contention/ explanation of the respondent and maintained that the receipts by the respondent were royalties under paragraph 3(a) and (b) of Article 12 of the treaty between the two countries. Therefore, such receipts were liable to be taxed under paragraph 2(a) and/or (b) of Article 12 at the rate of fifteen percent, and consequently, assessment orders were issued by the Income Tax Officer who called upon the respondent to pay income tax thereon.

5. The respondent challenged the assessment orders by filing appeals before the Commissioner of Income Tax (Appeals), but these appeals were dismissed and the assessment orders issued by the Income Tax Officer were maintained. The respondent then assailed the assessment orders and the Commissioner's appellate orders before the Income Tax Appellate Tribunal ('the Tribunal'), but without success. The Tribunal determined that the receipts of payments by the respondents constituted royalties in terms of paragraph 3(a) and (b) of Article 12 of the treaty and liable to income tax at the rate of fifteen percent. The respondent then assailed the assessment orders, the appellate orders and the judgments of the Tribunal before the High Court by filing references, respectively under section 136(1) of ITO 1979 and section 133(1) of ITO 2001.

6. Two questions were formulated for consideration by the High Court. Firstly, whether the said payment receipts were business profits under Article 7 of the treaty and, secondly, whether the same constituted income from royalties under Article 12 of the treaty, and as such were not business profits under Article 7. The High Court decided the questions in favour of the respondent, and held that the amounts received by the respondent did not constitute royalties. The judgments of the High Court were assailed before this Court under Article 185(3) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ('the Constitution') and leave was granted.

7. Through this common judgment fourteen appeals, arising from the said fourteen cases, particulars whereof are as under, are being decided:

8. The 'Convention Between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income' ('the Convention') commences by stating that:

'The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, desiring to conclude a convention for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income, have agreed as follows.'

Article 12, which the appellant says is applicable and which the respondent says is not, is reproduced:

'ARTICLE 12

ROYALTIES

1. Royalties arising in one of the States and paid to a resident of the other State may be taxed in that other State.

2. However, such royalties may also be taxed in the State in which they arise and according to the laws of that State, but if the recipient is the beneficial owner of the royalties the tax so charged shall not exceed:

(a) 15 per cent of the gross amount of the payments referred to in paragraph 3(a);
(b) 15 per cent of the gross amount of the payments referred to in paragraph 3(b);
(c) 5 per cent of the gross amount of the payments referred to in paragraph 3(c).
3. The term "royalties" as used in this Article means payments of any kind received as a consideration for the use of, or the right to use:
(a) a patent, trademark or tradename, secret formula or process, design or model, or information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience;
(b) industrial, commercial or scientific equipment, cinematograph films and tapes for television and broadcasting;
(c) a copyright of a literary, artistic or scientific work, but excluding cinematograph films and tapes for television or broadcasting.
4. The provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 shall not apply if the beneficial owner of the royalties, being a resident of one of the States, carries on business in the other State in which the royalties arise, through a permanent establishment situated therein, or performs in that other State independent personal services from a fixed base situated therein, and the right or property in respect of which the royalties are paid is effectively connected with such permanent establishment or fixed base. In such case the provisions of Article 7 or Article 14, as the case may be, shall apply.
5. Royalties shall be deemed to arise in one of the States when the payer is that State itself, a political subdivision, a local authority or a resident of that State. Where, however, the person paying the royalties, whether he is a resident of one of the States or not, has in one of the States a permanent establishment or a fixed base in connection with which the contract under which the royalties are paid was concluded, and such royalties are borne by such permanent establishment or fixed base, then such royalties shall be deemed to arise in the State in which the permanent establishment or fixed base is situated.
6. Where, by reason of a special relationship between the payer and the beneficial owner or between both of them and some other person, the amount of the royalties, having regard to the use, right or information for which they are paid, exceeds the amount which would have been agreed upon by the payer and the beneficial owner in the absence of such relationship, the provisions of this Article shall apply only to the last-mentioned amount. In such case, the excess part of the payments shall remain taxable according to the laws of each State, due regard being had to the other provisions of this Convention.'
9. Section 163 of ITO 1979 (section 107 of ITO 2001) attends to agreements for the avoidance of double taxation and prevention of fiscal evasion which the Government of Pakistan may enter with other countries. The Convention between the Netherlands and Pakistan was duly notified in Pakistan.[1] The appellant does not oppose the applicability of the Convention nor denies that the respondent has no permanent establishment in the territory of Pakistan. The appellant also does not dispute that the Convention excludes the respondent's business profits under Article 7 of the Convention. The respondent contends that the payments received by it from Schlumberger Seaco Inc. ('SSI') were in respect of permitting temporary use of FLIC tapes. The dispute is limited to whether the amounts received by the respondent, which the respondent claims to be exempt, constitute royalties as defined in paragraph 3 of Article 12 of the Convention.
10. The respondent and SSI had entered into an 'Agreement for Lease of FLIC Tapes' dated 1 February 1986 and a 'Software Rental Agreement' dated 1 January 1995 (respectively 'the 1986 Agreement', 'the 1995 Agreement' and collectively 'the Agreements'). In the 1986 Agreement SSI is described as the lessee and in the 1995 Agreement it is described as the customer. The Returns filed by the respondent claimed that the said receipts were business profits and exempt from payment of income tax in Pakistan under Article 7 of the Convention. However, the appellant's case was that the receipts were royalties under Article 12 of the Convention and the respondent was liable to pay income tax thereon at the rate of fifteen percent.
11. The learned Judges of the High Court referred to, and relied upon, the 'Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development Model Convention' ('OECD MC'),[2] its Article 12 and its interpretation by 'Klaus Vogel on Double Taxation Conventions.'[3] However, Article 12 of the Convention was not based on the OECD

MC but on the 'United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries' ('UN MC'). Paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of Article 12 of the UN MC are reproduced hereunder:

'United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries 2017 Update
Article 12 ROYALTIES

1. Royalties arising in a Contracting State and paid to a resident of the other Contracting State may be taxed in that other State.

2. However, such royalties may also be taxed in the Contracting State in which they arise and according to the laws of that State, but if the beneficial owner of the royalties is a resident of the other Contracting State, the tax so charged shall not exceed ____ per cent (the percentage is to be established through bilateral negotiations) of the gross amount of the royalties. The competent authorities of the Contracting States shall by mutual agreement settle the mode of application of this limitation.

3. The term "royalties" as used in this Article means payments of any kind received as a consideration for the use of, or the right to use, any copyright of literary, artistic or scientific work including cinematograph films, or films or tapes used for radio or television broadcasting, any patent, trademark, design or model, plan, secret formula or process, or for the use of, or the right to use, industrial, commercial or scientific equipment or for information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience.'

Therefore, if the High Court had to make a comparison it should have compared Article 12 of the Convention with Article 12 of the UN MC, and its interpretation by Klaus Vogel on Double Taxation Conventions, and not with Article 12 of the OECD MC.

12. The impugned Judgments of the High Court state - 'In the light of the above extracts it is clear that OECD which is the authority which has drafted the Double Taxation Agreements has in respect of Software Transactions categorized....'[4] However, Article 12 of the Convention, as can be seen from the reproduced text (above), adheres to the UN MC, and not to the OECD MC. The High Court therefore had incorrectly assumed the applicability of OECD MC. Not only did the learned Judges of the High Court err in considering the OECD MC and commenting thereon but they also did not consider the UN MC and its commentary.

13. The United Nations explained the scope of Article 12 of the UN MC in the Commentary issued by it which states that Article 12 of the UN MC makes an important departure from Article 12 of the OECD MC because royalties, under the UN MC, may be taxable in the source country as well as in the resident country. Article 12 of the OECD MC does not permit this. Relevant extract from the Commentary on Article 12 of the UN MC is reproduced hereunder:[5]

'B. COMMENTARY ON THE PARAGRAPHS OF ARTICLE 12

Paragraphs 1 and 2

4. Paragraph 1 omits the word "only" found in the corresponding provision of the OECD Model Convention, which provides that "royalties arising in a Contracting State and beneficially owned by a resident of the other Contracting State shall be taxable only in that other State". Paragraph 2 is an addition flowing logically from the premise underlying paragraph 1, which is that royalties may be taxable in the source country as well as the residence country. By providing for taxing rights in respect of royalties to be shared between the State of residence and the State of source, the United Nations Model Convention departs from the principle of exclusive residence State's right to tax provided in the OECD Model Convention. In this context, it should be noted that several member States of OECD have recorded reservations to the exclusive residence State taxation of royalties provided by Article 12 of the OECD Model Convention.'

14. We have examined the files of the High Court and the pleadings of the respondent (who was the applicant before the High Court). The respondent had filed the Commentary on Article 12 of the OECD MC, which was not applicable. The respondent also did not refer to the UN MC, on which the Convention was based. The statement of facts submitted by the respondent before the High Court cursorily rebutted the appellant's contention that, Article 12 of the Convention was applicable, and did so unconvincingly.

15. Klaus Vogel on Double Taxation Conventions discusses Article 12 of both model conventions. The OECD MC is referred to as 'No Source State Taxation' and the UN MC is referred to as 'Source State Taxation' and that OECD MC 'limits taxation to the beneficial owner's residence, thus excluding source taxation in the State of the payer.' With regard to the Article 12 of the UN MC it states:

'2. UN MC: Source State Taxation

Article 12 UN MC consists of six paragraphs. Paragraph 1 assigns the residence State of the beneficial owner a non-exclusive taxing right. Paragraph 2 is unique and allows for limited source State taxation. Paragraph 3 contains a slightly extended definition of royalties. Paragraph 4 contains the PE [Permanent Establishment] proviso. Paragraph 5, also unique to the UN MC, includes source rules as a necessary addition to paragraph 2. The source State is the residence State of the payer or, perhaps, PE State in which the payment obligation was incurred or borne. Paragraph 6 adds the special arm's length clause for royalties.

In a functional comparison of the UN MC to the OECD MC, paragraph 1 relates to paragraph 1 (the beneficial owner's residence State taxation), paragraph 3 UN MC relates to paragraph 2 OECD MC (definition), paragraph 4 UN MC relates to paragraph 3 OECD MC (the PE proviso) and paragraph 6 UN MC relates to paragraph 4 OECD MC (arm's length rule). Paragraphs 2 and 5 UN MC is unique to the UN MC, as they deal with the source State taxation that is not allowed under the OECD MC.'[6]

And, that the 'Legal Consequence' of Article 12 of the UN MC would be that:

'The royalty payment is subject to source taxation according to domestic law.'[7]

However, if taxed under the UN MC then the country of residence of the supplier must adjust the tax liability accordingly:

'b. UN MC: Shared Taxation

The UN MC provides for taxation by the State of Residence of the payee. The taxation right is not exclusive and is thus open for additional taxation in the source State (payer's residence) as provided for in Article 12(2) and (5) UN MC. However, the State of Residence is obliged to credit the source tax according to Article 23 UN MC.'[8]

16. Therefore, it would not really matter to the respondent if under Article 12 of the Convention it had to pay income tax at the rate of fifteen percent in Pakistan because the respondent could with the tax authority of the Netherlands claim adjustment of the amount paid in Pakistan. The Convention recognized that an entity resident in the Netherlands may be taxed in Pakistan under Article 12, and if it is taxed then the Netherlands will allow deduction from the Netherlands tax so computed. In other words the respondent would not be double taxed. In this regard the Convention specifically stipulates 'Elimination of Double Taxation' in its Article 22 and paragraph 3 of Article 23, respectively reproduced hereunder:

'Elimination of Double Taxation

Article 22

Elimination of Double Taxation

1. The Netherlands, when imposing tax on its residents, may include in the basis upon which such taxes are imposed the items of income which, according to the provisions of this Convention, may be taxed in Pakistan.

2. However, where a resident of Netherlands derives items of income which according to Article 6, Article 7, paragraph 5 of Article 10, paragraph 5 of Article 11, paragraph 4 of Article 12, paragraphs 1, 2 and 5 of Article 13, Article 14, paragraph 1 of Article 15, Article 16 and Article 19 of this Convention may be taxed in Pakistan and are included in the basis referred to in paragraph 1, the Netherlands shall exempt such items by allowing a reduction of its tax. This reduction shall be computed in conformity with the provisions of Netherlands law for the avoidance of double taxation. For that purpose the said items of income shall be deemed to be included in the total amount of the items of income which are exempt from Netherlands tax under those provisions.

3. Further, the Netherlands shall allow a deduction from the Netherlands tax so computed for the items of income which according to paragraph 2 of Article 10, paragraph 2 of Article 11, paragraph 2 of Article 12, Article 17 and paragraph 2 of Article 18 of this Convention may be taxed in Pakistan to the extent that these items are included in the basis referred to in paragraph 1. The amount of this deduction shall be equal to the tax paid in Pakistan on these items of income, but shall not exceed the amount of the reduction which would be allowed if the items of income so included were the sole items of income which are exempt from Netherlands tax under the provisions of Netherlands law for the avoidance of double taxation.

4. Where, by reason of special incentive measures designed to promote economic development in Pakistan, the Pakistan tax actually levied on interest arising in Pakistan, which may be taxed in Pakistan according to sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) of paragraph 2 of Article 11 or on royalties arising in Pakistan, which may be taxed in Pakistan according to sub-paragraph (a) of paragraph 2 of Article 12, is lower than the tax Pakistan may levy according to those provisions, then, for the purposes of paragraph 3, the tax paid in Pakistan on these items of income shall be deemed to be:

(a) with respect to interest to which sub-paragraph (a) of paragraph 2 of Article 11 applies: an amount equal to the amount of tax which Pakistan actually has levied thereon increased by twice the difference between this amount and 10 per cent of the gross amount of such interest;

(b) with respect to interest to which subparagraph (b) of paragraph 2 of Article 11 applies or royalties to which sub-paragraph (a) of paragraph 2 of Article 12 applies: 15 per cent of the gross amount of such interest or royalties.

5. In the case of Pakistan, subject to the provision of the laws of Pakistan regarding the allowance of a credit against Pakistan tax (which shall not affect the general principle hereof), the amount of Netherlands tax payable, under the laws of the Netherlands and in accordance with the provisions of this Convention, whether directly or by deduction, by a resident of Pakistan, in respect of income which is subject to tax both in Pakistan and in the Netherlands, shall, except in the case referred to in paragraph 6 of Article 13, be allowed as a credit against the Pakistan tax payable in respect of such income but in an amount not exceeding that proportion of Pakistan tax which such income bears to the entire income chargeable to Pakistan tax.

6. Where a resident of one of the States derives gains which may be taxed in the other State in accordance with paragraph 6 of Article 13, that other State shall allow a deduction from its tax on such gains to an amount equal to the tax levied in the first-mentioned State on the said gains.'

'Special Provisions

Article 23

3. Except where the provisions of paragraph 1 of Article 9, paragraph 7 of Article 11, or paragraph 6 of Article 12, apply, interest, royalties and other disbursements paid by an enterprise of one of the States to a resident of the other State shall, for the purpose of determining the taxable profits of such enterprise, be deductible under the same conditions as if they had been paid to a resident of the first-mentioned State.'

17. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article 27 of the Convention stipulate that regulations may by mutual agreement be made with regard to the manner in which royalties are taxed, which are reproduced hereunder:

'Article 27

Regulations

1. The competent authorities of the States shall by mutual agreement settle the mode of application of paragraph 2 of Article 10, of paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article 11 and paragraph 2 of Article 12.

2. The competent authorities of each of the States, in accordance with the practices of that State, may prescribe regulations necessary to carry out the other provisions of this Convention.'

18. The matter primarily affected the interest of the two contracting countries (the Netherlands and Pakistan) and whether Pakistan was entitled to tax the respondent on royalties earned by the respondent in Pakistan, under Article 12 of the Convention at the rate of fifteen percent. Therefore, if the respondent was not taxed in Pakistan it may still be taxed in the Netherlands.

19. The learned Judges of the High Court also did not note that the respondent had an alternative remedy under Article 24 of the Convention, which it did not avail. Article 24 is reproduced hereunder:

'ARTICLE 24

MUTUAL AGREEMENT PROCEDURE

1. Where a person considers that the actions of one or both of the States result or will result for him in taxation not in accordance with the provisions of this Convention, he may, irrespective of the remedies provided by the domestic law of those States, present his case to the competent authority of the State of which he is a resident or, if his case comes under paragraph 1 of Article 23, to that of the State of which he is a national. The case must be presented within three years from the first notification of the action resulting in taxation not in accordance with the provisions of the Convention.

2. The competent authority shall endeavour, if the objection appears to it to be justified and if it is not itself able to arrive at a satisfactory solution, to resolve the case by mutual agreement with the competent authority of the other State, with a view to the avoidance of taxation which is not in accordance with the Convention. Any agreement reached shall be implemented notwithstanding any time limits in the domestic law of the States.

3. The competent authorities of the States shall endeavour to resolve by mutual agreement any difficulties or doubts arising as to the interpretation or application of the Convention. They may also consult together for the elimination of double taxation in cases not provided for in the Convention.

4. The competent authorities of the States may communicate with each other directly for the purpose of reaching an agreement in the sense of the preceding paragraphs.'

Article 24 of the Convention enabled the respondent to present its 'case to the competent authority' of its own country, the Netherlands, which if it agreed with the respondent, could take up the matter with the competent authority of Pakistan. This the respondent could have done within three years, but the respondent did not present its case within three years, or at all. If the respondent had presented its case to the competent authority of the Netherlands and if such competent authority was of the opinion that the respondent's objection to taxation in Pakistan was justified it would have taken up the matter with the competent authority in Pakistan. The matter could also have been resolved between the countries by 'mutual agreement'. It is possible that the respondent did not submit its case to the competent authority of the Netherlands because it may not have agreed with the respondent's contention, and then the respondent may not have been able to claim exemption.

20. If a treaty or convention provides for a dispute resolution mechanism it is, always, preferable to avail of it, and amicably resolve matters. If this had been done in these cases it would have helped the High Court, and this Court too, to understand the point of view of the competent authority of the Netherlands, and prevent the possible undermining of bilateral relations on account of a misunderstanding. This would be preferable as the exemption claimed in respect of the receipts had not been interpreted, resolved or decided earlier.

21. The respondent instead availed of the remedies provided under the Ordinances. However, three findings of fact were concurrently recorded against the respondent, respectively by the Income Tax Officer, the Commissioner (Appeals) and the Tribunal. Thereafter, the respondent approached the High Court under section 136(1) of ITO 1979 and section 136(1) of ITO 2001, the scope whereunder is restricted to the determination of 'any question of law'. However, it had to be first factually ascertained what the receipts were for and whether the same constituted royalties as defined in paragraph 3 of Article 12 of the Convention. Thereafter, the determination of any question of law may have arisen. The High Court (under the Ordinances) is to decide questions of law, and must not attend to, let alone decide, factual disputes.

22. Admittedly, the respondent had earned the receipts in Pakistan. This Court in the case of A. P. Moller v. Commissioner of Income Tax[9] had approved of the interpretation by the High Court[10] of another double taxation convention as under:

'However, if two reasonable interpretations of Article 8(3) are possible, or if there is any doubt or ambiguity in its interpretation (especially in relation to the expression "profits derived from sources within the other Contracting State") that should be resolved in favour of Pakistan having the right to tax... It is a recognized interpretation that the "source State" is the State in which payment is made, and generally such State is regarded as entitled to tax such payments. Pakistan is clearly the "source State" in the facts and circumstances of the present case since payments are made here by the Pakistani buyers. Thus, the amounts received or receivable in Pakistan by the carriers are "profits derived from sources within" Pakistan and hence can be reasonably regarded as within the taxing right of this country as contemplated by Article 8(3).'

23. Since the matter was not properly enunciated in the impugned judgments by the High Court we have had to consider the submissions and pleadings of the respondent. In response to the notices issued by the Income Tax Officer the respondent stated that the payment receipts were 'rentals paid for tapes by SSI' and were 'neither in the nature of a patent, trademark or tradename, secret formula or process, design or model, nor any equipment, films and tapes for television and broadcasting.' However, the full definition of royalties in paragraph 3(a) of Article 12 of the Convention included payments for 'information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience', which the respondent did not negate.

24. The respondent also did not disclose under which of the two Agreements it had received payments. It also did not particularize the nature of the receipts nor stipulate the components/services which it had provided to SSI, and that the said receipts were not royalties under Article 12 of the Convention. When the benefit of an exemption is sought the person claiming it must clearly set out its case. The respondent had to establish that the receipts were not royalties and thus not liable to income tax under paragraph 2 of Article 12 of the Convention. If the respondent had initially made out a case for exemption then the taxing authority would have examined the documents/proof tendered to it and considered whether the exemption was correctly claimed. Instead, the High Court took it upon itself to determine the nature of the said receipts, and did so without having the benefit of requisite documents, material and information.

25. Only in one appeal, Civil Appeal No. 94/2008 pertaining to assessment years 1987-1988 and 1989-1990, the 1986 Agreement may have been relevant. The remaining thirteen appeals are in respect of assessment years 1998 and later years, which was long after the expiry of the 1986 Agreement, the duration of which was till 31 January 1990.

26. The High Court also did not adequately comprehend the facts. The FLIC tapes were mentioned in the 1986 Agreement. However, the impugned judgments refer to the 1995 Agreement which did not mention FLIC tapes. The High Court had proceeded on the basis of an incorrect premise. The 1986 Agreement's clause 3 stated that the duration of the 1986 Agreement was for four years, that is, till 31 January 1990. Under the 1986 Agreement the respondent would provide to the lessee/SSI software programs 'for use in oilfield data processing and log interpretation, including the software programs set out in Schedule I, together with the related FLIC/VAX Handbook.' Schedule I of the 1986 Agreement is a 'List of Oil Well Interpretation Program Products' spread over nine pages, and its Schedule 2 stipulates the 'Monthly Charge' for their use - 'Price List for FLIC Tapes Lease by Module.' The contents of the 1986 Agreement and the listed programs are technical and not self-evident, yet the High Court interpreted the same, while purportedly deciding questions of law. In our opinion the High Court should not have ventured into an area requiring specialized knowledge, which the learned Judges did not possess. In any event the respondent had not explained the technically complex nature of the Agreements before any forum, nor was the same explained to us. The High Court could not have undertaken a factual determination while exercising powers under section 136(1) of the ITO 1979 and section 133(1) of the ITO 2001 whereunder the High Court could only determine legal questions. Incidentally, there was no material before the High Court, nor was any placed even before this Court, which may have persuaded one to hold that the said receipts were exempt under Article 12 of the Convention.

27. The 1995 Agreement was signed on 1 January 1995, but (unlike the 1986 Agreement) does not stipulate its duration. It also does not mention the 1986 Agreement nor the FLIC tapes. Unlike the 1986 Agreement it has only one schedule, Schedule A, which does not have the same components as those mentioned in the two schedules to the 1986 Agreement. The respondent never explained the nature of the Agreements. The 1986 Agreement and its two Schedules and the 1995 Agreement and its Schedule A, were technical in nature and required expert assistance to comprehend. The Income Tax Officer was of the opinion that payments received by the respondent were royalties. Therefore, to successfully controvert this it was incumbent upon the respondent to explain the nature of the receipts and what were they for. The respondent had every opportunity to offer the requisite information and explanation to the Income Tax Officer, to the Commissioner (Appeals) and then to the Tribunal, but it did not do so; these three forums were legally competent to determine facts. Instead, without establishing the necessary foundation of facts, the respondent proceeded to the High Court on untenable questions of law. It was unwarranted for the High Court to have delved into the nature of the receipts, and that too without the benefit of requisite facts and/or by misconstruing facts and by misapplying the OECD MC, its Commentary and interpretation, instead of applying the UN MC, its Commentary and interpretation.

28. The tax authorities had relied on the Convention and its Article 12, and had not accepted the respondent's contention that the said receipts were business profits. Therefore, the respondent should have explained the nature of the receipts and that they were not royalties in terms of Article 12 of the Convention. The respondent did not clearly set out its case and did not provide the following information, documents and facts or provided misleading information:

(1) The respondent did not explain what each Agreement dealt with, which was necessary in view of their technical nature and as the language used therein was not self-evident, particularly the terms mentioned in the schedules thereto;

(2) The respondent did not state that the 1986 Agreement, the duration of which was for four years, still subsisted, yet referred to FLIC tapes which were only mentioned therein (FLIC tapes were not mentioned in the 1995 Agreement);

(3) The respondent did not itemize the nature of the receipts and then on the basis thereof claim that they did not constitute royalties (under Article 12 of the Convention) and that the same constituted business profits (under Article 7 of the Convention);

(4) The respondent in its reply to the notices sent by the Income Tax Officer did not deny certain components of royalties (mentioned in paragraph 3 of Article 12 of the Convention);

(5) The respondent did not specifically state under which Agreement it had received payment, and for what; and

(6) The respondent had relied upon Article 12 of the OECD MC, its Commentary and textbook explanation/interpretation thereof, and did so despite the fact that the Convention's Article 12 had applied Article 12 of the UN MC, and not Article 12 of the OECD MC.

There were also the following drawbacks and legal shortcomings in the respondent's case:

(1) The respondent did not present its case to the competent authority of its country (the Netherlands) under Article 24 of the Convention, and thus its point of view did not come forth and could not be considered;

(2) If the respondent had presented its case (as stated above) and if the competent authority of the Netherlands had supported the respondent's contention there was the possibility of the two countries resolving the matter and/or making regulation/s with regard thereto in terms of the Convention;

(3) That by foregoing (1) and (2) (above) a very technical matter came before the High Court, which the High Court proceeded to determine without having the requisite technical expertise and without being provided it; and

(4) The respondent had invoked the jurisdiction of the High Court under section 136(1) of the ITO 1979 and section 133(1) of the ITO 2001 which was restricted to questions of law, however, factual determination of whether the receipts constituted royalties was considered despite three forums concurrently deciding the same against the respondent.

29. The High Court erred with regard to the following:

(1) The High Court overlooked the fact that the High Court's jurisdiction under section 136(1) of the ITO 1979 and section 133(1) of the ITO 2001 was limited to considering and deciding questions of law, however, the instant cases were filed to overturn the factual determination made by three qualified forums which had determined that the receipts were not royalties in terms of Article 12 of the Convention;

(2) The High Court did not appreciate, as probably it was not explained to by the respondent, that there was no mention of FLIC tapes in the 1995 Agreement, and presumed that the receipts were payment for temporary use of FLIC tapes, which were only mentioned in the 1986 Agreement;

(3) The High Court proceeded on an incorrect assumption that Article 12 of the Convention was based on Article 12 of the OECD MC, whereas in fact it was based on Article 12 of the UN MC, whereunder royalties earned in Pakistan were taxable;

(4) The High Court did not consider the matter and the Convention holistically, including comprehensively considering Articles 7 and 12 thereof, and overlooked its Articles 22, 23 and 24;

(5) The High Court without setting out the nature of the receipts, let alone doing so in detail, assumed that they did not constitute royalties in terms of Article 12 of the Convention, and did so without analogizing the receipts against the definition of royalties in paragraph 3(a) and (b) of Article 12 of the Convention;

(6) The High Court failed to appreciate that the Convention was a complete document, each term whereof had to be considered, and instead proceeded to interpret it in the light of precedents and textbook explanations of general terms (which were not so used in the Convention), and also did so without appreciating that the Convention's Article 12 was based on Article 12 of the UN MC and not on Article 12 of the OECD MC;

(7) The High Court also (apparently) failed to appreciate that if the respondent was taxed in Pakistan under paragraph 2 of Article 12 of the Convention its tax liability to such extent would have been accordingly adjusted in the Netherlands, and the respondent would not have been double taxed;

(8) The High Court appears not to have considered that the receipts that were taxed were the respondent's earnings in Pakistan, and to have kept this under consideration when considering the applicability of Article 12 of the Convention; and

(9) The High Court did not abide by the recognized principle of interpretation that the State in which payment is made (under the Convention) is generally entitled to tax such payment, as was reiterated in the case of A. P. Moller v. Commissioner of Income Tax.[11]

30. Therefore, the impugned Judgments of the High Court in all fourteen appeals are not sustainable nor are the reasons given by the High Court to set aside the assessment orders, the appellate orders and the Tribunal's judgments, which are accordingly restored. Consequently, these appeals are allowed by setting aside the impugned Judgments of the High Court with costs throughout.

Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---I have read the judgment authored by my learned brother Qazi Faez Isa, J agreed to by the Hon'ble Chief Justice. However, with respect, I am unable to agree with the reasoning as well as the result arrived at by my learned brother. The question before us, as also stated in the leave granting order, is whether the income derived by the respondent non-resident Dutch company for the lease of certain software in Pakistan constitutes "royalties" or not. This precise question has also been aptly articulated in the majority judgment, which states: "The dispute is limited to whether the amounts received by the respondent, which the respondent claims to be exempt, constitute royalties as defined in paragraph 3 of Article 12 of the Convention." Once the majority judgment itself narrows down the dispute which is very much a question of law, to say that the High Court should not have addressed this question is perplexing. Then, without deciding this question, it is later reasoned in the majority judgment, "it would not really matter to the respondent if under Article 12 of the Convention it had to pay income tax at the rate of fifteen percent in Pakistan because the respondent could with the tax authority of the Netherlands claim adjustment of the amount paid in Pakistan" and "if the respondent was not taxed in Pakistan it may still be taxed in the Netherlands." I respectfully disagree from this view, as our duty is to decide the question based on law, not extraneous and utilitarian considerations in disregard of the law. Furthermore, the majority judgment holds, "the full definition of royalties in paragraph 3 (a) of Article 12 of the Convention included payments for 'information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience', which the respondent did not negate." On this also, I disagree and hold for the reasons given below that income derived by the respondent non-resident Dutch company does not fall in this category of payments either. And, thus, I set down my dissenting opinion.

2. The respondent, a company incorporated in the Netherlands and thus a non-resident for Pakistan income tax purposes, entered into an agreement to lease certain software programs called "FLIC tapes" developed by it for use in oilfield data processing and log interpretation to another company, in the name and style of Schlumberger Seaco Inc., the lessee, having a place of business in Pakistan. The rentals received in lieu of the lease of FLIC tapes (software programs) were claimed to be exempt from tax in Pakistan by the respondent under Article 7 of the 'Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income' ("Convention") in the tax returns filed for consecutive assessment years from 1987 to 2003. However, the tax department imposed tax on the income arising from the lease of FLIC tapes (software programs) by holding that said payments were in the nature of royalty receipts and thus liable to be taxed under Article 12(3)(a) and (b) of the Convention. The appeals filed by the respondent before the Commissioner Income Tax (Appeals) and the Income Tax Appellate Tribunal remained unsuccessful. However, the High Court held that the payments received by the respondent for leasing FLIC tapes (software programs) did not fall within the definition of income arising from royalties.

3. The respondent is a tax resident of the Netherlands and, therefore, taxation in the matter is governed under the Convention which by virtue of section 107(2) of the Income Tax Ordinance 2001 ("Ordinance") enjoys overriding effect.[12] Article 7 of the Convention provides that the business profits of an enterprise of one of the states shall be taxable in the other state only if the enterprise maintains a permanent establishment in the latter state and only to the extent that the profits are attributable to the permanent establishment. Article 12 of the Convention permits that royalties arising in one of the states and paid to a resident of the other state may be taxed up to a specified percentage in the former state. The respondent admittedly did not have a permanent establishment in Pakistan. The entire case, thus, revolves around the nature of the income arising from the lease of FLIC tapes (software programs): is it to be treated as income arising from royalties or income arising from business profits? If the answer to the question is found in the first part of the question i.e., the rentals for the lease of FLIC tapes are treated as income arising from royalties, the respondent's income may be subjected to tax up to a specified percentage as per income tax law of Pakistan. However, in case the second part of the question supplies the answer i.e., the income arising from the lease of FLIC tapes is treated as income arising from business profits, the respondent's income would not be amenable to the domestic income tax regime of Pakistan for the reason that it did not have a permanent establishment in the country.

4. The term "royalties" is defined in paragraph 3 of Article 12 of the Convention as follows:

3. The term "royalties" as used in this Article means payments of any kind received as a consideration for the use of, or the right to use:

a) a patent, trademark or tradename, secret formula or process, design or model, or information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience;

b) industrial, commercial or scientific equipment, cinematograph films and tapes for television and broadcasting;

c) a copyright of a literary, artistic or scientific work, but excluding cinematograph films and tapes for television or broadcasting.

It could be said that royalties, as per the Convention, are payments for the use of or the right to use certain types of property (intellectual property or equipment) or information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience. The income under contention in this case resulted from the rentals received in lieu of the lease of some software programs. The tax department has contended before us that the use of software by the lessee is the use of copyright and the income received by the respondent as consideration for such use is a royalty liable to be taxed under Article 12 of the Convention. The argument of the learned counsel for the respondent is that there is a distinction between the use of copyright and the use of copyright product and, therefore, Article 12 of the Convention is not applicable in the present case.

5. This Court in the recent case of Snamprogetti Engineering B. V. v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue[13] underscored the unique nature of international tax treaties, their distinct interpretation framework, and the importance of achieving equitable outcomes in cross-border taxation through these treaties. It has been held that international tax treaties or conventions or agreements being of a unique nature need to be looked at through a different interpretive lens as compared to the one employed while interpreting domestic legislation. These agreements being international treaties are governed by the rules of interpretation of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. Tax treaties differ from domestic tax law in language, application, and purpose. Tax treaties are relieving in nature and seek to avoid double taxation, while domestic tax law imposes tax in specific circumstances. Tax treaties require a broad purposive interpretation, and their interpretation may be more liberal than domestic law. Treaty interpretation is a separate subject from statutory interpretation, and tax treaties should be interpreted independently from domestic law. The role of a state (being party to such a bilateral agreement) is more of implementing the terms of such agreement rather than that of interpreting the same and that too in a unilateral manner. As the primary purpose of tax treaties is to avoid and relieve double taxation through equitable and acceptable distribution of tax claims between the countries, it is important that the provisions of these treaties are interpreted in a common and workable manner, taking into account international tax language, legal decisions of other countries, model treaties[14], along with their commentaries, developed by the Organisation for Economic Co operation and Development ("OECD")[15] and the United Nations ("UN")[16], and scholarly academic works where appropriate.

6. Coming back to the solitary question in hand i.e., whether the payments received by the respondent for leasing FLIC tapes (software programs) fall within the definition of income arising from royalities. It is noted that the character of payments received in transactions involving the transfer of computer software depends on the nature of the rights that the transferee acquires under the particular arrangement regarding the use and exploitation of the program. For a payment to constitute royalty under the Convention, it must fall at least in one of the three categories provided in Article 12(3) of the Convention. One can start by narrowing down the possibilities envisaged in Article 12(3) of the Convention. The agreement for the use of FLIC tapes (software programs) concluded between the respondent and the lessee on 1 February 1986 ("Agreement")[17] did not involve payments made for the use of or the right to use any patent, trademark or tradename, design or model, or cinematograph films and tapes for television and broadcasting. The next issue is whether the Agreement involved payments made for the use of or the right to use any industrial, commercial or scientific equipment. According to Klaus Vogel's highly acclaimed treatise on double taxation treaties, which is regarded as the international gold standard on the law of tax treaties, 'equipment' consists of tangible movable objects and since the software itself is only comprised of instructions and is pure intangible information, it is not covered by the equipment clause.[18] It follows that the Agreement also did not involve payments made for the use of or the right to use any industrial, commercial or scientific equipment.

7. As regards the remaining possibilities envisaged in Article 12(3) of the Convention, one is now left, insofar as the case before us is concerned, with the payments made for the use of or the right to use secret formula or process, information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience or a copyright of a literary, artistic or scientific work. A secret formula or process comprises all kinds of company secrets, also known as industrial or trade secrets. The key element here is secrecy. This information must be confidential, meaning it is not widely known or easily accessible to those who typically deal with such information. It should have commercial value because of its secrecy and should be actively protected by the person who rightfully controls it through reasonable efforts.[19] If we advert to the Agreement and have a look at the definition clause, we see that the term 'FLIC tapes' means the full set of the respondent's proprietary software programs developed for use in oilfield data processing and log interpretation, including the software programs set out in the schedule attached to the Agreement, together with the related FLIC/VAX Handbook. Notably, however, what is not included is "any other related documentation such as, but not limited to, source code listings, program specifications, system flow charts, logic diagrams, system manuals or other documentation underlying and supporting the FLIC tapes". The reason for this exclusion is the respondent's intention that users shall have no knowledge of how FLIC tapes operate.[20] It shows that the Agreement did not envisage supplying of information about the ideas and principles underlying the program, such as logic, algorithms or programming languages or techniques. The transaction between the respondent and the lessee cannot, therefore, be said to be a transfer of secret formulas or process behind the software.

8. Concerning the question of information regarding industrial, commercial or scientific experience which is also known as know-how, it is seen that it is legally unprotected, not-secret-but-undisclosed knowledge that has been attained through experience. Such experience knowledge must go beyond the pure technical progress; it is related to persons having gained the knowledge by their activities. Such experience cannot be obtained simply by using the goods and services that are produced with the knowledge. Experience-based knowledge extends beyond mere technical progress and is tied to individuals who have acquired it through their activities.[21] No such experience was shared between the parties under the Agreement. When know-how is shared, it cannot be taken back and its use cannot be prohibited. The transfer of the use cannot be distinguished from a transfer of full ownership.[22] However, we see that in this case, the lessee, on termination of the Agreement, and the lease granted under it, was bound to deliver up the FLIC tapes to the respondent together with all copies of any part of the FLIC tapes held or made by the lessee.[23] Moreover, know-how beyond software can only be the specific programming design and structure such as algorithms and not the program itself.[24] This means that the chance of the Agreement to involve payments for the use of or the right to use information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience is also eliminated.

9. Let us determine if the case falls under the last possibility: whether the payments were made to the respondent in consideration for the use of or the right to use a copyright of a literary, artistic or scientific work. Transfer of rights in relation to software occurs in many different ways ranging from the alienation of the entire rights in the copyright in a program to the sale of a product which is subject to restrictions on the use to which it is put. The Agreement reveals that the lessee was obliged not to modify or reproduce the FLIC tapes or any part thereof, except as required for use on its own computer.[25] The lessee specifically undertook not to supply any of the FLIC tapes or any reproduction thereof to any other person, or to permit the use of any of the FLIC tapes by any third party, even its own subsidiary or related company.[26] The lessee undertook to keep absolutely secret and confidential at all times all knowledge and information in relation to the FLIC tapes (or any correction, update, improvement or modification thereto) supplied by the respondent to the lessee, and the lessee further agreed not to communicate or cause to be communicated any information or knowledge in relation to the FLIC tapes to any other person, firm or company and to use its best endeavours to protect the FLIC tapes from unauthorised disclosure.[27] The provisions of this confidentiality clause were to survive termination of the Agreement.[28] It follows that the arrangement between the respondent and the lessee did not contemplate any licence to reproduce and distribute to the public software incorporating the copyrighted program, or to modify and publicly display the program. Therefore, there wasn't any transfer of rights to use the program in a manner that would, without such licence, constitute an infringement of copyright. Nor was there any transfer of the full ownership of the rights in the FLIC tapes. The rights acquired by the lessee comprised of partial rights in the copy of the program.

10. Vogel explains that software is pure intangible information. The way this information is transmitted is of no relevance - it can be attained through a variety of media, be it data storages or transmission networks. It is expounded that the granted copyright, in most cases, is limited to the extent necessary for the operation and use of one copy or limited number of copies and the software and digital product usually may not be reproduced beyond the allowed number of copies, modified, resold or publicly displayed. In such a case, it is not the intellectual property of the software that is licenced or sold, rather, a product made with the use of intellectual property. Thus, income from the renting out of software is not covered by Article 12 but by Article 7 of the UN Model Convention ("UN MC") and OECD Model Convention ("OECD MC").[29] In view of this, what follows is that no copyrights were leased out to the lessee which merely acquired a program copy of FLIC tapes for its operations.

11. It has been held that the right to reproduce and the right to use computer software are distinct and separate rights.[30] Similarly, ownership of copyright in a work and ownership of the physical material in which the copyrighted work is embodied are two different things. A licence from a copyright owner where no proprietary interest is transferred to the licensee, such as where the core of the transaction is to authorize the end-user to have access to and make use of the licenced computer software product over which the licensee has no exclusive rights, does not amount to parting with any copyright. Copyright is an exclusive and negative right which restricts others from doing certain acts. The right to use a copyrighted product, granted through a non-exclusive and non-transferable licence, being restrictive in nature only allows for specific uses and should not be considered as a licence granting the enjoyment of all or any rights related to the copyright.[31]

12. More importantly in Geoquest Systems B. V. Gevers Deynootweg v. Director of Income Tax[32], is a case on all fours with that before us. The facts and issues were much the same. The applicant was a company incorporated in the Netherlands. It was engaged in the business of supplying special-purpose computer software to be used in the exploration and production of mineral oils. The applicant sold certain software packages to the Oil and Natural Gas Corporation in India. The terms of the agreement between the applicant and the customer among other things provided that the applicant granted to the customer a right to use the software and its associate proprietary information, and the term 'use' was to be limited to the processing of information and the process of copying, recording or transcribing software. The licensed use of the software was to remain restricted to the processing or interpretation by the customer of geoscience, reservoir, and production-related data owned or licensed by the customer in connection with oil, gas, and other natural resource development ventures where the customer was active as an operator or partner. On termination of the license as per the terms of the agreement, the customer was bound to discontinue all uses of the software and return the software and proprietary information to the applicant including all copies. The question before the Authority for Advance Rulings was if the income coming from the supply of software could be taxable as a royalty in India. Article 12(1) and (2) of the Agreement for Avoidance of Double Taxation concluded between India and the Netherlands, like Article 12(1) and (2) of the Convention, provide that royalties arising in a state and paid to a resident of the other state may be taxed in the other state though such royalties may also be taxed in the state in which they arise according to the laws of that state up to a specified percentage of the gross amount of the royalties. The definition of royalties in the Agreement between India and the Netherlands is similar to that given in the OECD MC. The Revenue contended that the income derived by the applicant for the supply of software could be taxed as a royalty in India. However, the Authority for Advance Rulings held that the amount payable under the agreement to the applicant did not amount to royalty within the meaning of the Agreement for Avoidance of Double Taxation between India and the Netherlands. This view of the Authority for Advance Rulings was accorded express approval by the Supreme Court of India in Engineering Analysis Centre of Excellence Private Limited v. The Commissioner of Income Tax.[33] For what has been discussed above, it is abundantly clear that the income derived by the respondent for the lease of FLIC tapes (software programs) does not constitute royalities within the meaning of Article 12(3) of the Convention.

13. The majority judgment has spent a great deal of time and effort to argue that the High Court incorrectly assumed the applicability of the OECD MC to the case though it should have considered the UN MC. The reason underlying this criticism as suggested in the majority judgment is that royalties under the UN MC may be taxed in the source country as well as in the resident country while the OECD MC does not permit taxation of royalties in the source country. However, nobody has argued before us that the Revenue could not tax royalties arising in Pakistan. The exception taken by the majority judgment to the view of the High Court would hold water if the High Court relying on the OECD MC Commentary had declared that the Revenue could not tax royalties arising in Pakistan. What was overlooked by the majority judgment, with respect, is that the issue is not about the taxing rights of Pakistan over royalties arising in the country. Rather, the dispute is whether the income derived by the respondent non resident Dutch company for the lease of certain software in Pakistan constitutes royalty or not. And in order to understand the concept of royalties, reference could be made to the OECD and UN MCs commentaries and academic treatises. Let us have a look at the definition of royalties provided in the OECD MC and UN MC and see if and to what extent they are at variance with one another and with the definition provided in the Convention. Paragraph 2 of Article 12 of the OECD MC provides:

The term "royalties" as used in this Article means payments of any kind received as a consideration for the use of, or the right to use, any copyright of literary, artistic or scientific work including cinematograph films, any patent, trade mark, design or model, plan, secret formula or process, or for information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience.

Paragraph 3 of Article 12 of the UN MC provides:

The term "royalties" as used in this Article means payments of any kind received as a consideration for the use of, or the right to use, any copyright of literary, artistic or scientific work including cinematograph films, or films or tapes used for radio or television broadcasting, any patent, trademark, design or model, plan, secret formula or process, or for the use of, or the right to use, industrial, commercial or scientific equipment or for information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience.

One can see that the definition of royalties provided in the Convention is more or less similar to the one provided in the UN MC and is not very different from that provided in the OECD MC. In fact, the only material difference between the definition of royalties provided in the UN MC and OECD MC is that the latter excludes the payments received as consideration "for the use of, or the right to use, industrial, commercial or scientific equipment" from the definition of royalties. And this exclusion, as explained earlier, is not relevant to the dispute before us because software is not covered by the equipment clause. It may be emphasized that once we are able to eliminate the payments for the use of or the right to use any industrial, commercial or scientific equipment from the definition of royalties, there does not remain any real difference between the definition of royalties provided in the OECD MC and UN MC. Therefore, I am of the view that the reliance placed by the High Court on the OECD MC and its Commentary, in order to decipher the true nature of payments received by the respondent and to understand the concept of royalties in the context of double taxation makes no material difference to the adjduciation of the question in hand. Notably, the UN MC Commentary on paragraph 3 of Article 12 includes the entire extract of the OECD MC Commentary on the question whether payments received as consideration for computer software are to be classified as royalties or not.

14. The majority judgment without definitively addressing whether the amounts received by the respondent constitute royalties, instead embarks upon a discussion which was not in contention between the parties. Thus the remark that if the respondent was not taxed in Pakistan, it might still be subject to taxation in the Netherlands, in my view, is not a pertinent consideration for a court tasked with adjudicating a legal dispute. Once it is established that the income earned by the respondent non resident Dutch company for leasing software in Pakistan does not qualify as royalty, delving into irrelevant factors serves no useful purpose. Furthermore, the majority asserts that the High Court's jurisdiction in this case was limited to addressing and deciding questions of law. It is worth noting that the sole point of contention between the parties revolved around whether the amounts received by the respondent constituted royalties or not, a matter which is a question of law squarely within the purview of the High Court.

15. The majority opinion also takes exception to the absence of any mention of FLIC tapes in the second agreement. I respectfully contend that this detail is inconsequential since both agreements pertain to the leasing or renting of software. The core question remains unaltered: do the payments received for the leasing or renting of software qualify as royalties? Moreover, the majority judgment suggests that the respondent had an alternative remedy under Article 24 of the Convention to present its case to the competent authority in its own country. It is said that if the competent authority in the respondent's country agreed, it could then take up the matter with the competent authority in Pakistan. Does this provision of the Convention preclude the respondent from pursuing a remedy available under the laws of Pakistan, or does it prevent this Court from adjudicating a question coming before it in its lawful jurisdiction? In my humble opinion, the answer to both these questions is a resounding 'no.'

16. The majority judgment has also relied on an earlier decision of this Court in the case of A.P. Moller v Commissioner of Income Tax 2012 SCMR 557 wherein this Court had approved the interpretation of the High Court of Article 8 of Double Taxation Conventions between Pakistan and Denmark and Pakistan and France in the context of taxation rights between the contracting states concerning profits earned from shipping operations. The question was whether the freight charges received or receivable by the carriers from Pakistani buyers under FOB contracts for inbound cargo could be regarded as resulting in profits "from sources within" Pakistan. The High Court interpreting Article 8(3) held that profits earned by carriers on inbound cargo on account of freight charges received in Pakistan arise "from sources within" Pakistan and, therefore, within the taxing right of Pakistan as contemplated by Article 8(3). It is to be noted that the question before the Court in the said case neither related to business profits nor royalties but to shipping and air transport and, therefore, does not have any material bearing on the present case. This view of mine is accentuated by the fact that the High Court at the end of the paragraph which was quoted with approval by this Court cautions, "we may also note that we need to interpret and apply the expression 'profits derived from sources within the other Contracting State' only to the extent required for purposes of the present proceedings, and we do not regard the foregoing observations as necessarily exhaustive of the meaning of this expression."

17. For the above reasons, I agree with the submission of the respondent that there is distinction between the use of copyright and the use of copyright product. No copyrights were leased out to the lessee which merely acquired a program copy of FLIC tapes (software programs) for its operations. Further, the transaction of lease of FLIC tapes software programs between the respondent and the lessee did not involve payments made for the use of or the right to use secret formula or process, or information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience. Income resulting from the lease of FLIC tapes amounts to business profits and cannot be treated as income arising from royalties. Therefore, Article 12 of the Convention is not applicable to this case. I do not feel inclined to interfere with the judgment of the High Court. As a result, these appeals are dismissed.

(Against the order of the Institution Officer dated 17.02.2020).

Per Umar Ata Bandial, J.; Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Muhammad Ali Mazhar, JJ. agreeing with their own reasons.

(a) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O. XXVI, R. 9 & O. X, R.2---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 188---Second review petition/curative review---Not maintainable---Article 188 of the Constitution and the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 envisage only one review of any judgment pronounced or any order made by the Court---Second review petition, whatever name is given to it including the "curative review", is not maintainable under Article 188 of the Constitution read with the Supreme Court Rules, 1980.

Per Umar Ata Bandial, J.

Second review petition was not maintainable in the present case.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J.

Entertaining a second review petition would amount to vesting the Court with a jurisdiction not conferred on it by the Constitution or by or under any law.

Ahmad v. Abdul Aziz 1991 SCMR 234; Abdul Hameed Dogar v. Federation of Pakistan 2010 SCMR 312; Shabbar Raza v. Federation of Pakistan 2018 SCMR 514; Akhter Lalayka v. Mushtaq Sukhaira 2018 SCMR 1218 and Moinuddin v. State PLD 2019 SC 749 ref.

It is true that the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 bar entertaining the second review petition but are silent on the point whether the Supreme Court can exercise suo motu review jurisdiction to entertain a second review petition under Article 188 of the Constitution. It cannot do so for the reason that the prohibition on entertaining a second review petition is meant to put an end to litigation and ensuring finality of the judgments and orders of the apex court of the land, in the public interest. If this is the substance and purpose of the Supreme Court Rules, the prohibition operates both on the parties in moving the second review petition and on the Court as well, in exercising suo motu review jurisdiction the second time. If we assume that there is no prohibition on the suo motu exercise of its review jurisdiction the second time by the Court regarding a judgment or order, there will be no end to litigation nor will there be any finality of the judgment or orders of the Court as this suo motu review jurisdiction can then be exercisable for unlimited times and not only for the second time. Article 188 of the Constitution, thus, envisages only one-time exercise of the review jurisdiction, whether made on a review petition or suo motu, by the Court in respect of any of its judgments or orders passed in its original or appellate jurisdiction.

The second review petition, whatever name is given to it including the "curative review", is not maintainable under Article 188 of the Constitution read with the Supreme Court Rules, 1980.

Per Muhammad Ali Mazhar, J.

So far as a second review petition is concerned, it is clearly provided under Rule 9 of Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 that, after the final disposal of the first application for review, no subsequent application for review shall lie to the Court and consequently it shall not be entertained by the Registry. Second review petition is not maintainable under the Supreme Court Rules, 1980.

ORDER

UMAR ATA BANDIAL, J.---The appellant seeks a second review through this petition. Learned counsel has relied upon the judgment of this Court in Khalid Iqbal v. Mirza Khan (PLD 2015 SC 50) which has in turn referred to PLD 2013 SC 829. Regarding Pensionary Benefits of the Judges of Superior Courts.

2. We have read the judgment carefully but do not find that a second review petition is maintainable in the present case. Dismissed.

I have attached a separate note giving reasons for the non-maintainability of the second review petition.

Muhammad Ali Mazhar, J

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---I agree with the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother, Justice Umar Ata Bandial, that the second review petition filed by the appellant is not maintainable, and that the present appeal filed against the order of the Institution Officer of this Court, returning the petition to the appellant, should be dismissed. As the learned counsel for the appellant has vehemently relied upon two judgments of this Court, Khalid Iqbal v. Mirza Khan (PLD 2015 SC 50) and Judges' Pension case (PLD 2013 SC 829), and one from the Indian jurisdiction, Rupa Ashok v. Ashok Hurra (AIR 2002 SC 1771), to argue that second review petition is maintainable. I, therefore, deem it appropriate to briefly address his argument and give my reasons for rejecting the same. Hence, this concurring note is being added.

2. The facts leading to the filing of the present appeal, briefly, are that the appellant filed a writ petition in the Lahore High Court against the respondents regarding an auction matter of the year 1997, which was allowed by a Single Bench of that High Court vide order dated 17.06.2013. The respondents' intra-court appeal before the Division Bench failed on 9 December 2015. They then filed a petition for leave to appeal in this Court, which was allowed by a three-member Bench of this Court vide its order dated 26.09.2018: the impugned judgments of the High Court were set aside and the writ petition of the appellant was dismissed on the ground of laches. The appellant filed a review petition against the said order of this Court, which was dismissed by this Court on 9 December 2019, holding that no ground for review had been made out. The appellant then filed an application under Article 187 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ("Constitution") read with Rule 2 of Order X and Rule 6 of Order XXXIII of the Supreme Court Rules 1980 ("Supreme Court Rules"), for passing appropriate orders in the interest of justice. The Institution Officer of this Court returned the said application of the appellant vide his order dated 17.02.2020 by determining that the application amounted to a second review petition which was not entertainable under Rule 9 of Order XXVI and Rule 2 of Order X of the Supreme Court Rules. The present appeal has been filed against this order of the Institution Officer.

3. The review jurisdiction is conferred on this Court by Article 188 of the Constitution, which states that the 'Supreme Court shall have power, subject to the provisions of any Act of Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament) and of any rules made by the Supreme Court, to review any judgment pronounced or any order made by it'. The review jurisdiction conferred by Article 188, as it is evident from the reading of that Article, is subject to the provisions of any Act of Parliament and any rules made by the Court. The Parliament has not so far passed any Act under this Article; however, the Supreme Court Rules made by this Court contain the rules that regulate its review jurisdiction. The rules of the Supreme Court Rules referred to by the Institution Officer of this Court while returning the second review petition of the appellant are reproduced here for ready reference:

Order XXVI, Rule 9

9. After the final disposal of the first application for review no subsequent application for review shall lie to the Court and consequently shall not be entertained by the Registry.

Order X, Rule 2

2. Subject to the provisions contained in Order XXVI, a judgment pronounced by the Court or by majority of the Court or by a dissenting Judge in open Court shall not afterwards be altered or added to, save for the purpose of correcting a clerical or arithmetical mistake or an error arising from any accidental slip or omission.

In view of the above rules, the question of maintainability of, and the jurisdiction of this Court to entertain, a second review petition has been considered and decided by this Court in many cases. The legal position as to the non-maintainability of a second review petition is so well settled by the repeated pronouncements of this Court that I consider it unnecessary to delve into this question again and reference to some of these cases here, should suffice: See Ahmad v. Abdul Aziz 1991 SCMR 234; Abdul Hameed Dogar v. Federation of Pakistan 2010 SCMR 312; Shabbar Raza v. Federation of Pakistan 2018 SCMR 514 (7-MB); Akhter Lalayka v. Mushtaq Sukhaira 2018 SCMR 1218 (5-MB); Moinuddin v. State PLD 2019 SC 749 (7-MB). The declaration made by a seven-member larger Bench of this Court in the last mentioned case of Moinuddin is reproduced here to show what the law of the land on this matter is:

6 .. There is, thus, no scope for maintainability of a second or subsequent review petition before this Court after the first review petition has been decided. It is sometimes argued that in such a situation, particularly in a case of extreme hardship, this Court may attend to the matter in exercise of its jurisdictions under Articles 184(3) or 187 of the Constitution or may resort to revisiting the earlier order or judgment in order to safeguard the interests of justice but such arguments have consistently been rejected by this Court in the past. In many previous cases this Court has consistently held that after exhausting the review jurisdiction of this Court a party to a case cannot invoke Articles 184(3) or 187(1) of the Constitution for reopening the same case.

4. Article 175(2) of the Constitution unequivocally declares that '[n]o court shall have any jurisdiction save as is or may be conferred on it by the Constitution or by or under any law'. I am, therefore, of the considered view that entertaining a second review petition would amount to vesting the Court with a jurisdiction not conferred on it by the Constitution or by or under any law in terms of Article 175(2) of the Constitution. It is reiterated that the courts in Pakistan enjoy jurisdiction which is conferred on them by the Constitution or by or under any law and do not possess any inherent jurisdiction on the basis of some principles of English common law, equity or good conscience. This is also a well-settled legal position as declared by this Court in the following, among other, cases:

Sindh Employees' Social Security v. Adamjee Cotton Mills PLD 1975 SC 32

It is, however, important to point out that the power to grant interim relief in this case is "ancillary or incidental" to the main appellate jurisdiction expressly conferred by the statute. This should not be confused with what is sometimes, claimed as the "inherent" jurisdiction of a Court, a claim which is no longer tenable in view of clause (2) Article 175 of the Constitution.

Brother Steel Mills v. Ilyas Miraj PLD 1996 SC 543 per Fazal Karim, J.

Clause (2) of that Article [175] provides that "no Court shall have any jurisdiction save as is or may be conferred on it by the Constitution or by or under any law". For the purpose of these appeals, it is sufficient to say that the Supreme Court of Pakistan and the High Courts have been established by the Constitution, that the Supreme Court of Pakistan and the High Court have such jurisdiction as has been conferred upon them by the Constitution, that they have also such other jurisdiction as is or may be conferred upon them by or under any law and that other Courts may be established, and will have such jurisdiction as may be conferred upon them by or under law... Two propositions emerge clearly: First, that the jurisdiction of the Courts is never established by themselves, it is established by an authority external to them, either in the Constitution or in law... Secondly, it is for the Constitution and subject to the Constitution, for the law to determine the nature and extent of the jurisdiction and the forum upon which it will be conferred.

Hitachi Limited v. Rupali Polyester 1998 SCMR 1618

The principles of common law or equity and good conscience cannot confer jurisdiction on the Courts in Pakistan which has not been vested in them by law. In this regard reference may be made to clause (2) of Article 175 of the Constitution of Pakistan, which provides that no Court shall have any jurisdiction save as is or may be conferred on it by the Constitution or by or under any law.

As there is no provision in the Indian Constitution similar to Article 175(2) of our Constitution, the Rupa Ashok case of the Indian jurisdiction, which held that the Indian Supreme Court has the inherent jurisdiction to act ex debito justitiae and can entertain in some rarest of the rare cases a second (curative) review petition, does not advance the argument of the learned counsel for the appellant in any manner. Any transplant of a rule from a foreign jurisdiction in ours can only be made after considering closely and thoroughly the difference in the constitutional texts and contexts. In view of the difference of provisions in the Constitutions of both countries, the reference to the said Indian case is misplaced.

5. So far as the reference to Article 187(1) of the Constitution by the appellant in his application (second review petition) is concerned, the same is also misconceived. The bare reading of Article 187(1) shows that its provisions are subject to and controlled by Article 175(2) of the Constitution. It only confers power on the Court 'to issue such directions, orders or decrees as may be necessary for doing complete justice in any case or matter pending before it', and does not confer jurisdiction to take cognizance of any case or matter. The phrase 'in any case or matter pending before it' used in Article 187(1) is the key to construe the provisions thereof. It leaves little doubt to find that no independent proceedings can be initiated under this Article. The Court can invoke its power under Article 187(1) only in a case or matter that is competently filed before it under any Article of the Constitution or provision of some other law conferring jurisdiction as stated in Article 175(2) and is also pending before it. Article 187(1) of the Constitution is not applicable where the case or matter stands finally concluded and is no more pending before the Court. And this is also a well settled view of this Court: See Zulfiqar Babu v. Government of Punjab PLD 1997 SC 11; Hitachi Limited v. Rupali Polyester 1998 SCMR 1618; Saeed Akhtar v. State 2000 SCMR 383; Khyber Tractors v. Pakistan PLD 2005 SC 842. In the last mentioned case of Khyber Tractors, after going through the earlier cases this Court concluded thus:

The above reports do not lay down that an independent proceedings can be initiated under Article 187 of the Constitution but the ratio of the above reports seems to be that once this Court is seized of a lis competently under the relevant law, its power to grant appropriate relief is not controlled by the technicalities of the pleadings or otherwise as clause (I) of Article 187 lays down that subject to clause (2) of Article 175 of the Constitution, the Supreme Court shall have power to issue such directions, orders, or decrees as may be necessary for doing complete justice in any case or matter pending before it including an order for the purpose of securing the attendance of any person or the discovery of production of any document. We may point out that the key words employed in the above clause are "in any case or matter pending before it." The above words clearly indicate that the relief referred to in the aforesaid clause can be granted in the case or matter pending before the Supreme Court. It may further be observed that the word "pending" means competently brought before this Court. The provision of rule 6 of Order XXXIII of the rules is in line with above clause (1) of Article 187 of the Constitution as it provides that nothing in these rules shall be deemed to limit or otherwise effect the inherent power of the Court to make such order as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of process of the Court. The above rule can be pressed into service only in a matter which is competently filed before this Court but it does not give an independent right to initiate proceedings of the nature in question.

6. In Khalid Iqbal case, referred to by the learned counsel, the second review petition was dismissed by this Court holding the same to be not maintainable; the said case, therefore, does not support but rather negates the argument of the learned counsel. The learned counsel relied upon certain observations made by Justice Mian Saqib Nisar as to the reviewing of its per incuriam judgment by this Court, in his concurring opinion recorded in the Judges' Pension case, which was also referred to in the Khalid Iqbal case. Those observations were made by Justice Mian Saqib Nisar by referring, among some cases of foreign jurisdiction, to the observations of Chief Justice Cornelius made in Nawabzada Amir Khan v. Controller of Estate Duty (PLD 1962 SC 335). Thus, the genealogy of the observations made in both the cases referred to by the learned counsel goes back to the observations made by Chief Justice Cornelius in the Nawabzada Amir Khan case. The said case was of a first review petition, and the observations made therein by the learned Chief Justice and other Judges relate to the first review petition, not to the second. So was the Judges' pension case, and the observations made by Justice Mian Saqib Nisar in that case were also about the first review proceedings initiated by the Court suo motu on a note of the Registrar of this Court.

7. It is true that the Supreme Court Rules bar entertaining the second review petition but are silent on the point whether this Court can exercise suo motu review jurisdiction to entertain a second review petition under Article 188 of the Constitution. In my opinion, it cannot do so for the reason that the prohibition on entertaining a second review petition is meant to put an end to litigation and ensuring finality of the judgments and orders of the apex court of the land, in the public interest. If this is the substance and purpose of the Supreme Court Rules, the prohibition operates both on the parties in moving the second review petition and on the Court as well, in exercising suo motu review jurisdiction the second time. If we assume that there is no prohibition on the suo motu exercise of its review jurisdiction the second time by the Court regarding a judgment or order, there will be no end to litigation nor will there be any finality of the judgment or orders of the Court as this suo motu review jurisdiction can then be exercisable for unlimited times and not only for the second time.

8. More importantly, review jurisdiction conferred on the Court by Article 188 of the Constitution, is with regard to 'any judgment pronounced or any order made by the Court' under the preceding Articles of the Constitution, i.e., Articles 184 in its original jurisdiction or under Article 185 in its appellate jurisdiction. Article 188 is not concerned with any judgment or order made in review jurisdiction by the Court under the same Article. And unless the judgment or order passed on the first review petition or in the first suo motu review proceedings is recalled, the judgment or order passed in the original or appellate jurisdiction cannot be reviewed. If this is not the meaning and scope of the words 'any judgment' or 'any order' used in Article 188 of the Constitution but are taken to include the judgment or order passed in the review jurisdiction also, then any judgment or order passed in the second, third or fourth suo motu review proceedings will also be reviewable in the third, fourth or fifth suo motu review proceedings. Such an interpretation of the words 'any judgment' or 'any order' in Article 188 of the Constitution, if adopted, would be against the legislative intent and the public interest that lies in putting an end to litigation and ensuring finality of the judgments and orders of the apex court of the country. Article 188 of the Constitution, thus, envisages only one-time exercise of the review jurisdiction, whether made on a review petition or suo motu, by the Court in respect of any of its judgments or orders passed in its original or appellate jurisdiction.

9. Nonetheless, it may be pertinent to underline here that revisiting, and overruling or modifying if found necessary, a decision on a question of law or enunciation of a principle of law, that is binding on all other courts in the country as per Article 189 of the Constitution, in a case other than that in which the said decision or enunciation was made, must not be confused with reviewing that very judgment or order in which the said decision or enunciation was made. There is no limit, under the Constitution or any law, as to how many times a question of law once decided or a principle of law enunciated in one case can be revisited, if found necessary to do so, in some other case by a larger Bench or the Full Court Bench of this Court, as an exception to the doctrine of stare decisis for the correction or development of the law declared by this Court. The following observations of a seven-member larger Bench of this Court made in Shabbar Raza may advantageously be quoted on this point:

[A] judgment of this Court can be considered to be per incuriam but it is for the Judges to revisit any such judgment, if and when pointed out by any person during the course of hearing of any other case. Such a finding would be premised on the Court finding the same judgment to be against any provision of the Constitution or the law, or the principle(s) already settled by a larger Bench of the Court. It is not the right of a person, who would have no locus standi under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, to file such a petition, particularly in the situation where the review jurisdiction has been invoked and the same (review) has been dismissed; thus, such judgment (under review) can never be challenged by virtue of filing independent proceedings under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. This would be an abuse of the process of law and is absolutely impermissible.

10. For all that has been discussed above, the argument of the learned counsel for the appellant regarding the maintainability of a second review petition is found meritless and is therefore rejected. The second review petition, whatever name is given to it including the "curative review", is not maintainable under Article 188 of the Constitution read with the Supreme Court Rules, and the Institution Officer of this Court has rightly returned the second review petition filed by the appellant, being not entertainable. The present appeal is meritless and is, therefore, dismissed

MUHAMMAD ALI MAZHAR, J.---On 21.9.2021, C.M. Appeal No.47/2020 filed in C.M.A. Nil/2020 in C.R.P. No.664/2018 in C.P. No. 130/2016 was dismissed by this Court on the ground that a Second Review Petition is not maintainable. Recently I have authored a judgment in the case of Commissioner Inland Revenue Z-III, Corporate Regional Tax Office, Tax House, Karachi and another v. MSC Switzerland and Geneva (2023 SCMR 1011), wherein the review jurisdiction was discussed in detail keeping in mind Article 188 of the Constitution, Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 and Order XLVII, Rule 1, C.P.C. Even with reference to the First Review Petition, it was held in the above judgment that clemency by dint of review is accorded to rectify an irreversible injustice, if any, done by a Court such as through misconstruction of law, misreading of the evidence or non-consideration of pleas raised before a Court that would amount to an error floating on the surface of the record; however, where the Court has taken a conscious and deliberate decision on a point of fact or law, a review petition will not be competent. Review by its nature is neither commensurate to a right of appeal or opportunity of rehearing merely on the ground that one party or the other felt dissatisfied with the decision of the Court, nor can a judgment or order be reviewed merely because a different view could have been taken. So far as the Second Review Petition is concerned, it is clearly provided under sub-rule (9), Rule 9 of Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 that, after the final disposal of the first application for review, no subsequent application for review shall lie to the Court and consequently it shall not be entertained by the Registry.

2. My learned brother Justice Mansoor Ali Shah, in order to elucidate the maintainability and scope of a Second Review Petition, contributed a separate note for amplification. I concur with the view of my learned brother that a "Second Review Petition" is not maintainable under the Rules, and for this reason the Second Review Petition was rightly dismissed vide order dated 21.9.2021.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 31.03.2022, passed in ETRs Nos. 32241 and 32246 of 2021)

----Arts. 4 & 10A---Show cause notice---Significance and purpose of a show cause notice stated.

A show cause notice is a formal communication from an authority, informing the recipient of an alleged violation or non-compliance with a law, and providing them with an opportunity to respond to the said allegations. It embodies the principle of natural justice, which requires that parties to a dispute be given a fair hearing before any decision is made that may affect their rights or interests. The principles of due process and fairness mandate that the recipient of a show cause notice be given adequate time to respond and present their case, that they be given access to relevant evidence and information, and that they be given the opportunity to be heard before any action is taken against them. This ensures that the decision-maker is not biased, that the decision is based on the facts of the case and the relevant law, and that the recipient's rights and interests are protected. Thus, in addition to the fair hearing principle, there are other principles of natural justice that also apply for the purposes of issuance of show cause notices, including the principle of impartiality, which requires that the decision maker be impartial, and the principle of reasons, which requires that the decision-maker provide reasons for their decision. Therefore, a show cause notice is an important tool for enforcing the law, and to ensure that the recipient is given a fair and transparent opportunity to present their case before any adverse order affecting their rights and interests is passed.

Siemens Engineering v. Union of India AIR 1976 SC 1785 and S.N. Mukherjee v. Union of India AIR 1990 SC 1984 ref.

The Constitution provides for the right to be treated in accordance with the law and enshrines the principles of fair trial and due process under Articles 4 and 10A, respectively. Article 4 of the Constitution provides for the right of citizens to enjoy the protection of law and to be treated in accordance with law as an inalienable right of every citizen. It further provides that no action detrimental to life, liberty, body, reputation or property of any person shall be taken except in accordance with the law and that no person shall be prevented from or be hindered in doing that which is not prohibited by law. Article 10A provides for the fundamental right to a fair trial and due process. The issuance of a show cause notice is an essential element in ensuring the provision of the said rights, as it provides individuals and organizations with the opportunity to explain their actions and to respond to allegations of violation or non-compliance with any law before any adverse action is taken against them. Hence, it follows that when a specific allegation is not put to the recipient, thereby failing to provide the recipient with the opportunity to respond to the same, any adjudication on the said allegation would be against the right of due process and fair trial and therefore, in contravention to Articles 4 and 10A of the Constitution.

A show cause notice can also be viewed as being akin to alternative dispute resolution ("ADR") as it provides a pre-litigation opportunity for the recipient to present their position and show cause. By doing so, the matter can potentially be resolved before it escalates and requires any adjudication. This not only saves time and resources but also encourages the efficient resolution of disputes, acting as an effective mode of resolving disputes outside of the traditional legal framework. Thus, while acting as a means to ensure due process and fair trial by allowing the recipient to explain their position and respond to the allegations before any legal action is taken, the issuance of a show cause notice also acts as a tool to resolve the issue in the pre-litigation stage, similar to the objective of ADR.

----Arts. 4 & 10A---Fresh/supplementary show cause notice, issuance of---Circumstances in which issuance of a fresh/supplementary show cause notice becomes necessary highlighted.

In certain cases and to uphold the principles and rights enshrined in Articles 4 and 10A of the Constitution, after the issuance of the initial show cause notice, it may be necessary to issue a supplementary or a fresh show cause notice if there has been a significant change in circumstances or if new evidence has come to light. For example, if the recipient has provided a valid response to the initial show cause notice, but new information has surfaced suggesting that the alleged violation or non-compliance did occur, a fresh show cause notice may be required to enable the recipient to respond to the new allegations and provide further clarification. Similarly, where there has been a significant change in the circumstances or situation that led to the issuance of the initial show cause notice, a fresh or supplementary show cause notice may be required to address these changes; where the original notice was defective or incomplete, a fresh or supplementary notice would be required to be issued to provide a more detailed or accurate statement of the issues; and where the original notice does not fully address all of the issues or violations that need to be addressed, a fresh or supplementary notice should be issued to cover any outstanding matters. Ultimately, the decision to issue a fresh show cause notice should be predicated on a thorough and careful evaluation of the facts and circumstances of each case, guaranteeing that the principles of due process and fair trial are upheld.

(c) Tax---

----Show cause notice---Contents---Scope and purpose of a show cause notice stated.

A show cause notice issued to a taxpayer must contain all the necessary facts and must specify the alleged actions or inaction by the taxpayer that violated the law, allowing for a meaningful response from the taxpayer. It is imperative that the taxpayer is confronted with specific allegations, along with the grounds upon which such allegations are based, in order to properly respond to the same and to place relevant material on record that would be necessary for any defence put forth and for any adjudication by the assessing officer in relation thereto. This is also because once a show cause notice is issued, the original adjudication on the said show cause notice can only be based on the grounds and allegations levelled therein. Unless the taxpayer is confronted with the allegations through a show cause notice, no determination can be made by the assessing officer with regards to the said allegations as it is beyond the competence of the department to make out a case which the department had never canvassed and the taxpayer had never been afforded the opportunity to meet. Hence, unless the allegations, and the grounds on which the said allegations are based, are not specifically alleged in the show cause notice issued to the taxpayer, the whole exercise becomes redundant and unsustainable in law.

Commissioner Inland Revenue v. Pakistan Tobacco Company 2022 SCMR 1251; Al-Khair Gadoon v. The Appellate Tribunal 2019 SCMR 2018; Raj Bahadur v. Union of India (1997) 6 SCC 81; New Delhi Television v. Deputy Commissioner of Income Tax AIR 2020 SC 2177; Collector of Central Excise v. H.M.M. Limited 1995 Supp. (3) SCC 322; Collector Central Excise v. Rahm Din 1987 SCMR 1840; SACI Allied Products v. Commissioner of Central Excise (2005) 7 SCC 159; Commissioner of Central Excise v. Ballarpur Industries (2007) 8 SCC 89 and Precision Rubber v. Commissioner of C. Ex. 2016 (334) ELT 577 (SC) ref.

----Fresh/supplementary show cause notice, issuance of---Circumstances in which issuance of a fresh/supplementary show cause notice becomes necessary highlighted.

Where in response to a show cause notice, the taxpayer, in defence, raises substantial grounds or puts forth substantial factual aspects that are not covered in the initial show cause notice and, therefore, require further inquiry or verification by the department, then, after conducting such further inquiry or verification, a fresh or supplementary show cause notice should be issued to the taxpayer, if it is then so required. No determination can be made with regards to the same unless the taxpayer is afforded the opportunity to respond to any deficiencies or misrepresentations found in relation thereto by specifically alleging the same in a fresh or supplementary show cause notice. Hence, instead of proceeding under the same show cause notice, it is necessary that a fresh or supplementary show cause notice is issued to the taxpayer in light of the defence so taken. Failure to do so would not only denote that in light of the grounds or facts raised in the defence put forth by taxpayer in response to the show cause notice, which were not in the knowledge of the tax authorities and therefore, were not part of the show cause notice, no further action is required under the said show cause notice, any adjudication in relation to the same would also be against the law, rendering the whole exercise redundant. Therefore, as a policy, such practice must be adopted by the tax authorities in order to prevent wastage of time and effort, and to curb unnecessary litigation. Not only would this allow a taxpayer to meaningfully respond to the specific allegations asserted against the taxpayer upon which the subsequent original adjudication, if any, will be based, as required under the law, it would also allow many cases to be resolved at the initial stages without the need to proceed any further and needlessly burden the public exchequer.

Warner Hindustan v. Collector of Central Excise (1999) 6 SCC 762; Precision Rubber v. Commissioner of C. Ex. 2016 (334) ELT 577 (SC) and Godrej v. Commissioner of Customs 2002 (143) ELT 16 (SC) ref.

Saba Saeed, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (through video-link, Lahore)

Shehbaz Butt, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent (through video-link, Lahore)

Assisted by: Muhammad Hassan Ali, Law Clerk, Supreme Court of Pakistan.

Date of hearing: 11th November, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against order dated 31.3.2022 whereby the Excise Tax References ("ETRs") filed by the petitioner department were dismissed by the High Court.

2. The brief background of the case is that the petitioner department issued a show cause notice dated 02.1.2014 to the respondent company with the allegation that the respondent company had to charge Federal Excise Duty ("FED") at the rate of 8% on local supplies of white crystalline sugar but instead it charged 0.5% and as a consequence FED was short levied. The respondent company filed a written reply dated 11.1.2014 controverting the said allegation in the show cause notice. However, through the Order-in-Original dated 27.3.2014 the matter was decided against the respondent company and it was held that the short levied FED along with surcharge is to be recovered from the respondent along with penalty (5% of the amount involved). The respondent filed an appeal before the Commissioner Inland Revenue, Appeal-V, Lahore, which was dismissed vide order dated 23.11.2020 as barred by time. The respondent company then filed a rectification application against the said order, which was also dismissed on 24.12.2020. These orders were then assailed by the respondent through two appeals filed before the Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue, Lahore ("Tribunal"). Vide order dated 28.1.2021, the appeal against order dated 23.11.2020, whereby the appeal of the respondent had been dismissed by the Commissioner Inland Revenue, was allowed by the Tribunal and resultantly the appeal against order dated 24.12.2020 was deemed to have become infructuous. Against the said order, the petitioner preferred two ETRs before the Lahore High Court under section 34A of the Federal Excise Act, 2005, raising five questions of law. However, at the time of hearing before the High Court, only the following two questions were pressed for determination:

I. Whether or not learned ATIR granted benefit of SRO 77(I)/2013 [to the] tax payer in violation of pre-conditions of clauses (b) and (d) of the SRO 77(I)/2013?

