Itrat Zahida v. President ABL 2006 SCMR 1287; Acebal v. United States 60 Fed. Cl. 551; Rendek v Sheriff of Bristol County 440 Mass. 1017; Harris (suing as personal representative of Andrews (deceased) v. Lewisham and Guy's Mental Health NHS Trust [2000] 3 All ER 769; McFeeley v. Jackson Street Entm't, LLC 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114767, 2014 WL 4182231; Gasior v. Mass. Gen. Hosp. 446 Mass. 645; Rameshwar Manjhi v. Management of Sangramgarh Colliery AIR 1994 SC 1176; Sudha Shrivastava v. Comptroller and Auditor General of India AIR 1996 SC 571; The Government of Pakistan v. General Public PLD 1991 SC 731; Zaheer Abbas v. Pir Asif 2011 CLC 1528; Dawa Khan v. The Government of Pakistan 2015 PLC (C.S.) 1255; Amtul Habib v. Musarrat Parveen PLD 1974 SC 185; Fred O. Smith, Jr., 'The Constitution After Death' (2020) 120 Colum. L. Rev. 1471, 1531; Kirsten Rabe Smolensky, 'Rights of the Dead' (2009) 37 Hofstra L. Rev. 763, 764; Bilanow v. United States 159 Ct. Cl. 93 and Law v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration) [1999] 1 SCR 497 ref.

Under the constitutional scheme, abatement of proceedings on the death of a civil servant, in a case, where the cause of action carried a survivable interest would unduly deprive the decedent civil servant, as well as, his legal heirs of their constitutional rights to livelihood, property, dignity and fair trial. Fundamental right to life including right to livelihood ensured the security of the terms and conditions of service; fundamental right to property ensured security of the pecuniary and pensionary benefits attached to the service; fundamental right to dignity ensured that the reputation of the civil servant was not sullied or discredited through wrongful dismissal, termination or reversion etc; and fundamental right to fair trial and due process, inter alia, safeguarded and protected the survivable interest and ensured continuity of the legal proceedings even after the death of the civil servant, equipping the legal heirs to purse the claim.

Other than pecuniary and pensionary benefits that inured to the benefit of the legal heirs, the right to restore one's reputation was also a survivable right and flowed down to the legal heirs to pursue and take to its logical conclusion. Any slur on the reputation of a civil servant impinged on his human dignity and weighed equally on the dignity and honour of his family.

(b) Service Tribunals Act (LXX of 1973)---

----S. 5---Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Preamble---Proceedings before the Service Tribunal---Civil Procedure Code, 1908, applicability of---Scope---Notwithstanding that C.P.C. was not as a whole strictly applicable to the proceedings before the Tribunal, the Tribunal was bound to follow the basic norms of justice---Provisions of C.P.C. may not stricto sensu apply in proceedings under a special law yet its equitable principles would always be applicable in order to do complete justice between the parties and meet the ends of justice.

Ali Khan Subanpoto v. Federation of Pakistan 1997 SCMR 1590 and Sheikh Saleem v. Shamim Atta Ullah Khan 2104 SCMR 1694 ref.

(c) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Pt. II, Chapt. 1---Fundamental Rights under the Constitution---Scope---Such rights did not only protect and safeguard a citizen but extended beyond his life and protected and safeguarded his survivable interests by being equally available to his legal heirs.

M. Qamar-uz-Zaman, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners.

Nemo for Respondents.

Hasan Riaz, Civil Judge cum Research Officer at SCRC[1] for Research Assistance.

Date of hearing: 23rd December, 2020.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---We consider in this petition whether the appeal filed by a civil servant in the Federal Service Tribunal ("Tribunal") would abate on his death or his legal heirs could pursue the same.

2. Brief facts of the case are that decedent predecessor of the respondents, Rana Ejaz Ahmad, while working as Officer Grade-III was departmentally proceeded against by the petitioners and was awarded major penalty of reduction to a lower stage of pay by three steps. The decedent challenged the imposition of penalty but died during the pendency of his appeal before the Tribunal. Rejecting the objection of the petitioners that the claim of the decedent did not survive after his death, the Tribunal allowed legal heirs of the decedent to be impleaded as party in the appeal pending before it. The petitioners have sought leave of this Court under Article 212(3) of the Constitution to appeal against the order of the Tribunal.

3. It has been contended by the learned counsel for the petitioners that an employment grievance does not survive the civil servant's death. No remedy, he argues, has been provided to the legal heirs of a civil servant under the Service Tribunals Act, 1973 ("Act") and, therefore, the respondents could not be permitted to pursue the claim initiated by the decedent. The learned counsel has resorted to two judgments of this Court i.e. Muhammad Nawaz v. Ministry of Finance (1991 SCMR 1192) and Muhammad Ashfaq v. Member (Revenue) Board of Revenue (PLD 2008 SC 703) to support his argument. Additionally, he submits that in view of the judgment delivered in Muhammad Tariq Badr v. National Bank of Pakistan (2013 SCMR 314), the Tribunal had limited jurisdiction as regards the terms and conditions of the employees of the petitioner bank which extinguished with the demise of the decedent.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioners at length and perused the judgments relied upon by him minutely. The matter in issue relates to the survival of the right to sue following the death of a civil servant. The appeal of the decedent on a matter relating to some terms and conditions of service at the time of his death was undoubtedly pending before the Tribunal in accordance with the decision[2] of this Court. The only question begging determination is the survivability of the claim of the decedent. It is seen that the Act or the rules[3] framed thereunder do not contain any reference to the question of devolution of the right to sue in case a civil servant dies during the pendency of service appeal nor do they provide for abatement of appellate proceedings initiated by an aggrieved civil servant on his death. Adverting to the case law developed on this subject, it is apparently correct that the appeals filed by civil servants were held by this Court to have abated with their death in the cases of Muhammad Nawaz and Muhammad Ashfaq. However, these two judgments were distinguished subsequently by a three Member Bench of this Court in Chief Secretary Punjab v. Ch. Iftikhar Ahmad[4]. It was held therein that peculiar benefits to which the legal heirs would become entitled would not allow the lis to abate on the death of a civil servant. The writ petition of the husband of the deceased ad hoc civil servant was entertained and the right of late civil servant regarding the benefits of terms and conditions of service was considered to have devolved on her husband.

5. It is significant to observe that service disputes are not always attached merely with the person of a civil servant as an individual but more often than not with some benefits which could potentially be enjoyed by the successors of the civil servant in accordance with law which are contingent on the adjudication of the controversy. This consideration attracted the attention of this Court in Federation of Pakistan v. Syed Afzal Muhammad Farooq[5] where the civil servant whose grievance related to the issue of promotion had passed away during the pendency of appeal. It was observed that his legal heirs had no cause of action to the extent of promotion yet in the event of success of his claim, they would be entitled to enhanced pensionary benefits. The Court did not consider it appropriate to dilate upon the merits of the case in the absence of legal heirs. The Federation of Pakistan was directed to re-consider the case and if late civil servant was found to be entitled to promotion, enhanced pensionary benefits be extended to his legal heirs. Relying on the case of Syed Afzal Muhammad Farooq, this Court in the case of Mehar Muhammad Nawaz v. Managing Director, Small Business Finance Corporation[6] did not entertain the objection that the right to sue did not survive following the death of a civil servant. Legal representatives of the deceased civil servant were held entitled to the pensionary benefits admissible under the law.

6. In the case in hand also, the decedent in addition to assailing penalty imposed on him was seeking payment of wages which would have been due had he not been punished in departmental proceedings. And, if the departmental decision is overturned in appeal, the heirs of the decedent would at least inherit back benefits which their predecessor would have got, had he succeeded in appeal in his lifetime. It is noteworthy that the heirs' entitlement to service benefits may sometimes transcend usual gains like pension, gratuity etc. For instance, in the province of Punjab, the family of a civil servant who dies in service is entitled to salary which the deceased civil servant was drawing, along with annual increases, till the date of superannuation of the deceased civil servant after which family pension is allowed as per rules.[7] Imagining a hypothetical situation in this backdrop, if the claim of wrongful dismissal from service of a civil servant in Punjab is allowed to abate without adjudication on his death, legitimate expectancy of his family about substantial monetary benefits would be prejudiced without any adjudication.

7. Although the Court in this case is seized of a matter particularly governed by service law, the issue pertains to the larger question of the survival of a claim emanating from an employment dispute. This Court in Itrat Zahida v President ABL[8] has held that the writ petition of an employee who has assailed the decision of Labour Appellate Tribunal does not abate on his death and his legal heirs have a right to continue the proceedings for a decision on merit. Employment claims have been held to have survived the death of the employee in different foreign jurisdictions. It has been held that the cause of action in a claim for overtime pay survives the death of the employees when statutory law does not specifically refer to the question of survival of actions[9]; a county employee's claim for back pay survives his death[10]; a claim for pecuniary compensation for discrimination brought before the employment tribunal could survive the death of the employee and it is immaterial that the discrimination Acts do not expressly confer rights on a personal representative to pursue a deceased's claim for compensation for discrimination, rather, the critical question is whether the discrimination Acts contain anything which takes away such rights[11]; a labour complaint will not extinguish as the causes of action i.e. violations of law survive the plaintiff's death[12]; a claim that an employee was wrongfully dismissed in violation of law survives the employee's death[13]; "[t]he death of the workman during pendency of the proceedings cannot deprive the heirs or the legal representatives of their right to continue the proceedings and claim the benefits as successors to the deceased workman. . . . ."[14]; and the right to get the benefits, which would have been due to the deceased civil servant, would devolve on his legal representative.[15]

8. The question whether after the death of the plaintiff or the petitioner proceedings would abate would primarily depend on the nature of cause of action[16] and the relief claimed in the peculiar facts of each case[17]. Service benefits may be enjoyed by the successors of the deceased civil servant. Some of those are inheritable which form part of the estate of the deceased while others are grants to be distributed among his family members according to law.[18] The respondents in the instant petition would receive some benefits in case they are able to vindicate their stand before the Tribunal. Such a claim does not extinguish with the death of civil servant. Letting the claim lapse on the basis of an ultra textualist interpretation of the Act would be denying the heirs the right to seek adjudication on merits. The Tribunal is deemed to be a civil court for the purpose of deciding an appeal and has the same powers as are vested in such court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 ("C.P.C.").[19] Rule 33 of Order XLI of C.P.C. empowers a Court of Appeal to pass any decree and make any order which ought to have been passed or made and this power may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, although such respondents or parties may not have filed any appeal. In addition, Rule 1 of Order XXII, C.P.C. provides that the death of a plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the suit to abate if the right to sue survives. And, by virtue of Rule 11, provisions of Rule 1 of Order XXII, C.P.C. have been made applicable to appeals.

9. The object of establishing Service Tribunals was to take out the adjudication of disputes relating to the terms and conditions of service of civil servants from the hands of tradition bound civil courts and place it before specialized tribunals exclusively dealing with the issue without being hamstrung by intricate procedural rules of pleadings, trial, admissibility of the evidence and proof of facts.[20] In addition to reducing the burden of regular civil courts, a very important purpose was to provide to the civil servants expeditious adjudication in respect of their grievances.[21] Notwithstanding that C.P.C. is not as a whole strictly applicable to the proceedings before the Tribunal, the Tribunal is bound to follow the basic norms of justice.[22] It has been observed by this Court that the provisions of C.P.C. may not stricto sensu apply in proceedings under a special law yet its equitable principles will always be applicable in order to do complete justice between the parties and meet the ends of justice.[23]

10. Not all legal rights terminate on death.[24] A claim by a civil servant for his promotion or better terms and conditions or for reinstatement in service, is survivable claim and passes on in the shape of pecuniary and pensionary benefits to his legal heirs. Such a claim may arise under the service laws but also enjoys constitutional underpinning. "The right to employment and to earn a living free from undue molestation is a property right affecting the estate of plaintiff. Such right does not abate upon his death."[25] Abatement of appeal on the death of the decedent would impinge upon the property rights of the respondents. Also, shutting eyes to their potential property rights would hurt their right to dignity. "Human dignity is harmed when individuals and groups are marginalized, ignored, or devalued. . . "[26]

11. Under our constitutional scheme, abatement of proceedings on the death of a civil servant, in a case, where the cause of action carries a survivable interest will unduly deprive the decedent civil servant, as well as, his legal heirs of their constitutional rights to livelihood, property, dignity and fair trial. Fundamental right to life including right to livelihood ensures the security of the terms and conditions of service;[27] fundamental right to property ensures security of the pecuniary and pensionary benefits attached to the service;[28] fundamental right to dignity ensures that the reputation of the civil servant is not sullied or discredited through wrongful dismissal, termination or reversion etc;[29] and fundamental right to fair trial and due process, inter alia, safeguards and protects the survivable interest and ensures continuity of the legal proceedings even after the death of the civil servant, equipping the legal heirs to purse the claim[30]. Fundamental rights under the Constitution do not only protect and safeguard a citizen but extend beyond his life and protect and safeguard his survivable interests by being equally available to his legal heirs. It is reiterated that other than pecuniary and pensionary benefits that inure to the benefit of the legal heirs, the right to restore one's reputation is also a survivable right and flows down to the legal heirs to pursue and take to its logical conclusion. Any slur on the reputation of a civil servant impinges on his human dignity and weighs equally on the dignity and honour of his family.

12. For the foregoing reasons, we take no exception to the impugned order and are of the view that it does not warrant any interference. Leave is, therefore, declined and this petition is dismissed.

MWA/R-3/SC Petition dismissed.

2021 S C M R 730

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

The PROVINCE OF PUNJAB through Secretary, Finance Department, Government of the Punjab, Lahore and others---Petitioners

Versus

KANWAL RASHID and others---Respondents

C.P. 883-L of 2020 and C.P. 1791-L of 2020, decided on 9th February, 2021.

(Against the judgment of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 27.01.2020, passed in I.C.A. No. 50253/2019 and order dated 07.09.2020 passed in W.P. No. 13125/2020)

(a) Punjab Civil Servants Act (VIII of 1974)---

----S. 18(2)---Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1963, R. 4.10---Family pension, entitlement to---Unmarried daughter of deceased civil servant parents---Entitled to draw the pension of 'both' her parents simultaneously---However, such daughter would be disentitled from drawing pension, when she was married or acquired a regular source of income on her own, regardless of the family pension received by her.

(b) Punjab Civil Servants Act (VIII of 1974)---

----S. 18(2)---Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1963, R. 4.10---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 14(1)---Children of deceased civil servants---Family pension, entitlement to---Clarification notification issued by Provincial Finance department with regard to family pension---Legality---Provincial Finance Department had no authority under the law to clarify, interpret, abridge or extend the right of (family) pension provided under S. 18(2) of the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974 and further regulated by the Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1963---Supreme Court observed that depriving the children of civil servants of their family pension on the basis of an unauthorized and unlawful clarification by the (Provincial) Finance Department, offended the right to dignity of the deceased civil servants who were assured under the law that they and their children would enjoy the security of pension upon retirement---Petitions for leave to appeal were dismissed and leave was refused.

(c) Punjab Civil Servants Act (VIII of 1974)---

----S. 18(2)---Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1963, R. 4.10---Family pension, entitlement to---Unmarried daughter of deceased civil servant parents---Entitlement of unmarried daughter of deceased civil servants to pension till her marriage or till 'acquiring a regular source of income' [Rule 4.10 of the Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1963]---'Acquiring a regular source of income'---Meaning---"Acquiring a regular source of income" under the Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1963 meant that the unmarried daughter on her own, irrespective of the source of pension, had acquired a regular source of income---Acquire signified gain by one's own effort---Entitlement to family pension by virtue of the death of the parents did not constitute acquisition of a regular source of income; it was also not "regular" as the unmarried daughter was disentitled to receive family pension the minute she was married---Both said conditions must be met by her own self irrespective of the pension---Unmarried daughter must acquire a regular income of her own expertise and efforts---Disqualification (from receiving family pension) mentioned in Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1963 must be independent of the family pension and pension itself could not constitute a ground for disqualification.

(d) Punjab Civil Servants Act (VIII of 1974)---

----S.18---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 9---Pension, right of---Scope---Right to pension had a constitutional significance; it drew its strength from the right to life or the right to livelihood under Art. 9 of the Constitution.

M. Shan Gull, Additional A.G, Punjab, Rana Shamshad Khan, Additional A.G., Jawad Yaqoob, Additional A.G., Abdul Rauf, Deputy Secretary and Nasir Mahmood, Law Officer for Petitioners (in both cases).

Rana Asad Ullah Khan, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents (in C.P. 883-L/2020).

Nemo for Respondents (in C.P. 1791-L/2020).

Date of hearing: 9th February, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question of law before us is whether an unmarried daughter of deceased civil servant parents can draw the pension of both her parents simultaneously or instead, entitled to draw the pension of only one of her parents?

2. Brief facts of the case are that both the parents of the respondent were civil servants and entitled to pension under the law. On their passing away, pension of both the parents, formed part of the family pension and passed on to the respondent under the law. Being unmarried, the respondent was continuously drawing the family pension after the passing away of her parents till she was informed vide letter dated 10.08.2016 issued by the Accountant General, Punjab, that she could not draw the pension of both the parents simultaneously and could only draw the pension of one parent. Thereafter vide notice dated 11.11.2016, the respondent was asked to deposit a sum of Rs.1,941,631/- into the Government treasury on account of the pension unduly received by her of one of her parent. The background and the basis for the issuance of the aforesaid letter and notice to the respondent was the clarification issued by the Finance Department, Government of the Punjab dated 11.09.2015 whereby Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1963[1] ("Rules") were clarified.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the record, the law on the subject and the impugned judgments of both the benches of the High Court in detail. The right to pension of a civil servant is recognized under section 18 of the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974 ("Act") which provides as follows:

> 18. Pension and gratuity.---(1) On retirement from service, a civil servant shall be entitled to receive such pension or gratuity as may be prescribed.
>
> (2) In the event of death of a civil servant, whether before or after retirement, his family shall be entitled to receive such pension, or gratuity, or both, as may be prescribed.