II. Whether the order of learned ATIR is justified and legal as the taxpayer [did] not provide documents of export whereas, as per law, registered person under sections 17 and 21(a) of the Federal Excise Act, 2005 read with section 22(1)(e) of the Sales Tax Act, 1990 is bound to provide it for verification as mandated under section 73 of the Sales Tax Act, 1990?

The said ETRs were then decided against the petitioner department by the High Court vide the impugned order dated 31.3.2022, thus, upholding the decision of the Tribunal.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the record of the case. At the outset, we have noticed that in the show cause notice dated 02.1.2014 issued by the petitioner department, the case set out against the respondent company was that it had charged 0.5% FED on the value of local supplies whereas it should have charged 8%. No mention was made of SRO No.77(I)/2013 ("SRO"), or any non-compliance thereof, in the said show cause notice. In response to the said show cause notice, the respondent company pointed out that it had charged 0.5% FED on the basis of the SRO and therefore it was not liable to pay 8% FED on local supplies. Under the said SRO relaxation in the rate of FED is extended to the quantity of the local supply of sugar equivalent to the quantity exported by the sugar manufacturer. Despite raising the above new factual ground claiming benefit under the SRO, no fresh or supplementary show cause notice was issued to the respondent company seeking clarification as to the applicability of the SRO or whether the respondent company was entitled to the benefit of the SRO. Instead, the original adjudication by the Deputy Commissioner Inland Revenue proceeded on the basis of the already issued show cause notice and while deciding the same he addressed the issue of the SRO and held that two pre-conditions of the said SRO i.e. clauses (b) and (d) had not been complied with, which provide that the sugar manufacturer has to present proof of the sugar it has exported and that the benefit of the SRO shall not be admissible in respect of exports made through land routes to Afghanistan and the Central Asian Republics. These matters were extraneous to the show cause notice and the case set up by the department against the respondent company.

4. Before delving into the matter at hand, we feel it necessary to first underscore the significance and purpose of a show cause notice. A show cause notice is a formal communication from an authority, informing the recipient of an alleged violation or non-compliance with a law, and providing them with an opportunity to respond to the said allegations. It embodies the principle of natural justice, which requires that parties to a dispute be given a fair hearing before any decision is made that may affect their rights or interests. The principles of due process and fairness mandate that the recipient of a show cause notice be given adequate time to respond and present their case, that they be given access to relevant evidence and information, and that they be given the opportunity to be heard before any action is taken against them. This ensures that the decision-maker is not biased, that the decision is based on the facts of the case and the relevant law, and that the recipient's rights and interests are protected. Thus, in addition to the fair hearing principle, there are other principles of natural justice that also apply for the purposes of issuance of show cause notices, including the principle of impartiality, which requires that the decision-maker be impartial, and the principle of reasons, which requires that the decision-maker provide reasons for their decision.[1] Therefore, a show cause notice is an important tool for enforcing the law, and to ensure that the recipient is given a fair and transparent opportunity to present their case before any adverse order affecting their rights and interests is passed.

5. The Constitution[2] provides for the right to be treated in accordance with the law and enshrines the principles of fair trial and due process under Articles 4 and 10A, respectively. Article 4 of the Constitution provides for the right of citizens to enjoy the protection of law and to be treated in accordance with law as an inalienable right of every citizen. It further provides that no action detrimental to life, liberty, body, reputation or property of any person shall be taken except in accordance with the law and that no person shall be prevented from or be hindered in doing that which is not prohibited by law. Article 10A provides for the fundamental right to a fair trial and due process. The issuance of a show cause notice is an essential element in ensuring the provision of the said rights, as it provides individuals and organizations with the opportunity to explain their actions and to respond to allegations of violation or non-compliance with any law before any adverse action is taken against them. Hence, it follows that when a specific allegation is not put to the recipient, thereby failing to provide the recipient with the opportunity to respond to the same, any adjudication on the said allegation would be against the right of due process and fair trial and therefore, in contravention to Articles 4 and 10A of the Constitution.

6. As such, in certain cases and to uphold the above principles and rights, after the issuance of the initial show cause notice, it may be necessary to issue a supplementary or a fresh show cause notice if there has been a significant change in circumstances or if new evidence has come to light. For example, if the recipient has provided a valid response to the initial show cause notice, but new information has surfaced suggesting that the alleged violation or non-compliance did occur, a fresh show cause notice may be required to enable the recipient to respond to the new allegations and provide further clarification. Similarly, where there has been a significant change in the circumstances or situation that led to the issuance of the initial show cause notice, a fresh or supplementary show cause notice may be required to address these changes; where the original notice was defective or incomplete, a fresh or supplementary notice would be required to be issued to provide a more detailed or accurate statement of the issues; and where the original notice does not fully address all of the issues or violations that need to be addressed, a fresh or supplementary notice should be issued to cover any outstanding matters. Ultimately, the decision to issue a fresh show cause notice should be predicated on a thorough and careful evaluation of the facts and circumstances of each case, guaranteeing that the principles of due process and fair trial are upheld.

7. A show cause notice can also be viewed as being akin to alternative dispute resolution ("ADR") as it provides a pre-litigation opportunity for the recipient to present their position and show cause. By doing so, the matter can potentially be resolved before it escalates and requires any adjudication. This not only saves time and resources but also encourages the efficient resolution of disputes, acting as an effective mode of resolving disputes outside of the traditional legal framework. Thus, while acting as a means to ensure due process and fair trial by allowing the recipient to explain their position and respond to the allegations before any legal action is taken, the issuance of a show cause notice also acts as a tool to resolve the issue in the pre-litigation stage, similar to the objective of ADR.

8. Coming to the present matter, in our view, non-compliance of the conditions of the SRO by the respondent company was a distinct and separate allegation which was necessarily required to be properly alleged in a show cause notice issued by the department and put to the respondent company.[3] A show cause notice issued to a taxpayer must contain all the necessary facts and must specify the alleged actions or inaction by the taxpayer that violated the law, allowing for a meaningful response from the taxpayer.[4] It is imperative that the taxpayer is confronted with specific allegations, along with the grounds upon which such allegations are based, in order to properly respond to the same and to place relevant material on record that would be necessary for any defence put forth and for any adjudication by the assessing officer in relation thereto. This is also because once a show cause notice is issued, the original adjudication on the said show cause notice can only be based on the grounds and allegations levelled therein, as pointed out above.[5] Unless the taxpayer is confronted with the allegations through a show cause notice, no determination can be made by the assessing officer with regards to the said allegations as it is beyond the competence of the department to make out a case which the department had never canvassed and the taxpayer had never been afforded the opportunity to meet.[6] Hence, unless the allegations, and the grounds on which the said allegations are based, are not specifically alleged in the show cause notice issued to the taxpayer, the whole exercise becomes redundant and unsustainable in law.

9. Therefore, where in response to a show cause notice, the taxpayer, in defence, raises substantial grounds or puts forth substantial factual aspects that are not covered in the initial show cause notice and, therefore, require further inquiry or verification by the department, then, after conducting such further inquiry or verification, a fresh or supplementary show cause notice should be issued to the taxpayer, if it is then so required.[7] No determination can be made with regards to the same unless the taxpayer is afforded the opportunity to respond to any deficiencies or misrepresentations found in relation thereto by specifically alleging the same in a fresh or supplementary show cause notice. Hence, instead of proceeding under the same show cause notice, it is necessary that a fresh or supplementary show cause notice is issued to the taxpayer in light of the defence so taken. Failure to do so would not only denote that in light of the grounds or facts raised in the defence put forth by taxpayer in response to the show cause notice, which were not in the knowledge of the tax authorities and therefore, were not part of the show cause notice, no further action is required under the said show cause notice, any adjudication in relation to the same would also be against the law, rendering the whole exercise redundant. Therefore, we feel that as a policy, such practice must be adopted by the tax authorities in order to prevent wastage of time and effort, and to curb unnecessary litigation. Not only would this allow a taxpayer to meaningfully respond to the specific allegations asserted against the taxpayer upon which the subsequent original adjudication, if any, will be based, as required under the law, it would also allow many cases to be resolved at the initial stages without the need to proceed any further and needlessly burden the public exchequer.

10. In the instant case, the show cause notice issued to the respondent had no such grounds or allegations regarding the applicability of the SRO or fulfillment of the conditions therein. Even when the respondent asserted in its reply that it had paid the FED by availing the benefit under the SRO, no fresh or supplementary show cause notice was issued to the respondent after inquiry by the department as to whether the conditions of the SRO had been fulfilled by the respondent. The assessing officer, without confronting the respondent as to the non-fulfilment of the conditions of the SRO, without providing the respondent with the opportunity to respond to the same and place relevant material on the record, and hence, without having any material to adjudicate upon this aspect, proceeded to determine that the respondent had not complied with the conditions of the SRO while adjudicating upon the same show cause notice already issued to the respondent. Therefore, the Order-in-Original passed on the matter, being extraneous to the show cause notice, was wholly without jurisdiction and could not have been sustained.

11. However, since the forums below have discussed the applicability of the SRO, therefore, to conclusively decide the case at hand, we also wish to dilate upon that aspect of the matter. It is now settled law that the highest authority for factual determination in tax matters is the Tribunal.[8] In the instant case, the Tribunal was satisfied that exports were duly made by the respondent company under the SRO and the conditions mentioned therein, including provision of proof of such exports and that such exports should not have been made through land routes to Afghanistan and the Central Asian Republics, were duly complied with by the respondent. The department did not produce any evidence before the Tribunal to dislodge the fact that the petitioners had complied with the said requirements of the SRO. This, even otherwise, could not have been done because it was not the case set out by the department as there was no such allegation in the show cause notice. The learned counsel for the petitioner has been unable to refer to any perversity in the reading of the evidence resulting in the said factual determination made by the Tribunal. Therefore, we see no reason to interfere in the said findings of the Tribunal which have also been upheld by the High Court.

12. As far as the contention of the petitioner department as to the appeal filed by the respondent taxpayer being barred by time is concerned, we have noted that this was also discussed in detail by the Tribunal and decided in favour of the respondent. The question relating to limitation was then raised by the department in the ETRs, however, at the time of arguing the matter before the High Court on 31.3.2022, only two questions were pressed for determination, which even otherwise did not arise from the show cause notice and are highlighted above, and the question of limitation was not pressed. In these circumstances, we are therefore, not inclined to dilate upon the same.[9] Even otherwise, as held above, the Order-in-Original against which the appeal was filed was not sustainable under the law.

13. In view of the above, we see no reason to interfere in the impugned judgment. Therefore, leave is refused and these petitions are dismissed.

Suo Motu Case No. 1 of 2023 and Constitutional Petitions Nos.1 and 2 of 2023, decided on 1st March, 2023.

(Suo Motu Regarding Holding of General Elections to the Provincial Assemblies of Punjab and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa)

Per Umar Ata Bandial, CJ, Munib Akhtar and Muhammad Ali Mazhar, JJ; Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Jamal Khan Mandokhail, JJ.dissenting (Majority view)

----Arts. 105(3)(a), 107, 112(1), 112(2), 224(1), 224(2) & 184(3)---Elections Act (XXXIII of 2017), S. 57(1)---Constitutional petitions and suo motu proceedings regarding holding of General Elections to the Provincial Assemblies of Punjab and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa---Constitutional responsibility and authority for appointing the date for the holding of a general election to a Provincial Assembly, upon its dissolution in the various situations envisaged by and under the Constitution, and how and when such constitutional responsibility is to be discharged stated.

Per Umar Ata Bandial, CJ, Munib Akhtar and Muhammad Ali Mazhar, JJ. (Majority view)

The Constitution envisages three situations for the dissolution of a Provincial Assembly. In the context of the role of the Governor, the "first situation" is set out in clause (2) of Article 112. This envisages the dissolution of the Assembly by an order made by the Governor at his discretion, subject to the previous approval of the President and fulfillment of the conditions set out therein. In this situation, the Assembly cannot, and does not, dissolve without an order being made by the Governor, and dissolves immediately on the making of the order.

The "second situation" is set out in clause (1) of Article 112, when the Chief Minister advises dissolution. This situation can be divided into two sub-categories; the "sub-category (a) of second situation" is where the Governor acts on the advice tendered and makes an order dissolving the Assembly. Here, the Assembly dissolves immediately on the making of the order. The "sub-category (b) of second situation" is where the Governor does not make an order of dissolution on the advice tendered. Here, the Assembly stands dissolved on the expiry of forty-eight hours from the tendering of the advice by the Chief Minister (i.e., by the efflux of time), and that does not require an order of the Governor.

The "third situation" is set out in Article 107 of the Constitution. This provides that unless an Assembly is sooner dissolved (i.e., in terms of either of the two preceding situations), it stands dissolved after a term of five years. Here, the Governor has no role at all; the Assembly dissolves by the efflux of time.

In situations where the Assembly is dissolved by an order of the Governor, the constitutional responsibility of appointing a date for the general election that must follow is to be discharged by the Governor as provided in terms of Article 105(3)(a). These are the "first situation" and "sub-category (a) of second situation" described above.

In situations where the Assembly is not dissolved by an order of the Governor, the constitutional responsibility of appointing a date for the general election that must follow is to be discharged by the President as provided in terms of section 57(1) of the Elections Act, 2017 ('the 2017 Act'). These are the "sub-category (b) of second situation" and "third situation" described above.

Since the general election on a dissolution of a Provincial Assembly has to be held within a time period stipulated by the Constitution itself, which is a constitutional imperative, the President or, as the case may be, the Governor must discharge the constitutional responsibility of appointing a date for the said election swiftly and without any delay and within the shortest time possible. The Election Commission must proactively be available to the President or the Governor, and be prepared for such consultation as required for a date for the holding of general elections.

In the present case in relation to the dissolution of the Punjab Assembly, to which the "sub-category (b) of second situation" applied, the constitutional responsibility for appointing a date for the general election that must follow was to be discharged by the President. However, in relation to the dissolution of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Assembly, to which the "sub-category (a) of second situation" applied, the constitutional responsibility for appointing a date for the general election that must follow was to be discharged by the Governor.

In ordinary circumstances the general election to the Punjab Assembly ought to be held on 09.04.2023, the date announced by the President in terms of his order of 20.02.2023. However, on account of the delay in the emergence of the date for the holding of the general election, it may not be possible to meet the 90 day deadline stipulated by the Constitution. It is also the case that (possibly on account of a misunderstanding of the law) the Election Commission did not make itself available for consultation (with the President) as required under section 57(1) of the 2017 Act. Supreme Court directed that the Election Commission shall use its utmost efforts to immediately propose, keeping in mind sections 57 and 58 of the 2017 Act, a date to the President that is compliant with the 90 day deadline; thatif such a course is not available, then the Election Commission shall in like manner propose a date for the holding of the poll that deviates to the barest minimum from such deadline; that after consultation with the Election Commission, the President shall announce a date for the holding of the general election to the Punjab Assembly; that the Governor of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province must after consultation with the Election Commission forthwith appoint a date for the holding of the general election to the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Assembly and the directions issued in relation to elections to the Punjab Assembly shall, mutatis mutandis, apply in relation thereto.

Supreme Court further directed that the Federation, and in particular the Federal Government, is obligated, on an immediate and urgent basis, to forthwith provide the Election Commission with all such facilities, personnel and security as it may require for the holding of the general elections; that in like manner, it is the duty of the Provincial Governments, acting under the Caretaker Cabinets, to proactively provide all aid and assistance as may be required by the Election Commission, and that the duty cast upon the authorities as set out in section 50 of the 2017 Act must also be discharged forthwith and proactively. Constitution petitions and suo motu proceedings, being maintainable, were disposed of accordingly.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Jamal Khan Mandokhail, JJ. dissenting (Minority view)

----Arts. 105(3)(a), 107, 112(1), 112(2), 224(1), 224(2) & 184(3)---Elections Act (XXXIII of 2017), S. 57(1)---Constitutional petitions and suo motu proceedings regarding holding of General Elections to the Provincial Assemblies of Punjab and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa---Maintainability---Detailed reasons for finding the Constitutional petitions and suo motu proceedings as not maintainable recorded.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Jamal Khan Mandokhail, JJ. (Minority view)

The present suo motu proceedings, in the facts and circumstances of the case, are wholly unjustified in the mode and manner they were taken up under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, besides being initiated with undue haste. The suo motu case and the Constitutional petitions under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, in the light of the principles settled in cases reported as Manzoor Elahi v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1975 Supreme Court 66) and Benazir Bhutto v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1988 Supreme Court 416), do not constitute a fit case to exercise the extraordinary original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution and are thus not maintainable as the same constitutional and legal issues seeking the same relief are pending and being deliberated upon by the respective Provincial High Courts in Lahore and Peshawar, without there being any inordinate delay in the conduct of the proceedings before them. There is no justification to invoke the extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) to initiate suo motu proceedings or entertain petitions under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, as a single Bench of the Lahore High Court has already decided the matter in favour of the petitioner before the said High Court and the said judgment is still in the field. The intra court appeals (ICAs) filed against the said judgment are pending before the Division Bench of the Lahore High Court (and none of the said petitioners has approached the Supreme Court under Article 185(3) of the Constitution).

Manzoor Ilahi's case PLD 1975 SC 66 and Benzair Bhutto's case PLD 1988 SC 416 ref.

Once a constitutional issue is pending before a Provincial High Court, keeping in view the Federal structure of the Constitution the autonomy and independence of the apex provincial constitutional court, should not be readily interfered with rather be supported to strengthen the provincial autonomy and avoid undermining the autonomy of the provincial constitutional courts.

There is no inordinate delay in the proceedings pending before the High Courts, infact the present proceedings have unnecessarily delayed the matter before the High Courts. However, considering the importance of the matter it is expected that the respective High Courts shall decide the matters pending before them within three working days from present order.

Even otherwise matters such as the present matter should best be resolved by the Parliament.

Constitutional petitions were dismissed and suo motu proceedings were dropped.

ORDER

By a majority of 3:2 (Mr. Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Mr. Justice Jamal Khan Mandokhail dissenting) and for detailed reasons to be recorded later and subject to what is set out therein by way of amplification or otherwise, these matters are disposed of in the following terms:

1. Parliamentary democracy is one of the salient features of the Constitution. There can be no parliamentary democracy without Parliament or the Provincial Assemblies. And there can be neither Parliament nor Provincial Assemblies without the holding of general elections as envisaged, required and mandated by and under the Constitution and in accordance therewith. Elections, and the periodic holding of elections, therefore underpin the very fabric of the Constitution. They are a sine qua non for parliamentary democracy, and ensure that the sacred trust of sovereignty entrusted to the people of Pakistan is always in the hands of their chosen representatives.

2. While the holding of general elections has different aspects and requirements, one that is absolutely crucial is the timeframe or period in which such elections are to be held. The Constitution envisages two such periods, being of sixty and ninety days respectively. In relation to a Provincial Assembly, the first period applies when the Assembly dissolves on the expiration of its term under Article 107 and the second period is prescribed when it is sooner dissolved under Article 112. The time periods so set down in Article 224(1) and (2) respectively are constitutional imperatives that command complete fidelity. We are here concerned with the dissolution of two Provincial Assemblies before the expiry of their terms and therefore to the holding of general elections in relation to each within 90 days.

3. It is in the foregoing context that three questions have to be considered by the Court. The Assemblies in question are those of the Punjab and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Provinces, which dissolved on 14.01.2023 and 18.01.2023 respectively. In both cases, the then Chief Ministers tendered advice to their respective Governors under Article 112(1) of the Constitution to dissolve the Assembly. In the case of the Punjab Province the Governor chose not to act on the said advice so that the Assembly stood dissolved on the expiry of 48 hours, on the date just mentioned. In the case of the KPK Province, the Governor did act on the advice and made an order dissolving the Assembly, on 18.01.2023. The questions which have been considered with the assistance of learned counsel for the various parties and the Law Officers are as follows:

1. Who has the constitutional responsibility and authority for appointing the date for the holding of a general election to a Provincial Assembly, upon its dissolution in the various situations envisaged by and under the Constitution?

2. How and when is this constitutional responsibility to be discharged?

3. What are the constitutional responsibilities and duties of the Federation and the Province with regard to the holding of the general election?

4. The Constitution envisages three situations for the dissolution of a Provincial Assembly. These, in the context of the role of the Governor, are as follows.

5. The first situation is set out in clause (2) of Article 112. This envisages the dissolution of the Assembly by an order made by the Governor at his discretion, subject to the previous approval of the President and fulfillment of the conditions set out therein. In this situation, the Assembly cannot, and does not, dissolve without an order being made by the Governor, and dissolves immediately on the making of the order.

6. The second situation is set out in clause (1) of Article 112, when the Chief Minister advises dissolution. This situation can be divided into two sub-categories, which are as follows:

a. The first is where the Governor acts on the advice tendered and makes an order dissolving the Assembly. Here, the Assembly dissolves immediately on the making of the order.

b. The second sub-category is where the Governor does not make an order of dissolution on the advice tendered. Here, the Assembly stands dissolved on the expiry of forty-eight hours from the tendering of the advice by the Chief Minister (i.e., by the efflux of time), and that does not require an order of the Governor.

7. The third situation is set out in Article 107. This provides that unless an Assembly is sooner dissolved (i.e., in terms of either of the two preceding situations), it stands dissolved after a term of five years. Here, the Governor has no role at all; the Assembly dissolves by the efflux of time.

8. Article 105(3)(a) provides that where the Governor dissolves the Assembly he shall appoint a date for the holding of a general election thereto, being a date not later than 90 days from the date of the dissolution.

9. The Elections Act, 2017 ("2017 Act") has been enacted by Parliament in exercise of its legislative competence under the Constitution. That includes, in addition to Entry 41 of the Fourth Schedule, a specific provision in the body of the Constitution, being Article 222, that expressly articulates a list of matters relating to elections which are within the Federal domain. The 2017 Act applies, inter alia, to both the National and the Provincial Assemblies. Section 57(1) thereof provides that the President shall "announce the date or dates of the general elections after consultation with the Commission".

10. On a conjoint reading of the foregoing provisions we conclude and hold as follows:

a. In situations where the Assembly is dissolved by an order of the Governor, the constitutional responsibility of appointing a date for the general election that must follow is to be discharged by the Governor as provided in terms of Article 105(3)(a). These are the situations described in paras 5 and 6(a) above.

b. In situations where the Assembly is not dissolved by an order of the Governor, the constitutional responsibility of appointing a date for the general election that must follow is to be discharged by the President as provided in terms of section 57(1) of the 2017 Act. These are the situations described in paras 6(b) and 7 above.

11. Since the general election on a dissolution of a Provincial Assembly has to be held within a time period stipulated by the Constitution itself, which is a constitutional imperative, the President or, as the case may be, the Governor must discharge the constitutional responsibility of appointing a date for the said election swiftly and without any delay and within the shortest time possible. The Election Commission must proactively be available to the President or the Governor, and be prepared for such consultation as required for a date for the holding of general elections.

12. It follows from the foregoing that in relation to the dissolution of the Punjab Assembly, to which the situation described in para 6(b) above applied, the constitutional responsibility for appointing a date for the general election that must follow was to be discharged by the President. However, in relation to the dissolution of the KPK Assembly, to which the situation described in para 6(a) above applied, the constitutional responsibility for appointing a date for the general election that must follow was to be discharged by the Governor.

13. It further follows that the order of the President dated 20.02.2023 is constitutionally competent and subject to what is observed below, it is hereby affirmed insofar as it applies to the Punjab Assembly; but the same is constitutionally invalid insofar as it applies to the KPK Assembly and is therefore hereby set aside. It also follows that the Governor of KPK Province, inasmuch as he has not appointed a date for the holding of the general election to the Assembly of that Province is in breach of his constitutional responsibility.

14. It is further declared and directed as follows in relation to the matters before the Court:

a. In ordinary circumstances the general election to the Punjab Assembly ought to be held on 09.04.2023, the date announced by the President in terms of his order of 20.02.2023. However, we are informed that on account of the delay in the emergence of the date for the holding of the general election, it may not be possible to meet the 90 day deadline stipulated by the Constitution. It is also the case that (possibly on account of a misunderstanding of the law) the Election Commission did not make itself available for consultation as required under section 57(1) of the 2017 Act. The Election Commission is therefore directed to use its utmost efforts to immediately propose, keeping in mind sections 57 and 58 of the 2017 Act, a date to the President that is compliant with the aforesaid deadline. If such a course is not available, then the Election Commission shall in like manner propose a date for the holding of the poll that deviates to the barest minimum from the aforesaid deadline. After consultation with the Election Commission the President shall announce a date for the holding of the general election to the Punjab Assembly.

b. The Governor of the KPK Province must after consultation with the Election Commission forthwith appoint a date for the holding of the general election to the KPK Assembly and the preceding clause (a) shall, mutatis mutandis, apply in relation thereto.

15. It is the constitutional duty of the Federation, in terms of clause (3) of Article 148, "to ensure that the Government of every Province is carried on in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution". There can be no doubt that this duty includes ensuring that a general election to the Assembly of every Province is held, and enabled to be held, in a timely manner within the period set out in the Constitution. This duty is in addition to, and applies independently of, the duty cast under Article 220 on "all executive authorities in the Federation and in the Provinces to assist the Commissioner and the Election Commission in the discharge of his or their functions". It follows that the Federation, and in particular the Federal Government, is, inter alia, obligated, on an immediate and urgent basis, to forthwith provide the Election Commission with all such facilities, personnel and security as it may require for the holding of the general elections. In like manner, it is the duty of the Provincial Governments, acting under the Caretaker Cabinets, to proactively provide all aid and assistance as may be required by the Election Commission. The duty cast upon the authorities as set out in section 50 of the 2017 Act must also be discharged forthwith and proactively.

16. The three matters before the Court are found maintainable and stand disposed of as above.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH AND JAMAL KHAN MANDOKHAIL, JJ.---For the reasons to be recorded later, we hold that:

i. The suo motu proceedings (SMC No. 1 of 2023), in the facts and circumstances of the case, are wholly unjustified in the mode and manner they were taken up under Article 184(3) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ("Constitution"), besides being initiated with undue haste.

ii. The Suo Motu Case No.1 of 2023 and the two Const. Petitions Nos. 1 and 2 of 2023 under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, in the light of the principles settled in Manzoor Ilahi[1]1 and Benzair Bhutto[2], do not constitute a fit case to exercise the extraordinary original jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution and are thus not maintainable as the same constitutional and legal issues seeking the same relief are pending and being deliberated upon by the respective Provincial High Courts in Lahore and Peshawar, without there being any inordinate delay in the conduct of the proceedings before them.

iii. There is no justification to invoke our extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 184(3) to initiate suo motu proceedings or entertain petitions under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, as a single Bench of the Lahore High Court has already decided the matter in favour of the petitioner before the said High Court vide judgment dated 10.02.2023 and the said judgment is still in the field. The intra court appeals (ICAs) filed against the said judgment are pending before the Division Bench of the Lahore High Court (and none of the said petitioners has approached this Court under Article 185(3) of the Constitution).

iv. Once a constitutional issue is pending before a Provincial High Court, keeping in view the Federal structure of our Constitution the autonomy and independence of the apex provincial constitutional court, should not be readily interfered with rather be supported to strengthen the provincial autonomy and avoid undermining the autonomy of the provincial constitutional courts.

v. There is no inordinate delay in the proceedings pending before the High Courts, infact the instant proceedings have unnecessarily delayed the matter before the High Courts. However, considering the importance of the matter we expect that the respective High Courts shall decide the matters pending before them within three working days from today.

vi. Even otherwise without prejudice to the above, such like matters should best be resolved by the Parliament.

2. We, therefore, agree with the orders dated 23.02.2023 passed by our learned brothers, Yahya Afridi and Athar Minallah, JJ.[3], and dismiss the present constitution petitions and drop the suo motu proceedings.

----Art. 203---Contempt of Court Ordinance (V of 2003), S. 4(2)---District judiciary---Duty of the High Courts to protect the judges of the district judiciary---Such duty is inherent in and concomitant with the power to supervise and control vested in them under Article 203 of the Constitution---It is imperative for the High Courts to protect the district judiciary from any executive onslaught or intrusion that may weaken its institutional independence or tends to lower its judicial fiat and brings it into disrespect---Observations recorded by the Supreme Court regarding importance of protecting the judicial independence and safeguarding the prestige and honour of the judges of the district judiciary.

District Judiciary is the backbone of our judicial system. It is imperative to protect and safeguard the district judiciary from any executive onslaught or intrusion that may weaken its institutional independence or tends to lower its judicial fiat and brings it into disrespect. The need to protect judicial independence and safeguard the prestige and honour of the judges is essential to protect the public confidence and public trust reposed in the judicary. Public confidence and trust in the courts rest on independence, impartiality, neutrality, openness and transparency of the judicial system; it lends the court its high moral authority and its decisions, unquestionable legitimacy. The courts being guardians of the rights of the people must be insulated and walled against any intrusion that weakens its fiat and prestige. This protection applies at all levels of the judiciary, from the constitutional courts to the frontline courts in the district. The Constitution protects the constitutional court judges through the power of contempt under Article 204 of the Constitution and through the Supreme Judicial Council established under Article 209 of the Constitution, while it is Article 203 of the Constitution that safeguards the judges of the district judiciary by placing them under the protective umbrella of the High Court of the respective Province.

Hasnain Raza v. Lahore High Court PLD 2022 SC 7 ref.

The primary duty to ensure the protection of district judiciary is of the High Courts under whose supervision and control it functions. This duty is inherent in and concomitant with the power to supervise and control vested in the High Courts under Article 203 of the Constitution. In line with this constitutional mandate, the Legislature has conferred upon the High Courts the power to punish a contempt committed in relation to any court of the district judiciary.

(f) Contempt of Court Ordinance (V of 2003)---

----S. 3--- Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 204---Contempt laws---Purpose---Real purpose of the law of contempt is the protection of the public interest and more importantly public confidence in the justice system.

State v. Khalid Masood PLD 1996 SC 42 ref.

(g) Constitution of Pakistan---

---Arts. 175(3) & 204---Contempt of Court Ordinance (V of 2003), S. 4(2)---District judiciary---Security---Marshalls of the Court---Importance of district judiciary to have its own security personnel independent from the district administration and police highlighted.

It is axiomatic that the independence of the judiciary rests on judicial, financial and administrative autonomy. However, the administrative autonomy has been somewhat wanting over the years in the area of security of judges. The security and protection of judges is not an internal function of the judiciary but is dependent on and in control of the executive. The district judiciary protects the common people at the grassroots level against the misuse or abuse of executive power by the district administration and police. This check has an inherent potential to create tension between the district judiciary and the district administration and police. It is perhaps time for the district judiciary to have its own security personnel, somewhat parallel to the internationally recognized 'judicial marshals' or 'marshalls of the court'. The separation of the judiciary from the executive is a constitutional command and must be actualized in all its facets at the earliest. The district judiciary should be independent in all respects and in particular in the matter of its security from the district administration and police, and the High Courts should take up this matter with the respective Provincial Governments and progressively proceed in establishing their own security agency, like their Process Serving Agency. However, until then the High Courts should take stern action against the district executive officers involved in illegal confrontational acts with the district judiciary under the Contempt of Court Ordinance, 2003.

Per Shahid Waheed, J.; agreeing with Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. with his separate note.

(h) Administration of justice---

----Criminal liability of a judge for non-judicial acts---Judicial title does not render its holder immune from responsibility even when the criminal act is committed behind the shield of judicial office---Immunity from criminal liability does not extend to non-judicial acts, and thus, a judge cannot in any way escape criminal liability and can be arrested.

Braatelien v. United States 147 F.2d 888 at 895 ref.

(i) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 203---District judiciary---Precautionary measures to be observed by the executive while taking action under criminal law against the judges of District judiciary stated.

(i) If a judicial officer of the District Judiciary is to be arrested for some offence, it should be done under intimation to the nominee of the concerned High Court;

(ii) If facts and circumstances necessitate the immediate arrest of a judicial officer of the District Judiciary, a technical or formal arrest may be effected; and the facts of such arrest should be immediately communicated to the nominee of the concerned High Court;

(iii) The Judicial Officer so arrested shall not be taken to a police station, without the prior order or directions of the nominee of the concerned High Court;

(iv) Immediate facilities shall be provided to the Judicial Officer of communication with his family members, legal advisers and the District and Sessions Judge of his District;

(v) No statement of a Judicial Officer who is under arrest be recorded, nor any medical tests be conducted except in the presence of the legal adviser of the Judicial Officer concerned or another Judicial Officer of equal or higher rank, if available; and

(vi) There should be no handcuffing of a Judicial Officer. If, however, violent resistance to arrest is offered or there is imminent need to effect physical arrest to avert danger to life and limb, the person resisting arrest may be overpowered and handcuffed. In such case, immediate report shall be made to the District and Sessions Judge concerned and also to the nominee of the High Court. But the burden would be on the Police/ executive to establish the necessity for effecting the physical arrest and handcuffing of the Judicial Officer, and if it is found that the physical arrest and handcuffing of the Judicial Officer was unjustified, the Police Officers causing or responsible for such arrest and handcuffing would be guilty of misconduct and would also be personally liable for compensation and damages as may be summarily determined by the High Court.

Delhi Judicial Service Association, Tis Hazari Court, Delhi v. State of Gujarat and others AIR 1991 SC 2176 ref.

The above guidelines oblige each High Court to issue a notification, exercising its powers under Article 203 of the Constitution, for the nomination of a person, not less than the rank/grade of a District and Sessions Judge, who will attend to such criminal proceedings in which a judge of the District Judiciary is found involved, so as to ensure transparency and fair trial.

Amanullah Kanrani, Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Appellant.

Malik Javed Iqbal Wains, Additional A.G.P., M. Ayaz Khan Swati, Additional A.G., Balochistan and Kamran Murtaza, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 7th June, 2023.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Through the present appeal, the appellant has challenged the order of the Balochistan High Court, dated 06.11.2019, passed in a suo motu contempt proceeding. The High Court has, by the said order, convicted the appellant under the Contempt of Court Ordinance 2003 and sentenced him to imprisonment till rising of the court with a fine of Rs.5000/-.

2. Briefly, the factual background of the case is that the appellant was posted as Assistant Commissioner at district Kalat, while respondent No.2, Muhammad Zahid, was serving there as Qazi (a judicial office equivalent to that of a Civil Judge), in the District Judiciary. On 16 February 2016, without the registration of an FIR, at about 03:15 p.m., the appellant raided the official residence of the Qazi, assaulted and arrested him, on the allegation of his having illicit relations with Bibi Zubaida, a police constable, whose civil suit for correction of the date of her birth was pending adjudication in the Court of the Qazi. Bibi Zubaida was also recovered from the house of the Qazi at that time. The appellant then took the Qazi barefoot to the Levies Line, Kalat instead of the Police Station concerned. The Qazi was kept confined there for about 6 hours without registration of any criminal case against him and was released on that night at 09:00 p.m. with the intervention of the Commissioner and the District and Sessions Judge.

3. This incident was reported by the District and Sessions Judge, Kalat, on 17 February, to the Registrar, Baluchistan High Court. On 18 February, the Registrar placed the report before the Hon'ble Vacation Judge, who observed that the report raised serious issues as to judicial independence in relation to the judicial service. The Hon'ble Judge formulated certain questions in this regard and directed the Registrar to place the matter before the Hon'ble Chief Justice. The Registrar put up the matter before the Hon'ble Chief Justice, who ordered to treat the report as a Constitution Petition and fix it for hearing before a Division Bench. Accordingly, the report of the District and Sessions Judge was registered as constitution petition No. 41 of 2016, and the same was fixed for hearing before a Division Bench of the High Court. On 19 February, the Division Bench constituted a Commission consisting of an Hon'ble Judge of the High Court to probe into the matter and file his report. The Commission, after making a thorough inquiry into the facts, submitted its detailed report on 2 May 2016.

4. In its report, the Commission reported that the Qazi had issued warrants of arrest of the appellant in the execution proceedings of a decree and to avenge that, the appellant in connivance with Bibi Zubaida trapped the Qazi while the lust of the Qazi provided the opportunity for this trap. The Commission also reported that to satisfy his ego, the appellant mishandled the Qazi in arresting and taking him barefoot to Levies Line and did not proceed against the Qazi, a judicial officer, in accordance with law. On this report of the Commission, the Division Bench issued notices to the appellant and the Qazi. In response thereto, the Qazi tendered his resignation while the appellant submitted his "unqualified apology". The Division Bench of the High Court considered his "unqualified apology" but thought it fit not to exonerate the appellant of the charge and instead took a lenient view and awarded a lesser punishment. Hence, this appeal by the appellant.

5. The learned counsel for the appellant contended that the High Court has no power to suo motu exercise its constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution on the report of the District and Sessions Judge and placed reliance in this regard on Imran Khattak v. Sofia Khattak (2014 SCMR 122). His next main contention was that while proceeding against the appellant under the Contempt of Court Ordinance, the High Court has not provided him with a fair trial and due process to which he was entitled under Article 10A of the Constitution. Alternatively, he made the submission that in case this Court maintains the conviction and sentence of the appellant, it may pronounce that the conviction and sentence of the appellant for contempt would not affect his service. On the other hand, the learned counsel for the respondents controverted these contentions, supported the impugned order and also opposed the alternate prayer.

6. We have considered the contentions of the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record of the case.

7. As for the first contention, the High Court has not passed any order in the present matter in the exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ("Constitution"). Therefore, the said contention is only academic and does not arise in the facts of the case at hand. It is not disputed that the High Court had the jurisdiction to initiate suo motu the contempt proceeding against the appellant on the report of the District and Sessions Judge. Numbering the matter as a constitution petition instead of a contempt proceeding is only an error of procedure, which does not affect the jurisdiction of the High Court. Needless to reiterate the well-settled legal position that the mentioning of a wrong or inapplicable provision of law or non-mentioning of the applicable provision of law while exercising the jurisdiction or power which is otherwise vested in a court, tribunal or authority, does not by itself have any fatal consequences.[1]

8. While elaborating his second contention, the learned counsel for the appellant submitted that if the High Court was not to accept the apology of the appellant, it should have framed a proper charge against the appellant, examined the witnesses in his presence and allowed him to cross-examine them. This submission appears to have been made in the oblivion of the import of an unqualified apology. An unqualified apology tendered by the person accused of having committed the contempt of court necessarily means that he admits his guilt and submits the apology in the realization of the fact that he has done a wrong, for which he repents and seeks forgiveness.[2] In cases where the accused tenders an unqualified apology, there remains no need of framing the charge and recording the evidence. Therefore, the conviction of the appellant by the High Court on the basis of his admission made through submitting an unqualified apology does not in any way offend Article 10-A of the Constitution.

9. It is, however, true that when the accused offers an unqualified apology at an early stage of the contempt proceeding as a sincere and profound remorse, the courts generally drop such proceeding and discharge the accused while warning him to be careful in the future. However, this is not an absolute rule to be followed invariably in all cases. The exceptional facts and circumstances of a case may justify departure from this general rule. The courts may, despite the submission of an unqualified apology, convict the accused in the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case and may treat his apology only as a mitigating circumstance to impose a lesser punishment.[3]

10. In the present case, the High Court has observed that the act of assaulting and manhandling the Qazi, a judge, in the general public while arresting him was a flagrant attempt to undermine and lower the authority of district courts. The majority of the people have recourse to these courts for adjudication of their disputes. It is, therefore, in the public interest to protect the honour and authority of these courts. We fully endorse these observations of the High Court and find that they justify the exercise of its discretion by the High Court in not discharging the appellant on his unqualified apology and for considering his apology only as a mitigating circumstance to impose a lesser punishment.

11. It is important to reiterate that the 'District Judiciary is the backbone of our judicial system', as observed by this Court in Hasnain Raza,[4] 'and the judges of the District Judiciary perform the onerous task of dispensing justice at the frontline by dealing with a large number of cases in a difficult and demanding environment'. As per the Judicial Statistics of Pakistan of the year 2021,[5] the percentage of the cases handled by the district judiciary is 82% of the total pendency of cases in Pakistan.[6] The district judiciary thus forms the foundational constituent of the justice system.

12. It is imperative to protect and safeguard the district judiciary from any executive onslaught or intrusion that may weaken its institutional independence or tends to lower its judicial fiat and brings it into disrespect. The need to protect judicial independence and safeguard the prestige and honour of the judges is essential to protect the public confidence and public trust reposed in the judiciary. Public confidence and trust in the courts rests on independence, impartiality, neutrality, openness and transparency of the judicial system; it lends the court its high moral authority and its decisions, unquestionable legitimacy. The courts being guardians of the rights of the people must be insulated and walled against any intrusion that weakens its fiat and prestige. This protection applies at all levels of the judiciary, from the constitutional courts to the frontline courts in the district. The Constitution protects the constitutional court judges through the power of contempt under Article 204 of the Constitution and through the Supreme Judicial Council established under Article 209 of the Constitution, while it is Article 203 of the Constitution that safeguards the judges of the district judiciary by placing them under the protective umbrella of the High Court of the respective Province.

13. Although the Supreme Court of Pakistan as the apex court of the country is the custodian of justice as well as of the courts dispensing justice throughout the land, the primary duty to ensure the protection of district judiciary is of the High Courts under whose supervision and control it functions. This duty is inherent in and concomitant with the power to supervise and control vested in the High Courts under Article 203 of the Constitution.[7] In line with this constitutional mandate, the Legislature has conferred upon the High Courts the power to punish a contempt committed in relation to any court of the district judiciary.[8] The Balochistan High Court has, in the present case, exercised its power under the Contempt of Court Ordinance to protect the authority of the district courts and to safeguard the administration of justice by them from falling into disrespect and disrepute, and has performed its constitutional duty of protecting the independence of the judiciary by safeguarding the sanctity and prestige of the judges of district judiciary - our bastions of justice and an integral part of the judiciary envisaged under Article 175 of the Constitution.

14. Unlike the popular belief that the law of contempt protects the courts and judges, the real purpose of this law, as observed by this Court in Khalid Masood,[9] is the protection of the public interest and more importantly public confidence in the justice system. Even though the courts are the creation of the Constitution or the law, their real strength and power base lie in the confidence reposed in them by the public. Therefore, anything which is intended to damage the public confidence in the authority of courts is remedied by an action under the law of contempt. Since the bulk of the judicial workload in the country is primarily dealt with by the district judiciary and most of the public approach them in pursuit of justice, it is of utmost importance that the public confidence in the authority of such courts is preserved and maintained.

15. The act of assaulting and insulting while arresting a judge of the district judiciary, in this case, in open public gaze without any prior information to the District and Sessions Judge or the High Court is unprecedented. The High Court has taken a lenient view in the matter of imposing punishment on the appellant because of his tendering an unqualified apology at the very early stage of the contempt proceeding and his young age. In the facts and circumstances of the case, we find that the discretion exercised by the High Court in convicting the appellant for contempt and considering his unqualified apology only as a mitigating circumstance for imposing lesser punishment is proper and reasonable, which does not call for any interference by this Court in its appellate jurisdiction.

16. The incident involved in the present case, however, brings to light a much-neglected area that weighs heavily on the independence of the judiciary. It is axiomatic that the independence of the judiciary rests on judicial, financial and administrative autonomy. However, the administrative autonomy has been somewhat wanting over the years in the area of security of judges. The security and protection of judges is not an internal function of the judiciary but is dependent on and in control of the executive. The district judiciary protects the common people at the grassroots level against the misuse or abuse of executive power by the district administration and police. This check has an inherent potential to create tension between the district judiciary and the district administration and police. We are apprised that there have been some instances in the past when the district police officers, who were annoyed with some judicial orders of the district courts, had withdrawn the police officials performing security duties in the district judiciary or with the judges thereof. It is perhaps time for the district judiciary to have its own security personnel, somewhat parallel to the internationally recognized judicial marshals' or 'marshalls of the court'. The courts in some countries have their own security force.[10] The separation of the judiciary from the executive is a constitutional command[11] and must be actualized in all its facets at the earliest. In our view, the district judiciary should be independent in all respects and in particular in the matter of its security from the district administration and police, and the High Courts should take up this matter with the respective Provincial Governments and progressively proceed in establishing their own security agency, like their Process Serving Agency. However, until then the High Courts should take stern action against the district executive officers involved in illegal confrontational acts with the district judiciary under the Contempt of Court Ordinance.

17. Lastly, we deal with the alternate prayer of the appellant as to pronouncing that his conviction and sentence for contempt would not affect his service. In this regard, we observe that the High Court has not made any direction to the departmental authority of the appellant to take any disciplinary action against him. It appears that the High Court has left it to the discretion of the departmental authority of the appellant to decide in its discretion whether or not to initiate any disciplinary action against him. We also would not pre-empt the exercise of its discretion by the departmental authority in either way.

18. For the above reasons, we find that the present appeal is devoid of any merit. It is, therefore, dismissed.

Shahid Waheed, J

SHAHID WAHEED, J.---In the prelude, I want to say that analysis of facts, application of law to that, observations, and the conclusion drawn from there by my learned brother Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J., in his proposed judgment, while dismissing this appeal, are well sorted out, so I respectfully concur with them. However, as the facts of this case paint a picture of one of the despicable modus operandi of the executive to shackle the independence of the judiciary, I wish to record my additional note to supplement the main judgment and will confine myself to appraise whether the precautions as ordered by the High Court to the executive to be observed for the prevention of such attempts in future are valid.

2. In the beginning, it is to be noted that it is the will of the people of our country to establish a system that upholds the principles of democracy, freedom, equality, tolerance, social justice and fully preserve the independence of the judiciary.[1] Based on these aspirations, our Constitution promotes the rule of law while protecting the independence of the judiciary. It is important to note that judicial independence is usually defined in terms of freedom from outside influence. Judges who face pressure, harassment, intimidation, undue criticism, or consequences for the merits of their decisions encounter difficulty in deciding cases impartially. As such, the outside influence is deemed a factor that impinges upon their independence. Accordingly, great efforts are required to be made to neutralise those influences and to insulate judges from any potential retaliation of their decisions, so as to give them sufficient protection.[2] Such an effort will, in turn, serve threefold purposes. Firstly, it will protect judicial independence; secondly, it will avoid continual attacks upon judges who may be sincere in their conduct; and thirdly, it will protect the system of justice from falling into disrepute.[3]

3. It is a common fact that most people ordinarily approach the District Judiciary to resolve their disputes. As such, it serves as the primary interface between the justice system and the people. It will not be an overstatement if I say that a trial court judge, for an ordinary common citizen, is the human face of the law. It is, therefore, necessary that the District Judiciary should be honest, fearless and free from any pressure and should be able to achieve the preambular goal of justice by deciding cases only according to the law without being influenced by any external pressure.

4. The above prefatory observations bring me to examine the statutory provisions of the law to ascertain their intent and the extent to which they protect the independence of judges. It is also essential to do so because, after this analysis, I will be able to determine whether further safeguards are needed to protect the independence of judges. So, I proceed. The first law on the subject was enacted in 1850 and is called the Judicial Officers' Protection Act, and its solitary provision is as follows:

"No judge, Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, Collector or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court for any act done or ordered to be done by him in the discharge of his judicial duty, whether or not within the limits of his jurisdiction: Provided that he at the time, in good faith, believed himself to have jurisdiction to do or order the act complained of; and no officer of any Court or other person, bound to execute the lawful warrants or orders of any such Judge, Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, Collector or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court, for the execution of any warrant or order, which he would be bound to execute, if within the jurisdiction of the person issuing the same."

This section unequivocally affords protection to two broad categories of acts done or ordered to be done by a judicial officer in his judicial capacity. In the first category falls those acts which are within the limits of his jurisdiction. The second category encompasses those acts which may not be within the jurisdiction of the judicial officer, but are, nevertheless, done or ordered to be done by him, believing in good faith that he had jurisdiction to do them or order them to be done.

5. That apart, Pakistan's criminal law also provides some immunity to judges. The Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 (P.P.C.), in its section 77, lays down that any activity done by a judge in the exercise of the power he has been granted, which he believes to have done in good faith, given to him by the law, is not liable for any offence. This particular section protects and gives the judicial officers immunity for any act done in good faith. Another section of the P.P.C. that deals with the issue is 228, and it states that if any insult or interruption is caused by a person towards another public servant who is part of an ongoing legal proceeding, then the person causing such trouble will be liable to simple imprisonment extendable up to six months along with a fine. This section, again, provides a form of immunity to the public servants who are judges in this case.

6. We find some more protection in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Cr.P.C). Its section 480, provides a procedure in cases of contempt of court and grants powers to the judge to initiate relevant contempt proceedings against an offender as the judge may deem fit. This provision also grants power to a judge to take cognizance of an offence after allowing the offender an opportunity to show the cause of their acts before punishing them with a fine or imprisonment. Be it noted that section 197, Cr.P.C, too previously provided protection to judges but it was declared repugnant to the injunctions of Islam by the judgment of the Shariat Appellate Bench of this Court and as such, this provision has ceased to have effect.[4]

7. Exemption from arrest under civil process is also available. According to section 135 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, no Judge, Magistrate or other Judicial Officer shall be liable to arrest under civil process while going to, presiding in, or returning from his Court.

8. The general proposition evident from the above mentioned statutory provisions is that no action will lie against a judge for any acts done or words spoken in his judicial capacity in a court of justice. They mandate that judges in all courts, appointed to administer the law be allowed to administer it under the protection of the law freely and independently, without favour and fear. In my opinion, these provisions of the law are also for the benefit of the public, apart from the protection of judges, whose interest is that judges should be at liberty to discharge their functions with independence and without fear of consequences. If I were to summarise the intent of these statutory provisions, I would do so by adapting the words of Lord Denning.[5] Each judge should be protected from liability when he is acting judicially. Each should be able to do his work in complete independence and free from fear. He should not have to turn the pages of his book with trembling fingers, asking himself: "If I do this, shall I be liable to any action?"

9. The above position of law makes it pellucid that it does not attend to such an eventuality when the executive, being the largest litigant, misuses its powers to prosecute the judge and to force him to compromise his independence. This predicament, under the prevailing circumstances of our over-litigious society, has gained much importance, and the present case is an illustrative example. It will not be amiss if to explain this matter, I briefly state its facts here. The appellant before us was the Assistant Commissioner of the area at the relevant time and was involved in some litigation pending before the Qazi/Judge and bailable warrants were issued against him. He resented it, and it appears that at the end of the trial, he used some of the weak points of the Qazi/Judge's personal life to set a trap and apprehend him under the pretence that he had committed a criminal offence. However, on enquiry, this proved to be a sham and a malicious attempt to make the Qazi/Judge realise the consequences of taking a decision against the executive. It was clearly an abuse of power to discredit the Qazi/Judge. I must say that the High Court, in the given circumstances, meeting all the requirements of a fair trial, rightly convicted the appellant of contempt of Court. It is not necessary to go further into the facts and the application of law thereon, as it has already been elaborated in the main judgment. Lest I lose the thread, I return to the moot question.

10. The questions for me to consider is whether criminal proceedings can be instituted against a judge of the District Judiciary for acts unrelated to his judicial functions, whether an FIR can be recorded against him under section 154, Cr.P.C., and if yes, is it desirable to ask the executive to follow certain precautions while doing so? The sufficient answer to all facets of this question is yes. As to the first two parts of the question, there can be no doubt, and it is well settled that the judicial title does not render its holder immune from responsibility even when the criminal act is committed behind the shield of judicial office.[6] Immunity from criminal liability does not extend to non-judicial acts, and thus, a judge cannot in any way escape criminal liability and can be arrested.

11. I now enter upon the last important aspect of the moot whether it will conduce to the independence of the judiciary if some precautionary measures are ordered to the executive to be observed while taking actions under the criminal law against the judges of District Judiciary, to ensure that the unfortunate incident we experienced here does not happen again. This matter may be viewed from the standpoint of the Constitution. Our Constitution is an expression of the basic values of our system. Those values reflect ethical values of morality and justice; they include values relating to public order, judicial independence, separation of powers, and rule of law. This is why, on the one hand, our Constitution believes in the promotion of good and, on the other, at the same time, in the prevention of evil. As such, here we are faced with a situation of balancing these basic values. There is no settled legal principle which provides us with an answer to what weight is to be assigned to each value and how to balance them; nevertheless, the weighing and balancing of the conflicting values should be: (i) a rational process, manifesting reason, not fiat; (ii) objective, reflecting consensus and shared values of the society, not personal values; (iii) based on traditions or precedents; and (iv) in a manner that it may fit into the general structure of the institutional-government system; and while doing so, the approach should be holistic.

12. Keeping the above principle in mind, when an empirical study of the ground reality is conducted, it comes to light that not only is there an increase in frivolous and unwarranted criticism and complaints against the judges of the District Judiciary, but also the size of false criminal cases is getting bigger. External pressure in the form of unfounded criticism or by way of lodging false criminal case causes a significant injury to the dignity and independence of a judge. Although under the law, a person is presumed to be innocent until proven guilty but the society in which we live today, presumes a judge guilty once accused, irrespective of whether a false complaint has been made or later even when he gets discharged. An innocent, stigmatised by false implications, has to carry this irreparable stigma throughout his life span, and its shadow on his next generations also leaves a dark impression. Despite all these odds, the judges of the District Judiciary must be aware of the shared values of our society, and must also understand that judging is not merely a job. It is a way of life. So, as the saying goes, the robe magnifies the conduct; he ought to maintain the dignity of the office at all times and avoid both impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in his professional and personal life.

13. Indubitably, judiciary is the platform where a common man hopes for justice, even if the case is against the government. So, any offensive and outrageous conduct, either by a judge or the executive, breaks down the very fibre of what is necessary for a functional judiciary. Appraising the above-stated values of our society on a legal principle which states that no one is above the law, no one is below it, and all are equal, it is safe to conclude that it would be injurious to the health of the society if certain mandatory precautions are not suggested to the executive, while dealing with a criminal case in which a judge of the District Judiciary is found to be involved. I am therefore of the view that to maintain a balance between two constitutional values, to wit, preserving the independence of the judiciary and ensuring the prevention of crime while maintaining the rule of law, the guidelines suggested by the High Court[7] fit into the institutional-government system, and it will be tider and safer to order them to be observed with the following modifications:

(i) If a judicial officer of the District Judiciary is to be arrested for some offence, it should be done under intimation to the nominee of the concerned High Court;

(ii) If facts and circumstances necessitate the immediate arrest of a judicial officer of the District Judiciary, a technical or formal arrest may be effected; and the facts of such arrest should be immediately communicated to the nominee of the concerned High Court.

(iii) The Judicial Officer so arrested shall not be taken to a police station, without the prior order or directions of the nominee of the concerned High Court;

(iv) Immediate facilities shall be provided to the Judicial Officer of communication with his family members, legal advisers and the District and Sessions Judge of his District;

(v) No statement of a Judicial Officer who is under arrest be recorded, nor any medical tests be conducted except in the presence of the legal adviser of the Judicial Officer concerned or another Judicial Office of equal or higher rank, if available; and

(vi) There should be no handcuffing of a Judicial Officer. If, however, violent resistance to arrest is offered or there is imminent need to effect physical arrest to avert danger to life and limb, the person resisting arrest may be overpowered and handcuffed. In such case, immediate report shall be made to the District and Sessions Judge concerned and also to the nominee of the High Court. But the burden would be on the Police/ executive to establish the necessity for effecting the physical arrest and handcuffing of the Judicial Officer, and if it is found that the physical arrest and handcuffing of the Judicial Officer was unjustified, the Police Officers causing or responsible for such arrest and handcuffing would be guilty of misconduct and would also be personally liable for compensation and damages as may be summarily determined by the High Court.

The above guidelines oblige each High Court to issue a notification, exercising its powers under Article 203 of the Constitution, for the nomination of a person, not less than the rank/grade of a District and Sessions Judge, who will attend to such criminal proceedings in which a judge of the District Judiciary is found involved, so as to ensure transparency and fair trial. It is expected that this will be done expeditiously.

14. I, having expressed the above opinion while agreeing with the views and conclusions expressed in the main judgment, do not find any ground to interfere with the matter. The appellant must, therefore, fail in his appeal, and it is dismissed.

(a) Customs Act (IV of 1969)---

----Ss. 181 & 223---SRO 574(I)/2005 dated 06.06.2005 ("SRO 574"), vires of---Option to pay fine in lieu of confiscated goods---Officers of customs to follow Board's orders, etc.---Whether SRO 574 issued by the Federal Board of Revenue in exercise of its powers under section 181 of the Customs Act 1969 ("Act") is ultra vires the proviso to section 223 of the Act---Legislative and administrative orders issued by the Federal Board of Revenue under sections 181 & 223 of the Customs Act 1969---Extent, scope and nature of such orders explained.

Per Munib Akhtar, J. (Majority view):

The case put forward by the appellants was that SRO 574(I)/2005 dated 06.06.2005 ("SRO 574") was ultra vires section 223 of the Customs Act, 1969 ('the Act'); that this was so because it unlawfully interfered with the discretion granted by the main part of section 181 of the Act to the concerned officer to "give the owner of the goods an option to pay in lieu of the confiscation of the goods such fine as the officer thinks fit"; that the second proviso made the notification issued by the FBR (i.e., SRO 574) binding thereby wholly depriving the officer of the discretion conferred on him. This, according to the appellants, could not be done by the FBR by reason of section 223 of the Act.

The order made by the concerned officer under section 181 is not in exercise of quasi-judicial functions. It is in exercise of a statutory power, and is in the nature of an administrative or executive order. Secondly, if the submissions made by the appellants are accepted that would in effect reduce the second proviso of section 181 to redundancy. This would be so because any exercise of the statutory power thereby conferred would "interfere" with the power conferred on the officer of customs under the main part. The result would be that the power under the second proviso could never be exercised, i.e., would be made redundant. Thirdly, appellants misunderstood section 223. This section is not exclusive to the Act; it is to be found in all fiscal statutes, cast in nearly identical terms. It confers a broad and general power, of an administrative and executive nature, on the FBR (in its capacity as the body at apex of the fiscal hierarchy) to supervise, control and guide the tax authorities in the discharge of their duties and functions under the tax laws. However, some of those powers and duties are of a quasi-judicial nature such as, e.g., those conferred on officers holding an appellate post (Collector (Appeals)) or exercising powers in revision. It would obviously be wrong in principle (and contrary to the well-established jurisprudence of the Supreme Court and the High Courts) for the FBR to be in a position to influence or affect the proceedings of such authorities. Hence, the proviso. It is not to be regarded as a standalone provision; it makes sense only when read along with the main part of section 223.

The power exercised by the FBR in terms of the provisos to section 181 is not an exercise of the general statutory power conferred by section 223. That is, a notification issued under section 181 is not some general administrative or executive order, instruction or direction given by the FBR. It is rather the exercise of a specific and separate statutory power conferred under a different provision for a distinct purpose.

Sections 181 and 223 are separate and distinct, one from the other. The effect of the submissions made by the appellants would however be to conflate and merge the two, one into the other. SRO 574 cannot therefore be regarded as ultra vires section 223 of the Act. Appeals were dismissed.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J.

The power exercised by the customs officer under section 181 of the Customs Act, 1969 ('the Act') is quasi-judicial in nature. An order passed by the customs officer, in exercise of his discretion under section 181 of the Act, giving or not giving the owner of the goods an option to pay in lieu of the confiscation of the goods such fine as he thinks fit, being ancillary to his power of confiscating the goods and involving the exercise of discretion, is quasi-judicial and not administrative or executive in nature.

M.A. Rahman v. Federation of Pakistan 1988 SCMR 691; Tariq Transport Company v. Sargodha-Bhera Bus Service PLD 1958 SC 437; Messrs Faridsons Ltd. v. Government of Pakistan PLD 1961 SC 537 and Dr. Zahid Javed v. Dr. Tahir Riaz PLD 2016 SC 637 ref.

The orders made by the Federal Board of Revenue ('the Board') under the provisos to section 181 and the orders, instructions or directions issued by it under section 223 of the Act are two different species: one passes for delegated legislative power while the other is merely recognition of administrative supervisory power of the Board. Section 223 provides that officers of customs and other persons employed in the execution of the Act are to observe and follow the orders, instructions and directions of the Board. Under the said provision, the Act is recognizing or acknowledging that the Board has the power to issue orders, instructions and directions to all the officers of customs and that any such orders, instructions and directions issued by the Board shall be binding on the officers of customs in execution of the Act. This statutory acknowledgement of the power of the Board to issue administrative orders, instructions and directions to all the customs officers has no bearing on the rights of the third parties. Section 181 of the Act, on the other hand, provides for giving an option to the owner of goods to pay fine in lieu of confiscation of goods, and its provisos authorize the Board to specify, by an order, any goods or class of goods where such option shall not be given and also to fix the amount of fine, which in lieu of confiscation shall be imposed on any goods or class of goods. The delegation of power under the provisos to the Board, thus, passes for delegated legislation and affects third party rights. The two species of power, therefore, do not conflate or converge.

The Legislature by enacting the first proviso to section 181 has delegated the power to the Board for creating exception to the application of the main provisions of the Section to certain goods or class of goods, and by the second proviso delegated such power for limiting the discretion of the adjudicating customs officer in fixing the amount of fine which he, in lieu of confiscation, can impose on certain goods or class of goods under the main provisions of the Section. An order made by the Board under the powers conferred on it by any one of the two provisos to section 181 is, thus, delegated legislation. Once the Board validly makes such order, it partakes the colour and authority of a statutory instrument. It is read as part of section 181 and has the force of law accordingly. Such order having the force of law is, therefore, binding on the adjudicating customs officer while performing his quasi-judicial function under section 181.

Collector of Customs v. Muhammad Tasleem 2002 MLD 296 and Collector Customs v. Salman Khan 2015 PTD 1733 affirmed.

Collector of Customs v. Wali Khan 2017 SCMR 585 and Maqbool Ahmed v. Customs Appellate Tribunal 2009 SCMR 226 ref.

The orders, instructions and directions issued by the Board under section 223 to the Customs Officers are, therefore, administrative/ executive in character as only the customs officers and other persons employed in the execution of the Act are bound to observe and follow them. Such orders, instructions and directions are not binding on the assessees or other persons whose matters are to be dealt with under the Act. As a corollary, they are also not binding on customs officers who exercise quasi-judicial functions as well as on the appellate authority/tribunal and the courts. They being not applicable to and enforceable against all concerned, thus, lack generality - an essential characteristic of a legislative instrument. They are also limited to the administrative matters dealt with by the customs officers in the execution of the Act, and can be issued by the Board only in respect of matters falling within the range of the administrative functions of the customs officers.

State Bank of Travancore v. Commissioner of Income Tax AIR 1986 SC 757; Messrs Central Insurance Co. v. CBR 1993 SCMR 1232 and Collector of Customs v. Askari Cement 2020 SCMR 649 ref.

The provisos to Section 181 and the SROs issued thereunder, thus, do not conflict in any manner with the proviso to section 223 of the Act as the latter relates to the administrative orders, instructions or directions of the Board, and not to the legislative order of the Board.

Date of hearing: 26th May, 2021.

JUDGMENT

MUNIB AKHTAR, J.---These two appeals arise under the Customs Act, 1969 ("Act") and raise the same questions of law, on facts that can broadly be regarded as similar. The appeals are against two separate judgments of the High Court. In C.A. 24-Q of 2014 (hereinafter the "first appeal") a writ petition filed by the appellant (hereinafter the "first appellant") was dismissed by judgment dated 20.09.20 10 (hereinafter the "first judgment"). In the other matter, C.A. 26-Q of 2018 (hereinafter the "second appeal"), a tax reference filed by the department was allowed by means of the judgment dated 15.07.2013 (hereinafter the "second judgment", the appellant being the "second appellant"). Leave was granted in the first appeal vide order dated 30.09.2014. In the other matter leave was granted vide order dated 28.11.2018 on the ground, inter alia, that it involved the same questions as in the first appeal.

2. The facts can be stated briefly. In the first appeal, the truck of the first appellant was confiscated on the ground that it was carrying smuggled goods. In the second appeal, a coach operated by the second appellant (and used to transport goods and passengers) was confiscated on the same ground. The charge of such smuggling stands established for present purposes in each case. The case of each appellant was that his conveyance was merely transporting goods (and/or passengers), with which the appellant had no concern whatsoever. Insofar as the conveyances were concerned, each appellant was given the option of their release on payment of a redemption fine under section 181 of the Act. That provision is as follows:

"181. Option to pay fine in lieu of confiscated goods.---Whenever an order for the confiscation of goods is passed under this Act, the officer passing the order may give the owner of the goods an option to pay in lieu of the confiscation of the goods such fine as the officer thinks fit:

Provided that the Board may, by an order, specify the goods or class of goods where such option shall not be given:

Provided further that the Board may, by an order, fix the amount of fine which, in lieu of confiscation, shall be imposed on any goods or class of goods imported in violation of the provisions of section 15 or of a notification issued under section 16, or any other law for the time being in force.

Explanation.- Any fine in lieu of confiscation of goods imposed under this section shall be in addition to any duty and charges payable in respect of such goods, and of any penalty that might have been imposed in addition to the confiscation of goods."

In exercise of the powers granted under the two provisos, the Board (i.e., the Federal Board of Revenue) has issued notifications from time to time. The one relevant for present purposes was SRO 574(I)/ 2005 dated 06.06.2005 ("SRO 574") whereby (as presently relevant) the redemption fine for release of conveyances confiscated in circumstances as those of the appellants' was 30%. This option was, as noted, given to the appellants. The first appellant filed a petition in the High Court challenging SRO 574 as being ultra vires the Act. It may be noted that at the same time departmental proceedings regarding the confiscation of the truck, and option to pay the redemption fine, also reached the High Court by way of a tax reference filed by the first appellant. The learned High Court, by means of the first judgment whereby a number of matters were decided, dismissed the petition. However, insofar as the tax reference was concerned the High Court was pleased to remand the matter (along with those in several other tax references) for fresh determination in light of the observations made in the judgment. The first appellant approached this Court against the dismissal of his writ petition (but not as regards the disposal of his tax reference) and was granted leave to appeal by means of the order dated 30.09.2014.

3. The matter of the second appellant arose, as noted, out of a tax reference. The learned Appellate Tribunal decided in favor of the second appellant and the tax reference, filed by the department, was allowed by means of the second judgment. That led to the second appellant approaching this Court where leave to appeal was granted in terms as stated above.

4. The case put forward by learned counsel for the appellants was that SRO 574 was ultra vires section 223 of the Act. This was so because it unlawfully interfered with the discretion granted by the main part of section 181 to the concerned officer to "give the owner of the goods an option to pay in lieu of the confiscation of the goods such fine as the officer thinks fit". The second proviso made the notification issued by the FBR (i.e., SRO 574) binding thereby wholly depriving the officer of the discretion conferred on him. This, according to learned counsel, could not be done by the FBR by reason of section 223, which may now be set out:

"223. Officers of Customs to follow Board's orders, etc.---All officers of customs and other persons employed in the execution of this Act shall observe and follow the orders, instructions and directions of the Board:

Provided that no such orders, instructions or directions shall be given so as to interfere with the discretion of the appropriate officer of customs in the exercise of their quasi- judicial functions."

Reliance was placed on the proviso to this section, it being contended that the order made by the officer concerned under section 181 was in exercise of quasi-judicial functions. The learned High Court in the first judgment, while holding that the determination of the concerned officer under section 181 was of a quasi-judicial nature nonetheless held that SRO 574 (and its predecessor) were not ultra vires the Act. The petition filed by the first appellant was accordingly dismissed. In the other matter the learned High Court allowed the tax reference filed by the department by relying on an unreported judgment of this Court (which is, unfortunately, only partially identified (Said Gul v. Collector of Customs and others) and which could not be traced here).

5. We have heard learned counsel as above and considered the provisions involved. In our view, the appeals must fail for the following reasons. Firstly, and with respect to the learned High Court, the order made by the concerned officer under section 181 is not in exercise of quasi-judicial functions. It is in exercise of a statutory power, and is in the nature of an administrative or executive order. Secondly, if the submissions made by learned counsel are accepted that would in effect reduce the second proviso of section 181 to redundancy. This would be so because any exercise of the statutory power thereby conferred would "interfere" with the power conferred on the officer of customs under the main part. The result would be that the power under the second proviso could never be exercised, i.e., would be made redundant. It is well settled that redundancy is not to be lightly imputed, and an interpretation that yields such a result is to be avoided if at all possible. Yet, that would precisely be the effect of the case put forward by the appellants. Thirdly, learned counsel have, with respect, misunderstood section 223. This section is not exclusive to the Act; it is to be found in all fiscal statutes, cast in nearly identical terms. It confers a broad and general power, of an administrative and executive nature, on the FBR (in its capacity as the body at apex of the fiscal hierarchy) to supervise, control and guide the tax authorities in the discharge of their duties and functions under the tax laws. However, some of those powers and duties are of a quasi-judicial nature such as, e.g., those conferred on officers holding an appellate post (Collector (Appeals)) or exercising powers in revision. It would obviously be wrong in principle (and contrary to the well established jurisprudence of this Court and the High Courts) for the FBR to be in a position to influence or affect the proceedings of such authorities. Hence, the proviso. It is not to be regarded as a standalone provision; it makes sense only when read along with the main part of section 223. Now, the power exercised by the FBR in terms of the provisos to section 181 is not an exercise of the general statutory power conferred by section 223. That is, a notification issued under section 181 is not some general administrative or executive order, instruction or direction given by the FBR. It is rather the exercise of a specific and separate statutory power conferred under a different provision for a distinct purpose. That purpose has been considered and highlighted by the learned High Court in the first judgment. Sections 181 and 223 are separate and distinct, one from the other. The effect of the submissions made by learned counsel would however be to conflate and merge the two, one into the other. In our view, that would be to incorrectly appreciate the statutory scheme envisaged by the Act, and a misunderstanding and misapplication of the two sections. SRO 574 cannot therefore be regarded as ultra vires section 223.

6. For the foregoing reasons it was announced in Court at the conclusion of the hearing that the appeals stood dismissed.

Munib Akhtar, J

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---

7. I have had the privilege of reading the judgment authored by my learned brother, Justice Munib Akhtar. While I agree with the conclusion, I arrive at it through a different path of reasoning, which is explained hereunder through this additional note.

8. The question before us is whether SRO No. 574(I)/2005 ("Notification") dated 06.06.2005 issued by the Federal Board of Revenue[1] ("Board") in exercise of its powers under section 181 of the Customs Act 1969 ("Act") is ultra vires the proviso to section 223 of the Act. In other words, can the Notification control or regulate the exercise of quasi-judicial power of a customs officer, inspite of the bar contained in the proviso to section 223 of the Act?

9. It is settled that the power exercised by the customs officer under section 181 is quasi-judicial in nature as is evident from the reading of sections 179-181 of the Act and is also affirmed by a five member Bench of this Court in M.A. Rahman v. Federation (1988 SCMR 691). The power is quasi-judicial if it authorizes a customs officer (not a judicial officer) to settle a dispute relating to the rights and liabilities of a person in respect of ownership of goods after ascertaining certain facts on the basis of relevant material/evidence, thus entailing civil consequences for that person.[2] Likewise, an order passed by the customs officer, in exercise of his discretion under section 181 of the Act, giving or not giving the owner of the goods an option to pay in lieu of the confiscation of the goods such fine as he thinks fit, being ancillary to his power of confiscating the goods and involving the exercise of discretion, is quasi-judicial and not administrative or executive in nature.[3]

10. Coming to the question debated before us i.e., whether the Notification issued by the Board under the powers conferred on it by the provisos to section 181 offends the proviso to section 223 of the Act, which provides that "no such orders, instructions or directions shall be given [by the Board] so as to interfere with the discretion of the appropriate officer of customs in the exercise of their quasi-judicial functions." The orders made by the Board under the provisos to section 181 and the orders, instructions or directions issued by it under section 223 of the Act are two different species: one passes for delegated legislative power while the other is merely recognition of administrative supervisory power of the Board. We know that it is common for the Legislature to confer by an Act on the executive bodies the power to make rules having the force of law - delegation of power to legislate. Thus, the phrase "delegated legislation" covers exercise of that power by an executive body to legislate. This delegation brings under its sway the determination of the rights of the third parties. On the other hand, where the Legislature establishes a hierarchy of officers to execute the provisions of an Act, it usually confers the power to the supervisory and controlling officers to make such orders and directions to the subordinate officers as are considered necessary for efficient performance of their duties under the Act.[4] This conferment or recognition of power is limited and only extends to the officers mentioned under the Act. This power is internal, supervisory and administrative in nature. This is evident from the scope of section 223, which simply provides that officers of customs and other persons employed in the execution of the Act are to observe and follow the orders, instructions and directions of the Board. Under the said provision, the Act is recognizing or acknowledging that the Board has the power to issue orders, instructions and directions to all the officers of customs and that any such orders, instructions and directions issued by the Board shall be binding on the officers of customs in execution of the Act. This statutory acknowledgement of the power of the Board to issue administrative orders, instructions and directions to all the customs officers has no bearing on the rights of the third parties. Section 181 of the Act, on the other hand, provides for giving an option to the owner of goods to pay fine in lieu of confiscation of goods, and its provisos authorize the Board to specify, by an order, any goods or class of goods where such option shall not be given and also to fix the amount of fine, which in lieu of confiscation shall be imposed on any goods or class of goods. The delegation of power under the provisos to the Board, thus, passes for delegated legislation and affects third party rights. The two species of power, therefore, do not conflate or converge.

11. The Legislature has by enacting the first proviso to section 181 has delegated the power to the Board for creating exception to the application of the main provisions of the Section to certain goods or class of goods, and by the second proviso delegated such power for limiting the discretion of the adjudicating customs officer in fixing the amount of fine which he, in lieu of confiscation, can impose on certain goods or class of goods under the main provisions of the Section. An order made by the Board under the powers conferred on it by any one of the two provisos to section 181 is, thus, delegated legislation. Once the Board validly makes such order, it partakes the colour and authority of a statutory instrument. It is read as part of section 181 and has the force of law accordingly. Such order having the force of law is, therefore, binding on the adjudicating customs officer while performing his quasi-judicial function under section 181. I endorse similar views expressed by the Division Benches of the Lahore and Peshawar High Courts in Collector of Customs v. Muhammad Tasleem (2002 MLD 296) and Collector Customs v. Salman Khan (2015 PTD 1733). This Court also has read the SRO No. 574 with section 181 and decided the cases accordingly in Collector of Customs v. Wali Khan (2017 SCMR 585), Maqbool Ahmed v. Customs Appellate Tribunal (2009 SCMR) 226, Said Gul v. Collectorate of Customs (C.Ps. Nos. 95-Q and 96-Q of 2008, decided on 30.04.2009) and a similar previous SRO No. 1374 dated 17.12.1998 in Musa Gul v. Collector Customs (C.P. No. 196-P of 2003 decided on 03.11.2003).

12. The Board being the apex Authority in the hierarchy of Federal Tax Administration, is to supervise, control and guide all the officers performing their functions of tax collection under different tax laws. It has, therefore, been recognized or expressly empowered under almost all the tax laws by enacting the provisions similar to that of Section 223 to issue such orders, instructions and directions to them from time to time as it considers necessary for the proper application and implementation of the various provisions of the relevant tax law, and the officers and other persons employed in the execution of that law are bound to observe and follow them.