A civil servant after retirement and after his or her death, the family is entitled to receive his or her pension, as prescribed in the rules.[2] Under section 23, the Governor or any person authorized in this behalf shall make rules for carrying out the purposes of the Act. Rule 4.10 of the Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1963 ("Rules")[3] deals with "Family Pension" and provides that family pension in case of widow's death will be admissible to the dependent sons until they attain the age of 24 years or till they are gainfully employed, which ever is earlier and to unmarried daughters till their marriage or they acquiring regular source of income which ever is earlier. Therefore, as per the Rule, an unmarried daughter is disentitled from drawing family pension after marriage or on acquiring a regular source of income. The entitlement under consideration is of Family Pension, which may comprise of pension from one parent or both the parents. The distinction between pension from one parent or both is not recognized under the Act or the Rules and is collectively referred to as Family Pension under the Rules. The son or the daughter of the deceased civil servants have a right to draw Family Pension unless they are disentitled due to the disqualification mentioned in the Rules. The disentitlement is based on the independent acts of the children or their age. Pension itself, however, cannot amount to be a disentitlement, as discussed and explained hereunder.

4. The Finance Department, Government of the Punjab interpreting the Rules issued a clarification dated 11.09.2015 to the effect if in case of two pensions (of both the parents) drawn by the unmarried daughter, one pension constitutes her regular income hence it disentitles her from drawing the other pension. As a result she is only entitled to one pension. The clarification issued by the Finance Department is as follows;

> No.FD-SR-III-4-471/2014
>
> GOVERNMENT OF THE PUNJAB

FINANCE DEPARTMENT

Dated Lahore the 11th September, 2015

Subject: LIBERALIZATION OF PENSION RULES-CLARIFICATION.

I am directed to refer to Para-1 of this Department's letter No.FD-SR-III-4-11/89 Dated 22nd July, 1989 and to state that a question has arisen as to whether an un-married daughter can draw family pension of her father and mother simultaneously. The matter has been examined and it is observed that a monthly family pension being received by a person is construed as regular source of income. Therefore, such person is not entitled to receive another family pension.

Sd/-

(M. NAWAZ KHALID ARBI)

DEPUTY SECRETARY (SR)

5. The above clarification suffers from multiple constitutional and legal defects as discussed hereunder:

(i) The Finance Department has no authority under the law to clarify, interpret, abridge or extend the right of pension provided under section 18(2) of the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974 and further regulated by the Punjab Civil Services Pension Rules, 1963 promulgated by the Governor. The impugned clarification issued by the Finance Department dated 11.09.2015 has usurped the rule making power of the Governor by interpreting, clarifying and modifying Rule 4.10. Finance Department has also encroached upon the legislative power under section 18 of the Act which entitles the family of the deceased civil servant to pension in the manner prescribed;

(ii) Without prejudice to the above, impugned clarification in the year 2015 cannot operate retrospectively and adversely affect the right to family pension that had accrued to the respondent on the death of her mother in the year 2006 and the family pension she has regularly drawn since then;

(iii) We have noticed that in case of a son, he can draw the family pension (comprising of both the parents) till he attains the age of 24 or is gainfully employed. Before the son attains the age of 24 he is entitled to draw the family pension (comprising of both the parents) as one of the pension does not amount to being "gainfully employed" in order to disentitle him of the second pension. So while the son can draw family pension of both the parents, the unmarried daughter is treated differently as one of the two pensions in her case is considered to be her regular source of income, disentitling her of the second pension. This is discriminatory and offensive to Article 25 of the Constitution and a gender insensitive act of the Finance Department;

(v) "Acquiring a regular source of income" under the Rules means that the unmarried daughter on her own, irrespective of the source of pension, has acquired a regular source of income. The word "acquire" under the Black's Law Dictionary[4], supplied by the learned AAG means: " to gain by any means, usually by one's own exertions; to obtain by search, endeavor, practice or purchase." Acquire signifies gain by one's own effort. Entitlement to family pension by virtue of the death of the parents does not constitute acquisition of a regular source of income. It is also not "regular" as the unmarried daughter is disentitled to receive family pension the minute she is married. Both these conditions must be met by her own self irrespective of the pension. She must acquire a regular income of her own expertise and efforts. The disqualification mentioned in the amendment brought about in the Rules, must be independent of the family pension and pension itself cannot constitute a ground for disqualification;

(vi) The right to pension has a constitutional significance. It draws its strength from the right to life or the right to livelihood under Article 9 of the Constitution. It is important to appreciate that both the parents of the respondent(s) gave the best years of their lives to government service with the expectation to receive pension upon retirement and to leave a family pension for their children upon their death, subject to the lawful disentitlements under the Rules. Depriving the children of civil servants of their family pension on the basis of an unauthorized and unlawful clarification by the Finance Department, offends the right to dignity of the deceased civil servants who were assured under the law that they and their children will enjoy the security of pension upon retirement.

Reference to the Income Tax Ordinance, 2000 ("Ordinance") by the learned AAG is of little significance. Even if pension is considered to be an income under the Ordinance it is neither an income "acquired" by the respondent nor is it "regular" income as envisaged under the Rules.

6. In this background we see no reason to interfere in the well reasoned concurrent findings of the High Court. The pension of the respondent shall continue strictly in accordance with the Act and the Rules, while the impugned clarification dated 11.09.2015 is struck down as being illegal and unconstitutional. The respondent will, however, be disentitled from drawing pension, when she is married or acquires a regular source of income on her own, regardless of the family pension received by her.

7. Leave is, therefore, declined and these petitions are dismissed.

MWA/P-5/SC Petitions dismissed.

2021 S C M R 760

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

DEPUTY DIRECTOR FOOD FAISALABAD DIVISION, FAISALABAD and others---Petitioners

Versus

MUHAMMAD TAUQIR SHAH and others---Respondents

C.P. No. 43-L/2021 to C.P.58-L/2021, decided on 10th March, 2021.

(Against the order of Punjab Service Tribunal, Lahore dated 26.10.2020, passed in Appeals Nos.321 to 336 of 2020)

Punjab Regularization of Service Act (XV of 2018)---

----Ss. 2(f), 3, 6(1)(a) & 6(1)(b)---Contract employees regularized in service under the Punjab Regularization of Service Act, 2018 ('the 2018 Act')---Whether regularization operated from the date of regularization of the service of the employee or from the date of initial appointment of the employee on contract basis---Held, that provisions of the 2018 Act were unambiguous and clearly mentioned that regularization shall be with immediate effect i.e., from the date of regularization---Regularization of contract employees under the 2018 Act shall be considered from the date of their regularization.

Rana Shamshad Khan, Additional A.G. for Petitioners (in all cases).

Hafiz Tariq Naseem, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents (in all cases).

Date of hearing: 10th March, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The services of the respondents were admittedly regularized under The Punjab Regularization of Service Act, 2018 ("Act"), therefore, the sole question before us is the determination of the date of regularization i.e., whether it is from the date of regularization of the service of the employee or whether from the date of initial appointment of the employee on contract basis. The Punjab Service Tribunal through impugned consolidated order dated 26.10.2020 found that the regularization of the respondents shall be from the date of their initial appointment under the contract, but the impugned order has failed to discuss the provisions of the Act.

2. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have gone through the provisions of the aforesaid Act. The Act provides for appointment on regular basis of employees serving on contract.[1] The Act is applicable to persons employed in a department, who have completed three years continuous service before or after commencement of the Act.[2] "Regularization" under the Act means the appointment of an eligible contract employee on regular basis, with immediate effect, in accordance with the Act.[3] The Act further provides that the contract employees who have continuously been serving as such for a period not less than three years shall be eligible to be considered for appointment on regular basis if; (a) a regular vacancy allocated for initial recruitment is available for regularization; (b) he is qualified for the post; (c) he has not been appointed on a special pay package; (d) his performance during the period of contract has remained satisfactory; and (e) he does not opt to continue as contract employee.[4] The procedure for regularization provided under the Act is that the contract employee appointed on the recommendations of the Punjab Public Service Commission ("Commission") shall be submitted to the appointing authority for regularization without reference to the Commission or the Scrutiny Committee as constituted under Section 5 of the Act. However, if the post in question falls within the purview of the Commission and the contract employee is appointed otherwise than on the recommendations of the Commission, the case shall be referred to the Commission for recommendations[5] and if the post is outside the purview of the Commission, the case of a contract employee shall be placed before the Scrutiny Committee constituted under the Act for recommendations. The appointments made under Section 4 of the Act shall be with immediate effect.[6] The service rendered by a contract employee shall not be counted for pensionary benefits or for any other purpose whatsoever.[7] Contract employee, who is not recommended for regularization by the Commission or, as the case may be, the Scrutiny Committee, shall be terminated forthwith.[8] A contract employee, who is regularized, shall be placed at the bottom of the seniority list of the respective cadre and shall rank junior to the other civil servants.[9] A contract employee, regularized under the Act, shall cease to be governed by the Contract Appointment Policy 2004 and the terms and conditions of the contract and shall be regulated under the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974 and the rules framed thereunder.[10]

3. The scheme of the Act clearly shows that the regularization of a contract is with immediate effect i.e., from the date of regularization. Learned counsel for the respondents has placed reliance on certain orders of this court in the matter of regularization.[11] We have perused the said orders and noticed that they did not discuss the Act or its provisions and the regularization in the said orders was on the basis of the Policy announced by the Government, therefore, they are not relevant for our purposes. The provisions of the Act are unambiguous and clearly mention that regularization shall be with immediate effect i.e., from the date of regularization.

4. In this view of the matter, the impugned consolidated order is set aside. The regularization of the respondents shall be considered from the date of their regularization. Resultantly, these petitions are converted into appeals and allowed in the above terms.

MWA/D-6/SC Petitions allowed.

2021 S C M R 767

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

PROVINCE OF PUNJAB through Secretary Livestock and Dairy Development Department, Government of the Punjab, Lahore and others---Petitioners

Versus

Dr. JAVED IQBAL and others---Respondents

C.P. 2210-L/2020 to C.P. 2239-L/2020 and C.M.A. 489-L/2021, decided on 25th March, 2021.

(Against the consolidated order of Punjab Service Tribunal Dated 14.10.2020, passed in Appeals Nos.1347 of 2020, etc.)

Punjab Regularization of Service Act (XV of 2018)---

----S. 3(1)---Contract employee---Regularization in service---Date of regularization of contract employees was the date of their regularization under the relevant Regularization Policy.

Contractual employee was appointed under a scheme, which was totally different from that of regular appointment and a contractual appointee did not enjoy the right to be appointed on regular basis or to be readily shifted into the regime of regular appointment. It did not matter if the appointment on contract was through the same process of public advertisement and scrutiny through (Provincial) Public Service Commission, it was still a contractual appointment for a limited period of time and was different from a regular appointment by virtue of which a person attained the status of a civil servant.

In the present case, the Regularization Policy ["Appointment of Contractees in BS-16 and above on Regular Basis dated 10.11.2010"] provided for a special procedure whereby the cases of the contractual employees were considered for regularization on a case-to-case basis, keeping in view their performance and other qualifications. Regularization of a contract employee was, therefore, a fresh appointment into the stream of regular appointment. A contractual employee for the first time became a civil servant. Regularization Policy in question clearly provided that contractual employees enjoyed no vested right to regularization much less to be regularized from any particular date. The benefit of regularization extended to them under the Regularization Policy was prospective in nature and there was no legal justification to give it a retrospective application.

Consistent governmental policies on regularization had finally manifested themselves in the Punjab Regularization of Service Act, 2018 ("Act") which specifically provided for regularization from immediate effect. Therefore, there had been a consistent design behind the scheme of regularization and it has always been conceived from the date of regularization.

Judgment of a five member Bench of this Court dated 29.1.2018, passed in Civil Review Petition No.471/2015 ref.

Rana Shamshad Khan, Additional A.G., Ms. Irum Bukhari, Additional Chief Secretary, Ahmed Ali Kamboh, Secretary Regulations, Ms. Khadija Tul Kubra, Addl. Secy. Reg., Hafiz Arshad Mahmood, Law Officer and Anwaar Hussain, Advocate Supreme Court (C.M.A. 489-L/2021) for Petitioners (in all cases).

Mahmood Ahmed Qazi, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents (in all cases).

Date of hearing: 25th March, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question before us is whether the date of regularization of contract employees is the date of their initial appointment on contract basis or the date of their regularization under the Regularization Policy dated 10.11.2010 ?

2. The background to the above question is that the respondents were appointed on contract basis as Veterinary Officers in Grade-17 in Livestock and Dairy Development Department, Government of the Punjab during the years 2004 to 2009. Their services were subsequently regularized by the Government with immediate effect, vide order dated 15.2.2011. The grievance of the respondents was that they ought to have been regularized from the date of their initial appointment on contractual basis rather than on 15.2.2011 i.e., the date of regularization of their service. Their representation and departmental appeal were turned down on 21.07.2018 and 29.01.2020. However, on approaching the Punjab Service Tribunal ("Tribunal"), the appeals of the respondents were allowed vide impugned order dated 14.10.2020, allowing regularization of the services with effect from the date of their initial appointment on contract basis. The said order has been impugned before us by the Provincial Government.

3. Learned counsel submits that the respondents are not entitled to regularization from the date of their initial appointment for the reason that they have no vested right to regular appointment. There is no clause in their Letters of Appointment or the Contract Employment Policy dated 29.12.2004 ("Contract Policy") that confers such a right. The Policy regarding Appointment of Contractees in BS-16 and above on Regular Basis dated 10.11.2010 ("Regularization Policy") allows for regularization but does not permit its retrospective application. He submits that there is no legal justification whatsoever for giving effect to their regularization retrospectively and has placed reliance upon the judgment of a five member Bench of this Court dated 29.1.2018, passed in Civil Review Petition No.471/2015 and unreported judgments dated 13.03.2010 passed in C.Ps. Nos. 318-L to 330-L of 2018 and dated 21.07.2020 passed in C.Ps. Nos. 194-L/2020, etc.

4. Learned counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, referred to the Contract Policy and submitted that there are two streams of appointment in the Provincial Government; one is that of regular appointment and the other of contractual appointment. He submits that the mode and the manner of appointment in both the schemes is the same, therefore, at any stage if the Government decides to regularize the services of contractual employees, they are to be regularized from the date of their initial appointment, as there is no material difference between the two sets of appointments as far as the qualification and process of appointment is concerned.

5. In order to appreciate the contentions of the parties it is important to understand the scheme of contractual and regular appointment under the Provincial Government. The Contract Appointment Policy was conceived after the Government realized that regular mode of appointment is not suitable for most of the Government sector assignments due to administrative and financial factors[1]. The rationale behind the contractual mode of appointment is based on financial and economic reasons, as well as, administrative reasons. According to the Policy[2], the financial constraints of salary and pension under regular appointment had become unsustainable. Besides several administrative reasons associated with the regular employees also tilted the scales in favour of the contractual mode of appointment: large scale absenteeism of regular employees; poor performance leading to poor service delivery; cumbersome accountability mechanism systems; huge administrative costs of transfer and promotions, etc; no concept of performance based indicators; contract mode being more flexible to tap in the best human resource available in the market; latest management practices in the developed world also recommended contract mode of appointment. These reasons led to development of two separate schemes of appointment. Persons appointed on contract basis are not civil servants, therefore, their service matters are not governed by the rules framed under Civil Servants Act, 1974. Their appointment is strictly regulated by the terms and conditions of the contract[3]. Their period of contract is between 3 to 5 years[4] and extension is generally granted for a period of 3 to 5 years and not for an indefinite period.[5] On expiry of contract appointment, if no extension is granted, it is ensured that the contract employee is not allowed to continue in service[6]. Contract appointment is liable to be terminated on one month's notice or on one month's pay, in lieu thereof, on either side without assigning any reason[7]. The contract provides that the contract appointment shall not confer any right of regular appointment nor shall such appointment be regularized under any circumstances[8]. A contract employee shall, under no circumstances, claim conversion of his contract appointment into regular appointment[9].

6. On the other hand, employees appointed on regular basis are governed by the rules framed under the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974 such as the Punjab Civil Servants (Appointment and Conditions of Service) Rules, 1974, Service Rules of the post, Leave Rules, Pension Rules, etc.[10] The above shows that a contractual employee is appointed under a scheme, which is totally different from that of regular appointment and a contractual appointee does not enjoy the right to be appointed on regular basis or to be readily shifted into the regime of regular appointment. It does not matter if the appointment on contract is through the same process of public advertisement and scrutiny through Punjab Public Service Commission, it is still a contractual appointment for a limited period of time and is different from a regular appointment by virtue of which a person attains the status of a civil servant. This distinction between the two streams of services is important to address the question posed at the beginning of this judgment.

7. The scheme of regularization is unnecessary for a civil servant (a regular employee) and has been introduced only to induct the contractual employees into regular service. The Regularization Policy provides for a special procedure whereby the cases of the contractual employees are considered for regularization on a case-to-case basis, keeping in view their performance and other qualifications. Regularization of a contract employee is, therefore, a fresh appointment into the stream of regular appointment. A contractual employee for the first time becomes a civil servant. It is underlined that contractual employees enjoy no vested right to regularization (see Contract Appointment Policy) much less to be regularized from any particular date. The benefit of regularization extended to them under the Regularization Policy is prospective in nature and there is no legal justification to give it a retrospective application. Any such step would totally negate the purpose and significance of Contract Appointment Policy and leave no distinction between a contractual and a regular employee. This has been the tenor of the jurisprudence evolved by this court and reference can be made to judgment of a five member Bench of this Court dated 29.1.2018, passed in Civil Review Petition No.471/2015 and unreported judgments dated 13.03.2010 passed in C.Ps. Nos. 318-L to 330-L of 2018 and dated 21.07.2020 passed in C.Ps. Nos. 194-L/2020, etc. It is also important to underline that the consistent governmental policies on regularization have finally manifested themselves in the Punjab Regularization of Service Act, 2018 ("Act") which specifically provides for regularization from immediate effect. Therefore, there has been a consistent design behind the scheme of regularization and it has always been conceived from the date of regularization. We see no reason to upset this uniform governmental policy which has now received legislative support under the Act.