13. The orders, instructions and directions issued by the Board under section 223 to the Custom Officers are, therefore, administrative/ executive in character[5] as only the customs officers and other persons employed in the execution of the Act are bound to observe and follow them. Such orders, instructions and directions are not binding on the assessees or other persons whose matters are to be dealt with under the Act. As a corollary, they are also not binding on customs officers who exercise quasi-judicial functions as well as on the appellate authority/ tribunal and the courts. They being not applicable to and enforceable against all concerned, thus, lack generality - an essential characteristic of a legislative instrument. They are also limited to the administrative matters dealt with by the customs officers in the execution of the Act, and can be issued by the Board only in respect of matters falling within the range of the administrative functions of the customs officers as held by this Court in Messrs Central Insurance Co. v. CBR (1993 SCMR 1232)[6] and Collector of Customs v. Askari Cement (2020 SCMR 649). The provisos to Section 181 and the SROs issued thereunder, thus, do not conflict in any manner with the proviso to section 223 of the Act as the latter relates to the administrative orders, instructions or directions of the Board, and not to the legislative order of the Board.

(a) Competition Act (XIX of 2010)---

----Ss. 28(1)(b), 33, 36 & 37---Powers of the Commission in relation to a proceeding or enquiry---Power to call for information relating to undertaking---Scope of the Powers of the Competition Commission under sections 33, 36 & 37 of the Competition Act, 2010 stated.

Proceeding under section 33 means and only refers to proceedings under section 30 of the Competition Act, 2010 ('the Act'), and the power to call for information under section 36 of the Act or conduct of a study provided for under section 28(1)(b) cannot be treated as a proceeding within the meaning used in section 33 nor can the powers provided under section 33 be made available to Competition Commission of Pakistan ('CCP') in their exercise of jurisdiction under section 36 or 28(1)(b).

The CCP is a regulator which aims to prevent and address anti-competitive practices across markets for which it studies the market to understand market trends and practices. For this reason, CCP under section 36 of the Act is empowered to call for information relating to an undertaking. Through a general or special order, it may call upon an undertaking to furnish periodically or as and when required any information concerning the activities of the undertaking, including information relating to its organization, accounts, business, trade practices, management and connection with any other undertaking, which information is necessary for the CCP for the purposes of the Act. This is a regulatory power available to CCP aimed to collect and gather information about the undertaking and does not fall under the ambit of a proceeding under section 30. Hence, merely calling for information does not constitute a proceeding nor does it trigger any penal consequences.

Section 37 of the Act provides for enquiry and studies and subsection (1) thereof provides that the CCP may, on its own, conduct enquiries and studies into any matter relevant to the purposes of this Act or as per subsection (2) of section 37 of the Act, the CCP may conduct an enquiry and studies of an undertaking when it receives a complaint in writing of such facts that appear to constitute a contravention of the provisions of Chapter II of the Act unless it is of the opinion that the application is frivolous or vexatious or based on insufficient facts, or is not substantiated by any evidence to conduct an enquiry. Although enquiries and studies are referred together in section 37 of the Act, they serve distinct functions. Enquiry is a process available to the CCP to assess contravention of the Act before it initiates any proceedings under section 30 of the Act. Whereas, studies, as provided under section 28(1)(b) of the Act, are conducted to promote competition in all sectors of economic activity and in terms of section 37(3) of the Act, they are a function which may be outsourced by hiring consultants on contracts. Both enquiry and studies are used as independent tools by the CCP to collect and assess information on market trends and do not constitute an adverse action against the undertaking. Therefore, in terms of sections 36 and 37 the power to call for information or conducting an enquiry or study do not constitute a proceeding against an undertaking under section 30 of the Act.

It is important to draw a distinction between section 30 and section 37. Section 30 empowers the CCP to issue orders under section 31 when it is satisfied that there is a contravention of any provision in Chapter II of the Act. Before proceeding with the matter, the CCP must provide notice of its intent and the reasons behind it, giving the undertaking an opportunity to be heard and defend itself. On the other hand, section 37 defines a different scope for the CCP. Under this section, the CCP has the authority to conduct enquiries, either suo motu or based on references from the Federal Government, into matters related to the objectives of the Act. As mentioned above an enquiry under section 37 can also be initiated based on a complaint, unless the application is deemed frivolous, vexatious, lacks sufficient evidence, or is not supported by prima facie evidence. If, upon conducting this enquiry, the CCP is of the opinion that the findings necessitate taking action in the public interest, it shall initiate proceedings under section 30. In other words, the enquiry under section 37 serves as a preliminary step to gather information and evidence, and if it reveals a potential contravention of Chapter II of the Act, the CCP can then proceed. However, such enquiry is not always necessary to proceed against an undertaking, and if the CCP is satisfied on the information that it has available that a contravention of Chapter II of the Act is committed, it may proceed without it.

The CCP being a regulator must always act in a transparent manner, keeping the undertaking informed of its decisions. However, section 37 does not in itself result in penal consequences and the procedure is not a proceeding within the meaning of section 33. However, the CCP is required to provide the gist of its reasons as recorded in its internal deliberations which led to the decision of initiating such enquiry. This is a minimum requirement for the purposes of transparency and good governance and also facilitates the regulatory process by keeping the undertaking informed.

When perusing an order under section 37 of the Act, the CCP is not required to give a detailed reasoned explanation to the undertaking as to the enquiry, but should have deliberated on the issue so as to come to the conclusion that an enquiry is necessary, the gist of which reasoning should be communicated to the undertaking in writing. The internal working documents of the CCP need not be communicated in their entirety to the undertaking whilst at the same time its intent, along with gist of the reasoning, to conduct an enquiry must be communicated.

(b) Competition Act (XIX of 2010)---

----S. 37---Powers of the Commission to call for information relating to undertaking---Scope---Competition Commission of Pakistan ('CCP'), as a regulator, is not only empowered to but also bears the responsibility to collect the market information in order to understand the market structure as well as to ensure effective enforcement of the Competition Act, 2010 ('the Act') being administered by it---In the absence of market information, that it may seek from different undertakings from time to time, CCP cannot carry out its functions as envisioned under the Act and the provision of this information by no stretch of the imagination amounts to an adverse action against an undertaking---Thus, it is an obligation upon the undertakings to fully comply with such orders of CCP for provision of information.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J; agreeing with Ayesha Malik, J. with his separate note.

(c) Competition Act (XIX of 2010)---

----Ss. 28(1)(a), 28(1)(b), 28(1)(c), 30, 33, 36 & 37---Distinction between the object and scope of "proceedings," "studies" and "enquiries" conducted by the Commission under Chapter IV of the Competition Act, 2010, and the duty of the Commission to act justly, fairly and reasonably and in a structured manner while exercising its discretionary power under section 37(1) of the Act to initiate on its own an enquiry against an undertaking stated.

Power of the Competition Commission of Pakistan ('the Commission') under section 36 of the Competition Act, 2010 ('the Act') to call upon an undertaking to furnish certain information is not a "proceeding" within the meaning of this term as used in section 33 of the Act. Section 36 of the Act gives the Commission only one power, that is, to "call upon an undertaking to furnish periodically or as and when required any information concerning the activities of the undertaking". By treating this "power to call information" as a "proceeding" within the meaning of section 33, one would be conferring upon the Commission a long list of powers provided in section 33, which include summoning and enforcing the attendance of any person and requiring the production of any books, accounts or other documents in the custody of an undertaking, etc. And by so doing one would be adding further powers of the Commission in section 36 of the Act to interfere in the exercise of the fundamental right of the citizens to conduct any lawful trade or business which the Legislature has nor provided therein.

Although the word "proceeding" used in section 33 has not been defined in the Act, the examination of the overall scheme of Chapter IV (sections 28 to 37) that describes the functions and powers of the Commission clearly indicates what it means. It has been used in section 33 in special meaning, not in general meaning; it means and refers to a "proceeding" initiated under section 30 of the Act. Therefore, the power of the Commission to call for information under section 36 and to conduct a study under section 28(1)(b), cannot be treated as a "proceeding" within the meaning of that word used in section 33 of the Act, nor can the powers mentioned in section 33 in relation to a "proceeding" be made available to the Commission for the purposes of calling information under section 36.

There is a also clear difference between the scope of "enquires" and "studies" to be conducted by the Commission under the Act. They cannot be used by the Commission as two alternate modes to ascertain any contravention of the Act before it initiates any specific action against an undertaking. Enquiries are a process available to the Commission to assess any contravention of the Act before it initiates any specific action against an undertaking. However, this is not the object of "studies". Their object is mentioned in section 28(1)(b): the "studies" are to be conducted 'for promoting competition in all sectors of commercial economic activity', not to initiate any specific action against an undertaking. Under the Act, no regulatory action is triggered simply on the basis of the "studies". Therefore, the Commission may under section 37(3) outsource "studies" by hiring consultants on contract. It cannot be said that by doing so, the Commission out sources its statutory regulatory function to some consultants hired on contracts. Enquiries" and "studies" thus have no regulatory symbiotic relationship under the Act.

So far as the power of the Commission to initiate an enquiry against an undertaking either on its own under section 37(1) or on a complaint under section 37(2) of the Act is concerned, section 37(2) specifically requires that before initiating an enquiry under upon a complaint of such facts as appear to constitute a contravention of the provisions of Chapter II, the Commission is to examine the veracity of the complaint to ensure that it is neither frivolous or vexatious nor is it based on insufficient facts or unsubstantiated by prima facie evidence.

The Commission should, rather must, do so in order to exercise its discretionary power of initiating an enquiry on its own under section 37(1) of the Act in a just, fair and reasonable manner. And for this purpose, the Commission can advantageously follow the criterion prescribed by the legislature itself for initiating an enquiry on complaints under section 37(2). Further, it is also essential for the Commission to convey to the undertaking concerned the gist of the reasons and facts that prevail with the Commission in making the decision to initiate on its own an enquiry against that undertaking for a potential violation of any provisions of Chapter II of the Act.

----Public institutions---Verbal orders---Institutions, and more so, public institutions don't function on the basis of verbal orders---Every opinion formed by the institution must be recorded and reduced in writing.

Faisal Siddiqui, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellants.

Syed M. Feisal Hussain Naqvi, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent.

Ch. Aamir Rehman, Additional A.G. for Federation.

Date of hearing: 29th March, 2022.

JUDGMENT

AYESHA A. MALIK, J.---The Appellants have impugned judgment dated 14.09.2021, passed by the Islamabad High Court, Islamabad, (High Court) whereby the writ petition filed by the Respondent was allowed. Leave was granted by this Court vide order dated 22.11.2021 to consider the provisions of the Competition Act, 2010 (Act) with reference to the powers of conducting an enquiry.

2. Brief facts are that the Respondent challenged, before the High Court, the calling for information, by the Competition Commission of Pakistan (CCP), regarding the price of vanaspati ghee and cooking oil vide letters dated 13.07.2020 and 06.11.2020 and the initiation of an enquiry by the same. The grievance of the Respondent was that these letters were issued for a no justifiable reason as the CCP cannot initiate an enquiry based on vague and indefinite allegations nor can it enquire into the issue of pricing. Further, that the letter dated 13.07.2020 was vague as it called for information on account of "certain concern" and "need to probe further in the matter" whereas letter dated 06.11.2020 was a notice under section 37 of the Act for initiating an enquiry without stating any reasons. The Respondent's argument is that the CCP could not conduct a roving enquiry on the basis that it needed to collect information. Further, that under section 37 of the Act, the CCP has to first form an opinion and then confront the undertaking with the material on which this opinion was formed, and on which it intended to initiate an enquiry prior to initiating such enquiry. The Respondent claimed that CCP's conduct in the matter amounts to an adverse action for which a notice disclosing relevant facts and sufficient reasons should have been provided so as to make the Respondent aware of the basis of the allegations against it. In this case, the Respondent argued that, no such opinion was formed nor any reasons given, hence, the challenge.

3. The impugned judgment considered the petition of the Respondent and concluded that the CCP must exercise discretion reasonably and that there must exist a reasonable basis to exercise its statutory authority to enquire into the affairs of an undertaking. The Court further concluded that subsections (1) and (2) of section 37 of the Act are to be read together and the applicable test for the exercise of power under section 37 of the Act is the plausibility test, meaning that, if the CCP wishes to initiate an enquiry it must satisfy itself that there is a plausible case of contravention of the provisions of the Act which necessitates an enquiry. Further, while relying on an earlier judgment National Feeds Limited v. Competition Commission of Pakistan and others (2016 CLD 1688), upheld by this Court vide Order dated 22.11.2017 passed in Competition Commission of Pakistan v. Punjnad Feeds Limited and others, (C.Ps. Nos. 2119 to 2123 of 2016), wherein the High Court concluded that the CCP as vested with powers under a statute cannot use or exercise such powers for the purposes of making indiscriminate, roving and fishing enquiries and that even in cases of suspicion of the CCP of illegality, details should be provided to the party to enable him to have an opportunity to produce all the relevant documents and disclose information. Meaning that CCP cannot order an enquiry under section 37 of the Act to merely dig out the facts on the basis of a hunch or suspicion and that it must disclose reasons. Consequently, the enquiry ordered by the CCP as well as the letter issued on 13.07.2020 were set aside for being in contravention to the mandate of the Act.

4. Learned counsel for CCP, the Appellant No.1, argued that the findings in the impugned judgment with reference to section 37(1) and (2) of the Act being read together, when it comes to the manner in which the enquiry is to begin, is incorrect as the legal requirements provided in subsections (1) and (2) of section 37 of the Act are substantially different. Further, it was argued that the applicability of the plausibility test, in these circumstances, is incorrect since the information was sought under section 36 of the Act whereas the enquiry was initiated under section 37(1) thereof. The learned counsel also argued that the initiation of an enquiry under the Act, of the Respondent along with other similar undertakings, was done to assess if sections 3 and 4 of the Act are being contravened in the light of, amongst others, the concern of the hike in price. The learned counsel stated that it was a sector-based request for information and enquiry and it was only the Respondent that challenged the letters and the initiation of the enquiry. He argued that, at this stage, there is no adverse determination against the Respondent and that it was merely a fact-finding exercise which could not itself be challenged, as it does not infringe any right. He explained that the legal requirements for initiating an enquiry under section 37(1) and (2) of the Act are different and that there is nothing in the language of these subsections that suggests that the requirements of subsection (2) are to be read in subsection (1). He elaborated that the rationale behind the different legal requirements of the two sections is to enable the CCP to act, either on its own motion or on the basis of a complaint. Since the very basis of the action is different, hence, the legal requirements are different. He further stated that seeking information does not require any detailed reasons to explain why the CCP seeks information, therefore, the writ petition was pre-mature and that there is no justification in challenging the letters nor should the Court have interfered in the matter.

5. On behalf of the Respondent, it was emphasized that the actions of the CCP when probing for information must be justified and must be based on some reasoned order. The counsel for the Respondent argued that it is settled law that there must be a reason for initiating an enquiry and that these reasons must be disclosed. Further, that the undertaking must be aware of the allegations on the basis of which, the enquiry is being initiated so that it is able to defend its position. The Respondent relied on the National Feeds case (supra) and stated that subsections (1) and (2) of section 37 of the Act have to be read together as the language of the law is similar, therefore, in order to initiate an enquiry whether suo motu or on the basis of a complaint, reasons must be given.

It was argued that the CCP was conducting a roving sectoral enquiry for which it has no jurisdiction especially with reference to price fixation.

6. The issue raised by the learned counsel is with reference to the CCP's power to call for information from an undertaking under section 36 of the Act and the power to initiate an enquiry under section 37 thereof. In terms of the facts pleaded by the parties, a letter was issued on 13.07.2020, and a reminder on 10.08.2020, requiring information to probe into the matter of excessive pricing of vanaspati ghee in the market. The Respondent responded to this letter on 17.08.2020 by relying on the National Feeds case (supra) stating that there is no allegation against it for being in breach of any provision of the Act nor has any reason been given for initiating an enquiry and that the vague allegations contained in the letter with respect to excessive pricing are not sufficient for the purposes of an enquiry. On 07.09.2020, the CCP sought information under section 33 of the Act and stated in its letter that a formal enquiry has been initiated by the CCP under section 37(1) with reference to the price increase of cooking oil and ghee in the market. These two letters formed the basis of the Respondent's challenge before the High Court. For ease of reference, the relevant sections are reproduced hereunder: -

33. Powers of the Commission in relation to a proceeding or enquiry.---(1) The Commission shall, for the purpose of a proceeding or enquiry under this Act, have the same powers as are vested in a civil court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (Act V of 1908), while trying a suit, in respect of the following matters, namely:--

(a) summoning and enforcing the attendance of any witness and examining him on oath;

(b) discovery and production of any document or other material object producible as evidence;

(3) The Commission may, for the purpose of a proceeding or enquiry under this Act, require any undertaking:---

(a) to produce before, and to allow to be examined and kept by, an officer of the Commission specified in this behalf, any books, accounts, or other documents in the custody or under the control of the undertaking so required, being documents relating to any matter the examination of which may be necessary for the purposes of this Act; and

(b) to furnish to an officer so specified such information in its possession, relating to any matter as may be, necessary for the purpose of this Act.

36. Power to call for information relating to undertaking.---Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, the Commission may, by general or special order, call upon an undertaking to furnish periodically or as and when required any information concerning the activities of the undertaking, including information relating to its organization, accounts, business, trade practices, management and connection with any other undertaking, which the Commission may consider necessary or useful for the purposes of this Act.

37. Enquiry and studies.---(1) The Commission may, on its own, and shall upon a reference made to it by the Federal Government, conduct enquiries into any matter relevant to the purposes of this Act.

(2) Where the Commission receives from an undertaking or a registered association of consumers a complaint in writing of such facts as appear to constitute a contravention of the provisions of Chapter II, it shall, unless it is of opinion that the application is frivolous or vexatious or based on insufficient facts, or is not substantiated by prima facie evidence, conduct an enquiry into the matter to which the complaint relates.

(3) The Commission may outsource studies by hiring consultants on contract.

(4) If upon the conclusion of an inquiry under subsection (1) or subsection (2), the Commission is of opinion that the findings are such that it is necessary in the public interest so to do, it shall initiate proceedings under section 30."

7. Section 28 of the Act provides the general functions and powers of the CCP wherein it has been provided that CCP can initiate proceedings in accordance with the Act, make orders in cases of contravention of the Act, conduct studies for promoting competition in all sectors of commercial economic activity, conduct enquiries into affairs of any undertaking as may be necessary, give advice to undertaking asking for the same, and engage in competition advocacy. Section 33 of the Act deals with and expands upon the specific power of the CCP in relation to a proceeding or enquiry, such that CCP shall have the powers of a Civil Court under the Civil Procedure Code, 1908 (C.P.C.) for the purposes of summoning and procuring the attendance of a witness, discovery and production of any document or other material object producible as evidence, requisitioning of any public record and formation of a Commission for the examination of any witness, document or both. Subsection (3) of section 33 of the Act provides that the CCP may, for the purpose of a proceeding or enquiry, have produced before it, for examination of, any books, accounts, or other documents in the custody or under the control of the undertaking, relating to any matter, the examination of which, is deemed necessary for the purposes of the Act. Important to note is that the proceedings under the Act are initiated in cases of contraventions as stipulated in section 30 read with section 28(1)(a) of the Act. The term proceeding as used under section 33 has not been defined in the Act, however, when we consider Chapter IV (sections 28 to 37), which outlines the CCP's functions and powers, it becomes clear that proceeding under section 33 has a specific, rather than a general, meaning or otherwise it would automatically include an enquiry, instead of a separate mention of it. Proceeding under section 33 means and only refers to proceedings under section 30 of the Act, and the power to call for information under section 36 of the Act or conduct of a study provided for under section 28(1)(b) cannot be treated as a proceeding within the meaning used in section 33 nor can the powers provided under section 33 be made available to CCP in their exercise of jurisdiction under section 36 or 28(1)(b).

8. The CCP is a regulator which aims to prevent and address anti-competitive practices across markets for which it studies the market to understand market trends and practices. For this reason, CCP under section 36 of the Act is empowered to call for information relating to an undertaking. Through a general or special order, it may call upon an undertaking to furnish periodically or as and when required any information concerning the activities of the undertaking, including information relating to its organization, accounts, business, trade practices, management and connection with any other undertaking, which information is necessary for the CCP for the purposes of the Act. This is a regulatory power available to CCP aimed to collect and gather information about the undertaking and does not fall under the ambit of a proceeding under section 30. Hence, merely calling for information does not constitute a proceeding nor does it trigger any penal consequences.

9. Section 37 of the Act provides for enquiry and studies and subsection (1) thereof provides that the CCP may, on its own, conduct enquiries and studies into any matter relevant to the purposes of this Act or as per subsection (2) of section 37 of the Act, the CCP may conduct an enquiry and studies of an undertaking when it receives a complaint in writing of such facts that appear to constitute a contravention of the provisions of Chapter II of the Act unless it is of the opinion that the application is frivolous or vexatious or based on insufficient facts, or is not substantiated by any evidence to conduct an enquiry. Although enquiries and studies are referred together in section 37 of the Act, they serve distinct functions. Enquiry is a process available to the CCP to assess contravention of the Act before it initiates any proceedings under section 30 of the Act. Whereas, studies, as provided under section 28(1)(b) of the Act, are conducted to promote competition in all sectors of economic activity and in terms of section 37(3) of the Act, they are a function which may be outsourced by hiring consultants on contracts. Both enquiry and studies are used as independent tools by the CCP to collect and assess information on market trends and do not constitute an adverse action against the undertaking. Therefore, in terms of sections 36 and 37 the power to call for information or conducting an enquiry or study do not constitute a proceeding against an undertaking under section 30 of the Act.

10. Furthermore, in line with its authority to carry out functions under the Act, the CCP is also empowered to make rules and regulations under sections 57 and 58 of the Act, respectively. The Competition Commission (General Enforcement) Regulations, 2007 (Regulations), originally made under the Competition Ordinance 2007, outline the procedures for enquiry and adjudication. Specifically, Regulations 16 and 17 empower the CCP to initiate an enquiry if the presented facts suggest a potential violation of sections 3, 4, 10 and 11, or the provisions of Chapter II of the Act. This can be done either suo motu or on a reference from the Federal Government. Moreover, the CCP can also conduct an enquiry based on a complaint received from an undertaking or a registered association of consumers, provided the complaint is not deemed frivolous, vexatious, or lacking sufficient evidence. To ensure the integrity of the process, Regulation 20 empowers the CCP to dismiss any vexatious or frivolous complaints, applications, or requests for joinder or intervention. Regulation 17(2) in conjunction with section 37(2) of the Act clearly stipulates that upon receiving a complaint indicating a potential violation of Chapter II of the Act, the CCP is obliged to conduct an enquiry, unless it deems the complaint to be frivolous, vexatious, lacking sufficient evidence, or not substantiated by prima facie evidence in which case, the complaint can be dismissed under Regulation 20. The format in which a complaint against an undertaking is to be made is provided for in Regulation 18, which means that such complaint must at least be in compliance with the prescribed requirements under the Regulations.

11. After having assessed the relevant provisions, it is important to draw a distinction between section 30 and section 37 for our purposes. Section 30 empowers the CCP to issue orders under section 31 when it is satisfied that there is a contravention of any provision in Chapter II of the Act. Before proceeding with the matter, the CCP must provide notice of its intent and the reasons behind it, giving the undertaking an opportunity to be heard and defend itself. On the other hand, section 37 defines a different scope for the CCP. Under this section, the CCP has the authority to conduct enquiries, either suo motu or based on references from the Federal Government, into matters related to the objectives of the Act. As mentioned earlier, an enquiry under section 37 can also be initiated based on a complaint, unless the application is deemed frivolous, vexatious, lacks sufficient evidence, or is not supported by prima facie evidence. If, upon conducting this enquiry, the CCP is of the opinion that the findings necessitate taking action in the public interest, it shall initiate proceedings under section 30. Additionally, Regulation 22 provides in respect of initiation of proceedings under section 30 and states where the CCP, on its own motion or on a complaint, is satisfied that there is a contravention of the Act, it may issue a show cause notice stating its reasons and if the information available is sufficient to satisfy the CCP that the contravention of any provision of Chapter II is committed, it may proceed without conducting enquiry under the Regulations. In other words, the enquiry under section 37 serves as a preliminary step to gather information and evidence, and if it reveals a potential contravention of Chapter II of the Act, the CCP can then proceed. However, such enquiry is not always necessary to proceed against an undertaking, and if the CCP is satisfied on the information that it has available that a contravention of Chapter II of the Act is committed, it may proceed without it.

12. The issue raised by the Respondent before the High Court was that for the purposes of section 36 or section 37 of the Act, the CCP has to provide reasons in writing, to the undertaking, as to why it is seeking information or why it has opted to carry out an enquiry and further that the CCP is to provide the material on which these actions are based, meaning thereby that the CCP must provide the material before it which forms the basis of the reason to invoke section 36 or section 37 of the Act. As examined above, the power of sections 36 and 37 are regulatory in nature, which do not constitute a proceeding against an undertaking under section 30. The dispute arises on account of the interpretation of the National Feeds case (supra). In this case, the petitioners challenged notices issued by the CCP requiring them to submit information with reference to the increased price of poultry feed. Though the notices were issued on the basis of a complaint made by a consumer of poultry feed, and the CCP initiated an enquiry under section 37(1) of the Act, the Court while considering section 37 of the Act concluded that for the purposes of initiating an enquiry on its own motion under section 37 of the Act, the conditions provided for in section 37(2) will be read into the subsection (1). Consequently, whether an enquiry is initiated under subsection (1) or (2), the CCP has to give reasons for conducting an enquiry even if it is initiated on its own motion and ought to disclose the facts on the basis of which the enquiry has been initiated. To our minds, the reading of section 37 of the Act caters to two separate and distinct powers vested in the CCP for initiating an enquiry. Under subsection (1) of section 37 of the Act, the CCP may on its own motion or on a reference made by the Federal Government, conduct an enquiry into any matter relevant for the purposes of the Act. This essentially is the suo motu power of the CCP to initiate an enquiry, which means that the CCP can on its own motion initiate an enquiry, in any matter necessary for the purposes of the Act, provided that it has deliberated on the matter and has produced its reasoning in writing. The question which arises now is whether the CCP is obligated to communicate its reasons to the undertaking, and if so, whether it is required to justify its decision with supporting material. The Respondent argues that the CCP is obligated to inform them of the allegations raised, along with supporting material, and the reasons for conducting an enquiry. The CCP being a regulator must always act in a transparent manner, keeping the undertaking informed of its decisions. However, we have already stated that section 37 does not in itself result in penal consequences and that the procedure is not a proceeding within the meaning of section 33. However, the CCP is required to provide the gist of its reasons as recorded in its internal deliberations which led to the decision of initiating such enquiry. This is a minimum requirement for the purposes of transparency and good governance and also facilitates the regulatory process by keeping the undertaking informed.

13. Now coming to subsection (2) of section 37 of the Act, where the CCP receives a complaint, in this situation, it is required to first establish the veracity of the complaint to ensure that it is neither frivolous or vexatious and that there are sufficient facts provided in the complaint to necessitate an enquiry, as this is an enquiry prompted by a third person, the complainant. Section 37(2) of the Act requires the CCP to satisfy itself in the first instance before initiating an enquiry such that the mere filing of a complaint does not automatically result in an enquiry rather it requires the CCP to consider the complaint and determine whether it merits an enquiry. For the purposes of this enquiry, the CCP has to satisfy itself that there is sufficient cause to initiate an enquiry and in the course of due process when informing the undertaking of the enquiry, the CCP should disclose the nature of the complaint and the allegations contained therein to the undertaking. Before proceeding with the complaint under section 37(2) of the Act, the CCP should form a written opinion that the complaint is not frivolous, vexatious or based on insufficient facts or necessitates an enquiry. The Regulations themselves cater to this by requiring, under Regulation 18, the necessary contents that form a complaint and therefore are required for assessing the veracity of a complaint. Regulation 18(2) prescribes that the complaint, reference, or application shall contain a brief statement of facts, a summary of the alleged contravention of the Act, a succinct presentation in support of each contravention, such other particulars as may be specified by the Commission, a schedule listing all documents/ affidavits/evidence in support of each of the presentations, and the relief(s) sought. Once again, as in the case of section 37(1), the CCP must record its reasons in writing in respect of the veracity of the complaint, and its decision to proceed or not. In the event that CCP chooses to proceed, then it must communicate the gist of the reasons to the undertaking before proceeding on the same.

14. Accordingly, when perusing an order under section 37 of the Act, the CCP is not required to give a detailed reasoned explanation to the undertaking as to the enquiry, but should have deliberated on the issue so as to come to the conclusion that an enquiry is necessary, the gist of which reasoning should be communicated to the undertaking in writing. The internal working documents of the CCP need not be communicated in their entirety to the undertaking whilst at the same time its intent, along with gist of the reasoning, to conduct an enquiry must be communicated. In this case, there were multiple complaints on the price hike in ghee and related products. The National Price Monitoring Committee considered the general trend of increased prices and required the CCP to check for anti- competitive practices, if any. The Chairperson and the Director General of CCP participated in this meeting and proceeded on the matter. This led to a working paper in the matter of price increase of ghee/cooking oil and related products by CCP on 27.07.2020, followed by a decision dated 30.07.2020 to initiate a sectoral enquiry under section 37(1) of the Act. In the meantime, letters had been sent out to those in the business of ghee and cooking oil to collect information on price patterns and cost structures, amongst other factors, to look for any dominant players in the market and violation of section 3 of the Act. The letters issued to the Respondent and others on 13.07.2020 disclosed that CCP was concerned with the excessive pricing of vanaspati ghee in the market and was looking into the matter. After 30.07.2020, once the decision to initiate an enquiry was made, the CCP vide letter dated 07.09.2020 informed the Respondent and others of its decision to initiate an enquiry to determine, prima facie, contravention of sections 3 and 4 of the Act. These materials, which formed the basis for initiating an enquiry, have been brought on record and they provide the intent of the CCP to probe into the matter to determine contraventions of sections 3 and 4 of the Act. Hence, it is clear that the CCP intended to ascertain market information to see if there are any anti-competitive practices. At this stage, it is just an enquiry to determine if there are any anti-competitive practices which are in contravention under the Act. Any adverse action would take place once the basic enquiry is made, which highlights the anti-competitive practice and then necessitates formal proceedings for which notice, detailed reasoning and hearing is a must as given in section 30 of the Act.

15. It is of relevance to have an understanding of the purpose and function of CCP as well which the Respondent in the instant case appears to have failed to appreciate. CCP, as a regulator, is not only empowered to but also bears the responsibility to collect the market information in order to understand the market structure as well as to ensure effective enforcement of the Act being administered by it. In the absence of market information, that it may seek from different undertakings from time to time, CCP cannot carry out its functions as envisioned under the Act and the provision of this information by no stretch of the imagination amounts to an adverse action against an undertaking. Thus, it is an obligation upon the undertakings to fully comply with such orders of CCP for provision of information. In the event of proceedings against the undertaking, the Act requires for notice, detailed reasoning to be communicated, and due process so as to allow the undertaking an opportunity to defend itself.

16. In view of the foregoing, the impugned judgment is set aside and the appeal is allowed with no order as to costs.

Ayesha A. Malik, J

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---I have read the judgment authored by my learned colleague, Justice Ayesha A. Malik, which is indeed eloquent and contains a comprehensive analysis of the facts of the case and the law applicable. While I concur with it, I am adding this brief note just to underscore the difference between the object and scope of "proceedings," "studies" and "enquiries" conducted by the Commission under Chapter IV of the Competition Commission Act, 2010 ("Act") and the duty of the Commission to act justly, fairly, reasonably and in a structured manner while exercising its discretionary power under section 37(1) to initiate on its own an enquiry against an undertaking.

2. The Act aims to regulate the fundamental right to conduct any lawful trade or business guaranteed by Article 18 of the Constitution of Pakistan, in the interest of free competition as provided in clause (b) of the proviso to that Article. As one of the primary objectives of enshrining a right within the Constitution is to safeguard it from being susceptible to ordinary legislation, the regulatory laws that have the effect of impacting a constitutionally guaranteed right are to be strictly construed.[1] The wide and liberal interpretation of such laws may make the constitutional guarantee redundant. Therefore, the provisions of the Act that authorize the Commission, in the public interest of ensuring free competition, to interfere in the exercise of the fundamental right to conduct any lawful trade or business must be strictly construed.

3. In view of the above principle, the argument that the power of the Commission under section 36 of the Act to call upon an undertaking to furnish certain information is a "proceeding" within the meaning of this term as used in section 33 of the Act, is not sustainable. Section 36 of the Act gives the Commission only one power, that is, to "call upon an undertaking to furnish periodically or as and when required any information concerning the activities of the undertaking". By treating this "power to call information" as a "proceeding" within the meaning of section 33, we would be conferring upon the Commission a long list of powers provided in section 33, which include summoning and enforcing the attendance of any person and requiring the production of any books, accounts or other documents in the custody of an undertaking, etc. And by so doing we would be adding further powers of the Commission in section 36 of the Act to interfere in the exercise of the fundamental right of the citizens of Pakistan to conduct any lawful trade or business which the Legislature has not provided therein. Such a wide and liberal interpretation of the provisions of the Act that have the effect of impacting a constitutionally guaranteed right, as aforesaid, is not warranted.

4. Although the word "proceeding" used in section 33 has not been defined in the Act, the examination of the overall scheme of Chapter IV (sections 28 to 37) that describes the functions and powers of the Commission clearly indicates what it means. It has been used in section 33 in special meaning, not in general meaning; otherwise, there was no logic or reason to mention the words "or enquiry" therewith as in its general meaning the word "proceeding" would have included in it an "enquiry" also. That special meaning is more than evident from the use of this word in several provisions of Chapter IV. First and foremost are the provisions of clauses (a), (b) and (c) of section 28(1), which have distinctly described "proceedings", "studies" and "enquires" by providing thus:

28. Functions and powers of the Commission.---(1) The functions and powers of the Commission shall be-

(a) to initiate proceedings in accordance with the procedures of this Act and make orders in cases of contravention of the provisions of the said Act;

(b) to conduct studies for promoting competition in all sectors of commercial economic activity;

(c) to conduct enquiries into the affairs of any undertaking as may be necessary for the purposes of this Act;

(Emphasis added)

The title of section 30, i.e., "Proceedings in cases of contravention", and the provisions of that Section further illustrate what "proceedings" are referred to in clause (a) of section 28(1). As per subsection (1) of section 30, they are the "proceedings" initiated by the Commission for the contravention or likely contravention of any provision of Chapter II. Section 32 also uses the word "proceeding" and mentions the power of the Commission to issue interim orders "during the course of any proceeding under section 30". Next comes section 33(1) which uses the word "proceeding" and describes the powers of the Commission for the purpose of a "proceeding" or enquiry under the Act. Subsection (2) of section 33 states that any "proceeding" before the Commission shall be deemed to be a judicial proceeding within the meaning of sections 193 and 228 of the Pakistan Penal Code. Last but not least, subsections (4) of section 37 uses this word and refers to it as "proceedings" under section 30 by providing that [i]f upon the conclusion of an inquiry under subsection (1) or subsection (2), the Commission is of opinion that the findings are such that it is necessary in the public interest so to do, it shall initiate proceedings under section 30. All these provisions of Chapter IV leave little room to doubt what special meaning of the word "proceeding" used in section 33 is: it means and refers to a "proceeding" initiated under section 30 of the Act. Therefore, the power of the Commission to call for information under section 36 and to conduct a study under section 28(1)(b), cannot be treated a "proceeding" within the meaning of that word used in section 33 of the Act, nor can the powers mentioned in section 33 in relation to a "proceeding" be made available to the Commission for the purposes of calling information under section 36.

5. There is a also clear difference between the scope of "enquires" and "studies" to be conducted by the Commission under the Act. They cannot be used by the Commission as two alternate modes to ascertain any contravention of the Act before it initiates any specific action against an undertaking. Subsection (4) of section 30 clearly mentions the object of holding an enquiry by stating that [i]f upon the conclusion of an inquiry under subsection (1) or subsection (2), the Commission is of opinion that the findings are such that it is necessary in the public interest so to do, it shall initiate proceedings under section 30'. Enquiries are therefore a process available to the Commission to assess any contravention of the Act before it initiates any specific action against an undertaking. However, this is not the object of "studies". Their object is mentioned in section 28(1)(b): the "studies" are to be conducted for promoting competition in all sectors of commercial economic activity',[2] not to initiate any specific action against an undertaking. Under the Act, no regulatory action is triggered simply on the basis of the "studies". Therefore, the Commission may under section 37(3) outsource "studies" by hiring consultants on contract. It cannot be said that by doing so, the Commission outsources its statutory regulatory function to some consultants hired on contracts. Enquiries" and "studies" thus have no regulatory symbiotic relationship under the Act.

6. So far as the power of the Commission to initiate an enquiry against an undertaking either on its own under section 37(1) or on a complaint under section 37(2) of the Act is concerned, section 37(2) specifically requires that before initiating an enquiry under upon a complaint of such facts as appear to constitute a contravention of the provisions of Chapter 11, the Commission is to examine the veracity of the complaint to ensure that it is neither frivolous or vexatious nor is it based on insufficient facts or unsubstantiated by prima facie evidence.

7. The High Court has held in the impugned judgment while relying upon its earlier decision in National Feeds case,[3] which remained undisturbed by this Court[4], that before initiating an enquiry on its own under section 37(1) the Commission is required to do the same process, that is, the Commission must ascertain whether there are such sufficient facts substantiated by prima facie evidence which appear to constitute a contravention of any provision of Chapter II while examining the veracity of the information on the basis of which it intends to initiate an enquiry against an undertaking. The High Court has named this preliminary examination to be made by the Commission of the complaint under section 37(1) or of the information under section 37(1) as a plausibility of contravention test with which I have no issue in so far as the said test in substance remains the same as that of the said preliminary examination. It is the substance of the preliminary examination that matters, as nothing turns on the name given to it whether it be called plausibility of contravention test or potential violation test.

8. Institutions, and more so, public institutions don't function on the basis of verbal orders. Every opinion formed by the institution must be recorded and reduced in writing. Any subsequent initiation of an enquiry against an undertaking must reflect the reasons so recorded by the institution in writing. Public institutions are not unregulated personal fiefdoms run on whims and caprice of a few, but are subject to law and can function only with the remit of the Constitution and the law. The days of arbitrary exercise of discretionary powers are long gone. The constitutional courts always read the requirement of acting justly, fairly and reasonably in every statute that confers discretionary powers on some executive or judicial authority while making a judicial review of the exercise of those powers and also insist upon the exercise of such powers in a structured manner. The Commission should, rather must, do so in order to exercise its discretionary power of initiating an enquiry on its own under section 37(1) of the Act in a just, fair and reasonable manner. And for this purpose, the Commission can advantageously follow the criterion prescribed by the legislature itself for initiating an enquiry on complaints under section 37(2). Further, it is also essential for the Commission to convey to the undertaking concerned the gist of the reasons and facts that prevail with the Commission in making the decision to initiate on its own an enquiry against that undertaking for a potential violation of any provisions of Chapter II of the Act.

9. In the present case, the Commission did have with it such sufficient facts substantiated by prima facie evidence which appeared to constitute a contravention of the provisions of Chapter II, as evident from the working paper dated 27 July 2020 placed before the Commission and the resolution dated 30 July 2020 passed by the Commission to initiate the enquiry in the exercise of its power under section 37(1) of the Act, The letter of 13 July 2020 impugned by the respondent in the writ petition before the High Court was merely an information-seeking order of the Commission under section 36 of the Act, while the other two impugned letters of 7 September and 6 November 2020 were issued after the initiation of enquiry under section 37(1) in the exercise of powers under section 33 of the Act, for the purpose of the enquiry. The material (working paper dated 27 July 2020 and resolution dated 30 July 2020, etc.) containing the statements of such sufficient facts substantiated by prima facie evidence which appeared to constitute a contravention of the provisions of Chapter II and formed the basis for initiating the enquiry by the Commission was provided to the respondent by the appellants during the proceedings of the present appeal under an order of this Court. This should have been done by the High Court instead of quashing the whole enquiry proceedings, especially when the respondent had not specifically challenged in its writ petition the order (resolution) of the Commission dated 30 July 2020 whereby the enquiry was initiated. The present appeal is therefore allowed, and by setting aside the impugned judgment the writ petition of the respondent is dismissed.

MWA/C-23/SC Appeal allowed.

Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O. XXVI, Rr. 1, 6 & 8---Review petition---Change of Advocate in review petition---Special leave of the Court---Principles---Under Order XXVI, Rule 6 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 an application for review has to be drawn by the Advocate who appeared at the hearing of the case in which the judgment or order, sought to be reviewed, was made---Review argued by a new Advocate before a new Bench would inevitably amount to rehearing of the main case and going beyond the scope of review under the law---Special leave to substitute a counsel in a review petition is to be granted (by the Court), only when appearance of the earlier counsel is not possible due to some unavoidable circumstances.

Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ('Rules') requires the same Advocate, who earlier appeared to argue the case, to draw up the review application and appeared in support of it before the Court for certain reasons. It is because a review petition is not the equivalent of a petition for leave to appeal or an appeal where the case is argued for the first time. It is not the rehearing of the same matter. The scope of review application is limited to the grounds mentioned in Order XXVI, Rule 1 of the Rules. The Advocate who had earlier argued the main case is perhaps the best person to evaluate whether the said grounds of review are attracted in the case. He being part to the hearing of the main case is fully aware of the proceedings that transpired in the Court leading to the judgment or order sought to be reviewed. He is the one who knows what was argued before the Court and what weighed with the Court in deciding the matter either way. It is also for the same reason that the review application is to be fixed before the same Bench that delivered the judgment or order sought to be reviewed, under Rule 8 of Order XXVI of the Rules. It is not hard to see that the same Advocate and the same Bench can best appreciate the grounds of review. A review argued by a new Advocate before a new Bench would inevitably amount to rehearing of the main case and going beyond the scope of review under the law.

It is true that the requirement of "sufficient ground" for granting the special leave is not expressly stated in Rule 6, but this does not mean that the discretion of the Court to grant or decline the special leave is arbitrary or is mechanical on filing of an application in this regard by a petitioner. This discretion, like all other discretions, is to be exercised judiciously for valid reasons by considering the circumstances of the case. The special leave to substitute a counsel in a review petition is to be granted, only when appearance of the earlier counsel is not possible due to some unavoidable circumstances. The practice of filing review applications by changing the counsel without justifiable reasons or unavoidable circumstances, by the parties as well as by the Advocates representing them is condemnable.

Federation of Pakistan v. Dr. Mubashir Hassan PLD 2011 SC 674 and Tamil Nadu Electricity Board v. Raju Reddiar AIR 1997 SC 1005 ref.

In the present case the ground pleaded for grant of the special leave was that the earlier counsel had refused to file the review petitions, and no other reason had been mentioned as to why he had so refused or what were the circumstances that prevented him to draft the review petition, file the requisite certificate under Rule 4 and appear in support of the review petitions. The stated refusal on his part to file the review petitions prima facie suggested that he believed that there was no sufficient ground for review and he being a responsible Senior Advocate of the Supreme Court had refused to file the frivolous review petitions. Therefore, there was no valid reason or unavoidable circumstance to grant the special leave prayed for. Applications made under Order XXVI, Rule 6 of the Rules were rejected and consequently, the review petitions were not entertained.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---These applications have been filed under Order XXVI, Rule 6 of the Supreme Court Rules 1980 ("Rules"), seeking special leave of the Court for entertaining the review petitions drawn by an Advocate other than that who appeared at the hearing of the cases in which the judgment sought to be reviewed was made as well as seeking permission to be heard in support of the said review petitions. Order XXVI, Rule 6 of the Rules is reproduced hereunder for ready reference:

6. Except with the special leave of the Court, no application for review shall be entertained unless it is drawn by the Advocate who appeared at the hearing of the case in which the judgment or order, sought to be reviewed, was made. Nor shall any other Advocate, except such Advocate, be heard in support of the application for review, unless the Court has dispensed with the requirement aforesaid.

2. The only reasons given in the applications is that learned counsel who earlier appeared for the petitioner, namely, Syed Najam-ul-Hassan Kazmi, ASC, has refused to file the review petitions against the impugned judgment dated 25.02.2022. We are afraid, the reason given is utterly insufficient to grant the leave sought.

3. Order XXVI of the Rules deals with the practice and procedure of this Court in exercising its review jurisdiction. It lays special emphasis on the role and obligation of the Advocate who is to draw up the application for review and appear in support of it before the Court. Under Rule 6 an application for review has to be drawn by the Advocate who appeared at the hearing of the case in which the judgment or order, sought to be reviewed, was made. Under Rule 4, the Advocate who draws up the review application has not only to specify the points upon which the prayer for review is based but he has also to add his certificate to the effect that the review would be justifiable in accordance with the law and practice of the Court. Rule 5 provides that in case the Court comes to the conclusion that the review application filed was vexatious or frivolous, the Advocate or the Advocate on Record drawing the application shall render himself liable to disciplinary action, while Rule 7 provides that no application for review shall be entertained unless party seeking review furnishes cash security of Rs. 10,000/- which shall stand forfeited if the review petition is dismissed or shall be paid to the opposite-party, if the review petition is contested. Rule 6, thus, has to be seen and applied in the overall scheme of Order XXVI of the Rules.

4. Order XXVI of the Rules requires the same Advocate, who earlier appeared to argue the case, to draw up the review application and appear in support of it before the Court for certain reasons. It is because a review petition is not the equivalent of a petition for leave to appeal or an appeal where the case is argued for the first time. It is not the rehearing of the same matter. The scope of review application is limited to the grounds mentioned in Order XXVI, Rule 1 of the Rules. The Advocate who had earlier argued the main case is perhaps the best person to evaluate whether the said grounds of review are attracted in the case. He being part to the hearing of the main case is fully aware of the proceedings that transpired in the Court leading to the judgment or order sought to be reviewed. He is the one who knows what was argued before the Court and what weighed with the Court in deciding the matter either way. It is also for the same reason that the review application is to be fixed before the same Bench that delivered the judgment or order sought to be reviewed, under Rule 8 of Order XXVI of the Rules. It is not hard to see that the same Advocate and the same Bench can best appreciate the grounds of review. A review argued by a new Advocate before a new Bench would inevitably amount to rehearing of the main case and going beyond the scope of review under the law. It is true that the requirement of "sufficient ground" for granting the special leave is not expressly stated in Rule 6, but this does not mean that the discretion of the Court to grant or decline the special leave is arbitrary or is mechanical on filing of an application in this regard by a petitioner. This discretion, like all other discretions, is to be exercised judiciously for valid reasons by considering the circumstances of the case. The special leave to substitute a counsel in a review petition is to be granted, as held by a full bench of this Court in Dr. Mubashir Hassan case[1], only when appearance of the earlier counsel is not possible due to some unavoidable circumstances. The practice of filing review applications by changing the counsel without justifiable reasons or unavoidable circumstances, by the parties as well as by the Advocates representing them is condemnable.[2]

5. In this particular case, the ground pleaded for grant of the special leave is that the earlier counsel has refused to file the review petitions, and no other reason has been mentioned as to why he has so refused or what are the circumstances that prevented him to draft the review petition, file the requisite certificate under Rule 4 and appear in support of the review petitions. The stated refusal on his part to file the review petitions prima facie suggests that he believes that there is no sufficient ground for review and he being a responsible Senior Advocate of this Court has refused to file the frivolous review petitions, having regard to the observations made by this Court in Muhammad Khaliq v. Gul Afzal[3] in the following terms:

6. We have noted that review petitions are increasingly being filed as a matter of routine. As a consequence, the certificate required under Order XXVI, Rules 4 and 5 is given as a matter of course by the learned Advocates without application of mind. Statistics provided by the Office show that 1324 review petitions were filed in 2013 and 2014. We also note that a certificate has been given in the present case by the learned counsel to the effect that "according to law and established practice of this Hon'ble Court it is a fit case for review...". Far from being a fit case for review, we find that the law and established practice of this Court demonstrates that this is a frivolous petition where a certificate in terms of Order XXVI, Rule 4 has been filed by the learned counsel in a mechanical and unthinking manner. Such practice is to be deprecated in the interest both of the litigant and the legal system and also to further the Constitutional imperative of ensuring expeditious and inexpensive justice.

If it is the reason of his refusal, as it appears to be, then this is precisely the mischief what Rule 6 addresses. There is no other ground agitated before us for the change of the counsel that would make out a case for grant of special leave to substitute the counsel for drafting, filing and arguing the review petitions. Therefore, we see no valid reason or unavoidable circumstance to grant the special leave prayed for. Thus, the applications made under Order XXVI, Rule 6 of the Rules are rejected and consequently, the review petitions are not entertained. MWA/A-45/SC Order accordingly.

(a) Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908)---

----O. III, R. 1, O. IV, R. 1, O. VIII, R. 1, O. VI, Rr. 14, 15 & O. XXIX, R. 1---Suits by or against Corporations---"Signing/verifying a plaint" and "presenting/instituting a suit"---Distinction---Act of presentation of a plaint or a written statement can be done only by the plaintiff and the defendant in person or by their recognized agents or by their duly appointed pleaders, in terms of Rule 1 of Order III, C.P.C.---Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI, or Rule 1 of Order XXIX, C.P.C. which relates to signing and verifying the pleadings (plaint and written statement), cannot be referred to for the purpose of establishing the authority of a person to institute, or defend, the suit.

There is a difference between the signing and verifying a pleading (plaint or written statement) under Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI, or under Rule 1 of Order XXIX, C.P.C. and the presentation of that pleading to the court under Rule 1 of Order IV (plaint) and Rule 1 of Order VIII (written statement), C.P.C. The act of presenting a plaint to the court under Rule 1 of Order IV is called the institution of the suit, and the act of presenting a written statement under Rule 1 of Order VIII constitutes the defence of the suit. These acts manifest the will of a litigant to pursue his claim or to defend the claim made against him, in a court of law. By presenting the plaint, a plaintiff sets the machinery of the court in motion for deciding upon his claim while the presentation of the written statement expresses the will of the defendant to defend that claim. The act of presentation of a plaint or a written statement can, therefore, be done only by the plaintiff and the defendant in person or by their recognized agents or by their duly appointed pleaders, in terms of Rule 1 of Order III. Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI, or Rule 1 of Order XXIX, which relates to signing and verifying the pleadings (plaint and written statement), cannot be referred to for the purpose of establishing the authority of a person to institute, or defend, the suit.

As the authority conferred by Rule 1 of Order XXIX, on the specified officers of the corporation to sign and verify any pleading on behalf of the corporation, does not include the authority to institute or defend the suit in their own names, a corporation being a juristic person must sue or be sued in its own name. Therefore, the name of the corporation, not the name or designation of any of its officers or employees, is to be mentioned as a plaintiff or a defendant. The phrase "service of summons/notice through its principal officer, so and so" may be added with the name of the corporation, for service.

----O. VI, Rr. 14 & 15 & O.XXIX, R.1---Suits by or against Corporations---Non-applicability of provisions of C.P.C. relating to signing and verification of pleadings to memorandums of appeal and revision petitions---Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI, as well as Rule 1 of Order XXIX, C.P.C. as to signing and verifying the pleadings (plaint and written statement) are not applicable to the memorandums of appeal and revision petitions.

A memorandum of appeal can be signed, as per Rule 1 of Order XLI, C.P.C. by the appellant or his pleader; so a revision petition can be signed by the petitioner or his pleader as the revisional jurisdiction is a part of the general appellate jurisdiction of a superior court and the provisions of the C.P.C. in regard to appeals are applicable mutatis mutandis to revision petitions. A memorandum of appeal or a revision petition can, therefore, be signed by a duly appointed pleader as per Rule 1 of Order XLI, and presented to the appellate or revisional court by him on behalf of the appellant or petitioner as per Rule 1 of Order III, C.P.C. Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI, as well as Rule 1 of Order XXIX, as to signing and verifying the pleadings (plaint and written statement) are, thus, not applicable to the memorandums of appeal and revision petitions.

Any defect or omission in signing and verifying, or presenting, a pleading (plaint or written statement) or a memorandum of appeal or revision petition does not affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the court and is therefore taken to be such an irregularity which can be cured at any stage of the proceedings. Likewise, any defect in the authority of a person to sign and verify a pleading filed in a suit by or against a corporation, or to institute or defend such a suit by presenting that pleading to the court, or in signing or filing of a memorandum of appeal or revision petition by a corporation, can also be cured at any stage of the proceedings.

N.R. for Respondent.

Date of hearing: 6th December, 2022.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The questions of law before us, in the present case, are: (i) whether there is a difference between the authority to sign and verify a pleading (plaint or written statement) and the authority to institute or defend a suit by or against a corporation, under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 ("C.P.C."); (ii) whether the provisions of the C.P.C. relating to signing and verification of the pleadings (plaint and written statement) apply to the memorandums of appeal and revision petitions: and (iii) whether any defect in the authority of a person to sign and verify a pleading filed in, or to institute or defend, such a suit or in signing and filing a memorandum of appeal or revision petition can be cured at a later stage of the proceedings. These questions are often raised in suits instituted by or against corporate bodies (corporations) and in appeals arising from such suits.

2. The background facts of the instant case in which the said questions have arisen for our consideration are that the respondent instituted a suit for declaration and possession of the suit property (on which the petitioner

No.5, Peshawar Electric Supply Company ("PESCO") has its Complaint Centre) against PESCO and its employees, SDO/AM etc., ("petitioners"). The petitioners contested the suit by filing a joint written statement. The respondent did not raise any objection as to the authority of the person filing the said written statement on behalf of all the petitioners, including PESCO, and thus no issue in this regard was framed for trial by the trial court. At the conclusion of the trial, the trial court dismissed the suit of the respondent, holding that he had failed to prove his ownership of the suit property. The respondent's appeal, however, succeeded and the appellate court, by reversing the finding of the trial court, decreed the suit. The petitioners then filed a revision petition, which was dismissed by the High Court without touching upon the merits of the case, through the impugned judgment, on the ground that it had not been filed by a person duly authorised by a resolution of the Board of Directors of PESCO. Hence, the present petition has been filed by the petitioners for leave to appeal. The respondent has, however, not appeared despite due service of the notice. He is, therefore, proceeded against ex -parte.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioners in detail and examined the record of the case minutely.

Scope of Rule 1 of Orders III, IV, VIII and XXIX, C.P.C.

4. As the questions under consideration mainly require the analysis of the provisions of Rule 1 of Orders III, IV, VIII and XXIX of the C.P.C., these provisions are reproduced here for ease of reference:

Order III, C.P.C. (Recognized Agents and Pleaders)

1. Appearances etc., may be in person, by recognized agent or by pleader.

Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognized agent, or by a pleader appearing, applying or acting, as the case may be, on his behalf: Provided that any such appearance shall, if the Court so directs, be made by the party in person.

(Emphasis added)

Order IV, C.P.C. (Institution of Suits)

1. Suit to be commenced by plaint.

(1) Every suit shall be instituted by presenting a plaint to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf.

Order VIII (Written Statement and Set-off)

1. Written statement.

The defendant shall at or before the first hearing or within such time as the Court may permit, present a written statement of his defence

Order XXIX, C.P.C. (Suits By or Against Corporations)

1. Subscription and verification of pleading.

In suits by or against a corporation, any pleading may be signed and verified on behalf of the corporation by the secretary or by any director or other principal officer of the corporation who is able to depose to the facts of the case.

A bare reading of Rule 1 of Order III, C.P.C. shows that any appearance, application or act in or to a civil court, required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party in such court, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, may be made or done in three ways: (i) by the party in person or (ii) by his recognized agent or (iii) by his pleader. The term "act" used in this Rule is of quite a comprehensive meaning, which includes all the necessary acts that are to be done in the course of the litigation so that the case may be properly placed before and proceeded with by the court, such as presenting the pleadings, making the miscellaneous applications, paying the process-fee, etc. Although the act of signing and verifying the pleadings (plaint and written statement)[1] comes within the scope of the term "act" as used in Rule 1 of Order III, but it cannot be dealt with under the said Rule as Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI, C.P.C. is the law that contains provisions which expressly provides for otherwise.

5. Under Rule 14 of Order VI, every pleading is to be signed by the party and his pleader (if any); however, where a party pleading is, by reason of absence or for other good cause, unable to sign the pleading, it may be signed by any person duly authorized by him to sign the same or to sue or defend on his behalf. While as per Rule 15 of Order VI, every pleading is to be verified on oath or solemn affirmation at the foot by the party or by one of the parties pleading or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the court to be acquainted with the facts of the case. The acts of signing and verifying pleadings (plaint and written statement), therefore, cannot be done by a pleader in terms of Rule 1 of Order III, C.P.C. Rule 1 of Order XXIX, which contains special provisions as to signing and verifying pleadings in suits by or against a corporation, is like a proviso to Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI, C.P.C. It authorizes, in addition to the persons specified in Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI, the secretary or any director or other principal officer of the corporation who is able to depose to the facts of the case, to sign and verify any pleading on behalf of the corporation.

Difference between signing/verifying a plaint and presenting/instituting a suit

6. The notable point is that neither Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI nor Rule 1 of Order XXIX says anything about presenting the pleadings to the court after signing and verifying the same. Rather, these are Rule 1 of Order IV and Rule 1 of Order VIII which deal with the subject of presenting a plaint or a written statement to the court. Different rules on these two matters make it obvious that there is a difference between the signing and verifying a pleading (plaint or written statement) under Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI, or under Rule 1 of Order XXIX, and the presentation of that pleading to the court under Rule 1 of Order IV (plaint) and Rule 1 of Order VIII (written statement), C.P.C. The act of presenting a plaint to the court under Rule 1 of Order IV is called the institution of the suit,[2] and the act of presenting a written statement under Rule 1 of Order VIII constitutes the defence of the suit.[3] These acts manifest the will of a litigant to pursue his claim or to defend the claim made against him, in a court of law. By presenting the plaint, a plaintiff sets the machinery of the court in motion for deciding upon his claim while the presentation of the written statement expresses the will of the defendant to defend that claim. The act of presentation of a plaint or a written statement can, therefore, be done only by the plaintiff and the defendant in person or by their recognized agents or by their duly appointed pleaders, in terms of Rule 1 of Order III.[4] Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI, or Rule 1 of Order XXIX, which relates to signing and verifying the pleadings (plaint and written statement), cannot be referred to for the purpose of establishing the authority of a person to institute, or defend, the suit.

7. As the authority conferred by Rule 1 of Order XXIX, on the specified officers of the corporation to sign and verify any pleading on behalf of the corporation, does not include the authority to institute or defend the suit in their own names, a corporation (like PESCO in the present case) being a juristic person must sue or be sued in its own name. Therefore, the name of the corporation, not the name or designation of any of its officers or employees, is to be mentioned as a plaintiff or a defendant. The phrase "service of summons/notice through its principal officer, so and so" may be added with the name of the corporation, for service of summons/notice as per Rule 2 of Order XXIX, C.P.C.

Non-applicability of provisions of C.P.C. relating to signing and verification of pleadings to memorandums of appeal and revision petitions

8. A memorandum of appeal can be signed, as per Rule 1 of Order XLI, by the appellant or his pleader; so can a revision petition be signed by the petitioner or his pleader as the revisional jurisdiction is a part of the general appellate jurisdiction of a superior court[5] and the provisions of the C.P.C. in regard to appeals are applicable mutatis mutandis to revision petitions.[6] A memorandum of appeal or a revision petition can, therefore, be signed by a duly appointed pleader as per Rule 1 of Order XLI,[7] and presented to the appellate or revisional court by him on behalf of the appellant or petitioner as per Rule 1 of Order III, C.P.C. Rules 14 and 15 of Order VI, as well as Rule 1 of Order XXIX, as to signing and verifying the pleadings (plaint and written statement) are, thus, not applicable to the memorandums of appeal and revision petitions.

Curing of any defect in the authority of a person to sign and verify a pleading, or a memorandum of appeal and revision petition, and to present the same to the court

9. Having examined the scope of the above-cited rules of procedure contained in the C.P.C., we must reiterate the principle, which is by now well settled, that 'the proper place of procedure in any system of administration of justice is to help and not to thwart the grant to the people of their rights ... Any system, which by giving effect to the form and not to the substance defeats substantive rights, is defective to that extent.'[8] The courts, thus, always lean in favour of adjudicating the matters on merits rather than stifling the proceedings on procedural formalities. The rules of procedure are meant to facilitate the court proceedings for enforcing the rights of litigants, not to trap them in procedural technicalities for frustrating their rights. They are the tools to advance the cause of justice and cannot be used to cause the miscarriage of justice. The ultimate object of securing the ends of justice, therefore, outweighs the insistence on strict adherence to such rules. The same is the purpose of the rules of procedure discussed above. Any defect or omission in signing and verifying, or presenting, a pleading (plaint or written statement) or a memorandum of appeal or revision petition does not affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the court and is therefore taken to be such an irregularity which can be cured at any stage of the proceedings.[9] Likewise, any defect in the authority of a person to sign and verify a pleading filed in a suit by or against a corporation, or to institute or defend such a suit by presenting that pleading to the court, or in signing or filing of a memorandum of appeal or revision petition by a corporation, can also be cured at any stage of the proceedings.[10]

10. It is for this reason that section 99, C.P.C. provides inter alia that no decree is to be reversed nor is any case to be remanded in appeal on account of any error, defect or irregularity in any proceedings in the suit that has not affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the court. Similarly, it is not every irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction by a lower court that calls for interference in revisional jurisdiction under section 115(1)(c), C.P.C. but only the material irregularity, and the material irregularity is that which affects the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the court.[11]

11. In the present case, we have noted that the power of attorney (wakalat nama) filed in the present petition is only for petitioner No. 5, PESCO, and not for other petitioners, i.e., the employees of the PESCO, SDO/AM, XEN/DM, etc. The present case relates to the ownership and possession of the suit property on which petitioner No.5, PESCO has its Complaint Centre. The employees of PESCO have no claim as to any right, title or interest in the suit property. They are, thus, neither necessary nor proper party in the case and have wrongly been impleaded. The misjoinder of parties is, however, such an error that does not affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the court as provided in section 99, C.P.C., and is a procedural error which can be cured by striking out the names of such parties under Rule 10 of Order I, C.P.C. at any stage of the proceedings of the case, including the appellate or revisional stage.[12] We, therefore, strike out the names of petitioners Nos. 1 to 4[13] not only from the present petition but also in the proceedings throughout (suit, appeal and revision), for correction of the record of the case.

12. As regards the dismissal of the revision petition by the impugned judgment, we find that the High Court has knocked out the petitioner, PESCO, without touching upon the merits of the case, on a procedural technicality of not filing the resolution of the Board of Directors of PESCO, authorizing any of its officers to file the revision petition and to appoint a pleader for this purpose, and that too without providing any opportunity to present such a resolution. It is pertinent to mention here that the petitioner, PESCO, has submitted in this Court a resolution of its Board of Directors, dated 10.12.2015, whereby the General Manager (Finance)/Finance Director and Addl. DG (Legal)/Director Legal have been authorized to institute and defend cases in courts on behalf of PESCO, and the present petition has been filed by a pleader (AOR) duly appointed by the Director Legal of PESCO. The High Court, if had any doubt about the authority of the pleader to file the revision petition, should have asked him to produce the resolution of the Board of Directors or Articles of Association, to show the authority of the officer appointing him as a pleader for PESCO to file the revision petition, and should have provided a reasonable opportunity for it. The impugned judgment passed without providing such an opportunity is not legally sustainable. The petition is, therefore, converted into an appeal and the same is allowed. The impugned judgment is set aside; the revision petition shall be deemed to be pending before the High Court, which shall be decided by the High Court on merits in accordance with law. The petitioner, PESCO, shall produce a copy of the said resolution of its Board of Directors before the High Court also, for placing the same on record of the revision petition.

----O. XXVI, Rr. 1, 6 & 8---Change of Advocate in a review petition---Special leave to substitute a counsel in a review petition is to be granted, only when appearance of the earlier counsel is not possible due to some unavoidable circumstances---Practice of filing review applications by changing the counsel without justifiable reasons or unavoidable circumstances, by the parties as well as by the Advocates representing them is condemnable---Scope of Order XXVI, Rule 6 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980, regarding change of Advocate in a review petition stated.

Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ('the Rules') requires the same Advocate, who earlier appeared to argue the case, to draw up the review application and appear in support of it before the Court for certain reasons. It is because a review petition is not the equivalent of a petition for leave to appeal or an appeal where the case is argued for the first time. It is not the rehearing of the same matter. The scope of review application is limited to the grounds mentioned in Order XXVI, Rule 1 of the Rules. The Advocate who had earlier argued the main case is perhaps the best person to evaluate whether the said grounds of review are attracted in the case. He being part of the hearing of the main case is fully aware of the proceedings that transpired in the Court leading to the judgment or order sought to be reviewed. He is the one who knows what was argued before the Court and what weighed with the Court in deciding the matter either way. It is also for the same reason that the review application is to be fixed before the same Bench that delivered the judgment or order sought to be reviewed, under Rule 8 of Order XXVI of the Rules. The same Advocate and the same Bench can best appreciate the grounds of review. A review argued by a new Advocate before a new Bench would inevitably amount to rehearing of the main case and going beyond the scope of review under the law. It is true that the requirement of "sufficient ground" for granting the special leave is not expressly stated in Rule 6, but this does not mean that the discretion of the Court to grant or decline the special leave is arbitrary or is mechanical on filing of an application in this regard by a petitioner. This discretion, like all other discretions, is to be exercised judiciously for valid reasons by considering the circumstances of the case. The special leave to substitute a counsel in a review petition is to be granted, only when appearance of the earlier counsel is not possible due to some unavoidable circumstances. The practice of filing review applications by changing the counsel without justifiable reasons or unavoidable circumstances, by the parties as well as by the Advocates representing them is condemnable.

----O. IV, Rr. 23, 24 & O. XXVI, Rr. 4, 6, 8---Change of Advocate in a review petition---Scope---Special leave to substitute a counsel in a review petition---In the present case, the ground pleaded for grant of the special leave was that the earlier counsel due to ill health and old age could not file the present review petition---Firstly, there was no medical certificate attached along with the NOC tendered by the said counsel besides the "old age" of the said counsel was also not specified---More importantly as per Order XXVI Rule 4 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ('the Rules') there was no certificate given by the earlier counsel that review was justifiable in the present case---Further, the said application was silent regarding change of Advocate on Record (AOR)---Under Order IV Rule 23 of the Rules no person having an Advocate on Record shall file a power of attorney authorizing another Advocate on Record to act for him in the same case except with the consent of the former Advocate on Record or by leave of the court, unless the former Advocate on Record is dead or is unable by reason of infirmity of mind and body to continue to act---Nothing was available on record of present case to show why, AOR who had also appeared in the Civil Appeal had been replaced without furnishing her consent to such effect or without assigning any reason for her non-appearance as provided under Rule 23---Under Order IV, Rule 24 no Advocate on Record without leave of the court can withdraw from the conduct of any case---Application seeking permission under Order XXVI, Rule 6 of the Rules was not made out in the present case---No other ground was agitated before the Court for the change of the counsel or the AOR that would make out a case of grant of special leave to substitute the counsel for drafting, filing and arguing the review petition---No reason was furnished as to why AOR had been replaced, who had also appeared along with Advocate sought to be replaced in the order under review---Thus the application made under Order XXVI, Rule 6 of the Rules was rejected and consequently, the review petitions were not entertained.

Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J

C.M.A. No. 1609-L of 2021: Through this application permission is sought by the learned counsel to represent the petitioner in review petition by replacing the earlier counsel. It is stated in the application that the earlier counsel namely Mr. Shuja ud Din Hashmi, ASC has given NOC in favour of Mr. Muhammad Tariq Bashir Awan, ASC, on the ground of his ill health and old age. There is no reason furnished in the application as to why the Advocate on Record namely Mst. Tasneem Amin, AOR cannot represent the petitioner and is being replaced, considering that both Mr. Shuja ud Din Hashim, ASC and Ms. Tasneem Amin, AOR appeared on behalf of the applicants before this Court to argue Civil Appeal No. 5-L of 2010 as reflected in the order under review dated 23.07.2021.

2. Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules 1980 ("Rules") deals with the practice and procedure of this Court in exercising its review jurisdiction. It lays special emphasis on the role and obligation of the Advocate who is to draw up the application for review and appear in support of it before the Court. Under Rule 6 an application for review has to be drawn by the Advocate who appeared at the hearing of the case in which the judgment or order, sought to be reviewed, was made. Under Rule 4, the Advocate who draws up the review application has not only to specify the points upon which the prayer for review is based but he has also to add his certificate to the effect that the review would be justifiable in accordance with the law and practice of the Court. Rule 5 provides that in case the Court comes to the conclusion that the review application filed was vexatious or frivolous, the Advocate or the Advocate on Record drawing the application shall render himself liable to disciplinary action, while Rule 7 provides that no application for review shall be entertained unless party seeking review furnishes cash security of Rs. 10,000/- which shall stand forfeited if the review petition is dismissed or shall be paid to the opposite-party, if the review petition is contested. Rule 6, thus, has to be seen and applied in the overall scheme of Order XXVI of the Rules.

3. Order XXVI of the Rules requires the same Advocate, who earlier appeared to argue the case, to draw up the review application and appear in support of it before the Court for certain reasons. It is because a review petition is not the equivalent of a petition for leave to appeal or an appeal where the case is argued for the first time. It is not the rehearing of the same matter. The scope of review application is limited to the grounds mentioned in Order XXVI Rule 1 of the Rules. The Advocate who had earlier argued the main case is perhaps the best person to evaluate whether the said grounds of review are attracted in the case. He being part of the hearing of the main case is fully aware of the proceedings that transpired in the Court leading to the judgment or order sought to be reviewed. He is the one who knows what was argued before the Court and what weighed with the Court in deciding the matter either way. It is also for the same reason that the review application is to be fixed before the same Bench that delivered the judgment or order sought to be reviewed, under Rule 8 of Order XXVI of the Rules. It is not hard to see that the same Advocate and the same Bench can best appreciate the grounds of review. A review argued by a new Advocate before a new Bench would inevitably amount to rehearing of the main case and going beyond the scope of review under the law. It is true that the requirement of "sufficient ground" for granting the special leave is not expressly stated in Rule 6, but this does not mean that the discretion of the Court to grant or decline the special leave is arbitrary or is mechanical on filing of an application in this regard by a petitioner. This discretion, like all other discretions, is to be exercised judiciously for valid reasons by considering the circumstances of the case. The special leave to substitute a counsel in a review petition is to be granted, as held by a full bench of this Court in Dr. Mubashir Hassan's case[1], only when appearance of the earlier counsel is not possible due to some unavoidable circumstances. The practice of filing review applications by changing the counsel without justifiable reasons or unavoidable circumstances, by the parties as well as by the Advocates representing them is condemnable.[2] See order of the Court passed in C.M.A. No. 3610/2022, etc. dated 24.10.2022.[3]

4. In this particular case, the ground pleaded for grant of the special leave is that the earlier counsel due to ill health and old age cannot file the instant review petition. Firstly, there is no medical certificate attached along with the NOC tendered by the said learned counsel besides the "old age" of the said counsel is also not specified. More importantly as per Order XXVI, Rule 4 there is no certificate given by the earlier counsel that review is justifiable in the instant case. Further, it is also noted that the said application is silent regarding change of Advocate on Record. Under Order IV Rule 23 no person having an Advocate on Record shall file a power of attorney authorizing another Advocate on Record to act for him in the same case except with the consent of the former Advocate on Record or by leave of the court, unless the former Advocate on Record is dead or is unable by reason of infirmity of mind and body to continue to act. There is nothing on the record to show why Ms. Tasneem Amin, AOR who had also appeared in the Civil Appeal No.5-L/2010 has been replaced without furnishing her consent to this effect or without assigning any reason for her non-appearance as provided under Rule 23 above. It is also underlined that under Order IV Rule 24 no Advocate on Record without leave of the court can withdraw from the conduct of any case.

5. We are, therefore, of the view that application seeking permission under Order XXVI, Rule 6 of the Rules is not made out. There is no other ground agitated before us for the change of the counsel or the AOR that would make out a case of grant of special leave to substitute the counsel for drafting, filing and arguing the review petition. Therefore, we see no valid reason or unavoidable circumstances to grant the special leave as prayed for. There is no reason furnished as to why AOR has been replaced, who had also appeared along with ASC in the order under review. Thus the application made under Order XXVI, Rule 6 of the Rules is rejected and consequently, the review petitions are not entertained. We affirm the view taken by this Court in C.M.A. 3610/2022, etc. vide order dated 24.10.2022.[4]

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The learned counsel for the respondent, at the very outset, raised an objection that the petitioners have filed the instant petition without exhausting the available remedy of filing an Intra Court Appeal ("ICA") under section 3 of the Law Reforms Ordinance, 1972 ("Ordinance") before the High Court, therefore, the instant petition is not maintainable. In support of this contention, the learned counsel has placed reliance on Col. (Retd.) M.R. Hassan[1], Mst. Karim Bibi[2], Samina Masood[3], Zia Mohy-ud-Din[4], Ilyas Gujjar[5] and Abdul Ghani[6].

2. On the other hand, the learned counsel for the petitioners has also relied on Media Network[7] to contend that the instant petition is maintainable.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have gone through the case law with their able assistance. It is settled law that where the right to file an ICA before the High Court under section 3 of the Ordinance exists, then a petition before this Court without exhausting the said remedy, and thereby circumventing the forum below, is ordinarily not maintainable.[8] The requirement of filing an ICA is a rule of practice for regulating the procedure of the Court and does not oust or abridge the constitutional jurisdiction of this Court.[9] Such petitions, however, have been entertained by this Court only when certain exceptional circumstances exist, such as, where the matter involves important questions of law of great public importance having far-reaching consequences[10], questions of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution[11] and validity of provincial statutes[12], and substantial questions of law involving fundamental rights[13], coupled with the fact that the objection with regards to maintainability is taken at a belated stage before the Court.[14] We note that no such exceptional circumstances exist in the matter at hand and the objection regarding maintainability of the petition was also duly raised at the first instance. Reliance on Media Network (supra) by the learned counsel for the petitioners is misconceived as in the said judgment, this Court had noted that the objection as to maintainability was taken at a belated stage and important questions of law of great public importance having far-reaching consequences were involved in terms of selection of cases for audit under a Self-Assessment Scheme and policy guidelines issued by the Central Board of Revenue. Whereas, the present matter relates simply to adjustment of input tax with respect to services received by the respondent against the sales tax on services. Consequently, we find that the instant petition, having been filed without availing the remedy of an ICA before the High Court, is not maintainable.

4. In the light of the above, the preliminary objection raised by the learned counsel for the respondents is upheld and the instant petition is accordingly dismissed being not maintainable.

MWA/F-3/SC Petition dismissed.

(b) Interpretation of statutes---

----Updating construction of statutes, principle of---Scope of the principle of updating construction of statutes stated with respect to technological changes/advancements.

Principle of extension of statutes to new things is a well-known principle of the construction of statutes. Except in some cases where the principle of strict construction is to be applied, the language of a statute is generally extended to new things which were not known and could not have been contemplated by the legislature when it was passed. As the constant formal updating of all laws by the legislature is not practicable and each generation mostly lives under the law it inherits, the legislature is presumed to have intended that the laws enacted by it should ordinarily be taken as "always speaking" and applied at any future time in such a way that gives effect to its intention in the changed circumstances that have occurred since the enactment of the law. This is commonly called the "updating construction" of laws. The changes that require the updating construction of law may include technological or scientific developments, new natural phenomena or changes in social conditions, etc---Updating construction is, however, applied only where its application would be consistent with the legislative intention. When a new state of affairs or matters comes into existence, the courts have to consider whether they fall within the legislative intention. They may be held to do so if they fall within the same genus of facts as those to which the expressed [legislative] policy has been formulated. They may also be held to do so if there can be detected a clear purpose in the legislation which can be fulfilled if the extension is made. The principle of updating construction is in consonance with the purposive approach adopted while interpreting different statutes.

Federation of Pakistan PLD 1958 SC 118; Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes (Tenth Edition); Bennion, Bailey and Norbury on Statutory Interpretation (Eighth Edition) pp. 503-518; R v. Oakley [2001] 1 AC 617 per Lord Hoffmann ref.

In the 21st century, technological advancement has reached an unprecedented speed. A technological change is thus often so radical that it could not have reasonably been perceived by the legislature and catered in the language of the statute, nor can the legislature promptly catch up with such changes by the formal legislative process. In such a scenario, the principle of updating construction requires judges to bridge the gap between law and technology by identifying the concept (purpose and policy) behind the statutory provision and giving effect thereto in interpreting a particular provision. For, when a statute employs a concept which may change in content with advancing knowledge, technology or social standards, it should be interpreted as it would be currently understood. The content may change but the concept remains the same. The courts should therefore look at the bigger picture (purpose and policy) to harmonize law with technological change, and adopt a realistic approach in factual assessment to retrieve what the law intends to achieve. In applying the statutory language to a new situation created by technological change, it is necessary both to view the facts realistically and to keep in mind the purpose of the legislation

----O. XVIII, R. 4 & S. 151---Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984), Art. 164---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9, 10A & 37(d)---Evidence of witness, recording of---Use of video conferencing---Permissibility---Evidence of a witness who is not physically present in court can be recorded in a civil case by using the modern technology of video conferencing, within the existing legal framework---Civil court can allow, under Section 151, C.P.C. and Article 164 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984 recording the oral evidence of a witness through video conferencing---Virtual attendance of a witness in court, appears to be the species of the genus of "attendance" required under Rule 4 of Order XVIII, C.P.C. and fulfills the legislative purpose and policy in requiring the attendance of a witness in court for recording his evidence---Word "attendance" used in Rule 4 can be extended to "virtual attendance", and the word "attendance" mentioned in the said Rule does not mean only "physical attendance" but includes "virtual attendance" made possible by the modern technology of video conferencing.

The "virtual attendance" of a witness in court through the medium of video conferencing enables the judge and other persons present in court to see the witness and hear what he says, and vice versa. Such an attendance is thus, in effect, in open court, and his evidence is also recorded under the personal superintendence of the judge. The judge under whose superintendence the evidence through video conferencing is recorded can satisfy himself about the free will of the witness present on screen as he does about the witness present physically in court by questioning him in this regard and ensuring that he is not under the immediate influence of any other person. A court can ensure the independence of a witness only from the immediate influence, not from any covert influence, of any other person in both situations whether he is physically present or virtually present in court. In the latter situation, the court can ensure that there is no other person in the room where the witness is sitting, while his evidence is being recorded, by asking him to provide a full view of that room on the screen. The identity of the witness, if disputed, can also be verified by the judge through appropriate means. The witness can be confronted on screen with documents produced or sought to be produced in court by any of the parties or, if needed, the scanned copies of such documents can be sent to him through modern means of communication. In all such necessary matters as to the recording of evidence, the physical attendance and the virtual attendance of a witness in court do not differ. The virtual attendance of a witness in court, thus, appears to be the species of the genus of "attendance" required under Rule 4 of Order XVIII, C.P.C. and fulfills the legislative purpose and policy in requiring the attendance of a witness in court for recording his evidence. Therefore, the word "attendance" used in Rule 4 can be extended to "virtual attendance", and the word "attendance" mentioned in the said Rule does not mean only "physical attendance" but includes "virtual attendance" made possible by the modern technology of video conferencing.

State of Maharashtra v. Praful Desai AIR 2003 SC 2053 and Cyberworks Audio Video Technology Ltd v. Mei Ah (HK) Co Ltd [2020] HKCFI 347 ref.

Article 164 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984 ('QSO') provides that in such cases as the court may consider appropriate, the court may allow to be produced any evidence that may have become available because of modern devices or techniques. When in the circumstances of a case, requiring physical attendance of a witness in court will incur an unnecessary amount of delay, expense or inconvenience, the order of the court allowing virtual attendance of a witness through video conferencing is for the ends of justice, and the rejection of an unjustifiable insistence of the opposing party on securing physical attendance of such witness in court is to prevent abuse of the process of the court. An order allowing virtual attendance of the witness in such circumstances thus squarely falls within the scope of section 151 of the C.P.C.

The interpretation of the various provisions of law allowing modern technology of video conferencing to be read into the exiting enactments enhances access to justice, promotes fair trial and introduces inexpensive and expeditious justice thereby advancing the fundamental rights under Articles 9 and 10A and principle of policy under Article 37(d) of the Constitution.

Government of Balochistan v. Azizullah Memon PLD 1993 SC 341; Chairman NAB v. Nasar Ullah PLD 2022 SC 497 and Muhammad Sharif v. Nabi Bakhsh 2012 SCMR 900 ref.

Although the powers conferred by section 151 of the C.P.C. and Article 164 of the QSO are discretionary, the courts are to exercise them judiciously, not arbitrarily or mechanically, on the filing of an application in such regard by a party to the proceedings. Such discretion, like all other discretions, is to be exercised judiciously for valid reasons by considering the circumstances of the case. In exercising the discretion, the courts are to see: (i) whether the evidence of the witness appears essential to the just decision of the case, and (ii) whether requiring physical attendance of the witness in court would incur unreasonable delay, expense or inconvenience. Supreme Court observed that the strict adherence to the obligatory list of guidelines/protocols to be complied with by the courts for allowing evidence of a witness to be recorded through video conferencing provided in the cases reported as Munawar Hussain v. State 2020 PCr.LJ 1184 and Muhammad Israr v. State PLD 2021 Pesh 105 may impede the application of the very law declared therein; therefore, it was proper that the said guidelines are to be followed by the courts to the extent it is found just and proper to follow them in the facts and circumstances of a particular case. For instance, where there is a serious apprehension that the witness would be under the influence of or tutored by some other person in the course of recording his evidence, or his very identity is disputed on substantial, not flimsy, grounds, the court may require his presence in the Pakistan Embassy in the country concerned and engage some officer of the Embassy in the process of recording his statement through video conferencing, as provided in those guidelines. But without any such serious apprehension or substantial dispute, requiring all such witnesses in every case to go to the Pakistan Embassy and engaging some officer of the Embassy in the process would also involve some unnecessary delay, expense or inconvenience. This matter should, therefore, be left to the discretion of the court concerned, which shall obviously exercise it judiciously for valid reasons.

In the present case the petitioner is the only defendant in the suit; therefore, her evidence is very much essential to the just decision of the case. The petitioner lives in a foreign country (Canada) since 2016 as her ordinary place of residence, with her family including two children, and is not in that country for a short visit. The petitioner comes to Pakistan only when there is a working schedule for her. Waiting for her such a schedule would certainly cause a delay in the decision of the suit, and forcing her to come to Pakistan from the foreign country (Canada) by leaving her children there or carrying them with her would incur such expense and inconvenience which surely appears unreasonable under the circumstances of the case. The prayer of the petitioner for allowing her remaining cross-examination through video conferencing is, thus, justified. Furthermore, there is no dispute as to the identity of the petitioner, nor is there any serious apprehension that the petitioner would be under the influence of or tutored by any other person in the course of recording her remaining cross-examination, therefore, there is no need to require her to go to the Pakistan Embassy in Canada and to involve any officer of the Embassy in the process of recording her remaining cross-examination through video conferencing. Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question that falls for our consideration is: whether the evidence of a witness who is not physically present in court can be recorded in a civil case by using the modern technology of video conferencing, within the existing legal framework.

2. Briefly, the background facts of the case in which the said question has arisen for our consideration are that the respondent instituted a suit for damages against the petitioner, on the basis of alleged defamation. The petitioner contested the suit by filing her written statement. On the pleadings of the parties, the trial court framed certain issues for trial and called upon the parties to produce their evidence. After the completion of the affirmative evidence of the respondent, the petitioner produced her witnesses and also appeared herself in the witness box as DW-4 in her defence evidence. On two dates of hearing, the petitioner (DW-4) was cross-examined but her cross-examination could not be completed and on the next two dates, the hearing of the case was adjourned due to the leave of the Presiding Officer and the strike of the Bar. In the meanwhile, the petitioner left for Canada and filed an application in the trial court for recording her remaining cross-examination from Canada through a video link.

3. In the said application, the petitioner mainly pleaded that she had been appearing in court on several dates for her cross-examination, but for one reason or the other, her cross-examination could not be completed; that she had to return to her place of abode, Canada, where she had been living with her family since 2016; that she was a mother of two children of 6 and 8 years of age, and it would cause her unnecessary expense and inconvenience in travelling to Pakistan and leaving her children in Canada, for the remaining cross-examination; and that by such travelling she would also face the risk of coming in contact with coronavirus and of consequent restrictions upon her re-entry into Canada.

4. The respondent opposed the application, and the trial court dismissed the same by its order dated 28.03.2022. The High Court also dismissed the revision petition of the petitioner filed against that order of the trial court, vide its judgment dated 18.05.2022 ("impugned judgment"). Hence, the petitioner has knocked at the door of this Court through the present petition for leave to appeal.

5. We have heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties, read the cited precedent cases and perused the record of the case.

6. As the question being considered in the present case is, whether the evidence of a witness who is not physically present in court can be recorded in a civil case by using the modern technology of video conferencing within the existing legal framework, we think that it would be appropriate to cite here the relevant provisions of the law, which are to be examined for answering the said question. They are Rule 4 of Order XVIII of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 ("C.P.C."), Section 151 of the C.P.C. and Article 164 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984 ("Q.S.O."):

Rule 4 of Order XVIII of C.P.C.:

4. Witnesses to be examined in open Court: The evidence of the witnesses in attendance shall be taken orally in open Court in the presence and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge.

Section 151 of C.P.C.:

151. Saving of inherent powers of Court: Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court, to be exercised after recording reasons in writing,[1] to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court.

Article 164 of the Q.S.O.:

164. Production of evidence that has become available because of modern devices, etc.: In such cases as the Court may consider appropriate, the Court may allow to be produced any evidence that may have become available because of modern devices or techniques.

The most important of the above provisions, for the present purpose, is perhaps Rule 4 of Order XVIII of the C.P.C. ("Rule 4"), which provides that the evidence of the witnesses in attendance shall be taken orally in open court in the presence and under the personal direction and superintendence of the judge. Although the expression "witnesses in attendance" used in Rule 4 is not followed by the words "in court", the reading of the Rule as a whole leaves little room to doubt that the attendance of the witnesses referred to therein means the attendance of the witnesses in court. However, what is unclear is whether this "attendance" means only "physical attendance" or may include "virtual attendance" by video conferencing. Can the word "attendance" used in Rule 4 be extended to "virtual attendance"?

7. In order to answer the above question it is important to highlight the conceptual role of a court in a constitutional democracy. The role of a judge is to understand the purpose of law in the society and to help the law achieve its purpose. Law is a living organism and must respond to the changing social realities of the time. Indeed when social reality changes, the law must change too. Just as the change in social reality is the law of life, responsiveness to change in social reality is the life of the law.[2] Legislative intent must be viewed in its changing environment by treating the statute as a living organism. The court cannot be insensitive to the system in which the statute operates. If the statute or the legislative intent is to be viewed as at the time of its origin, it freezes the meaning of the statute at the historical moment of its legislation, which may no longer be relevant to the meaning of the statute in modern times. To limit the meaning of the statute to its original legislative intent only reduces the judge into a historian and an archaeologist whereby he looks backward instead of forward. Sterility and stagnation defeat the purpose of law and defy its organic character. The best way forward to assess the legislative intent of a law is to examine its purpose today by considering its objectives, the goals, the interests, the values, the policy, and the function that the statute is designed to actualize. Change in social reality today also depends on the rapid development of technology to which the law cannot shut its eyes. While law develops gradually and technology is often far ahead of the legislature and the judicature, both these institutions must move forward and acknowledge the technological advances in developing the law, which cannot stand still and must adapt to the changes in society. In the process of interpreting laws, judges must endeavor to bridge the gap between law and society. The intersection of law and technology not only requires the law to regulate technology but also to employ technology to make laws more at home with the technology-savvy society.

8. Coming back to the question, whether the word "attendance" used in Order 18, Rule 4 of the C.P.C. can be extended to "virtual attendance", we find a five-member bench decision of this Court in Fakir Muhammad case[3] to be instructive in this regard and points us in the right direction. The Court held, in that case, that the principle of extension of statutes to new things is a well-known principle of the construction of statutes and cited Maxwell[4] to say that except in some cases where the principle of strict construction is to be applied, the language of a statute is generally extended to new things which were not known and could not have been contemplated by the legislature when it was passed. By applying the said principle, the Court held that the words "by land" used in section 19 of the Sea Customs Act 1878, include "by air".

9. The principle of extension of statutes to new things, referred to by this Court in the Fakir Muhammad case in 1958, has over the years been crystallized into the principle of "updating construction" of statutes. As the constant formal updating of all laws by the legislature is not practicable and each generation mostly lives under the law it inherits, the legislature is presumed to have intended that the laws enacted by it should ordinarily be taken as "always speaking" and applied at any future time in such a way that gives effect to its intention in the changed circumstances that have occurred since the enactment of the law. This is commonly called the "updating construction" of laws.[5] The changes that require the updating construction of law may include technological or scientific developments, new natural phenomena or changes in social conditions, etc. 'It is not difficult to see why an updating construction of legislation is generally to be preferred. Legislation is not and could not be constantly re-enacted and is generally expected to remain in place indefinitely, until it is repealed, for what may be a long period of time. An inevitable corollary of this is that the circumstances in which a law has to be applied may differ significantly from those which existed when the law was made, as a result of changes in technology or in society or in other conditions. This is something which the legislature may be taken to have had in contemplation when the law was made. If the question is asked "is it reasonable to suppose that the legislature intended a court applying the law in the future to ignore such changes and to act as if the world had remained static since the legislation was enacted?" the answer must generally be "no". A "historical" approach of that kind would usually be perverse and would defeat the purpose of the legislation.'[6]

10. The updating construction is, however, applied only where its application would be consistent with the legislative intention. When a new state of affairs or matters comes into existence, the courts have to consider whether they fall within the legislative intention. They may be held to do so if they fall within the same genus of facts as those to which the expressed [legislative] policy has been formulated. They may also be held to do so if there can be detected a clear purpose in the legislation which can be fulfilled if the extension is made.'[7] We may underline here that the principle of updating construction is in consonance with the purposive approach, which this Court has consistently adopted while interpreting different statutes.[8] In fact, the purpose and policy of the law, which is to be interpreted, play a central role in applying this principle.[9]

11. In the 21st century, technological advancement has reached an unprecedented speed. A technological change is thus often so radical that it could not have reasonably been perceived by the legislature and catered in the language of the statute, nor can the legislature promptly catch up with such changes by the formal legislative process. In such a scenario, the principle of updating construction requires judges to bridge the gap between law and technology by identifying the concept (purpose and policy) behind the statutory provision and giving effect thereto in interpreting a particular provision. For, 'when a statute employs a concept which may change in content with advancing knowledge, technology or social standards, it should be interpreted as it would be currently understood. The content may change but the concept remains the same.'[10] The courts should therefore look at the bigger picture (purpose and policy) to harmonize law with technological change, and adopt a realistic approach in factual assessment to retrieve what the law intends to achieve. In applying the statutory language to a new situation created by technological change, it is necessary both to view the facts realistically and to keep in mind the purpose of the legislation.[11]

12. When we examine the question as to extending the word "attendance" used in Rule 4 to "virtual attendance" in light of the above principle of updating construction, there remains no difficulty to find the right answer. What we need to do is to see: what are the legislative purpose and policy in requiring the attendance of a witness in court for recording his evidence, and whether extending the word "attendance" used in Rule 4 to "virtual attendance" would fulfill or defeat that purpose and policy. The legislative purpose, in this regard, is evident from Rule 4 itself, that is, the evidence of the witness is to be recorded: (i) in open court, and (ii) under the personal superintendence of the judge. It is also not hard to discern the legislative policy. The recording of evidence of a witness in an open court under the personal superintendence of the judge ensures that the witness may give the evidence, of his free will as per his conscience without being under the influence of any other person.

13. The "virtual attendance" of a witness in court through the medium of video conferencing enables the judge and other persons present in court to see the witness and hear what he says, and vice versa. Such an attendance is thus, in effect, in open court, and his evidence is also recorded under the personal superintendence of the judge. The judge under whose superintendence the evidence through video conferencing is recorded can satisfy himself about the free will of the witness present on screen as he does about the witness present physically in court by questioning him in this regard and ensuring that he is not under the immediate influence of any other person. Needless to say that a court can ensure the independence of a witness only from the immediate influence, not from any covert influence, of any other person in both situations whether he is physically present or virtually present in court. In the latter situation, the court can ensure that there is no other person in the room where the witness is sitting, while his evidence is being recorded, by asking him to provide a full view of that room on the screen. The identity of the witness, if disputed, can also be verified by the judge through appropriate means. The witness can be confronted on screen with documents produced or sought to be produced in court by any of the parties or, if needed, the scanned copies of such documents can be sent to him through modern means of communication. In all such necessary matters as to the recording of evidence, the physical attendance and the virtual attendance of a witness in court do not differ.[12] The virtual attendance of a witness in court, thus, appears to be the species of the genus of "attendance" required under Rule 4 and fulfills the legislative purpose and policy in requiring the attendance of a witness in court for recording his evidence. Therefore, we can legitimately conclude that the word "attendance" used in Rule 4 can be extended to "virtual attendance", and the word "attendance" mentioned in this Rule does not mean only "physical attendance" but includes "virtual attendance" made possible by the modern technology of video conferencing.

14. Next, we proceed to examine under which provision of the C.P.C. can a court make an order for the virtual attendance of a witness as there is no such provision in Order XVI of the C.P.C., which relates to 'Summoning and Attendance of Witnesses'. Learned counsel for the petitioner has referred to section 151 of the C.P.C., in this regard; therefore, we need to see whether a court can make such an order, in the exercise of its inherent powers under section 151 of the C.P.C.

15. Admittedly, the C.P.C. is silent on the matter of evidence recording through video conferencing: there is no express provision either allowing or prohibiting such procedure of recording evidence. And regarding the procedural law, it is a well-settled principle that the 'courts are not to act upon the principle that every procedure is to be taken to be prohibited unless it is expressly provided for by the Code [of Civil Procedure], but on the converse principle that every procedure is to be understood as permissible till it is shown to be prohibited by law. As a matter of general principle, prohibition cannot be presumed.'[13] The provisions of section 151, which empowers the civil courts to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the court, are intended to preclude the possibility of the civil courts being stuck in a situation for any omission in the C.P.C. The inherent powers of the civil courts saved by section 151 are thus supplementary to their powers stated expressly in the C.P.C. and are to be exercised where the situation is not covered by any provision of the C.P.C. It hardly needs lengthy arguments to establish that when in the circumstances of a case, requiring physical attendance of a witness in court will incur an unnecessary amount of delay, expense or inconvenience, the order of the court allowing virtual attendance of a witness through video conferencing is for the ends of justice, and the rejection of an unjustifiable insistence of the opposing party on securing physical attendance of such witness in court is to prevent abuse of the process of the court. An order allowing virtual attendance of the witness in such circumstances thus squarely falls within the scope of section 151 of the C.P.C.

16. The learned counsel for the petitioner has also relied upon the provisions of Article 164 of the QSO, in addition to section 151 of the C.P.C., for allowing the production of the evidence of the petitioner (DW-4) through video conferencing, while the learned counsel for the respondent has opposed this reliance with the contention that the term "evidence" used in Article 164 only relates to documentary evidence and does not include the oral evidence of a witness which is to be recorded in court.

17. Article 164 of the QSO provides that in such cases as the court may consider appropriate, the court may allow to be produced any evidence that may have become available because of modern devices or techniques. The QSO is mainly a procedural law; its provisions are therefore to be construed liberally, not restrictively, to advance the remedy. As per Article 2 (1) (c) of the QSO, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, the term "evidence" used in the QSO is to include: (i) all statements which the Court permits or requires be made before it by witnesses, in relation to matters of fact under inquiry - such statements are called oral evidence; and (ii) all documents produced for the inspection of the Court - such documents are called documentary evidence. The learned counsel for the respondent could not point out to us anything in the subject or context of Article 164, that may be repugnant to the said inclusive meaning of the term "evidence" in Article 164. We are, therefore, not persuaded to agree with his contention and are of the view that the oral evidence of a witness that may become available because of the modern technique of video conferencing, does fall within the scope of the provisions of Article 164 of the QSO.[14]

18. Article 164 of the QSO is actually our gateway to allowing modern science and technology to come into our courtrooms.[15] 'If justice is to be done, then law must not become stagnant or archaic while society moves forward. It must be accessible, intelligible and must change with the time, responding to the realities of modern life.'[16] In the present age of information technology, no one can dispute the advantages of the use of this technology in courts for improving the efficiency of the judicial process and reducing the delay in the dispensation of justice. As the ultimate objective of the law is to serve society, the courts need to embrace and use technological developments with a pragmatic and dynamic approach in case management and court proceedings, for dispensing justice more efficiently and expeditiously. The above interpretation of the various provisions of law allowing modern technology of video conferencing to be read into the exiting enactments enhances access to justice[17], promotes fair trial[18] and introduces inexpensive and expeditious justice[19] thereby advancing the fundamental rights under Articles 9 and 10A and principle of policy under Article 37(d) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973.

19. We find it necessary to underline here that although the powers conferred by section 151 of the C.P.C. and Article 164 of the QSO are discretionary, the courts are to exercise them judiciously, not arbitrarily or mechanically, on the filing of an application in this regard by a party to the proceedings. This discretion, like all other discretions, is to be exercised judiciously for valid reasons by considering the circumstances of the case. In exercising the discretion, the courts are to see: (i) whether the evidence of the witness appears essential to the just decision of the case, and (ii) whether requiring physical attendance of the witness in court would incur unreasonable delay, expense or inconvenience. We have inferred the standard of "unreasonable delay, expense or inconvenience" from the legislature's wisdom. The standard of unreasonable "delay or expense" for relaxing adherence to certain general rules of the law of evidence has been provided in Articles 46, 47 and 71 of the QSO, while sections 503 and 512 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898 add the ground of unreasonable "inconvenience" to the said two grounds for creating exceptions to some general rules of recording the evidence of witnesses.

20. Before turning to the facts of the present case, for examining the prayer of the petitioner on the touchstone of the above two conditions, we would like to say a few words on the precedent cases of Munawar Hussain[20] and Muhammad Israr[21] cited by the learned counsel for the petitioner, and on the rules and laws of other countries on the subject of recording evidence through video conferencing referred to by the learned counsel for the respondent. In these cases, the Lahore and Peshawar High Courts while relying, among other cases, upon the

Aijazur Rehman case[22] of the Sindh High Court and the Praful Desai case[23] of the Indian Supreme Court have observed that the word "presence" used in section 353 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898 includes "constructive presence" through video conferencing, and by referring to Article 164 of the QSO have held that the statement of a witness can be recorded through video conferencing in a criminal case. Although we agree, in principle, with the exposition of law made in the cited two cases as to the permissibility of recording evidence of a witness through video conferencing in a criminal case, the point on which we have some reservations is that in these cases both the High Courts have prescribed a long list of guidelines/protocols to be complied with by the courts in allowing evidence of a witness to be recorded through video conferencing and have made the compliance therewith obligatory. The learned counsel for the respondent has also asked us to lay down such guidelines in line with the rules and laws of the other countries referred to by him. However, we are not inclined to undertake such an exercise in the present case and find it appropriate that it should be left to be done by the High Courts in the exercise of their rule-making power under Article 202 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973, on the administrative side, after due deliberation. In doing so, the High Courts may, if deemed appropriate, look into the rules and laws made by other countries on the subject. Till then, the courts may exercise their power to allow recording evidence through video conferencing and may consider the guidelines provided by the two High Courts in the said cases. The requirement of strict adherence to the guidelines prescribed by the High Courts in the present case may, however, impede the application of the very law declared therein; therefore, we think it proper to make it clear that those guidelines are to be followed by the courts to the extent it is found just and proper to follow them in the facts and circumstances of a particular case. For instance, where there is a serious apprehension that the witness would be under the influence of or tutored by some other person in the course of recording his evidence, or his very identity is disputed on substantial, not flimsy, grounds, the court may require his presence in the Pakistan Embassy in the country concerned and engage some officer of the Embassy in the process of recording his statement through video conferencing, as provided in those guidelines. But without any such serious apprehension or substantial dispute, requiring all such witnesses in every case to go to the Pakistan Embassy and engaging some officer of the Embassy in the process would also involve some unnecessary delay, expense or inconvenience. This matter should, therefore, be left to the discretion of the court concerned, which shall obviously exercise it judiciously for valid reasons.

21. Now, we examine the prayer of the petitioner on the touchstone of the above two conditions: (i) whether her evidence appears essential to the just decision of the case, and (ii) whether requiring her physical attendance in court for recording the remaining cross-examination will incur unreasonable delay, expense or inconvenience.

22. The petitioner is the only defendant in the suit; therefore, her evidence is very much essential to the just decision of the case. The petitioner lives in Canada since 2016 as her ordinary place of residence, with her family including two children, and is not in that country for a short visit. The petitioner comes to Pakistan only when there is a working schedule for her. Waiting for her such a schedule would certainly cause a delay in the decision of the suit, and forcing her to come to Pakistan from Canada by leaving her children there or carrying them with her would incur such expense and inconvenience which surely appears unreasonable under the circumstances of the case. The prayer of the petitioner for allowing her remaining cross-examination through video conferencing is, thus, found justified.

23. The trial court and the High Court have legally erred in disallowing it. Their orders rejecting the prayer of the petitioner are not sustainable. The present petition for leave to appeal is, therefore, converted into an appeal and the same is allowed. The impugned judgment is set aside, and the revision petition of the petitioner is allowed by setting aside the order of the trial court and accepting the application of the petitioner for recording her remaining cross-examination through video conferencing.

24. There is no dispute as to the identity of the petitioner, nor is there any serious apprehension that the petitioner would be under the influence of or tutored by any other person in the course of recording her remaining cross-examination. We are, therefore, not inclined in the present case to require the petitioner to go to the Pakistan

Embassy in Canada and to involve any officer of the Embassy in the process of recording her remaining cross-examination through video conferencing.

25. Before parting with the judgment, we feel constrained to express our concern about the unending, lengthy cross-examination of the petitioner (DW-4). So far, a 24-page cross-examination of the petitioner has been recorded, and the parties are contesting on the mode of recording further cross-examination of the petitioner for the last about eight months. This state of affairs is really disquieting. 'The purpose of cross-examination', as observed by this Court in the case of Muhammad Shafi[24], 'is to assist the Court in bringing the truth to light by disclosing or clarifying matters which witnesses may wish to conceal or confuse from motives of partisanship.' There is, however, a regrettable practice to use the tool of prolonged cross-examination for the purpose of leading the witness into some error by exhausting him through unnecessary and irrelevant questioning. This practice is designed not for the disclosure of truth but for the manipulation of error. In such a situation the presiding officer of the court, the judge, should not remain a silent spectator but should act as a vigilant supervisor, for the right of cross-examination is neither unlimited nor unbridled. When the judge observes that the right of cross-examination is being abused by asking questions which are irrelevant and intended to prolong the cross-examination with the object of manipulating error, or to scandalize, insult or annoy the witness, he should intervene and disallow such questions.[25]

NATIONAL ACCOUNTABILITY BUREAU and others---Respondents

Civil Petitions Nos.3236, 3283 and 3494 to 3496 of 2019, decided on 17th January, 2022.

(Against the judgment dated 09.07.2019 of the High Court of Sindh, Karachi passed in Constitution Petitions Nos. D-2635, D-2575, D-3509, D-2441 and D-2447 of 2018).

National Accountability Ordinance (XVIII of 1999)---

----Ss. 31-C & 31-D---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 18 & Preamble---'Restructuring' and 'rescheduling' of loans under financial agreements---Prior approval of State Bank of Pakistan---Scope of Sections 31-C and 31-D of the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 stated.

Under section 31-C of the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ('the NAB Ordinance') the Accountability Court cannot take cognizance, under the NAB Ordinance, of an offence against an officer or an employee of a bank or financial institution for writing off, waving, restructuring or refinancing any financial facility, interest or mark-up, without prior approval of the State Bank of Pakistan. While under section 31-D, no inquiry, investigation or proceedings in respect of imprudent loans, defaulted loans or rescheduled loans can be initiated or conducted by the National Accountability Bureau (NAB) against any person, company or financial institution without reference from the Governor, State Bank of Pakistan. Unlike section 31-C that relates to only taking cognizance of an offence by the Accountability Court, section 31-D provides protection even against initiation of inquiry, investigation or proceedings against a person or a company in respect of imprudent loans, defaulted loans or rescheduled loans. The protection provided under Section 31-D is, therefore, broader and more expansive.

Section 31-D is also attracted in respect of a "defaulted loan". Defaulted loan means the failure to fulfill the obligation to repay the loan.a

"Restructuring" is a comprehensive and a broad ranging term, which includes "Rescheduling". One of the modes of restructuring can be rescheduling. Therefore, for the purposes of the NAB Ordinance, the two terms can be read as having been used interchangeably. Further, the NAB Ordinance has not defined any of the terms used in sections 31-C and 31-D, namely, writing off, waving, restructuring, refinancing, imprudent loans, defaulted loans or rescheduled loans; therefore, their general dictionary meanings are to be considered, for understanding their import and scope.

While both the terms signify a financial settlement, restructuring is an all-embracing term, which includes rescheduling.

Oxford Dictionary of Business and Management, Pakistan Edition (5th Edition). pp. 165-166 ref.

However, more important than hairsplitting technical banking terms, is to understand the legislative intent, purpose and objective of enacting sections 31-C and 31-D of NAB Ordinance, and question why in such cases, the NAB has not been allowed to proceed, or the Accountability Court has not been allowed to take cognizance, unless there is a permission or approval of the State Bank of Pakistan. The answer is obvious: through the mode of restructuring or rescheduling, the default of the outstanding financial liability of a person or a company or a financial institution is remedied and default rectified, and this exercise is blessed by the consent and permission, not only of the financial institution concerned but also of the State Bank of Pakistan, the apex fiscal authority in the country. Such a financial arrangement/ settlement is accepted by the financial institutions because the alternative may be outright default on the debt.

Thus, the conversion of the default into a viable financial arrangement between the parties arrived at by the blessing of the State Bank of Pakistan cannot be questioned, doubted or ignored unless the State Bank of Pakistan, the apex overseeing authority, so permits. Any unilateral intervention by the NAB into restructured and rescheduled loans would seriously undermine the authority of the apex fiscal institution in the country, i.e., the State Bank of Pakistan. It would also render any such financial settlement meaningless, thereby generating mistrust and lack of faith and confidence amongst the business community against the State Bank of Pakistan. Any such mistrust could be disastrous and result in destabilizing the economy. Such an act would also offend the constitutional value of economic justice and the fundamental right to trade and business.

The legislative intent, purpose and objective of enacting sections 31-C and 31-D of the NAB Ordinance, in the said backdrop, becomes clear: to safeguard sound and stable functioning of the economic, banking and fiscal governance in the country by honouring the financial decisions of the State Bank of Pakistan. The import of these provisions, therefore, has to be understood in this larger constitutional perspective and legislative intent, purpose and objective, not by losing into the technicalities of the financial terms used in sections 31-C and 31-D of the NAB Ordinance, which have not been given any special meaning under the NAB Ordinance and can safely be treated general financial terms as understood in common parlance.

Supreme Court approved the construction put to the provisions of section 31-D of the NAB Ordinance, in case of their noncompliance, by the Sindh High Court in the cases reported as Kaloodi International v. Federation PLD 2001 Kar. 311 and Naseem v. Federation PLD 2013 Kar. 357

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---By this order, we shall decide all the above-captioned petitions as they arise out of the same judgment of the Sindh High Court.

2. The petitioners, Abid Amin and Ahmed Humayun ("petitioners"), seek leave to appeal against the judgment of the Sindh High Court, dated 09.07.2019, whereby the High Court has declined to quash the Reference No.21/2017 filed against them under the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ("NAB Ordinance"), despite quashing the same Reference against four of their co-accused, the bank employees, namely, Qamar Husain, Nadeem Anwar Ilyas, Nausherwan Adil and Asif Brohi, ("co-accused") while the National Accountability Bureau ("NAB") has, by its petitions, challenged the quashment of the Reference against the co-accused, bank employees, by the impugned judgment.

2. Brief facts of the case are that petitioners are directors and shareholders of Messrs Azgard Nine Limited ("ANL"), a public limited company. The ANL obtained financial facility/loan from different financial institutions. Upon default of the financial facility, the ANL arrived at a settlement with 22 financial institutions and got the debt restructured by entering into a Debt Swap Agreement, a Master Restructuring Agreement and other supplemental agreements for an amount of Rs. 10.5 billion. The National Bank of Pakistan (NBP) played a lead role amongst the 22 financial institutions by purchasing the shares of Messrs Agritech Ltd., a subsidiary of the ANL, at a price of Rs.35 per share and adjusting the same against the outstanding debt of the ANL with the NBP and 21 other financial institutions. The co-accused are senior bank employees of the NBP who were involved in restructuring and rescheduling the loans of the ANL.

3. The financial settlement arrived at under the aforementioned agreements has since been implemented, and none of the financial institutions has challenged the same in any court of law. However, multiple complaints were filed by one Transparency International on the ground that the officers of the NBP misused their authority and bought the shares of Messrs Agritech Limited at a higher price, i.e., at Rs.35/- per share instead of Rs.13.47/- per share, thus causing a colossal loss of Rs.3.02 billion to the national exchequer.

4. As the NAB Reference against the petitioners was not filed with the approval of the State Bank of Pakistan, the petitioners and the co-accused filed applications under section 265-K, Cr.P.C, before the trial court, i.e., the Accountability Court, for their acquittal or discharge from the case. The applications were dismissed by the Accountability Court and the constitutional petitions filed under Article 199 of the Constitution read with section 561-A, Cr.P.C., by the petitioners against the order of the trial court met the same fate at the High Court by the impugned judgment. However, the constitutional petition filed by the co-accused succeeded and the Reference to their extent was quashed by the High Court, holding the same to have been filed in violation of section 31-C of the NAB Ordinance.

5. The learned counsel for the petitioners submitted that it is an admitted position that the ANL defaulted on the loans and as a result 22 financial institutions rescheduled the loan through Debt Swap Agreement and Master Restructuring Agreement for an amount of Rs. 10.5 billion, and the said agreements were duly approved by the State Bank of Pakistan. The matter was of defaulted loans and rescheduled loans; therefore, before investigating and filing the Reference thereon the NAB should have sought permission from the State Bank of Pakistan, as required under section 31-D of the NAB Ordinance, which was admittedly not done, hence the entire proceedings are without jurisdiction and liable to be quashed. Learned counsel for the co-accused supported the submissions of the petitioners.

6. The learned Special Prosecutor, NAB controverted the contention of the petitioners vehemently and submitted that there is a difference between restructuring and rescheduling of the loans. Section 31-C refers to restructured loans while Section 31-D refers to rescheduled loans. In the present case, the loans were restructured; hence, Section 31-D of the NAB Ordinance is not attracted.

7. We have heard the learned counsel at some length and gone through the record of the case. As the question involved in the present petitions revolves around the meaning and scope of sections 31-C and 31-D of the NAB Ordinance, the provisions thereof are reproduced hereunder for convenience of reference:-

31-C. Court to take cognizance of offence with prior approval of the State Bank.---No Court established under this Ordinance shall take cognizance of an offence against an officer or an employee of a bank or financial institution for writing off, waving, restructuring or refinancing any financial facility, interest or mark-up without prior approval of the State Bank of Pakistan.

31D. Inquiry, investigation or proceedings in respect of imprudent bank loans, etc.- Notwithstanding anything contained in this Ordinance or any other law for the time being in force, no inquiry, investigation or proceedings in respect of imprudent loans, defaulted loans or rescheduled loans shall be initiated or conducted by the National Accountability Bureau against any person, company or financial institution without reference from Governor, State Bank of Pakistan.

Provided that cases pending before any Accountability Court before coming into force of the National Accountability Bureau (Second Amendment) Ordinance, 2000, shall continue to be prosecuted and conducted without reference from the Governor, State Bank of Pakistan.

The bare reading of the above provisions shows that under section 31-C the Accountability Court cannot take cognizance, under the NAB Ordinance, of an offence against an officer or an employee of a bank or financial institution for writing off, waving, restructuring or refinancing any financial facility, interest or mark-up, without prior approval of the State Bank of Pakistan. While under section 31-D, no inquiry, investigation or proceedings in respect of imprudent loans, defaulted loans or rescheduled loans can be initiated or conducted by the NAB against any person, company or financial institution without reference from the Governor, State Bank of Pakistan. Unlike Section 31-C that relates to only taking cognizance of an offence by the Accountability Court, Section 31-D provides protection even against initiation of inquiry, investigation or proceedings against a person or a company in respect of imprudent loans, defaulted loans or rescheduled loans. The protection provided under section 31-D is, therefore, broader and more expansive. Admittedly, the ANL had defaulted on the loans extended by multiple financial institutions, and it was that default that led the ANL and the financial institutions to enter into Debt Swap and Master Restructuring Agreements, under which the loans were restructured and as a consequence the servicing of the debt to the financial institutions stood rescheduled.

8. The High Court has not granted the relief prayed to the petitioners on the ground that the financial arrangement between the ANL and the financial institutions was restructured and not rescheduled; hence, section 31-D is not attracted to the case of the petitioners. This observation of the High Court is not well founded. First of all, section 31-D is also attracted in respect of a "defaulted loan". Defaulted loan means the failure to fulfill the obligation to repay the loan.[1] Admittedly, it was the inability of the ANL to service its debt that necessitated the said agreements; hence, the ANL had defaulted on its loans. "Default" means "failure to fulfill an obligation, especially to repay a loan."[2] The present case thus relates to a "defaulted loan", and this act of default alone attracts section 31-D of the NAB Ordinance. The High Court has failed to consider this aspect of section 31-D of the NAB Ordinance and its applicability to the facts of the present case.

9. In order to differentiate between restructuring and rescheduling, the High Court referred to the definitions of these terms provided in the Prudential Regulations as amended under BPRD Circular 13 of 2016 dated 07.10.2016 (reproduced hereunder for reference) to hold that restructuring and rescheduling are different terms:

Restructuring means such concessions to the borrower, due to borrowers' financial difficulty, which the bank/DFI would not otherwise consider. Restructuring normally involves modification in the terms and conditions of the financing/ securities and generally includes, amongst others, alteration of repayment period, repayable amount, installment amount, mark-up rates (due to reasons other than competitive pricing) etc.

Rescheduling means such concession in the grace period or modification in the repayment dates of principal loan amount (without changing overall loan tenor), due to borrowers' financial difficulty, which the bank/DFI would not otherwise consider."

The highlighted portion of the above definitions appearing in the BPRD Circular shows that "Restructuring" is a comprehensive and a broad-ranging term, which includes "Rescheduling". One of the modes of restructuring can be rescheduling. Therefore, for the purposes of the NAB Ordinance, the two terms can be read as having been used interchangeably. Further, the NAB Ordinance has not defined any of the terms used in sections 31-C and 31-D, namely, writing off, waving, restructuring, refinancing, imprudent loans, defaulted loans or rescheduled loans; therefore, their general dictionary meanings are to be considered, for understanding their import and scope. The terms, "debt restructuring" and "debt rescheduling", have been defined in the Oxford Dictionary of Business and Management, thus:

Debt restructuring means the adjustment of a debt, either as a result of legal action or by agreement between the interested parties, to give the debtor a more feasible arrangement with the creditors for meeting the financial obligations.[3]

Debt rescheduling means a change in the terms of outstanding loans in which the debtor has repayment difficulties. The rescheduling can take the form of an entirely new loan or an extension of the existing loan repayment period, deferring interest or principal repayments.[4]

Reading of these definitions also shows that while both the terms signify a financial settlement, restructuring is an all-embracing term, which includes rescheduling.

10. However, more important than hairsplitting technical banking terms, is to understand the legislative intent, purpose and objective of enacting Sections 31-C and 31-D of NAB Ordinance, and question ourselves why in such cases, the NAB has not been allowed to proceed, or the Accountability Court has not been allowed to take cognizance, unless there is a permission or approval of the State Bank of Pakistan. The answer is obvious: through the mode of restructuring or rescheduling, the default of the outstanding financial liability of a person or a company or a financial institution is remedied and default rectified, and this exercise is blessed by the consent and permission, not only of the financial institution concerned but also of the State Bank of Pakistan, the apex fiscal authority in the country. Such a financial arrangement/ settlement is accepted by the financial institutions because the alternative may be outright default on the debt.

11. Thus, the conversion of the default into a viable financial arrangement between the parties arrived at by the blessing of the State Bank of Pakistan cannot be questioned, doubted or ignored unless the State Bank of Pakistan, the apex overseeing authority, so permits. Any unilateral intervention by the NAB into restructured and rescheduled loans would seriously undermine the authority of the apex fiscal institution in the country, i.e., the State Bank of Pakistan. It would also render any such financial settlement meaningless, thereby generating mistrust and lack of faith and confidence amongst the business community against the State Bank of Pakistan. Any such mistrust could be disastrous and result in destabilizing the economy. Such an act would also offend the constitutional value of economic justice and the fundamental right to trade and business.

12. The legislative intent, purpose and objective of enacting sections 31-C and 31-D of the NAB Ordinance, in the said backdrop, becomes clear: to safeguard sound and stable functioning of the economic, banking and fiscal governance in the country by honouring the financial decisions of the State Bank of Pakistan. The import of these provisions, therefore, has to be understood in this larger constitutional perspective and legislative intent, purpose and objective, not by losing into the technicalities of the financial terms used in sections 31-C and 31-D of the NAB Ordinance, which have not been given any special meaning under the NAB Ordinance and can safely be treated general financial terms as understood in common parlance.

13. In the present case, it is an admitted position that company of the petitioners, the ANL, defaulted on several loans and as a result its liability was restructured and rescheduled under various financial agreements. To date, no financial institution has come forward to oppose the case of the petitioner. It is also an admitted position that the said agreements have been duly implemented, and liabilities thereunder have been settled between the parties. The learned Special Prosecutor, NAB has also frankly conceded that no permission of the State Bank of Pakistan was ever sought and no such reference was made by the Governor, State Bank of Pakistan. We, therefore, hold that no inquiry, investigation or proceedings could have been initiated against the petitioners without a reference from the Governor, State Bank of Pakistan in terms of section 31-D of the Ordinance.[5]

14. For the above reasons, the proceeding initiated by the NAB against the petitioners is found violative of the provisions of Section 31-D of the NAB Ordinance, and thus the consequent filing of the Reference against the petitioners is also without lawful authority and of no legal effect. The High Court has failed to correctly interpret and apply the provisions of section 31-D of the NAB Ordinance, in the present case. We, therefore, convert the petitions of the petitioners, i.e., C.Ps. Nos.3236 and 3283 of 2019, into appeals and allow the same. The constitutional petitions of the petitioners are accepted, and the proceedings initiated by the NAB including the inquiry, investigation, and Reference, and the proceedings pending before the Accountability Court on that Reference are quashed. For the same reasons, the petitions filed by the NAB, i.e., C.Ps. Nos.3494 to 3496, are dismissed.

15. Needless to say that the NAB is free to proceed de novo against the petitioners and the co-accused, by complying with the necessary legal requirement of Sections 31-C and 31-D of the NAB Ordinance.

MWA/A-19/SC Order accordingly.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioners seek leave to appeal against a judgment of the Islamabad High Court, dated 04.02.2020 ("impugned judgment"), whereby the High Court while accepting the writ petition of the respondents, as well as a writ petition and two criminal miscellaneous applications of other accused persons, has quashed FIR No. 05/2018 registered against them at Police Station FIA, Islamabad, for offences punishable under sections 409/109 of the Pakistan Penal Code 1860 ("P.P.C.") and section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1947 ("PCA").

2. Briefly, the facts of the case are that on a news item published in a daily newspaper, reporting that a number of employees of the various directorates of the Capital Development Authority ("CDA") had been illegally upgraded in violation of the relevant rules and regulations during the years 2007 to 2013, the Federal Investigation Agency ("FIA") conducted an inquiry and found that prima facie a case of abuse of authority was made out against the officers who processed and approved those illegal upgradations as well as against the beneficiary officials of the CDA (including the respondents). With this finding, the FIA registered the above-mentioned FIR and initiated the formal investigation, which may have included the arrest and detention of the accused persons. The respondents and some other persons nominated as accused in the FIR as well as in the investigation proceeding, filed two writ petitions under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution") and two criminal miscellaneous applications under section 561-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898 ("Cr.P.C.") for quashing of the FIR, mainly on the ground that no offence was made out of the allegations recorded in the FIR. The High Court agreed with the ground pleaded, accepted the writ petitions and miscellaneous applications, and quashed the FIR vide the impugned judgment. Hence, the petitioners have filed the present petition for leave to appeal.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties, read the cases cited by them and examined the record of the case.

4. First of all, we want to make it clear that a High Court has no power under section 561-A, Cr.P.C. to quash an FIR or an investigation proceeding; therefore, the criminal miscellaneous applications filed under section 561-A, Cr.P.C. by some of the accused persons in the High Court for quashing the FIR and investigation proceeding in the present case were not maintainable. This is because jurisdiction of a High Court to make an appropriate order under section 561-A, Cr.P.C. necessary to secure the ends of justice, can only be exercised with regard to the judicial or court proceedings and not relating to proceedings of any other authority or department, such as FIR registration or investigation proceedings of the police department. This has been authoritatively held by a five-member bench of this Court in Shahnaz Begum.[1] A High Court, therefore, can quash a judicial proceeding pending before any subordinate court under section 561-A, Cr.P.C., if it finds it necessary to make such order to prevent the abuse of the process of that court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice; however, it should not ordinarily exercise its power under section 561-A, Cr.P.C. to make such order unless the accused person has first availed his remedy before the trial court under section 249-A or 265-K, Cr.P.C.[2] Where before the submission of the police report under section 173, Cr.P.C. to the court concerned, the accused person thinks that the FIR has been registered, and the investigation is being conducted, without lawful authority, he may have recourse to the constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 199 of the Constitution for judicial review of the said acts of the police officers.[3]

5. In the present case, as the High Court was competent to judicially review the acts of registering the FIR and conducting the investigation by the officers of the FIA in the exercise of its constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution, therefore, the acceptance of the criminal miscellaneous applications filed by some of the accused persons under section 561-A, Cr.P.C. and the reference to section 561-A, Cr.P.C. while quashing the FIR have no material bearing on the jurisdiction of the High Court while passing the impugned judgment. Even otherwise, if the reasons stated for passing the impugned judgment fall within the scope of the jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 199 of the Constitution, the reference to a wrong or inapplicable provision of law will not by itself have any fatal consequence.[4] The High Court has observed in the impugned judgment that the matter in issue, which relates to the violation of the terms and conditions of service of the CDA employees, does not constitute the offence of criminal misconduct punishable under section 5(2) of the PCA nor are the ingredients of the offence of criminal breach of trust under section 409, P.P.C. made out. The High Court has also specifically quoted the statement made before it by the Addl. Director, FIA that "FIA has concluded investigation and no element of bribery has been found in the entire inquiry against any official of CDA". With the said observations, the High Court has quashed the FIR, by holding that FIA authorities have failed to legally justify their actions of initiating the inquiry and registration of the FIR. These reasons squarely fall within the scope of the provisions of Article 199(1)(a)(ii) of the Constitution.

6. Article 199(1)(a)(ii) of the Constitution empowers the High Courts to judicially review the acts done or proceedings taken by the persons performing functions in connection with the affairs of the Federation, a Province or a local authority and if find such acts or proceedings to have been done or taken without lawful authority, to declare them to be so and of no legal effect. The registration of an FIR and the doing of an investigation are the acts of officers of the police department (a provincial law enforcement agency) who perform functions in connection with the affairs of a Province and are thus amenable to the jurisdiction of the High Courts under Article 199(1)(a)(ii) of the Constitution. The High Courts can declare such acts of the police officers, to have been made without lawful authority and of no legal effect if they are found to be so and can also make any appropriate incidental or consequential order to effectuate its decision,[5] such as quashing the FIR and investigation proceeding. The acts of registering the FIR and conducting investigation by the officers of the FIA, in the present case, are also subject to said jurisdiction of the High Court, as they have been done by the officers performing functions in connection with the affairs of the Federation.

7. The FIA has been established by the Federal Government under Section 3 of the Federal Investigation Agency Act, 1974 ("FIA Act"), for inquiry into, and investigation of the offences specified in the Schedule to the said Act, including an attempt or conspiracy to commit, and abetment of, any such offence. Under section 5 of the FIA Act, the officers of the FIA have such powers, including powers relating to search, arrest of persons and seizure of property, and such duties, privileges and liabilities as the officers of a Provincial Police have in relation to the investigation of offences under the Cr.P.C., and its officer not below the rank of a Sub-Inspector may, for the purposes of any inquiry or investigation under this Act, exercise any of the powers of an officer-incharge of a Police Station under the Cr.P.C.. That being so, one has to look at the provisions of sections 154 and 156 of the Cr.P.C., which relate to the registration of FIRs and conducting the investigations, for the purpose of examining whether the acts of registering the FIR and doing the Investigation by the FIA officers in the present case were with or without lawful authority.

8. Under section 154 of the Cr.P.C., a first information report (FIR) can be registered only with regard to the commission of a cognizable offence. Similarly, an investigation can be made by a police officer, without the order of a Magistrate, under section 156 of the Cr.P.C. only in respect of a cognizable offence. Needless to say that it is the contents of an FIR which are to be seen to ascertain whether a cognizable offence is made out of the allegations contained therein, and mere mentioning of a particular Section of the P.P.C. or any other offence under the law in the FIR is not determinative in this regard.[6] However, the falsity or truthfulness of those allegations is not under examination for the purpose of determining the legal authority of the police officer to register the FIR. The precise question is: whether the allegations as contained in the FIR make out the commission of a cognizable offence; if so, what is that?

9. When asked how the accused officers who processed and approved the alleged illegal upgradations have committed the cognizable offences of criminal breach of trust and criminal misconduct punishable under section 409, P.P.C. and section 5(2), P.C.A. and how the officials who were granted the illegal upgradations are the abettors in the commission of those offences and are thus liable for the offence of abetment punishable under section 109, P.P.C., we got no plausible reply. The allegations as contained in the FIR do not involve the very essential ingredients of the offence of criminal breach of trust as defined in section 405, P.P.C., (i) the entrustment of, or dominion over, any property, and (ii) the dishonest misappropriation or conversion to his own use of that property, or the dishonest use or disposal of that property in violation of any direction of law or of any legal contract. Therefore, the cognizable offence of criminal breach of trust by a public servant punishable under section 409, P.P.C. mentioned in the FIR is not made out. Similar is the case with the cognizable offence punishable under section 5(2), P.C.A. mentioned in the FIR, which is also not made out of the allegations as contained in the FIR. The argument of the learned counsel for the petitioner is totally misconceived, that the authority conferred upon the accused officers, who granted the illegal upgradations, was a trust and by misusing that authority, they have committed the offence of criminal breach of trust punishable under section 409, P.P.C. and the offence of criminal misconduct punishable under section 5(2), P.C.A. No doubt, the powers of the public servants are like a trust conferred upon them and they should exercise them fairly, honestly and in good faith as a trustee; but the entrustment of the power to upgrade his subordinate officials is not equivalent to the entrustment of property as mentioned in section 405, P.P.C. and its misuse, or use in violation of the relevant rules and regulations, does not constitute the cognizable offences punishable under section 409, P.P.C and section 5(2), P.C.A. The misuse of such a power may constitute misconduct under the service laws, but does not attract criminal misconduct punishable under the criminal laws.

10. In view of the above legal position, the acts of the FIA officers in registering the FIR and carrying out investigation in the present case are certainly without lawful authority. We thus find no legal flaw in the impugned judgment. The present petition is not only meritless but also vexatious, as it amounts to continuation of harassment caused to the respondents by initiating the criminal proceeding against them in relation to their service matter, without any lawful authority. Additionally, these petitions being meritless and against the law settled by this Court have unduly wasted the time of the Court depriving it from attending to more lawful and genuine claims pending before it. Such frivolous litigation clogs the pipelines of justice causing delay in dispensation of justice, thereby impairing the right to expeditious justice of a genuine litigant. Such vexatious and frivolous petitions add to the pendency of cases which over-burdens the Court dockets and slows down the engine of justice. Such vexatious and frivolous litigation must be dealt with firmly and strongly discouraged.[7] We, therefore, dismiss the present petition and decline the leave to appeal, with costs of Rs.100,000/- under Order 28, Rule 3 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980. The costs shall be deposited by petitioner No.2, Inspector Irfan Azim Burki, In-charge FIA, Corporate Crime Circle, Islamabad, who registered the FIR and was making the investigation against the respondents, from his own pocket, with the Registrar of this Court within 30 days from today, and after the deposit, they shall be paid to the respondents. A compliance report, in this regard, shall be placed on the record of the case. In case of non-compliance, the matter shall be put up before the Court for appropriate orders.

MWA/F-5/SC Petition dismissed.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 06.10.2020, passed in Writ Petition No.10492 of 2016).

(a) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XXVIII, R. 3---Frivolous litigation---Abusing process of the Court---Costs, imposition of---Litigation initiated by a person having no interest in the matter to avenge a private grudge---Frivolous, vexatious and speculative litigation unduly burdens the courts giving artificial rise to pendency of cases which in turn clogs the justice system and delays the resolution of genuine disputes---One of the ways to curb such practice of instituting frivolous and vexatious cases is by imposing of costs under Order XXVIII, Rule 3 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980---Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed with costs of Rs.100,000/ that were to be deposited by the petitioner in the Trial Court for payment to the respondent.

Present case is a classic case of abusing the process of the court. Respondent has been punished with a penalty of pursuing an outright frivolous litigation for a period of more than a decade, just for the reason that he had got a succession certificate in his favour to receive a meagre amount of Rs.32,185/- left by his deceased father in a bank account, and that too on the applications of the persons who had no right or interest in the legacy of his deceased father rather had been in litigation over some other property first against the deceased father of respondent and after his death against respondent and his mother and siblings.

When asked, as to what right or interest of the petitioner or his predecessor was affected by the issuance of the succession certificate in favour of respondent, the answer of their counsel was nothing but that the petitioner and his predecessor had acted just as informers of the commission of offences of fraud and perjury with the court during the proceedings of the application for succession certificate. The spiteful conduct of the petitioner and his predecessor in making repeated applications and venomously pursuing them up to the Supreme Court did not paint of picture of a bona fide informer committed to unfold the offences of fraud and perjury for the love of justice, equity and fairplay. The conduct of the petitioner reeks of private vengeance against respondent and his mother and siblings, because of a simmering dispute over some other property.

In view of the stance of the sisters of respondent as to having no objection to the succession certificate issued in favour of their brother, i.e. the respondent, the trial court had rightly dismissed both the applications, the first filed by the petitioner's predecessor and the second by the petitioner, by noting the fact that the same had been filed with mala fide to avenge a private grudge and without having any interest in the matter decided by it. And the order of the trial court has correctly been maintained by the revisional court and the High Court. The present petition is completely frivolous and vexatious and the process of court has been abused just to pressurise the other side and to settle a personal score.

Such frivolous, vexatious and speculative litigation unduly burdens the courts giving artificial rise to pendency of cases which in turn clogs the justice system and delays the resolution of genuine disputes. Such litigation is required to be rooted out of the system and one of the ways to curb such practice of instituting frivolous and vexatious cases is by imposing of costs under Order XXVIII, Rule 3 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules").

The petitioner has repeatedly abused the courts to advance a personal grudge by repeatedly filing vexatious and frivilous claims in various courts, not only wasting the precious time of these courts but also causing anguish and pain to the other party that unnecessary, unfair and prolonged litigation brings. Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed with costs of Rs.100,000/-, and the Supreme Court directed that the same shall be deposited by the petitioner in the trial court for payment to respondent within three months; that in case of failure by the petitioner to deposit the said costs within the prescribed time, they shall be recovered from the petitioner as a money decree with 10% monthly increase, and the costs of the execution proceedings shall also be recovered in addition thereto.

(b) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 476---Perjury---Discretionary power of Court under section 476, Cr.P.C, to take cognizance stated.

The power conferred by section 476, Cr.P.C. on a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court to take cognizance of certain offences committed in, or in relation to, any proceedings before it, is discretionary as evident from the expression, "may take cognizance", used in section 476, Cr.P.C. No doubt, like all other discretionary powers, the court concerned is to exercise this discretion judiciously, not arbitrarily, while taking into consideration the facts and circumstances of the case.

Abdul Hakeem v. State 1994 SCMR 1103 ref.

While exercising its discretion under section 476, Cr.P.C. the court concerned should give prime consideration to the question, whether it is expedient in the interests of justice to take cognizance of the offence. The court is to exercise this discretionary power with due care and caution, and must be watchful of the fact that its process under Section 476 is not abused by an unscrupulous litigant scheming to wreak private vengeance or satisfy a private grudge against a person.

Feroze Din v. Munir 1970 SCMR 10 and Naushaba v. Khalil Ahmad 2004 SCMR 805 ref.

(c) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XXVIII, R. 3---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 10A---Frivolous litigation---Abusing process of the Court---Costs, imposition of---Scope, purpose and benefits of awarding costs stated.

Frivolous, vexatious and speculative litigation unduly burdens the courts giving artificial rise to pendency of cases which in turn clogs the justice system and delays the resolution of genuine disputes. Such litigation is required to be rooted out of the system and one of the ways to curb such practice of instituting frivolous and vexatious cases is by imposing of costs under Order XXVIII, Rule 3 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules"). The spectre of being made liable to pay actual costs should be such as to make every litigant think twice before putting forth a vexatious claim or defence before the Court. These costs in an appropriate case can be over and above the nominal costs which include costs of the time spent by the successful party, the transportation and lodging, if any, or any other incidental cost, besides the amount of the court fee, process fee and lawyer's fee paid in relation to the litigation. Imposition of costs in frivilous and vexatious cases meets the requirement of fair trial under Article 10A of the Constitution, as it not only discourages frivilous claims or defences brought to the court house but also absence of such cases allows more court time for the adjudication of genuine claims. It also incentivizes the litigants to adopt alternative dispute resolution (ADR) processes and arrive at a settlement rather than rushing to courts. Costs lay the foundation for expeditious justice and promote a smart legal system that enhances access to justice by entertaining genuine claims. The purpose of awarding costs at one level is to compensate the successful party for the expenses incurred to which he has been subjected and at another level to be an effective tool to purge the legal system of frivolous, vexatious and speculative claims and defences. In a nutshell costs enourage alternative dispute resolution; settlements between the parties; and reduces unnecessary burden off the courts, so that they can attend to genuine claims. Costs are aweapon of offence for the plaintiff with a just claim to present and a shield to the defendant who has been unfairly brought into court.

Anis Muhammad Shahzad, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Respondent No.3 in person.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against an order of the Lahore High Court, dated 06.10.2020 ("impugned order"), whereby the High Court has dismissed his writ petition filed against the orders of the trial court and revisional court, dated 14.12.2015 and 20.02.2016 respectively. The trial court, by its order dated 14.12.2015, had dismissed the application of the petitioner filed under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898 ("Cr.P.C.") against respondents Nos. 3 to 5 and by its order dated 20.02.2016, the revisional court had dismissed his revision petition filed against that order of the trial court. All three courts below have thus decided the matter against the petitioner.

2. Briefly, the facts of the case are that on the death of his father (Qazi Khursheed Alam), respondent No.3 (Qazi Mubasher Shahzad) made an application for the issuance of a succession certificate in respect of an amount of Rs.32,185/- left by his deceased father in a bank account, which was allowed by the trial court on 03.12.2009. The present petitioner's father (Qazi Zahoor Alam), who was the brother of the deceased Qazi Khursheed Alam and was in litigation with him over some other property, made a miscellaneous application to the trial court, on 10.11.2010, for the cancellation of the succession certificate and taking legal action against respondents Nos. 3 to 5 on the ground that in the application for the succession certificate as well as in their statements made before the court, respondent No.3 and his brother (respondent No.4) and mother (respondent No.5) had not mentioned the names of the daughters of the deceased Qazi Khursheed Alam, and had thus played fraud and perjury in the court proceedings. The petitioner's father died during the pendency of this application, upon which the petitioner and his siblings were substituted as applicants in the application.

3. The sisters of respondent No.3 (daughters of the deceased Qazi Khursheed Alam) appeared before the trial court and filed their written reply opposing the said application with the assertions that the applicants had no locus standi to make the application; that they had surrendered their share in the amount of Rs.32,185/- left by their deceased father and had no objection on the succession certificate issued in favour of their brother, respondent No.3, to receive that amount from the bank; and that their family was in litigation with the applicants for the last about 7/8 years and they had made the application just to blackmail respondents Nos.3 to 5 (their brothers and mother).

4. Although we are unable to understand why the trial court did not reject the application summarily, and instead proceeded further thereon by framing issues, after the said reply of the sisters of respondent No.3, ultimately the trial court dismissed the application after recording evidence on the issues, vide its order dated 27.01.2015, with the findings that the applicants being not the legal heirs of the deceased Qazi Khursheed Alam had no locus standi and cause of action to challenge the succession certificate issued in respect of his legacy, and that the filing of the application was based on mala fide in order to avenge the other litigation ensuing between the parties. This order of the trial court was not challenged by the petitioner or any of his siblings and thus attained finality.

5. Just about a month before the final decision of that application, and probably in view of the expected decision, the present petitioner filed an application under section 476 of the Cr.P.C., on 09.12.2014, against respondents Nos. 3 to 5, making the same averments. Respondents Nos. 3 to 5 filed their written reply, opposing the application. After hearing the arguments of the counsel for the parties, the trial court dismissed this application, vide its order dated 14.12.2015, holding therein that the matter had already been decided in the order dated 27.01.15 passed on a similar application on the same matter, which order having not been challenged had attained finality and that the issue of mala fide in the previous application had been decided against the petitioner. The petitioner preferred a revision petition against this order of the trial court, which was dismissed by the revisional court, vide its order dated 20.02.2016. The petitioner did not stop there and filed a writ petition in the High Court, challenging the orders of the trial and revisional courts. The High Court dismissed his writ petition, by the impugned order. Hence, the petitioner has filed the present petition, in this Court, for leave to appeal.

6. Having heard the learned counsel for the petitioner and respondent No.3 in person and examining the record of the case, we are of the view that it is a classic case of abusing the process of the court. Respondent No.3 has been punished with a penalty of pursuing an outright frivolous litigation for a period of more than a decade, just for the reason that he had got a succession certificate in his favour to receive a meagre amount of Rs.32,185/- left by his deceased father in a bank account, and that too on the applications of the persons who had no right or interest in the legacy of his deceased father rather had been in litigation over some other property first against the deceased father of respondent No.3 and after his death against respondent No.3 and his mother and siblings.

7. To our query, as to what right or interest of the present petitioner or his deceased father was affected by the issuance of the succession certificate in favour of respondent No.3, the answer of the learned counsel for the petitioner was nothing but that the petitioner and his deceased father had acted just as informers of the commission of offences of fraud and perjury with the court during the proceedings of the application for succession certificate. The spiteful conduct of the petitioner and his deceased father in making repeated applications and venomously pursuing them up to this Court do not paint of picture of a bona fide informer commited to unfold the offences of fraud and perjury for the love of justice, equity and fairplay. The conduct of the petitioner reeks of private vengeance against respondent No.3 and his mother and siblings, because of a simmering dispute over some other property.

8. It is also regrettable to note that the first application filed by the petitioner's father and later pursued by the petitioner and his siblings after his death, for cancellation of the succession certificate and taking legal action against respondents Nos. 3 to 5, which should have been dismissed summarily after the filing of opposing written reply of the sisters of respondent No. 3, was proceeded with unnecessarily by framing issues and decided after the protracted proceedings of about five years.

9. The power conferred by section 476, Cr.P.C. on a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court to take cognizance of certain offences committed in, or in relation to, any proceedings before it, is discretionary as evident from the expression, "may take cognizance", used in the Section. No doubt, like all other discretionary powers, the court concerned is to exercise this discretion judiciously, not arbitrarily, while taking into consideration the facts and circumstances of the case.[1] Previously, before its substitution by the Act XXI of 1976, section 476 had stated it expressly that the court is to take action under section 476 when it is of opinion that "it is expedient in the interests of justice" that an inquiry should be made into such an offence. As the discretionary powers must always be exercised in the interests of justice, we are of the considered view that notwithstanding the omission of that expression in the present section 476, while exercising its discretion under this Section the court concerned should give prime consideration to the question, whether it is expedient in the interests of justice to take cognizance of the offence. The court is to exercise this discretionary power with due care and caution, and must be watchful of the fact that its process under section 476 is not abused by an unscrupulous litigant scheming to wreak private vengeance or satisfy a private grudge against a person,[2] as has been done by the petitioner in the present case.

10. In view of the stance of the sisters of respondent No.3 as to having no objection to the succession certificate issued in favour of their brother, respondent No. 3, the trial court had rightly dismissed both the applications, the first filed by the petitioner's father and the second by the petitioner, vide its orders dated 27.01.2015 and 14.12.2015, by noting the fact that the same had been filed with mala fide to avenge a private grudge and without having any interest in the matter decided by it. And the order of the trial court has correctly been maintained by the revisional court and the High Court. The present petition is completely frivolous and vexatious and the process of court has been abused just to pressurise the other side and to settle a personal score.

Imposition of costs

11. Such frivolous, vexatious and speculative litigation unduly burdens the courts giving artificial rise to pendency of cases which in turn clogs the justice system and delays the resolution of genuine disputes. Such litigation is required to be rooted out of the system and one of the ways to curb such practice of instituting frivolous and vexatious cases is by imposing of costs under Order XXVIII, Rule 3 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules"). The spectre of being made liable to pay actual costs should be such as to make every litigant think twice before putting forth a vexatious claim or defence[3] before the Court. These costs in an appropriate case can be over and above the nominal costs which include costs of the time spent by the successful party, the transportation and lodging, if any, or any other incidental cost, besides the amount of the court fee, process fee and lawyer's fee paid in relation to the litigation.[4] Imposition of costs in frivilous and vexatious cases meets the requirement of fair trial under Article 10A of the Constitution, as it not only discourages frivilous claims or defences brought to the court house but also absence of such cases allows more court time for the adjudication of genuine claims. It also incentivizes the litigants to adopt alternative dispute resolution (ADR) processes and arrive at a settlement rather than rushing to courts.[5] Costs lay the foundation for expeditious justice[6] and promote a smart legal system that enhances access to justice by entertaining genuine claims. The purpose of awarding costs at one level is to compensate the successful party for the expenses incurred to which he has been subjected and at another level to be an effective tool to purge the legal system of frivolous, vexatious and speculative claims and defences. In a nutshell costs enourage alternative dispute resolution; settlements between the parties; and reduces unnecessary burden off the courts, so that they can attend to genuine claims. Costs are a weapon of offence for the plaintiff with a just claim to present and a shield to the defendant who has been unfairly brought into court[7].

12. In the instant case, the petitioner has repeatedly abused the courts to advance a personal grudge by repeatedly filing vexatious and frivilous claims in various courts, not only wasting the precious time of these courts but also causing anguish and pain to the other party that unnecessary, unfair and prolonged litigation brings. We, therefore, dismiss the present petition with costs of Rs.100,000/- which shall be deposited by the petitioner in the trial court for payment to respondent No.3 (Qazi Mubasher Shahzad) within three months from today. In case of failure by the petitioner to deposit the said costs within the prescribed time, they shall be recovered from the petitioner as a money decree with 10% monthly increase, and the costs of the execution proceedings shall also be recovered in addition thereto.

Civil Petition No.262-P of 2017, decided on 23rd September, 2021.

(Against the order of Peshawar High Court, Peshawar dated 10.4.2017, passed in C.R. No.411-P of 2014).

(a) Specific Relief Act (I of 1877)---

----S. 42---Limitation Act (IX of 1908), S. 18 & Sched. I, Art. 120---Inheritance---Female heirs---Suit instituted by a female legal heir against her brother for declaration of her ownership rights as to the property left by her deceased father in his inheritance---Limitation---Period of limitation for filing such suit; the principles relating to accrual of right to sue and the criterion for determining the actual denial of female heir's rights as to joint property stated.

As per the residuary Article 120 of Schedule-I to the Limitation Act 1908, a suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the Schedule, the period of limitation for that suit is six years from the time when the right to sue accrues. No specific Article of Schedule-I to the Limitation Act, 1908 provides a period of limitation for a suit instituted by a person, under Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act 1877, for declaration of his ownership rights to any property against a person denying his said rights; therefore, the residuary Article 120 applies to such suit. A suit instituted by a female legal heir for declaration of her ownership rights as to the property left by her deceased father in his inheritance, against her brother who denies her rights is thus governed by the provisions of Article 120. To decide whether such a suit is barred by limitation, the six-year period of limitation provided by Article 120 is to be counted from the time when the right to sue for declaration accrues as provided therein. The question, when the right to sue for declaration has accrued in a case, depends upon the facts and circumstances of that case, as it accrues when the defendant denies (actually) or is interested to deny (threatens) the rights of the plaintiff as per Section 42 of the Specific relief Act 1877. The actual denial of rights gives rise to a compulsory cause of action and obligates the plaintiff to institute the suit for declaration of his/her rights, if he/she wants to do so, within the prescribed period of limitation; while in case of a threatened denial of rights, it is the option of the plaintiff to institute such a suit on a particular threat. On the actual denial of rights, the cause of action and the consequent right to sue matures for instituting the suit for declaration; whereas every threatened denial of rights gives rise to a fresh cause of action, and thus a fresh right to sue accrues on such a denial.

The obligations of the brothers to their sisters, as co-sharers of joint property, are further augmented when viewed in the light of the Islamic law and jurisprudence. Because of the fiduciary and protecting relation of the brothers to their sisters, they cannot claim their possession of the joint property adverse to the rights of their sisters; possession of the brothers is taken to be the possession of their sisters. Mere omission to pay a share of the profits or produce of the joint property to their sisters by the brothers in possession of the joint property does not in itself constitute a repudiation of the sisters' rights, nor does a wrong entry as to the inheritance rights in the revenue record oust the sisters from their ownership of the joint property as the devolution of the ownership of the property on legal heirs of a person takes place under the Islamic law of inheritance immediately on the death of that person without any intervention of anyone and without the sanction of the inheritance mutation in the revenue record. The position is, however, different when the brothers in possession of the joint property make a fraudulent sale or gift deed or get sanctioned some mutation, whether of sale or gift etc, in the revenue record claiming that their sisters have transferred their share in the joint property to them, or when they on the basis of a wrong inheritance mutation start selling out or otherwise disposing of the joint property claiming them to be the exclusive owners thereof. In such circumstances, the brothers by their overt act expressly repudiate the rights of their sisters in the joint property, and oust them from the ownership of the joint property. Their acts are, therefore, a clear and actual denial of the rights of the sisters, which give rise to a compulsory cause of action and obligates the sisters to institute the suit for declaration of their rights, if they want to do so, within the prescribed period of limitation.

Ghulam Ali v. Ghulam Sarwar PLD 1990 SC 1 ref.

Although, by the above mentioned acts of the brothers, the right accrues to the sisters to sue for declaration of their rights, but if they by means of fraud are kept from the knowledge of those overt acts, the time limit of six years provided in Article 120 for instituting the suit for declaration against brothers or any person claiming through them otherwise than in good faith and for a valuable consideration, is to be computed from the time when the fraud of the brothers first became known to the sisters, by virtue of the provisions of Section 18 of the Limitation Act. The "fraud" contemplated by Section 18 means suppression of those acts or transactions that give rise to the cause of action from coming into the knowledge of the plaintiff. A deliberate concealment of facts intended to prevent discovery of the right to sue is also a "fraud" within the meaning of the term used in Section 18, but an open act of a party cannot be said to be a fraudulent act of concealment and is therefore not covered by this Section. The benefit of Section 18 is, however, not available against any person who though claims through the defrauding party but is a transferee in good faith and for a valuable consideration. That is why the Supreme Court treats differently the two types of cases: (i) where the joint property is still in possession of the defrauding brothers or their legal heirs; and (ii) where the joint property has been alienated further to third persons - the transferees in good faith and for a valuable consideration.

(b) Specific Relief Act (I of 1877)---

----S. 42---Co-sharers---Suit instituted by one co-sharer for declaration of his/her ownership rights---Accrual of right to sue---Criterion for determining the actual denial of a co-sharer's rights as to joint property stated.

Due to the special characteristics of their relationship, the criterion for determining the actual denial of a co-sharer's rights as to joint property by the other co-sharer is different from the one that is applied between strangers. Co-sharers have a relationship of trust and support for each other. Possession of joint property with one co-sharer is considered to be for and on behalf of all the co-sharers. A co-sharer who is not in actual possession is considered to be in constructive possession of the joint property. Each co-sharer protects the joint property against trespassers for the benefit of all the co-sharers. Even if one co-sharer acquires possession of some portion of the joint property in consequence of legal proceedings initiated by him against a trespasser, he is deemed to be in possession of that portion of the joint property, on behalf of all the co-sharers. Against such backdrop, the actual denial of a co-sharer's rights as to joint property by the other co-sharer is not to be readily inferred. Actual denial of a co-sharer's rights by the other co-sharer may occur when the latter does something explicit in denial of the former's rights. A mere oral negation, even made several times, of each other's rights by the co-sharers on different disputes as to the use and sharing of the profits of the joint property, but without doing any overt act to oust a co-sharer from the ownership of the joint property, cannot be treated as an actual denial of the rights and thus does not necessitate to sue for declaration of ownership rights.

Manzoor Khan Khalil, Advocate Supreme Court and Haji Muhammad Zahir Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners.

Nemo for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 23rd September, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioners seek leave to appeal against a judgment of the Peshawar High Court, dated 10.04.2017 ("impugned judgment"), whereby the High Court has upheld, in revision, the judgment of the appellate court non-suiting the petitioners on the issue of limitation. Although there are concurrent findings of the two courts below, on the issue of limitation against the petitioners but as the matter involves the enforcement of an alleged right of inheritance of some females, the predecessors of the petitioners, we are inclined to re-examine the issue of limitation, in the interest of justice, to satisfy ourselves as to the correctness of the said concurrent findings.

2. Facts forming the background of the case are that one Isa Khan son of Hameedullah was the owner of the suit property, i.e., the then agriculture land measuring 19-Kanal 17-Marla. He died and his inheritance mutation No. 327 was sanctioned on 23 March 1935 in favour of his son Abdur Rehman. In the year 1960- 61, some portion of the suit property was acquired by the Small Industries Corporation of West Pakistan, and the said Abdur Rehman received the compensation therefor. Later on, Abdur Rehman also died and respondents Nos. 1 to 5 being his sons and daughters, and respondent No.6 being his widow, inherited the remaining suit property. Respondents Nos. 1 to 6 sold out almost all of the remaining suit property to respondents Nos. 12 to 74 and others, who are now recorded as owners-in-possession of the suit property in very small shares measuring in Marla and Sarsai, in the revenue record (Exh-P 1).

3. It was in the year 2004 that the petitioners instituted a suit on 19 November 2004 praying for a declaration that inheritance mutation No. 327 sanctioned on 23 March 1935 in favour of Abdur Rehman, the predecessor of respondents Nos.1 to 6, and the subsequent inheritance mutation in favour of respondents Nos. 1 to 6 and the further transfers made on the basis of those inheritance mutations, in favour of respondents Nos. 12 to 74 were void and ineffective against their rights. They asserted that Isa Khan had left one son, Abdur Rehman, and two daughters, Mst. Mehro and Mst. Afsro, as his legal heirs but Abdur Rehman fraudulently got sanctioned inheritance mutation No. 327 in his favour excluding his sisters from the inheritance of their father; that the said Mst. Mehro and Mst. Afsro daughters of Isa Khan had died, and they and respondents Nos. 7 to 11, who did not join them as plaintiffs in the suit, were their legal heirs; that being legal heirs of Mst. Mehro and Mst. Afsro, they and respondents Nos. 7 to 11 were owners of the suit property to the extent of their share; and that they had, time and again, asked the respondents to accept their entitlement and get corrected the revenue record to the extent of their share in the suit property, but they first evaded the matter and then flatly refused to do so, hence the need to institute the suit arose.