8. For the above reasons, we convert these petitions into appeals and allow the same; the impugned consolidated order of the Tribunal is set aside, and the respondents shall stand regularized w.e.f. 15.2.2011 i.e, the date of regularization.

C.M.A. 489-L/2021

9. As we have allowed the titled civil petitions, therefore, this CMA has lost its significance and become infructuous, hence disposed of accordingly.

MWA/P-6/SC Order accordingly.

2021 S C M R 775

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

Criminal Petition No. 713-L/2020

(Against the judgment of Lahore High Court dated 02.06.2020, passed in I.C.A. No.196 of 2019)

CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER, MULTAN ELECTRIC POWER COMPANY LTD, KHANEWAL ROAD, MULTAN---Petitioner

Versus

MUHAMMAD ILYAS and others---Respondents

Criminal Petition No. 714-L/2020

(Against the judgment of Lahore High Court dated 02.06.2020, passed in I.C.A. No.201 of 2019)

D.G HR AND ADMIN MEPCO, MULTAN ELECTRIC POWER COMPANY LTD. KHANEWAL ROAD MULTAN---Petitioner

Versus

MUHAMMAD ILYAS and others---Respondents

Criminal Petitions Nos. 713-L and 714-L of 2020, decided on 22nd March, 2021.

(a) Civil service---

----Appointment against vacancy---Directions for appointment issued by the High Court not complied with by the petitioner-company---Whether contempt of court---Judicial overreach---Scope---In the present case the entire recruitment process for the posts in question was cancelled---As a result not a single appointment was made to the said posts as per the public advertisement on the basis of which respondent-candidate had applied---Since the entire recruitment process for the posts was scrapped, respondent could not lay any claim to the said post---Consequently the contempt proceedings initiated (by the High Court) on the basis of order to issue appointment letter to the respondent also came to an end---Petitions for leave to appeal were converted into appeals and allowed, and the constitutional petition filed by the respondent before the High Court was dismissed with the observations that the (High Court) Judge in the present case, instead of deciding the case on merits, passed the final order of appointment of respondent without adjudicating the issue in hand and then executed the order by directing the petitioner-company that the appointment letter be issued by the next date of hearing; that by assuming the role of the Executive the judge disregarded his core function of adjudication, in accordance with law; that ignoring the constitutional boundaries of separation of powers could easily equip a judge with a false sense of power and authority, and that this was a dangerous tendency and must be guarded against to ensure that the judicial role continued to remain within its constitutional limits.

(b) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 199---Judicial review---Scope---Judicial review was the power of the court to examine the actions of the legislative, executive, and administrative arms of the government and to determine whether such actions were consistent with the Constitution and the law---Actions judged inconsistent were declared unconstitutional or unlawful and, therefore, rendered null and void---Court entrusted with the power to judicially review an executive action could only declare it to be right or wrong but could not take over the functions that belonged to another organ of the State.

(c) Administration of justice---

----Judge must always stay within the four corners of the law and must not be swayed by emotions or his own understanding of justice, because in doing so he failed to decide the case in accordance with law.

(d) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 199---Judicial overreach---Scope---When judiciary encroached upon the domain of the Executive, it was said to commit judicial overreach - which occurred when a court acted beyond its jurisdiction and interfered in areas which fell within the Executive and/or the Legislature's mandate---Through such interference the court violated the doctrine of separation of powers by taking on the executive functions upon itself---Such judicial role imperiled the separation of powers, jeopardized the legitimacy of the judicial institution and undermined constitutional democracy---Thus, it was imperative that the courts did not derogate from their constitutionally mandated oversight function of judicial review.

R Suttner "The Question of 'Judicial Overreach'" Polity (22 May 2017) available at http://www.polity.org.za/article/the-question-of-judicial-overreach-2017-05-22 ref.

Mian Muhammad Javaid, Advocate Supreme Court along with Ikram ul Haq, CEO, MEPCO and Nasar Hayat, Director HR MEPCO for Petitioners (in both cases).

Respondents in person (in both cases).

Date of hearing: 22nd March, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts of the case are that Respondent No.1 applied for the post of Assistant Line Man ("ALM") in pursuance to a public advertisement issued by Multan Electric Power Company ("MEPCO"). Respondent No.1 applied and sat the written test but was not called for the interview and as a result not selected for the post. Aggrieved, Respondent No.1 challenged MEPCO's failure to select and appoint him to the post. On merits the post of ALM was advertised and the last candidate who was selected for interview had a score of 66 marks in written examination, whereas Respondent No.1 had 50 marks. In this background the High Court passed the following order dated 14.11.2018:

> "Despite the fact that the petitioner obtained 50 marks in written test as per report submitted by learned counsel for the respondents and his name was placed at Sr. 269 of the successful candidates, the petitioner was not called for interview and on account of his non-participation in such process, he was not appointed.
>
> 2. Assistant Director appearing for MEPCO has confirmed that 1000 vacancies of ALM are still lying vacant. The petitioner who was qualified against the said post and is liable to be appointed as ALM in BS-7 has been deprived of his such right in an unauthorized and illegal manner.
>
> 3. Assistant Director, MEPCO, is directed to appear along with Appointment Letter duly signed and issued by the Competent Authority in favour of the petitioner as ALM before the Court on the next date of hearing.
>
> 4. Adjourned to 15.11.2018."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

2. As MEPCO failed to submit the Appointment Letter on the next date of hearing, respondent No.1 filed a contempt petition against the petitioner company and its officers. Vide order dated 31.05.2019 show cause notice for contempt was issued to the Chief Executive Officer and another officer of the petitioner company and they were also personally summoned. Both the orders dated 14.11.2018 and 31.05.2019 were challenged by MEPCO through an intra court appeal before a Division Bench in the High Court. The said appeal was dismissed vide impugned order dated 02.06.2020. Hence, this petition

3. It is important to underline that the entire recruitment process for the posts of ALM was cancelled, as the post of ALM was upgraded. As a result not a single appointment was made to the post of ALM as per the public advertisement on the basis of which Respondent No.1 applied. Faced with this situation Respondent No.1 referred to certain appointment letters and alleged that inspite of the cancellation of the entire recruitment process for the post of ALM, some persons were appointed as ALM through the backdoor. The Chief Executive Officer, MEPCO who has appeared before us today clarified that the said appointments were not in pursuance to the public advertisement, but instead were under a special quota of the deceased employees and has no nexus with the recruitment process under which Respondent No.1 had applied. Therefore, not only on merits, but even otherwise, as the entire recruitment process for the post of ALM was scrapped, Respondent No.1 could not lay any claim to the said post. The interference by the High Court vide order dated 14.11.2018, which was subsequently upheld in the ICA vide impugned judgment dated 02.06.2020, was without any legal foundation and therefore, both the orders are set aside and the writ petition of Respondent No.1 stands dismissed. As a consequence the contempt proceedings initiated on the basis of order dated 14.11.2018 also comes to an end.

4. Vide order dated 14.11.2018 the learned judge of the High Court directed the Assistant Director MEPCO to produce the Appointment Letter of Respondent No.1, despite that Respondent No.1 did not qualify for the interview and therefore could not have been appointed under the recruitment policy of the authority. The High Court totally ignored the recruitment process, the policy of the executive and the merit settled by MEPCO and relied on an irrelevant fact that 1000 seats were still lying vacant at MEPCO. This order has left us somewhat disturbed.

5. It appears that the meaning and scope of "judicial review" has perhaps eluded the attention of the learned judge while exercising his power under Article 199 of the Constitution and in passing order dated 14.11.2018. Judicial review is the power of the court to examine the actions of the legislative, executive, and administrative arms of the government and to determine whether such actions are consistent with the Constitution and the law. Actions judged inconsistent are declared unconstitutional or unlawful and, therefore, rendered null and void. The court entrusted with the power to judicially review an executive action can only declare it to be right or wrong but cannot take over the functions that belong to another organ of the State. Under our Constitution, the Legislature, Executive, and Judiciary all have their own broad spheres of operation. It is not permissible for any one of these three organs to encroach upon the domain of another. A judge must always stay within the four corners of the law and must not be swayed by emotions or his own understanding of justice, because in doing so he fails to decide the case in accordance with law.

6. In the instant case, the judge instead of deciding the case on merits, passed the final order of appointment of respondent No.1 without adjudicating the issue in hand and then executed the order by directing the petitioner that the Appointment Letter be issued by the next date of hearing. By assuming the role of the Executive the judge disregarded his core function of adjudication, in accordance with law. Ignoring the constitutional boundaries of separation of powers can easily equip a judge with a false sense of power and authority. This is a dangerous tendency and must be guarded against to ensure that the judicial role continues to remain within its constitutional limits.

7. When judiciary encroaches upon the domain of the Executive, as in this case, where the learned judge disregarded the eligibility criteria and the recruitment policy of the Executive Authority and assumed the function of the Executive, it is said to commit judicial overreach - which occurs when a court acts beyond its jurisdiction and interferes in areas which fall within the Executive and/or the Legislature's mandate.[1] Through such interference the court violates the doctrine of separation of powers by taking on the executive functions upon itself. The instant case is a textbook case of judicial overreach, where a judge directs an authority to issue an Appointment Letter disregarding the recruitment process, merit and the employment policy of the executive authority. Such judicial role imperils the separation of powers, jeopardizes the legitimacy of the judicial institution and undermines constitutional democracy. It is imperative that the courts do not derogate from their constitutionally mandated oversight function of judicial review. Certain values in the Constitution have been designated as foundational to our democracy which means that, as corner-stones of our democracy, they must be scrupulously observed. It is a sure recipe for a constitutional crisis if these values are not observed and their precepts are not carried out conscientiously.

8. For the above reasons, the impugned judgment and order are set aside. These petitions are converted into appeals and allowed. The writ petition filed by Respondent No.1 is dismissed. A copy of this order shall be dispatched to the learned Hon'ble Chief Justice of the Lahore High Court, Lahore who may place the same before the Hon'ble Judges of the Court for information.

MWA/C-5/SC Petition allowed.

2021 S C M R 834

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik andSyed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

D. G. KHAN CEMENT COMPANY LTD.---Petitioner

Versus

GOVERNMENT OF PUNJAB through Chief Secretary,Lahore and others--Respondents C.P. 1290-L/2019, decided on 15th April, 2021.

(Against the Order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 31.01.2019, passed in W.P. No. 5898/2019)

(a) Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance (IV of 1963)---

----S. 3---Restrictions on establishment of industrial undertakings---Zoning and classification of land---Declaring an area as 'positive' or 'negative' area---Purpose and scope---Authority to regulate land use, introduce zones or negative or positive areas, was recognized as the police power of the state, asserted for public welfare---Zoning of the Province into positive and negative areas was a means towards achieving organized and planned industrial growth without impinging on the social, environmental, ecological, civic and economic interests of the locals---Zoning divided land into distinct geographical areas and imposed restrictions with respect to use of land in each area---Such regulatory controls allowed or disallowed use of land in a particular geographical zone, therefore, any application requesting permission to establish or enlarge an industrial undertaking under S. 3 of the Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance, 1963 ('the Ordinance') in an area that was already marked as a zone (negative or positive) was decided accordingly---Organization and planning under the Ordinance was, therefore, in effect, actualized on the basis of the parameters mentioned under S. 3(b) of the Ordinance.

Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co. 272 U.S. 365, 387 ref.

(b) Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance (IV of 1963)---

----S. 3(b)---Restrictions on establishment of industrial undertakings---Sustainable development---Scope---Terms 'prejudicial to national interest', 'injurious to health' and 'source of nuisance' used in S. 3(b) of the Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance, 1963 ('the Ordinance')---Interpretation---Organized and planned growth in the world today would undoubtedly mean "sustainable development" and the terms prejudicial to national interest, injurious to health and source of nuisance [mentioned in S. 3(b) of the Ordinance] would naturally encompass the pressing issues of the time i.e., climate change; environmental degradation; food and health safety; air pollution; water pollution; noise pollution; soil erosion; natural disasters; and desertification and flooding having an appreciable impact on public health, food safety, natural resource conservation, environmental protection, social equity, social choice, etc.

(c) Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance (IV of 1963)---

----S. 3---Restrictions on establishment of industrial undertakings---Zoning of area as 'positive' or 'negative' area---Scope---Zoning of areas for the purposes of the Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance, 1963 was not absolute but was subject to change provided such change was necessitated by new circumstances.

Zoning of areas into positive and negative was not absolute. Organization and planning of future growth could not be frozen in time and was never intended to be static. Zoning allowed the flexibility needed to respond to change. The choices that governed a particular territorial zoning may not hold good indefinitely. Land use patterns changed giving rise to opportunities to revise earlier standards as zoning measures were introduced in public interest. The value of zoning laid in the flexibility by which it was administered to react to new social and economic situations. Daniel R. Mandelker, 'Spot Zoning: New Ideas for an Old Problem' (2016) 48 Urb. Law. 737 and Keith H. Hirokawa, 'Making Sense of a "Misunderstanding of the Planning Process" ' (2012) 44 Urb. Law. 295 ref.

(d) Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance (IV of 1963)---

----S. 3---Punjab Local Government Act (XVIII of 2013), Ss. 4, 72(2)(a), 77(n), 81(1)(d) & 87(1)(g)---Restrictions on establishment of industrial undertakings---Zoning and classification of land---Whether mandate of Provincial Government or Local Government---By way of impugned notification establishment of new cement plants, and enlargement and expansion of existing cement plants was not allowed in the "Negative Area" falling within the Districts 'C' (Chakwal) and 'K' (Khushab)---Petitioner-company that owned and ran a cement manufacturing plant in District 'C' challenged the notification on the ground that the Provincial Government and its concerned department lacked jurisdiction to issue the impugned notification and only the Local Government under the Punjab Local Government Act, 2013 ("Act") could exercise jurisdiction over matters relating to zoning and classification of land, land use, environment control, water sources and ecological balances---Held, that the present matter involved a trans-district issue which could be dealt with by the Provincial Government exercising the authority conferred by the Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance, 1963 ('the Ordinance')---Even so, the functions of the local government could not mean to trump the executive authority of the Provincial Government---Ordinance of 1963 was a special law compared to the Act and therefore took preference---Furthermore, under S. 4 of the Act, local governments had to function within the provincial framework and were to faithfully observe the federal and provincial laws---In the performance of their functions, the local governments were not to impede or prejudice the exercise of the executive authority of the Provincial Government---Supreme Court upheld the impugned notification---Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed and leave was refused.

LDA v. Imrana Tiwana 2015 SCMR 1739 ref.

(e) Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance (IV of 1963)---

----S. 3---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 18 & 25---Restrictions on establishment of industrial undertakings---Zoning of area as 'negative' area---Whether discriminatory and infringement of right to trade and business---By way of impugned notification establishment of new cement plants, and enlargement and expansion of existing cement plants was not allowed in the "Negative Area" falling within the Districts 'C' (Chakwal) and 'K' (Khushab)---Petitioner-company that owned and ran a cement manufacturing plant in District 'C' challenged the notification on the ground that its right to freedom of trade, business and profession guaranteed under Art. 18 of the Constitution was infringed and the actions of the Provincial authorities unreasonably discriminated between the petitioner and other cement manufacturers---Held, that the rights granted under Art. 18 of the Constitution were "subject to such qualifications" that had been "prescribed by law"---Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance, 1963 ('the Ordinance') forbade the setting up of any industrial undertaking except by the prior written permission of the Government---Placing an embargo on establishment and expansion of cement plants in the Negative Area to provide for organized and planned growth of industries in the Province in line with the objectives of the Ordinance did not offend Art. 18 of the Constitution---Furthermore the decision to impose a ban on the establishment and expansion of cement plants was not taken to benefit or punish anyone but to ensure the organized and planned growth of industry in the Province in view of the findings of a multidisciplinary study which provided reasonable basis for zoning of project area without violating Art. 25 of the Constitution---Impugned notification was in accordance with the provisions of the Ordinance and negative area could be planned and designed banning industrial activity within its bounds---Petitioner-company was not allowed to enlarge or enhance the capacity of its existing cement plant till such time that the Negative Area subsisted---Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed and leave was refused.

Tariq Khan Mazari v. Government of Punjab PLD 2016 SC 778 ref.

(f) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 199---Scientific and technical data presented to court by Government functionaries---Judicial review---Scope---Courts while reviewing scientific and technical determinations generally exhibited deference to institutional competence because of the specialized nature of the subject matter, as there was a risk that the courts would unravel layers of careful scientific work as a result of their combined ignorance and judicial second-guessing while reviewing science-based regulatory decisions---However, scientific complexity did not provide excuse to evade judicial scrutiny as it needed to be ensured that Government did not transgress its mandate or did not mangle scientific results to produce certain outcomes---Judicial oversight of specialized administrative decision-making was necessary to obviate the possibility of capture and incompetence.