4. Respondents Nos. 1 to 6 contested the suit and claimed that the inheritance mutation No. 327 was correctly sanctioned in favour of their predecessor, Abdur Rehman, in the year 1935 as per the then prevailing law; that since 1935 their predecessor, and after his death they, had been in possession of the suit property as the exclusive owner to the knowledge of the petitioners; and that the fact of acquisition of a portion of the suit property by the Small Industries Corporation and receiving of the compensation by their predecessor for that acquisition was in knowledge of the petitioners, therefore, their suit was time-barred.

5. The trial court decreed the suit by its judgment dated 28.01.2012, and on the issue of limitation held that the limitation does not apply where a person seeks to enforce his right of inheritance in the estate of his deceased predecessor. Respondents Nos. 1 to 6 appealed in District Court. The appellate court noticed that Mst Mehro and Mst. Afsro, the predecessor of the petitioners, had not challenged the inheritance mutation in their lifetime, despite knowledge of receiving the compensation by Abdur Rehman, the predecessor of respondents Nos. 1 to 6, in the year 1960-61, for the acquisition of some land out of the suit property by the Small Industries Estate and the sale of a major portion of the suit property by respondents Nos. 1 to 6. Keeping in view these facts and while relying upon two unreported judgments and one reported judgment (Abdul Haq v. Surraya Begum 2002 SCMR 1330) of this Court, the appellate court decided the issues as to cause of action, estoppel and limitation against the petitioners and reversing the judgment and decree passed by the trial court, dismissed the suit. The petitioners then agitated their grievance against the judgment of the appellate court in the High Court by filing a revision petition.

6. The High Court also took up the issues as to cause of action, estoppel and limitation, examined the evidence available on record relating thereto, and upheld the decision of the appellate court on these issues. The High Court relied upon the judgments of this Court reported as Kala Khan v. Rab Nawaz 2004 SCMR 517, Lal Khan v. Muhammad Yousaf PLD 2011 SC 657, Muhammad Rustam v. Makhan Jan 2013 SCMR 299, Mst Grana v. Sahib Kamala PLD 2014 SC 167 and Ghulam Abbas v. Muhammad Shafi 2016 SCMR 1403.

7. The petitioners have impugned the concurrent findings of the appellate court and the High Court on the question of limitation. Their learned counsel has submitted that the trial court correctly applied the principle that the limitation does not apply in cases of inheritance, while the appellate court and the High Court erred in non-suiting the petitioners on the ground of limitation. He has relied upon judgments of this Court reported as Ghulam Ali v. Ghulam Sarwar PLD 1990 SC 1, Namdara v. Sahibzada 1998 SCMR 996, Shahro v. Fatima PLD 1998 SC 1512, Muhammad Iqbal v. Allah Bachaya 2005 SCMR 1447 and Peer Baksh v. Mst. Khanzadi 2016 SCMR 1417.

8. As the High Court for applying and the counsel for the petitioners for opposing the application of, the bar of limitation to the present case have relied upon the judgments of this Court, we have deeply considered the ratio of the said judgments as well as other relevant judgments[1] to understand as if there is any conflict of opinions recorded therein. We have found no such conflict, which we shall explain hereunder.

9. We may say at the very outset that in view of the provisions of the residuary Article 120 of Schedule-I to the Limitation Act 1908, there can hardly be any suit to which the bar of limitation does not apply. As per the said Article a suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the Schedule, the period of limitation for that suit is six years from the time when the right to sue accrues. No specific Article of Schedule-I to the Limitation Act provides a period of limitation for a suit instituted by a person, under Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act 1877, for declaration of his ownership rights to any property against a person denying his said rights; therefore, the residuary Article 120 applies to such suit. A suit instituted by a female legal heir for declaration of her ownership rights as to the property left by her deceased father in his inheritance, against her brother who denies her rights is thus governed by the provisions of Article 120. To decide whether such a suit is barred by limitation, the six-year period of limitation provided by Article 120 is to be counted from the time when the right to sue for declaration accrues as provided therein. The question, when the right to sue for declaration has accrued in a case, depends upon the facts and circumstances of that case, as it accrues when the defendant denies (actually) or is interested to deny (threatens) the rights of the plaintiff as per Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. The actual denial of rights gives rise to a compulsory cause of action and obligates the plaintiff to institute the suit for declaration of his rights, if he wants to do so, within the prescribed period of limitation; while in case of a threatened denial of rights, it is the option of the plaintiff to institute such a suit on a particular threat. On the actual denial of rights, the cause of action and the consequent right to sue matures for instituting the suit for declaration; whereas every threatened denial of rights gives rise to a fresh cause of action, and thus a fresh right to sue accrues on such a denial. This Court has, therefore, decided the question of limitation in the cases relied upon by the High Court and referred to by the counsel for the petitioners, in the peculiar facts and circumstances of each case.

10. Because of the special characteristics of their relationship, the criterion for determining the actual denial of a co-sharer's rights as to joint property by the other co-sharer is different from the one that is applied between strangers. Co-sharers have a relationship of trust and support for each other. Possession of joint property with one co-sharer is considered to be for and on behalf of all the co-sharers. A co-sharer who is not in actual possession is considered to be in constructive possession of the joint property. Each co-sharer protects the joint property against trespassers for the benefit of all the co-sharers. Even if one co-sharer acquires possession of some portion of the joint property in consequence of legal proceedings initiated by him against a trespasser, he is deemed to be in possession of that portion of the joint property, on behalf of all the co-sharers. Against this backdrop, the actual denial of a co-sharer's rights as to joint property by the other co-sharer is not to be readily inferred. Actual denial of a co-sharer's rights by the other co-sharer may occur when the latter does something explicit in denial of the former's rights. A mere oral negation, even made several times, of each other's rights by the co-sharers on different disputes as to the use and sharing of the profits of the joint property, but without doing any overt act to oust a co-sharer from the ownership of the joint property, cannot be treated as an actual denial of the rights and thus does not necessitate to sue for declaration of ownership rights.

11. The obligations of the brothers to their sisters, as co-sharers of joint property, are further augmented when viewed in the light of the Islamic law and jurisprudence as expounded by this Court in Ghulam Ali. Because of the fiduciary and protecting relation of the brothers to their sisters, they cannot claim their possession of the joint property adverse to the rights of their sisters; possession of the brothers is taken to be the possession of their sisters. Mere omission to pay a share of the profits or produce of the joint property to their sisters by the brothers in possession of the joint property does not in itself constitute a repudiation of the sisters' rights, nor does a wrong entry as to the inheritance rights in the revenue record oust the sisters from their ownership of the joint property as the devolution of the ownership of the property on legal heirs of a person takes place under the Islamic law of inheritance immediately on the death of that person without any intervention of anyone and without the sanction of the inheritance mutation in the revenue record. The position is, however, different when the brothers in possession of the joint property make a fraudulent sale or gift deed or get sanctioned some mutation, whether of sale or gift etc, in the revenue record claiming that their sisters have transferred their share in the joint property to them, or when they on the basis of a wrong inheritance mutation start selling out or otherwise disposing of the joint property claiming them to be the exclusive owners thereof. In such circumstances, the brothers by their overt act expressly repudiate the rights of their sisters in the joint property, and oust them from the ownership of the joint property. Their acts are, therefore, a clear and actual denial of the rights of the sisters, which give rise to a compulsory cause of action and obligates the sisters to institute the suit for declaration of their rights, if they want to do so, within the prescribed period of limitation.

12. Although, by the said acts of the brothers, the right accrues to the sisters to sue for declaration of their rights, but if they by means of fraud are kept from the knowledge of those overt acts, the time limit of six years provided in Article 120 for instituting the suit for declaration against brothers or any person claiming through them otherwise than in good faith and for a valuable consideration, is to be computed from the time when the fraud of the brothers first became known to the sisters, by virtue of the provisions of Section 18 of the Limitation Act. The "fraud" contemplated by Section 18 means suppression of those acts or transactions that give rise to the cause of action from coming into the knowledge of the plaintiff. A deliberate concealment of facts intended to prevent discovery of the right to sue is also a "fraud" within the meaning of the term used in this Section, but an open act of a party cannot be said to be a fraudulent act of concealment and is therefore not covered by this Section. The benefit of Section 18 is, however, not available against any person who though claims through the defrauding party but is a transferee in good faith and for a valuable consideration. That is why this Court has treated differently the two types of cases: (i) where the joint property is still in possession of the defrauding brothers or their legal heirs; and (ii) where the joint property has been alienated further to third persons - the transferees in good faith and for a valuable consideration.

13. We have gone through the facts of the present case in light of the above principles regarding the calculation of the period of limitation. We find that the acts of acquisition of a part of the suit property by the Small Industries Estate and receiving of the compensation therefor by Abdur Rehman, the predecessor of respondents Nos. 1 to 6, in the year 1960-61 were open acts and were also in the knowledge of Mst. Mehro and Mst. Afsro, the predecessor of the petitioners. This fact has been admitted by petitioner No. 1, Saadat Khan, when he appeared in the witness box as PW-5. He further said that they had demanded their share in the compensation amount from Abdur Rehman but he had refused to pay. The act of receiving compensation for the acquired portion of the suit property by Abdur Rehman was equal to selling that portion of the suit property by claiming him to be the exclusive owner thereof. It was his express overt act whereby he repudiated the rights of his sisters, Mst. Mehro and Mst. Afsro, in the suit property and ousted them from the ownership thereof. By the said act of Abdur Rehman, the right accrued to his sisters to sue for declaration of their rights, and the six-year limitation period provided in Article 120 started to run from the date of knowledge of Mst. Mehro and Mst. Afsro, of that act of Abdur Rehman and expired in the year 1967-68. For when once limitation time had begun to run, no subsequent disability or inability to sue could stop it as per Section 9 of the Limitation Act. Similar was the effect of the acts of selling out the remaining portion of the suit property by respondents Nos. 1 to 6 to respondents Nos. 12 to 74 and others. The limitation period having thus expired in the lifetime of Mst. Mehro and Mst. Afsro, it cannot start over again for their successors, the present petitioners, in view of the definition of the term "plaintiff" provided in Section 2(8) of the Limitation Act, which provides that "plaintiff" includes any person from or through whom a plaintiff derives his right to sue. Because of the said definition of "plaintiff", it was the knowledge of Mst. Mehro and Mst. Afsro that had triggered the period of limitation to run not only against them but also against their successors, i.e., the petitioners who derive their right to sue from them. The appellate court and the High Court have, thus, correctly decided the issue of limitation against the petitioners.

14. For all what has been discussed above, the present petition for leave to appeal is found meritless; it is, therefore, dismissed and leave declined.

MWA/S-10/SC Petition dismissed.

(On appeal against judgment dated 16.8.2013 passed by the High Court of Sindh, Karachi in C.P. No. D-2633 of 2010).

(a) Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance (XIII of 2002)---

----Ss. 24, 29 & 39---Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA) Rules, 2002, R. 30---PEMRA (TV/Radio Broadcast Operations) Regulations, 2002, ('the 2002 Regulations') vires of---PEMRA (TV/Radio Broadcast Operations) Regulations, 2002 ('the 2002 Regulations') were made under Rule 30 of the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA) Rules, 2002 ('the 2002 Rules') which was beyond the scope of the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ('the Ordinance')---Said '2002 Regulations' did not derive their power from the parent statute i.e. the Ordinance and therefore, were void ab initio having been made without any lawful authority, and hence, of no legal effect.

The Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ('the Ordinance') before it was amended by the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Amendment) Act, 2007 ("Amendment Act of 2007"), did not provide for any power to PEMRA to issue regulations. It only provided for the power to make rules under Section 39 of the Ordinance, which was exercised by making the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA) Rules, 2002 ("2002 Rules"). Through the said 2002 Rules, without any such power to the said effect in the Ordinance, the power to make regulations was extended to PEMRA through Rule 30 of the 2002 Rules. The 2002 Regulations were then issued under said Rule 30 of the 2002 Rules. Thereafter, the Ordinance was amended through the Amendment Act of 2007 and the power to make regulations under the Ordinance was specifically added into the Ordinance by substituting Section 4 of the Ordinance. However, the Amendment Act of 2007 was not given retroactive effect and did not contain any provision validating the 2002 Regulations.

Molasses Trading v. Federation of Pakistan 1993 SCMR 1905 and Star Textile v. Government of Sindh 2002 SCMR 356 ref.

The amended Section 4 of the Ordinance authorized PEMRA to make regulations by notification in the official Gazette, however, the 2002 Regulations were not notified in the official Gazette. Therefore, the Amendment Act of 2007 did not extend any legal cover to the 2002 Regulations. The 2002 Regulations, which were made under the 2002 Rules without any such power provided in the Ordinance, remained operative till 2012 i.e. when the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Television Broadcast Station Operations Regulations, 2012) ("2012 Regulations") were issued for the first time under the amended Ordinance. Therefore, the 2002 Regulations did not derive their power from the parent statute i.e. the Ordinance and, even after the Ordinance was amended, remained non est. They were made under Rule 30 of the 2002 Rules which was beyond the scope of the Ordinance.

Therefore, Rule 30 of the 2002 Rules, going beyond the scope of the Ordinance, was ultra vires to the Ordinance and the 2002 Regulations were void ab initio, having been made without any lawful authority, and hence, of no legal effect. Appeal was dismissed.

----Regulations made under a parent statute---Regulations must be made by the authority of the parent statute and regulations that do not draw their power from the parent statute are also ultra vires to the said parent statute.

(d) PEMRA (TV/Radio Broadcast Operations) Regulations, 2002---

----Regln. 9(5)---Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance (XIII of 2002), Ss. 29-A & 30(1)(a)---Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA)---Power to levy and recover surcharge on late payment of annual fee pertaining to the licences granted to the private broadcasters by PEMRA---Legality---No specific provision in the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ('the Ordinance') empowers PEMRA to impose a surcharge on the late payment of annual fee---Said Ordinance only contemplates the levy of a licence fee and annual fee but does not empower PEMRA to levy any surcharge over and above the annual fee---Demand of surcharge under Regulation 9(5) of the) PEMRA (TV/Radio Broadcast Operations) Regulations, 2002 was ultra vires to the Ordinance which does not confer any power on PEMRA to impose and recover such a surcharge.

The Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ('the Ordinance') as it stood before it was amended through the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Amendment) Act, 2007 ("Amendment Act of 2007"), and as it stands after it has been amended through the Amendment Act of 2007, there was and is no specific provision that empowers PEMRA to impose a surcharge on the late payment of annual fee. The Ordinance only contemplates the levy of a licence fee and annual fee but does not empower PEMRA to levy any surcharge over and above the annual fee. The contention of PEMRA that after the Ordinance was amended through the Amendment Act of 2007, the power to levy and recover surcharge was included in the term "other charges" as appearing in Sections 29-A and 30(1)(a), is without any force. Despite the Ordinance being amended through the Amendment Act of 2007, the power to levy and recover surcharge was still not provided therein by the legislature. Even otherwise, Section 29A of the Ordinance only caters to recovery of dues as arrears of land revenue and Section 30(1) provides that PEMRA may revoke or suspend a licence on one or more of the grounds mentioned therein, including, as stipulated under Section 30(1)(a), if the licensee fails to pay the licence fee, annual renewal fee or any other charges including any fine, if any. Therefore, it is apparent that there is no definition of "other charges" under the Ordinance and no specific charging provision whereby the "other charges" are levied on a licensee or any provision that empowers PEMRA to levy and recover surcharge even as "other charges".

The PEMRA (TV/Radio Broadcast Operations) Regulations, 2002 ('the 2002 Regulations') were void ab initio and remained non est. As such, there were no valid regulations in the field for the purposes of Sections 2(s), 19(3), 24(4) or 24(5) of the Ordinance up till the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Television Broadcast Station Operations Regulations, 2012) ("2012 Regulations") were issued. Thus, the demand of surcharge under Regulation 9(5) of the 2002 Regulations was ultra vires to the Ordinance which does not confer any power on PEMRA to impose and recover such a surcharge. Appeal was dismissed.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Through the instant appeal, the appellant has challenged judgment dated 16.8.2013 passed by the High Court of Sindh, Karachi, whereby the constitutional petition filed by the respondents was allowed.

2. The brief facts of the case are that respondents Nos. 2 to 8, being private broadcasters owning and operating different television channels, were issued various show cause notices in 2010 by the appellant/PEMRA, demanding payment of surcharge on account of late payment of annual fee pertaining to the licences granted to the respondents by the appellant. The said surcharge claimed by the appellant was under Regulation No. 9(5) of the PEMRA (TV/Radio Broadcast Operations) Regulations, 2002 ("2002 Regulations"). The respondents challenged the vires of the said surcharge by filing a constitutional petition before the High Court. Through the impugned judgment dated 12.09.2013, the constitutional petition was allowed and the demand for payment of said surcharge under the 2002 Regulations was in effect declared to be ultra vires to the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ("Ordinance"), and resultantly, the show cause notices demanding the same were set aside.

3. Leave to appeal was granted by this Court vide order dated 19.11.2013 in the following terms:-

"It is argued that the view set out by the learned High Court in the impugned judgment that the levy of surcharge vide Regulation 9(5) of the PEMRA (TV/Radio Broadcast Operations) Regulations, 2002 is beyond the scope of the provisions of Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 (the Ordinance, 2002) and thus ultra vires is not in consonance with the provisions of Section 24(5) of the Ordinance, 2002 read with Section 29- A of the Ordinance, 2002. Leave is granted to consider the above."

4. While arguing the matter, the learned counsel for the appellant took us through the scheme of the Ordinance, particularly referring to Sections 2(s), 4(3), 24(4), 24(5), 29-A, 30(1)(a) and 39 of the Ordinance. He also referred to the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA) Rules, 2002 ("2002 Rules") and the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Rules, 2009 ("2009 Rules"), as well as to two sets of Regulations; the 2002 Regulations and the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Television Broadcast Station Operations Regulations, 2012) ("2012 Regulations"). While referring to the above, the main plank of the arguments of the learned counsel for the appellant was that the surcharge provided under the 2002 Regulations was sanctioned by the Ordinance through Sections 29-A and 30(1)(a), being described as "other charges". While explaining the legality of the 2002 Regulations, he submitted that initially the 2002 Regulations were promulgated under the 2002 Rules made under the Ordinance, thereafter, an amendment was brought about in Section 4 of the Ordinance through the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Amendment) Act, 2007 ("Amendment Act of 2007"), authorizing PEMRA to make Regulations for carrying out the purposes of the Ordinance. Under the said provision, regulations were then issued for the first time in the year 2012 i.e. the 2012 Regulations. Therefore, he argued that the demand for surcharge was valid as the same had the sanctity of the law. Further, the learned Additional Attorney General for Pakistan submitted that the said surcharge could be treated as compensation for late payment of annual fee which could be charged by PEMRA under Section 19(4) of the Ordinance.

5. On the other hand, the learned counsel for the respondents supported the judgment of the High Court and vehemently reiterated that the 2002 Regulations did not have the sanction of the law; they could not have been issued under the 2002 Rules without any substantive sanction under the Ordinance; the Ordinance did not provide for any power to demand surcharge on late payment of annual fee, therefore, Regulation 9(5) of the 2002 Regulations, being beyond the scope of the Ordinance, was ultra vires to the Ordinance; and that even if Regulation 9(5) of the 2002 Regulations is taken on its face value, it only provides for late payment surcharge on licence fee or renewal fee and does not provide for any sanction for demanding surcharge with regards to late payment of annual fee.

6. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and the learned Additional Attorney General for Pakistan, and have also examined the record with their able assistance. The question before us pertains to whether the demand of payment of surcharge under Regulation 9(5) of the 2002 Regulations, through the show cause notices issued to the respondents pertaining to the years 2004 to 2011, was valid under the law. In order to dilate upon the said question, it will have to be ascertained whether the 2002 Regulations were legally issued under the Ordinance and whether the Ordinance provides for any power to levy and recover surcharge on late payment of annual fee with or without the 2002 Regulations.

7. It is an admitted position that the Ordinance before it was amended through the Amendment Act of 2007 neither had any provision empowering PEMRA to issue regulations thereunder and nor any power to impose surcharge on account of late payment of annual fee was provided therein. By virtue of Section 39, the Ordinance only empowered PEMRA to make rules with the approval of the Government and by notification in the official Gazette. The 2002 Rules were then promulgated under the said provision. Rule 30 of the 2002 Rules provided for the power to issue regulations and by exercising the same, the 2002 Regulations were issued by PEMRA, which, through Regulation 9(5), provided for the imposition of surcharge for 'late payment of the licence or renewal fee'. Subsequently, through the Amendment Act of 2007, Section 4 of the Ordinance was substituted and the new Section 4 provided that, by notification in the official Gazette, the Authority i.e. PEMRA[1] may make regulations and also issue determinations for carrying out the purposes of the Ordinance. Notably, the Amendment Act of 2007 was not given retroactive effect and no validation clause was provided in the Amendment Act of 2007 to validate or save the proceedings initiated or actions undertaken under the 2002 Regulations. Furthermore, no express provision to impose surcharge was provided in the Amendment Act of 2007 either. It, however, added a new provision i.e. Section 29-A into the Ordinance which caters to recovery of dues, including any other charges, as arrears of land revenue. It also substituted Section 30 of the Ordinance, which, through Section 30(1)(a), now provides that PEMRA may revoke and suspend any licence if the licensee fails to pay the licence fee, annual renewal fee or any other charges including fine, if any. The term "other charges", however, has not been defined therein.

8. Thereafter, the 2009 Rules were promulgated under the Ordinance, repealing the 2002 Rules. However, still no regulations were made under the Ordinance after the express power to make the same was added into the Ordinance through the Amendment Act of 2007, as noted above. The 2002 Regulations, made under the 2002 Rules, were still applied by PEMRA and the show cause notices, pertaining to the years 2004 to 2011, demanding payment of surcharge were issued to the respondents under Regulation 9(5) of the said 2002 Regulations. Thereafter, as admitted by the learned counsel for the appellant, the 2012 Regulations, as notified in the official Gazette, were issued under the Ordinance for the first time in the year 2012.

9. It is apparent from the above that the Ordinance before it was amended by the Amendment Act of 2007 did not provide for any power to PEMRA to issue regulations. It only provided for the power to make rules under Section 39 of the Ordinance, which was exercised by making the 2002 Rules. Through the said 2002 Rules, without any such power to the said effect in the Ordinance, the power to make regulations was extended to PEMRA through Rule 30 of the 2002 Rules. The 2002 Regulations were then issued under said Rule 30 of the 2002 Rules. Thereafter, the Ordinance was amended through the Amendment Act of 2007 and the power to make regulations under the Ordinance was specifically added into the Ordinance by substituting Section 4 of the Ordinance. However, the Amendment Act of 2007 was not given retroactive effect and did not contain any provision validating the 2002 Regulations.[2] We have also noted that the amended Section 4 of the Ordinance authorized PEMRA to make regulations by notification in the official Gazette, however, the 2002 Regulations were not notified in the official Gazette, as admitted by the appellant in its para-wise comments filed before the High Court.[3] Therefore, the Amendment Act of 2007 did not extend any legal cover to the 2002 Regulations. The 2002 Regulations, which were made under the 2002 Rules without any such power provided in the Ordinance, remained operative till 2012 i.e. when the 2012 Regulations were issued for the first time under the amended Ordinance. Therefore, the 2002 Regulations did not derive their power from the parent statute i.e. the Ordinance and, even after the Ordinance was amended, remained non est. They were made under Rule 30 of the 2002 Rules which was beyond the scope of the Ordinance. It is settled law that the rules made under a parent statute cannot go beyond the scope of the said statute and nor can they enlarge the scope of the statutory provisions therein. The power of rule-making is an incidental power that must follow and not run parallel to the parent statute. Furthermore, regulations must be made by the authority of the parent statute and regulations that do not draw their power from the parent statute are also ultra vires to the said parent statute.[4] Therefore, Rule 30 of the 2002 Rules, going beyond the scope of the Ordinance, was ultra vires to the Ordinance and the 2002 Regulations were void ab initio, having been made without any lawful authority, and hence, of no legal effect.

10. Even otherwise, without prejudice to the above, the Ordinance as it stood before it was amended through the Amendment Act of 2007 and as it stands after it has been amended through the Amendment Act of 2007, there was and is no specific provision that empowers PEMRA to impose a surcharge on the late payment of annual fee. The Ordinance only contemplates the levy of a licence fee and annual fee but does not empower PEMRA to levy any surcharge over and above the annual fee.[5] The contention of the learned counsel for the appellant that after the Ordinance was amended through the Amendment Act of 2007, the power to levy and recover surcharge was included in the term "other charges" as appearing in Sections 29-A and 30(1)(a), is without any force. It is trite law that fiscal statutes are to be interpreted strictly and there is no room for any intendment therein.[6] It is underlined that despite the Ordinance being amended through the Amendment Act of 2007, the power to levy and recover surcharge was still not provided therein by the legislature. Even otherwise, Section 29- A of the Ordinance only caters to recovery of dues as arrears of land revenue and Section 30(1) provides that PEMRA may revoke or suspend a licence on one or more of the grounds mentioned therein, including, as stipulated under Section 30(1)(a), if the licensee fails to pay the licence fee, annual renewal fee or any other charges including any fine, if any. Therefore, it is apparent that there is no definition of "other charges" under the Ordinance and no specific charging provision whereby the "other charges" are levied on a licensee or any provision that empowers PEMRA to levy and recover surcharge even as "other charges".

11. Reliance on Section 19(4) of the Ordinance by the learned Additional Attorney General of Pakistan is also misplaced as the said provision only empowers PEMRA to charge fee as it may fix from time to time for the grant of a licence and for its annual renewal but does not provide for the power to levy and recover surcharge on non-payment of annual fee. Section 19(3) provides that every licence shall be subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed. Section 24(4) of the Ordinance provides that a licence shall be valid for a period of five, ten or fifteen years subject to payment of the annual fee prescribed from time to time. Section 24(5) provides that the Authority may renew a licence on such terms and conditions as may be prescribed. Although, through the Amendment Act of 2007, Section 2(s) was amended and the definition of "prescribed" was expanded to include as "prescribed by the rules or regulations made by the Authority", however, as held above, the 2002 Regulations were void ab initio and remained non est. As such, there were no valid regulations in the field for the purposes of Sections 2(s), 19(3), 24(4) or 24(5) of the Ordinance up till the 2012 Regulations were issued. Thus, the demand of surcharge under Regulation 9(5) of the 2002 Regulations was ultra vires to the Ordinance which does not confer any power on PEMRA to impose and recover such a surcharge.[7]

12. Even otherwise, we have also noted that Regulation 9(5) of the 2002 Regulations provided that the surcharge would be incurred upon the late payment of the licence or the renewal fee but did not provide that surcharge could be imposed on late payment of annual fee. Therefore, even under Regulation 9(5), the demand of surcharge on late payment of annual fee was without any lawful authority.

13. In view of what has been held above, we see no reason to interfere in the well-reasoned judgment of the High Court. The instant appeal is therefore, dismissed accordingly.

MWA/P-7/SC Appeal dismissed.

(Against the order of the High Court of Sindh, dated 11.11.2020, passed in M.A. No.45 of 2020).

(a) Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Councils of Complaints) Rules, 2010---

----R. 4---Councils of Complaints---Chairperson and Members---Citizens of eminence---Term 'citizens of eminence' explained.

Council of Complaints consists of a chairperson and five members including at least two women, who all are citizens of eminence from the general public. Although the expression "citizens of eminence", which is of wide import, is not defined in the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002, it ordinarily refers to persons who are widely recognized and respected for their knowledge and experience in their respective fields, such as media, law, human rights and social service, etc. The term "eminence" suggests a level of distinction, implying that these persons hold a special status or position within the circle of their vocation. Additionally, those of such persons who are considered for assigning a public function, whether paid or honourary, ought to be also known for their integrity. Such consideration must also take into account the objective of ensuring that the Councils of Complaints remain independent and impartial, and are protected against both political and commercial pressure or interference. A Council of Complaints comprising of such persons reflect a broad cross-section of our society in order to represent diverse interests, balance, inclusivity and different perspectives of the public, while ensuring their independence and impartiality, which can best ensure the public interest in reviewing complaints against any aspects of programmes and advertisements. The members of the Councils therefore hold honorary position for two years and are to perform their function independently and impartially, without any government interference.

(b) Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance (XIII of 2002)---

----Ss. 26(2) & 27(a)---Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Councils of Complaints) Rules, 2010, Rr. 8 & 10---Councils of Complaints---Power to receive and review complaints against any content---Scope---PEMRA has to consider the opinion of Councils of Complaints before passing any order of prohibition under section 27(a) of the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002.

To regulate public fundamental rights of expression and information, the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ("PEMRA Ordinance") envisages a two tiered regulatory system. The media content has to be first viewed by the Council of Complaints, an independent public regulatory body, and after obtaining its opinion, PEMRA, the government regulatory body, is to consider the opinion of the Council of Complaints and finally decide the matter. Section 27(a) of the PEMRA Ordinance is not an independent and self-governing provision; it rather requires for its applicability the opinion of a Council of Complaints regarding the objectionable aspect of a programme or advertisement in terms of Section 26(2) of the PEMRA Ordinance read with the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Councils of Complaints) Rules, 2010. [pp. 449, 451] H & K

Even if suo motu notice is taken by PEMRA or its Chairman, as to "any aspects of programmes", the matter has to be first sent to a Council of Complaints for its opinion and after considering the said opinion, PEMRA or its Chairman, as the case may be, can take the final decision.

(c) Interpretation of statutes---

----Rules made under a statute---Scope---Rules validly made to carry out the purposes of a statute are an integral part of that statute, therefore, it is also necessary to read them in conjunction with the statute to fully understand the operational scheme of any particular provision of the statute.

Ibrahim v. Regional Transport Authority AIR 1953 SC 79 and National Insurance Co. v. Swaran Singh AIR 2004 SC 1531 ref.

(d) Interpretation of Constitution---

----Holistic interpretation---Scope---Court always prefers the approach of holistic interpretation to that of fragmented interpretation while interpreting any provision of the Constitution or a statute---By this approach, the courts seek to ascertain the overall intent and purpose of the law and, by considering how its individual provisions fit within its larger framework, attempt to harmonize their meaning and scope with each other.

(e) Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance (XIII of 2002)---

----Ss. 26(2) & 27(a)---Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Councils of Complaints) Rules, 2010, Rr. 8 & 10---Council of Complaints---Power to receive and review complaints against any 'advertisement'---Scope---Inadvertent drafting omission in statute---Although the word "advertisement" is not mentioned in subsection (2) of Section 26 of the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ('the Ordinance') but it is found mentioned in subsection (5) thereof---Omission of the word advertisement in subsection (2) of Section 26 appears to be an accidental one, as it does not fit within the overall intent of the legislature manifested from reading the provisions of Section 26 as a whole---Subsection (5) of Section 26 clearly empowers the Councils of Complaints to make a recommendation to PEMRA for the action of censure or fine against a licensee for violation of the codes not only of programmes content but also of advertisements---Provisions of subsection (5) of Section 26 thus make the intent of the legislature abundantly clear that it intended to confer the power on the Councils of Complaints to receive and review complaints against any aspects of programmes or advertisements, which shall be so read in subsection (2) of Section 26, in order to give effect to that manifest intent of the legislature.

(f) Interpretation of statutes---

----Inadvertent omissions in drafting a statute---Object of the process of interpretation of a statute is to find out what the legislature must have intended and then to give effect to that intent of the legislature, and in order to give effect to the manifest intent of the legislature, the courts can supply the inadvertent omission of the draftsman by reading the necessary words in the statute.

(g) Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Councils of Complaints) Rules, 2010---

----R. 4---Councils of Complaints---Chairperson and Members---Selection criteria and procedure of appointment of members of the Councils of Complaints stated.

Selecting and appointing members of the public to regulate media content on the Councils of Complaints must, represent diverse interests and perspectives of the public while ensuring independence and impartiality. The Federal Government must establish: (i) clear criteria for the selection of public representatives, which might include a mix of expertise, professional backgrounds, demographic diversity and geographic representation; (ii) announce the opportunity to serve on the Councils through various channels, such as newspapers, websites, social media and community organizations. This will help attract a diverse pool of applicants; (iii) set up an application process that requires interested individuals to submit their credentials, relevant experience and a statement explaining their motivation for serving on the regulatory body. This information will be used to evaluate the suitability of each applicant; (iv) establish an independent selection committee composed of representatives from different sectors, e.g. media, academia, civil society, to review applications and recommend candidates. The committee should ensure a transparent and impartial selection process; and (v) provide the members, once appointed, with training and orientation on media regulation, ethics and relevant laws. This will help them make informed decisions and effectively contribute to the regulation of media content. The inclusion of public representatives in media regulation, in this manner, can contribute to greater transparency, diversity and public trust in the media ecosystem.

(h) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 19 & 19A---Tolerance---Constitutional value and significance of the concept of tolerance in a society stated.

"Tolerance" is an essential preambular constitutional value that assumes more significance in the context of freedom of expression and right to information. It is a multifaceted concept and at its core, tolerance refers to the ability or willingness to accept and respect differences in opinions, beliefs, customs and practices among individuals or groups. This can include differences in race, religion, culture, gender, sexual orientation, political ideology and other aspects of human diversity. Tolerance promotes understanding, harmony and coexistence among people with diverse backgrounds, fostering open-mindedness and empathy. In a broader sense, it is an essential aspect of democratic societies, as it supports freedom of expression and the exchange of ideas, ultimately contributing to social cohesion and stability. It is important to note that tolerance does not necessarily imply agreement with or endorsement of the opinions or beliefs of others; rather, it is about respecting their right to hold those beliefs and coexist peacefully. The standard of tolerance in a society can be influenced by several factors. Societies with a tradition of valuing diversity and inclusivity tend to have higher levels of tolerance. In these societies, people are more likely to be accepting of differences and supportive of equal rights for all members of society. Societies that emphasize education and promote awareness of diverse cultures, religions and ways of life, tend to foster tolerance among their citizens. By understanding different perspectives and experiences, people are better equipped to appreciate and respect the diversity within their society. In some societies, tolerance is enshrined in the legal framework through anti-discrimination laws, human rights protections and equal opportunity policies. These measures help to create an environment in which tolerance is promoted and intolerance is discouraged. The standard of tolerance in a society is not static; it can change over time as a result of shifting cultural values, political climates and other factors.

(i) Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance (XIII of 2002)---

----Ss. 26(2) & 27(a)---Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Councils of Complaints) Rules, 2010, Rr. 8 & 10---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 19 & 19A---Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA)---Councils of Complaints---Content regulation---Plays, dramas and other content broadcasted on electronic media---Expressions "obscene", "vulgar" and "offensive" to the commonly accepted standards of decency"---Scope of restrictions to be imposed by PEMRA and Council of Complaints and the scope of the expressions "obscene", "vulgar" and "offensive" stated.

The restriction imposed by law, i.e. the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ('PEMRA Ordinance"), on the right to freedom of expression in relation to any programme including a play or drama, or any advertisement, broadcasted on the electronic media, on the ground of it being "obscene", "vulgar" or "offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency", is defended to achieve the legitimate objectives of securing the interest of "public decency" and "public morality" as mentioned in Article 19 of the Constitution. This restriction, however, should not be more than necessary in its scope and applicability, to accomplish the said objectives. Additionally, while it is accepted that what constitutes appropriate limitation on freedom of expression to protect morals does vary from society to society, it must be kept in mind that the concept of decency and morality is derived from many social, philosophical and religious traditions; therefore, the limitations for the purpose of protecting public decency and public morality must be based on principles not deriving exclusively from a single tradition, and any such limitations must be understood in the light of universality of human rights and the principle of non-discrimination.

R v. Oakes, [1986] 1 SCR 103 (Supreme Court of Canada); General Comment No. 22 of the UN Human Rights Committee and General Comment No. 34 of the UN Human Rights Committee ref.

The expressions "obscene", "vulgar" and "offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency" as used in Section 27(a) of the PEMRA Ordinance, are actually interconnected. Only that form of an expression can be said to be "obscene" or "vulgar" which is "offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency". Thus, the "commonly accepted standards of decency" in the community is the benchmark to determine whether or not a particular form of the expression of one's thought, idea or opinion in a play or drama is "obscene" or "vulgar". The important thing to understand is that the commonly accepted standard of decency in a community is a "standard of tolerance, not taste". It is not what the people generally think is right for them to see but what they would not tolerate others being exposed to it on the basis of the degree of harm to "public decency" or "public morality" that may flow from such exposure. Further, the expression "commonly accepted standards of decency" must be understood to be the contemporary standards as the social mores and sensibilities change over time.

R v. Butler, [1992] 1 SCR 452 (Supreme Court of Canada) ref.

A work of art and literature, which includes a play or drama broadcasted on the electronic media, is usually considered a strong and effective medium to break the silence on social taboos; therefore, it is not to be labelled as "obscene" or "vulgar" readily without appraising the message it intends to convey. In this perspective, one would need to see whether that message tends to promote or glorify the conduct or behavior which is offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency, or it tends to condemn or deprecate such conduct or behavior. Such a review is to be undertaken on an objective assessment of the play or drama as a whole, not on the basis of pick and choose of its parts from here and there. If the ultimate message of the play or drama under review passes the test of being not offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency, the review of a particular part thereof which depiction is necessary to convey the message effectively must be lenient and tolerant. However, where the obscenity of such part is too pronounced to eschew, only the objectionable part should be prohibited from being broadcasted and directed to be suitably modified, and the broadcast or rebroadcast of the complete play or drama must not be prohibited. In view of the applicability of the principle of proportionality to restrictions on the rights guaranteed by the Constitution, such an approach is necessary to protect the exercise of the fundamental right to freedom of expression and right to information to the maximum extent possible and to enforce the restrictions on the exercise of these rights to the minimum.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The main question of law that requires determination in the present case is: whether Section 27(a) of the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ("PEMRA Ordinance") is an independent and self-governing provision or whether its applicability requires the opinion of the Council of Complaints in terms of Section 26(2) of the PEMRA Ordinance read with the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Councils of Complaints) Rules, 2010 ("Councils of Complaints Rules"). The case also necessitates some elaboration on how the Councils of Complaints are to address complaints and deal with expressions like "obscene", "vulgar" and "offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency" as used in Section 27(a) of the PEMRA Ordinance, in relation to any programme, including a play or drama and advertisement ("media content"), broadcasted on the electronic media, in the context of our constitutional values and fundamental rights, in particular, the right to freedom of speech and expression and right to information guaranteed by Articles 19 and 19A of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ("Constitution"). Further, the manner of selection of the members of the Councils of Complaints established under Section 26 of the PEMRA Ordinance, especially the requirement of such members being "citizens of eminence", needs elucidation.

2. Briefly, the relevant facts of the case are that M/s ARY Communications Private Limited ("ARY") broadcasted a drama serial, JALAN, ("drama serial") on its TV Channel, ARY Digital. Some persons from the general public made complaints on the Pakistan Citizen's Portal of the Prime Minister's Performance Delivery Unit, alleging that the story of the drama serial is immoral and against social and cultural values. The said complaints were forwarded to the Chairman, Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority ("PEMRA") for appropriate action. PEMRA, acting through its delegate i.e. the Chairman, called for the comments of ARY, which were submitted by ARY, refuting the allegations. PEMRA, however, being dissatisfied with the comments, first issued two directives to ARY to amend the script of the drama serial before broadcasting further episodes and then passed an order on 10 September 2020 under Section 27(a) of the PEMRA Ordinance, prohibiting the broadcasting and rebroadcasting of the drama serial. ARY filed an appeal against the said order before the High Court of Sindh under Section 30A of the PEMRA Ordinance, which was allowed on 15 September 2020 and the matter was remanded to PEMRA to decide the same afresh after serving a proper show cause notice to ARY, specifying the objectionable content of the drama serial and providing a sufficient opportunity of hearing.

3. In compliance with the direction of the High Court, PEMRA served two show cause notices to ARY, one of which contained the following assertions:

[The] storyline/theme of the said drama serial does not conform to the religious injunctions enshrined in the Holy Quran and established social/cultural more/values of the country containing highly objectionable content compromising sanctity of relations between brother-in-law and sister-in-law. Further, the storyline and theme of the drama serial seems a lethal attempt to induce the younger segments of the society with an obvious intent to go against the commonly accepted standards of decency and to distort the social fabric by dislodging century old cultural and social norms/mores of the society. Transcript of a few video clips showing intimacy between brother-in-law and sister-in-law is enclosed herewith at (Annex-I) for ready reference.

In one of its replies, ARY took the following stance:

[T]he drama serial "JALAN" does not contain any objectionable content which may hurt the feelings of any viewers or violate any social, moral, religious or cultural norms. It is categorically submitted that there is no vulgarity or obscenity in the said drama serial and it only portrays a story of a social issue and further highlight[s] the adverse consequences of such conduct. The subject drama serial further highlights the issue of "mental illness". It is submitted that the said drama serial does not promote any anti-social behaviour but rather acts as a deterrent as it shows the adverse consequences that people can suffer due to their actions. There are no violations of any regulations or code in the script, dialogues or scenes of the drama, which is the reason why PEMRA has been unable to point out any particular violation(s).

In both of its replies, ARY also raised the objection regarding the jurisdiction of PEMRA to issue the show cause notice without first obtaining the opinion of a Council of Complaints under Section 26 of the PEMRA Ordinance. PEMRA did not take notice of this objection and, without catering to the same, passed a prohibition order under Section 27 of the PEMRA Ordinance on 29 October 2020, prohibiting ARY from airing the drama serial ("prohibition order").

4. ARY then preferred an appeal against this prohibition order before the High Court of Sindh under Section 30A of the PEMRA Ordinance. While allowing the appeal and setting aside the prohibition order by its judgement dated 11.11.2020 ("impugned judgement"), the High Court held that the legislature has empowered the Councils of Complaints, under Section 26 of the PEMRA Ordinance, to receive and review complaints against any aspects of the programmes and to recommend appropriate action to PEMRA, and that PEMRA could not have bypassed the Councils of Complaints in making the prohibition order. The present petition has been filed by PEMRA for leave to appeal against this judgement of the High Court.

5. We have considered the oral as well as written arguments of the learned counsel for the parties and examined the record of the case.

Regulating two fundamental rights: freedom of expression and right to information.

6. First of all, we think it appropriate to conceptualize the framework of establishing a regulatory authority like PEMRA under the law, i.e. the PEMRA Ordinance. This can best be contextualized in the framework of regulating the fundamental rights to freedom of expression and information guaranteed by Articles 19 and 19A of the Constitution, to begin with the preamble of the PEMRA Ordinance states that it provides for the development of the electronic media to improve the standards of information and enlarge the choice available to the people of Pakistan through media in the current affairs, religious knowledge, art, culture, science, technology, economic development, social sector concerns, music sports, drama and other subjects of public and national interest. Empowering people at the grass root level by improving access of the people to mass media and ensuring accountability, transparency and good governance by optimizing the free flow of information. In essence the purpose of PEMRA is to improve and regulate the standard of information disseminated (media content) through media broadcast to the public. In the constitutional context, the function of PEMRA is to enhance, protect and regulate freedom of speech and expression by regulating media content and the right of information of the public to be able to access and receive such media content through different mediums of communication. Even though implied in the freedom of speech and expression is the freedom to communicate such speech and expression (media content) to the public, our Constitution additionally provides an independent fundamental right to information, in all matters of public importance. Media broadcasts, plays, and dramas are also matters of public importance. They can significantly impact society in various ways. Shaping public opinion: Media broadcasts, plays, and dramas often reflect or challenge societal norms and values. They can influence public opinion by shedding light on important issues, presenting different perspectives, and encouraging critical thinking. Raising awareness: These forms of communication can raise awareness about pressing social, political, or environmental issues, prompting public discourse and encouraging people to take action or make informed decisions. Cultural preservation and promotion: Plays and dramas often showcase a society's history, culture, and traditions, helping to preserve and promote cultural heritage and identity. Entertainment and escapism: Media broadcasts, plays, and dramas provide entertainment and escapism, allowing people to relax, enjoy, and momentarily escape from the stress of everyday life. This can contribute to overall well-being and social cohesion. Education: These mediums can serve as educational tools, introducing audiences to new ideas, historical events, or scientific concepts in an engaging and accessible way. Media broadcast in the shape of plays or dramas collectively play a crucial role in shaping society, influencing public opinion and fostering cultural development. Right to information under Article 19A is therefore not limited to the access to information from public bodies as envisaged under the Right to Access of Information Act, 2017 but also includes media content disseminated to the public as an integral part of "information." So in the public space, the freedom of expression of one becomes the right to information of another. While one has the freedom to express oneself, the other has the right to have access and receive such information. If an individual has the right to express their opinions and ideas, others have the right to hear them and be informed. In this way, the right to receive information can be seen as a way to ensure that the right to freedom of expression is fully realized. Both these fundamental rights complement each other.

7. "Expression" in the context of freedom of expression (Article 19), refers to the act of conveying thoughts, ideas, emotions, beliefs, or opinions through various forms of communication. This can include: (i) spoken or written words like speeches, conversations, books, articles, and social media posts; (ii) artistic works such as painting, drawing, sculpture, music, dance, theater and film can be ways to express thoughts, ideas, or emotions; and (iii) symbolic actions that can take the form of gestures, clothing choices, or other actions that convey meaning, like protest marches or flag burning. Freedom of expression is a fundamental human right that allows individuals to openly communicate their thoughts and ideas without fear of censorship, discrimination, or punishment. It is essential for the healthy functioning of a democratic society to encourage exchange of ideas, fosters debate and allow for the development of diverse opinions and perspectives.

8. "Information", on the other hand, generally refers to data, facts or knowledge that have been organized, processed, and communicated in various formats to help people understand or make decisions about a particular topic or issue. Information can come from a variety of sources, such as books, articles, websites, social media, databases, speeches, videos, images, or audio recordings. Having "access to information", typically refers to the ability of individuals or groups to find, obtain and use information effectively and efficiently. This helps build a more informed, inclusive, cultured and a tolerant society.

9. PEMRA on the one hand has to ensure that the freedom of expression through media broadcast is enhanced without infringing the reasonable restrictions imposed by law in the interest of the glory of Islam or the integrity, security or defense of Pakistan, friendly relations with foreign States, public order, decency or morality or in relation to contempt of court or commission or incitement of an offence under Article 19 of the Constitution. While on the other hand, it also has to ensure that the right to information of the public is enlarged without impinging on the reasonable restrictions imposed by law under Article 19A of the Constitution. These constitutional restrictions are further actualized through the restrictions provided under PEMRA Ordinance and the rules, regulations and the code of conduct developed thereunder. The "reasonable restrictions" flow from Articles 19 and 19A of the Constitution and the statutory restrictions by and under the PEMRA Ordinance are to be interpreted in a forward looking manner in order to persistently advance and promote the constitutional values of tolerance, freedom, equality, democracy and social justice.

10. In order to regulate these two important fundamental rights, the media content[1] broadcasted and received in the public space is regulated under the PEMRA Ordinance[2] through a two-tiered regulatory system. First, through the independent public regulatory bodies called the Councils of Complaints, comprising citizens of eminence selected from the general public. Second, by PEMRA, a Government controlled regulatory body. The primary responsibility of these two bodies is to ensure that the media content is constitution complaint under Articles 19 and 19A and meets the reasonable restrictions under the PEMRA Ordinance, rules, regulations and the code of conduct. The importance of establishing independent Councils of Complaints from amongst citizens of eminence from the general public is to ensure that the media content for the public is also reviewed by representatives of the public, through a public regulatory body by applying commonly accepted or community based standards of decency. As the media content has to be put out in the public space, it is therefore, first and foremost, that an independent public body representing a broad cross-section of society reviews the media content. This helps protect, nuture and enhance the freedom of expression and right to information of the people and shields the media content against government interference and control.

11. The composition of the Councils of Complaints leaves little room to guess why the function of reviewing complaints against any aspects of programmes or advertisements and of rendering an opinion on such complaints has been entrusted by the legislature to them. Each Council of Complaints consists of a chairperson and five members including at least two women, who all are citizens of eminence from the general public. Although the expression "citizens of eminence", which is of wide import, is not defined in the PEMRA Ordinance, it ordinarily refers to persons who are widely recognized and respected for their knowledge and experience in their respective fields, such as media, law, human rights and social service, etc.[3] The term "eminence" suggests a level of distinction, implying that these persons hold a special status or position within the circle of their vocation. Additionally, those of such persons who are considered for assigning a public function, whether paid or honourary, ought to be also known for their integrity. Such consideration must also take into account the objective of ensuring that the Councils of Complaints remain independent and impartial, and are protected against both political and commercial pressure or interference.[4] A Council of Complaints comprising of such persons reflect a broad cross-section of our society in order to represent diverse interests, balance, inclusivity and different perspectives of the public, while ensuring their independence and impartiality, which can best ensure the public interest in reviewing complaints against any aspects of programmes and advertisements. The members of the Councils therefore hold honourary position for two years and are to perform their function independently and impartially, without any government interference.[5] PEMRA, the government regulatory authority, on the other hand, is a body comprising a Chairman and twelve members who are appointed by the President of Pakistan for tenure of four years on payment of such emoluments as determined by him.[6] The two tiered regulatory system is an effective regulatory mechanism to actualize and advance the fundamental rights to freedom of expression and information.

Scope of Sections 26 and 27 of the PEMRA Ordinance

12. With this conceptual background, we now examine the interpretation of Section 27(a) of the PEMRA Ordinance to see whether it is a self-governing provision, independent of Section 26(2) of the PEMRA Ordinance read with the Councils of Complaints Rules. The relevant provisions are reproduced here for ease of reference:

26. Council of Complaints. (1) The Federal Government shall, by notification in the official Gazette, establish Councils of Complaints at Islamabad, the Provincial capitals and also at such other places as the Federal Government may determine.

(2) Each Council shall receive and review complaints made by persons or organizations from the general public against any aspects of programmes broadcast or distributed by a station established through a licence issued by the Authority and render opinions on such complaints.

(3) Each Council shall consist of a Chairperson and five members being citizens of eminence from the general public at least two of whom shall be women.

(3A) The Councils shall have the powers to summon a licensee against whom a complaint has been made and call for his explanation regarding any matter relating to its operation.

(4) The Authority shall formulate rules for the functions and operation of the Councils within two hundred days of the establishment of the Authority.

(5) The Councils may recommend to the Authority appropriate action of censure, fine against a broadcast or CTV station or licensee for violation of the codes of programme content and advertisements as approved by the Authority as may be prescribed.

27. Prohibition of broadcast media or distribution service operation. The Authority shall by order in writing, giving reasons, prohibit any broadcast media or distribution service operator from:

(a) broadcasting or re-broadcasting or distributing any programme or advertisement if it is of the opinion that such particular programme or advertisement is against the ideology of Pakistan or is likely to create hatred among the people or is prejudicial to the maintenance of law and order or is likely to disturb public peace and tranquility or endangers national security or is pornographic, obscene or vulgar or is offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency; or

(b) engaging in any practice or act which amounts to abuse of media power by way of harming the legitimate interests of another licensee or willfully causing damage to any other person.

(Emphasis added)

The relevant provisions of Rules 8 and 10 of the Councils of Complaints Rules are also reproduced here for convenience of reference:

Rule 8. Filing of complaint and functions of the Councils:-

..

(4) A Council shall also take cognizance of such matters as referred to it by the Chairman or the Authority and render its opinion thereon.

(5) A Council may recommend to the Authority appropriate action of censure, fine upto the limit prescribed in section 29 of the Ordinance, seizure, suspension or revocation of licence against a broadcast media or distribution service provider or licensee for violation of the Ordinance, rules, regulation, code of conduct for programmes and advertisements or terms and conditions of licence.

(6) A Council shall keep the Authority informed on the feedback and public response to the contents quality and impact of the programmes and advertisements broadcast or distributed.

Rule 10. Procedure upon recommendation by a Council:- The Authority shall take into consideration the recommendations made by a Council in each matter and may approve the recommendations or disagree with the recommendations, while recording the reasons in writing for the same, and pass such order as deemed appropriate, or refer the matter back to the Council for reconsideration if so considered necessary in the opinion of the Authority.

(Emphasis added)

A plain reading of Section 26 of the PEMRA Ordinance read with Rules 8 and 10 of the Councils of Complaints Rules shows that the function of receiving and reviewing "complaints against any aspects of programmes" or "such matters as referred to it by the Chairman or the Authority" [PEMRA] and of rendering opinion on "such complaints" or "such matters" is assigned by the legislature to the Councils of Complaints, each of which consists of a chairperson and five members including at least two women, who all are citizens of eminence from the general public. The "opinion" of a Council of Complaints rendered under section 26(2) of the Ordinance is then placed before PEMRA, which after giving due consideration to the said opinion is to decide the matter in accordance with the parameters spelled out in Section 27(a) of the Ordinance. Likewise, in the case of any "recommendations" made by a Council of Complaints under section 26(5) of the PEMRA Ordinance, PEMRA may approve the recommendations or disagree with the same, while recording reasons in writing for the same, and pass such order as deem appropriate or refer the matter back to the Council concerned for reconsideration, under Rule 10 of the Councils of Complaints Rules.

13. Under Section 26(2) of the PEMRA Ordinance, the Councils of Complaint are empowered to receive and review complaints made by persons or organizations from the general public against "any aspects of programmes" and render their opinions on them. The expression "any aspects of programmes" is wide enough to include the violation of any provision of the PEMRA Ordinance, rules, regulations or code of conduct, in respect of programmes. It can, therefore, be hardly argued that the grounds provided for making an order prohibiting broadcast or rebroadcast of a programme in Section 27(a) of the PEMRA Ordinance do not fall within the expression "any aspects of programmes" used in Section 26(2). It has, however, been argued on behalf of PEMRA that the power of the Councils of Complaints and PEMRA to review the contents of a programme on the grounds mentioned in Section 27(a) is concurrent. We are not convinced with this argument. As discussed above the scope of regulatory framework under the PEMRA Ordinance is two tiered; comprising the public regulatory body (Councils of Complaints) and the governmental regulatory body (PEMRA). Further, if PEMRA had been considered suitable to make the initial review of the contents of programmes on the grounds mentioned in Section 27(a), then there would have been no plausible reason to restrict the power of PEMRA in respect of other grounds. Acceptance of this argument would negate the very justification for establishing the Councils of Complaints, the bodies comprising the members of the public i.e. "citizens of eminence". Alternatively, it has been argued that the power of PEMRA under Section 27(a) is to be exercised by PEMRA suo motu i.e. on its own, while the complaints from the general public are to be dealt with by the Councils of Complaints under Section 26(2). This argument has also not impressed us. In fact, it appears to be anomalous. For, it gives no plausible answer to the question as to how the matter will proceed if PEMRA takes a suo motu initiative of reviewing the contents of a programme and a complaint is also filed before a Council of Complaints for the same purpose; which of the proceedings would be carried on and which stopped, or would both the proceedings continue simultaneously. Such a state of affairs would lead to confusion and thus frustrate the legislative intent and object. Such an interpretation of the statute cannot therefore be encouraged.

14. Further, the apprehension of the learned counsel for PEMRA that if the power of PEMRA to act in such matters suo motu is not conceded, it would frustrate the role of PEMRA as a regulatory body, is also misconceived. There is no bar on PEMRA under the PEMRA Ordinance to take notice, either on its own (suo motu) or on the information received from any source, of the alleged contravention of any provision of the PEMRA Ordinance, rules, regulations or code of conduct in relation to the broadcasting of any programme or advertisement, and then to refer the said matter to a Council of Complaints for reviewing the same and rendering its opinion thereon in terms of Section 26 of the PEMRA Ordinance. It is worth noting that as per Rule 8(4) of the Councils of Complaints Rules, the Councils of Complaints are bound to take cognizance of any matter referred to them by the Chairman or PEMRA and to render their opinion thereon. Rules validly made to carry out the purposes of a statute are an integral part of that statute.[7] It is, therefore, also necessary to read them in conjunction with the statute to fully understand the operational scheme of any particular provision of the statute.

15. It has also been argued on behalf of PEMRA that the Councils of Complaints have no power under Section 26(5) to recommend an action of prohibiting the broadcast of any programme and can only recommend the action of censure or fine. As such, it has been argued, that Section 27(a) confers an independent power on PEMRA which is not dependent upon obtaining and considering the opinion of a Council of Complaints. We find that this argument has been made without appreciating the difference between the powers of the Councils of Complaints under subsection (2) and subsection (5) of Section 26 of the PEMRA Ordinance. The power of the Councils of Complaints under subsection (2), to receive and review "complaints against any aspects of programmes" and to render "opinion on such complaints", is a power distinct from its power under subsection (5) to recommend action of censure or fine, which is in addition to its power of rendering an opinion on any aspect of the programme complained of. Indeed, a Council of Complaints cannot recommend the action of prohibiting the broadcast or rebroadcast of any programme, and the appropriateness of taking such an action is to be decided by PEMRA by itself, but it can do so only after receiving or obtaining, as the case may be, and considering the opinion of the Council of Complaints concerned on the objectionable aspect of the programme as per Section 26(2) of the PEMRA Ordinance read with the Councils of Complaints Rules.

16. The attention of the Court was also invited to the proviso to Section 30(1)(b) of the PEMRA Ordinance, in support of the contention that the legislature has provided expressly where it intended PEMRA to act after obtaining and considering the opinion of a Council of Complaints, and that the absence of such a provision in Section 27(a) suggests that PEMRA is to act under Section 27(a) independent of any opinion of a Council of Complaints. This contention is based upon a reading of the various provisions of the PEMRA Ordinance in isolation of each other and upon their fragmented interpretation, which approach rarely leads to a correct understanding of the meaning and scope of a particular provision of law. This Court has, therefore, always preferred the approach of holistic interpretation to that of fragmented interpretation while interpreting any provision of the Constitution[8] or a statute[9]. By this approach, the courts seek to ascertain the overall intent and purpose of the law and, by considering how its individual provisions fit within its larger framework, attempt to harmonize their meaning and scope with each other. In making the said contention, it has not been noticed that even in Section 29(6), which empowers PEMRA to impose fine on a licensee who contravenes any of the provisions of the PEMRA Ordinance, or of the rules or regulations made thereunder, no provision like proviso to Section 30(1)(b) is provided for and despite this omission, no one has argued, and perhaps rightly so, that PEMRA can exercise its power to impose fine on a licensee for any such contravention in respect of any aspect of a programme or advertisement, without first obtaining the opinion of the Council of Complaints concerned. For, the provisions of Section 29(6) are to be read with the provisions of Section 26(5) and given effect accordingly.

17. It has also been argued on behalf of PEMRA that the Councils of Complaints have no power to receive and review complaints against any "advertisement" under Section 26(2), while PEMRA has such power under Section 27(a); therefore, the power of PEMRA under Section 27(a) is independent of the provisions of Section 26. It is true that the word "advertisement" is not mentioned in subsection (2) of Section 26 but it is found mentioned in subsection (5) thereof. The omission of this word in subsection (2) of Section 26 appears to be an accidental one, as it does not fit within the overall intent of the legislature manifested from reading the provisions of Section 26 as a whole. Needless to say that the ultimate object of the process of interpretation of a statute is to find out what the legislature must have intended and then to give effect to that intent of the legislature,[10] and in order to give effect to the manifest intent of the legislature, the courts can supply the inadvertent omission of the draftsman by reading the necessary words in the statute.[11] Subsection (5) of Section 26 clearly empowers the Councils of Complaints to make a recommendation to PEMRA for the action of censure or fine against a licensee for violation of the codes not only of programmes content but also of advertisements. The provisions of subsection (5) of Section 26 thus make the intent of the legislature abundantly clear that it intended to confer the power on the Councils of Complaints to receive and review complaints against any aspects of programmes or advertisements, which shall be so read in subsection (2) of Section 26, in order to give effect to that manifest intent of the legislature.

18. Lastly, the learned counsel for PEMRA contended that it cannot be possible to hold that the power of PEMRA under clause (a) of Section 27 is dependent on obtaining and considering the opinion of a Council of Complaint but its power under clause (b) of the same Section is an independent one. The question whether the power of PEMRA under clause (b) is or is not independent, does not arise in the circumstances of the present case; therefore, we do not consider it appropriate to take up and decide the same in vacuum as an academic question. However, in view of the discussion above, especially with regard to the legislative intent in establishing the Councils of Complaints under Section 26 of the PEMRA Ordinance for making review of "any aspects" of the programmes, we deem it necessary to state that if the power of PEMRA under clause (b) of Section 27 is to be exercised in respect of "any aspects" of a programme or advertisement, then it must be exercised after obtaining and considering the opinion of the Council of Complaint concerned under Section 26(2) of the PEMRA Ordinance.

19. From the above discussion it transpires that to regulate public fundamental rights of expression and information, the PEMRA Ordinance envisages a two tiered regulatory system. The media content has to be first viewed by the Council of Complaints, an independent public regulatory body and after obtaining its opinion, PEMRA, the government regulatory body, is to consider the opinion of the Council of Complaints and finally decide the matter. It is also worth taking note that under Section 13 of the PEMRA Ordinance, PEMRA allows delegation of its powers and functions to its Chairman or a member or to any member of its staff, or to an expert, consultant or adviser[12]. This delegation of the powers and functions of a 13-member authority to a single person also necessitates that the Councils of Complaints, comprising six members of eminence from the general public, must first examine the complaints. Even if suo motu notice is taken by PEMRA or its Chairman, as to "any aspects of programmes", the matter has to be first sent to a Council of Complaints for its opinion and after considering the said opinion, PEMRA or its Chairman, as the case may be, can take the final decision.

Selection and appointment of members of the Councils of Complaints

20. Selecting and appointing members of the public to regulate media content on the Councils of Complaints must, therefore, represent diverse interests and perspectives of the public while ensuring independence and impartiality. The Federal Government must establish: (i) clear criteria for the selection of public representatives, which might include a mix of expertise, professional backgrounds, demographic diversity and geographic representation; (ii) announce the opportunity to serve on the Councils through various channels, such as newspapers, websites, social media and community organizations. This will help attract a diverse pool of applicants; (iii) set up an application process that requires interested individuals to submit their credentials, relevant experience and a statement explaining their motivation for serving on the regulatory body. This information will be used to evaluate the suitability of each applicant; (iv) establish an independent selection committee composed of representatives from different sectors, e.g. media, academia, civil society, to review applications and recommend candidates. The committee should ensure a transparent and impartial selection process; and (v) provide the members, once appointed, with training and orientation on media regulation, ethics and relevant laws. This will help them make informed decisions and effectively contribute to the regulation of media content. The inclusion of public representatives in media regulation, in this manner, can contribute to greater transparency, diversity and public trust in the media ecosystem.

21. Having examined the contentions advanced on behalf of PEMRA and after reading the provisions of Sections 26 and 27 in conjunction with other relevant provisions of the PEMRA Ordinance and the Councils of Complaints Rules made thereunder, we are of the considered opinion that Section 27(a) of the PEMRA Ordinance is not an independent and self-governing provision; it rather requires for its applicability the opinion of a Council of Complaints regarding the objectionable aspect of a programme or advertisement in terms of Section 26(2) of the PEMRA Ordinance read with the Councils of Complaints Rules. The question is answered accordingly.

22. In view of the above answer to the question, we find that the High Court is correct in holding that PEMRA could not have bypassed the Councils of Complaints in making the prohibition order and has rightly set aside the prohibition order. However, the High Court should have also specified that the matter of making a review of the objectionable aspect of the drama serial was to be referred by PEMRA to the Council of Complaint concerned, and after receiving and considering the opinion of that Council, PEMRA could make an appropriate order. With the said clarification, we find nothing wrong in the impugned judgement. Therefore, we dismiss the petition and decline the leave to appeal.

Regulating content: what is "obscene", "vulgar" and "offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency"

23. It is important to understand on what standards the members of the Councils of Complaints will assess the media content. Every statute is in the public interest and must always align and flow with the text and spirit of the Constitution. Therefore, the constitutional values, fundamental rights and the principles of policy laid down under the Constitution enjoy a symbiotic relationship with any statutory framework including the one regulating media content i.e. Sections 20(c) and 27(a) of the PEMRA Ordinance, the PEMRA Rules 2009, the PEMRA (Content) Regulations 2012 and the Electronic Media Code of Conduct-2015. This statutory framework has to be read subject to the Constitution.

24. We wish to underline that the members of the Councils of Complaints while applying the constitutional and statutory standards must always view the media content through the lens of the constitutional value of tolerance. "Tolerance" is an essential preambular constitutional value that assumes more significance in the context of freedom of expression and right to information. It is a multifaceted concept and at its core, tolerance refers to the ability or willingness to accept and respect differences in opinions, beliefs, customs and practices among individuals or groups. This can include differences in race, religion, culture, gender, sexual orientation, political ideology and other aspects of human diversity. Tolerance promotes understanding, harmony and coexistence among people with diverse backgrounds, fostering open-mindedness and empathy. In a broader sense, it is an essential aspect of democratic societies, as it supports freedom of expression and the exchange of ideas, ultimately contributing to social cohesion and stability. It is important to note that tolerance does not necessarily imply agreement with or endorsement of the opinions or beliefs of others; rather, it is about respecting their right to hold those beliefs and coexist peacefully. The standard of tolerance in a society can be influenced by several factors. Societies with a tradition of valuing diversity and inclusivity tend to have higher levels of tolerance. In these societies, people are more likely to be accepting of differences and supportive of equal rights for all members of society. Societies that emphasize education and promote awareness of diverse cultures, religions and ways of life, tend to foster tolerance among their citizens. By understanding different perspectives and experiences, people are better equipped to appreciate and respect the diversity within their society. In some societies, tolerance is enshrined in the legal framework through anti-discrimination laws, human rights protections and equal opportunity policies. These measures help to create an environment in which tolerance is promoted and intolerance is discouraged. The standard of tolerance in a society is not static; it can change over time as a result of shifting cultural values, political climates and other factors. It is essential for the Councils of Complaints to promote tolerance and inclusivity, as this is crucial for fostering peace, understanding and social cohesion in an increasingly diverse and interconnected world.

25. It is also important to underline that freedom of expression is an effective and a powerful fundamental rights as it gives voice to other freedoms and rights i.e. freedom of thought, right to life, liberty and dignity. Freedom of expression helps actualize other fundamental rights, hence its prominence and importance is easily distinguished in the cluster of fundamental rights. However, while freedom of expression is a fundamental human right, it is not absolute and can be subject to certain limitations. These limitations are usually put in place to balance the rights of individuals with the broader interests of society, public order, and national security. Some common limitations on freedom of expression include: (i) laws against defamation (libel and slander), which are in place to protect individuals' reputations from false and damaging statements; (ii) laws against hate speech, which is a speech that incites violence, discrimination or hostility towards a particular individual or group based on attributes such as race, religion, ethnicity, gender or sexual orientation. Such laws aim to protect targeted groups from harm and promote social harmony; (iii) laws against obscenity and pornography to protect public morality and decency; (iv) laws to protect national security, public order or public safety. In times of emergency or crisis, governments may impose temporary limitations on freedom of expression to maintain public order, protect national security or prevent the spread of misinformation; and (v) laws to protect personal privacy. Such laws may restrict the disclosure of certain information, such as medical records or personal correspondence, to protect individuals' right to privacy. It is important to note that these limitations should be necessary, proportionate and clearly defined by law to avoid abuse or infringement on fundamental freedoms. In democratic societies, the courts often play a crucial role in interpreting and determining the appropriate balance between freedom of expression and these limitations.

26. The fundamental point that needs to be noted in this regard is that the exhibition of any kind of works of art and literature, which includes plays and dramas broadcasted on electronic media, is a part of the fundamental right to freedom of expression guaranteed by Article 19 of the Constitution[13] and right to information guaranteed under Article 19A of the Constitution. Freedom of expression and right to information are complementary fundamental rights and constitute essential foundations of a democratic society. It is applicable not only to information or ideas that are favourably received but also to those which offend, shock or disturb the State or any other sector of the population. Such are the demands of pluralism, tolerance and broadmindedness without which there is no democratic society.[14] Freedom of expression is so fundamental a human right that one can have no other right unless one has this right and can ask for his rights.[15] Freedom of expression thus begets all other freedoms, and the right to freedom of expression guarantees all other rights. It is because of the paramount importance of this right that it has been included in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR)[16] and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR)[17].

27. Crucial though freedom of expression and right to information are to an open and democratic society, these rights are not absolute. Some reasonable restrictions can be imposed on these right by law in the interest of any of the objectives mentioned in Articles 19 and 19A of the Constitution.[18] However, such restrictions must be "reasonable"[19] and any ambiguity as to the reasonableness of a restriction must be resolved in favour of protecting the exercise of the fundamental right rather than enforcing the restriction.[20] To ensure that they are not unnecessarily used to suppress the right, the clawback provisions of a law containing the restrictions on the right should be interpreted strictly and narrowly.[21] The courts are to be conscious that in a fledgling democracy like ours, there is all the more need to jealously guard the right to freedom of expression and right to information. Given the pivotal importance of these fundamental rights in a democratic society, it is not enough for the State and its instrumentalities (including PEMRA) simply to claim that the restriction relates to a legitimate objective. The reasonable restrictions must also be proportionate in that the legitimate objective cannot reasonably be achieved through a means less restrictive of the right protected by the Constitution. The reasonable restrictions should therefore not only be rationally connected to, but also be no more than necessary to accomplish, any of the legitimate objectives mentioned in Articles 19 and 19A of the Constitution.[22]

28. The restriction imposed by law, i.e. the PEMRA Ordinance, on the right to freedom of expression in relation to any programme including a play or drama, or any advertisement, broadcasted on the electronic media, on the ground of it being "obscene", "vulgar" or "offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency", is defended to achieve the legitimate objectives of securing the interest of "public decency" and "public morality" as mentioned in Article 19 of the Constitution. This restriction, however, should not be more than necessary in its scope and applicability, to accomplish the said objectives. Additionally, while it is accepted that what constitutes appropriate limitation on freedom of expression to protect morals does vary from society to society, it must be kept in mind that the concept of decency and morality is derived from many social, philosophical and religious traditions; therefore, the limitations for the purpose of protecting public decency and public morality must be based on principles not deriving exclusively from a single tradition,[23] and any such limitations must be understood in the light of universality of human rights and the principle of non-discrimination.[24]

29. The expressions "obscene", "vulgar" and "offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency" as used in Section 27(a) of the PEMRA Ordinance, are actually interconnected. Only that form of an expression can be said to be "obscene" or "vulgar" which is "offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency". Thus, the "commonly accepted standards of decency" in the community is the benchmark to determine whether or not a particular form of the expression of one's thought, idea or opinion in a play or drama is "obscene" or "vulgar". The important thing to understand is that the commonly accepted standard of decency in a community is a "standard of tolerance, not taste".[25] It is not what the people generally think is right for them to see but what they would not tolerate others being exposed to it on the basis of the degree of harm to "public decency" or "public morality" that may flow from such exposure. Further, the expression "commonly accepted standards of decency" must be understood to be the contemporary standards as the social mores and sensibilities change over time.

30. A work of art and literature, which includes a play or drama broadcasted on the electronic media, is usually considered a strong and effective medium to break the silence on social taboos; therefore, it is not to be labelled as "obscene" or "vulgar" readily without appraising the message it intends to convey.[26] In this perspective, one would need to see whether that message tends to promote or glorify the conduct or behavior which is offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency, or it tends to condemn or deprecate such conduct or behavior. Such a review is to be undertaken on an objective assessment of the play or drama as a whole, not on the basis of pick and choose of its parts from here and there. If the ultimate message of the play or drama under review passes the test of being not offensive to the commonly accepted standards of decency, the review of a particular part thereof which depiction is necessary to convey the message effectively must be lenient and tolerant. However, where the obscenity of such part is too pronounced to eschew, only the objectionable part should be prohibited from being broadcasted and directed to be suitably modified, and the broadcast or rebroadcast of the complete play or drama must not be prohibited. In view of the applicability of the principle of proportionality to restrictions on the rights guaranteed by the Constitution as expounded above, such an approach is necessary to protect the exercise of the fundamental right to freedom of expression and right to information to the maximum extent possible and to enforce the restrictions on the exercise of these rights to the minimum.

Civil Petition No.2414-L of 2015, decided on 5th April, 2023.

(Against the judgment of the Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 02.09.2015, passed in Writ Petition No.6669 of 2011).

(a) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 9 & 14---Parentage, determination of---Deoxyribonucleic acid test ('DNA test')---DNA test cannot be conducted without consent of the party in civil cases---Conducting of the DNA test of a person, without his consent, infringes his fundamental rights to liberty and privacy guaranteed by Articles 9 and 14 of the Constitution---Unauthorized collection of someone's DNA can be considered a violation of their privacy, autonomy and freedom---In a civil case, if the person upon whom the onus to prove his genetic relationship with another person lies, does not give consent for his DNA test, and thus withholds such evidence, the court may draw an adverse presumption against the claim of such person and presume that such evidence, if produced, would be unfavourable to him, as per Article 129(g) of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984---However such presumption was permissive but not obligatory.

In the present case the revisional court ordered the DNA test of two persons who are not privy to the proceedings of the suit either as a party or witness; who were not heard in the matter; and no law was referred under which such an order could have been made, without their consent. The High Court has maintained the order through the impugned judgement, again without providing any opportunity of hearing to them and without pointing out and relying upon any law under which the DNA test of a person can be ordered, without his consent, in a civil case. Conducting of the DNA test of a person, without his consent, infringes his fundamental rights to liberty and privacy guaranteed by Articles 9 and 14 of the Constitution.

Salman Akram Raja v. Government of Punjab 2013 SCMR 203 and Laila Qayyum v. Fawad Qayum PLD 2019 SC 449 ref.

The unauthorized collection of someone's DNA can be considered a violation of their privacy, autonomy and freedom because it involves the collection of sensitive personal information without their knowledge or consent. This intrusion can lead to potential misuse or unauthorized disclosure of the individual's genetic information, which may have significant implications for their personal and professional lives.

DNA testing has raised significant concerns regarding the right to liberty and privacy. As DNA contains a wealth of personal information about an individual, such as their genetic predispositions, familial relationships, and ethnicity, its collection, storage, and use have implications for privacy rights. DNA testing is sometimes used to establish paternity or other family relationships. While this can provide important information for legal and personal reasons, it can also raise privacy concerns when individuals are tested without their knowledge or consent.

Bodily autonomy is protected by both the fundamental rights; right to liberty and right to privacy. Individuals have the right to control their own bodies, make decisions about their healthcare, and refuse unwanted medical interventions. Unauthorized DNA collection could be seen as violating this principle, as it involves taking a sample of an individual's biological material without their permission.

DNA test can be ordered only either with the consent of the persons concerned or without their consent if permissible under a law. Certain provisions of criminal law do permit the DNA test of an accused person without his consent, but no civil law allows this test in civil cases without the consent of the person concerned.

In a civil case, if the person upon whom the onus to prove his genetic relationship with another person lies, does not give consent for his DNA test, and thus withholds such evidence, the court may draw an adverse presumption against the claim of such person and presume that such evidence, if produced, would be unfavourable to him, as per Article 129(g) of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984. But the court cannot draw such an adverse presumption if a person, who is not a party to the proceedings before it, does not give his consent and present himself for his DNA test. Further, the presumption under Article 129(g) of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984 being permissive, not obligatory, in nature, the court may or may not draw such presumption in the peculiar facts and circumstances of a case.

Muhammad Ramzan v. State PLD 2007 Kar. 1 ref.

In the present case, neither the petitioner nor the two persons alleged to be his real parents, have given consent for their DNA test. The petitioner preferred to prove his relationship with the deceased on the basis of other evidence produced by him. And while dismissing the application of the respondents for the DNA test of the petitioner, the trial court has observed that "the matter can easily be ascertained with the evidence available on record". The revisional court was thus not legally justified to order the DNA test of the petitioner as well as of the two persons alleged to be his real parents, without their consent. Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, order of the revisional court was declared to have been made without lawful authority and was of no legal effect, and consequentially the order of the trial court was restored.

(b) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 14---Right to privacy---Scope---Privacy, which is the ultimate expression of the sanctity of a person, represents the core of the human personality---Said right recognises the ability of each person to make choices and to take decisions on matters intimate and personal to him, and thus protects for him a zone of choice and self-determination.

The right to privacy involves the protection of individuals from unwarranted intrusion into their personal lives. It safeguards an individual's personal information, communications, family life, and other aspects of their private sphere from unjustified interference by the government, organizations, or other individuals. Privacy is crucial for maintaining personal autonomy, as it allows individuals to make choices and engage in activities without fear of surveillance, judgment, or unauthorized disclosure of their personal information. Though the right to privacy is an integral part of the right to life and liberty, it has been elevated to a separate and independent fundamental right by Article 14 of our Constitution. Privacy, which is the ultimate expression of the sanctity of a person, represents the core of the human personality. It recognises the ability of each person to make choices and to take decisions on matters intimate and personal to him, and thus protects for him a zone of choice and self-determination. The expression, "privacy of home", used in Article 14 is not restricted to the physical house of a person but covers the entire treasure of his personal life, as the privacy attaches to the person, not to the place where it is associated.

Mian Abdul Quddus, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Malik Mushtaq Ahmad, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 5th April, 2023.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against an order of the Lahore High Court, dated 02.09.2015, ("impugned order") whereby the High Court has dismissed his writ petition filed against an order of the revisional court, dated 02.06.2010. By the said order, the revisional court had reversed the order of the trial court, dated 03.02.2010, and allowed the application of the respondents for DNA test of one Taj Din and his wife Zubaida Bibi as well as of the petitioner to determine the parentage of the petitioner.

2. Briefly, the facts necessary to state for the decision of the present petition are that the respondents asserting themselves to be the legal heirs of the deceased Muhammad Hussain, being his nephews, instituted a suit to challenge a gift mutation, purportedly got sanctioned by Muhammad Hussain in favour of the petitioner, wherein the petitioner was mentioned as the son of Muhammad Hussain. The respondents asserted in the plaint that their uncle, Muhammad Hussain, died issueless and the petitioner was not his son, and that the petitioner had got sanctioned the gift mutation fraudulently.

3. The trial court framed issues for trial and recorded the evidence of both parties. After the close of the petitioner's evidence, the respondents made an application alleging therein that the petitioner was the son of one

Taj Din and his wife Zubaida Bibi, and prayed for the DNA test of the petitioner and of the said Taj Din and Zubaida Bibi, to rebut the evidence produced by the petitioner regarding his parentage. The trial court dismissed the said application by its order dated 03.02.2010 with the observation that "the matter can easily be ascertained with the evidence available on record". But the revisional court, on a revision petition of the respondents, allowed the said application by its order dated 02.06.2010, holding that the parentage of the petitioner "can be determined through DNA test of Muhammad Nawaz [petitioner], Taj Din as well as Zahida Begum". The petitioner challenged the order of the revisional court in the High Court by filing a writ petition, which was dismissed by the impugned order. Hence, he has filed the present petition for leave to appeal.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties, read the case law[1] cited by them and examined the record of the case.

5. At the very outset, it is astonishing that the revisional court ordered the DNA test of two persons, namely, Taj Din and his wife Zubaida Bibi, who are not privy to the proceedings of the suit either as a party or witness; who were not heard in the matter; and no law was referred under which such an order could have been made, without their consent. The High Court has maintained the order through the impugned judgement, again without providing any opportunity of hearing to them and without pointing out and relying upon any law under which the DNA test of a person can be ordered, without his consent, in a civil case. We find that both the revisional court and the High Court have failed to consider that the conducting of the DNA test of a person, without his consent, infringes his fundamental rights to liberty and privacy guaranteed by Articles 9 and 14 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ("Constitution").[2]

6. The right to privacy involves the protection of individuals from unwarranted intrusion into their personal lives. It safeguards an individual's personal information, communications, family life, and other aspects of their private sphere from unjustified interference by the government, organizations, or other individuals. Privacy is crucial for maintaining personal autonomy, as it allows individuals to make choices and engage in activities without fear of surveillance, judgment, or unauthorized disclosure of their personal information. Though the right to privacy is an integral part of the right to life and liberty[3], it has been elevated to a separate and independent fundamental right by Article 14 of our Constitution. Privacy, which is the ultimate expression of the sanctity of a person, represents the core of the human personality. It recognises the ability of each person to make choices and to take decisions on matters intimate and personal to him, and thus protects for him a zone of choice and self-determination. We may also underline that the expression, "privacy of home", used in Article 14 is not restricted to the physical house of a person but covers the entire treasure of his personal life, as the privacy attaches to the person, not to the place where it is associated.[4]

7. The unauthorized collection of someone's DNA can be considered a violation of their privacy, autonomy and freedom because it involves the collection of sensitive personal information without their knowledge or consent. This intrusion can lead to potential misuse or unauthorized disclosure of the individual's genetic information, which may have significant implications for their personal and professional lives.

8. The right to liberty guaranteed by Article 9 of the Constitution does not mean merely freedom from physical constraint but assures freedom to do what a person wants to or does not want to, unless a law enacted by the legislature in public interest provides for otherwise. The right to liberty thus includes freedom from all arbitrary or purposeless encroachments and restraints sought to be made by the State or its instrumentalities, on individual autonomy. The right to liberty is a fundamental human right that protects the freedom of individuals to live their lives without unreasonable or unjust restrictions from governments or other authorities. It is a core principle of democratic societies and is enshrined in various international human rights instruments, such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR). The right to liberty also protects individuals' privacy, including their personal information, communications, and family life, from unjustified intrusion or surveillance.

9. DNA testing has raised significant concerns regarding the right to liberty and privacy. As DNA contains a wealth of personal information about an individual, such as their genetic predispositions, familial relationships, and ethnicity, its collection, storage, and use have implications for privacy rights. DNA testing is sometimes used to establish paternity or other family relationships. While this can provide important information for legal and personal reasons, it can also raise privacy concerns when individuals are tested without their knowledge or consent.

10. Bodily autonomy is protected by both the fundamental rights; right to liberty and right to privacy. Individuals have the right to control their own bodies, make decisions about their healthcare, and refuse unwanted medical interventions. Unauthorized DNA collection could be seen as violating this principle, as it involves taking a sample of an individual's biological material without their permission.

11. These fundamental rights, are subject to law and can only be interfered with if so regulated by law made by the legislature. Further, as per the constitutional command of Article 4 of the Constitution, no action detrimental to the liberty, body or reputation of a person can be taken except in accordance with the law, nor can a person be compelled to do that which the law does not require him to do. This being the constitutional mandate, any executive or judicial act taken in respect of the rights to liberty, privacy, body or reputation of a person must be backed by some law. A court order for the DNA test of two persons as a means of identifying their genetic relationships interferes with their right to privacy and liberty. This test can be ordered only either with the consent of the persons concerned or without their consent if permissible under a law. We are aware of certain provisions of criminal law[5] which permit the DNA test of an accused person without his consent, but no civil law has been brought to our notice which allows this test in civil cases without the consent of the person concerned.

12. It may be pertinent to mention here that in a civil case, if the person upon whom the onus to prove his genetic relationship with another person lies, does not give consent for his DNA test, and thus withholds such evidence, the court may draw an adverse presumption against the claim of such person and presume that such evidence, if produced, would be unfavourable to him, as per Article 129(g) of the Qanun-e-Shahadat 1984. But the court cannot draw such an adverse presumption if a person, who is not a party to the proceedings before it, does not give his consent and present himself for his DNA test. Further, the presumption under Article 129(g) of the Qanun-e-Shahadat 1984 being permissive, not obligatory, in nature, the court may or may not draw such presumption in the peculiar facts and circumstances of a case.[6] In this regard, we may observe that the court should ordinarily draw and act upon such presumption only where the evidence produced by both parties is so evenly balanced that it cannot come to a conclusion on the basis thereof or where the party upon whom the onus lies has not produced any evidence. But where the evidence on record is sufficient to decide the matter either way on the standard of preponderance of probability applicable in civil cases, the court should generally prefer to decide the matter on the basis of that evidence rather than merely relying on presumption. It must also be remembered that civil proceedings are primarily adversarial and in such proceedings, it is for the party concerned to prove his assertion by adducing sufficient evidence of his choice. The court should not compel a party in a civil case to prove his assertion in the manner suggested by his opponent.[7]

13. In the present case, neither the petitioner nor the said Taj Din and his wife Zubaida Bibi have given consent for their DNA test. The petitioner has preferred to prove his relationship with the deceased Muhammad Hussain on the basis of other evidence produced by him. And while dismissing the application of the respondents for the DNA test of the petitioner, the trial court has observed that "the matter can easily be ascertained with the evidence available on record". The revisional court was thus not legally justified to order the DNA test of the petitioner as well as of the said Taj Din and his wife Zubaida Bibi, without their consent.

14. It is also important to note that Article 128 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984 declares that the fact that any person was born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and any man shall be conclusive proof that he is the legitimate child of that man, unless the husband had refused, or refuses, to own the child. In the present case, the deceased Muhammad Hussain is not alleged to have refused to own the petitioner as his son during his lifetime. Therefore, if the petitioner proves that the deceased Muhammad Hussain's wife, Rashidaan Bibi, was his mother and he was born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and the deceased Muhammad Hussain, this fact shall conclusively prove that he is the son of the deceased Muhammad Hussain and no evidence, including the evidence of DNA test, can be accepted to negate the statutory declaration made by Article 128 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984. Further, it is worth noting that the mutation under challenge is not that of the inheritance of the deceased Muhammad Hussain but rather of a gift allegedly made by the deceased Muhammad Hussain in favour of the petitioner. And as a valid gift can be made by a person of his property in favour of any person, whether the donee is his legal heir or not, the main issue in the present case is whether or not the deceased Muhammad Hussain made a valid gift in favour of the petitioner. The issue, whether the petitioner is the real or adopted son of the deceased Muhammad Hussain, would assume importance only when the petitioner fails to prove the validity of the challenged gift.

15. Given the legal position stated above as to the DNA test of a person in civil cases and the fact that neither the petitioner nor the said Taj Din and his wife Zubaida Bibi had given consent for their DNA test, we find that there was no jurisdictional error in the order passed by the trial court, which could have justified interference therewith by the revisional court under Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908. The revisional court had, in reversing the order of the trial court, acted without lawful authority and its order was thus of no legal effect. The High Court, therefore, should have exercised its constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution to so declare the order of the revisional court. But by dismissing the writ petition of the petitioner and maintaining the order of the revisional court, the High Court has committed a legal error, which requires correction by this Court. The present petition is therefore converted into an appeal and the same is allowed. The impugned judgment is set aside and the writ petition of the petitioner is accepted. The order of the revisional court is declared to have been made without lawful authority and is of no legal effect, and consequentially the order of the trial court is restored.

(b) Punjab Consumer Protection Act (II of 2005)---

----S. 30(1)(c)---Defective motor vehicle---Claim filed against manufacturer of vehicle before the Consumer Court---Expert evidence---Where the defects alleged are of such a nature that required expert inspection or probe, the onus to provide such expert evidence falls on the consumer who is alleging that the product is defective or faulty---Where such defects are alleged by the consumer, a Consumer Court, before deciding that a certain product is defective or faulty, must satisfy itself that sufficient expert evidence is available and could be relied upon to ascertain the defects so alleged instead of merely placing reliance on the statement of a consumer who may not be from the related field of expertise and therefore, not competent to address the technicalities forming part of the alleged defects, especially where the claim of the consumer is denied by the manufacturer---To this effect, Section 30(1)(c) of the Punjab Consumer Protection Act, 2005 allows the Consumer Court to invite expert evidence, if required, where the claim alleges that the products are defective and do not conform to the accepted industry standards.

In the present case despite alleging technical manufacturing defects in the vehicle, no expert evidence was led by respondent/claimant or invited by the Consumer Court under Section 30(1)(c) of the Punjab Consumer Protection Act, 2005('the Act') to prove that the said defects alleged by respondent actually existed. Instead, the Court relied only on the evidence of respondent, who was not an expert in the automotive industry, and firstly deposed in his cross-examination that the alleged defects were based on his general observations regarding the vehicle and then stated that there were no manufacturing defects in the vehicle. It is apparent that at least two of the defects alleged by the claimant, i.e. with regards to the hatch box and the colour of the stereo, were of such nature that could not have been ascertained without expert inspection. Where the defects alleged are of such a nature that required expert inspection or probe, the onus to provide such expert evidence falls on the consumer who is alleging that the product is defective or faulty. Where such defects are alleged by the consumer, a Consumer Court, before deciding that a certain product is defective or faulty, must satisfy itself that sufficient expert evidence is available and could be relied upon to ascertain the defects so alleged instead of merely placing reliance on the statement of a consumer who may not be from the related field of expertise and therefore, not competent to address the technicalities forming part of the alleged defects, especially where the claim of the consumer is denied by the manufacturer. To this effect, Section 30(1)(c) of the Act allows the Consumer Court to invite expert evidence, if required, where the claim alleges that the products are defective and do not conform to the accepted industry standards. Additionally, Section 30(1)(d) of the Act provides that where the dispute cannot be determined without proper analysis or test of the products, the Consumer Court shall obtain a sample of the products from the claimant and refer the same to a laboratory to make analysis or test with a view to find out if such products suffer from any defect, which may be paid for by the claimant, or if the test or analysis supports the version of the claimant, then to be paid by the defendant, as stipulated under Section 30(1)(e) of the Act. In the present case, the onus to prove the alleged defects was on respondent, which he failed to do. No expert evidence was produced by respondent or invited by the Consumer Court to ascertain whether the alleged defects existed in the vehicle. Therefore, respondent failed to prove that the vehicle was defective in construction or composition as required under Section 5 or that it was otherwise defective for the purposes of any other provision of the Act. Appeal was allowed and claim filed by respondent was dismissed.

(d) Punjab Consumer Protection Act (II of 2005)---

----S. 28(4)---Settlement of claims---Limitation period, commencement of---Defective motor vehicle---Claim filed against manufacturer of vehicle before the Consumer Court --Limitation period of 30 days provided under Section 28(4) of the Punjab Consumer Protection Act, 2005 runs from date of knowledge of the defect or fault in the product or service---During this time, the consumer has to first send a written notice to the manufacturer or service provider under Section 28(1) of the Act and provide 15 days to respond to the same, as required under Section 28(2) of the Act.

Even though no limitation period is provided for sending a written notice under Section 28(1) of the Punjab Consumer Protection Act, 2005 ('the Act') it is apparent that Section 28(4) of the Act in unequivocal terms stipulates and clarifies that a claim with regards to a defective or faulty product or service, or contravention of the provisions of the Act by the manufacturer or service provider, has to be filed within 30 days of the arising of the cause of action. The cause of action, in such circumstances where a product or service is faulty, therefore, arises the moment the consumer obtains knowledge that the product or service is defective or faulty.

The limitation period in consumer protection claims, involving defective products, becomes more significant especially because claimants should bring a claim as quickly as possible due to the potential depreciation of the product in question, the characteristics of which may differ according to the specific product. Delaying the filing of a claim can lead to challenges in establishing the product's condition at the time of purchase and linking any defects to the consumer's use or handling. As time passes, the product may deteriorate, be repaired or modified, or become unavailable, making it more difficult to prove the defects or assess its original condition. Bringing a claim promptly helps ensure that the product's condition and any defects can be accurately evaluated and documented. This can also contribute to a stronger case by providing evidence that directly supports the consumer's claim. Additionally, timely action demonstrates the consumer's diligence and commitment to addressing the issue.

When the consumer obtains knowledge of the defect or fault in the product or the service, the 30-day limitation period stipulated under Section 28(4) of the Act commences. It is during this period that the consumer has to first put his grievance before the manufacturer or service provider, seeking rectification of the defect or fault in the product or service, or damages, and provide 15 days to the manufacturer or service provider to remedy the same, as required under Section 28(2). It is only after the manufacturer or the service provider responds to the written notice, or where he fails to respond within the stipulated 15-day period, that the consumer can file a claim before the Consumer Court if the cause of action still subsists. The consumer can stillfile a claim before the Consumer Court by giving sufficient cause for filing the claim beyond 30 days which will be examined by the Consumer Court, as per the provisos to Section 28(4) of the Act.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts of the case are that respondent No. 1 purchased a motor vehicle, a Suzuki Swift (model 2010), from the appellant, through respondent No.2 who is a car dealer, for Rs. 1,049,000/-. The said vehicle was delivered to respondent No.1 on 15.05.2010. However, on discovering certain defects in the vehicle, respondent No. 1 issued legal notices to the appellant and respondent No.2 on 10.08.2010 and thereafter filed a claim under Section 25 of the Punjab Consumer Protection Act, 2005 ("Act") before the District Consumer Protection Court, Lahore ("Consumer Court") on 22.09.2010. The claim was allowed on 19.02.2014 to the effect that respondent No.1 was granted refund of the price of the vehicle in the sum of Rs. 1,049,000/- along with compensation/ litigation costs of Rs.50,000/-, to be paid by the appellant within 30 days, failing which an additional penalty of Rs. 1,000/- per day was imposed till the realization of the said amount. The appellant filed an appeal under Section 33 of the Act before the High Court, which was subsequently dismissed through the impugned judgment dated 20.02.2017. Leave to appeal was granted by this Court vide order dated 25.05.2017.

2. While arguing the matter, the learned counsel for the appellant submits that the sole evidence placed on the record by respondent No.1/claimant was his own statement/ affidavit. He submits that it is for the first time that in the said affidavit, the three defects i.e. one relating to the hatch box not being properly fitted, second relating to the repainting of the colour of the stereo installed in the car and the third pertaining to the alignment of vehicle while driving, were identified by the claimant, which were earlier missing in the claim/ pleadings. He further submits that in his cross-examination, the claimant has stated that the defects were based on his general observations and he has also admitted that there is no manufacturing defect in the vehicle. He also submits that the evidence produced by the appellant was through its Assistant Manager Sales, namely Imran Hassan (RW-2), and there is no admission on the part of said representative of the appellant regarding the defects alleged by the claimant. As far as the statement of RW-1, Malik Ijaz-ul-Haq, who is supposedly the manager of respondent No.2/car dealer Adil Ashraf Motors, is concerned, he submits that in his cross-examination RW-1 admits that he has not been authorized by the said car dealer to depose before the Consumer Court. The learned counsel also submits that the said car dealership is neither the agent nor the authorized dealership of the appellant, and therefore, any statement or admission made by RW-1 is not binding upon the appellant.

3. The learned counsel for the appellant has also pointed out that the instant case is barred by limitation as the car was delivered to the claimant on 15.05.2010, thereafter a legal notice was issued to the appellant on 10.08.2010 while the claim was filed on 22.09.2010, which was barred by 23 days even if the period of limitation is worked out from the date of the notice. He submits that no application for condonation of such delay was moved by the claimant as per the provisos to Section 28(4) of the Act. He further submits that the claim is devoid of any specific allegation regarding the defects in terms of Sections 5, 6, 7 and 8 of the Act. He further contends that neither any expert was called by the Consumer Court nor any application was given by the claimant to call an expert to examine the vehicle to ascertain the defects as envisaged in Section 30(1)(c) of the Act. On the other hand, the learned counsel for respondent No.1 has controverted the above contentions and has supported the impugned judgment.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have perused the record with their able assistance. At the very outset, we have noticed that the claim filed by respondent No. 1/claimant does not make any specific mention of the alleged defects in the vehicle. Even the legal notices sent by respondent No.1 make no mention of any specific defects. It was only in his affidavit, submitted as his examination-in-chief, that he mentioned the above defects. It is settled law that a litigant is required to plead all material facts that are necessary to seek the relief claimed and then to prove the same through evidence. Parties are required to lead evidence in consonance with their pleadings and no evidence can be led or looked into in support of a fact or a plea that has not been taken in the pleadings.[1] Notably, respondent No.1 also admitted in his cross-examination that he had not described the specific defects in the vehicle in his pleadings/ claim. Therefore, the defects alleged in the affidavit of respondent No.1 were beyond the scope of the pleadings and, hence, could not have been considered.

5. Furthermore, even otherwise, despite alleging such technical manufacturing defects in the vehicle, no expert evidence was led by respondent No.1 or invited by the Consumer Court under Section 30(1)(c) of the Act to prove that the said defects alleged by respondent No.1 actually existed. Instead, the Court relied only on the evidence of respondent No. 1, who is not an expert in the automotive industry, and firstly deposed in his cross-examination that the alleged defects were based on his general observations regarding the vehicle and then stated that there were no manufacturing defects in the vehicle. It is apparent that at least two of the defects alleged by the claimant, i.e. with regards to the hatch box and the colour of the stereo, were of such nature that could not have been ascertained without expert inspection.[2] Where the defects alleged are of such a nature that require expert inspection or probe, the onus to provide such expert evidence falls on the consumer who is alleging that the product is defective or faulty. Where such defects are alleged by the consumer, a Consumer Court, before deciding that a certain product is defective or faulty, must satisfy itself that sufficient expert evidence is available and can be relied upon to ascertain the defects so alleged instead of merely placing reliance on the statement of a consumer who may not be from the related field of expertise and therefore, not competent to address the technicalities forming part of the alleged defects, especially where the claim of the consumer is denied by the manufacturer. To this effect, Section 30(1)(c) of the Act allows the Consumer Court to invite expert evidence, if required, where the claim alleges that the products are defective and do not conform to the accepted industry standards. Additionally, Section 30(1)(d) of the Act provides that where the dispute cannot be determined without proper analysis or test of the products, the Consumer Court shall obtain a sample of the products from the claimant and refer the same to a laboratory to make analysis or test with a view to find out if such products suffer from any defect, which may be paid for by the claimant, or if the test or analysis supports the version of the claimant, then to be paid by the defendant, as stipulated under Section 30(1)(e) of the Act. In the instant case, the onus to prove the alleged defects was on respondent No.1, which he failed to do. No expert evidence was produced by respondent No.1 or invited by the Consumer Court to ascertain whether the alleged defects existed in the vehicle. Therefore, respondent No.1 failed to prove that the vehicle was defective in construction or composition as required under Section 5 or that it was otherwise defective for the purposes of any other provision of the Act.

6. We have noted that even when respondent No.1 had failed to provide any proof regarding the defects alleged in his affidavit, the only reason that the Courts below decided the matter in favour of respondent No.1 was the supposed admission by the appellant in para Nos. 6 and 7 in its written reply to the claim and an admission by RW-1, the witness of respondent No.2, with regards to the vehicle being defective. A perusal of the written reply by the appellant indicates that no admission with regards to alleged defects was made by the appellant and the appellant has specifically denied the assertions made by respondent No.1 in paras. Nos. 6 and 7 in the claim wherein he had alleged that the appellant's technical staff had admitted the defects in the vehicle. Instead, the appellant stated that it had dispatched its team to facilitate respondent No.1 as per company policy, however, respondent No.1 did not cooperate with them. As far as the admission by RW-1 is concerned, we have noted that the said witness did not produce any authority letter authorizing RW-1 to depose on behalf of respondent No.2, and therefore, failed to provide any proof as to his authority to depose on its behalf. Even otherwise, he specifically admitted in his cross-examination that respondent No.2 is not a dealer of the appellant, hence, it is apparent that respondent No.2 was not the appellant's agent and any admission made vis- -vis the obligations of the appellant holds no legal value. It is settled law that the admission of a codefendant is not binding on the other and therefore, the claim could not have been decided against the appellant based upon the admission made by RW-1.[3] Notably, he too in his admission failed to mention any specific defect in the vehicle to which he was admitting. Therefore, despite respondent No. 1's failure to prove any defect in the vehicle for the purposes of his claim under the Act, the judgments of the Courts below, premised mainly on the above admission by RW-1, are not sustainable.

7. Coming to the question of limitation raised in the instant matter, we have observed that there are contradictory judgments of the Lahore High Court with regards to the commencement of the limitation period of 30 days provided under Section 28(4) of the Act for filing a claim; in Muhammad Ashraf[4] it has been held that the cause of action accrues in favour of the claimant the moment the goods or services turn out to be defective and/or in violation of the provisions of the Act, whereas, in Deltex[5] it has been held that the terminus quo for counting the limitation period is the date when the time of 15 days expires after receiving the written notice under Section 28(1) of the Act. Therefore, we deem it appropriate to first settle this question of law.

8. Section 28 of the Act provides for settlement of claims and also stipulates the limitation period for filing of a claim by a consumer. For reference, Section 28 of the Act is reproduced as under:

28. Settlement of Claims.---(1) A consumer who has suffered damage, or Authority in other cases, shall, by written notice, call upon a manufacturer or provider of services that a product or service is defective or faulty, or the conduct of the manufacturer or service provider is in contravention of the provisions of this Act and he should remedy the defects or give damages where the consumer has suffered damage, or cease to contravene the provisions of this Act.

(2) The manufacturer or service provider shall, within fifteen days of the receipt of the notice, reply thereto.

(3) No claim shall be entertained by a Consumer Court unless the consumer or the Authority has given notice under sub-section (1) and provides proof that the notice was duly delivered but the manufacturer or service provider has not responded thereto.

(4) A claim by the consumer or the Authority shall be filed within thirty days of the arising of the cause of action:

Provided that the Consumer Court, having jurisdiction to hear the claim, may allow a claim to be filed after thirty days within such time as it may allow if it is satisfied that there was sufficient cause for not filing the complaint within the specified period:

Provided further that such extension shall not be allowed beyond a period of sixty days from the expiry of the warranty or guarantee period specified by the manufacturer or service provider and if no period is specified one year from the date of purchase of the products or providing of services.

A perusal of the above provision indicates that before filing a claim before the Consumer Court, the consumer or the Authority[6] has to issue a written notice under Section 28(1) to the manufacturer or service provider notifying him of the defect in the product or service or if the conduct of the manufacturer or service provider is in contravention of the provisions of the Act, seeking that he should remedy the defect or give damages, or cease to contravene the provisions of the Act. Under Section 28(2), the manufacturer or service provider is to respond to the notice within 15 days. Section 28(3) provides that no claim shall be entertained by the Consumer Court unless the consumer provides proof of sending and delivery of the said notice. Section 28(4) stipulates that a claim shall be filed within 30 days of the arising of the cause of action. The provisos to Section 28(4) provide that the Consumer Court may extend this limitation period beyond the period of 30 days if it is satisfied that there was sufficient cause for not filing the complaint within the specified period, however, this extension shall not be beyond a period of 60 days from the expiry of the warranty or guarantee period specified by the manufacturer or service provider, or if no period is specified, then one year from the date of purchase of the product or provision of service.

9. In our view, even though no limitation period is provided for sending a written notice under Section 28(1) of the Act, it is apparent that Section 28(4) of the Act in unequivocal terms stipulates and clarifies that a claim with regards to a defective or faulty product or service, or contravention of the provisions of the Act by the manufacturer or service provider, has to be filed within 30 days of the arising of the cause of action. The cause of action, in such circumstances where a product or service is faulty, therefore, arises the moment the consumer obtains knowledge that the product or service is defective or faulty. If the provision is interpreted to mean that despite having knowledge of the defect in the product or the service, the consumer can issue a written notice under Section 28(1) of the Act at any time the consumer desires, pursuant to which, after 15 days of such receipt of the notice, the cause of action for the purposes of the 30-day limitation period would ensue, this would make Section 28(4) of the Act as redundant, and a claim under the Act can be filed at any time without any limitation period subsequent to obtaining knowledge of the defect or fault in the product or the service.

10. The limitation period in such consumer protection claims becomes more significant especially because claimants should bring a claim as quickly as possible due to the potential depreciation of the product in question, the characteristics of which may differ according to the specific product. Delaying the filing of a claim can lead to challenges in establishing the product's condition at the time of purchase and linking any defects to the consumer's use or handling. As time passes, the product may deteriorate, be repaired or modified, or become unavailable, making it more difficult to prove the defects or assess its original condition. Bringing a claim promptly helps ensure that the product's condition and any defects can be accurately evaluated and documented. This can also contribute to a stronger case by providing evidence that directly supports the consumer's claim. Additionally, timely action demonstrates the consumer's diligence and commitment to addressing the issue.

11. The legislative intent behind Sections 28(1), (2) and (3) of the Act is to grant rights to both the consumer and the manufacturer or service provider to address the defects or faults in the product or service before the matter proceeds to litigation. It ensures that the consumer firstly brings the issue to the attention of the manufacturer or the service provider through a written notice, so that the defect or fault is rectified and they fulfill their obligation to the consumer before the consumer has to file a claim before the Consumer Court, so that there is a possibility of settling the claim of the consumer without the need to initiate litigation, which would be more cumbersome for a simple consumer. At the same time, it also affords the manufacturer or the service provider the right to respond to the notice within a specified timeframe, enabling them to address any legitimate concerns, protect their reputation, and mitigate potential costs that may be incurred under the Act. In effect, it provides for a mechanism to settle the dispute before initiation of litigation and the same cannot be construed as giving a fresh cause of action wherefrom the 30-day limitation provided under Section 28(4) would commence. Therefore, when the consumer obtains knowledge of the defect or fault in the product or the service, the 30-day limitation period stipulated under Section 28(4) of the Act commences. It is during this period that the consumer has to first put his grievance before the manufacturer or service provider, seeking rectification of the defect or fault in the product or service, or damages, and provide 15 days to the manufacturer or service provider to remedy the same, as required under Section 28(2). It is only after the manufacturer or the service provider responds to the written notice, or where he fails to respond within the stipulated 15-day period, that the consumer can file a claim before the Consumer Court if the cause of action still subsists. The consumer can still file a claim before the Consumer Court by giving sufficient cause for filing the claim beyond 30 days which will be examined by the Consumer Court, as per the provisos to Section 28(4) of the Act.

12. In the instant case, the vehicle was delivered to respondent No.1 on 15.05.2010 and respondent No.1 has admitted in his cross-examination that he obtained knowledge of the defect in the hatch box on 17.05.2010 and the other defects were also apparent in his view. Thereafter, a written notice was sent to the appellant on 10.08.2010, which was responded to by the appellant on 18.08.2010, whereafter, the claim was filed on 22.09.2010. Therefore, despite having knowledge of the defects on 17.05.2010, respondent No.1 had sent the written notice to the appellant after almost 03 months on 10.08.2010, during which the 30-day limitation period provided under Section 28(4) had expired. Respondent No.1 had also not applied for extension of time by showing sufficient cause for the extension of the limitation period under the provisos of Section 28(4) of the Act. It is settled law that that limitation is not a mere technicality, and where the limitation period has expired, a right accrues in favour of the other side which cannot be lightly brushed aside.[7] The claim filed by respondent No.1, therefore, was also barred by limitation.

13. In view of the above, the instant appeal is allowed. The impugned judgment is set aside and the claim filed by respondent No.1 stands dismissed.

MWA/P-11/SC Appeal allowed.

(b) Competition Act (XIX of 2010)---

----Ss. 31, 37 & 38 & Preamble---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 18---Freedom of trade and business---Scope---Free and fair competition in trade and business is an intrinsic part of the fundamental right to freedom of trade and business guaranteed by Article 18 of the Constitution.

The preamble to the Competition Act, 2010 (the Act') sets out the objective of the Act and provides for free competition in all spheres of commercial and economic activity to enhance economic efficiency and to protect consumers from anti-competitive forces. The Act aims to address the situations that tend to lessen, distort or eliminate competition, such as (i) actions constituting an abuse of market dominance, (ii) competition restricting agreements, and (iii) deceptive marketing practices. Free and fair competition is a fundamental concept in economics that involves providing a level playing field for all market participants. It is based on the principles of a free market where businesses compete on equal terms, and consumers make decisions based on price, quality, and preference. Free and fair competition is competition that is based on quality, price, and service rather than unfair practices. Predatory pricing, competitor bashing, and the abuse of monopoly-type powers, for example, are unfair practices. When competitors can compete freely on a 'level playing field,' economies are more likely to thrive. On the other hand, unfair competition is using illegal, deceptive, and fraudulent selling practices that harm consumers or other businesses to gain a competitive advantage in the market. However, free and fair competition is encouraged and enforced through legislation and regulation to promote economic efficiency, innovation, and consumer welfare. Violations of fair competition principles can lead to legal consequences, penalties, or other corrective measures. Competition is not only healthy for businesses, but pivotal for innovation. It sparks creativity and nurtures transformation and progress.

Article 18 of the Constitution provides that every citizen shall have the right to conduct any lawful trade or business and clause (b) of the proviso to the said Article states that nothing in this Article shall prevent the regulation of trade, commerce or industry in the interest of free competition. Therefore, regulation in the interest of free competition actualizes the fundamental freedom guaranteed under the Constitution to conduct lawful trade and business. As free and fair competition ensures freedom of trade, commerce and industry and therefore forms an intrinsic part of the fundamental right to freedom of trade and business guaranteed under Article 18 of the Constitution. The preambular objective of the Act is to ensure "free competition" in all spheres of commercial and economic activity to enhance economic efficiency and to protect consumers from "anticompetitive behaviour". The "free competition" envisaged by the Constitution and aimed to be ensured by the Act, therefore, means a competition through fair means, not by any means. To ensure fair competition in trade and business, Section 10 of the Act has prohibited certain marketing practices by categorising them as deceptive marketing practices, and Sections 31, 37 and 38 of the Act have empowered the Commission to take appropriate actions to prevent those practices.

(c) Competition Act (XIX of 2010)---

----S. 10(2)(d)---Deceptive marketing practices---Expression 'fraudulent use'in Section 10(2)(d) of the Competition Act, 2010---Meaning and scope stated.

The expression 'fraudulent use' in Section 10(2)(d) of the Competition Act, 2010 ('the Act')has made the intention of the defendant (user of another's trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging) relevant for holding him liable under the Act. However, as the Act has not defined the term 'fraudulent' and thus not given any particular meaning to it, the expression 'fraudulent use' in Section 10(2)(d) is to be understood in its ordinary sense of 'intentional and dishonest use' in contrast to a mere 'mistaken or negligent' use. Needless to mention that 'intention', being a state of mind, can rarely be proved through direct evidence, and in most cases, it is to be inferred from the surrounding facts and circumstances of the case.

The word "use" in Section 10(2)(d) of the Act includes the use of trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging which is confusingly similar (also referred to as deceptively similar) to that of another undertaking.

(d) Competition Act (XIX of 2010)---

----S. 10(2)(d)---Deceptive marketing practices---Criterion for determining confusing similarity in the use of another's product labeling and packaging stated.

Criterion to determine the confusing similarity is well-established in our jurisdiction in passing-off and trademark-infringement actions, which also applies in deciding disputes under Sections 10(2)(d) of the Competition Act, 2010. It is whether an unwary ordinary purchaser is likely to be confused or deceived into purchasing the article of the defendant carrying the contentious mark, name or get-up as that of the plaintiff (complainant). The criterion is thus that of such an ordinary purchaser 'who knows more or less the peculiar characteristics of the article he wants; he has in his mind's eye a general idea of the appearance of the article and he looks at the article not closely, but sufficiently to take its general appearance'. It is not that of a careful purchaser neither is it of a 'moron in a hurry'. The purchaser is unwary in the sense that he does not when he buys the article 'look carefully to see what the particular mark or name upon it is' but not that he does not even know the peculiar characteristic of the article he wants to buy. An ordinary customer is not supposed to precisely remember every detail of the mark, name or get-up of the article he intends to buy. The standard is therefore also described as that of a purchaser of average intelligence and imperfect recollection. Further, to determine the confusing or deceptive similarity from the point of view of an unwary ordinary purchaser, the leading characteristics, not the minute details, of the two marks, names or get-ups (labelling or packaging) are to be considered. As the competing marks, names or get-ups when placed side by side, may exhibit many differences yet the overall impression left by their leading characteristics on the mind of an unwary purchaser may be the same. An unwary ordinary purchaser acquainted with the one and not having the two side by side for comparison, may well be confused or deceived by the overall impression of the second, into a belief that he is buying the article which bears the same mark, name or get-up as that with which he is acquainted.

----S. 10(2)(d)---Deceptive marketing practices, action for---Pre-requisites---Registration of trademark (or for that matter, registration of firm name, or product labelling or packaging) is not necessary for the applicability of the provisions of Section 10(2)(d) of the Competition Act, 2010---Neither the common law action of passing-off requires such registration nor does the language of Section 10(2)(d) of the Act provide for any such requirement.

(f) Trade Marks Ordinance (XIX of 2001)---

----S. 46---Trademark-infringement---Passing-off, tort of---Difference between the objectives of a passing-off action and a trademark-infringement action---Passing-off action essentially aims to protect 'property in goods' on account of its reputation (goodwill), not the trademark thereof, whereas the trademark-infringement action is meant to protect 'property of trademark' as a trademark itself is a property.

(g) Competition Act (XIX of 2010)---

----S. 10(2)(d)---Deceptive marketing practices---Using a competitors product labelling and packaging in a deceptive marketing manner---In the present case, to determine the liability of appellant-company under Section 10(2)(d) of the Competition Act, 2010 ('the Act'), the Competition Commission ('the Commission') specifically mentioned the criterion applied, that is, whether 'the striking similar packaging and labelling is misleading enough to cause confusion in the minds of the average consumer of a commodity, with the end result of an unjust advantage accruing to the copycat at the expense of and to the detriment of the complainant'---Commission further observed that it would examine the appearance of the product packaging and labelling 'as a whole which may collectively include visually confusing resemblances in elements of colour scheme, layout style, design, images, labels, font usages etc., instead of each individual similarity in isolation'---By applying this criterion the Commission recorded the findings of facts and held appellant-company liable for the contravention of Section 10(2)(d) of the Act---Competition Appellate Tribunal ('the Tribunal'), affirmed the criterion applied and the findings of facts recorded by the Commission---Supreme Court observed that in determining the liability of appellant-company under Section 10(2)(d) of the Act, the criterion applied by the Commission and affirmed by the Tribunal was legally correct, and the Commission and the Tribunal had correctly decided that the facts of the case fell within the prohibition of Section 10(1) read with Section 10(2)(d) of the Act---Appeals were dismissed.

(h) Competition Act (XIX of 2010)---

----Ss. 10(2)(a) & 10(2)(d)---Deceptive marketing practices---Meaning of distribution of false or misleading information in Section 10(2)(a) of the Competition Act, 2010 stated.

Section 10(2)(a) of the Competition Act, 2010 ('the Act') has codified the common law on injurious falsehood claims. In common law, 'misrepresentation' is a common ground in both the actions for passing-off and injurious falsehood, but it is understood and applied in a different sense in each action. The general difference between misrepresentation in a passing-off action and misrepresentation in an injurious falsehood action is that in the former action, the misrepresentation is made by the defendant concerning his own goods while in the latter it is made concerning the goods of the plaintiff. In a passing-off action, the defendant by misrepresentation primarily attempts to take the undue benefit of the reputation (goodwill) of the goods of the plaintiff though he thereby also causes damage to the business of the plaintiff indirectly; but in an injurious falsehood action, the direct and express purpose of the misrepresentation is to cause damage to the reputation (goodwill) of the goods of the plaintiff though it may also impliedly or indirectly benefit the business of the defendant.

Christopher Wadlow, The Law of Passing-Off (5th Ed. 2016) p 16.; White v. Mellin [1895] A.C. 154 HL; Kaye v. Robertson [1991] F.S.R. 62 CA and Schulke and Mayr v. Alkapharm [1999] F.S.R. 161 ref.

There is nothing in the language of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act that suggests that the legislature has changed therein the meaning of 'misrepresentation' as understood in common law action for injurious falsehood. On the contrary, the use of the words 'false or misleading information' in Section 10(2)(a) shows that the legislature has intended to retain the same meaning; for in common law both the terms 'false' and 'misleading' are used in injurious falsehood actions for a representation to be taken as 'misrepresentation'. Further, the use of the phrase 'harming the business interests of another undertaking' in Section 10(2)(a) of the Act, and not in Section 10(2)(d), denotes that the said phrase has been used in the sense of causing express and direct harm to the business interests of the complainant undertaking as it is understood in an injurious falsehood action. And the non-mentioning of this phrase in Section 10(2)(d) of the Act shows that the damage caused to the business interests of the complainant undertaking is taken to be an implied and indirect effect of the fraudulent use of its trademark, etc., as it is understood in a passing-off action, which the legislature has considered unnecessary to be expressly mentioned.

(i) Competition Act (XIX of 2010)---

----Ss. 12 & 43---Competition Commission of Pakistan ('the Commission')---Appeal filed by the Commission before the Supreme Court against an order passed by the Competition Appellate Tribunal ('the Tribunal')---Maintainability---Adjudicatory body (such as the Commission) deciding a matter in exercise of its quasi-judicial powers between two rival parties under a law cannot be treated as an aggrieved person if its decision is set aside or modified by a higher forum under that law or by a court of competent jurisdiction and such body thus does not have locus standi to challenge the decision of that higher forum or court.

Although the role of the Competition Commission ('the Commission') under the Competition Act, 2010 ('the Act') is primarily of a regulatory body, it is quasijudicial as well under some provisions of the Act. The provisions of clauses (a) and (d) of Section 10(2) of the Act, envisage the quasi-judicial role of the Commission while deciding upon the divergent claims and allegations of two competing undertakings. And, an adjudicatory body deciding a matter in exercise of its quasi-judicial powers between two rival parties under a law cannot be treated as an aggrieved person if its decision is set aside or modified by a higher forum under that law or by a court of competent jurisdiction and such body thus does not have locus standi to challenge the decision of that higher forum or court. The appeal filed by the Commission in the present case against the decision of the Tribunal setting aside partially its quasi-judicial order is therefore not maintainable. Appeals were dismissed.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---'No man is allowed to pass off his goods as the goods of another person; no manufacturer of goods is allowed to represent to the public that the goods which he is selling are the goods of a rival manufacturer.'[1] This is one of the basic principles of business morality, honesty and fair dealing that forbid deceptive marketing practices and unfair competition in commercial and economic activities. In this backdrop, the present case requires the interpretation of the phrase 'fraudulent use of another's trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging' as used in clause (d) of Section 10(2) of the Competition Act 2010 ("Act"). Further, clause (a) of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act, which includes 'distribution of false or misleading information that is capable of harming the business interests of another undertaking' in the prohibited deceptive marketing practices, also needs some elaboration.

2. Briefly, the facts of the case are that K&N's Foods (Pvt) Limited ("K&N's Foods") filed a complaint against A. Rahim Foods (Pvt) Limited ("Rahim Foods") with the Competition Commission of Pakistan ("Commission"), asserting involvement of Rahim Foods in deceptive marketing practices in contravention of the provisions of Section 10 of the Act. In the complaint, K&N's Foods mainly alleged that Rahim Foods was copying the K&N's Foods product labelling and packaging for the sale of its several frozen and processed meat products. It also alleged copying of its trademark term "Combo Wings" by Rahim Foods for one of the products, that is, the chicken wings. Two officers of the Commission, under the delegated powers, conducted an enquiry into the matter complained of. After collecting and considering the respective evidence of the parties, the enquiry officers submitted their report confirming the allegations and proposing the initiation of proceedings against Rahim Foods under Section 30 of the Act.

3. Upon this report of the enquiry officers, the Commission initiated proceedings against Rahim Foods under Section 30 of the Act. The Commission gave notice to Rahim Foods stating therein the gist of the enquiry officers' findings of facts that appeared to the Commission to be contraventions of the provisions of Section 10 of the Act and asking it to show cause as to why an appropriate order under Section 31(c) of the Act may not be passed against it and a penalty under Section 38 of the Act may not be imposed upon it. Rahim Foods was also provided with an opportunity to place before the Commission the facts and material in support of its contentions. Rahim Foods filed its reply to the said notice disputing the findings of the enquiry officers, together with the material in support of its contentions, and also filed an application for rejection of the enquiry report. The Commission identified the following issues for deciding the matter:

(A) Whether the Respondent's [Rahim Foods'] product labelling and packaging is misleadingly similar to that of the Complainant's K&N Packing and if so, whether such confusing resemblance is deceptive and amounts to "fraudulent use of another's ..product labelling or packaging" within the meaning and scope of Section 10(2)(d) and hence a contravention of Section 10(1) of the Act;

(B) Whether the use of the term/mark 'Combo Wings' by the Respondent [Rahim Foods], in the absence of authorization from the Complainant [K&N's Foods], amounts to ""fraudulent use of another's trademark..." within the meaning and scope of Section 10(2)(d) and hence a contravention of Section 10(1) of the Act;

(C) Whether the Respondent's [Rahim Foods'] product labelling and packaging and/or use of the mark 'Combo Wings' amount to the distribution of false or misleading information that is capable of harming the business interest" of the Complainant [K&N's Foods] within the meaning and scope of Section 10(2)(a) and hence a contravention of Section 10(1) of the Act.

On considering the material collected by the enquiry officers as well as the material produced by the parties before it and the relevant provisions of the Act, the Commission decided all three issues in the affirmative by its order dated 08.02.2016. In its discussion on issue (B), the Commission observed that as the trademark "Combo Wings" had not been registered at the time of lodging of the complaint by K&N's Foods, its use by Rahim Foods did not constitute a contravention of Section 10(1) read with Section 10(2)(d) of the Act, but decided this issue in affirmative with the following observations:

32. However, the use of the term "Combo Wings" by the Respondent [Rahim Foods], when seen in conjunction with the overall layout and design of the copied and duplicated K&N Packaging, demonstrates the Respondent's intention to pass off its products as those of the Complainant [K&N's Foods]. To such extent only, and as part of its overall scheme of deception, the use of the term in question falls within the scope of Section 10(2)(d) of the Act, as fraudulent use of another's product labelling....

Pursuant to its findings on the said issues, the Commission imposed the following penalties on Rahim Foods for contravention of the provisions of Section 10, under Section 38 of the Act:

i. Pakistani Rupees 10 Million (PKR 10,000,000) for the contraven-tion of Section 10(1) read with Section 10(2)(a) of the Act;

ii. Pakistani Rupees 10 Million (PKR 10,000,000) for the contravention of Section 10(1) read with Section 10(2)(d) of the Act;

In the exercise of its powers under Section 31(c) of the Act, the Commission further directed Rahim Foods to cease the use of the contentious copycat packaging for its frozen and processed meat products and to ensure that the products were repackaged in a manner that was distinct in its overall layout so as to be easily distinguishable from that of the K&N's Foods products.

4. Rahim Foods appealed the order of the Commission before the Competition Appellate Tribunal ("Tribunal"), under Section 42 of the Act. On reappraisal of the material available on the record of the case, the Tribunal affirmed the findings of the Commission that Rahim Foods had used the K&N's Foods product labelling and packaging in a deceptive marketing manner, and held that Section 10(2)(d) of the Act empowers the Commission to provide protection to the manufactures against practices of copycat packaging and parasitic copying. The Tribunal observed that Section 10(2)(d) confers jurisdiction on the Commission regarding fraudulent use of another's trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging 'whether the same is registered or not'. The Tribunal, however, held that as Rahim Foods had not distributed any false or misleading information regarding the K&N's Foods products, the penalty imposed by the Commission upon Rahim Foods for the contravention of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act was not warranted. With these reasons, the Tribunal allowed the appeal of Rahim Foods partially and set aside the order of the Commission with regard to imposing a penalty for the contravention of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act, while maintaining the order of the Commission to the extent of imposing a penalty for the convention of Section 10(2)(d), by its judgment dated 25.01.2017 ("impugned judgment"). Hence, Rahim Foods and the Commission filed these appeals against the impugned judgment under Section 44 of the Act.

5. We have heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties, examined the record of the case and read the case law cited by them.

Non-interference by Supreme Court with concurrent findings of facts

6. In the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction in civil cases, this Court as a third or fourth forum, as the case may be, does not interfere with the concurrent findings of the courts below on the issues of facts unless it is shown that such findings are on the face of it against the evidence available on the record of the case and is so patently improbable or perverse that no prudent person could have reasonably arrived at it on the basis of that evidence.[2] A mere possibility of forming a different view on the reappraisal of the evidence is not a sufficient ground to interfere with such findings. It is underlined that the appellate jurisdiction conferred on this Court under Section 44 of the Act is also of a civil nature, hence the same rules apply. No such grave infirmity has been pointed out in the findings of the Commission on the facts of the case, which were also concurred by the Tribunal. We are therefore not inclined to interfere with the factual matrix of the case and will decide the questions of law as to the applicability of the provisions of clauses (a) and (d) of Section 10(2) of the Act to those findings of facts, which are as follows:

i. that the K&N's Foods product packaging had been introduced in 2003 in Pakistan, prior to that of Rahim Foods, and had acquired a reputation and distinctiveness in the relevant market of frozen and processed meat products in Pakistan;

ii. that the K&N's Foods product packaging and the trademark of one of its products "Combo Wings" were not registered when the complaint was made under the Act in 2012;

iii. that Rahim Foods launched its products of frozen and processed meat products in 2008, with product labelling and packaging that was clearly distinguishable from that of the K&N's Foods products;

iv. that Rahim Foods re-designed its products' packaging and copied the K&N's Foods product packaging in 2012 for marketing its products with such a confusing similarity that ordinary consumers would be deceived as to the origin of the two products at the time of exercising a choice of purchase;

v. that Rahim Foods was aware of it that its re-designed packaging would cause deceptive confusion in the mind of the consumers; and

vi. that by so doing Rahim Foods stood to gain an undue benefit and unfair advantage at the expense of K&N's Foods, which it would not otherwise have obtained.

The Commission and the Tribunal both have also concurred on the point that the above facts fall within the prohibition of Section 10(1) read with Section 10(2)(d) though they have differed on the applicability of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act. They have also expressed divergent views on the requirement of registration of a trademark to attract the provisions of Section 10(2)(d) for "fraudulent use of another's trademark".

7. In order to examine the legality of these views, we examine the meaning and scope of clauses (a) and (d) of Section 10(2). The provisions whereof are reproduced hereunder for ready reference:

10. Deceptive marketing practices.--(1) No undertaking shall enter into deceptive marketing practices.

(2) The deceptive marketing practices shall be deemed to have been resorted to or continued if an undertaking resorts to ---

(a) the distribution of false or misleading information that is capable of harming the business interests of another undertaking;

(b) the distribution of false or misleading information to consumers, including the distribution of information lacking a reasonable basis, related to the price, character, method or place of production, properties, suitability for use, or quality of goods;

(c) false or misleading comparison of goods in the process of advertising; or

(d) fraudulent use of another's trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging.

A bare reading of the above provisions of Section 10 of the Act shows that subsection (1) of Section 10 prohibits the undertakings[3] from entering into deceptive marketing practices and subsection (2) thereof has defined the acts that constitute such practices.

Constitutional underpinning

8. Before embarking upon the discussion on the meaning and scope of clauses (a) and (d) of Section 10(2) of the Act, it would be expedient to understand the legislative policy in promulgating the Act. The preamble to the Act sets out the objective of the Act and provides for free competition in all spheres of commercial and economic activity to enhance economic efficiency and to protect consumers from anti-competitive forces. The Act aims to address the situations that tend to lessen, distort or eliminate competition, such as (i) actions constituting an abuse of market dominance, (ii) competition restricting agreements, and (iii) deceptive marketing practices. Free and Fair competition is a fundamental concept in economics that involves providing a level playing field for all market participants. It is based on the principles of a free market where businesses compete on equal terms, and consumers make decisions based on price, quality, and preference. Free and fair competition is competition that is based on quality, price, and service rather than unfair practices. Predatory pricing, competitor bashing, and the abuse of monopoly-type powers, for example, are unfair practices. When competitors can compete freely on a 'level playing field,' economies are more likely to thrive. On the other hand, unfair competition is using illegal, deceptive, and fraudulent selling practices that harm consumers or other businesses to gain a competitive advantage in the market. However, free and fair competition is encouraged and enforced through legislation and regulation to promote economic efficiency, innovation, and consumer welfare. Violations of fair competition principles can lead to legal consequences, penalties, or other corrective measures. Competition is not only healthy for businesses, but pivotal for innovation. It sparks creativity and nurtures transformation and progress.

9. Article 18 of the Constitution of Pakistan provides that every citizen shall have the right to conduct any lawful trade or business and clause (b) of the proviso to the said Article states that nothing in this Article shall prevent the regulation of trade, commerce or industry in the interest of free competition. Therefore, regulation in the interest of free competition actualizes the fundamental freedom guaranteed under the Constitution to conduct lawful trade and business. As free and fair competition ensures freedom of trade, commerce and industry and therefore forms an intrinsic part of the fundamental right to freedom of trade and business guaranteed under Article 18 of the Constitution. The preambular objective of the Act is to ensure "free competition" in all spheres of commercial and economic activity to enhance economic efficiency and to protect consumers from "anti-competitive behaviour". The "free competition" envisaged by the Constitution and aimed to be ensured by the Act, therefore, means a competition through fair means, not by any means. To ensure fair competition in trade and business, Section 10 of the Act has prohibited certain marketing practices by categorising them as deceptive marketing practices, and Sections 31, 37 and 38 of the Act have empowered the Commission to take appropriate actions to prevent those practices. With this constitutional underpinning in the background, we now proceed to examine the meaning and scope of clauses (a) and (d) of Section 10(2) of the Act.

Codification of common law on injurious falsehood and passing-off actions

10. The acts of distributing false or misleading information that is capable of harming the business interests of another undertaking and fraudulent use of another's trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging, which constitute deceptive marketing practices as per clauses (a) and (d) of Section 10(2), were in themselves wrongful acts even before the promulgation of the Act. The common law actions of 'injurious falsehood' and 'passing-off' were the well-known remedies for these wrongs. The Act has codified the common law on these two actions in clauses (a) and (d) of Section 10(2) and entrusted the adjudication of the same to the specialised forums - the Commission and the Tribunal. The main objective of codifying common law is to create a coherent and clear system of laws that is readily accessible and understandable to the public. Codification adds consistency, accessibility, clarity, uniformity and predictability. Any such codification may or may not amend or modify the common law. It is, therefore, useful to examine and point out whether the codification of the common law actions of 'injurious falsehood' and 'passing-off' in clauses (a) and (d) of Section 10(2) of the Act, respectively, have undergone any changes.

Changes made in common law actions of injurious falsehood and passing-off

11. Codification of common law on "injurious falsehood" action under Section 10(2)(a) and "passing-off action" under Section 10(2)(d) of the Act are concerned, we note that there are some changes in the constituent ingredients thereof. A common law action on injurious falsehood (which is also named as slander of title, slander of goods, trade libel or malicious falsehood) requires the proof of 'malice' in addition to 'misrepresentation' and 'damage' for holding the defendant liable. The provisions of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act do not mention this requirement. Conversely, the 'malice' of the defendant which is not required to be proved in a common law action for passing-off, has been made relevant in the provisions of Section 10(2)(d) of the Act by using therein the expression 'fraudulent use'. Goodwill, misrepresentation and damage are the three essential elements of a passing-off action under common law, which are usually referred to as its 'classic trinity', and the liability for passing-off under common law is not affected by the defendant's state of mind.[4] The expression 'fraudulent use' in Section 10(2)(d) has made the intention of the defendant (user of another's trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging) also relevant for holding him liable under the Act. However, as the Act has not defined the term 'fraudulent' and thus not given any particular meaning to it, the expression 'fraudulent use' in Section 10(2)(d) is to be understood in its ordinary sense of 'intentional and dishonest use' in contrast to a mere 'mistaken or negligent' use. Needless to mention that 'intention', being a state of mind, can rarely be proved through direct evidence, and in most cases, it is to be inferred from the surrounding facts and circumstances of the case. It appears that in the present case the Commission, while relying upon one of its previous orders,[5] has referred to this legal position by using the expression subjective intent and objective manifestation of intent.

Meaning of the word 'use' in Section 10(2)(d) of the Act

12. The word 'use' in the phrase of Section 10(2)(d), that is, 'fraudulent use of another's trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging', also requires elaboration: whether it only relates to the use of the same trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging, or it includes the use of the similar trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging and whether it covers the 'parasitic copying' of another's trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging. Since Section 10(2)(d) of the Act has codified the common law on passing-off action, we need to see how the use of another's trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging is understood and applied in such common law action and whether the language of Section 10(2)(d) suggest any change.

13. In this regard, it is notable that though the common law of passing-off action and the statutory law of infringement of registered trademarks deal in different ways with deceptive marketing practices, their basic principle is common. It is that 'a trader may not sell his goods under false pretences, either by deceptively passing them off as the goods of another trader so as to take unfair advantage of his reputation in his goods, or by using a trade sign the same, or confusingly similar to, a registered trade mark.'[6] The misrepresentation alleged in a passing-off action is therefore also judged on the same or confusingly similar standard as it is done in a trademark-infringement action.[7] Further, the criterion to determine the confusing similarity (also referred to as deceptively similar), which is described hereinafter, is also common in both these actions.[8]

14. As 'nobody has any right to represent his goods as the goods of somebody else',[9] it is unlawful for a trader to pass off his goods as the goods of another by using the same or confusingly similar mark, name, or get-up. In a passing-off action, 'the point to be decided', as said by Lord Parker,[10] 'is whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the use by the defendant in connection with the goods of the mark, name, or get-up in question impliedly represents such goods to be the goods of the plaintiff'. There is nothing in the language of Section 10(2)(d) of the Act that the meaning of the word use has been restricted therein to the use of the same trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging. We, therefore, hold that the word "use" in Section 10(2)(d) of the Act includes the use of trademark, firm name, or product labelling or packaging which is confusingly similar (also referred to as deceptively similar) to that of another undertaking.

Criterion for determining confusing similarity

15. So far as the criterion to determine the confusing similarity is concerned, the same is well-established in our jurisdiction in passing-off and trademark-infringement actions, which also applies in deciding disputes under Section 10(2)(d) of the Act. It is whether an unwary ordinary purchaser is likely to be confused or deceived into purchasing the article of the defendant carrying the contentious mark, name or get-up as that of the plaintiff (complainant).[11] The criterion is thus that of such an ordinary purchaser 'who knows more or less the peculiar characteristics of the article he wants; he has in his mind's eye a general idea of the appearance of the article and he looks at the article not closely, but sufficiently to take its general appearance'[12]. It is not that of a careful purchaser neither is it of a 'moron in a hurry'[13]. The purchaser is unwary in the sense that he does not when he buys the article 'look carefully to see what the particular mark or name upon it is'[14] but not that he does not even know the peculiar characteristic of the article he wants to buy. An ordinary customer is not supposed to precisely remember every detail of the mark, name or get-up of the article he intends to buy. The standard is therefore also described as that of a purchaser of average intelligence and imperfect recollection.[15] Further, to determine the confusing or deceptive similarity from the point of view of an unwary ordinary purchaser, the leading characteristics, not the minute details, of the two marks, names or get-ups (labelling or packaging) are to be considered.[16] As the competing marks, names or get-ups when placed side by side, may exhibit many differences yet the overall impression left by their leading characteristics on the mind of an unwary purchaser may be the same. An unwary ordinary purchaser acquainted with the one and not having the two side by side for comparison, may well be confused or deceived by the overall impression of the second, into a belief that he is buying the article which bears the same mark, name or get-up as that with which he is acquainted.

Registration of trademark, etc, is not necessary for Section 10(2)(d)

16. The question, whether registration of trademark (or for that matter, registration of firm name, or product labelling or packaging) is necessary for the applicability of the provisions of Section 10(2)(d) of the Act, is not difficult, as neither the common law action of passing-off requires such registration nor does the language of Section 10(2)(d) provide for any such requirement. The statutory law and common law stand together on this point. We, therefore, endorse the view of the Tribunal on this point. One must remember, in this regard, the difference between the objectives of a passing-off action and a trademark-infringement action. A passing-off action essentially aims to protect 'property in goods' on account of its reputation (goodwill), not the trademark thereof, whereas the trademark-infringement action is meant to protect 'property of trademark' as a trademark itself is a property.[17]

17. In the present case, to determine the liability of Rahim Foods under Section 10(2)(d) of the Act, the Commission specifically mentioned the criterion applied,[18] that is, whether 'the striking similar packaging and labelling is misleading enough to cause confusion in the minds of the average consumer of a commodity, with the end result of an unjust advantage accruing to the copycat at the expense of and to the detriment of the complainant'. The Commission further observed[19] that it would examine the appearance of the product packaging and labelling 'as a whole which may collectively include visually confusing resemblances in elements of colour scheme, layout style, design, images, labels, font usages etc., instead of each individual similarity in isolation'. By applying this criterion the Commission recorded the findings of facts and held Rahim Foods liable for the contravention of Section 10(2)(d) of the Act. The Tribunal affirmed the criterion applied and the findings of facts recorded by the Commission. Given the meaning and scope of the provisions of Section 10(2)(d) of the Act expounded above, we find that in determining the liability of Rahim Foods under Section 10(2)(d) of the Act, the criterion applied by the Commission and affirmed by the Tribunal was legally correct. And the Commission and the Tribunal have correctly decided that the facts of the case fall within the prohibition of Section 10(1) read with Section 10(2)(d) of the Act.

18. We may mention here that the terms 'parasitic copying' or 'copycat packaging', used by the Commission and the Tribunal in their orders refer to the 'confusing or deceptive similarity' of the product packaging and labelling. 'Copycat packaging', as mentioned by the Tribunal in its order quoting from an academic source,[20] 'is the practice of designing the packaging of a product in a way that gives it the general look and feel of a competing, well-known brand (typically the market leader) ... The risk posed by copycat packaging is consumer confusion, and consequentially, distortion of their commercial behaviour'. The use of these terms by the Commission and the Tribunal, therefore, does not amount to mentioning and applying any other standard for determining the liability of Rahim Foods under Section 10(2)(d) of the Act.

Meaning of distribution of false or misleading information in Section 10(2)(a)

19. Next, we take up the point on which the Commission and the Tribunal have differed, that is, the applicability of the provisions of clause (a) of Section 10(2) of the Act, to the facts of the present case. As per the said clause, the distribution of false or misleading information that is capable of harming the business interests of another undertaking is also a deceptive marketing practice. The Commission opined that though the distribution of false or misleading information may take place in numerous forms, the parasitic copycat packaging which causes deceptive confusion to the consumers also amounts to the distribution of misleading information capable of harming the business interest of another undertaking within the meaning of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act, in addition to being culpable under Section 10(2)(d) of the Act. The Commission observed that a contravention of Section 10(2)(d) will almost in every case lead to a consequent contravention of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act unless there exist exceptional circumstances in a particular case that warrant otherwise. On the other hand, the Tribunal held that as Rahim Foods had not distributed any false or misleading information regarding the K&N's Foods products, the contravention of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act was not made out.

20. To decide which view, whether of the Commission or of the Tribunal, is correct, we again have to look at the position of common law on the injurious falsehood claims; for Section 10(2)(a) of the Act has, as mentioned above, codified the common law on such claims. In common law, 'misrepresentation' is a common ground in both the actions for passing-off and injurious falsehood, but it is understood and applied in a different sense in each action. The general difference between misrepresentation in a passing-off action and misrepresentation in an injurious falsehood action is that in the former action, the misrepresentation is made by the defendant concerning his own goods while in the latter it is made concerning the goods of the plaintiff. In a passing-off action, the defendant by misrepresentation primarily attempts to take the undue benefit of the reputation (goodwill) of the goods of the plaintiff though he thereby also causes damage to the business of the plaintiff indirectly; but in an injurious falsehood action, the direct and express purpose of the misrepresentation is to cause damage to the reputation (goodwill) of the goods of the plaintiff though it may also impliedly or indirectly benefit the business of the defendant.[21]

21. There is nothing in the language of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act that suggests that the legislature has changed therein the meaning of 'misrepresentation' as understood in common law action for injurious falsehood. On the contrary, the use of the words 'false or misleading information' in Section 10(2)(a) shows that the legislature has intended to retain the same meaning; for in common law both the terms 'false'[22] and 'misleading'[23] are used in injurious falsehood actions for a representation to be taken as 'misrepresentation'. Further, the use of the phrase 'harming the business interests of another undertaking' in Section 10(2)(a) of the Act, and not in Section 10(2)(d), denotes that the said phrase has been used in the sense of causing express and direct harm to the business interests of the complainant undertaking as it is understood in an injurious falsehood action. And the non-mentioning of this phrase in Section 10(2)(d) of the Act shows that the damage caused to the business interests of the complainant undertaking is taken to be an implied and indirect effect of the fraudulent use of its trademark, etc., as it is understood in a passing-off action, which the legislature has considered unnecessary to be expressly mentioned.

22. In the present case, Rahim Foods made 'misrepresentation' concerning its own products by fraudulent use of the K&N's Foods products labelling and packaging primarily to take advantage of the reputation (goodwill) of the products of K&N's Foods, not concerning the products of K&N's Foods to cause the express and direct harm to the business interests of K&N's Foods. Therefore, we find that the view of the Tribunal is legally correct on the non-applicability of the provisions of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act to the facts of the present case.

No locus standi of an adjudicatory body to contest for upholding its quasi-judicial decision

23. It may also be pertinent to mention here that K&N's Foods, which may have been aggrieved of the decision of the Tribunal on the point of non-applicability of the provisions of Section 10(2)(a) of the Act, has not impugned the decision of the Tribunal by preferring an appeal to this Court, and it is the Commission that has challenged the decision of the Tribunal on that point by filing the appeal. In this regard, we may observe that though the role of the Commission under the Act is primarily of a regulatory body, it is quasi-judicial as well under some provisions of the Act. The provisions of clauses (a) and (d) of Section 10(2) of the Act,[24] in our view, envisage the quasi-judicial role of the Commission while deciding upon the divergent claims and allegations of two competing undertakings. And, as held by this Court in Wafaqi Mohtasib case,[25] an adjudicatory body deciding a matter in exercise of its quasi-judicial powers between two rival parties under a law cannot be treated as an aggrieved person if its decision is set aside or modified by a higher forum under that law or by a court of competent jurisdiction and such body thus does not have locus standi to challenge the decision of that higher forum or court. The appeal filed by the Commission in the present case against the decision of the Tribunal setting aside partially its quasi-judicial order is therefore not maintainable.

24. For the above reasons, these appeals are found meritless and are therefore dismissed.

MWA/A-22/SC Appeals dismissed.

Constitution Petitions Nos. 14 to 17 of 2023, decided on 26th May, 2023.

(Declaring Notification dated 19.05.2023 (Regarding constitution of an inquiry Commission to probe into the veracity of alleged Audio Leaks) as ultra vires to the Constitution of Pakistan, 1973).

Pakistan Commissions of Inquiry Act (IX of 2017)---

----S. 3---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 184(3)---Constitutional petitions challenging formation of an Inquiry Commission comprising of Senior Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court and two Chief Justices of the High Courts---Permission of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court---Whenever a sitting Judge was intended to be made a member of a Commission, the permission of the Chief Justice (of the Supreme Court) first had to be sought---Since such power was peculiar to the said office, the incumbent for the time being of the same could neither divest himself nor be divested by the Federal Government from discharging the constitutional duty---Said constitutional principle would apply even in regard to the Chief Justices of the High Courts being made members of a Commission---Prima facie, therefore, the very constitution of the Commission in the present case was cast in doubt.

The petitioner's challenge was to Notification No.SRO.596(I)/ 2023 dated 19.05.2023 (impugned notification) was issued by the Federal Government for appointment of an Inquiry Commission (Commission) in exercise of its power under Section 3 of the Pakistan Commissions of the Inquiry Act, 2017 comprising Senior Puisne Judge Supreme Court, and Chief Justices of High Court of Balochistan and Islamabad High Court. The terms of reference (TORs) of the Commission, inter alia, were to determine whether certain alleged audios leaked on 16-02-2023 and thereafter subsequently broadcast on the electronic media, involving alleged conversations between persons connected to or including Judges of the superior Courts, constituted material whereby public trust and confidence in the credibility, uprightness, impartiality and independence of the superior judiciary was eroded.

It was an accepted and settled constitutional principle, acted upon several times in the constitution of Commissions whenever a sitting Judge was intended to be made a member thereof, that the permission of the Chief Justice (of the Supreme Court) had first to be sought. Since this power was peculiar to the said office, the incumbent for the time being of the same could neither divest himself nor be divested by the Federal Government from discharging the constitutional duty. Inasmuch as the Federal Government appeared to have acted unilaterally in the present matter, a constitutional principle of the highest importance had been, prima facie, breached.

In the present matter even though the other two members of the Commission were Chief Justices of respective High Courts, the subject matter of the reference transcended any particular High Court and involved at the very least a sitting Judge of the Supreme Court and a Chief Justice of a third High Court. Therefore, keeping in mind the settled principles of federalism, prima facie, the aforementioned constitutional principle would apply even in regard to the other two members of the Commission and therefore, the permission of the Chief Justice (of the Supreme Court) was required for their appointment. Prima facie, therefore, the very constitution of the Commission was cast in doubt.

Supreme Court directed that till the next date of hearing, the operation of the impugned notification No.SRO.596(I)/2023 dated 19-05-2023 issued by the Federal Government was suspended as was the order dated 22-05-2023 made by the Commission and in consequence thereof proceedings of the Commission were stayed.

Date of hearing: 26th May, 2023.

ORDER

UMAR ATA BANDIAL, C.J.---We have heard Shoaib Shaheen, Advocate Supreme Court learned counsel for the petitioner at length and have also heard the brief submissions in response by Mr. Mansoor Usman Awan, the learned Attorney General for Pakistan. The petitioner's challenge is to Notification No.SRO.596(I)/2023 dated 19.05.2023 (impugned notification) issued by the Federal Government for appointment of an Inquiry Commission (Commission) in exercise of its power under Section 3 of the Pakistan Commissions of the Inquiry Act, 2017 comprising Justice Qazi Faez Isa, Hon'ble Senior Puisne Judge Supreme Court of Pakistan, Mr. Justice Naeem Akhtar Afghan, Chief Justice High Court of Balochistan and Mr. Justice Aamer Farooq, Chief Justice Islamabad High Court. The terms of reference (TORs) of the Commission, inter alia, are to determine whether certain alleged audios leaked on 16.02.2023 and thereafter subsequently broadcast on the electronic media, involving alleged conversations between persons connected to or including Judges of the superior Courts, constitute material whereby public trust and confidence in the credibility, uprightness, impartiality and independence of the superior judiciary is eroded.

2. The essence of the submissions made by Mr. Shoaib Shaheen, Advocate Supreme Court, learned counsel for the petitioners are as follows:

i) The impugned notification violates fundamental rights by breaching the principle of separation of powers on the basis of which the constitutional framework of our country is established. The Executive cannot transgress into the area of the judicial function. While Article 209 of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 (Constitution) enables the President of Pakistan (acting on advice i.e. the Executive branch) to present a Reference in respect of any alleged misconduct by a Judge of the superior Courts, the determination and all matters and aspects relating thereto whether directly or indirectly are exclusively vested in the judicial branch, as embodied in the constitutional body known as the Supreme Judicial Council (SJC). Thus, the constitutional principle of trichotomy of powers has placed these functions in mutually exclusive zones i.e. the two branches of the Executive and the Judiciary. However, in appointing senior sitting Judges as the Commission of Inquiry to investigate and enquire upon the matters which are the subject matter of the TORs of the Commission, prima facie, the principle of separation of powers has been breached. The Federal Government, in what tentatively appears to be a complete misdirection of law, has thus trenched upon a constitutional domain exclusive to the Judiciary and demarcated exclusively for the latter under Article 209 ibid.

ii) The TORs for the Commission are specified in the impugned notification in sub-paras (iii) to (ix) of paragraph-6, being the questions upon which the Commission is to render its determination. These questions include in paragraph-6(v) the determination whether any disciplinary proceedings are attracted by virtue of the matters under inquiry. Keeping in view paragraph-6 (viii) which concerns the genuineness and the correctness of the alleged audios leaked, it appears, prima facie, that paragraph-6(v) is addressing judicial misconduct in veiled terms. This function is reserved by Article 209 of the Constitution to be performed solely by the Judiciary through the SJC. In this way, the TORs of the Commission appear to extend its jurisdiction into an area falling within the domain of the SJC at the instance of the Executive which is an arrangement that is, prima facie, unconstitutional and void.

iii) A perusal of paragraph-6(i) and (ii) of the TORs of the Commission setting out the subject matter of enquiry by the Commission, prima facie, overlaps or at the very least appears to fall within the penumbra of the constitutional jurisdiction vesting in the SJC under Article 209 of the Constitution. This jurisdiction is an integral component of the independence of the Judiciary enunciated, inter alia, in Article 175(3) of the Constitution which is not only a fundamental right but also a Salient Feature of the Constitution.

3. Learned counsel for the petitioner also emphasised on the apparent violation of Article 14 of the Constitution relating to dignity of man and the rights of privacy that are inherent therein. Learned counsel submitted that such rights extended not just to the person but also to the communications made by him. Illegal and unlawful surveillance of such communication or the targeting of any person in this regard was clear cut violation of the said fundamental rights. In this regard reference was made to certain laws, including principally, the Investigation for Fair Trial Act, 2013 (Act) to show that it is the only law which permits surveillance under strictly limited circumstances in terms of the elaborate regime set out in the Act and only in relation to the offences appearing in the Schedule thereof which relate to terrorism and such like offences. Learned counsel read out various sections of the said Act and in particular drew attention to Section 10(2)(b) where even if surveillance for such limited purposes could be lawfully carried out, rights of privacy and property were always to be respected. It was submitted that the subject matter of the present proposed inquiry could not conceivably fall within the ambit of the said Act. Learned counsel also placed reliance on the judgment of Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah (concurring in part) and reported as Justice Qazi Faez Isa and others v. The President of Pakistan (PLD 2021 SC 1). Various paragraphs in relation to the concept of privacy were read out from this judgment and in particular reliance was strongly placed on the following passage from para-48:

> "48. ... While the fundamental right to personal liberty and privacy guaranteed by Articles 9 and 14 of the Constitution are subject to law, there is no law in our country that authorizes any law enforcement or intelligence agency to pry into the privacy of any person through surveillance and interception, except the IFTA. The scope of the IFTA, as discussed above, is also restricted to the surveillance and interception of a person who is suspected to be involved in any terrorist or anti-state activity. Besides this limited scope under the IFTA, no other law regulates the fundamental right of privacy of citizens and allows probe into their lives through surveillance and interception. Thus, in the remaining sphere the right to privacy is absolute, until law is enacted to regulate it. The violation of this sphere of the absolute privacy right makes the inadmissibility of evidence collected in violation thereof also absolute. Absolute right entails absolute prohibition on its violation. ..."

4. It was submitted that since there was, and could not possibly be, any law that allows for surveillance or hacking of any communication of Judges or their family members, the bar, as noted in the extract above, was absolute and that therefore, at a very fundamental level there could hardly be any point in light of the forgoing observations to the inquiry envisaged by the impugned notification being held. In addition, it was also submitted that in respect of the petitioner in Const. P. 14 of 2023, who is an Advocate, the alleged audio (the veracity of which was directly challenged) would amount to illegal disclosure of privileged communication which could not form the subject matter of any inquiry. Reliance was also placed in this regard on Ishtiaq Ahmed Mirza v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2019 SC 675), which lays down detailed parameters as to admissibility of any audio or video material. Given that the alleged audios in the present case were all leaks made by a so called "black hat hacker" operating under the twitter handle "indibell", the first and primary question was the very veracity, credibility and legality of, and authorization for the alleged audios and so also the identity of the person or "hacker" engaged in or abetting such acts.

5. On any view of the matter, therefore, learned counsel submitted, further proceedings by the Commission in terms of the impugned notification would amount to a continued serious breach of fundamental constitutional principles and rights.

6. At the outset, learned Attorney General for Pakistan had sought permission to make a preliminary submission which was to the effect that one of us (Umar Ata Bandial, CJ) ought to consider recusing himself from the Bench. Reason given in this regard was that the constitution of the Commission and in particular the appointment of its Chairman could not have been done by the Hon'ble Chief Justice, in view of the stated subject matter of the reference. The contention was repelled, inter alia, for the reason that it was an accepted and settled constitutional principle, acted upon several times in the constitution of Commissions whenever a sitting Judge was intended to be made a member thereof, that the permission of the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan had first to be sought. Since this power was peculiar to the said office, the incumbent for the time being of the same could neither divest himself nor be divested by the Federal Government from discharging the constitutional duty. Inasmuch as the Federal Government appeared to have acted unilaterally in this matter, a constitutional principle of the highest importance had been, prima facie, breached. We may note in this regard that even though the other two members of the Commission are Chief Justices of respective High Courts as noted above, the subject matter of the reference transcends any particular High Court and involves at the very least a sitting Judge of the Supreme Court and a Chief Justice of a third High Court. Therefore, keeping in mind the settled principles of federalism, prima facie, the aforementioned constitutional principle would apply even in regard to the other two members of the Commission and therefore, the permission of the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan was required for their appointment. Prima facie, therefore, the very constitution of the Commission is cast in doubt. In this regard reliance is placed on:

a) Federation of Pakistan v. Muhammad Akram Sheikh [PLD 1989 SC 689 @ para-28(ii) to (iv)]

b) Gen.(R) Parvez Musharraf v. Nadeem Ahmed (Advocate) and another (PLD 2014 SC 585 @ para-26)

c) The President v. Justice Shaukat Ali (PLD 1971 SC 585 @ page 605)

d) Malik Asad Ali v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1998 SC 161 @ para 66)

7. In view of the above, let notice be issued to the respondents in all petitions. Notice be also issued to the learned Attorney General for Pakistan in terms of Order XXVIIA of the Civil Procedure Code.