Emily Hammond Meazell, 'Super Deference, the Science Obsession, and Judicial Review as Translation of Agency Science' (2011) 109 Mich. L. Rev. 733, 734; Elizabeth Fisher, Pasky Pascual and Wendy Wagner, 'Science Challenges for Law and Policy: Rethinking Judicial Review of Expert Agencies' (2015) 93 Tex. L. Rev. 1681, 1682; Laura Anzie Nelson, 'Delineating Deference To Agency Science: Doctrine or Political Ideology?' (2010) 40 Envtl. L. 1057, 1068 and Eduardo Jordao and Susan Rose-Ackerman, 'Judicial Review of Executive Policymaking in Advanced Democracies: Beyond Rights Review' (2014) 66 Admin. L. Rev. 1, 68 ref.

(g) Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance (IV of 1963)---

----S. 3---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9 & 14(1)---Restrictions on establishment of industrial undertakings---Zoning of area as 'negative' area---Precautionary principle of environmental law---Scope---In Dubio Pro Natura, principle of---Scope---By way of impugned notification establishment of new cement plants, and enlargement and expansion of existing cement plants was not allowed in the "Negative Area" falling within the Districts 'C' (Chakwal) and 'K' (Khushab)---Petitioner-company that owned and ran a cement manufacturing plant in District 'C' challenged the notification on the ground that it was not validly issued and it also infringed its various Fundamental rights under the Constitution---Held, that enlargement of an existing cement plant in a negative area attracted the well-established principle of international environmental law called the Precautionary Principle, reflected in Principle 10 of the Rio Declaration, 1992---Said principle provided that where there were threats of serious or irreversible damage, lack of full scientific certainty shall not be used as a reason for postponing cost-effective measures to prevent environmental degradation---Another emerging environmental principle declared as Principle 5 of the IUCN World Declaration on the Environmental Rule of Law (2016) was 'in dubio pro natura' i.e. in cases of doubt, all matters before courts, administrative agencies, and other decision-makers shall be resolved in a way most likely to favour the protection and conservation of the environment, with preference to be given to alternatives that were least harmful to the environment---Actions were not to be undertaken when their potential adverse impacts on the environment were disproportionate or excessive in relation to the benefits derived therefrom---In the facts of the present case, the Provincial Government was obliged to take a precautionary approach and act in-line with the principle of in dubio pro natura, till, inter alia, a detailed hydrogeological study assessing the potential of groundwater resources for industrial purposes of the project area was carried out---Such approach was also constitutionally compliant as the courts were to protect the fundamental rights of the public and in the present case right to life, sustainability and dignity of the community surrounding the project remained paramount till such time that the Government was of the view that the project of the petitioner-company had no adverse environmental effects---Also, the environment needed to be protected in its own right---Impugned notification was in accordance with the provisions of the Ordinance and negative area could be planned and designed banning industrial activity within its bounds---Petitioner-company was not allowed to enlarge or enhance the capacity of its existing cement plant till such time that the Negative Area subsisted---Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed and leave was refused.

(h) Punjab Environmental Protection Act (XXXIV of 1997)---

----Preamble---Environmental legal personhood---Concept and scope---Approach of personifying the environment in order to protect and preserve nature and its objects was one of the latest evolutions in environmental law---Man and his environment each needed to compromise for the better of both and this peaceful co-existence required that the law treated environmental objects as holders of legal rights.

Mohd. Salim v. Uttarakhand 2017 (2) RCR (Civil) 636); Human Rights and Peace for Bangladesh v. Bangladesh (2019) W.P. No.13989 of 2016 (HCD) and Alexandre Lillo, 'Is Water Simply a Flow? Exploring an Alternative Mindset for Recognizing Water as a Legal Person' (2018) 19 Vt. J. Envtl. L. 164, 165 ref.

(i) Punjab Environmental Protection Act (XXXIV of 1997)---

----Preamble---Water justice---Precautionary principle---Scope---In Dubio Pro Natura, principle of---Scope---Approach to be adopted by courts when adjudicating water related disputes---Precautionary principle should be applied in the resolution of water-related disputes---Notwithstanding scientific uncertainty or complexity regarding the existence or extent of risks of serious or irreversible harm to water, human health or the environment, judges should uphold or order the taking of the necessary protective measures having regard to the best available scientific evidence---Consistent with the principle in dubio pro natura, in case of uncertainty, water and environmental controversies before the courts should be resolved, and the applicable laws interpreted, in a way most likely to protect and conserve water resources and related ecosystems---In adjudicating water and water-related cases, judges should be mindful of the essential and inseparable connection that water had with the environment and land uses, and should avoid adjudicating those cases in isolation or as merely a sectoral matter concerning only water---Water justice required appreciation that there were no easy, simple or singular solutions to the water crisis, and that water problems could not be resolved through technical solutions alone but required broader recognition that they were inherently ecological, political and social issues simultaneously.

Farhana Sultana, 'Water justice: why it matters and how to achieve it' (2018) 43 Water International 483; Principle 1 - Water as a Public Interest Good; Principle 2 - Water Justice, Land Use, and the Ecological Function of Property; Principle 5 - Water Justice and Precaution; Principle 6 - In Dubio Pro Aqua and Principle 9 - Water Justice and Environmental Integration ref.

(j) Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance (IV of 1963)---

----S. 3---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 9---Restrictions on establishment of industrial undertakings---Zoning of area as 'negative' area-- Climate change---Significance---By way of impugned notification establishment of new cement plants, and enlargement and expansion of existing cement plants was not allowed in the "Negative Area" falling within the Districts 'C' (Chakwal) and 'K' (Khushab)---Petitioner-company that owned and ran a cement manufacturing plant in District 'C' challenged the notification on the ground that it was not validly issued and it also infringed its various Fundamental Rights under the Constitution---Held, that the fragility of the Negative Area needed to be examined in the larger context of climate change---Environmental issues initially brought to the courts were local geographical issues, be it air pollution, urban planning, water scarcity, deforestation or noise pollution, but now climate change had a bearing on these issues---Impugned notification, in the current facts of the case, was a climate resilient measure and in step with the National Climate Change Policy, 2012 (Pakistan) and the Constitution---Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed and leave was refused.

Shehla Zia's case PLD 1994 SC 693; Imrana Tiwana's case PLD 2015 Lah. 522 and Asghar Leghari's case PLD 2018 Lah. 255 ref.

(k) Punjab Environmental Protection Act (XXXIV of 1997)---

----Preamble---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 9 & Preamble---Climate change---'Climate democracy' and 'intergenerational justice'---Concept and scope---Important dimension of climate change was intergenerational justice and the need for climate democracy---Courts had a role to play in reducing the effects of climate change for the present generation and for the generations to come---Through the pen and jurisprudential fiat, the courts needed to decolonize future generations from the wrath of climate change, by upholding climate justice at all times---Post climate change, democracies had to be redesigned and restructured to become more climate resilient and the fundamental principle of rule of law had to recognize the urgent need to combat climate change---Robust democracies needed to be climate democracies in order to save the world and further generations from being colonized at the hands of climate change---Supreme Court observed that Premabular constitutional value of democracy under the Constitution (of Pakistan) was in effect climate democracy, if we were to actualize the Constitution and the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution for ourselves and our future generations.

Salman Aslam Butt, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Ms. Aliya Ejaz, Assistant A.G., Dr. Khurram Shahzad, D.G. EPA, M. Nawaz Manik, Director Law, EPA, M. Younas Zahid, Dy. Director, Fawad Ali, Dy. Director, EPA (Chakwal), Kashid Sajjan, Asstt. Legal, EPA and Rizwan Saqib Bajwa, Manager GTS for Respondents.

Hasan Riaz, Civil Judge-cum-Research Officer at SCRC[1] for Research Assistance.

Date of hearing: 11th February, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The case stems from Notification dated 08.03.2018 ("Notification") issued by the Industries, Commerce and Investment Department, Government of the Punjab ("Government"), under sections 3 and 11 of the Punjab Industries (Control on Establishment and Enlargement) Ordinance, 1963 ("Ordinance"), introducing amendments in Notification dated 17.09.2002 to the effect that establishment of new cement plants, and enlargement and expansion of existing cement plants shall not be allowed in the "Negative Area" falling within the Districts Chakwal and Khushab.

2. The petitioner owns and runs a cement manufacturing plant in Kahoon Valley in the Salt Range at Khairpur, District Chakwal and feels wronged of the Notification for the reasons, viz. (i) the Provincial Government and its line Department lacked jurisdiction to issue the Notification and only Local Government under the Punjab Local Government Act, 2013 ("Act") could exercise jurisdiction over matters relating to zoning and classification of land, land use, environment control, water sources and ecological balances; (ii) the respondents without a detailed scientific study about underground water levels acted with undue haste in issuing the Notification; (iii) the petitioner was not given the opportunity of hearing under section 3 of the Ordinance read with Articles 4, 9, 10A, 18 and 25 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan ("Constitution"); (iv) the petitioner's right to freedom of trade, business and profession under Article 18 of the Constitution was infringed; and (v) the actions of the respondents unreasonably discriminated between the petitioner and other cement manufacturers similarly placed on the basis of materials and information that could not be termed as reasonable or intelligible differentia thereby violating Article 25 of the Constitution.

3. We consider in this case if the Government's decision of issuing the Notification lacks statutory authority or if factual grounding of the Notification compromises its legal validity.

Legality of declaring an area as a "Negative Area" under the Ordinance

4. We first turn to the question whether the Provincial Government can declare an area to be a "Negative Area" under the Ordinance. "Negative Area" under the Notification is where no new cement plant can be set up and no enlargement or enhancement of an existing cement plant can be allowed. The preamble to the Ordinance provides for organized and planned growth of industries in the Province. Organized and planned industrial growth is unquestionably in the public interest and is effectively regulated through section 3 of the Ordinance. No person can establish an industrial undertaking or enlarge any existing industrial undertaking except with the prior permission of the Provincial Government. Generally, such permission can be granted or refused only after extending an opportunity to the applicant to show cause against it. The discretion of the Government to permit the setting up or enlargement of an industrial undertaking under section 3 is structured according to the conditions spelled out in section 3(b) of the Ordinance. Section 3(a) deals with the permission for establishing or enlarging an industrial undertaking in an area as a greenfield project, which is being examined by the Government for the first time. However, section 3(b) refers to the area where the Government has already satisfied itself on the basis of the information available to it and after making such inquiry as to whether the industrial undertaking to be established or enlarged is prejudicial to national interest, or injurious to health of the residents of the local area in which the industrial undertaking is proposed to be set up or enlarged, or is a source of nuisance for the residents of the local area in which the industrial undertaking is proposed to be set up or enlarged and may declare such an area to be either positive or negative area or zone as the case may be. "Planning" is a comprehensive, coordinated and continuing process that involves identification of future goals, development of plans to achieve those goals, and devising of mechanism to give effect to those plans with a view to promoting the common good of the society.[2] Zoning of the Province into positive and negative areas is a means towards achieving organized and planned industrial growth without impinging on the social, environmental, ecological, civic and economic interests of the locals. Zoning divides land into distinct geographical areas and imposes restrictions with respect to use of land in each area. These regulatory controls allow or disallow use of land in a particular geographical zone. Therefore, any application requesting permission to establish or enlarge an industrial undertaking under section 3 of the Ordinance in an area that is already marked as a zone (negative or positive) is decided accordingly. The organization and planning under the Ordinance is, therefore, in effect, actualized on the basis of the parameters mentioned under section 3(b) of the Ordinance.

5. Further, the socioeconomic concerns critical for organized and planned development existing in the year 1963[3] have since multiplied and become more complex as the population has swelled from approximately 48 million in 1963 to more than 217 million in 2019.[4] Organized and planned growth in the world today would undoubtedly mean "sustainable development[5]" and the terms prejudicial to national interest, injurious to health and source of nuisance would naturally encompass the pressing issues of the time i.e., climate change; environmental degradation; food and health safety; air pollution; water pollution; noise pollution; soil erosion; natural disasters; and desertification and flooding having an appreciable impact on public health, food safety, natural resource conservation, environmental protection, social equity, social choice, etc. The authority to regulate land use, introduce zones or negative or positive areas, has been recognized as the police power of the state, asserted for public welfare.[6] The legislative policy of organized and planned growth, under the Ordinance, also synchronizes well with our constitutional values, set out in the preamble of the Constitution, as well as the Fundamental Rights and the Principles of Policy, in particular, the right to life and dignity,[7] promotion of social and economic wellbeing of the people[8] and safeguarding the legitimate interest of backward and depressed classes[9].

6. We deem it necessary to observe that zoning of areas into positive and negative is not absolute. The ban under the Notification is not etched in stone but may be lifted if the Government is of the view that the valley, in this specific case, stands recharged with water and nature has become resilient to allow sustainable development. Organization and planning of future growth cannot be frozen in time and is never intended to be static. Zoning allows the flexibility needed to respond to change. The choices that govern a particular territorial zoning may not hold good indefinitely. Land use patterns change giving rise to opportunities to revise earlier standards as zoning measures are introduced in public interest.[10] The value of zoning lies in the flexibility by which it is administered to react to new social and economic situations.[11] We, therefore, hold that zoning of areas for the purposes of the Ordinance is not absolute but is subject to change provided such change is necessitated by new circumstances. Hence, the prohibition under the Notification not to establish or enlarge an industrial undertaking in a negative area is not absolute.

7. Insofar as the objection of the petitioner that the mandate of zoning of land belongs to the local government is concerned, suffice it to say that the matter involved a trans-district issue which could be dealt with by the Provincial Government exercising the authority conferred by the Ordinance. Even so, the functions of the local government could not mean to trump the executive authority of the Provincial Government.[12] The Ordinance is a special law compared to the Act and therefore takes preference. Furthermore, under section 4 of the Act, local governments have to function within the provincial framework and are to faithfully observe the federal and provincial laws. And in the performance of their functions, the local governments shall not impede or prejudice the exercise of the executive authority of the Provincial Government. Even otherwise, nothing has been brought on the record that shows that the concerned districts have taken a contrary position or are aggrieved of the Notification.

8. Also, the petitioner claimed that its right to freedom of trade, business and profession guaranteed under Article 18 of the Constitution was infringed and the actions of the respondents unreasonably discriminated between the petitioner and other cement manufacturers. We are, however, of the view that the rights granted under Article 18 of the Constitution are "subject to such qualifications" that have been "prescribed by law". The Ordinance forbids the setting up of any industrial undertaking except by the prior written permission of the Government. Placing an embargo on establishment and expansion of cement plants in the Negative Area to provide for organized and planned growth of industries in the Province in line with the objectives of the Ordinance does not offend Article 18 of the Constitution.[13] Moving on, the decision to impose a ban on the establishment and expansion of cement plants was not taken to benefit or punish anyone but to ensure the organized and planned growth of industry in the Province in view of the findings of a multidisciplinary study (discussed later) which provided reasonable basis for zoning of project area without violating Article 25 of the Constitution.[14]
Factual foundation of the "Negative Area"

9. The next question is whether the Notification was issued in public interest in line with the objectives of the Ordinance or not. In 2016, the Secretary, Mines and Minerals Department informed the Provincial Government that existing cement plants in the Salt Range were causing ecological harm to the area. In this backdrop, the Government decided to inquire into the matter and solicit expert advice. A study was commissioned for determining the suitability of the project area for cement plants comprising Districts of Chakwal, Jhelum, Khushab and Mianwali of Punjab. Messrs. NESPAK and Messrs Sogreah ("Consultants") were engaged for the purpose. The project team included foreign experts such as Cement Plant Expert, Environmental Chemist and Geologist having experience of working in a range of countries in different regions of the world.[15] The methodology of the study reflects that following determinants were identified to be the criteria for suggesting proposals concerning delineation of the negative and positive zones for the establishment of new and expansion of existing cement plants:

i. sufficiency of cement raw materials;
ii. sustainable water resources;
iii. environmental conditions of the project area;
iv. socio-economic conditions;
v. transportation infrastructure; and
vi. agriculture, forest, restricted and sensitive sites.

The Consultants undertook a fairly comprehensive exercise covering a range of factors likely to be impacted by the establishment or expansion of cement plants in the project area. They verified deposits, determined their quality and estimated their resource potential to decide the issue of sufficiency of cement raw materials; carried out water resource study by examining ground and surface water resources; and studied air emissions, ambient noise, and ground, surface and waste water. They also conducted surveys to examine socioeconomic conditions of the area and made estimation of the existing traffic volume through manual classified count surveys, capacity analysis of existing road network, estimation of generated traffic due to new facilities and traffic projections based on relevant socioeconomic indicators and past data. Technical audit of existing cement plants was conducted.

Forest, agricultural and wildlife reserve areas/sanctuaries were taken into consideration. Field visits were conducted and ecological features of the area were studied. A meeting of the Consultants with the representatives of the cement plants and the Government officials was also held.

10. The Consultants found that groundwater table had gone down at an average of 64 feet at various locations, shallow wells (open/dug wells) had been found dried up and, therefore, further installation of new cement plants/expansion of existing cement plants could cause further depletion of groundwater resulting in greater problems for the local people and especially for agriculture. They were of the view that four valleys i.e. Kahoon, Vinhaar, Pail and Padhrar having important scenic and touristic value needed to be protected. Additionally, these valleys contain forest areas, settlements and agriculture lands. It is underlined that total population of the area was recorded as 4.8 million in 2017 and around 1,23,753 in the Negative Area alone. The study showed that any new cement plant or expansion of any existing cement plant would require new road infrastructure or improvement in the capacity of the existing road infrastructure. A negative zone covering an area of 979 sq km (11% of the total area) with an embargo on establishment of new and expansion of existing cement plants was thus delineated out of a total of 8,872 sq km. It was also proposed that demarcation of negative zones be reviewed after every ten years on the basis of technical assessment.