8. C.M.A. NO.3663 OF 2023 IN CONST.P.14 OF 2023. Learned counsel for the petitioner also prayed for interim relief since the Commission has already started functioning and has made an order on 22.05.2023 and the next meeting of the Commission is scheduled for 27.05.2023. In the circumstances, till the next date of hearing, the operation of the impugned notification No.SRO.596(I)/2023 dated 19.05.2023 issued by the Federal Government is suspended as is the order dated 22.05.2023 made by the Commission and in consequence thereof proceedings of the Commission are stayed.

To come up on 31.05.2023.

MWA/A-18/SC Order accordingly.

CONCISE STATEMENT

It is respectfully submitted by the Inquiry Commission, respondent No. 2, as under:

Non-compliance with the rules.

1. The Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ( the Rules') require that notices, prior to filing of any petition, must be sent by the petitioner/petitioner's counsel to the respondents informing about the filing of the petitions, but this was not done. The Rules also require submission of an affidavit of service confirming service of notice on the respondents, and though such an affidavit was filed, service was not affected. Till date the Commission has not received copies of the petitions, therefore, the Commission reserves its right to attend to the same when and if the same are provided.

Petitions filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution.

2. The petitions are statedly filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ( The Constitution'), but the order of the Supreme Court dated 26 May 2023 does not mention this provision, let alone that the petitions were maintainable thereunder. A petition under Article 184(3) can only be filed provided 'a question of public importance with reference to the enforcement of any of the Fundamental Rights' is involved. It is respectfully submitted that Mr. Abid Shahid Zuberi is himself one of the persons allegedly talking in the audio recordings. Moreover, it needs consideration whether Mr. Abid Zuberi can represent the public interest in such circumstances. All other persons allegedly found talking in the audio recordings have not filed petitions, nor have objected to appear before the Commission. On the contrary, Messrs Khawaja Tariq Rahim and Abdul Qayyum Siddiqui, have shown their readiness to do so.

Petitions could not be fixed for hearing or heard.

3. The Supreme Court (Practice and Procedure) Act, 2023[1] states that:

2. Constitution of Benches.-

(1) Every cause, appeal or matter before the Supreme Court shall be heard and disposed of by a bench constituted by the Committee comprising the Chief Justice of Pakistan and two most senior judges, in order of seniority.

(2) The decisions of the Committee shall be by majority.'

These petitions were not fixed before a bench constituted by the Committee comprising the Chief Justice of Pakistan and the most senior judges. Therefore, it is most respectfully submitted that these petitions cannot be heard till the said Committee determines which bench should hear them.

4. Khawaja Tariq Rahim, Advocate, who is one of the persons allegedly talking in the audio recordings and five others had filed petitions ( the six Petitions ) challenging the Supreme Court (Practice and Procedure) Bill, under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, even before it became law. The Office of the Supreme Court had noted five legal objections to the maintainability of the six Petitions, the first two of which are reproduced hereunder:

a. That the petitioners have not pointed out as to what questions of public importance in the instant case are involved with reference to enforcement of any of the Fundamental Rights guaranteed under the Constitution, so as to directly invoke jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution.

b. That ingredients for invoking extra ordinary jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution have not been satisfied.'

However, Chamber appeals against the said Office Objections were not filed, nor were the Office Objections set aside by this Court. Yet in the six Petitions ex parte ad-interim orders were passed suspending the said Bill and later on 2 May 2023, it was ordered `That injunction continues and shall continue to be enforced against the Act till further orders'. On 8 May 2023, the petitions were adjourned to 1 June 2023, that is, after 24 days.

5. With utmost respect the six Petitions filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution appear not to be maintainable because the two pre-requisites mentioned in Article 184(3) were not attracted, as was correctly noted by the Office of this Court, because the subject matter of the six Petitions did not constitute a matter of public importance nor did they seek the enforcement of any Fundamental Right. The fate of these petitions is connected with that of the six Petitions and till they are decided these petitions should not have been fixed for hearing. And, all the more so because if the six Petitions are dismissed it will create a legal quagmire - whether conducting court in the interregnum violated section 2 of the Supreme Court (Practice and Procedure) Act, 2023?

It would not be appropriate for this bench to hear these petitions.

6. The oath taken by the Chief Justices and Judges of the Supreme Court and the High Courts require them to act, 'in accordance with the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and the law'. They are also required to, 'abide by the code of conduct issued by the Supreme Judicial Council' and not to allow their 'personal interest to influence' their 'official conduct' or 'official decisions'. The code of conduct[2] also requires that:

A Judge must decline resolutely to act in a case involving his own interest, including those of persons whom he regards and treats as near relatives or close friend.

A judge must refuse to deal with any case in which he has a connection with one party or its lawyer more than the other, or even with both parties and their lawyers.'

To ensure that justice is not only done, but is also seen to be done, a Judge must avoid all possibility of his opinion or action in any case being swayed by any consideration of personal advantage, either direct or indirect.'

One of the audio recordings allegedly pertains to the mother-in-law of the Hon'ble Chief Justice. Hon'ble Mr. Justice Munib Akhtar may also be mentioned in the said recording. And, in another audio recording reference is made to case fixation before a particular bench headed by Hon'ble Mr. Justice Ijaz ul Ahsan.

Members of the Commission are bound to act in accordance with the law.

7. The Constitution, law and the code of conduct must also be observed by the Members of the Commission, who respectively are the senior puisne Judge of the Supreme Court, the Chief Justice of the High Court of Balochistan and the Chief Justice of the Islamabad High Court. The law includes the Act, which grants to the Federal Government the power, under section 3(2), to constitute inquiry commissions:

3(2) The Federal Government shall, by Notification in the official gazette, appoint the members of the Commission and where more than one member are so appointed, the Federal Government shall designate one of the members to be the Chairman of the Commission.'

The Act does not stipulate that the Government must consult with the Chief Justice of Pakistan before it constitutes a commission. The Act also does not grant to the Chief Justice the power to nominate members of a commission. Merely because the Government may elect to consult the Chief Justice does not mean that it has to. The Act has existed for over six years and, to the best of the knowledge of the undersigned, no challenge to it or specifically to its section 3(2) has been made, let alone the same having been struck down.

Constituting the Commission.

8. Pursuant to Notification No. S.R.O. 596(I)/2023, dated 19 May 2023 ( the Notification'), issued under the Pakistan 5 Commissions of Inquiry Act, 2017[3] ( the Act'), an inquiry commission ( the Commission') was constituted. The Notification's preamble states:

WHEREAS, recently wide circulations of controversial audios have been witnessed on the national electronic, print and social media, allegedly regarding the Judiciary and former Chief Justices/Judges, conversation raising serious apprehensions about the independence, impartiality and uprightness of the Chief Justices/Judges of the Superior Courts in the administration of justice.

2. AND WHEREAS, such audio leaks have eroded pubic trust and serious concerns have been raised by the general public regarding independence, impartiality and uprightness of the Chief Justices/Judges of the Superior Courts. Under the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, the independence, integrity and character of Chief Justices/Judges is of utmost importance for keeping the public trust and confidence in the administration of justice. Judiciary is one of the main pillars under the Constitution and the society's confidence is shattered when independence of the Judiciary is tarnished.

3. AND WHEREAS, it is imperative to inquire into the authenticity, correctness and veracity of these audio leaks in order to restore not just the credibility of the Judiciary but also the public interest and confidence in the Judiciary in the larger public interest, as a matter of definite public importance.'

Commission's working.

9. The Commission was given an initial thirty days to complete its task. Therefore, it immediately held its first meeting on 22 May 2023. The Commission's order dated 22 May 2023 is attached hereto and marked as 'A', which was uploaded the same day on the webpage of the office of the learned Attorney-General for Pakistan ( AG ). In compliance with the Commission's order, public notices were published in three Urdu newspapers (Jang, Daily Express and Nawa-i-Waqt), and three English newspapers (Dawn, The News and Express Tribune), which are attached hereto and respectively marked as B1 to 'B6'. The notices called upon the general public to provide information they may have regarding the matter, which was to be inquired into by the Commission, to the following:

Mr. Hafeezullah Khajjak, Secretary to the Commission Cell phone number: 0301-5579326

Email address: inquirycommission2023@gmail.com

Postal address: Supreme Court Building, care of Private Secretary to Mr. Justice Qazi Faez Isa, 3rd Floor, Judges Block, Supreme Court Building, Constitution Avenue, Sector G-5, Islamabad.'

10. The following were issued summons to attend before the Commission on 27 May 2023:

Mr. Abid Shahid Zuberi, Advocate,

Kh. Tariq Rahim, Advocate,

Mr. Najam Saqib, Advocate and

Mr. Qayyum Siddiqui, Journalist.

The aforesaid were also sent summons through TCS Courier Service.

11. The Commission was to meet next on 27 May 2023, when it was learnt that a number of petitions were filed before the Supreme Court in its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. The Commission was informed that in two of these petitions,[4] the Commission, through its Secretary, was arrayed as a respondent.

The Commission was stopped from working.

12. It transpired that a Bench headed by the Hon'ble Chief Justice and four Hon'ble Judges of the Supreme Court heard these petitions on 26 May 2023, and the very same day suspended the Notification and the order of the Commission dated 22 May 2023 and the proceedings of the Commission were also stayed. Therefore, on 27 May 2023, the Commission, after noting the filing of the petitions and the order passed therein, adjourned its proceedings. The Commission required the learned AG to apprise the Commission of further developments in these petitions.

Non-attendance and non-disclosure.

13. Of the four gentlemen summoned on 27 May 2023, only Mr. Abdul Qayyum Siddiqui attended the Commission. Khawaja Tariq Rahim, Advocate, submitted an application (through email) stating that he had to undergo pre-scheduled 'bi-annual medical tests relating to my medical condition' on 27 May 2023 and also stated that:

I understand that the Commission has already indicated that keeping in view the age of two females whose audio is also in issue is willing to hold proceedings relating to them in Lahore. Since one of the ladies concerned is my wife it would be appropriate and in fitness of things that matter pertaining to my alleged audio leaks be also heard on the same day and date at Lahore.'

Messrs Abid Zuberi and Najam Saqib, Advocates, who had been summoned, did not attend nor did they inform the Commission why they were not doing so. They also did not bring to the Commission's notice that petitions had been filed and that the Supreme Court had stayed the Commission from proceeding further.

Submissions made by Mr. Abid Zuberi's counsel.

14. The order of the Supreme Court dated 26 May 2023 refers to, 'the submissions made by Mr. Shoaib Shaheen, ASC', who represents Mr. Abid Zuberi. The learned counsel submitted that the Commission had assumed the powers of the Supreme Judicial Council ( SJC'). However, the learned counsel failed to point out the Commission's order dated 22 May 2023, which had also stated that:

At the very outset it is clarified that the Commission is not the Supreme Judicial Council ( SJC ) constituted under Article 209 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ( the Constitution'). This Commission will not be assuming the powers of the SJC and it will endeavor to perform its functions to the best of its ability as per the Notification and in accordance with the Act.'

Given that the Commission had specifically clarified that it was neither the SJC nor was it assuming the powers of the SJC, it was incumbent upon the petitioners and their learned counsel to point this out and not make submissions to the contrary.

The Supreme Judicial Council - SJC.

15. Article 209 of the Constitution stipulates that the SJC comprises of the Chief Justice of Pakistan, the two next senior Judges of the Supreme Court and the two most senior Chief Justices of the High Courts. And, that if the SJC is, 'inquiring into the capacity or conduct of a Judge who is a member of the Council' then he cannot be part of the SJC and is to be substituted by the person next in seniority. If Article 209 of the Constitution is extrapolated as a principle, then making the next senior most Judge head the Commission accords therewith.

Independence of the Judiciary.

16. The petitioner's learned counsel also referred to the independence of the judiciary, and assumed that the same was under threat if the senior puisne Judge of the Supreme Court and two Chief Justices of the High Courts comprised of the Commission. It is not understandable why the independence of the judiciary would be threatened or even undermined if the senior most Judge of the Supreme Court and two Chief Justices are its members.

Privileged Communication'.

17. The petitioner's learned counsel also contended that communications between Mr. Abid Zuberi, an Advocate, and his client is 'privileged communication'. However, Mr. Abid Zuberi did not claim privilege before the Commission. Moreover, under Article 9 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984, the said privilege is not absolute as it excludes illegal purpose, crime or fraud.

9. Professional communications. No advocate shall at any time be permitted, unless with his client's express consent, to disclose any communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as such advocate, by or on behalf of his client, or to state the contents or condition of any document with which he has become acquainted in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment, or to disclose any advice given by him to his client in the course and for the purpose of such employment:

Provided that nothing in this Article shall protect from disclosure

(1) any such communication made in furtherance of any illegal purpose; or

(2) any fact observed by any advocate, in the course of his employment as such, showing that any crime or fraud has been committed since the commencement of his employment, whether the attention of such advocate was or was not directed to such fact by or on behalf of his client.'

If Mr. Abid Zuberi as an Advocate claims that any communication of his was privileged, the Commission would consider the same.

Mr. Abid Zuberi's public discussion on his alleged recordings.

18. Mr. Abid Zuberi has repeatedly spoken about the alleged audio recordings, including on national television both prior to, and after, passing of the order of this Court dated 26 May 2023. He did so on several television talk-shows, including the following:

| Date | Programme |
|---|---|
| 20 May 2023 | 'Face to Face' on GNN News[5] |
| 23 May 2023 | 'Off the Record with Kashif Abbasi' on ARY News[6] |
| 26 May 2023 | Sawal yeh hai with Maria Memon' on ARY News[7] |
| 26 May 2023 | 'Ab Pata Chala' on Bol News.[8] |

In each of these programmes, he was attired as an Advocate, and spoke about the audio recordings/the subject of his petition.

Mr. Abid Zuberi's counsel, Mr. Shoaib Shaheen, also participated in several television programmes to discuss the workings of the Commission. These include the following:

| Date | Programme |
|---|---|
| 22 May | 'Faisla aap ka with Asma Shirazi' on Aaj News[9] |
| 23 May | '11th Hour with Waseem Badaami' on ARY News[10] |
| 24 May | GNN News[11] |
| 26 May | ARY News[12] |

Mr. Abid Zuberi, together with his counsel, also did a press talk outside the Supreme Court Building on 26 May 2023.[13]

Right of Privacy.

19. The petitioner's learned counsel also contended that there was an absolute right of privacy stipulated in the Constitution. However, Article 14(1) of the Constitution stipulates that, 'The dignity of man and, subject to law, the privacy of home, shall be inviolable'. Whether the alleged audio recordings constitute privacy of home would have to be considered by the Commission, if this is contended before it. The Supreme Court in the case of Benazir Bhutto v. President of Pakistan[14] had also restricted the phrase privacy of home, by excluding therefrom certain matters:

25. ...Article 14 guarantees to protect dignity of man and the privacy of home which shall be inviolable subject to law. ...If a person intrudes into the privacy of any man, pries on the private life, it injures the dignity of man, it violates the privacy of home, it disturbs the peace and tranquility of the family and above all it puts such person to serious danger of being blackmailed. Such acts are not permissible under law and if any occasion arises for such operation, then it can be only in cases of defence and national security.'

It is submitted that if it be urged before the Commission, that the audio recordings constitute privacy of home in terms of Article 14(1) of the Constitution, this submission would be considered by it. The Commission would also consider whether evidence, if it is gathered illegally, is inadmissible and/or whether those gathering it would have to face prosecution under the relevant law, and may also have to consider Article 164 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984, if these points are taken up.

International Practice.

20. Though reference was made by this Court to paragraph 48 of a judgment of this Court,[15] the learned counsel failed to point out paragraph 46 thereof, which stated that:

46. The Irish Supreme Court has in DPP v. JC56 laid down the following principles with regard to the admission or exclusion of the evidence obtained in violation of the constitutional rights, in order to balance the legitimate competing public interests: (i) The onus is on the prosecution to establish the admissibility of all evidence; (ii) If a claim is raised that evidence was obtained in breach of constitutional rights, the onus is on the prosecution to establish either (a) that there was no unconstitutionality, or (b) that despite any interference with constitutional rights the evidence should still be admitted; (iii) Where evidence is obtained in deliberate and conscious violation of constitutional rights, it should be excluded except in exceptional circumstances; (iv) Where evidence was taken in breach of constitutional rights, there is a presumption in favour of exclusion, which can be rebutted by evidence that the breach of rights was either (a) inadvertent or (b) derived from subsequent legal developments; and (v) Whether or not a breach of constitutional rights was deliberate and conscious requires analysis of the conduct or state of mind of the individual who actually gathered the evidence, as well as, any senior official or officials within the investigating or enforcement authority concerned who was involved either in that decision or in decisions of that type generally or in putting in place policies concerning evidence- gathering of the type concerned.'

Federalism.

21. The order of this Court dated 26 May 2023 has referred to the settled principles of Federalism, and on the basis of the same it was noted that permission of the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan was required before appointing the two Chief Justices as members of the Commission. With the greatest of respect, the Federation includes territories mentioned in the Constitution, including the Province of Balochistan and the Islamabad Capital Territory.[16] The Constitution stipulates that, 'Each High Court shall supervise and control all courts subordinate to it'.[17] The Constitution does not grant a similar supervisory and/or controlling role to the Supreme Court of Pakistan with regard to the High Courts, let alone exclusively to the Chief Justice of Pakistan. On the contrary, Federalism requires, as endorsed by the Constitution, that the High Courts function independently. The Supreme Court is only the appellate Court before which the decisions of the High Courts are assailed. And, the decisions of the Supreme Court are binding on 'all other courts in Pakistan', which include the High Courts. The constitutional autonomy of the High Courts is also reflected in Article 209, whereunder the SJC is established. Of the five SJC members, two are Chief Justices of the High Courts. In addition, Article 198(6) of the Constitution grants to the Governor in consultation with the Chief Justice of the High Court, the power to make rules with regard to the matters mentioned in clause (a) thereof and all incidental, supplemental or consequential matters, as per clause (6) of Article 198(6). Rules of procedure are made by the High Court alone, without the consultation with the Chief Justice of Pakistan or with the concurrence of the Supreme Court.[18] The language of Article 184(3) of the Constitution is also significant in that it commences by referring to Article 199 (jurisdiction whereunder is to be exercised by the High Courts), and states that the Supreme Court can make an order of the nature mentioned in the said Article 199. Significantly, the powers of the High Courts, exercised under Article 199, are not circumscribed by the constitutional prerequisites of public importance and enforcement of any of the Fundamental Rights. It is further submitted that where the Chief Justice of Pakistan has been empowered, the Constitution specifically states this, for instance, with regard to the transfer of High Court Judges under Article 200 of the Constitution.

Copies of concise statement

22. Copies of this Concise Statement have been supplied to all concerned, receipt whereof is attached hereto and marked as 'C'.

23. This Concise Statement is submitted by the Secretary of the Commission without engaging the services of an Advocate-on -Record to save public resources. The Commission also does not consider the need to engage the services of an Advocate Supreme Court as it would unnecessarily waste public resources. The Commission however expects that this Concise Statement will be read out in Court by the petitioner's counsel or by the learned AG.

Conclusion

24. It is most respectfully submitted that the Commission has no interest in the matter other than to undertake the assignment given to it and to do so strictly in accordance with the Constitution and the law. The Commission also assures that legal objections and concerns raised before it will be considered.

CONSTITUTION PETITIONS NOS. 24, 25, 26 AND NIL OF 2023

SARDAR TARIQ MASOOD, J.---I totally agree with what Mr. Justice Qazi Faez Isa has written in his note/order. I was also not consulted by the Hon ble Chief Justice before putting me on this Bench in the Constitution Petitions Nos. 24, 25, 26 and Nil of 2023. Surprisingly, these petitions in this Bench have been fixed when just a day earlier the petitioner of the Constitution Petition No. 25 of 2023 himself along with his counsel met the Hon ble Chief Justice in his Chamber and thereafter on the next day these petitions have been fixed without any consultation or ascertaining the availability of mine. If this practice is allowed than whether every petitioners/appellants whose petitions/appeals are lying in this court since years can be allowed to meet the Hon'ble Chief Justice in the Chamber for getting fixed their cases on the very next day.

2. I was awaiting the decision in the petitions through which the Supreme Court (Practice and Procedure) Act 2023 ( the Act') have been challenged and expected that they would be decided soon as interim ex-parte stay order was issued which had suspended the operation of the then bill and the proposed Act. Section 3 of the Act stipulates that "any matter invoking exercise of original jurisdiction under clause 3 of Article 184 of the Constitution shall be first placed before the committee constituted under section 2 for examination if the Committee is of the view that a question of public importance with reference to enforcement of any of the fundamental rights conferred by Chapter 1 of Part II of the Constitution is involved it shall constitute a Bench comprising not less than three Judges of the Supreme Court of Pakistan which may also include the member of the committee for adjudication of the matter." However, the present matter was not referred to the Committee, of which I am member. Only by presuming that the Act will be struck down, the mechanism provided in section 3 of the Act has been disregarded.

When stay order was passed I was also reluctant to sit on a Bench till the final decision of the said petitions in which the Act was challenged but as I was heading a Bench in which about thirty to thirty five criminal cases used to be fixed daily of the citizens of the Pakistan, who were in jail and waiting for the decision of their petitions/appeals against their conviction hence I kept on dealing the said criminal work and also requested the Hon ble Chief Justice for early disposal of the petitions filed against the Act. Although during this period I when heading two members bench, have heard Constitution Petitions Nos.26 and 28 of 2016 titled as Muhammad Tariq Asad v. Federation of Pakistan and Siraj-ul-Haq, Ameer Jamaat-e-Islami v. Federation of Pakistan, for the reason that regarding the maintainability of those petitions under Article 184(3), a five Members Bench, had already decided in affirmative and declared that those petitions were maintainable. Even after formulating the certain queries, I adjourned the said case for more than a month with expectation that by that time, petitions against the said Act would be decided.

3. These four petitions have been filed by those who apparently are not detained, nor facing trial with regard to the offences, allegedly committed on 9th May 2023 in Cantonment Areas and the said persons had attacked, destroyed and/or burnt public property and the property of the armed forces, PAF base and other prohibited areas etc. including the GHQ. If a law is challenged, usually it is before the High Court under Article 199 of the Constitution however these petitions have been filed in this court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution which jurisdiction can only be invoked in the public interest for the enforcement of fundamental rights mentioned in Chapter 1 of Part-II of the Constitution. It should not be presumed that those who may be tried raised objections to their trial under the Army Act, 1952 nor that they prefer to be tried in any Anti-Terrorism Court under the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997 or before a criminal court mentioned in the Criminal Procedure Code. In any event, every individual case has to be considered on the basis of the fact of the case and the applicable law and this is to be done after hearing the nominated accused, nothing should be done which may jeopardize the interest of an accused without hearing his side.

4. I am also surprised that this nine Members Bench was constituted on the assumption that the Act will be struck down because if it is not, than any party who is not satisfied with its decision, their right to appeal under section 5 of the Act would be made redundant because such an appeal is to be heard by a larger bench of the Supreme Court. Presently, the Supreme Court comprises of fifteen Judges and the Chief Justice, which makes a total of sixteen Judges. However, if the full court comprising of sixteen judges and the Chief Justice is available i.e. seventeen judges then an appeal would be heard by minimum of ten Judges which is not possible in the present situation so the appeal if filed by the either party would not be heard.

5. It is made clear that I have not recused from the Bench, hence there was no question to sign the purported order in which it has been mentioned that new Bench will be constituted whereas my point of view was that these petitions be heard after the decision of the said petitions which have been filed against the Act, hence I am writing my independent note/order.

Sardar Tariq Masood, J

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---I sit on this Bench with a reservation which I wish to record at the very outset on this first day of hearing. With respect, in the recent past there has been a consistent pattern and reluctance of not constituting the Full Court Bench (but instead Special Benches of some Hon'ble Judges) in cases[1] of immense public importance that have far-reaching impact on the political, social and economic life of the people of Pakistan and their fundamental rights. The non-formation of the Full Court Bench, in my opinion, has severely undermined the authority of the Court and the legitimacy of its judgments. The constitutional significance of the matter involved in the present case and its potential ramifications, call for the highest level of judicial scrutiny.[2] Collective deliberations and diverse insights by all the judges in cases of public importance helps the Court arrive at a sound judgment and reinforces public confidence and trust in this Court.

2. Additionally, I am of the opinion that until this Court decides the constitutionality of the Supreme Court (Practice and Procedure) Act 2023, Section 3 of which prescribes the procedure for invoking the original jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, all such matters under this jurisdiction must be heard by the Full Court Bench of this Court.

3. In order to safeguard the integrity and authority of this Court, I requested the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan to consider constituting the Full Court Bench of all judges of this Court, except those who are out of the country,[3] and leave it to each one of them to decide whether or not to recuse from hearing the case. However, his lordship has not, in his wisdom, thought it fit to accede to my request. I have no choice but to sit on the Bench as part of my constitutional obligation including above all the terms of my oath, which require me to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution including the fundamental rights of the people of Pakistan, in particular their right to life, liberty, dignity, due process and fair trial.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 04.01.2023, passed in Crl. Misc. No. 8873-B of 2022).

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----Ss. 497 & 498---Supreme Court Rules, 1980, O. XXIII, R.2---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9, 10A, 14 & 185(3)---Pre-arrest bail, petition for---Limitation---Scope---Law of limitation is fully applicable to petitions for leave to appeal in matters relating to pre-arrest bail and there is no relaxation as far as the period of limitation is concerned unless sufficient cause is shown for the delay, as required under the law---After dismissal of the petition for pre-arrest bail by the High Court, the Supreme Court should be approached promptly in a pre-arrest bail matter to avail the remedy available under the law and to actualize the right of access to justice.

The law of limitation is fully applicable to petitions for leave to appeal in matters related to pre-arrest bail like in other criminal petitions filed under Article 185(3) of the Constitution, and a delay in a petition filed beyond the limitation period must be supported by an application for condonation of delay which is to be examined by the Court on its own merits. Even though sufficient cause for condoning delay in criminal matters has been interpreted liberally and leniently by the Supreme Court while dealing with petitions and appeals filed by those incarcerated, this view is rooted in the objective to ensure that those incarcerated have equal opportunities of access to justice, and for safe administration of criminal justice. A person behind bars faces numerous hindrances in pursuing his legal remedies because of restricted access to the outside world, and therefore, suffers a disability in comparison to those who enjoy liberty and freedom. The delay, therefore, is usually because of the constraints due to being imprisoned and not because of any ulterior motive. As such, condonation of delay in such petitions is viewed leniently through the lens of fundamental rights, particularly the right to liberty, dignity and fair trial guaranteed under Articles 9, 14 and 10A of the Constitution, with the purpose to provide those incarcerated with equal access to courts, and equal and proper opportunities to defend themselves and to avail remedies available under the law. It is for this reason that, by following the practice of taking a lenient and permissive view in cases of those incarcerated, the Supreme Court has held that the incarceration of a petitioner seeking post arrest bail itself constitutes sufficient cause to allow condonation of delay, unless the delay was caused due to some ulterior motive of the said petitioner himself.

Muhammad Arshad v. The State PLD 2021 SC 927; Sikandar Hayat v. The State PLD 2020 SC 559 and Bashir Ahmed v. The State 1996 SCMR 308 ref.

However, the above ground is not available to condone delay in a petition for leave to appeal related to prearrest bail as the petitioner is not incarcerated and therefore, suffers no such disability. Failure to surrender before the authorities after dismissal of the pre-arrest bail petition by the High Court and then filing a time barred petition, impugning the decision of the High Court and seeking pre-arrest bail, before this Court could be indicative of an intent to remain a fugitive from the law. Such conduct could also be considered as a deliberate attempt to thwart the investigation, resulting in the loss of valuable evidence which is now simply lost or is impossible to collect due to afflux of time by failing to join the investigation. As such, failing to file a pre-arrest bail petition before this Court within the limitation period could either be intentional with ulterior purposes or, in the very least, due to the negligence of the petitioner, for which no reprieve can be granted by condoning delay without any sufficient cause. This Court should be approached promptly in a pre-arrest bail matter to avail the remedy available under the law and to actualize the right of access to justice. Therefore, the law of limitation is applicable to such petitions for leave to appeal in matters related to pre-arrest bail with its full rigour and there is no relaxation as far as the period of limitation is concerned unless sufficient cause is shown for the delay, as required under Rule 2 of Order XXIII of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980.

Date of hearing: 31st July, 2023.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the impugned order dated 04.01.2023, whereby pre-arrest bail in case FIR No.438/2022 dated 03.11.2022, under Section 379, P.P.C., registered at Police Station Mitro, District Vehari, was denied to the petitioner.

2. At the very outset we have noted that the instant petition has been filed after a delay of 74 days from the expiry of the limitation period. Rule 2 of Order XXIII of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Supreme Court Rules") provides that a petition for leave to appeal under Article 185(3) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") in criminal matters has to be filed within thirty days from the judgment or final order sought to be appealed from. The second proviso to the said Rule provides that the Court may condone delay if "sufficient cause" is shown. However, to this effect, no application for condonation of delay has been filed with the instant petition.

3. Before deciding the matter at hand, we deem it necessary to first cater to a contention raised by the counsel of the petitioner during his arguments. The learned counsel for the petitioner has tried to argue that no limitation period is applicable for filing the instant petition dealing with pre-arrest bail because the matter involves the liberty and freedom of a person. We are not impressed by the said contention. The law of limitation is fully applicable to petitions for leave to appeal in matters related to pre-arrest bail like in other criminal petitions filed under Article 185(3) of the Constitution, and a delay in a petition filed beyond the limitation period must be supported by an application for condonation of delay which is to be examined by the Court on its own merits. Even though sufficient cause for condoning delay in criminal matters has been interpreted liberally and leniently by this Court while dealing with petitions and appeals filed by those incarcerated, this view is rooted in the objective to ensure that those incarcerated have equal opportunities of access to justice[1], and for safe administration of criminal justice[2]. A person behind bars faces numerous hindrances in pursuing his legal remedies because of restricted access to the outside world, and therefore, suffers a disability in comparison to those who enjoy liberty and freedom. The delay, therefore, is usually because of the constraints due to being imprisoned and not because of any ulterior motive. As such, condonation of delay in such petitions is viewed leniently through the lens of fundamental rights, particularly the right to liberty, dignity and fair trial guaranteed under Articles 9, 14 and 10A of the Constitution, with the purpose to provide those incarcerated with equal access to courts, and equal and proper opportunities to defend themselves and to avail remedies available under the law. It is for this reason that, by following the practice of taking a lenient and permissive view in cases of those incarcerated, this Court has held that the incarceration of a petitioner seeking post arrest bail itself constitutes sufficient cause to allow condonation of delay, unless the delay was caused due to some ulterior motive of the said petitioner himself.[3]

4. However, the above ground is not available to condone delay in a petition for leave to appeal related to pre-arrest bail as the petitioner is not incarcerated and therefore, suffers no such disability. Failure to surrender before the authorities after dismissal of the pre-arrest bail petition by the High Court and then filing a time barred petition, impugning the decision of the High Court and seeking pre-arrest bail, before this Court could be indicative of an intent to remain a fugitive from the law. Such conduct could also be considered as a deliberate attempt to thwart the investigation, resulting in the loss of valuable evidence which is now simply lost or is impossible to collect due to afflux of time by failing to join the investigation.[4] As such, failing to file a pre-arrest bail petition before this Court within the limitation period could either be intentional with ulterior purposes or, in the very least, due to the negligence of the petitioner, for which no reprieve can be granted by condoning delay without any sufficient cause. This Court should be approached promptly in a pre-arrest bail matter to avail the remedy available under the law and to actualize the right of access to justice. Therefore, the law of limitation is applicable to such petitions for leave to appeal in matters related to pre-arrest bail with its full rigour and there is no relaxation as far as the period of limitation is concerned unless sufficient cause is shown for the delay, as required under Rule 2, of Order XXIII of the Supreme Court Rules.

5. In the instant case, as pointed out above, the petition has been filed after a delay of 74 days and no application for condonation has been filed to show sufficient cause for condonation of the said delay. After dismissal of his pre-arrest bail petition by the High Court, the petitioner should have approached this Court within the period of limitation. Faced with this situation, the learned counsel for the petitioner after arguing the matter at some length wished to withdraw the titled petition. Therefore, with the above observations, the instant petition is dismissed as withdrawn.

MWA/Z-6/SC Petition dismissed.

Per Munib Akhtar, J. (Majority view):

Regardless of how (and not just jurisprudentially) important the claim put forward by the present application may be, it cannot be lost sight of that what were before the Court were petitions inviting the exercise of review jurisdiction under Article 188 of the Constitution. Present application raises an altogether new prayer that has no nexus with the review jurisdiction of the Court.

It is Article 184(3) of the Constitution, and not Article 188, that would be the proper vehicle for considering relief of the nature sought by, and through, the present application. The present application involves adjudication of substantive law issues and, appears to be wrongly filed as a miscellaneous matter in the review jurisdiction of the Court.

Swapnil Tripathi v. Supreme Court of India AIR 2018 SC 4806 ref.

Petitioner cannot cross the hurdle of maintainability of present application by relying on O. XXXIII, R. 6 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980. The said Rule has no relevance to the facts of the present case, in the context of the present application. Said Rule can be invoked by the Court to either further the "ends of justice" or to "prevent abuse of the process of the Court". However, neither of these conditions is engaged in the present context. It cannot be that the "ends of justice" will be defeated or there will be an "abuse of the process of the Court" if the relief sought in the present application is not allowed, i.e., public broadcast and/or live streaming of the review proceedings is denied. The primary reason put forward by the petitioner was his and his family's constant public humiliation and degradation at the hands of different State officials and functionaries ('the respondents'). Even if it be accepted that the petitioner's reputation (and that of his family) has been tarnished by the acts of the respondents in the manner as contended, no cogent reason was put forward as to how hearings in the present matters, held according to settled practice and time honored principles, would prevent the alleged negative publicity surrounding him from being dispelled. After all, the Court (including of course the present Bench) sits, and was sitting, as an "open court".

Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed., at page 1263) ref.

Petitioner also put forward his apprehension that even if the public was allowed to enter the courtroom, this access was subject to limitations such as space constraints (only intensified with the advent of Covid-19); that as a result, the vast majority of the public would be excluded from observing the review hearings. This apprehension of the petitioner is without force. For it to be accepted would mean that until the advent of present-day means of communication and broadcast, which have only been around in the modern era, there have never been open and public hearings in the courts of law. What has happened for many centuries prior thereto and is accepted as such even today all around the world-that is, that the open court system is quite sufficient to ensure transparency and openness in the judicial system and of court proceedings-would be cast in doubt, if not abandoned altogether. Such a result cannot, be countenanced on any view of the matter. Furthermore, it is to be noted that the public, which is always welcome to sit in the open court proceedings, includes members of the press (and also, which is a distinctly recent phenomenon, vloggers and bloggers). They are free to witness Court proceedings and frequently do so. Certainly, they appear to have attended in droves to witness the proceedings both in these review petitions and the proceedings in relation to the hearing of the petitions under Article 184(3) from which these petitions emanate. If therefore the petitioner's primary aim was to disseminate his narrative to the public at large, this task can be easily performed, and has been duly performed all along by the journalists and vloggers/bloggers who have throughout closely followed all the proceedings, including his arguments, in Court.

The relief sought through the present application was novel. As a result, there have been no judicial pronouncements by the Supreme Court on the merits and demerits of allowing public broadcast and/or live streaming of Court proceedings. Dismissal of present application should not be construed as an absolute refusal of public broadcast and/or live streaming of Court proceedings. Instead, it should be understood as an exercise in judicial restraint and caution.

A decision on public broadcast and/or live streaming cannot be taken hastily. Instead, it is a matter which requires careful consideration of multiple factors and participation of the different stakeholders involved in the judicial system. As a result, this exercise cannot be carried out on the judicial side but can only be deliberated upon on and be approved by the Court in its administrative manifestation.

National Director of Public Prosecutions v. Media 24 Limited and others [2017] ZASCA 97 and Swapnil Tripathi v. Supreme Court of India AIR 2018 SC 4806 ref.

Keeping in view the evolving practice of the Courts around the world and acknowledging the benefits of technology for the justice system, the Supreme Court referred the matter of public broadcast and live streaming of Court proceedings to the Chief Justice so that he may place it before the Full Court for deliberation and appropriate action. Application was dismissed.

Per Maqbool Baqar, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ. (Minority view):

The prayer made in the present application for livestreaming and broadcasting on Pakistan Television Corporation (PTV) and other television channels, the court-proceedings of present case can be decided only by the present Bench in this case, and cannot be agitated through filing a separate constitution petition under Article 184(3) of the Constitution; for such a petition, if filed, may then be entrusted to and heard by any other Bench of the Supreme Court. Each Bench of the Supreme Court, whether small or large, exercises the judicial powers vested in the Court, and a decision rendered by it, irrespective of its numeric strength, is considered the decision of the Court. Thus, one Bench of the Supreme Court cannot deal with an ancillary or incidental matter pertaining to a case being heard by another Bench.

The cases heard by the Supreme Court in its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, including review petitions and other matters arising therein, are matters of public importance within the meaning and scope of that expression used in Article 19A of the Constitution, as it is only when the "question of public importance" is involved that the Supreme Court can exercise its jurisdiction under Article 184(3) to make an order for the enforcement of any of the fundamental rights. The public, therefore, has a fundamental right under Article 19A of the Constitution to have access to information as to the court proceedings of the cases heard by the Supreme Court in its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, including to know and see how the court-proceedings in these cases are conducted and concluded by the Court.

The obligation of the Supreme Court, under Article 19A of the Constitution, to give access to the public to information of the court proceedings in the cases heard by it under Article 184(3) cannot be said to be fulfilled by allowing permission to come to the court-room and see the court-proceedings, as this facility may be availed of only by a few of the public who can afford travelling to the courthouse and are lucky enough to have a seat in the court-room, there being a very limited space. The facility of entry to the Court and seeing the court proceedings, in this context, appears rather discriminatory, available only to the affluent and thus, offending Article 25 of the Constitution.

A very few of the public, can afford to reach the Court and see the court-proceedings while a large section of the people of the country, who are more than 200 million, cannot avail their right to see the court-proceedings due to time, distance and financial constraints. They, thus, depend on the information reported in print and electronic media. When the reporting is accurate and comprehensive, it fulfills their right to information; but when it is inaccurate or incomplete, it thwarts the right. The gavel-to-gavel live-streaming of the court proceedings would give the public a more direct sense of what occurs in these proceedings than second-hand information given to them by the media through reporting the event in a summarized form.

Live-streaming of the court proceedings, in the present age, can easily be made through the latest technology, and that too, at the lowest and reasonable cost. It would make the public to be virtually present in the courtroom and enable them to see, in real-time, how the court proceedings are conducted and concluded.

To maintain and boost up the public trust in the Court's working, it is essential to make the public aware of how the Court deals with cases under Article 184(3) and to be reassured that it always functions within the terms of the Constitution and law independently, impartiality and fairly. Live-streaming of the court-proceedings would reflect a responsive image of the Court acknowledging that it is accountable to the public for whom it functions, and promote the public confidence in its functioning. There is no legal impediment in live-streaming the court-proceedings of cases heard under Article 184(3) on the official website of the Supreme Court and it is a positive obligation of the Supreme Court, under Article 19A, to do this for enforcement of the right of the public to have access to information of these proceedings.

Access of the public to the court-proceedings in cases under Article 184(3) of the Constitution can expose information as to the matters of public importance that may otherwise not be possible for the public to have; as in most cases under Article 184(3), it is the Government, or any of its departments or instrumentalities, which is alleged to have infringed the fundamental rights of the public and the Court is called upon to enforce them. The information as to the court-proceedings in such cases would be a vital avenue for public information about what the Government does and why the Court interferes. The access of the public to the court proceedings in cases heard under Article 184(3) through live-streaming would, thus, serve the democracy as much as it would make the exercise of judicial power by the Court in such cases transparent.

Argument of respondents that question of live-streaming of the court-proceedings is a policy matter and should be decided by the Court on the administrative side, is not well-founded, especially in the context of court proceedings of cases heard under Article 184(3) of the Constitution which is under consideration, in the present matter. The proceedings in such cases are "matters of public importance" within the meaning of that expression used in Article 19A and the public has a fundamental right to know how these proceedings are conducted; the question of enforcement of this right is a legal matter to be decided judicially and is not a policy matter for decision on the administrative side.

Scott v. Scott 1913 AC 417 ref.

Live-streaming (audio and video) of the court-proceedings in cases heard by the Supreme Court, on a petition or suo motu, under Article 184(3) of the Constitution should be made available for the information of the public through a link on the official website of the Court, in the enforcement of the fundamental right of the public, and for the fulfillment of the obligation of the Court, under Article 19A of the Constitution. However, present Bench of the Court can make an order to live-stream the court proceedings of this case only as per the prayer made therein, and cannot direct the other Benches of the Supreme Court that are, or would be, hearing such cases, to live-stream their court-proceedings. The general practice in this regard can be enforced only by making rules under Article 191 of the Constitution. However, until such rules are made by the Court on the administrative side, it lies in the discretion of each Bench of the Court hearing such a case to order, or not to order, in the exercise of powers of the Court, live-streaming of its court-proceedings and to regulate that live-streaming, if ordered.

In the circumstances of the present case, the Court is inclined to exercise its discretion in favour of ordering livestreaming of its court proceedings; however, it had been apprised that in the current state of technological set-up available in the Supreme Court such an order, if made, could not be executed. Courts do not make in-executable orders, therefore, the Court is abstaining from making an order for live-streaming the court-proceedings of the present case. However, the Registrar of the Supreme Court shall take steps to provide for the requisite technological infrastructure for livestreaming the court-proceedings, so that any Bench of the Supreme Court may, if so decides, order for live-streaming the court proceedings of a case being heard under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, in future. The Registrar shall also place the matter before the Court, on the administrative side, for considering amendments in the Supreme Court Rules 1980, in order to livestream court-proceedings of all cases heard under Article 184(3) and to regulate the practice and procedure in this regard.

Facility of live audio-hearing of the court-proceedings of all Benches of the Supreme Court is currently available to all the Judges of Court in their Chambers as well to their staff, and audio recording of the court-proceedings is also sometimes made. Therefore, keeping in view the current state of technological infrastructure available in the Supreme Court and the fact that the petitioner's case (review petitions) is already fixed for hearing, the audio recording of the proceedings of the court-hearings of the petitioner's case shall be made available through a link on the official website of the Supreme Court, for public information. The Registrar of the Supreme Court shall ensure that the unedited audio recording of the proceedings of the court-hearings of the present case is uploaded on the official website of the Court on the same day soon after the hearing and before the close of the working hours.

So far as the prayer of the petitioner to the extent of directing the State-owned Pakistan Television (PTV) Corporation to broadcast live the proceedings of his case is concerned, such a direction would breach the freedom of expression and press guaranteed by Article 19 of the Constitution as both kinds of direction, viz, to broadcast or not to broadcast something, are tantamount to interference into the freedom guaranteed by the Constitution, unless such act or omission of PTV breaches any legal right of someone or any of its legal obligations and it is also made a party to the proceedings initiated thereon. Likewise, the prayer of the petitioner that the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA) may be directed to issue written instructions to all private television channels that they cannot be restrained from broadcasting the proceedings, appears to be not entertainable, as none of the private television channels has agitated its right (if any) to broadcast the court-proceedings of cases heard by the Supreme Court under Article 184(3), and such determination of the question as to their such right (if any) is to be left to be made in a case where they would agitate the same and claim enforcement thereof.

Per Yahya Afridi, J. (partially agreeing with the majority view with respect to dismissal of present application):

To allow the relief the petitioner seeks in the present application would, "negate the very spirit of the oath taken" by him as a Judge of the superior judiciary, that mandates him to avoid "publicity", which in itself warrants dismissal of the present application.

The right of the public to have access to court-hearings through live-streaming, audio-video recording, written transcript or any other medium, in the proceedings of public importance including those under Articles 184(3) and 186 of the Constitution, is their fundamental right under Article 19A of the Constitution. This right, however, cannot be left to reign absolute, lest it be abused and, thus, requires to be regulated, as Article 19A of the Constitution mandates the same to be "subject to regulation and reasonable restrictions imposed by law". Therefore, for the safe and proper implementation of this fundamental right, the appropriate means would be to frame rules under Article 191 of the Constitution.

Once the Supreme Court has adjudged and declared on the judicial side that the public has a right to have access to information of the court-proceedings in cases of public importance, the process of effectuating the said right should best be left for the Court to be dealt with on the administrative side. The full court comprising all Judges of the Supreme Court, with the deliberation and input of all of them, would be better poised than any Bench of the Supreme Court to balance the interests of all stakeholders, in giving the public access to court proceedings, by making well considered rules to regulate its practice and procedure on this subject, and obviating the possibility of causing affront to the proceedings of the Supreme Court, which should in all eventualities be vehemently avoided to preserve the majesty of the Court. Accordingly, His Lordship directed the Registrar of the Supreme Court to place the matter before the Full Court, on the administrative side, for appropriate steps as it deems fit, under Article 191 of the Constitution.

Per Munib Akhtar, J. (Majority view):

(e) Administration of justice---

----Use of technology for enhancing transparency and openness of judicial proceedings---Technological developments should be monitored and appreciated, to ensure that access to justice for litigants is constantly improving---Judicial system should, administratively speaking, be alive and alert, and responsive, to technological advances and changes that can enhance the transparency and openness of judicial proceedings---Any approach that smacks of Luddite thinking should be avoided; but at the same time it should be kept in mind-and this is the corollary- that one need not be dazzled and mesmerized by advances in technology; it must always be remembered that technology is merely a tool and an aid---Technology is the servant and not the master---Simply because the Court (technologically) can, does not mean that it, therefore, necessarily must---Sober and robust approach is much to be preferred.

Per Maqbool Baqar, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ. (Minority view):

(f) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 188---Original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution - Scope---Said jurisdiction cannot be exercised as a parallel review jurisdiction, and a judgment or an order of the Supreme Court can never be challenged by virtue of filing independent proceedings under Article 184(3) of the Constitution---Such course is absolutely impermissible.

(g) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 188---Review jurisdiction of the Supreme Court---Scope---When a Court sits to review its judgment it does not sit in appeal over its own judgment but proceeds to have a fresh look at it within the limits of the review jurisdiction and for this purpose, it invokes the very same jurisdiction which it exercised earlier, whether it be appellate or original, and can modify its judgment in the exercise of that very jurisdiction---Review jurisdiction only provides a mode to re-invoke the jurisdiction earlier exercised, and thus takes colour from the nature of the jurisdiction exercised by the Court in passing the judgment under review; it cannot be said to be some independent jurisdiction other than the jurisdiction exercised by the Court when the judgment under review was passed.

(h) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 19A---Right to information---Scope---Matter of public importance---Provisions of Article 19A of the Constitution do not contain an abstract guiding principle, rather confer a justiciable right---Right to have access to information in all matters of public importance conferred by Article 19A is a corrective apparatus, which allows public scrutiny to the working of the public authorities and institutions, and makes them answerable to the public, thus, it ensures transparency and accountability in the functioning of all public authorities and institutions---Right conferred by Article 19A is effective in operation and extensive in scope: it is though subject to, but is not dependent for its effectiveness upon enactment of, a law that may provide for the regulation of, and reasonable restrictions on, such right and it comprehends all matters of public importance undertaken by all State institutions.

(l) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Part II, Chap. I---Fundamental rights---Positive and negative rights---Distinction stated.

The Constitution has conferred fundamental rights in positive as well as in negative language. The negative language of a fundamental right imposes a limitation on the power of the State and declares the corresponding guarantee as to the entitlement of the people to that right. The positive language of a fundamental right not only operates as a limitation on the power of the State but it also requires affirmative State action to protect and fulfill the right conferred. In view of this difference of language, the fundamental rights are sometimes classified into negative and positive rights: a negative right generally obliges inaction, a positive right requires action. The holder of a negative right is entitled to non-interference, while the holder of a positive right is entitled to the provision of some service. A negative right places a duty on the State not to interfere in certain areas where the citizens have the right to act in a certain way or the other and have their freedom of choice within the existing right; the State cannot encroach upon such freedom. A positive right, on the other hand, places an obligation on the State to take certain actions and measures to give effect to that right.

----Art. 19A---Right to information---Scope---Article 19A of the Constitution creates a positive obligation on all State organs, authorities and institutions, including the Judiciary, to take the necessary measures to ensure the realization of the fundamental right of citizens to have access to information in matters of public importance.

(n) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 19A---Right to information---Progressive and dynamic interpretation---Approach of the Supreme Court to the interpretation of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution has been progressive, liberal and dynamic---Therefore, provisions of Article 19A of the Constitution have to be interpreted with a progressive, liberal and dynamic approach with which the Supreme Court has been interpreting the other fundamental rights and the Court has to explore the modern means of enforcement of the right guaranteed by Article 19A, which have been made available by the latest technology of the day.

(p) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184, 185 & 188---Short order signed by a Judge of the Supreme Court before his retirement---Detailed reasons for the order released after date of retirement of the Judge---Principles relating to signing or recording the detailed reasons by a retired Judge of the Supreme Court stated.

Short orders are made and announced by the Supreme Court, after due application of the judicious mind to, and after due consideration of, the pleadings of the parties and their arguments in the light of the material available on record of cases for definite "reasons" that are present in the mind of the judges at the time of making those orders. Short orders are made due to paucity of time to record detailed "reasons" and due to the urgency of the matters involved. That is why the detailed reasons recorded later in support of the short orders always bear the date of the short order, not the date of recording those reasons. The expression used in the short orders, "for the reasons to be recorded later", clearly means that it is the act of recording reasons that is postponed to a later time, and not the act of creating or searching for the reasons. The latter meaning, if given, to the expression "reasons to be recorded later" would completely shatter the legal sanctity and validity of the short orders, and unsettle the well-settled legal position according to which the short orders made by the Supreme Court are fully operative orders, executable forthwith, and a party feeling aggrieved thereby is to avail his legal remedy of review within the prescribed period of limitation computing from the date of the short order, and not from the date of release of the detailed reasons recorded in support thereof.

A judge of the Supreme Court who has vacated his office on retirement joins the detailed reasons recorded by any of his colleagues in support of the short order made by them jointly or records his own reasons, in his status, capacity and authority he had on the date when that short order was made.

It is the status of a judge of the Supreme Court on the date of making the short order that is relevant at the time of recording the detailed reasons in support thereof and determines his authority to record such reasons. From the settled practice of the Supreme Court, according to which the detailed reasons recorded in support of a short order always bear the date of the short order, not the date of recording them, and the status and capacity of the judges as on the date of the short order, it is not hard to discern that it is the status, capacity and authority of a judge of the Supreme Court as on the date of the short order under which he records, after retirement, his reasons for making the short order or joins in the reasons recorded by some other judge if he finds that they are the same for which he made the short order.

MUNIB AKHTAR, J.---The learned petitioner in C.R.P. No. 296/2020 filed C.M.A. No. 1243/2021 ("CMA") seeking the following relief:

"Therefore, for the reasons stated above [in the CMA] this Hon'ble Court may be pleased to: (a) direct the State-owned Pakistan Television Corporation (PTV) to broadcast live the proceedings of the petitioner's case, (b) to direct the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA) to issue written instructions to all private channels that they cannot be restrained in any manner whatsoever from broadcasting the proceedings and (c) to order live streaming of court proceedings.

The prayer has been made in the best interest of justice."

2. The CMA was heard over several dates and was ultimately dismissed by a majority of 6:4 on 13.04.2020, when the following short orders were made (reported as Justice Qazi Faez Isa and others v. President of Pakistan and others PLD 2021 SC 595):

[per Umar Ata Bandial, Sajjad Ali Shah, Munib Akhtar, Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ.:]

"For reasons to be recorded later, this Misc. Application is dismissed. However, the right of the people to have access to information in matters of public importance under Article 19-A of the Constitution is recognized, the details and modalities of which are to be decided by the Full Court on the administrative side."

[per Maqbool Baqar, Manzoor Ahmed Malik, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ.:]

"For the reasons to be recorded later, we dispose of the miscellaneous application (C.M.A. No.1243/2021) filed by the Petitioner in review petition (CR.P. No.296/2020) in the following terms:

i) Article 19-A of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") creates an obligation on State institution, including the Judiciary, to take the necessary measures to ensure realization of the fundamental right of citizens to have access to information in matters of public importance. Cases under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, including review petitions and other matters arising therein, are matters of public importance, and the public has a right to know and see how proceedings in these cases are conducted and concluded by the Court. We, therefore, hold that Live Streaming (audio and video) of Court hearings of these cases should be made available for information of the public through a link on the official website of this Court, and for this purpose the Registrar of this Court should take steps to provide for the requisite technological infrastructure and make arrangements for necessary amendments in the Rules under Article 191 of the Constitution to regulate its practice and procedure in this regard;

ii) Keeping in view the current state of technological infrastructure available in this Court and the fact that the review petitions filed in the case are fixed for hearing, we direct the audio recording of the proceedings of the court hearings of the said review petitions to be made available to the public through a link on the official website of this Court. The Registrar of this Court shall ensure that the un-edited audio recording of the proceedings of the court hearing of the review petitions is made available to the public on the official website of the Court on the same day soon after the hearing and before the close of the working hours."

[per Yahya Afridi, J.:]

"For the reasons already recorded in my judgment delivered in Constitution Petition No. 17 of 2019, the present Civil Miscellaneous Application No.1243 of 2021 is dismissed, as the relief sought by the petitioner would "negate the very spirit of the oath taken by the petitioning Judge".

2. However, for the reasons to be recorded later, I find the right of the public to have access to live-streaming or audio-video recording, written transcript or any other medium, of the court hearings in the proceedings of public importance, including those under Articles 184(3) and 186 of the Constitution, is their fundamental right under Article 19A of the Constitution. The Registrar of this Court is, therefore, directed to place the matter before the Full Court for appropriate steps as it deems fit, under Article 191 of the Constitution, to effectuate this fundamental right of the public."

The Order of the Court was as follows:

"By majority of 6 to 4 (Maqbool Baqar, J; Manzoor Ahmad Malik, J; Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, J and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J dissenting), Civil Misc. Application No. 1243 of 2021 is dismissed."

3. The following are our reasons for dismissing the CMA.

4. The learned petitioner, who appeared on his own behalf, anchored and seated his case in support of the CMA in the well known legal precept that justice must not only be done, it should be seen to be done. As is well known, this fundamental rule, essential for the dispensation of justice, was stated in the form in which it is best known by Lord Hewart, CJ, who famously said in R v Sussex Justices ex parte McCarthy [1924] 1 KB 256, [1923] EWHC KB 1 as follows: "... a long line of cases shows that it is not merely of some importance but is of fundamental importance that justice should not only be done, but should manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done".

5. The learned petitioner began his submissions by drawing attention to Article IV of the Code of Conduct formulated for Judges of the Supreme Court and the High Courts by the Supreme Judicial Council under Article 209(8) of the Constitution, where express reference is made to the aforementioned rule in the second paragraph. It was submitted that since the rule lay at the heart of the code of conduct to which Judges had to adhere, it was vitally important that it be applied with vigor. The CMA was filed to ensure that justice should be seen to be done in the instant case, i.e., the review petitions being heard by the Court. It was submitted that it was important that the public at large should actually see justice being done, which could only be ensured by giving them access to the proceedings and hearings in terms as prayed for in the CMA. In support of his case, the learned petitioner gave a homely example, referring to his young granddaughter who, when asked whether she saw justice, replied that she only saw it when she came to the Court, or on TV. And, even though the courtroom was almost invariably packed on the days that the review petitions were fixed for hearing, the learned petitioner submitted that that represented only a tiny sliver of the public. Even though the hearings were in open court to which members of the public (including the press) had access that was not the same as the public at large having the opportunity to hear and see the proceedings for themselves. It was for that reason that relief was prayed for as in the CMA. In support of his prayer, the learned petitioner, inter alia, referred to local and foreign case-law. In particular, he relied on two cases: National Director of Public Prosecutions v. Media 24 Limited and others [2017] ZASCA 97 decided by the Supreme Court of Appeal of South Africa ("NDPP") and Swapnil Tripathi v. Supreme Court of India AIR 2018 SC 4806 ("Swapnil") decided by the Supreme Court of India.

6. We intend no disrespect for not immediately engaging with the submissions made by the learned petitioner in support of his application. The reason is that the learned Additional Attorney General ("AAG") in reply raised a preliminary objection that needs to be considered first. It is only if the legal hurdle thrown up by this objection is crossed that there will be a need to consider in detail the submissions made by the learned petitioner.

7. The learned AAG opposed the application on two main grounds:

a. The application was not maintainable as it had been filed in review jurisdiction under Article 188 of the Constitution, which by its nature was limited; and

b. There was no constitutional or statutory right available which provided for public broadcast and/or live streaming of proceedings of the Court.

8. The preliminary issue as to maintainability was in the context of the main petitions being an invocation of the review jurisdiction of the Court. The learned AAG submitted that to invoke the fundamental right of access to information under Articles 19 and/or 19A of the Constitution (which plea sustained the CMA) the proper course would have been for the learned petitioner to file a petition under Article 184(3). In this regard, Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("SCR"), which relates only to the review jurisdiction, was referred to show that an application for enforcement of fundamental rights under Article 184(3) of the Constitution did not lie in terms thereof. Such petitions /applications are treated in the SCR under Order XXV and it was submitted that the two courses could not be conflated and intermingled. Therefore, it was submitted, the CMA was not maintainable and ought to be dismissed.

9. In response to the preliminary objection, the learned petitioner relied on Order XXXIII, Rule 6 SCR. This well known rule relates to the inherent powers of the Court and is in the following terms:

"Nothing in these Rules shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent powers of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court."

The learned petitioner submitted that the Court had ample powers under the afore-mentioned Rule to make an order of any nature which would further the "ends of justice" or "prevent abuse of the process of the Court". He added that the transgressions and illegalities committed by the respondents in his case necessitated public broadcast and/or live streaming of the review proceedings so that the public would become aware of the truth. He, therefore, contended that the present case was a fit one for the Court to exercise its powers under Rule 6.

10. We have carefully considered the preliminary objection and the reply thereto. Certainly, the prayer made in the CMA, as candidly (and quite properly) accepted by the learned petitioner himself, is novel. As far as the records show no such request has previously been made. In essence, the CMA seeks enforcement of two fundamental rights, namely, freedom of speech (Article 19) and right to information (Article 19A). While there is no cavil with the proposition that petitions filed to enforce fundamental rights are to be appreciated, it needs also to be ensured that these are processed through proper channels. Procedural law has to be complied with; otherwise, the judicial system will enter chaos. Therefore, with respect, regardless of how (and not just jurisprudentially) important the claim put forward by a miscellaneous application may be, it cannot be lost sight of that what were before the Court were petitions inviting the exercise of review jurisdiction under Article 188. As has already been elaborated upon in other judgments and decisions (including those emanating from these very review petitions), this jurisdiction is far more restricted in scope compared to the original jurisdiction exercisable under Article 184(3). In short: in review jurisdiction the Court can only determine whether a material irregularity has been committed in the judgment under review and, even if the answer be in the affirmative, it must further be shown that the irregularity has had a substantial effect on the outcome of the case. Reference may be made to the leading case of Mohammad Amir Khan v. Controller of Estate Duty PLD 1962 SC 335 at 340. As is clear even on a bare perusal, the CMA, with respect, raises an altogether new prayer that has no nexus with the review jurisdiction of the Court.

11. In contrast to the position when review jurisdiction is being exercised, the Court, when treating a matter in its jurisdiction under Article 184(3), can pass any order of the nature mentioned in Article 199 if two requirements are satisfied: firstly, the case raises a question of public importance and secondly, it is related to a violation of any fundamental right(s). (This is of course only a summary statement of the jurisdiction, which has over the years developed a rich and complex jurisprudence. What has just been said must be read in the light of the relevant case law.) However, what is relevant for present purposes is that it is Article 184(3), and not Article 188, that would be the proper vehicle for considering relief of the nature sought by, and through, the CMA. Even the case from the Indian jurisdiction cited by the learned petitioner (noted above) tends to show this. In Swapnil the jurisdiction of the Indian Supreme Court was invoked under Article 32 of their Constitution (which can be treated as equivalent to our Article 184(3)) for live streaming of cases of constitutional importance having an impact on the public at large. Therefore, even on the basis of the case-law cited by the learned petitioner the CMA involves adjudication of substantive law issues and, with respect, appears to be wrongly filed as a miscellaneous matter in the review jurisdiction of the Court. In our view therefore there appears to be force in the preliminary objection taken.

12. As noted above, the learned petitioner sought to rely on Order XXXIII, Rule 6 to overcome the objection of maintainability. With respect, we are unable to agree that the hurdle can be crossed in this manner. The said Rule has no relevance to the facts of this case, in the context of the CMA. It can be invoked by the Court to either further the "ends of justice" or to "prevent abuse of the process of the Court". However, neither of these conditions is engaged in the present context. With respect, it cannot be that the "ends of justice" will be defeated or there will be an "abuse of the process of the Court" if the relief sought in the CMA is not allowed, i.e., public broadcast and/or live streaming of the review proceedings is denied. The primary reason put forward by the learned petitioner was his and his family's constant public humiliation and degradation at the hands of the respondents. Now even if it be accepted that the learned petitioner's reputation (and that of his family) has been tarnished by the acts of the respondents in the manner as contended, no cogent reason was put forward as to how hearings in the present matters, held according to settled practice and time honored principles, would prevent the alleged negative publicity surrounding him from being dispelled. After all, the Court (including of course this Bench) sits, and was sitting, as an "open court", a term which has been defined in Black's Law Dictionary, (10th ed., at page 1263) as being a "court session that the public is free to attend". This obvious point could not be denied and the learned petitioner very fairly conceded the same. However, his insistence was upon the anxiety that arose from the fact that even if the public was allowed to enter the courtroom, this access was subject to limitations such as space constraints (only intensified with the advent of Covid-19). As a result, he submitted, the vast majority of the public would be excluded from observing the review hearings. This apprehension of the learned petitioner is, with respect, without force. For it to be accepted would mean that until the advent of present-day means of communication and broadcast, which have only been around in the modern era, there have never been open and public hearings in the courts of law. What has happened for many centuries prior thereto and is accepted as such even today all around the world-that is, that the open court system is quite sufficient to ensure transparency and openness in the judicial system and of court proceedings-would be cast in doubt, if not abandoned altogether. Such a result cannot, with respect, be countenanced on any view of the matter. Furthermore, it is to be noted that the public, which is always welcome to sit in the open court proceedings, includes members of the press (and also, which is a distinctly recent phenomenon, vloggers and bloggers). They are free to witness Court proceedings and frequently do so. Certainly, they appear to have attended in droves to witness the proceedings both in these review petitions and the proceedings in relation to the hearing of the petitions under Article 184(3) from which these petitions emanate. If therefore the learned petitioner's primary aim was to disseminate his narrative to the public at large, this task can be easily performed, and has been duly performed all along by the journalists and vloggers/bloggers who have throughout closely followed all the proceedings, including his arguments, in Court. Insofar as his expressed anxiety about incorrect reporting is concerned that, with respect, shows little respect for the press and vloggers/bloggers and belittles their efforts and reporting, which is not warranted. In any case it is an accusation (whether stated expressly or impliedly) for which the Court cannot provide a remedy unless (which is altogether a different matter) the reporting falls within the parameters of contempt as set out in Article 204 of the Constitution. No doubt any alleged misleading reporting of Court proceedings (unfortunate as it may be and as to which we record no finding whatsoever) is of acute discomfiture to the party concerned. However, as has been said in the UK Court of Appeal in R v Central Independent Television plc [ 1994] 3 All ER 641 (per Hoffman LJ (as he then was)):

"...Newspapers are sometimes irresponsible and their motives in a market economy cannot be expected to be unalloyed by considerations of commercial advantage. And publication may cause needless pain, distress and damage to individuals or harm to other aspects of the public interest. But a freedom which is restricted to what judges think to be responsible or in the public interest is no freedom. Freedom means the right to publish things which government and judges, however well motivated, think should not be published. It means the right to say things which 'right-thinking people' regard as dangerous or irresponsible. This freedom is subject only to clearly defined exceptions laid down by common law or statute... It cannot be too strongly emphasised that outside the established exceptions (or any new ones which Parliament may enact in accordance with its obligations under the convention) there is no question of balancing freedom of speech against other interests. It is a trump card which always wins." (emphasis supplied)

13. In view of the above discussion, we therefore concluded that the preliminary objection taken by the learned AAG had to be sustained and, with respect, the CMA dismissed as not maintainable, on account of being incompetent in the review jurisdiction of the Court.

14. The foregoing is dispositive of the CMA. However, it would not be inappropriate to say something about the substantive law questions raised in the CMA, even if such be only on a tentative and provisional basis. We start with a basic premise: the judicial system should, administratively speaking, be alive and alert, and responsive, to technological advances and changes that can enhance the transparency and openness of judicial proceedings. An approach that smacks of Luddite thinking should be avoided. But at the same time it should be kept in mind-and this is the corollary- that one need not be dazzled and mesmerized by advances in technology. It must always be remembered that technology is merely a tool and an aid. It is, to use an old fashioned phrase, the servant and not the master. And, if one may borrow a phrase from a different context, simply because yes, we (technologically) can, that does not mean that we, therefore, necessarily must. This side of the coin-the corollary-is unfortunately often lost sight of in the razzmatazz of the Internet age. A sober and robust approach is much to be preferred.

15. Having said that, let us nonetheless return to the basic premise: technological developments should be monitored and appreciated, to ensure that access to justice for litigants is constantly improving. Our dismissal of the CMA should not therefore be construed as an absolute refusal of public broadcast and/or live streaming of Court proceedings. Instead, it should be understood as an exercise in judicial restraint and caution. We are aware that judicial systems around the world are experimenting with cameras in the courtroom. Some are regularly broadcasting /live streaming their proceedings while others are participating in pilot projects. In the former category, we have the UK and Canadian Supreme Courts who have permitted live streaming of their cases since long (the links can be found on their official websites). In the latter group, we have the State and Federal Courts of the USA, all of which are at varying stages in terms of allowing broadcasting of their hearings.

16. We have already expressed the view that the relief sought through the CMA is novel. As a result, there have been no judicial pronouncements by this Court on the merits and demerits of allowing public broadcast and/or live streaming of Court proceedings. However, the decision rendered by the Indian Supreme Court, noted above, provides insight into the factors which may be considered by a Court while deciding a petition seeking such relief, and the manner in which it is to be disposed of. The matter in Swapnil was in essence a public interest litigation filed by a group of public-spirited persons who sought "Supreme Court case proceedings of constitutional importance having an impact on the public at large or a large number of people to be live streamed in a manner that is easily accessible for public viewing" and for "guidelines to be framed to enable the determination of exceptional cases that qualify for live streaming and to place those guidelines before the Full Court of this Court". The Court allowed the petition but emphasized the issues which had to be sorted out before such live streaming could be permitted. A few of these are listed below for reference:

a. How will the live streaming project be phased;

b. In what categories of cases will live streaming not be permitted;

c. What types of communications will not be streamed;

d. Would Judges/Court have power to disallow live streaming in the interests of justice;

e. How would the identity of witnesses, accused and complainants who wished to remain anonymous be protected;

f. What equipment would be used to live stream proceedings;

g. In what manner would live streaming be done;

h. How much time lag will be provided during the live streaming to ensure that sensitive/ confidential information is not revealed;

i. How would the cameras be positioned; and

j. Would the Court retain copyright over the recorded proceedings?

17. A somewhat similar approach was taken in NDPP, the other case noted above from South Africa. Although that matter was only concerned with the broadcast of criminal trials, the principles laid down appear to be of general application. In that case the Court accepted that trial court proceedings could be televised but it did not set down any fixed rules to regulate such broadcast and instead left it to the discretion of each trial court to determine whether a case before it is fit for live telecast. The Supreme Court of Appeal also acknowledged that in allowing the broadcast of court proceedings, the following stakeholders' interests would need to be considered:

a. The interests of the prosecuting authority, the accused and the public to hold a trial that is fair and is seen to be fair;

b. The interests of the media and the public in maintaining freedom of the press and in ensuring open justice;

c. The interests of the participants in the trial process; and

d. The interests of the Court and the public in maintaining the dignity and decorum in the administration of justice.

18. It is significant that these judgments confirm that a decision on public broadcast and/or live streaming cannot be taken hastily. Instead, it is a matter which requires careful consideration of multiple factors and participation of the different stakeholders involved in the judicial system. As a result, this exercise cannot be carried out on the judicial side but can only be deliberated upon on and be approved by the Court in its administrative manifestation. This is evident from the experience of the Indian Supreme Court which referred the matter of live streaming to the Chief Justice for further action. In fact, even in this Court similar matters have been determined by the Full Court sitting on the administrative side, e.g., approval for setting up of video links for hearing cases at the principal seat and the branch registries was given by the Full Court after an extensive discussion. This was followed by the constitution of an IT Committee which was tasked with examining the matter and recommending appropriate solutions. At no stage was the issue referred to in, or decided by, a judicial order. In our view, there appears to be a certain overlap (both technologically and otherwise) between granting permission for hearings through video link and for permitting public broadcast/live streaming of Court proceedings.

19. Accordingly, keeping in view the evolving practice of the Courts around the world and acknowledging the benefits of technology for the justice system, we refer the matter of public broadcast and live streaming of Court proceedings to the Hon'ble Chief Justice so that he may place it before the Full Court for deliberation and appropriate action.

20. The foregoing are the reasons for our short order, noted above, in terms of which the CMA was dismissed.

Preface

This application raises the questions, whether the time has come to open our court-room and allow public access to judicial proceedings through live audio-video streaming. "Sunshine is said to be the best of disinfectants"[1]; we need to ask ourselves whether the traditional closed architecture of our court-room needs to be redesigned to allow sunshine of public access through live audio-video streaming ? Should we embrace technology and align ourselves with the modern judiciaries of the world by giving online access to the public to our court proceedings? And do we wish to make our justice system more transparent by holding judicial proceedings in public gaze?

2. This Court being at the apex of the judicial hierarchy of the country is often the final arbiter of the constitutional questions having a profound effect on all and sundry. The cases involving questions of public importance with reference to the enforcement of fundamental rights of the citizens, which are heard by this Court in its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, have a distinct characteristic: the Court, in these cases, acts as the first and the final arbiter. The uniqueness of this jurisdiction exercised by the Court at times invites criticism of judicial overreach.[2] Would not the openness of the Court to public through live streaming be an effective restraint on the possible misuse of judicial power under this jurisdiction ?

3. "Democracies die behind closed doors ... When government begins closing doors, it selectively controls information rightfully belonging to the people. Selective information is misinformation."[3] Openness serves to ensure the durability of democracy. No organ of the State, however, has remained a greater mystery to people than the Judiciary. Live-streaming of the court proceedings could demystify the Judiciary and make it truly a public institution. Would it not give the people a better understanding of the working of the Court, and reassure them that their fundamental rights are being protected and enforced by the Court in its jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution?

Prayer of the petitioner

4. The petitioner, Justice Qazi Faez Isa, has prayed that this Court may order live-streaming of the court proceedings of his case (review petitions), and direct the State-owned Pakistan Television Corporation (PTV) to broadcast live proceedings of his case and the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA) to issue written instructions to all private television channels that they cannot be restrained in any manner whatsoever from broadcasting the proceedings.

Factual background

5. Before describing the assertions of the petitioner made in the present application, it would be proper to give a brief background of the case, to comprehend the context of the prayer of the petitioner. A Reference under Article 209 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") was filed by the President of Pakistan on the advice of the Prime Minister of Pakistan against the petitioner in the Supreme Judicial Council of Pakistan ("Council"), alleging commission of misconduct mainly on the basis of his non-disclosure of certain foreign properties of his family members in the declaration of his assets filed with the annual income tax returns. The Council commenced proceedings against the petitioner on the said Reference. The petitioner, and many Bar Councils and Bar Associations of the country, challenged the action of the President, of filing the said Reference and also the proceedings of the Council commenced on the basis thereof, in this Court invoking its original jurisdiction by filing constitution petitions under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. Those constitution petitions were allowed by this Court: the Reference filed against the petitioner was quashed and the proceedings before the Council were declared abated. However, the Court also made certain directions to the officers of the Federal Board of Revenue, Pakistan to initiate proceedings against the petitioner's family members under the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 and to submit a report regarding determination made in those proceedings to the Council, and the Council was asked to consider the matter in exercise of its suo motu powers, for such proceedings in relation to the petitioner as it may deem appropriate. It is against these directions of the Court that the petitioner, his spouse, and some Bar Councils and Bar Associations have filed the review petitions. And before arguing on his review petition, the petitioner has filed the present application.

Assertions of the petitioner

6. The petitioner has asserted in the application that immediately after the President of Pakistan sent the Reference against him to the Council, the contents of the Reference were leaked to the media, and the same were broadcast on television channels and published in newspapers. An unrelenting false propaganda campaign was launched against him. He, as a Judge of the Supreme Court, was handicapped to hold a press conference to rebut or respond to the allegations, while the official respondents with their iron grip on the media ensured that the contents of his reply filed in the Reference were neither broadcast nor published. The Law Minister sensationalized the matter by making false statements to the media, and the President of Pakistan, in his three television interviews, elaborated upon the Reference when the matter was pending adjudication before this Court in the constitution petitions. The tactics of the official respondents formed a negative public opinion about the petitioner and his family, and whether he survives as a Judge or not, his reputation has been tarnished by the negative propaganda. Although the irreparable harm already caused to him cannot be undone; however, to restore a semblance and to correct the public perception, all future proceedings in his case may be directed to be broadcast live and/or live-streamed. Broadcasting and/or live-streaming of the court proceedings would be an affirmation of the Fundamental Rights of the petitioner and of the public, and would also be a testament to accountability and transparency.

Stance of the other parties

7. Learned counsel for the petitioners in the other connected review petitions supported the prayer of the petitioner, while the learned Additional Attorneys-General who appeared before the Court on behalf of the some of the respondents, i.e., Federal Government, President of Pakistan, Prime Minister and the Attorney-General for Pakistan ("contesting respondents"), opposed it mainly on the ground that the prayer of the petitioner made through a miscellaneous application, and that too, filed in a review petition is not maintainable, besides there is no fundamental right of the public to have access to information of the court-proceedings through livestreaming or broadcasting of the same. They contended that the Court could take up and decide the questions involved in the present application only on a separate and independent petition under Article 184(3) of the Constitution.

8. After hearing the arguments of the petitioner and the contesting respondents at length, we disposed of the application of the petitioner, for the reasons to be recorded later, vide our short order dated 13.04.2021 in the following terms:

Short order

(i) Article 19-A of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") creates an obligation on State institutions, including the Judiciary, to take the necessary measures to ensure realization of the fundamental right of citizens to have access to information in matters of public importance. Cases under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, including review petitions and other matters arising therein, are matters of public importance, and the public has a right to know and see how proceedings in these cases are conducted and concluded by the Court. We, therefore, hold that Live Streaming (audio and video) of court hearings of these cases should be made available for information of the public through a link on the official website of this Court, and for this purpose the Registrar of this Court should take steps to provide for the requisite technological infrastructure and make arrangements for necessary amendments in the Rules under Article 191 of the Constitution to regulate its practice and procedure in this regard;

(ii) Keeping in view the current state of technological infrastructure available in this Court and the fact that the review petitions filed in the case are fixed for hearing, we direct the audio recording of the proceedings of the court hearings of the said review petitions to be made available to the public through a link on the official website of this Court. The Registrar of this Court shall ensure that the un-edited audio recording of the proceedings of the court hearing of the review petitions is made available to the public on the official website of the Court on the same day soon after the hearing and before the close of the working hours.