11. The Provincial Cabinet in view of the said recommendations of the Consultants took a number of decisions including declaration of "Negative Area" comprising 979 sq km of land in the Salt Range out of a total area of 8,872 sq km where establishment of new and expansion of existing cement plants was completely banned. It is underlined that the Positive Area adjoins the Negative Area and can be accessed by the petitioner for future development subject to the regulatory approvals under the law. It was also decided that the existing cement plants falling within the Negative Area would be allowed to operate only if they were fully compliant with all legal, technical and environmental standards prescribed by the Government and after a final approval was given by the Government to this effect. The Notification was thus issued and establishment of new and expansion of existing cement plants was banned in the Negative Area. The Government concluded that permitting the establishment of new and expansion of existing cement plants would be prejudicial to public interest.

12. It is hardly a secret that water situation in the project area is far from satisfactory. In November 2017, this Court had taken notice of the reports of drying up of the fabled Katas Raj Temple Pond. Cement companies situated in the vicinity of the pond were found pumping huge quantities of water free of charge and without having any regard for the environmental impact of such unbridled extraction on the aquifer as well as surrounding areas.[16] This Court in Katas Raj case had observed that the issue of scarcity of water in the area was becoming acute adversely affecting the environment and lives of the people living nearby.[17] The cement companies were directed to switch to alternative sources of water and bring their dependence on groundwater to zero within six months.[18] The cement plants, subsequently, claimed to have brought the use of groundwater to zero though the feeding channels of Katas Raj Temple Pond could not become functional and, therefore, the Director General ("DG"), Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") Punjab was directed to constitute a "Team of Experts" from all concerned departments for technical survey of the area to discover the reasons behind the issue.[19] The "Interim Report" dated 11.06.2020 submitted by the DG, EPA Punjab did not convey a satisfactory picture: "14 % (of groundwater in the valley) is abstracted by cement industry"; "Katas Raj Temple' (sic) pond is located downhill whereas the Bestway Cement Factory was installed at (sic) uphill 03 km away from the pond, thus the latter intervention may influence the groundwater flow path recharging holy pond"; and "over abstraction appears so far to be the main cause of drying out of pond." Here, we are reminded of the Consultants' recommendation that use of existing tube wells within the boundary of existing cement plants, even after shifting to alternative sustainable water sources, must be monitored to ensure that cement plants are not abstracting groundwater.

13. The Assistant Director (Environment) Chakwal during the pendency of this case carried out site inspection of the petitioner's cement plant on 09.02.2021. His report reveals that there are also other issues besides water. He reported that blasting and quarrying of raw materials caused dust pollution in the locality causing environmental damage; quarrying also threatened the local ecology of biodiversity rich area of Kallar Kahar; deforestation and erosion resulted from quarrying; heavy transport and machinery used for transporting raw material affected the locals of the area negatively; quarrying sites deteriorated the aesthetic appeal of the area; and air emissions from the cement industry was a cause of air pollution in the area.

14. The only objection raised by the petitioner to the report of the Consultants relates to the finding about underground water levels. However, the petitioner loses sight of the fact that sustainability of water resources was not the sole factor leading to designation of the Negative Area. Rather, the Consultants carried out a multidisciplinary study of the project area to determine suitability of land for establishment and expansion of cement plants. Fixated on the issue of groundwater levels, the petitioner engaged private consultants "to prepare a factual report on the status of ground water in and around the plant area." Without going into the qualification of the consultants hired by the petitioner and the scope of the inquiry undertaken by them, we believe, it is not our job to referee battles among experts.[20] The Government has discretion to rely on reasonable opinions of its own qualified experts in case of conflicting specialist views.[21] Another aspect is the integration of science in planning and regulation. The courts while reviewing scientific and technical determinations generally exhibit deference to institutional competence because of the specialized nature of the subject matter.[22] There is a risk that the courts will unravel layers of careful scientific work as a result of their combined ignorance and judicial second-guessing while reviewing science-based regulatory decisions.[23] However, scientific complexity does not provide excuse to evade judicial scrutiny as it needs to be ensured that Government does not transgress its mandate or does not mangle scientific results to produce certain outcomes.[24] Judicial oversight of specialized administrative decision-making is necessary to obviate the possibility of capture and incompetence.[25] Accordingly, we keep ourselves restricted to the rationality of the Government's decision.[26]

15. It was vehemently argued by the learned counsel for the petitioner, that the petitioner company proposes to expand the existing cement plant by installing a new "zero water" technology cement plant. However, there is no evidence brought on the record to establish the claim that the new cement plant technology is 'zero-water' or even the fact that the petitioner is currently manufacturing cement without any use of water. Even the consultants engaged by the petitioner did not say that cement plants could be run without using water. On the contrary, according to the position taken by the petitioner and confirmed by the DG, EPA, Punjab, the petitioner is currently using six rainwater harvesting ponds and two water tanks to save water for use in the cement plant. This act of building storage tanks and ponds shows that water is essential for the running of the cement plant, not to mention that development of the ponds and storage tanks further restricts the recharge and replenishment rate of the aquifer which is to sustain the local habitat including nature, population, subsistence agriculture and help in regaining water supply levels for Katas Raj Temple Pond. We also notice that building such ponds and storage tanks (a water management project) required an Initial Environmental Examination (IEE)/Environment Impact Assessment (EIA), which does not appear to have been done, casting doubts on legal sustainability of these ponds and storage tanks in the Negative Area. Recourse to alternative source of water by the petitioner company clearly establishes that use of water is an indispensible requirement for running a cement plant. Additionally, the petitioner claimed that it was not given the opportunity of hearing before the issuance of the Notification. We, however, see that the Consultants had arranged a Stakeholders Consultation Meeting with cement companies. Three officials of the petitioner participated in the said meeting and their names and signatures are visible in the report. Besides, we need to look beyond limestone, clay and other minerals to appreciate the value of the stretch of land, called the Salt Range, whose charm has captivated pilgrims, travelers and emperors since olden days. The picturesque region rich in biodiversity, and historical and sociocultural heritage is a national asset of timeless magnificence.

Precautionary Principle, In Dubio Pro Natura and Environmental Legal Personhood

16. The facts of the case brought before us through various technical reports of the Government and its consultants (referred to above) show that there are serious threats to environment in the Negative Area, especially to the underground water aquifer that needs to be first recharged before any sustainable development in the area can take place. Negative area in other words means an environmentally fragile area, which is a vulnerable natural habitat and needs care and protection, till it recovers, if at all. Enlargement of an existing cement plant in a negative area attracts the well-established principle of international environmental law called the Precautionary Principle, reflected in Principle 10 of the Rio Declaration, 1992. The principle provides; "where there are threats of serious or irreversible damage, lack of full scientific certainty shall not be used as a reason for postponing cost-effective measures to prevent environmental degradation." Another emerging environmental principle declared as Principle 5 of the IUCN World Declaration on the Environmental Rule of Law (2016) is in dubio pro natura i.e. "in cases of doubt, all matters before courts, administrative agencies, and other decision-makers shall be resolved in a way most likely to favour the protection and conservation of the environment, with preference to be given to alternatives that are least harmful to the environment. Actions shall not be undertaken when their potential adverse impacts on the environment are disproportionate or excessive in relation to the benefits derived therefrom." In the facts of the case, the Provincial Government was obliged to take a precautionary approach and act in-line with the principle of in dubio pro natura, till, inter alia, a detailed hydrogeological study assessing the potential of groundwater resources for industrial purposes of the project area is carried out. This approach is also constitutionally compliant as the courts are to protect the fundamental rights of the public and in this case right to life, sustainability and dignity of the community surrounding the project remains paramount till such time that the Government is of the view that the project has no adverse environmental effects. Also, the environment needs to be protected in its own right. There is more to protecting nature than a human centered rights regime. We see elements of personhood have now been ascribed to nature by legislatures and courts around the world.[27] The approach of personifying the environment in order to protect and preserve nature and its objects is one of the latest evolutions in environmental law.[28] Man and his environment each need to compromise for the better of both and this peaceful co-existence requires that the law treats environmental objects as holders of legal rights.[29]

Water Justice

17. According to our National Climate Change Policy, 2012 water resources are inextricably linked with climate; this is why the projected climate change has such serious implications for Pakistan's water resources. Freshwater resources in Pakistan are based on snow and glacier-melt and monsoon rains, both highly sensitive to climate change. This will further exacerbate the already difficult situation of a water-stressed country facing demand increases due to population growth and increasing economic activity. To address the impact of climate change on water resources and to enhance water security, the Government of Pakistan has proposed Integrated Water Resource Management to provide regulatory frameworks, water licensing, slow action dams, artificial recharge especially for threatened aquifers, adoption of integrated water resource management concepts, and ensuring rational ground water exploitation by avoiding excessive pumping. Agriculture is central to human survival and is probably the human enterprise most vulnerable to climate change. The hydrological cycle is similarly likely to be influenced by global warming, necessitating the agriculture and livestock sectors, particularly in rain-fed areas, to adapt to climate change. The World Water Forum, laying down the concept of water justice, declared[30] that the State should exercise stewardship over all water resources, and protect them, in conjunction with their associated ecological functions, for the benefit of current and future generations, and the Earth community of life.[31] Because of the close interlinkages between land and water and the ecological functions of water resources, any person with a right or interest to use water resources or land has a duty to maintain the ecological functions and integrity of water resources and related ecosystems.[32] The precautionary principle should be applied in the resolution of water-related disputes. Notwithstanding scientific uncertainty or complexity regarding the existence or extent of risks of serious or irreversible harm to water, human health or the environment, judges should uphold or order the taking of the necessary protective measures having regard to the best available scientific evidence.[33] Consistent with the principle in dubio pro natura, in case of uncertainty, water and environmental controversies before the courts should be resolved, and the applicable laws interpreted, in a way most likely to protect and conserve water resources and related ecosystems.[34] In adjudicating water and water-related cases, judges should be mindful of the essential and inseparable connection that water has with the environment and land uses, and should avoid adjudicating those cases in isolation or as merely a sectoral matter concerning only water.[35] Water justice requires appreciation that there are no easy, simple or singular solutions to the water crisis, and that water problems cannot be resolved through technical solutions alone but require broader recognition that they are inherently ecological, political and social issues simultaneously.[36]

Climate Change and Climate Justice

18. The fragility of the Negative Area also needs to be examined in the larger context of climate change. The environmental issues initially brought to our courts were local geographical issues, be it air pollution, urban planning, water scarcity, deforestation or noise pollution. But now climate change has a bearing on these issues.[37] One of the serious climate change threats to Pakistan is the rising temperatures resulting in enhanced heat and water-stressed conditions, particularly in arid and semi-arid regions, leading to reduced agricultural productivity.[38] Notably, the Salt Range has an arid climate characterized by lack of water.[39] According to our National Climate Change Policy, 2012 for Pakistan to continue on a development path, the more immediate and pressing task is to prepare itself for adaptation to climate change. The country is bearing huge socioeconomic costs of environmental degradation, it is globally ranked in the top ten countries most affected by climate change in the past 20 years and has lost 0.53 percent per unit GDP, suffered economic losses worth US$ 3792.52 million and witnessed 152 extreme weather events from 1999 to 2018.[40] Only by devising and implementing appropriate adaptation measures will it be possible to ensure water, food and energy security for the country. The goal of the Policy is to ensure that climate change is mainstreamed in the economically and socially vulnerable sectors of the economy and to steer Pakistan towards climate resilient development. The Notification, in the current facts of the case, is a climate resilient measure and in step with the National Climate Change Policy and the Constitution.

19. Another important dimension of climate change is intergenerational justice and the need for climate democracy. The tragedy is that tomorrow's generations aren't here to challenge this pillaging of their inheritance. The great silent majority of future generations is rendered powerless and needs a voice. This Court should be mindful that its decisions also adjudicate upon the rights of the future generations of this country. It is important to question ourselves; how will the future generations look back on us and what legacy we leave for them?[41] This Court and the Courts around the globe have a role to play in reducing the effects of climate change for our generation and for the generations to come. Through our pen and jurisprudential fiat, we need to decolonize our future generations from the wrath of climate change, by upholding climate justice at all times. Democracy, anywhere in the world is pillared on the rule of law, which substantially means rights based rule of law rather than rule based; which guarantees fundamental values of morality, justice, and human rights, with a proper balance between these and other needs of the society.[42] Post climate change, democracies have to be redesigned and restructured to become more climate resilient and the fundamental principle of rule of law has to recognize the urgent need to combat climate change. Robust democracies need to be climate democracies in order to save the world and our further generations from being colonized at the hands of climate change. The premabular constitutional value of democracy under our Constitution is in effect climate democracy, if we wish to actualize our Constitution and the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution for ourselves and our future generations. Janine Benyus[43] suggests we learn from nature's 3.8 billion years of evolution. How is it that other species have learned to survive and thrive for 10,000 generations or more? Well, it's by taking care of the place that would take care of their offspring, by living within the ecosystem in which they are embedded, by knowing not to foul the nest. We must restore and repair and care for the planetary home that will take care of our offspring. For our children, and our children's children, and all those yet to come, we must love our rivers and mountains and reconnect with the long and life-giving cycles of nature.[44] To us there is no conflict between environmental protection and development because our answer would be sustainable development. Sustainable development means development that meets the needs of the present generation without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their needs[45] and it is in step with our constitutional values of social and economic justice.

20. As a result, all contentions raised by the petitioner are rejected. We hold that the Notification dated 08.03.2018 is in accordance with the provisions of the Ordinance and negative area can be planned and designed banning industrial activity within its bounds. The Petitioner company is not allowed to enlarge or enhance the capacity of its existing cement plant till such time that the Negative Area subsists. In these circumstances, we uphold the Notification. The High Court has rightly refrained from interfering into the matter. Consequently, the leave is refused and the petition is dismissed.

MWA/D-7/SC Petition dismisse

2021 S C M R 962

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malikand Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

MUHAMMAD SHARIF and others---Petitioners

Versus

INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE, PUNJAB,LAHORE and others---Respondents

C.Ps. Nos. 517-L, 1019-L, 1062-L, 1232-L of 2016 and 1929-L of 2017, decided on 28th April, 2021.

(Against the judgment(s)/order(s) of Punjab Service Tribunal, Lahore dated 21.12.2015 passed in Appeal No. 494/2015 and 09.02.2016 passed in Appeal No. 3223/2015 and 01.03.2016 passed in Appeal No. 1025 of 2015)

(a) Civil service---

----Back benefits/back pay---Meaning.

10th Edition, Thomson Reuters, 2014, 166; Aguinaga v. United Food and Commercial Workers Int'l Union 993 F.2d 1463, 1473; Robinson v. Lorillard Corp. 444 F.2d 791, 804 and Smith v West 1999 U.S. App. Vet. Claims LEXIS 475, 6 ref.

(b) Civil service---

----Reinstate in service---Meaning and scope.

Black's Law Dictionary (10th Edition, Thomson Reuters, 2014) 1477; Black's Law Dictionary, (6th Edition, St. Paul, MINN., West Publishing Co., 1990) 1287 and Aiyar's Judicial Dictionary (10th Edition, 1988) 871 ref.

(c) Punjab Civil Servants Act (VIII of 1974)---

----S. 16, second proviso---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 4, 10A, 14 & 25---Fundamental Rules, R. 54--- Civil Service Rules (Punjab), R. 7.3---Civil servant---Reinstatement in service after order for removal or dismissal from service set-aside---Back benefits, entitlement to---Scope and principles---Civil servant on unconditional reinstatement in service was to be given all back benefits and the only exception justifying part withholding of back benefits could be that he accepted gainful employment/engaged in profitable business during the intervening period---In case, the dismissal/removal of a civil servant was declared illegal for a defect in disciplinary proceedings without attending to the merits of the case, the entitlement to back benefits may be put off till the inquiry was conducted in the matter finally determining the fault of the civil servant---In case, where there was some fault of the civil servant, including a situation where concession of reinstatement was extended to the civil servant while applying leniency or compassion or proportionality as standard and where penalty was modified but not wiped off in a way that the civil servant was restored to his position, he may be denied a portion of back benefits/back pay, while maintaining a proportion between the gravity of the fault of the civil servant and special/extenuating circumstances of the case.

A civil servant once exonerated from the charges would stand restored in service as if he were never out of it and would be entitled to back benefits. Chairman State Life v. Siddiq Akbar 2013 SCMR 752; Umer Said v. District Education Officer (Female) 2007 SCMR 296 and 2015 SCMR 77 = 2015 PLC (C.S.) 366 ref.

Civil servant, whose wrongful dismissal or removal had been set-aide goes back to his service as if he were never dismissed or removed from service. The restitution of employee, in this context, meant that there had been no discontinuance in his service and for all purposes he had never left his post. He was therefore entitled to arrears of pay for the period he was kept out of service for no fault of his own. No different was the position where an employee had been served with a penalty like reduction in rank or withholding of increment(s) or forfeiture of service, etc. and the penalty had been set-aside. The employee stood restored to his post with all his perks and benefits intact and would be entitled to arrears of pay as would have accrued to him had the penalty not been imposed on him. This general principle of restitution fully met the constitutional requirements of fair trial and due process (Articles 4 & 10A of the Constitution) besides the right to life (Article 9) which included the right to livelihood ensuring all lawful economic benefits that came with the post. Reinstating an employee but not allowing him to enjoy the same terms and conditions of service as his colleagues was also discriminatory (Article 25). All this snowballed into offending the right to dignity (Article 14) of an employee for being treated as a lesser employee inspite of being reinstated or restored into service.

The "concept of reinstatement into service with original seniority and back benefits" was based on the established principle of jurisprudence that if an illegal action/wrong was struck down by the Court, as a consequence, it was also to be ensured that no undue harm was caused to any individual due to such illegality/wrong or as a result of delay in the redress of his grievance. If by virtue of a declaration given by the Court a civil servant is to be treated as being still in service, he should also be given the consequential relief of the back benefits (including salary) for the period he was kept out of service as if he were actually performing duties.