In this discourse, we undertake to describe our reasons for the above order.

Questions for determination

9. At the outset, we want to make it clear that although the pro and contra arguments were advanced as to the broader concepts of 'open trial' and 'open justice' and 'live-streaming' of all cases in all courts of the country, we being cognizant of the procedural aspect of the principle of judicial restraint that requires "if it is not necessary to decide more, it is necessary not to decide more"[4], restrict ourselves only to the determination of the questions that are necessary for decision on the prayer made in the present application, viz:

(i) Whether it is the fundamental right of the public to have access to information as to the court-proceedings of the cases heard by this Court in its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, including review petitions and other matters arising therein.

(ii) If so, whether there is any obligation of this Court to provide the public the access to information of the court-proceedings of such cases through livestreaming.

There is a serious "risk of error or misconception which inevitably attends judicial efforts to declare the law at large and in general terms outside of the points really raised by the facts of the case."[5] It would, therefore, be appropriate to examine the broader question of live-streaming of all cases heard by this Court or of all cases heard by all courts of the country, in some case where this matter is agitated as a main question, and not as an ancillary one raised in a miscellaneous application. We, therefore, leave this broader question to be examined and decided in some other appropriate case.

Objection as to maintainability of prayer through a miscellaneous application

10. Before embarking upon the discussion on the above questions, we would like to deal with the preliminary objection of the contesting respondents. We find that the objection of the contesting respondents as to the maintainability of the prayer made through a miscellaneous application filed in a review petition is misconceived. The misconception, we think, has partly occurred due to the submissions made by the parties during arguments on the application, which were not restricted to the prayer made in the application rather were expanded to the broader questions of 'open trial' and 'open justice' and 'live-streaming' of all cases in all courts of the country, which we have decided to not take up in the present case. These questions can only be taken up and decided on an independent petition under Article 184(3) of the Constitution filed only for this purpose, and not on a miscellaneous application like the present one, filed as an ancillary matter to the main case agitating some other grievance.

11. But the prayer made in the present application for livestreaming and broadcasting on PTV and other television channels, the court-proceedings of this case can be decided only by this Bench in this case, and cannot be agitated through filing a separate constitution petition under Article 184(3); for such a petition, if filed, may then be entrusted to and heard by any other Bench of this Court. Needless to say that each Bench of this Court, whether small or large, exercises the judicial powers vested in the Court, and a decision rendered by it, irrespective of its numeric strength, is considered the decision of the Court. Thus, one Bench of this Court cannot deal with an ancillary or incidental matter pertaining to a case being heard by another Bench. This legal position may be elucidated by a presumptive question: If this Bench decides to either allow or disallow the prayer made in the present application, whether any other Bench of this Court can reverse such order of this Bench, on a separate petition under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, and can direct this Bench to livestream, or restrain it from livestreaming, the court-proceedings of this case. The answer is a clear-cut "No", and for reaching this answer, one does not need to do any intense brainstorming. There is no such jurisdiction conferred on this Court by the Constitution, or by or under any law, in terms of Article 175(2) of the Constitution. Even, this Bench also cannot review its order made on the present application, on a separate petition filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. For the original jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, as authoritatively held by a 7-member Bench of this Court by a unanimous decision in Shabbar Raza v. Federation[6], "cannot be exercised as a parallel review jurisdiction", and a judgment or an order of this Court "can never be challenged by virtue of filing independent proceedings under Article 184(3) of the Constitution"; such course is "absolutely impermissible". It is thus only this Bench, and no other, that can decide on the prayer made in the present application, that too only on a miscellaneous application as the present one, and not on a separate and independent petition under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. The objection of the contesting respondent is found meritless and is therefore rejected.

12. Now, we proceed to deal with the substantive question (i), above cited, as to the claimed fundamental right of the public to have access to information of the court-proceedings of the cases heard by this Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution and of the review proceedings in such cases. However, before commencing the discussion thereon, we would like to clarify that we have specifically included the "review proceedings" in the question, as when a Court sits to review its judgment it does not sit in appeal over its own judgment but proceeds to have a fresh look at it within the limits of the review jurisdiction and for this purpose, it invokes the very same jurisdiction which it exercised earlier, whether it be appellate or original, and can modify its judgment in the exercise of that very jurisdiction. The review jurisdiction only provides a mode to re-invoke the jurisdiction earlier exercised, and thus takes colour from the nature of the jurisdiction exercised by the Court in passing the judgment under review; it cannot be said to be some independent jurisdiction other than the jurisdiction exercised by the Court when the judgment under review was passed.[7]

(i) Fundamental right of the public to have access to information of the court-proceedings of cases heard under Article 184(3)

(a) Reliance on Article 19A of the Constitution

13. To establish that the public has a fundamental right to have access to information as to the court proceedings of the cases heard by this Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, the petitioner has referred to the right to access to justice comprised in the fundamental right to life and liberty guaranteed under Article 9, the right to a fair trial guaranteed under Article 10A, the right to freedom of expression and freedom of the press guaranteed under Article 19 and the right to information guaranteed under Article 19A of the Constitution. We find that rights guaranteed under Articles 9, 10A and 19 of the Constitution may be relevant for determination of the broader question of live-streaming of all cases heard by this Court or of cases heard by all courts of the country, which we have left to be determined in some other appropriate case, but for the questions being considered for the decision of the prayer made in the present application, the provisions of Article 19A of the Constitution that guarantees right to information, appear to us, to be the most significant, which are reproduced hereunder for ready reference:

19A. Right to information: Every citizen shall have the right to have access to information in all matters of public importance subject to regulation and reasonable restrictions imposed by law.

(Emphasis added)

Article 19A was added to the Constitution by the Constitution (18th Amendment) Act, 2010. Since then, it has been a subject of discussion and interpretation by the constitutional courts of the country in several cases. Observations made in some of those cases, which are relevant for the present case, are briefly cited here.

(b) Overview of the previous opinions of Constitutional Courts on Article 19A of the Constitution

13.1 Probably for the first time, the addition of this Article in the Constitution was noted by a division bench of the Lahore High Court in the case of Atta Ullah v. Federation[8], in the year 2010; one of us (Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J.) speaking for the bench observed that "Article 19A of the Constitution is a recent and welcome addition to the chapter of fundamental rights under the Constitution.... Right to information is another corrective tool, which allows public access to the working and decision making of the public authorities. It opens the working of public administration to public scrutiny... Article 19A empowers the civil society of this country to seek information from public institutions and hold them answerable."

13.2 In the same year, i.e., the year 2010, this Court also noticed the then-recent addition of Article 19A in the Constitution in the case of Shahid Masood v. Federation,[9] hearing two constitution petitions filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, that had agitated the grievance as to the breach of the fundamental rights alleging closure and suspension of broadcasting and transmission of some T.V. Channels by the licensed T.V. Cable Operators. The Court observed that the importance and weight attached to the obligations of the Cable T.V. Network Operators to offer undisturbed distribution of service "is not far to find as the same stems out of the fundamental rights of freedom of speech, expression and of press as guaranteed by Article 19 of the Constitution and equally importantly, if not more, the right of every citizen to have access to information in all matters of public importance as guaranteed by the recently inserted provisions of Article 19-A of the Constitution." Ensuring accountability, transparency and good governance by optimizing the free flow of information was highlighted by the Court as one of the objects of the promulgation of the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA) Ordinance, 2002.

13.3 In the case of Muhammad Masood v. S.M. Corporation,[10] very important observations were made by a division bench of the Sindh High Court as to the scope and extent of the right conferred by Article 19A of the Constitution. The division bench observed: "A perusal of the Article [19A] indicates that every citizen has been conferred a right to have access to information in all matters of public importance, however, subject firstly to regulations and secondly to reasonable restrictions by law. There is no disagreement that no such regulations have been framed. Non-framing of the regulations cannot have effect of rendering the right guaranteed by Article 19-A as nugatory. Therefore, even if no regulations are framed this right is available to all the citizens. In the absence of regulations and in the absence of restrictions task will be thrown to the Court to determine whether request for information in a particular case or denial of information in a particular case is reasonable."[11]

13.4 The significance of the insertion of Article 19A in the Constitution was underlined by Justice Jawwad S. Khawaja, the then Judge of this Court, in the case of Watan Party v. Federation[12] by describing it to be a "major constitutional change". His lordship observed that "the people of Pakistan have been, at times, disserved by a non-inclusive governance paradigm where information critical to them has been withheld from them. Pakistan has faced many crises of public importance... but the citizens of Pakistan, the most direct affectees, have remained clueless and uninformed as to the causes or the progenitors of the multiple crises in our history ... The people in quest of the truth have mostly been left with conjectures, rumours and half-truths. Concealment of information has, in turn, led to a distorted history of the country and to a destabilizing division in the polity." He noted: "This paradigm has shifted through the recent incorporation of Article 19A in the Constitution. By virtue of the said Article the right of a citizen to have information 'in all matters of public importance' is made a fundamental right which is guaranteed by the Constitution ... Article 184 (3) read in conjunction with Article 19A has empowered the citizens of Pakistan by making access to information a justiciable right of the People rather than being largesse bestowed by the State at its whim. Article 19A has thus, enabled every citizen to become independent of power centres which, heretofore, have been in control of information on matters of public importance... This provides for and makes good a crucial missing element of responsible State governance in our Constitutional scheme."[13]

13.5 A full bench of the Lahore High Court made an exhaustive discussion in the case of Province of Punjab v. Qaisar Iqbal[14] on the scope of Article 19A of the Constitution by referring to the previous cases of our jurisdiction as well as of foreign jurisdictions. The full bench, in that case, was hearing intra court appeals against the judgment passed by a single bench of that court, whereby the single bench had directed the Government of Punjab to provide a copy of the report of the Inquiry Tribunal appointed under the Punjab Tribunal of Inquiry Ordinance 1969, to the petitioners. The full bench not only maintained the judgment of the single bench, rather made further direction that the inquiry report of the Tribunal should also be published by the concerned authorities for public information. The full bench observed: "Under clause [sic: Article] 19-A of the Constitution, every citizen shall have the right to have access to information in matter of 'public importance'. The word 'public importance' used in Article 19-A of the Constitution is not defined term. However, term public importance according to dictionary meaning could be defined that 'question which affects and has its repercussions on the public at large and it also includes the purpose and aim in which the general interest of the community...is directly or widely concerned'....The reasons recorded by Government itself in its letter dated 17.06.2017 for holding inquiry, when [is] juxtapose[d] with the definition of 'public importance' narrated above, it can safely be concluded that the inquiry report of a Tribunal is a matter of public importance and every citizen has right under Article 19-A to have excess to this inquiry report, indeed subject to reasonable restrictions imposed by law. Even otherwise under section 3 of the Ordinance 1969, inquiry could only take place in [a] definite matter of public importance."[15]

14. Survey of the above cases shows that the constitutional courts of the country have appreciated the addition of Article 19A in the Constitution, as its addition in the Constitution has embedded and guaranteed responsible State governance in the Constitutional scheme. The provisions of Article 19A do not contain an abstract guiding principle, rather confer a justiciable right. The right to have access to information in all matters of public importance conferred by this Article is a corrective apparatus, which allows public scrutiny to the working of the public authorities and institutions, and makes them answerable to the public. It, thus, ensures transparency and accountability in the functioning of all public authorities and institutions. The right conferred by Article

19A is effective in operation and extensive in scope: it is though subject to, but is not dependent for its effectiveness upon enactment of, a law that may provide for the regulation of, and reasonable restrictions on, such right and it comprehends all matters of public importance undertaken by all State institutions.

(d) Meaning of the expression "matters of public importance"

15. The expression, "public importance", though has been used in Article 19A, but the same has not been defined therein. Earlier to the addition of Article 19A, the expression, "public importance" was already there in the provisions of Article 184(3), 186(1) and Article 212(3) of the Constitution. The provisions of Article 184(3), being the most relevant for the present matter, are reproduced hereunder for ease of reference:

Article 184(3)

Without prejudice to the provisions of Article 199, the Supreme Court shall, if it considers that a question of public importance with reference to the enforcement of any of the Fundamental Rights conferred by Chapter I of Part II is involved have the power to make an order of the nature mentioned in the said Article.

(Emphasis added)

The Constitution did not define the expression "public importance" used in Article 184(3) also; this expression had, therefore, been a subject of judicial interpretation since the very promulgation of the Constitution in the year 1973, and this Court had defined it in several cases heard under Article 184(3). A judicial definition of this expression was, thus, in field when the new Article 19A was added in the Constitution, in the year 2010. It appears that the Legislature being content with the judicial definition did not feel the need to provide the definition of the said expression while enacting the new Article 19A. Therefore, the judicial definition of the expression "public importance" which was in field till the year 2010 is relevant for determining what the Legislature intended to mean by using the said expression in Article 19A, as it is a well-settled principle of interpretation of statutes that ordinarily the same meaning is attached to an expression used in different parts of a statute unless the context in which the expression appears suggests otherwise.[16]

16. The expression, "public importance" used in Article 184(3) came up for interpretation before this Court, for the first time, in the case of Manzoor Elahi v. Federation[17]. Anwarul Haq, J., explained it thus:

Now, what is meant by a question of public importance. The term "public" is invariably employed in contradistinction to the terms private or individual, and connotes, as an adjective, something pertaining to, or belonging to, the people; relating to a nation, state, or community. In other words, it refers to something which is to be shared or participated in or enjoyed by the public at large, and is not limited or restricted to any particular class of the community. As observed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Hamabai Framjee Petit v. Secretary of State for India-in-Council I L R 39 Bom. 279 while construing the words public purpose such a phrase, whatever else it may mean must include a purpose, that is an object or aim, in which the general interest of the community, as opposed to the particular interest of individuals, is directly and vitally concerned". This definition appears to me to be equally applicable to the phrase "public importance." In order to acquire public importance, the case must obviously raise a question which is of interest to, or affects, the whole body of people or an entire community. In other words, the case must be such as gives rise to questions affecting the legal rights or liabilities of the public or the community at large, even though the individual, who is the subject-matter of the case, may be of no particular consequence.

This interpretation of the expression was approvingly referred to by the full court bench of this Court in the case of Benazir Bhutto v. Federation,[18] and it was further explained thus:

Lastly is the consideration of the connotation of the expression "public importance" which is tagged to the enforcement of the Fundamental Rights as a pre-condition of the exercise of the power. This should not be understood in a limited sense, but in the gamut of the constitutional rights of freedoms and liberties, their protection and invasion of such freedoms in a manner which raises a serious question regarding their enforcement. Such matters can be viewed as of public importance, whether they arise from an individual's case touching his human rights of liberty and freedom, or of a class or a group of persons as they would also be legitimately covered by this expression.

This interpretation made of the expression "public importance" in the cases of Manzur Ilahi and Benazir Bhutto was later-on followed by this Court in several cases.[19] Therefore, as per the said judicial definition, the expression "matters of public importance" used in Article 19A means the matters that pertain to and affect the public at large, a whole community, and not an individual or a small group of individuals; in other words, it includes the matters in which the general interest of a whole community, as opposed to the particular interest of individuals, is directly and vitally concerned. The adjective "public" necessarily implies a matter relating to the people at large, the nation, the State or a community as a whole; if a matter in which only a particular individual or group of individuals is interested and the people at large or an entire community have no interest, that cannot be treated as a matter of public importance.

(e) Cases heard under Article 184(3) are "matters of public importance"

17. Section 3 of the Punjab Tribunals of Inquiry Ordinance, 1969 empowers the Government of Punjab to appoint a Tribunal for the purpose of making an inquiry into any definite matter of public importance. For making direction that the inquiry report of the Tribunal should be published for public information, the full bench of the Lahore High Court reasoned, in Qaisar Iqbal case,[20] inter alia that the inquiry report of the Tribunal is a matter of public importance because under Section 3 of the Ordinance 1969 inquiry can only take place in a definite matter of public importance. We approve this reasoning of the Lahore High Court and adopt it for holding that the cases heard by this Court in its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution are matters of public importance, as for invoking the original jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution two conditions are necessary to be fulfilled: (i) the matter should be for the enforcement of any of the fundamental rights; and (ii) with reference to the enforcement of such fundamental right, the question involved should be of public importance.[21] These are the essential conditions for the exercise of the jurisdiction vested in this Court under Article 184(3).

18. In the present case also, this Court held in the judgment[22] under review that "examination of the jurisprudence of this Court makes it clear that in order to invoke its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, the impugned action must be shown to involve a matter of public importance arising from the breach of a fundamental right which affects the public at large."[23] The Court referred to and quoted the following observations made in the case of Al-Jehad Trust v. Lahore High Court[24]:

"11: ...unless the matter is of public importance relating to the enforcement of any of the fundamental rights conferred by Part II, Chapter 1 of the Constitution (Articles 8 to 28), the jurisdiction of the Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, cannot be invoked. The mere importance of a matter, without enforcement of any fundamental right or reference to a fundamental right without any public importance, will not attract the jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution."[25]

The Court concluded that the "fundamental right of the general public which is claimed by the petitioner to be under threat is the derivative right of the independence of the judiciary. This right is an essential prerequisite for the enjoyment of, inter alia, the principal fundamental right to access justice which is guaranteed to the people of Pakistan by Articles 4, 9 and 10-A of the Constitution"[26] and further held that "the petitioner has alleged that there have been serious violations of Article 209(5) of the Constitution in the preparation of the Reference against him... [I]nfringements of Article 209 erode the independence of the judiciary which is directly connected with the right to access justice. Therefore, the present petition satisfies the two-fold requirement of Article 184(3) of the Constitution."[27]

19. Thus, there remains no difficulty to conclude that the cases heard by this Court in its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, including review petitions and other matters arising therein, are matters of public importance within the meaning and scope of that expression used in Article 19A of the Constitution, as it is only when the "question of public importance" is involved that this Court can exercise its jurisdiction under Article 184(3) to make an order for the enforcement of any of the fundamental rights. The public, therefore, has a fundamental right under Article 19A of the Constitution to have access to information as to the court proceedings of the cases heard by this Court in its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, including to know and see how the court-proceedings in these cases are conducted and concluded by the Court.

(ii) Obligation of the Court to provide access to information of the court-proceedings of cases heard under Article 184(3) through livestreaming

20. Now we turn to question (ii). Opposing the prayer for livestreaming the court-proceedings of this case on behalf of the contesting respondents, the learned Additional Attorney-General submitted that the right of the public to have access to information as to the proceedings of cases heard by this Court under Article 184(3) is fulfilled as the doors of the Court are open for everyone, and anyone from the public can come in the Court and see the court-proceedings, and can also obtain the certified copy of the final decision made by the Court in such cases. The questions arise: whether this is sufficient enforcement of the fundamental right to have access to information so far as the proceedings of the cases heard under Article 184(3) are concerned, or whether there is any obligation on this Court to do something more for making enforcement of the said right.

(a) Article 19A creates a positive obligation

21. The Constitution has conferred fundamental rights in positive as well as in negative language. Article 19A has been couched in positive language: it guarantees to all citizens as a fundamental right that they shall have the right to have access to information in all matters of public importance. The negative language of a fundamental right imposes a limitation on the power of the State and declares the corresponding guarantee as to the entitlement of the people to that right. The positive language of a fundamental right not only operates as a limitation on the power of the State but it also requires affirmative State action to protect and fulfill the right conferred. In view of this difference of language, the fundamental rights are sometimes classified into negative and positive rights[28]: a negative right generally obliges inaction, a positive right requires action. The holder of a negative right is entitled to non-interference, while the holder of a positive right is entitled to the provision of some service. A negative right places a duty on the State not to interfere in certain areas where the citizens have the right to act in a certain way or the other and have their freedom of choice within the existing right; the State cannot encroach upon such freedom. A positive right, on the other hand, places an obligation on the State to take certain actions and measures to give effect to that right.

22. The positive language in which the right to information has been conferred by Article 19A makes it fall in the category of positive rights. This right, therefore, not only operates as a limitation on the power of the State to act in a manner that would negate the right of the citizens to have access to information in all matters of public importance, but it also requires the State to take some affirmative action to fulfill this right. The State is an abstract entity, which acts through its organs: the Legislature, the Executive and the Judiciary. The State's obligation with regard to the fundamental right conferred by Article 19A of the Constitution is, therefore, to be fulfilled by all its organs within the sphere of their authority and competence as prescribed under the Constitution and law. We, thus, find that Article 19A of the Constitution creates a positive obligation on all State organs, authorities and institutions, including the Judiciary, to take the necessary measures to ensure the realization of the fundamental right of citizens to have access to information in matters of public importance.

23. The contention of the learned Additional Attorney-General, as aforesaid, is that the right of the public to have access to information guaranteed by Article 19A is fulfilled, for the doors of the Court are open for everyone, and anyone from the public can come in the Court and see the court-proceedings. Pakistan's current population is estimated as more than 200 million people as per the provisional summary results of the 6th population census of 2017.[29] The obligation of this Court, under Article 19A, to give access to the public (people of Pakistan) to information of the court proceedings in the cases heard by it under Article 184(3) cannot be said to be fulfilled by allowing permission to come to the court-room and see the court-proceedings, as this facility may be availed of only by a few of the public who can afford travelling to the courthouse and are lucky enough to have a seat in the court-room, there being a very limited space. We are, therefore, not impressed by the said contention of the learned Additional Attorney-General; it appears to us to be misconceived and amounts to taking a very restrictive approach to the import, extent and scope of the provisions of Article 19A.

(b) Progressive and dynamic approach to interpret fundamental rights

24. The approach of this Court to the interpretation of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution has been progressive, liberal and dynamic since its very establishment and promulgation of the first Constitution of Pakistan, in 1956. As back as in 1957, Chief Justice Muhammad Munir made the observation that it is a fundamental canon of construction that a Constitution should receive a liberal interpretation in favour of the citizen.[30] Chief Justice Muhammad Haleem said in the year 1988 that "the Constitution is not an imprisonment of the past but is also alive to the unfolding of the future."[31] Chief Justice Nasim Hasan Shah held in 1993 that "[w]ith the passage of time and the evolution of civil society great changes occur in the political, social and economic conditions of society. There is, therefore, the corresponding need to re-evaluate the essence and soul of the fundamental rights as originally provided in the Constitution. They require to be construed in consonance with the changed conditions of the society and must be viewed and interpreted with a vision to the future."[32] Justice Shafi-ur-Rahman said that "[t]he Fundamental Rights guaranteed in any Constitution, an organic instrument, are not capable of precise or permanent definition. They cannot be charted on a piece of paper delineating their boundaries for all times to come."[33] And Justice Ajmal Mian held that "[a] Constitutional provision containing Fundamental Right is a permanent provision intended to cater for all time to come and, therefore, while interpreting such a provision the approach of the Court should be dynamic, progressive and liberal keeping in view ideals of the people, socio-economic and politico-cultural values (which in Pakistan are enshrined in the Objectives Resolution) so as to extend the benefit of the same to the maximum possible."[34]

25. With the said progressive and dynamic approach this Court, earlier to the insertion of Article 19A in the Constitution, had interpreted the provisions of Article 19 of the Constitution that guarantees the right to freedom of expression to include the right to receive information.[35] The right to receive information which was thus interpreted as a penumbra to the right to freedom of expression has now been recognized as a separate and independent fundamental right by the addition of Article 19A in the Constitution. We are, therefore, to interpret the provisions of Article 19A of the Constitution with the progressive, liberal and dynamic approach with which this Court has been interpreting the other fundamental rights[36] and to explore the modern means of enforcement of the right guaranteed by this Article, which have been made available by the latest technology of the day.

(c) Right of Access to Information Act, 2017 and Article 19A of the Constitution

26. The Right of Access to Information Act, 2017 ("Act") has been enacted by the Federal Legislature[37] in pursuance of the provisions of Article 19A of the Constitution. It appears that the Act is not applicable to this Court as Section 2(ix)(e) thereof has included only "any court, tribunal, commission or board under the Federal law" in the definition of "public body" for the purposes of that Act while this Court is established under the Constitution and not under any Federal law. While this question may be decided authoritatively in some other appropriate case, it prima facie appears that the Legislature has left to this Court the matter of regulating and imposing reasonable restrictions as to the right to have access to information in matters of public importance dealt with by, and relating to, it by making rules under Article 191 of the Constitution, which empowers this Court to make rules for regulating its practice and procedure. Such rules when made would, no doubt, be a "law" within the scope of this expression used in Article 19A but, as we have already observed, the right conferred by Article 19A is operative and justiciable even without making of the law envisaged therein for regulating and imposing reasonable restrictions on this right. Nevertheless, the general and broader principles, as to the enforcement of the fundamental right guaranteed under Article 19A of the Constitution, contained in the Act being the expression of the legislative wisdom of the Parliament of Pakistan, deserve due consideration and weight while determining the scope of the provisions of Article 19A and assessing the obligation of this Court thereunder until this Court makes the rules under Article 191 of the Constitution, in this regard.

27. Section 3(2) of the Act states that the Act is to be interpreted so as to advance its purposes as set out in the preamble, and (a) to promote the right of access to information and (b) facilitate and encourage promptly the disclosure of the information at the lowest and reasonable cost[38]. The preamble of the Act containing purposes of its enactment is cited below, for ready reference:

WHEREAS Government believes in transparency and the right to have access to information to ensure that the people of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan have improved access to records held by public authorities and promote the purposes of making the Government more accountable to its people, of improving participation by the people in public affairs, of reducing corruption and inefficiency in Government, of promoting sound economic growth, of promoting good governance and respect for human rights;

AND WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for a law which gives effect to the fundamental right of access to information, as guaranteed under Article 19A of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and international law, whereby everyone shall have the right to have access to all information held by public bodies subject only to reasonable restrictions imposed by law, and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto;[39]

To promote the right of access to information, and to facilitate and encourage promptly the disclosure of the information at the lowest and reasonable cost, the Act has prescribed, in its Sections 5 and 8, the use of the latest information technology. Section 5 of the Act provides for uploading of the specified categories of information on the internet in a manner which best ensures its accessibility, and Section 8 thereof mandates each public body to ensure that all the record accessible under the Act is computerized and made available online for facilitation of the public's access to such records.

(d) Live-streaming of court -proceedings on the Court's website

28. This Court, even before the promulgation of the Act, has set up its official website and commenced sharing data on several matters of its working, including the information as to the roster of benches, cause lists, judgments approved for reporting and reports regarding pendency, institution and disposal of cases, on the website for public information. In view of this already functioning website of the Court, the disturbing issues are: why can the Court not live-stream on its official website the court-proceedings of cases heard under Article 184(3) which, we have hereinbefore held, are matters of public importance and the public has a right to know and see how the proceedings in these cases are conducted and concluded by the Court. If anyone from the public, who can afford it, can come to the Court and see the proceedings of such case, then what is the impediment in live-streaming these proceedings on the official website of the Court for information of all public including those who cannot meet the expense of travelling to Court. The facility of entry to the Court and seeing the court proceedings, in this context, appears rather discriminatory, available only to the affluent and thus, offending Article 25 of the Constitution.

29. A very few of the public, as afore-observed, can afford to reach the Court and see the court-proceedings while a large section of the people of Pakistan, who are more than 200 million, cannot avail their right to see the court-proceedings due to time, distance and financial constraints. They, thus, depend on the information reported in print and electronic media. When the reporting is accurate and comprehensive, it fulfills their right to information; but when it is inaccurate or incomplete, it thwarts the right. The gavel-to-gavel live-streaming of the court-proceedings would give the public a more direct sense of what occurs in these proceedings than second-hand information given to them by the media through reporting the event in a summarized form. The latest technology and internet facility have made it possible to reach out to the masses, in the language of the Legislature used in the Act, "to promote the right of access to information, and to facilitate and encourage promptly the disclosure of the information at the lowest and reasonable cost."

30. Live-streaming is the fastest method of communication and is the most suited for directly connecting to geographically dispersed people of the country. We firmly believe that the time has come to let some sunshine in our courts and, for this purpose, this Court being at the apex of the judicial hierarchy of the country should take a leading step. This Court has often held for other organs of the State that their functioning should be open and transparent; it is, therefore, all the more necessary for the Court itself to abide by that principle and take progressive steps to demystify its own functioning. Law develops gradually, and technology is often far ahead of both the legislature and the judiciary. However, both these institutions are not etched in stone and they should recognize the technological advances, in developing law. Live-streaming of the court proceedings, in the present age, can easily be made through the latest technology, and that too, at the lowest and reasonable cost. It would make the public to be virtually present in the courtroom and enable them to see, in real-time, how the court-proceedings are conducted and concluded.

(e) Practice in other major common law jurisdictions

31. We have also explored the practice around the globe in other jurisdictions to satisfy ourselves whether live-streaming of court-proceedings by this Court would be a strange or novel thing in the judicial system. We find it otherwise: we are lagging behind the world on this matter. Almost all major common law jurisdictions of the world broadcast their court-proceedings in some way or the other, for public information. The Supreme Court of Canada has allowed broadcast and live-streaming of its proceedings since 1994, and has also started broadcasting/webcasting live video streams of court hearings on its website since 2009.[40] The Supreme Court of the United Kingdom has allowed for hearings to be live-streamed on its website since 2010.[41] The High Court of Australia has made available on its website audio-visual recordings of all full-court hearings since 2013.[42] The Supreme Court of the United States has been posting written transcripts of oral arguments since 2000[43] and the audio recording of oral arguments since 2010,[44] at its website and has also allowed live broadcast, on media, of oral arguments heard by telephone conference during COVID-19 pandemic since 2020.[45] The International Courts and Tribunals, namely, the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR),[46] the International Criminal Court (ICC),[47] and the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY)[48] also broadcast court proceedings on their official websites.

32. The contesting respondents argued that the Indian Supreme Court while deciding a similar matter, in Swapnil Tripathi v. Supreme Court of India,[49] though recognized that the court-proceedings ought to be live-streamed but did not make any order or direction in this regard and left the matter to be regulated on administrative side by making amendments in the Supreme Court Rules. We have carefully gone through the Indian case referred to. In that case, the petitioners had agitated the matter of live-streaming proceedings of all those cases heard by the Indian Supreme Court that have constitutional importance and impact on the public at large and had not prayed for the live-streaming of a particular case. The Court, therefore, examined the prayer in the broader perspective of the right of access to justice, right to open justice and public trial, right to justice at the doorstep and right to know the developments of law. The Court generally agreed with the live-streaming of court proceedings but observed that the project of live streaming of the court proceedings on the internet, radio and/or TV through live audio-visual broadcasting/ telecasting universally by an official agency having exclusive telecasting rights and/or official website/mobile application of the Court, should be implemented in a progressive, structured and phased manner, and before the commencement of the project, formal Rules should be framed by the Court.

33. It appears that the Indian Supreme Court did so as there is not a specific fundamental right to have access to information in matters of public importance in their Constitution, like Article 19A of our Constitution, nor is there any class of cases of public importance specifically so mentioned in their Constitution, like Article 184(3) of our Constitution. Therefore, the Indian Supreme Court took up the matter of 'live-streaming' of all cases heard by it and by other courts of the country in the context of concepts of 'open trial' and 'open justice' and other constitutional rights stated above, which we have left to be decided in some other appropriate case. Against this backdrop, the Indian Supreme Court disposed of the case and left the matter of live-streaming of all cases heard by it, including the cases of constitutional importance having an impact on the public at large, to be regulated by making amendments in their Rules. The position under our Constitution is different: Article 19A, as above held, confers an operative and justiciable right which is not dependent upon the promulgation of any law or making of any Rules by this Court. In view of this difference of provisions in the Constitutions of both the countries, the reference to the said Indian case for determination of the questions under consideration in the present case, is not apt or relevant.

34. We may observe that any transplant of a rule from a foreign jurisdiction to ours should be made after considering closely and thoroughly the difference of the constitutional scheme. The similarities and differences between the constitutional dispensation in that foreign jurisdiction and our Constitution are to be deeply evaluated. Any doctrine, principle, rule and precedent in the foreign jurisdiction must be viewed through the prism of fundamental rights guaranteed by our Constitution and other constitutional values.

(f) Question of livestreaming court -proceedings is a matter of law, not of policy

35. The contesting respondents argued it also that question of live-streaming of the court-proceedings is a policy matter and should be decided by the Court on the administrative side. We are afraid the argument is not well-founded, especially in the context of court-proceedings of cases heard under Article 184(3) which is under consideration, before us, in the present matter. We have found, as aforementioned, that proceedings in such cases are "matters of public importance" within the meaning of that expression used in Article 19A and the public has a fundamental right to know how these proceedings are conducted; the question of enforcement of this right is a legal matter to be decided judicially and is not a policy matter for decision on the administrative side. In the context of the rule that justice should be administered in open court and power of a court to direct a case to be heard with closed doors in exceptional circumstances, Earl Loreburn remarked in Scott v. Scott,[50] that it "is not to be considered...as a matter of policy, but as a matter of law". We respectfully subscribe to his lordship's view and adopt it for the matter under consideration.

(g) Live-streaming court -proceedings would reflect a responsive image of the Court

36. "People in an open society do not demand infallibility from their institutions, but it is difficult for them to accept what they are prohibited from observing."[51] The foundational constitutional value of accountability, responsibility and openness applicable to other organs of the State, the Legislature and the Executive, is attracted to the functioning of the third organ, the Judiciary, also. The cases involving questions of public importance with reference to the enforcement of fundamental rights of the citizens, which are heard by this Court in its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, have a unique characteristic: the Court, in these cases, acts as the first and the final arbiter. The uniqueness of this jurisdiction sometimes invites criticism of judicial overreach, on the Court. Foundations of the judicial institution stand on, and its real strength lies in, the public trust which gives to its decisions legitimacy and public acceptance. A court cannot buy support for its decisions by spending money or using force. A court's power lies in its legitimacy, a product of substance and perception, that shows itself in the people's acceptance of the court as the best forum to determine what the law means and decide their disputes accordingly. Without such public trust and public acceptance, the judiciary loses the legitimacy and independence it requires to perform its functions. To maintain and boost up the public trust in the Court's working, it is essential to make the public aware of how the Court deals with cases under Article 184(3) and to be reassured that it always functions within the terms of the Constitution and law independently, impartiality and fairly. Live-streaming of the court-proceedings would reflect a responsive image of the Court acknowledging that it is accountable to the public for whom it functions, and promote the public confidence in its functioning.

37. This Court, being the guardian of the fundamental rights of the people of Pakistan against encroachments made by other public authorities and institutions, is to enforce the fundamental right of the public relating to its own proceedings with more fervor and commitment than others. We are enlightened in this respect by the remarks of Fletcher Moulton, L.J., and quoted by Earl Loreburn in Scott v. Scott,[52] that "courts of justice, who are the guardian of public liberties, ought to be doubly vigilant against encroachments by themselves." After profound and thorough deliberations, we are unable to see any legal impediment in live-streaming the court-proceedings of cases heard under Article 184(3) on the official website of this Court and find it a positive obligation of this Court, under Article 19A, to do this for enforcement of the right of the public to have access to information of these proceedings.

Access of public to the court-proceedings of cases of public importance and the democracy

38. At the heart of democracy lie the rights to freedom of expression and to have access to information in matters of public importance. These mutually supporting rights ensure transparency and accountability in public institutions, which results in good governance, especially in a flourishing democracy. These rights uncover the wrongdoings and transgressions of the public authorities and institutions. The informed public opinion is therefore considered the most potent of all restraints upon bad governance in a democracy. The rights to freedom of expression and to have access to information in matters of public importance are thus not only useful but are indispensable to the proper functioning of a democratic system. The oft-quoted, old dictums are that "let the people have the truth and the freedom to discuss it and all will go well"[53], and that "in the darkness of secrecy, sinister interest and evil in every shape have full swing."[54] Not all information in matters of public importance, however, is readily revealed by the Government, and an environment of secrecy is maintained. Access of the public to the court-proceedings in cases under Article 184(3) can expose information as to the matters of public importance that may otherwise not be possible for the public to have; as in most cases under Article 184(3), it is the Government, or any of its departments or instrumentalities, which is alleged to have infringed the fundamental rights of the public and the Court is called upon to enforce them. The information as to the court-proceedings in such cases would be a vital avenue for public information about what the Government does and why the Court interferes. The access of the public to the court-proceedings in cases heard under Article 184(3) through live-streaming would, thus, serve the democracy as much as it would make the exercise of judicial power by the Court in such cases transparent.

Conclusion

39. The above discussion leads us to conclude and hold that live-streaming (audio and video) of the court-proceedings in cases heard by this Court, on a petition or suo motu, under Article 184(3) of the Constitution should be made available for the information of the public through a link on the official website of the Court, in the enforcement of the fundamental right of the public, and for the fulfillment of the obligation of the Court, under Article 19A of the Constitution. However, this Bench of the Court can make an order to live-stream the court-proceedings of this case only as per the prayer made therein, and cannot direct the other Benches of this Court that are, or would be, hearing such cases, to live-stream their court-proceedings. We believe that the general practice in this regard can be enforced only by making rules under Article 191 of the Constitution.

40. However, until such rules are made by the Court on the administrative side, it lies in the discretion of each Bench of the Court hearing such a case to order, or not to order, in the exercise of powers of the Court, live-streaming of its court-proceedings and to regulate that live-streaming, if ordered. Because the right conferred by Article 19A, as aforesaid, is operative and justiciable even without the enactment of a law that may provide for the regulation of, and reasonable restrictions on, such right. Needless to reiterate that this Court under its rules of practice and procedure made under Article 190, namely, the Supreme Court Rules 1980, ordinarily sits in Benches, and not en banc as a full-court, and each Bench irrespective of its numeric strength exercises the jurisdiction and powers vested in the Court.

41. In the circumstances of the present case, we are inclined to exercise our discretion in favour of ordering livestreaming of its court-proceedings; however, we have been apprised that in the current state of technological set-up available in this Court such an order, if made, could not be executed. Courts do not make in-executable orders; we, therefore, abstain from making an order for live-streaming the court-proceedings of the present case. However, we direct the Registrar of this Court to take steps to provide for the requisite technological infrastructure for live-streaming the court-proceedings, so that any Bench of this Court may, if so decides, order for live-streaming the court proceedings of a case being heard under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, in future. The Registrar shall also place the matter before the Court, on the administrative side, for considering amendments in the Supreme Court Rules 1980, in order to livestream court-proceedings of all cases heard under Article 184(3) and to regulate the practice and procedure in this regard.

42. Facility of live audio-hearing of the court-proceedings of all Benches of this Court is currently available to all the Judges of this Court in their Chambers as well to their staff, and audio recording of the court-proceedings is also sometimes made. Therefore, keeping in view the current state of technological infrastructure available in this Court and the fact that the petitioner's case (review petitions) is already fixed for hearing, we direct that the audio recording of the proceedings of the court-hearings of the petitioner's case shall be made available through a link on the official website of this Court, for public information. The Registrar of this Court shall ensure that the unedited audio recording of the proceedings of the court-hearings of the present case is uploaded on the official website of the Court on the same day soon after the hearing and before the close of the working hours.

43. So far as the prayer of the petitioner to the extent of directing the State-owned Pakistan Television (PTV) Corporation to broadcast live the proceedings of his case is concerned, we think such a direction would breach the freedom of expression and press guaranteed by Article 19 of the Constitution as both kinds of direction, viz, to broadcast or not to broadcast something, are tantamount to interference into the freedom guaranteed by the Constitution, unless such act or omission of PTV breaches any legal right of someone or any of its legal obligations and it is also made a party to the proceedings initiated thereon.[55] Likewise, the prayer of the petitioner that the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA) may be directed to issue written instructions to all private television channels that they cannot be restrained from broadcasting the proceedings, appears to us to be not entertainable, as none of the private television channels has agitated its right (if any) to broadcast the court-proceedings of cases heard by this Court under Article 184(3), and we leave the determination of the question as to their such right (if any) to be made in a case where they would agitate the same and claim enforcement thereof.

Signing or recording the detailed reasons by a retired Judge of this Court 44. The above are the reasons for the short order dated 13.04.2021 made by us and our learned brother, Justice Manzoor Ahmad Malik (since retired). Although we have attempted, to the best of our ability, to record these reasons as discussed and agreed to by us and our learned brother, Justice Malik, at the time of making the short order, the human susceptibility to err demands us to have the concurrence of our learned brother in correctly recording the reasons for which he joined us in the short order. Therefore, following the precedents of Al-Jehad Trust v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1996 SC 324) and CJP Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan (PLD 2010 SC 61), the office is directed to send a copy of these detailed reasons to his lordship for his consideration.. The office shall annex the response received from his lordship, with these detailed reasons.

45. Here, we consider it appropriate to state why we earlier offered, and are now offering the detailed reasons to our learned brother, Justice Malik (since retired), to consider whether or not he agrees that it correctly records the reasons for which he joined us in the short order, despite having the advantage of reading the note recorded by one of our learned brothers and agreed to by other three, in addition to their detailed reasons[56] recorded in support of their short order dated 26.04.2021, expressing their reservations on our sending, as well as on signing by Justice Malik, the detailed reasons recorded in support of our short order dated 26.04.2021.

46. First and foremost, we and our learned brother, Justice Malik, followed the precedent of a 13-Member larger Bench of this Court, which is binding upon us while sitting in a smaller Bench of 10 Members. Our learned brothers have treated, and dealt with, the observation made in para 206 of the judgment delivered in the CJP Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry case taking it as the opinion of one Hon'ble Judge, namely, Justice Khalil-ur-Rehman Ramday, despite the fact that his lordship was speaking for a Bench of 13 Members and the judgment authored by him (including para 206) was signed by other 6 sitting Hon'ble Judges of this Court. None of those 6 Hon'ble sitting Judges took any exception to any observation made in the judgment while signing and becoming party thereto; therefore, each and every word written in the said judgment, including para 206 thereof, is to be taken as of all 7 sitting Hon'ble Judges of the 13 Member Bench. Futher, the judgment, including para 206 thereof, having been signed by majority of the 13-Member Bench had become the judgment of the Court, i.e., the judgment of a 13-Member Bench of the Court, and did not remain to be only of those 7 sitting Hon'ble Judges or of 10 Hon'ble Judges including the 3 retired Hon'ble Judges who joined in the judgment (detailed reasons of the short order). We have already explained this concept in our detailed reasons[57] released 29.01.2022 (See para 9 thereof) recorded in support of our short order dated 26.04.2021. The 3 retired Hon'ble Judges thus signed, and one of them also recorded his additional note, in pursuance of the observation and action of the 7 sitting Hon'ble Judges forming majority of the 13-Member Bench. With profound reverence to the view of our learned brothers, we are unable to understand how 4 or all 10 Judges of a 10-Member Bench can declare the observation made, and the action done in pursuance thereto, by a 13-Member larger Bench to be an error in law, even if it may be so. Ignoring the sanctity and authority of a precedent of a larger bench may pass for judicial arrogance and lead to judicial chaos.

47. Although it is not our function to supply the reasons in support of the said precedent of a 13-Member Bench, or to examine any possible arguments contrary to the opinion of our four learned brothers, in the present case. It can be done, in our view, only by a Bench larger than a 13-Member Bench, but we think it proper to note just some of the points in this regard, to show that the precedent of the 13-Member Bench is based on sound wisdom.

48. No one can dispute that the short orders are made and announced by this Court, after due application of the judicious mind to, and after due consideration of, the pleadings of the parties and their arguments in the light of the material available on record of cases for definite "reasons" that are present in the mind of the judges at the time of making those orders. Short orders are made due to paucity of time to record detailed "reasons" and due to the urgency of the matters involved. That is why the detailed reasons recorded later in support of the short orders always bear the date of the short order, not the date of recording those reasons. The expression used in the short orders, "for the reasons to be recorded later", clearly means that it is the act of recording reasons that is postponed to a later time, and not the act of creating or searching for the reasons. The latter meaning, if given, to the expression "reasons to be recorded later" would completely shatter the legal sanctity and validity of the short orders, and unsettle the well-settled legal position according to which the short orders made by this Court are fully operative orders, executable forthwith, and a party feeling aggrieved thereby is to avail his legal remedy of review within the prescribed period of limitation computing from the date of the short order, and not from the date of release of the detailed reasons recorded in support thereof.

49. Further, we observe it very respectfully and humbly that one of our four learned brothers had vacated the office of a Judge of this Court when they released their detailed reasons on 04.02.2022 and assumed the office of the Chief Justice of Pakistan, but has recorded the detailed reasons, and signed the additional note, in his capacity as a Judge of this Court which he had on 26.04.2021 when the short order was made, and not in his present position and capacity as the Chief Justice of Pakistan, and their detailed reasons also bears the date of 26.04.2021, the date when the short order was made, and not the date when these detailed reasons were recorded. We, with great respect, say that our learned brother has so done as per the above said settled practice of this Court. Needless to mention that the office of the Chief Justice of Pakistan and the office of a Judge of this Court are two different offices under the Constitution; one stands vacated on assuming the other. Similarly, a judge of this Court who has vacated his office on retirement joins the detailed reasons recorded by any of his colleagues in support of the short order made by them jointly or records his own reasons, in his status, capacity and authority he had on the date when that short order was made.

50. Another important fact, which also depicts a settled practice of this Court, deserves to be noted. Our learned brothers as well as we have mentioned the presence of our learned brother, Justice Malik, under the heading "Present" for showing the coram and constitution of the Bench, in our respective detailed reasons recorded in support of our short orders dated 26.04.2021 and 13.04.2021 (both released after his retirement). This fact also shows that it is the status of a judge of this Court on the date of making the short order that is relevant at the time of recording the detailed reasons in support thereof and determines his authority to record such reasons. Otherwise, the fact of mentioning his presence in the coram of the Bench that records the detailed reasons would become a false statement and a patent contradiction in itself amounting to blowing hot and cold in the same breath; as, on the one hand, we would show him as a Member of the Bench that records the detailed reasons but on the other hand, say he is not and cannot record the detailed reasons.

51. From the said settled practices of this Court, according to which the detailed reasons recorded in support of a short order always bear the date of the short order, not the date of recording them, and the status and capacity of the judges as on the date of the short order, it is not hard to discern that it is the status, capacity and authority of a judge of this Court as on the date of the short order under which he records, after retirement, his reasons for making the short order or joins in the reasons recorded by some other judge if he finds that they are the same for which he made the short order. These and other points can be examined by a Bench larger than a 13-Member Bench when they arise before such Bench, however for present, we follow the 13-Member Bench and act upon it.

52. We may, with great respect, also express our concern on adjudicating by some Members of a Bench the precedential effect and value of the opinion of other Members of the same Bench, in their judgment delivered in the same case. We have never seen such practice in our jurisdiction as well as in any of the foreign jurisdictions. Members of the same Bench differ on issues and strongly express their respective opinions, as well as make comments on the opinion of each other highlighting the reasons for which they think other Member(s) has erred in his opinion, but do not adjudicate upon the precedential effect and value of each other's opinion. We believe the question of extracting ratio decidendi and determining precedential effect and value of the opinion of some Members of a Bench of this Court expressed in a judgment delivered in one case, can be examined only in other cases where such a judgment is cited as precedent, and that can be done not only by a Bench of this Court but even by a court lowest in the judicial hierarchy; nevertheless, it is in no way a domain of the Members of the same Bench to make this exercise in their respective judgments rendered in the same case.

YAHYA AFRIDI, J.---The learned petitioner, Justice Qazi Faez Isa, during the proceedings of his Review Petition (C.R.P. No. 296 of 2020), moved an application (C.M.A. No. 1243 of 2021) seeking directions of this court, in terms:

"(a) direct the State-owned Pakistan Television Corporation (PTV) to broadcast live the proceedings of the petitioner's case, (b) to direct the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (PEMRA) to issue written instructions to all private channels that they cannot be restrained in any manner whatsoever from broadcasting the proceedings and (c) to order live streaming of court proceedings."

After extensive hearing of the submissions of the parties, this Court dismissed the application by a majority of 6:4 vide three separate short orders, all dated 13.04.2020. I dismissed the application vide my short order in terms:

"For the reasons already recorded in my judgment delivered in Constitution Petition No.17 of 2019, the present Civil Miscellaneous Application No.1243 of 2021 is dismissed, as the relief sought by the petitioner would "negate the very spirit of the oath taken by the petitioning Judge".

2. However, for the reasons to be recorded later, I find the right of the public to have access to live-streaming or audio- video recording, written transcript or any other medium, of the court hearings in the proceedings of public importance, including those under Articles 184(3) and 186 of the Constitution, is their fundamental right under Article 19A of the Constitution. The Registrar of this Court is, therefore, directed to place the matter before the Full Court for appropriate steps as it deems fit, under Article 191 of the Constitution, to effectuate this fundamental right of the public."

2. At the very outset, and that too without much ado, I am clear and firm in my view that, to allow the relief the applicant seeks in the application would, for the reasons already recorded in detail in my judgment delivered in Constitution Petition No.17 of 2019, "negate the very spirit of the oath taken" by him as a Judge of the superior judiciary, that mandates him to avoid "publicity", which in itself warrants dismissal of the application.

3. As for the reasons stated, to declare the right of the public to have access to the court-hearings through live-streaming, audio-video recording, written transcript or any other medium, in the proceedings of public importance including those under Articles 184(3) and 186 of the Constitution, to be their fundamental right under Article 19A of the Constitution, I adopt the weighty reasons stated in paragraphs 13 - 25 of the detailed order rendered by my learned brothers, Maqbool Baqar, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ.

4. This right, however, cannot be left to reign absolute, lest it be abused and, thus, requires to be regulated, as Article 19A of the Constitution mandates the same to be "subject to regulation and reasonable restrictions imposed by law". Therefore, for the safe and proper implementation of this fundamental right, the appropriate means would be to frame rules under Article 191 of the Constitution.

As to the perils of immediately allowing such access to the public, and the matters that require consideration before allowing such access, I concur with the reasoning recorded by my learned brother, Munib Akhtar J., in paragraphs 16 - 18 of his detailed order.

5. I am of the considered view that once this Court has adjudged and declared on the judicial side that the public has a right to have access to information of the court-proceedings in cases of public importance, the process of effectuating the said right should best be left for the Court to be dealt with on the administrative side. The full court comprising all Judges of this Court, with the deliberation and input of all of them, would be better poised than any Bench of this Court to balance the interests of all stakeholders, in giving the public access to court-proceedings, by making well considered rules to regulate its practice and procedure on this subject, and obviating the possibility of causing affront to the proceedings of this Court, which should in all eventualities be vehemently avoided to preserve the majesty of the Court.

6. Accordingly, the worthy Registrar of this Court is directed to place the matter before the Full Court, on the administrative side, for appropriate steps as it deems fit, under Article 191 of the Constitution.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---

Civil Petition No.2270/2019: This consolidated judgment shall decide the instant petition as well as, petitions mentioned in Schedule A to this judgment as common questions of law and facts arise in these cases.

2. The brief facts giving rise to the instant petition is that a set of contractual employees (hereinafter referred to as the Respondents ) joined the University of Agriculture, Peshawar ( Petitioner ) as Class IV employees from 2009 to 2012. Aggrieved of the fact that the Respondents were not considered as permanent employees despite serving the Petitioner University for seven (07) to eight (08) years, they invoked the constitutional jurisdiction of the Peshawar High Court, Peshawar under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 (the Constitution ) vide W.P. No. 965-P/2013 praying for their regularization of service and grant of all back benefits. The High Court held that as some of the Respondents having a similar nature of job, have already been regularized, the Respondents were also entitled to be dealt with accordingly. In doing so, the High Court disposed the petition vide judgment dated 02.04.2019 ( Impugned Judgment ) directing the Petitioners to consider the Respondents strictly in accordance with law and in line with the earlier judgments of the High Court. Hence, the present appeal by leave of this Court.

3. The following set of cases before us include five categories of employees; (i) Category-A: This includes the Respondents who were contractually employed and subsequently regularized by the High Court. The said regularization has been challenged; (ii) Category-B: In this case, the Respondents were appointed on regular basis after advertisement and in compliance with the due process. Their contention is that they be given regularization from the date of their initial appointment when they were first appointed on contractual basis ( ante-date regularization ); (iii) Category C: This category includes those Respondents who were regularized through Court orders with immediate effect, which were not challenged by the Petitioner. Having been regularized, the Respondents have once again approached the High Court to seek ante-date regularization, which was granted to them, hence the challenge; Category D: This includes the Respondents who simply seek ante-date regularization. Schedule-A to this judgment lists the cases falling in each of the aforesaid categories.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties perused the record with their able assistance. The questions to be addressed by this Court are two-fold; firstly, whether the contractual employees could be regularized in the absence of any law or policy allowing such regularizartion; secondly, whether the Respondents who stood regularized through earlier court orders, which remain unchallenged to date, seek ante-date regularization i.e., from the date of their initial appointment on contract basis.

5. In order to understand the issue at hand, it is expedient to understand the regime of regularization which in essence means to make regular or permanent. Once the contractual services are regularized, the appointment can become substantive or permanent and cannot be terminated without due process. Therefore, the regularization of a contractual employee is a fresh appointment into the stream of regular appointment.[1] The differences between a contractual employee and a regular employee is material for both the employee and the employer and, inter alia, include: (i) Duration of employment; a contractual employee is usually employed for a specific period or task, with a set end date. (ii) Benefits; contractual employee generally do not receive the same benefits or statutory protection as a regular employee. (iii) Scope of work; contractual employee is engaged for specific project or task. (iv) Flexibility; contractual employee often has more flexibility in terms of work hours and location. (v) Cost Considerations: a contractual employee can be less costly in the short term as it doesn t require benefits and other long-term financial commitments. (vi) Risk Management; hiring regular employee is often a long-term commitment, so organizations opt for contractual workers to manage risks associated with fluctuating market demands. Therefore, any institution opting for regularization of its employees must be either mandated by law or must carry out regularization through a well-thought out policy of the institution concerned laying down the criteria and the process for regularization; performance evaluation of the contractual employee must be assessed to determine if the employee meets the standards required for a regular position; there must be availability of positions that match the skills and experience of the contractual employee; the budgetary considerations and financial implication of a regular employee be weighed and considered. There must be a fair assessment of the employee s qualifications, performance and merit, so as to ensure only competent and committed employees be granted permanent employment status.[2] Regularization is, therefore, not a ritualistic and mechanical exercise. It requires fresh assessment of the candidature of the contractual employee by the competent authority before he is made a regular employee as any such act carries long term financial implications on the institution concerned. The process of regularization is grounded in principles of fairness, openness, transparency, non-discrimination and public interest.[3] Regularization therefore has a close nexus with institutional policy and autonomy.

6. It is well settled that there is no vested right to seek regularization for employees hired on contractual basis unless there is any legal or statutory basis for the same.[4] The process of regularization requires backing of any law, rules or policy.[5] It should adhere to the relevant statutory provisions and government policies.[6] In the absence of any of the same, a contractual employee cannot claim regularization. Applying the principles settled by this Court to the proposition at hand, it becomes clear that the Respondents have no automatic right to be regularized unless the same has specifically been provided for in law or policy which in the present case is not available. Any regularization without the backing of law offends the principles of fairness, transparency and meritocracy and that too at the expense of public exchequer. The Impugned Judgment has also erred in law by failing to take into account that where a contractual employee wishes to be regularized, he must demonstrate statutory basis for such a claim, in the absence of which, relief cannot be granted solely on the principle of similarly placed persons.[7] Article 25 of the Constitution has no application to a claim based upon other unlawful acts and illegalities. It comes into operation when some persons are granted a benefit in accordance with law but others, similarly placed and in similar circumstances, are denied that benefit. But where a person gains, or is granted, a benefit illegally, other persons cannot plead, nor can the court accept such a plea, that the same benefit must be allowed to them also in violation of law.[8] Thus, the ground of discrimination also does not stand, because in order to establish discrimination it is important to show that the earlier act was based on law and policy, which has not been the case here. Thus, with respect to the first question raised, we are of the view that the regularization of the Respondents cannot take place without the backing of any law, rule or policy and without an open and transparent process based on an objective criteria, as discussed above.

7. At this juncture, it is underlined that the process of regularization is a policy matter and the prerogative of the Executive which cannot be ordinarily interfered with by the Courts[9] especially in the absence of any such policy. It does not befit the courts to design or formulate policy for any institution, they can, however, judicially review a policy if it is in violation of the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution. The wisdom behind non-interference of courts in policy matters is based on the concept of institutional autonomy which is defined as a degree of self-governance, necessary for effective decision making by institutions of higher education regarding their academic work, standards, management, and related activities... [10] Institutional autonomy is usually determined by the level of capability and the right of an institution to decide its course of action about institutional policy, planning, financial and staff management, compensation, students, and academic freedom, without interference from outside authorities.[11] The autonomy of public institutions is not just a matter of administrative convenience, but a fundamental requirement for the effective functioning of a democratic society, as public sector organizations are guardians of the public interest. Democracy, human rights and rule of law cannot become and remain a reality unless higher education institutions and staff and students, enjoy academic freedom and institutional autonomy.[12] More recently, the concept has in its longstanding and idealized form been well captured in the Magna Charta Universaitum 2020 that states ...intellectual and moral autonomy is the hallmark of any university and a precondition of its responsibilities to society.[13]

8. Courts must sparingly interfere in the internal governance and affairs of educational institutions i.e., contractual employments.[14] This is because the courts are neither equipped with such expertise, nor do they possess the relevant experience that would allow for interference in such policy matters. Under this autonomous realm, educational institutions are entitled to deference when making any decisions related to their mission.[15] At the same time, any transgression by Courts would amount to the usurpation of the power of another, which would be against the spirit of Article 7 of the Constitution as it is not the role of the Courts to interfere in policy decisions.[16] The judicial pronouncement of the Courts in other jurisdictions i.e., United States of America[17], United Kingdom[18] and India[19] also provide that that courts should not interfere in the internal affairs of educational institutions.

9. Now coming to the second question raised, given that the regularization of the Respondents cannot take place without the backing of any law, rule or policy, there lies no claim for ante-date regularization. It is well settled that when the basic order is without lawful authority, then the entire superstructure raised thereon falls to the ground automatically.[20] However, if it is the case of some Respondents i.e., Categories B, C, and D who stood regularized through earlier Court orders which remain unchallenged can seek ante-date regularization, it is well established that regularization takes effect prospectively, from the date when a regularization order is passed.[21] This is because regularization is based on several considerations which help guage not only the competence and ability of the employee, proposed to be regularized, but also the financial impact and long term legal obligations on the employer institution. It is a conscious decision to be taken by the employer institution at a particular time and therefore cannot be given a retrospective effect. Thus, the Respondents in the aforesaid categories cannot claim ante-date regularization.

10. For the above reasons, the impugned judgments are contrary to the well-established judicial pronouncements of this Court and hence, set aside. Thus, the instant petition filed by the Petitioner and those listed below in Schedule A are converted into appeals and allowed.

11. C.Ps. Nos.4783, 4784 and 456-P/2019: The question of law involved in these petitions is different from the other petitions. Office is, therefore, directed to de-club these petitions from rest of the bunch and fix them separately for hearing. Adjourned.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 12.01.2024, passed by a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court, Lahore, whereby his nomination paper for seat of the National Assembly from NA-87, Khushab, was rejected on the ground that he is a proclaimed offender in a criminal case.

2. Briefly, the facts are that the nomination paper of the petitioner was rejected by the Returning Officer ("RO") on the same ground on 30.12.2023, however, on appeal, the Appellate Tribunal set aside the order of the RO and accepted the nomination paper of the petitioner. The objector-respondent challenged the order of the Appellate Tribunal through a writ petition in the High Court, which vide order dated 12.01.2024 was allowed and the nomination paper of the petitioner stood rejected.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have gone through the record. It is pointed out that the same bench of the High Court vide order of the even date in another election case (W.P. 2383/2024) titled Tajammal Abbas v. Returning Officer and others discarded the ground of proclaimed offender and accepted the nomination paper of the candidate by holding that "[i]t is settled law that if a person is fugitive from law, he does not lose all his rights and mere abscondence of an accused is nowhere recognized ground to eliminate him to contest the election." Yet a diametrically opposite view was taken by the same bench of the High Court, in a case having similar facts, in the impugned order.

4. Learned counsel for the respondent as well as the learned counsel for the ECP were asked to refer to any provision of law that disqualifies a proclaimed offender from contesting the elections but they were unable to refer to any provision from the Elections Act, 2017 or from the Constitution. Since there is no provision either in the Constitution or in the Elections Act that makes a proclaimed offender disqualified from contesting the election, the courts cannot on their own create such additional disqualification, without any backing of the law. Further, in this particular case, the petitioner was declared a proclaimed offender in criminal case FIR No. 231/23 registered at Police Station, Khushab. However, he obtained a protective bail in the said case by surrendering himself to the court; he, therefore, cannot be considered a proclaimed offender. We may point out that Article 62(1)(d), (e), (f) and (g) has been recently declared by this Court, in Civil Appeal No. 982 of 2018 etc titled Hamza Rasheed Khan v. Election Appellate Tribunal and others, not to be self-executory and to serve as guidelines for the voters in exercising their right to vote, hence even being a proclaimed offender does not attract the disqualification under the said provisions.

5. In view of the above, this petition is converted into an appeal and the same is allowed. The impugned order of the High Court is set aside and the nomination paper of the petitioner for the seat of a Member of the National Assembly, NA-87, Khushab-I, stands accepted. The Election Commission of Pakistan shall ensure that all the necessary steps to be taken in the electoral process are completed forthwith so that the petitioner can contest the election on the scheduled date for the said seat, without fail.

MWA/U-1/SC Appeal allowed.

----Arts. 212(2), proviso, 212(3) & 142---Order of a Tribunal created by a Provincial law---Appeal to the Supreme Court under Article 212(3) of the Constitution---Maintainability---Whether an appeal lies to the Supreme Court under Article 212(3) against an order of a Tribunal created by a Provincial law to which the proviso to Clause (2) of the Article 212 has not been made applicable---[Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. (Majority view): Proviso to clause (2) does not apply to clause (3) of Article 212 of the Constitution---Appeals against orders of the Provincial Administrative Tribunals are competent before the Supreme Court under Article 212(3) of the Constitution---Supreme Court over ruled the law declared in such regard in the judgment reported as Gomal Medical College v. Armaghan Khan (PLD 2023 SC 190)]---[Per Ayesha A. Malik, J. (Minority view): As Article 212(1) of the Constitution itself confers jurisdiction on the Provincial Legislature to establish the Provincial Tribunal under Article 212(1), the Constitution also confers appellate jurisdiction to the Supreme Court from a judgment, decree, order or sentence of the said Provincial Tribunal---Discussion of the majority opinion in the instant matter on Entry 55 of the Federal Legislative List (FLL), is not relevant to the dispute at hand]

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. (Majority view)

Clause (2) of Article 212 of the Constitution is merely an ouster clause and not a jurisdiction clause. In case of Federal Tribunals, it provides that no other court can take jurisdiction over any matter which falls under the subject matter of the Administrative Tribunal established under Article 212(1). If clause (2) has not been made applicable to a Provincial Tribunal, it at best means that there are other forums also available to redress the grievance of the officers, e.g., the High Court under Article 199 or the Civil Courts under section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. In the absence of clause (2), all the judicial forums in a Province have concurrent jurisdiction along with the Provincial Administrative Tribunal. Once a civil servant invokes the jurisdiction of the Provincial Tribunal, the remedy of an appeal by leave against any decision of the Provincial Tribunal before the Supreme Court becomes alive. Remedy of appeal under clause (3) will not be available if the civil servant approaches the High Court or the Civil Court for the redressal of his grievance. Applicability of clause (2) to a Provincial Tribunal is totally insignificant as it has no effect on the remedy of appeal against the decision of the Provincial Tribunal before the Supreme Court which is ensured under clause (3).

Clause (3) is the third part of Article 212, which provides than an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court from a judgment, decree order or sentence of the Administrative Tribunal, and the Supreme Court shall grant leave if the Supreme Court is satisfied that a substantial question of law of public importance arises in the case. Clause (3) has no correlation whatsoever with the ouster clause of clause (2). Whether a Provincial Tribunal enjoys the ouster clause or not, does not affect the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Clause (3) is independently connected with all the administrative Tribunals, including Provincial Tribunals, established under Article 212(1). The appeal to the Supreme Court is available against orders of both the Federal and Provincial Administrative Tribunals by a special constitutional scheme provided under Article 212, which due to the non obstante clause is over and above any sub-constitutional legislation under the regular constitutional scheme.

The law declared in the judgment reported as Gomal Medical College v. Armaghan Khan (PLD 2023 SC 190) that unless and until the proviso to Article 212(2) of the Constitution is activated, appeal against an order of a Provincial Tribunal is not available before the Supreme Court under Article 212(3) of the Constitution, and that in the absence of such a law passed by the Parliament, the decision of a Tribunal established under the Provincial law is to be challenged under Article 199 of the Constitution, is not correct and is therefore overruled.

Dean/Chief Executive, Gomal Medical College, Medical Teaching Institution, D.I. Khan v. Muhammad Armaghan Khan PLD 2023 SC 190 overruled.

Per Ayesha A. Malik, J. (Minority view)

Article 212(3) of the Constitution is the constitutional mandate which prescribes that leave to appeal before the Supreme Court for the Tribunal established under Article 212(1) of the Constitution can be filed directly, meaning thereby, the Constitution itself provides for the remedy of appeal before the Supreme Court. Both Sub-Articles (1) and (3) of Article 212 of the Constitution are exceptions to the legislative authority contained in Article 142 of the Constitution as the Constitution itself authorizes and permits the Federal and Provincial Legislature, irrespective of the authority given in Article 142 of the Constitution read with the Federal Legislative List (FLL), to establish the Tribunal and to allow its leave to appeal directly before the Supreme Court. Article 212(2) merely ousts the jurisdiction of other courts or fora. Resultantly, even though the Tribunal is established under Article 212(1), the ouster of jurisdiction of other courts is automatically triggered by Article 212(2) of the Constitution and with respect to federal courts but for the provincial courts it is necessary that the Provincial Assembly activate the proviso to Article 212(2) of the Constitution. In such case, the Tribunal will be an exclusive forum, which totally and completely ousts the jurisdiction of all other courts or fora with respect to the special subject-matters contained in sub Articles (a), (b) and (c) of Article 212(1) of the Constitution. However, if the proviso is not activated, meaning there is no resolution by the Provincial Legislature (followed by an Act of Parliament) the ouster of jurisdiction will not be triggered. Consequently, a litigant will have the option to avail its remedy before any other forum including the remedy before the Supreme Court.

The law declared in the judgment reported as Gomal Medical College v. Armaghan Khan (PLD 2023 SC 190) appears to read exclusivity and ouster as synonymous, because it relies on the principle that the Provincial Legislature cannot act upon the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court without intervening Federal legislation, hence, in order for the Tribunal to have exclusive jurisdiction, the proviso must be activated. This in turn means that if the proviso is activated, then the exclusivity of the Tribunal will mean ouster of the jurisdiction as well. However, exclusivity will not per se oust the jurisdiction of other courts without an express provision stating so as exclusivity of jurisdiction does not imply the ouster of jurisdiction. For ouster of jurisdiction to take effect an express provision is required which is precisely what Article 212(2) of the Constitution does. In other words, the proviso does not act as a bridge between Sub-Articles (1) and (3) of Article 212, rather it allows and empowers the Provincial Legislature to decide whether, for the purposes of the establishment of the Provincial Tribunal, remedy should lie exclusively to the Supreme Court or, in the alternate, giving more options to the litigant.

The discussion of the majority opinion in the instant matter on Entry 55 of the Federal Legislative List (FLL), is not relevant to the dispute at hand. The issue before the Court in this matter is simply whether the remedy of appeal as provided in Article 212(3) of the Constitution is available to the petitioners. The answer to this question is in the affirmative as this remedy has been provided, specifically and categorically, by the Constitution itself, and not by way of any ordinary legislation. Therefore, there is no issue pertaining to legislative competence under Entry 55 of the FLL.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Petitioners seek leave to appeal under Article 212(3) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ( Constitution ) against the judgment of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Subordinate Judiciary Tribunal ( Tribunal ), dated 18.12.2021, whereby the issue of seniority of respondent No.1 appointed as Additional District and Sessions Judge from the selection process of the year 2001 was considered and decided in terms of Rule 10(a) of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Judicial Service Rules, 2001[1] read with section 8(3) of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Civil Servants Act 1973, and his seniority was fixed along with his batchmates above the petitioners who were appointed from the selection process of the years 2002 and 2003.

2. Learned counsel for respondent No. 1, in the course of hearing of the petitions before a regular Bench of this Court, raised a preliminary objection regarding the maintainability of these petitions for leave to appeal under Article 212(3) of the Constitution on the basis of the law declared by this Court in Gomal,[2] which held that no appeal lies to this Court in terms of Article 212(3) against the decision of a Tribunal created by a Provincial law to which the proviso to clause (2) has not been applied. [3] Admittedly, there is no federal law that extends clause (2) to the Tribunal in terms of the said proviso. The question of maintainability, raised by the learned counsel, entailed the interpretation of Article 212 of the Constitution. Under section 4 of the Supreme Court (Practice and Procedure) Act, 2023 ( Act of 2023 ) if any matter involves interpretation of a constitutional provision, the Committee[4] is to constitute a Bench comprising not less than five Judges of the Supreme Court to hear the matter. The regular Bench of this Court, therefore, referred the matter to the Committee for constitution of the larger Bench in accordance with section 4 of the Act of 2023, on 09.01.2024. Hence, this Bench. On the last date of hearing, this Bench issued fresh notices under Order XXVII A, C.P.C. to the Attorney-General for Pakistan and Advocate-General, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, as well as Advocates-General of other provinces.

Reconsideration of Gomal and the maintainability of the petitions for leave to appeal under Article 212(3) of the Constitution.

3. First, we take up the question of maintainability of the instant petitions for leave to appeal. The question raised in Gomal was whether an appeal lies to the Supreme Court under Article 212(3) against an order of a Tribunal created by a Provincial law to which the proviso to Clause (2) of the Article 212 has not been made applicable. Gomal answered this in the negative by holding that no appeal lies to this Court in terms of Article 212(3) against the decision of a Tribunal created by a Provincial law to which the proviso to Clause (2) has not been applied. Gomal went ahead to direct that all the pending petitions or appeals, being not maintainable, were to be returned forthwith by the Office and that no such leave petitions were to be entertained in future except matters regarded as past and closed or reserved or part heard, subject to the direction of the Bench concerned, and matters heard under the direction of the Hon ble Chief Justice.[5]

4. In Gomal, the facts were that an employee of Gomal Medical College ( College ) upon being terminated from service filed an appeal before the Appellate Tribunal established under the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Medical Teaching Institution Reforms Act, 2015[6] ( Reforms Act ). The said appeal was allowed, and the employee was directed to be reinstated in service with back benefits. Against this order of reinstatement, the College preferred a petition for leave to appeal under Article 212(3) of the Constitution before this Court. In this background, the above question regarding the maintainability of the petition for leave to appeal before this Court under Article 212(3) arose.

5. In Gomal, a two-member Bench of this Court held that the appeal arising from the decision of a Provincial Tribunal constituted under Article 212(1)(a) are not maintainable before this Court under Article 212(3) unless the Federal Legislature extends the provision of clause (2) of Article 212 to the said Provincial Tribunal through a Federal Act. This Court in Gomal first identified the principle and then proceeded to interpret Article 212 in the light of the said principle. According to Gomal, the principle is that it is only the Parliament that can (if at all) enact legislation that affects or acts upon the jurisdiction of this Court. The Provinces have no such legislative competence. [7] Taking this further, Gomal reasoned that jurisdiction can only be conferred on this Court through the federal legislature in terms of entry No. 55 of the Federal Legislative List of the Constitution and that the provincial legislature while establishing a Provincial Tribunal cannot confer jurisdiction of appeal on this Court, unless and until effect is given to proviso to Article 212(2) of the Constitution through an Act of Parliament. According to Gomal, clause (3) of Article 212 could only be activated through proviso to clause (2) which formed the necessary bridge connecting clauses (2) and (3) of Article 212 and only under the cover of an Act of Parliament could the door to this Court be opened under Article 212(3). Gomal went ahead to hold that if the Provincial Assembly does not wish to follow this route or Parliament refuses to enact the enabling legislation in terms of the proviso, then the door to this Court remains shut. And when clause (2) does not apply, the jurisdiction of the other courts, which in practical terms would mean recourse to the High Court under Article 199, would remain open, holding clause (2) and its proviso the gateway to clause (3).

6. We have heard the learned counsel for respondent No.1, the Attorney-General and the Advocates-General of all the Provinces and ICT. All[8] of them argued that Article 212(3) is a stand-alone provision and decision of the Provincial Tribunals established under Article 212(1) can be appealed before the Supreme Court. They also contended that Article 212(2) is an ouster clause that keeps the other courts away in matters that fall within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal and do not in any manner confer any additional jurisdiction on the Provincial Tribunals, hence even if clause (2) is not made applicable to the Provincial Tribunals established under Article 212(1), the Provincial Tribunals under Article 212(1) still continue to exist and function, their jurisdiction is not affected and the appellate jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution on this Court against any decision of the Provincial Tribunals under Article 212(3) remains intact. Mr. Amir Rehman, Additional-Attorney General for Pakistan explained that the object of clause (2) of Article 212 is to leave the option of invoking the ouster clause with the Provinces, respecting their provincial autonomy under our federal scheme. He added that clause (2) does not confer jurisdiction as understood in Gomal but simply provides for an ouster clause, keeping away other courts from taking up matters falling under the jurisdiction of the Provincial Administrative Tribunals. If the proviso to clause (2) is not invoked, only the ouster clause is not available in a Province, which neither affects the jurisdiction of the Provincial Administrative Tribunals nor the appellate jurisdiction of this Court against the decisions of these Administrative Tribunals under clause (3). We have noticed that the arguments of the law officers before us were similar to the ones submitted by the then law officers before the two-member Bench in Gomal.

7. During the course of hearing in Gomal, it was pointed out by the Advocate-General, KPK that the interpretation of Article 212 in this case will also apply to Khyber Pukhtunkwa Subordinate Judiciary Service Tribunal Act, 1991, as decisions from the said Tribunal are also challenged through leave to appeal before this Court under Article 212(3). This submission was acknowledged by the Bench and therefore notices were issued to Advocates-General of all the Provinces.[9] Gomal, therefore, while interpreting Article 212, had considered its impact on all the provincial laws relating to the Tribunals established in respect of the terms and conditions of service of the members of the subordinate judiciary.

8. In order to better understand Gomal, we have gone through Article 212 of the Constitution, which is reproduced hereunder, for ready reference:-

Administrative Courts and Tribunals

212(1) Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, the appropriate Legislature may by Act provide for the establishment of one or more Administrative Courts or Tribunals to exercise exclusive jurisdiction in respect of

(a) matters relating to the terms and conditions of persons who are or have been in the service of Pakistan, including disciplinary matters;

(b) matters relating to claims arising from tortious acts of Government, or any person in the service of Pakistan, or of any local or other authority empowered by law to levy any tax or cess and any servant of such authority acting in the discharge of his duties as such servant; or

(c) matters relating to the acquisition, administration and disposal of any property which is deemed to be enemy property under any law.

(2) Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, where any Administrative Court or Tribunal is established under clause (1), no other court shall grant an injunction, make any order or entertain any proceedings in respect of any matter to which the jurisdiction of such Administrative Court or Tribunal extends and all proceedings in respect of any such matter which may be pending before such other court immediately before the establishment of the Administrative Court or Tribunal other than an appeal pending before the Supreme Court, shall abate on such establishment:

Provided that the provisions of this clause shall not apply to an Administrative Court or Tribunal established under an Act of a Provincial Assembly unless, at the request of that Assembly made in the form of a resolution, Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament) by law extends the provisions to such a Court or Tribunal.

(3) An appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment, decree, order or sentence of an Administrative Court or Tribunal shall lie only if the Supreme Court, being satisfied that the case involves a substantial question of law of public importance, grants leave to appeal.