Federation of Pakistan v. Sindh High Court Bar Association PLD 2012 SC 1067; Pakistan v. Mrs. A. V. Issacs PLD 1970 SC 415; Muhammad Bashir v. Government of the Punjab 1994 SCMR 1801 and Inspector-General of Police, Punjab v. Tariq Mahmood 2015 SCMR 77 = 2015 PLC (C.S.) 366 ref.

Where the order of dismissal, removal or reduction in rank was set aside unconditionally, back benefits were to be paid necessarily. The grant of back benefits to an employee who had been illegally kept away from his employment was a rule and denial of service benefits to such reinstated employee was an exception. When a civil servant was reinstated in service and his dismissal from service was held to be illegal and for no fault of his, then his reinstatement in service would mean that he had always been in service and as a consequence be paid salary from the day he was illegally removed or dismissed from service. One of the exceptions of not granting full back benefits was that if the reinstated employee had accepted another employment or engaged in any profitable business during the intervening period; in such a case, the said amount would be set off against the salary. This concept was now available as an instruction under Sl. No. 155, Vol-II, Esta Code, 2007 edition.

Qadeer Ahmad v. Punjab Labour Appellate Tribunal PLD 1990 SC 787; General Manager v. Mehmood Ahmed Butt 2002 SCMR 1064; Muhammad Hussain v. E.D.O. (Education) 2007 SCMR 855; Umer Said v. District Education Officer (Female) 2007 SCMR 296; Sohail Ahmed Usmani v. DG CAA 2014 SCMR 1843; Chairman State Life v. Siddiq Akbar 2013 SCMR 752; Pakistan v. Mrs. A.V. Issacs PLD 1970 SC 415; Muhammad Bashir v. Government of the Punjab 1994 SCMR 1801 and Inspector General of Police, Punjab v. Tariq Mahmood 2015 SCMR 77 = 2015 PLC (C.S.) 366 ref.

The reinstatement or restoration of an employee to the post may be due to the following different reasons: (a) purely on merits; (b) on technical grounds without touching the actual merits of the case and (c) on the ground of leniency where the actual order was either converted into a lesser penalty or totally set-aside.

An employee on reinstatement on merits could not be deprived of back benefits. Any such deprivation would be against his constitutional rights guaranteed to an employee. Besides, Rule 7.3(a) of Civil Service Rule (Punjab) also pointed in this direction. In case of reinstatement or restoration to a post on merits, the employee was entitled to full back benefits and there was no discontinuity of service, thus the question of intervening period did not arise in such a case. The discretion (as to awarding arrears/back benefits) under the second proviso to section 16 of the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974 ('the 1974 Act') was to be exercised in favour of the employee by granting him all the back benefits. However, the said principle of grant of back benefits was qualified by a situation where the order of reinstatement was conditional; either civil servant's dismissal from service was declared illegal for a defect in disciplinary proceedings or the penalty was modified to be on the lower side with the result that the civil servant was reinstated. In the former situation, the merits of the case and the determination of the fault of the employee went untouched, even though he stood reinstated. Here, an inquiry could still be made into the employee's conduct or his conduct may be considered such as to call for a departmental inquiry. The de novo proceedings could be initiated from the stage where the defect had crept in. In such a situation, the entitlement with regard to back benefits was put off till the final determination with regard to the civil servant's conduct. If he was found at fault, the competent authority could justifiably deny him part of the back benefits. And, in the latter situation, the civil servant was not declared blameless; rather, his penalty was reduced and, therefore, part of back benefits, as necessitated by the implications of reduced penalty, may justifiably be denied to him.

Muhammad Arif Khan v. Dy. Enc. E'in'C's Branch, GHQ 1991 SCMR 1904 and Qadeer Ahmad v. Punjab Labour Appellate Tribunal PLD 1990 SC 787 ref.

Appellate authorities, often, without saying a word about the charge, reinstated a civil servant taking a lenient view or on compassionate ground or on the ground of proportionality. In such a case the charge stood established yet the authority or the court, applying leniency or compassion or proportionality as standard, felt inclined to extend concession of reinstatement to the civil servant. Notably the civil servant in such a case was not reinstated unconditionally a nd, therefore, he may be denied a portion of pay - while maintaining a proportion between the gravity of the fault of the civil servant and special/ extenuating circumstances of the case - he would otherwise get on reinstatement. Such treatment would be in step with the second proviso to section 16 of the 1974 Act and would also be consistent with the spirit of Fundamental Rule 54 ("FR") and Civil Service Rules (Punjab) 7.3(b) ("CSR"). If an employee was reinstated in such an eventuality, the authority or the court needed to clearly state that though the charge ascribed to the employee stood proved, concession was being shown to him to avoid the rigors of major penalty, which would otherwise be unwarranted in view of peculiar circumstances of the case.

(d) Civil service---

----Period spent by a civil servant away from duty due to dismissal from service or absence from duty, etc.---"Leave without pay" or "leave of the kind due" granted to a civil servant---Purpose and meaning.

In case back benefits as of right were not awarded to the civil servant and he was served with any other penalty after reinstatement in service, the intervening period had to be counted for, otherwise the interruption in the service of a civil servant may entail forfeiture of his service, therefore, the intervening period had to be regularized by treating it as an extraordinary leave without pay or leave of the kind due or leave without pay, as the case may be. The regularization of the intervening period was a totally separate matter and had no bearing on the penalty imposed upon the civil servant. The competent authority may condone interruptions in service provided that the gaps were not due to any fault or willful act of the employee. The service gaps were usually regularized as extraordinary leave without pay or leave of the kind due. Terming absence period as extraordinary leave without pay was not a punishment, rather, a treatment given to regularize the period spent away from duty. Nor could a concession given to a civil servant that his absence from duty be treated as extraordinary leave without pay mean that major penalty imposed in the same order was wiped off. Nevertheless, the powers given to treat the period of absence as extraordinary leave without pay or leave of the kind due were to be exercised after due application of mind and considering the facts and circumstances of a case.

National Bank of Pakistan v. Zahoor Ahmed Mengal 2021 SCMR 144; NAB v. Muhammad Shafique 2020 SCMR 425; Federation of Pakistan v. Mamoon Ahmed Malik 2020 SCMR 1154 and DIG, NH & MP, Karachi v. Ghulam Mustafa Mahar 2019 SCMR 95 ref.

Khan Muhammad Vehniwal, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in C.P. No. 517-L of 2016).

Rana Shamshad Khan, Additional A.G., Ch. Zafar Hussain Ahmad, Additional A.G. along with Shaukat Ali, DSP, Munir Hussain, DSP, Naeem Cheema, Law Officer, Imran Ashraf, S.P., Muhammad Ijaz Khan, Lit. Officer and Muhammad Anwar Yasir, Lit. Officer for Petitioners (in C.Ps. Nos. 1019-L, 1062-L, 1232-L of 2016 and C.P. No. 1929-L of 2017).

Mahmood Ahmad Qazi, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents (in C.P. No. 1929-L of 2017).

Hasan Riaz, Research Officer-Civil Judge, SCRC, Islamabad for Research Assistance.

Date of hearing: 11th February, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---We consider in these petitions the scope of entitlement of a civil servant to back benefits on his reinstatement in service after his wrongful removal or dismissal has been set-aside or on his being restored to his post after the penalty imposed on him has been set-aside. We also consider the treatment of the period spent by a civil servant away from duty (due to dismissal from service or absence from duty, etc.) and the purpose and meaning of the terms leave without pay or leave of the kind due granted to a civil servant.

Brief facts of the petitions

2. In C.P. 517-L of 2016, the petitioner, Muhammad Sharif, Sub-Inspector in Punjab Police, was compulsorily retired from service by the departmental authority. He preferred a departmental appeal and on expiry of the period stipulated for its decision, moved an appeal before the Punjab Service Tribunal ("Tribunal"). The Tribunal reinstated him in service though the period since the onset of compulsory retirement till reinstatement in service was directed to be treated as leave without pay. He now prays that this intervening period be treated with pay. The department has also called in question the order of reinstatement of Muhammad Sharif in CP 1062-L of 2016.

3. In C.P. 1019-L of 2016, the respondent, Roqyya Khushnood, Lady Traffic Warden, was dismissed from service by the Chief Traffic Officer, Lahore. The appellate authority taking a lenient view reinstated her in service but the period spent away from duty was treated as leave without pay. The Tribunal accepted her appeal and the period during which she remained out of service was adjudged to be considered as leave of the kind due. The department now prays that the Tribunal's interference with the departmental proceedings be overturned.

4. In C.P. 1232-L of 2016, the respondent, Riasat Ali, Constable, was dismissed from service by the departmental authority. The appellate authority taking a lenient view reinstated him in service. Nevertheless, minor penalty of censure was imposed and the period between dismissal and reinstatement was directed to be treated as leave without pay. The Tribunal accepted the civil servant's appeal and held that the period during which he was kept away from duty be treated as leave of the kind due. The penalty of censure was, however, maintained. The department now prays that the order of the Tribunal be reversed.

5. In C.P. 1929-L of 2017, the respondent, Dr. Muzaffar Nasrullah Chattha, Consultant Orthopedic Surgeon, was awarded major penalty of forfeiture of two years of service for absence which was reduced to forfeiture of one year in departmental appeal. The period of absence was to be treated as extraordinary leave without pay. The Tribunal accepted his appeal and decided that the period of absence be treated as earned leave.

6. The petitioners have sought leave of this Court under Article 212(3) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") to appeal against the decisions of the Tribunal.

Back Benefits

7. At the very outset, it is important to underline that the term back benefits has not been mentioned in the service laws of Punjab or Pakistan, however, the term has a wide usage in the sub-continental jurisprudence, including ours, for a longtime. According to Black's Law Dictionary[1], Back Pay is the salary that an employee should have received but did not because of an employer's unlawful action. Back Pay Award[2] is a judicial decision that an employee or ex-employee is entitled to an accrued but uncollected salary or benefits. The purpose of a back pay award is to make the employee whole i.e., restore the economic status quo that would have obtained but for the wrongdoing on the part of the employer.[3] Back pay is a compensation for the tangible economic loss resulting from an unlawful employment practice.[4] Back pay largely translates into back benefits under our jurisprudence. "Back benefits" are, therefore, retroactive payments.[5] Even though the term back benefits is wider than back pay as it includes other benefits but for the purposes of this case we restrict the meaning of back benefits to arrears of pay or back pay.[6]

8. Reinstate in service means to place again in a former state or position[7] from which the person had been removed.[8] Reinstatement is effected from the date of dismissal with back pay from that date.[9] A reinstated employee is to be treated as if he had not been dismissed and is therefore entitled to recover any benefits (such as arrears of pay) that he has lost during his period of unemployment. However, pay in lieu of notice, ex gratia payments by the employer, or supplementary benefits, and other sums he has received because of his dismissal or any subsequent unemployment will be taken into account.[10]

9. An employee, i.e. civil servant in this case, whose wrongful dismissal or removal has been set-aide goes back to his service as if he were never dismissed or removed from service. The restitution of employee, in this context, means that there has been no discontinuance in his service and for all purposes he had never left his post. He is therefore entitled to arrears of pay for the period he was kept out of service for no fault of his own. No different is the position where an employee has been served with a penalty like reduction in rank or withholding of increment(s) or forfeiture of service, etc. and the penalty has been set-aside. The employee stands restored to his post with all his perks and benefits intact and will be entitled to arrears of pay as would have accrued to him had the penalty not been imposed on him. This general principle of restitution fully meets the constitutional requirements of fair trial and due process (Articles 4 and 10-A[11]) besides the right to life (Article 9[12]) which includes the right to livelihood ensuring all lawful economic benefits that come with the post. Reinstating an employee but not allowing him to enjoy the same terms and conditions of service as his colleagues is also discriminatory (Article 25[13]). All this snowballs into offending the right to dignity (Article 14[14]) of an employee for being treated as a lesser employee inspite of being reinstated or restored into service.

10. The "concept of reinstatement into service with original seniority and back benefits" is based on the established principle of jurisprudence that "if an illegal action/wrong is struck down by the Court, as a consequence, it is also to be ensured that no undue harm is caused to any individual due to such illegality/wrong or as a result of delay in the redress of his grievance."[15] If by virtue of a declaration given by the Court a civil servant is to be treated as being still in service, he should also be given the consequential relief of the back benefits (including salary) for the period he was kept out of service as if he were actually performing duties.[16] A civil servant once exonerated from the charges would stand restored in service as if he were never out of it and would be entitled to back benefits.[17] A five Member Bench of this Court in Inspector-General of Police, Punjab v. Tariq Mahmood[18] authoritatively reiterated:

> "[T]he grant of back benefits to an employee who was reinstated by a Court/Tribunal or the department is a rule and denial of such benefit is an exception on the proof of that such a person had remained gainfully employed during such period."

11. It follows that where the order of dismissal, removal or reduction in rank is set aside unconditionally, back benefits are to be paid necessarily.[19] The grant of back benefits to an employee who has been illegally kept away from his employment is a rule and denial of service benefits to such reinstated employee is an exception.[20] When a civil servant is reinstated in service and his dismissal from service is held to be illegal and for no fault of his, then his reinstatement in service would mean that he has always been in service and as a consequence be paid salary from the day he was illegally removed or dismissed from service. One of the exceptions of not granting full back benefits is that if the reinstated employee had accepted another employment or engaged in any profitable business during the intervening period; in such a case, the said amount would be set off against the salary.[21] This is now available as an instruction under Sl. No. 155, Vol-II, Esta Code, 2007 edition.

12. This principle of restitution and payment of back benefits also finds its presence under the second proviso to section 16 of the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974 ("Act") which deals with back benefits in the shape of arrears of pay in the event that the order of dismissal or removal or reduction in rank is set-aside in the following manner:-

> Provided further that where a civil servant has been dismissed or removed from service or reduced in rank, he shall, in the event of the order of dismissal, removal from service or reduction in rank being set aside, be entitled to such arrears of pay as the authority[22] setting aside the order may determine.

13. In the past, the concept of arrears of pay was dealt with by Fundamental Rule 54 ("FR") and Civil Service Rule (Punjab) 7.3 ("CSR") issued by the Federal Government and the Punjab Government, respectively. The said Rules provide as follows;

> F.R. 54.-Where a Government Servant has been dismissed or removed is reinstated, the revising or appellate authority may grant to him for the period of his absence from duty:-
>
> (a) if he is honourably acquitted, the full pay to which he would have been entitled if he had not been dismissed or removed and, by an order to be separately recorded, any allowance of which he was in receipt prior to his dismissal or removal; or
>
> (b) if otherwise, such portion of such pay and allowances as the revising or appellate authority may prescribe.
>
> In a case falling under clause (a), the period of absence from duty will be treated as a period spent on duty.
>
> In a case falling under clause (b), it will not be treated as a period spent on duty unless the revising or appellate authority so directs.
>
> Explanation:-In this rule, "revising authority" means the "authority" or "authorised Officer" as defined in the Government Servants (Efficiency and Discipline) Rules, 1973, who passes the final order on the case and not the authority who passes an order on appeal.
>
> CSR 7.3. When a Government Servant who was dismissed or removed from service, is reinstated, the revising or appellate authority may grant to him for the period of his absence from duty:
>
> a) If he is honourably acquitted, the full pay to which he would have been entitled if he had not be dismissed or removed and by an order to be separately recorded any allowances of which he was in receipt prior to his dismissal or removal; or
>
> b) If otherwise, such proportion of such pay and allowances as the revising or appellate authority may prescribed"
>
> In a case falling under clause (a) the period of absence from duty will be treated as a period spent on duty. In a case falling under clause (b) it will not be treated as period spent on duty unless the revising or appellate authority so directs.
>
> Note 1.--This rule is absolute and unconditional and so the question of lien does not arise in the case of Government Servant who is dismissed from service and reinstated on appeal when the period of unemployment between the date of dismissal and reinstatement is declared by the appellate authority as duty.
>
> Administrative Instruction.--Post vacated by a dismissed Government Servant may be filled substantively subject to the condition that the arrangements thus made will be reverse if the dismissed Government Servant is reinstated on appeal.
>
> Note 2.-The term 'revising authority' as used in this rule includes an authority revising its own orders.

14. FR and CSR predate the Constitution and the Act. After the promulgation of the Constitution in 1973, FR and CSR were given protection under Article 241 of the Constitution, albeit subject to their consistency with the Constitution and till such time that a law was made under Article 240 by the appropriate legislature. Further, section 23(2) of the Act[23] provided that any rules, orders or instructions already in force before the commencement of the Act shall in so far as they were not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, be deemed to be the Rules made under the Act. Thus, the position emerging post 1973 is that Fundamental Rules, Civil Service Rules (Punjab) and other orders or instructions in respect of terms and conditions of service shall remain subject to the Act and in case of any inconsistency, the provisions of the Act shall prevail. Therefore, for the purposes of back benefits, we give primacy to the proviso to section 16 of the Act and examine and interpret it keeping the spirit and wisdom of FR 54 and CSR 7.3 in view.

15. Coming back to the second proviso to section 16 of the Act, it is important to structure the discretion to be exercised by the authority or court in granting arrears of pay after the order of dismissal, removal or reduction in rank has been set-aside. This discretion is to be structured keeping in mind the constitutional provisions discussed above, the wisdom handed down by the jurisprudence evolved till date and the administrative and financial oversight envisaged under FR, CSR and the Esta Code. The reinstatement or restoration of an employee to the post may be due to the following different reasons: (a) purely on merits; (b) on technical grounds without touching the actual merits of the case and (c) on the ground of leniency where the actual order is either converted into a lesser penalty or totally set-aside.

16. An employee on reinstatement on merits cannot be deprived of back benefits. Any such deprivation would be against the constitutional rights (discussed above) guaranteed to an employee. Besides, CSR 7.3 (a) also points in this direction. In case of reinstatement or restoration to a post on merits, the employee is entitled to full back benefits and there is no discontinuity of service, thus the question of intervening period does not arise in such a case. The discretion under the second proviso to section 16 of the Act is to be exercised in favour of the employee by granting him all the back benefits.

17. However, the above principle of grant of back benefits is qualified by a situation where the order of reinstatement is conditional; either civil servant's dismissal from service is declared illegal for a defect in disciplinary proceedings or the penalty is modified to be on the lower side with the result that the civil servant is reinstated. In the former situation, the merits of the case and the determination of the fault of the employee go untouched, even though he stands reinstated. Here, an inquiry could still be made into the employee's conduct or his conduct may be considered such as to call for a departmental inquiry. The de novo proceedings could be initiated from the stage where the defect had crept in.[24] In such a situation, the entitlement with regard to back benefits is put off till the final determination with regard to the civil servant's conduct. If he is found at fault, the competent authority could justifiably deny him part of the back benefits.[25] And, in the latter situation, the civil servant is not declared blameless; rather, his penalty is reduced and, therefore, part of back benefits, as necessitated by the implications of reduced penalty, may justifiably be denied to him.

18. We also feel inclined to underscore that a civil servant cannot be burdened with the loss of service benefits without attributing any charge to him. Appellate authorities, without saying a word about the charge, often, as in two of these petitions, reinstate a civil servant taking a lenient view or on compassionate ground or on the ground of proportionality. This view usually becomes the ground to deny back benefits to the reinstated civil servant. It is underlined for the sake of clarity that the matter of 'leniency' or 'compassion' or 'proportionality' does not erode the charge rather it does not consider the award of penalty to be appropriate in the case. It may so happen that the charge stands established yet the authority or the court, applying leniency or compassion or proportionality as standard, feels inclined to extend concession of reinstatement to the civil servant. Notably the civil servant in such a case is not reinstated unconditionally and, therefore, he may be denied a portion of pay - while maintaining a proportion between the gravity of the fault of the civil servant and special/extenuating circumstances of the case - he would otherwise get on reinstatement. It would be in step with the second proviso to section 16 of the Act and would also be consistent with the spirit of FR 54(b) and CSR 7.3(b). If an employee is reinstated in such an eventuality, the authority or the court needs to clearly state that though the charge ascribed to the employee stood proved, concession is being shown to him to avoid the rigors of major penalty, which would otherwise be unwarranted in view of peculiar circumstances of the case.

Leave without pay or leave of the kind due

19. In case back benefits as of right are not awarded to the civil servant and he is served with any other penalty after reinstatement in service, the intervening period has to be counted for, otherwise the interruption in the service of a civil servant may entail forfeiture of his service[26], therefore, the intervening period has to be regularized by treating it as an extra ordinary leave without pay or leave of the kind due or leave without pay, as the case may be. It is pointed out that the regularization of the intervening period is a totally separate matter and has no bearing on the penalty imposed upon the civil servant. The competent authority may condone interruptions in service provided that the gaps are not due to any fault or willful act of the employee.[27] The service gaps are usually regularized as extraordinary leave without pay or leave of the kind due. Terming absence period as extraordinary leave without pay is not a punishment, rather, a treatment given to regularize the period spent away from duty.[28] Nor could a concession given to a civil servant that his absence from duty be treated as extraordinary leave without pay mean that major penalty imposed in the same order is wiped off.[29] Nevertheless the powers given to treat the period of absence as extraordinary leave without pay or leave of the kind due are to be exercised after due application of mind and considering the facts and circumstances of a case.

20. We, therefore, hold that a civil servant on unconditional reinstatement in service is to be given all back benefits and the only exception justifying part withholding of back benefits could be that he accepted gainful employment/engaged in profitable business during the intervening period. In case, the dismissal/removal of a civil servant is declared illegal for a defect in disciplinary proceedings without attending to the merits of the case, the entitlement to back benefits may be put off till the inquiry is conducted in the matter finally determining the fault of the civil servant. In case, where there is some fault of the civil servant, including a situation where concession of reinstatement is extended to the civil servant while applying leniency or compassion or proportionality as standard and where penalty is modified but not wiped off in a way that the civil servant is restored to his position, the back benefits will be paid as determined by the authority/court in the manner discussed above in this judgment. We, however, reiterate that "gainful employment/ profitable business" creates an overarching exception that would cover all cases involving the question of back benefits.

21. Turning to the petitions in hand, it is seen that the petitioner in C.P. 517-L of 2016, who was compulsorily retired from service by the departmental authority, was reinstated by the Tribunal observing that no evidence had been produced against him during the departmental proceedings and that the departmental action was devoid of merit and justification. Even so, the Tribunal chose to strip the civil servant of service benefits for the period he was kept at bay by relying on "the dictum set by the apex Court in 2011 PLC (C.S.) 1003". It has been noticed by us that the judgment reported as 2011 PLC (C.S.) 1003 was not rendered by this Court but refers to a decision of the Balochistan Service Tribunal delivered in the case of Dr. Abdul Naseer v. Government of Balochistan where the civil servant who remained suspended from 31.10.2002 to 14.04.2007 was eventually dismissed. The Balochistan Service Tribunal observed that the civil servant was entitled to benefits for the period of suspension though he was not given benefits for the period he was out of service on the principle of no work, no pay. Strangely, the Balochistan Service Tribunal directed the civil servant "to be reinstated in service with all back benefits from the date of his suspension till date" i.e. the date of decision. The period spent away from duty also fell within that period. In any case, the reliance of the Tribunal on the judgment of the Balochistan Service Tribunal in view of law laid down by this Court is misplaced and not sustainable. When the Tribunal did not ascribe any guilt to the petitioner, he should have been reinstated with all back benefits subject to the exception of not having remained gainfully employed during the intervening period. Therefore, C.P. 517-L of 2016 is converted into appeal and allowed and the intervening period between compulsory retirement and reinstatement be considered as if the petitioner were on duty. Consequently, C.P. 1062-L of 2016, preferred by the department against the same judgment of the Tribunal, is disposed of accordingly.

22. In C.P. 1019-L of 2016, the respondent was reinstated on compassionate grounds by the appellate departmental authority yet no responsibility was fixed on her and the Tribunal ordered that the period of her absence be treated as leave of the kind due. As the appellate authority accepted her explanation and did not impose any penalty on her, she could not be refused back benefits unless she remained gainfully employed during the period spent away from duty, which is not the case here. Therefore, C.P. 1019-L of 2016 is disposed of in the terms that the intervening period between dismissal and reinstatement be considered as if the respondent were on duty.

23. In C.P. 1232-L of 2016, the respondent was reinstated by the appellate departmental authority though minor penalty of censure was awarded to him which was maintained by the Tribunal. The absence which was treated as leave without pay was converted by the Tribunal into leave of the kind due. It is true that the respondent was not exonerated of his guilt. Only the penalty was reduced. The Tribunal while affirming the penalty of censure failed to discuss the question of arrears of pay that would have become due to the respondent under the second proviso to section 16 of the Act. In the peculiar facts and circumstances of this case, we do not find it appropriate to remand the matter to the Tribunal at this late stage and, therefore, considering the nature of the penalty of censure, we dispose of C.P. 1232-L of 2016 in the terms that the intervening period between dismissal and reinstatement be considered as if the respondent were on duty.

24. In C.P. 1929-L of 2017, the respondent was awarded major penalty of forfeiture of two years of service for absence which was reduced to forfeiture of one year in departmental appeal. The period of absence was to be treated as extraordinary leave without pay. The Tribunal accepted his appeal and decided that the period of absence be treated as earned leave. The absence of the respondent refers to the period for which he had sought leave on medical grounds, though his request remained undecided. On the other hand, disciplinary proceedings were initiated against him. The Tribunal accepted the respondent's appeal on merits with the end result that the absence be considered as earned leave. Here again, we find the decision of the Tribunal just and proper in the circumstances of the case and, therefore, the petition is dismissed and leave refused.

MWA/M-24/SC Order accordingly.

2021 S C M R 1008

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shahand Yahya Afridi, JJ

DIVISIONAL SUPERINTENDENT PAKISTAN RAILWAYS, RAWALPINDI and others---Appellants/Petitioners

Versus

Syed USMAN ALI and others---Respondents

Civil Appeals Nos. 864 to 872 of 2017 and Civil Appeals Nos. 1090 to 1116 and 1059 to 1075 of 2019 and Civil Petitions Nos. 324 to 334, 430 and 431 of 2019, 2853 of 2016 and C.M.A. No. 5767 of 2016 and Civil Petitions Nos. 2104 to 2109 and 2980 to 3006 of 2019 and C.M.As. Nos. 5918 to 5926 of 2016, decided on 8th October, 2019.

(On appeal against the judgment of Federal Service Tribunal, Islamabad, dated 10.05.2016, 18.10.2018, 06.08.2018, 28.11.2018, 23.05.2016, 27.03.2019 and 08.05.2019 passed in Appeals Nos. 68 to 76(R)CS of 2013 and 4322 to 4334, 4654 to 4658 and 4406 to 4414(R)CS of 2017 and 868 to 884(R)CS of 2016 and 1465 to 1467, 1469 to 1472, 1474 to 1477, 1468 and 1473(R)CS of 2016 and 1402(R)CS/2013 and 58 to 63(R)CS of 2017 and 4040 to 4060 and 4303 to 4308(R)CS of 2017)

Civil service---

----Temporary Labour Appointments/daily wagers in Pakistan Railways---Regularization in service---Whether date of regularization would operate from the date of initial appointment---Held, that respondents-employees were appointed as daily wagers/Temporary Labour Appointments (TLAs) in the year 2006/2007---Subsequently their services were regularized with immediate effect under the Regularization Policy, 2012---As the said Policy of 2012 was with immediate effect i.e. 20-02-2012, the respondents could not claim the regularization from the date of their initial appointment---Furthermore previous Regularization Policies of 1985 and 2000 were not applicable to the respondents---No illegality was found in the regularization of the respondents under Regularization Policy, 2012 from the date of regularization i.e., 20-02-2012---Appeals were allowed and impugned judgment of Service Tribunal was set aside.

Hafiz Hafiz ur Rehman, Advocate Supreme Court and M.A. Sheikh, Advocate-on-Record for Appellants (in C.As. Nos.864-872/2017, 1059-1075/2019 and 2853/2016).

Jawad Mahmood Pasha, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellants (in C.As. Nos. 1090-1116, 324-334, 430-431, 2104-2109 and 2980-3006 of 2019).

Ijaz Buriro, CEO/GM, Sufian Dogar, CPO and Salman Kazmi, Legal Directorate for Pakistan Railways (on Court's Notice).

Zulfiqar Ahmed Bhutta, Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Respondents (in C.As. Nos.864-872 of 2017).

Zulfiqar Khalid Malooka, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents (in C.A. 2853 of 2016).

Nemo for Respondents (in C.As. Nos. 1091-1116, 1059 to 1075 of 2019 and C.Ps. Nos. 2104-2109, 325, 326, 329-331 of 2019).

Dates of hearing: 7th and 8th October, 2019.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Respondents who were working as daily-wagers or on Temporary Labour Appointment ("TLA") for Pakistan Railways, were regularized in terms of Regularization Policy dated 20.02.2012, with immediate effect. The claim of the respondent employees is that they ought to have been regularized from the date of their initial appointment i.e., 2006/2007.

2. The question before this Court is to identify the Regularization Policy announced and adopted by Pakistan Railways which is applicable to the case of the respondents. It is an admitted position that the respondents were appointed as daily wagers/TLAs in the year 2006/2007. The Chief Executive Officer of Pakistan Railways along with Human Resource Head tendered appearance and have filed all the Regularization Policies announced or approved by Pakistan Railways. It is important to reproduce these policies in a chronological order;

i. Regularization Policy, 1985 (dated 21.04.1985)

"PAKISTAN RAILWAYS, HEADQUARTERS OFFICE, LAHORE No:- 831-E/ 132-XIV(E.Policy) Dated: -21-4- 1985 All Divisional Superintendents, (including D.S"W" Moghalpura and Extra Divisional Offices, Pakistan Railways. REGULARIZATION OF SERVICES OF WORKERS APPOINTED ON AD HOC BASIS/ SUBSTITUTES. It has been decided that all the (Workers) who were appointed on adhoc basis or as substitutes against permanent posts and have been working for more than One year be absorbed on regular basis. 2. The services of such staff will be regularized from the dates they were originally appointed to the posts and one day breaks, if any, made after three months services, will be recouped by grant of leave due. 3. The formalities of placing requisitions through employment Exchange, advertisement etc are dispensed with. 4. Their services may be regularized through properly Constituted Selection Committee of the appropriate level. This issues with the approval of the competent authority. Sd/- for General Manager (Personnel)"

ii. Regularization Policy, 2000 (dated 08.05.2000)

"PAKISTAN RAILWAYS HEADQUARTERS OFFICE LAHORE No.831-E/ 132-XVI(E.Policy) Dated 08.05.2000 The Additional General Managers, IBU, PBU & FBU, Pakistan Railways, Headquarters Office, LAHORE. The Deputy General Managers, Pakistan Railways, Headquarters Office, LAHORE. All Divisional Superintendents, Including DS /W/ Moghalpura, Pakistan Railways. REGULARIZATION OF AD HOC / TEMPORARY EMPLOYEES Please refer to Joint Secretary/Tech:, Ministry of Railways, Islamabad's letter No.1(4)/2000(E.I) Dated 07.04.2000 addressed to all Divisional Superintendents with endorsement to the General Manager (Operations) and Director Vigilance, P.R. HQ. Office, Lahore, on the above subject. The Ministry has observed that Divisional Superintendents have regularized the services of the TLA Staff against the instructions issued for regularization of the employees engaged after cut of date. In this context, attention is invited to this office letters No.831- E/ 132-XV(E.Policy) Dated 04.08.1999 and 28.08.1999 wherein it was categorically directed that services of ad hoc employees and substitutes appointed upto 26.12.1992 who meet the laid down conditions for regularization of ad hoc and substitute employees only on the Pakistan Railways be regularized through duly constituted selection committees no such instructions for regularization of the services of TLA staff have been issued by this office. The competent authority has, therefore, directed that regularization of such staff employed after cut off date may . be withdrawn. Ministry has also requested the Director/Vigilance for investigation of such cases where irregularity of regularization of ineligible staff was committed by the Divisions and submit report within one month. It is, therefore, requested to please furnish details of such irregularity, if committed, otherwise a certificate be given that no such irregularities have been made which may be furnished by 15th May, 2000 by return FAX. . Sd/- (ANJUM TALAT) For General Manager/Personnel"

iii. Regularization Policy, 2008 (dated 14.01.2008)

"PAKISTAN RAILWAYS HEADQUARTERS OFFICE ICE LAHORE From: G. M/DPC. To: The Managing Director/ Pakistan Railways Islamabad Quote Ref. No. 803-E/7-4-X/ 1 (APOIV) Dated 11/1/2008. Sub:- REGULARIZATION OF SERVICES OF FORMER CLASS-IV STAFF ENGAGED ON TLA-DIRECTIVES OF HONOURABLE FEDERAL MINISTER FOR RAILWAYS. Ref:- Your letter No.220-E/Regularization/TLA dated 17-12-07. The matter was examined by the competent authority and held that the target date for regularization of temporary staff is 8-9-07 as such the staff who have completed 3 years TLA Service on that date will be considered for regularization w.e.f. 8-9-07 and not from the date of their initial appointment. Similarly the TLA former Class-IV staff selected as Trade Apprentice or appointed on regular basis will be considered regularized from their actual date of regularization instead of their initial appointment. Sd/- (MUHAMMAD ALAM) for General Manager/ Personnel

iv. Regularization Policy, 2012 (dated 20.02.2012)

"GOVERNMENT OF PAKISTAN MINISTRY OF RAILWAYS (RAILWAYS BOARD) No.14(8)/ 05-E-11(Vol.III) Islamabad, 20th February, 2012 1 General Manager/Operations, Pakistan Railways, Headquarters Office, Lahore. 2. General Manager/M&S, Pakistan Railways, Headquarters Office, Lahore. 3 General Manager/Development, Pakistan Railways, Headquarters Office, Lahore. 4. The Chief Personnel Officer, Pakistan Railways, Lahore. 5 M.D/Locomotive Factory Pakistan Railways, Risalpur. 6. Managing Director/ CSF, Pakistan Railways, Lahore. 7. The Inspector General Police, Pakistan Railways, Lahore. Subject: REGULARIZATION OF CONTRACTUAL AND DAILY WAGE WORKERS. I am directed to refer to this Ministry's letter of even number dated 18-01-2012 on the above subject under which following eligibility criteria as per direction of the Cabinet Committee on regularization of Contractual and Daily Wage Workers has been circulated. Accordingly, employees meeting the eligibility criteria should be regularized with immediate effect as per following procedure already notified on 18-01 2012. (reproduced below) 4) "Contractual Employees: All contractual employees who have completed at least one year of uninterrupted contractual appointment as on December 31, 2011 are to be regularized except the following: i. Contractual employees working against project posts; ii. Contractual employees working against posts that are to be filled through the Federal Public Service Commission, and iii. Contractual employees who do not possess the prescribed qualifications and eligibility criteria for the posts they have been appointed against. B) Daily Wage Workers All daily wage workers who have completed three consecutive terms of appointment of 89 days each as on December 31, 2011 are to be regularized with immediate effect except the following: i. Employees working against project posts ii. Employees, if any, working against posts that are to be filled through the Federal Public Service Commission, and iii. Employees who do not possess the prescribed qualifications and eligibility criteria for the posts they have been appointed against. 2. Orders of the competent authority should first be obtained for creation of posts to absorb employees to be regularized. Necessary action should please be taken immediately and a compliance report be submitted to the Ministry within 14 days positively. 3. Details of all contractual or daily wage employees not meeting the yardstick for regularization should be conveyed to this Ministry on the enclosed proforma within three week positively. 4. Case of contractual/daily wage employees working against regular posts to be filled through the Federal Public Service Commission should be dispatched to the Ministry on case-to-case bases with complete justification for regularization. It must also be ensured that no contractual or daily-wage employee who has crossed the date of superannuation is regularized. 5. The preceding instructions apply to all posts in BS-1 to BS-17 only." 2, All previous instructions/guidelines issued by this Ministry on the subject issue may be treated as superseded. 3. It is reiterated that all cases of regularization of Contractual and Daily Wage Workers may be finalized on emergent basis and a final report in the matter must be furnished to this Ministry within one week, positively. 4. This issues with the approval of competent authority. Sd/-

(GULZAR MUHAMMAD) Director Establishment"

3. Perusal of the above policies reveals that in 1985 all the workers who were appointed on ad hoc basis or as substitutes against permanent posts for more than one year were absorbed on regular basis and their services were regularized from the date of their initial appointment to the posts. Thereafter, in the year 2000, it was reiterated that the applicability of Regularization Policy, 1985 was restricted to ad hoc employees and substitutes appointed up to 26.12.1992. As the respondents were admittedly appointed in the years 2006/2007, Regularization Policy, 1985 was not applicable to them.

4. Thereafter, a fresh Regularization Policy was introduced in the year 2008, which was for the first time applicable to temporary staff and required that the staff must have completed three years of service as TLA by 08.09.2007, when they were to be considered for regularization which would take effect from the date of the policy. This policy with a cut-off date of 08.09.2007 was not applicable to the respondents who were appointed in 2006/2007 and had not completed three years of service by 08.09.2007. Finally, Regularization Policy 2012, inter alia, provided for the regularization of daily-wage workers who had completed three consecutive terms of appointment of 89 days as on 31.12.2011 to be regularized with immediate effect. Pakistan Railways regularized the services of the daily-wagers/TLAs appointed in the years 2006/2007 under this policy with immediate effect. The said policy also provided in paragraph-2 that all previous instructions/ guidelines issued by the Ministry on the subject may be treated as having been superseded.

5. The respondents were time and again asked to identify the Regularization Policy under which they seek regularization from the date of initial appointment. Their response has been largely evasive and have unconvincingly pointed towards the Regularization Policy, 1985 in support of their claim. It appears that respondents were not fully aware that the Regularization Policy of the year 1985 was modified and the said policy was restricted to the appointments of adhoc employees and substitutes appointed upto 26.12.1992, as reaffirmed in Regularization Policy, 2000 (above). It is also important to point out that the said policy did not strictly provide for regularization of daily-wagers or TLAs. Thereafter, the Regularization Policy for the year 2008 is also not applicable to the current respondents as they were appointed in 2006/ 2007 and in order to avail the benefit of Regularization Policy, 2008 they had to complete three years of service by 08.09.2007 if they were to be considered for regularization under the policy. Therefore, the only policy available in the field which was applicable to the facts of the respondents was Regularization Policy, 2012 under which the respondents have already been regularized by the appellant. As the said policy is with immediate effect i.e., 20.02.2012, -the respondents cannot claim the regularization from the date of initial appointment.

6. Learned counsel for the respondents tried to refer to general case law on regularization but could not cite a precedent that has discussed the above Regularization Policies announced or approved by Pakistan Railways.

7. We, therefore, find no illegality in the regularization of the respondents under Regularization Policy, 2012 from the date of regularization i.e., 20.02.2012. The impugned judgment is not sustainable and is, therefore, set aside.

8. For the above reasons, the listed appeals are allowed, whereas the listed petitions are converted into appeals and allowed accordingly.

9. In the end we wish to point out that during the course of hearing, we have noticed that Pakistan Railways could have dealt with this matter more ably and it is only after summoning the Chief Executive Officer and the Human Resource Head of Pakistan Railways that we are able to understand the scheme of the Regularization Policies. We hope that, in future, the Chief Executive Officer will improve the quality of governance at Pakistan Railways so that such like litigation can be avoided or minimized.

MWA/D-8/SC Appeals allowed.

2021 S C M R 1390

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Sajjad Ali Shah and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

CHIEF SECRETARY, GOVERNMENT OF PUNJAB, LAHORE and others---Petitioners

Versus

Ms. SHAMIM USMAN---Respondent

Civil Petition No. 1097-L of 2020, decided on 1st July, 2021.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 19.02.2020, passed in W.P. No. 231042 of 2018)

Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 212 & 199---Punjab Service Tribunals Act (IX of 1974), S. 4(1)(b)---Service matters---Terms and conditions of service of a civil servant---Bar of jurisdiction of the High Court---Scope---High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain any proceedings in respect of terms and conditions of service of a civil servant which could be adjudicated upon by the Service Tribunal under the Punjab Service Tribunals Act, 1974.

Non-obstante clauses of Articles 212(1) and (2) of the Constitution began with "notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained," thus overriding, inter alia, the constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 199, which was already "subject to the Constitution".

The High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain any proceedings in respect of terms and conditions of service of a civil servant which could be adjudicated upon by the Service Tribunal under the Punjab Service Tribunals Act, 1974 ('the Act'). High Court as a constitutional court should always be mindful of the jurisdictional exclusion contained under Article 212 of the Constitution. Any transgression of such constitutional limitation would render the order of the High Court void and illegal.

National Assembly Secretariat through Secretary v. Mansoor Ahmed and others 2015 SCMR 253 and Ali Azhar Khan Baloch and others v. Province of Sindh and others 2015 SCMR 456 ref.

It was only under section 4(1)(b) of the Act that no appeal could lie to a Tribunal against an order or decision determining the "fitness" of a person to be appointed or promoted and fell outside the purview of the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. In order to fall in the exception envisaged under section 4(1)(b) of the Act, the order must determine "fitness" of a civil servant to an appointment or promotion. Therefore, unless the jurisdiction of the Tribunal was ousted under section 4(1)(b) of the Act, assumption of jurisdiction by the High Court in respect of matters of terms and conditions of a civil servant was unconstitutional and impermissible.

Muhammad Arif Raja, Additional A.G. Punjab for Petitioners.

Mian Muhammad Nawaz, Advocate Supreme Court and Ms. Tasnim Amin, Advocate-on-Record for Respondent.

Date of hearing: 1st July, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts of the case are that on the recommendations of the Provincial Selection Board in its meeting held on 31.10.2012, the Chief Minister/Competent Authority was pleased to decline the case of proforma promotion of the respondent vide letter dated 19.11.2012 issued by the Services and General Administration Department, Government of the Punjab. The respondent instead of challenging the said order before the Punjab Service Tribunal ("Tribunal") constituted under the Punjab Service Tribunals Act, 1974 ("Act"), invoked the constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court wherein through the impugned order dated 19.02.2020 direction was issued to the petitioner department "to grant proforma promotion to the petitioner to Grade-20 " This has been challenged before us, primarily on the ground that the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the said matter in the light of the constitutional bar contained in Article 212 of the Constitution.

2. There is more to this case. Before challenging the rejection of her proforma promotion by the competent authority in the recent writ petition impugned before us, the respondent had earlier approached High Court through a constitutional petition[1] wherein she prayed that the petitioner-department "be directed to finalize the promotion case promotion be made effective from 26.05.2012 along with other service benefits." This petition was entertained and allowed. The High Court vide order dated 18.09.2012 directed the competent authority "to immediately place the case of the respondent for promotion from grade 19 to grade-20 before the authority for its consideration in accordance with law, rules and regulations. The said exercise shall be completed within the period of a month from the receipt of order under intimation to this Court through its Deputy Registrar (Judicial)." As no material steps were taken in this regard by the department, the respondent filed a contempt petition[2] before the High Court. The contempt petition was disposed of vide order dated 21.05.2018 when the decision of the competent authority rejecting the claim of the respondent to proforma promotion was placed before the Court. The Court left it open to the respondent to challenge the departmental order, if so advised. The respondent instead of challenging the order of the competent authority before the Tribunal under the Act, once again approached the High Court through a constitutional petition[3] which is subject matter of this case. The High Court vide impugned order dated 19.02.2020 was pleased to direct the petitioner-department to grant proforma promotion to the respondent in grade-20, hence this petition.

3. Learned Additional Advocate General, Punjab representing the petitioner-department at the very outset points out that the interference by the High Court in service matters is clearly barred under Article 212 of the Constitution and therefore the impugned order is without jurisdiction and thus not sustainable.

4. Learned counsel for the respondent, when asked how such direction could have been issued by the High Court in the light of bar contained in Article 212 of the Constitution, had no explanation to render and kept referring to the interference by the High Court in the matter in the earlier constitutional petition. It is regrettable that inspite of clear constitutional bar under Article 212 of the Constitution, the matter was not only earlier entertained by the High Court but then dealt through a contempt petition and finally when the petitioner-department declined the proforma promotion of the respondent, the High Court directed the department to promote the respondent. It is important to revisit the relevant portion of Article 212 of the Constitution, which states as follows:

> 212. Administrative Courts and Tribunals. (1) Notwith-standing anything hereinbefore contained, the appropriate Legislature may by Act provide for the establishment of one or more Administrative Courts or Tribunals to exercise exclusive jurisdiction in respect of-
>
> (a) matters relating to the terms and conditions of persons who are or have been in the service of Pakistan, including disciplinary matters;
>
> (b) matters relating to claims arising from tortious acts of Government, or any person in the service of Pakistan, or of any local or other authority empowered by law to levy any tax or cess and any servant of such authority acting in the discharge of his duties as such servant; or
>
> (c) matters relating to the acquisition, administration and disposal of any property which is deemed to be enemy property under any law.
>
> (2) Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, where any Administrative Court or Tribunal is established under clause (1), no other court shall grant an injunction, make any order or entertain any proceedings in respect of any matter to which the jurisdiction of such Administrative Court or Tribunal extends and all proceedings in respect of any such matter which may be pending before such other court immediately before the establishment of the Administrative Court or Tribunal other than an appeal pending before the Supreme Court, shall abate on such establishment:

Provided that the provisions of this clause shall not apply to an Administrative Court or Tribunal established under an Act of a Provincial Assembly unless, at the request of that Assembly made in the form of a resolution, Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament) by law extends the provisions to such a Court or Tribunal[4].

5. We cannot lose sight of the fact that non-obstante clauses of Articles 212(1) and (2) begin with "notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained," thus overriding, inter alia, the constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 199, which is already "subject to the Constitution." Article 212(1)(a) provides that a Tribunal established under the law will enjoy exclusive jurisdiction in the matters relating to terms and conditions of persons who are or have been in the service of Pakistan, including disciplinary matters. The term "terms and conditions" is clearly spelt out in Chapter II of the Punjab Civil Servants Act, 1974 and the rules thereunder. Article 212(2) in unambiguous terms states that no other Court can grant injunction, make any order or entertain any proceedings in respect of any matter to which the jurisdiction of such Administrative Court or Tribunal extends. Scope of jurisdiction and powers of the Tribunal are provided in sections 4 and 5 of the Act. The High Court, therefore, has no jurisdiction to entertain any proceedings in respect of terms and conditions of service of a civil servant which can be adjudicated upon by the Tribunal under the Act. It is only under section 4(1)(b) of the Act that no appeal can lie to a Tribunal against an order or decision determining the "fitness" of a person to be appointed or promoted and falls outside the purview of the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. In order to fall in the exception envisaged under section 4(1)(b) of the Act, the order must determine "fitness" of a civil servant to an appointment or promotion. In the instant case, the order under challenge before the High Court pertained to the eligibility of the petitioner to be even considered for proforma promotion due to the seniority of a large number of officers awaiting promotion before her and in no manner determined the "fitness" of the respondent. High Court as a constitutional court should always be mindful of the jurisdictional exclusion contained under Article 212 of the Constitution. Any transgression of this constitutional limitation will render the order of the High Court void and illegal.[5] Therefore, unless the jurisdiction of the Tribunal is ousted under section 4(1)(b) of the Act, as described above, assumption of jurisdiction by the High Court in respect of matters of terms and conditions of a civil servant is unconstitutional and impermissible. Even the direction passed in the earlier constitutional petition, in this case, was impermissible under the Constitution.

6. For the above reasons, this petition is converted into appeal and allowed. The impugned order dated 10.02.2020 is, therefore, set aside and the constitutional petition of the respondent is dismissed. The respondent is free to challenge order dated 19.11.2012 before appropriate forum, in accordance with law, if so advised.

MWA/C-15/SC Appeal allowed.

2021 S C M R 1492

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

PROVINCE OF PUNJAB and others---Petitioners

Versus

Hafiz MUHAMMAD AHMAD---Respondent

C.P. No. 1274-L of 2013, decided on 26th July, 2021.

(Against the order dated 31.05.2013 passed by the Lahore High Court, Lahore in W.P. No.11657 of 2013)

Law reports---

----Headnotes/Case notes of judgments published in law reports---Scope---Headnotes were not part of the judgment, therefore, it was neither safe nor desirable (for courts) to cite headnotes in their judgments.

The headnotes preceding the judgment of a court were not a part of that judgment but were the notes prepared by the editors of the law-reports, highlighting the key law points discussed in the judgment and were supplied just to facilitate the reader with a summarized version of the salient features of the case which helped in quickly scanning through the law reports.

Headnotes were at times misleading and contrary to the text of the judgment. Headnotes by the editors of the law-reports could not be taken as verbatim extracts of the judgment and relied upon as conclusive guide to the text of the judgment reported, hence they should not be cited as such. Therefore, it was neither safe nor desirable to cite a dictum by reference to the headnotes.

Salah-Ud-Din v. Zaheer-Ud-Din PLD 1988 SC 221; Nahar Industrial Enterprises Ltd. v. Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation AIR 2009 SC 6262 and Farhat Nasreen v. Muhammad Hussain PLD 1997 Kar. 204 ref.

Supreme Court observed that it was sanguine that in future the High Courts and the District Courts while referring to a precedent or case law in their judgments and orders would cite the actual text of the judgment rather than place reliance on the headnotes thereof.

Rana Shamshad Khan, Additional A.G. along with Abdul Majeed, Dy. Director ACE for Petitioners.

Nemo for Respondent.

Date of hearing: 26th July, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioners at some length and have gone through the impugned order and the record of the case, with his able assistance. The learned counsel has not been able to point out any legal error in the impugned order passed by the High Court, which may justify grant of leave to appeal. The impugned order is well-reasoned and we are of the considered view that it does not warrant any interference by this Court. The petition is, therefore, dismissed, and leave declined.

2. We have, however, noted that the High Court has relied on a series of case law, referred to in the impugned order by reproducing the headnotes of the law reports. The headnotes preceding the judgment of a court are not a part of that judgment but are the notes prepared by the editors of the law-reports, highlighting the key law points discussed in the judgment and are supplied just to facilitate the reader with a summarized version of the salient features of the case which helps in quickly scanning through the law reports. It is a matter of common knowledge that the headnotes are at times misleading and contrary to the text of the judgment. Headnotes by the editors of the law-reports cannot be taken as verbatim extracts of the judgment and relied upon as conclusive guide to the text of the judgment reported, hence they should not be cited as such. Therefore, it is neither safe nor desirable to cite a dictum by reference to the headnotes.[1] We are sanguine that in future the High Courts and the District Courts while referring to a precedent or case law in their judgments and orders will cite the actual text of the judgment rather than place reliance on the headnotes thereof.

MWA/P-12/SC Petition dismissed.

2021 S C M R 1914

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Muhammad Ali Mazhar, JJ

MUHAMMAD RAMZAN---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE and others---Respondents

Criminal Petition No. 952 of 2021, decided on 8th October, 2021.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Multan Bench dated 12.7.2021 passed in Cr. Misc. No.2824-B of 2021)

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----Ss. 161 & 172---Examination of witnesses by the police---Statement of witness recorded in case diary (zimni) prepared under S. 172, Cr.P.C. instead of being recorded separately---Whether such statement constituted a witness statement under S. 161, Cr.P.C.---Held, that under S. 161(3), Cr.P.C. the police officer was to reduce in writing any statement made to him in the course of examination of any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case---Police officer was to make a separate record of the statement of each such person but in case the statement of such a person, recorded by the Investigating Officer (IO), was embodied in the case diary instead of being recorded separately, it was at best a procedural lapse on the part of the IO but the statement itself did not lose its character as a statement under S. 161, Cr.P.C.---Distinction between Ss. 161 & 172, Cr.P.C. was that while one dealt with the recording of the statement of witnesses / persons acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case, the other was the information or opinion of the IO which he gathered and formed during the course of the investigation --- So if while recording his opinion in the case diary, the IO also recorded the statement of a witness, any such statement continued to pass for a statement under S. 161, Cr.P.C. and did not become a part of the case diary under S. 172, Cr.P.C.

Zulfikar Ali Bhutto v. State PLD 1979 SC 53; Nasrullah v. State 1980 PCr.LJ 5; Muhammad Akbar v. State 1985 PCr.LJ 338; Muhammad Tahir v. State 1986 PCr.LJ 3025; Khalid Pervez v. The State 1989 PCr.LJ 1824; Nazar Muhammad v. Mushtaq Ahmad PLD 1996 Lah. 277; Muhammad Riaz v. State PLD 2003 Lah. 290 and Muhktiar Hussain v. State and others - Criminal Miscellaneous No.7627-B/2020 and vide Order dated 29.03.2021 in Ghulam Murtaza v. State and others - Criminal Miscellaneous No. 659-B of 2021 ref.

(b) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302, 148 & 149---Qatl-i-amd, rioting armed with deadly weapons, unlawful assembly---Pre-arrest bail, grant of---Further inquiry--- Investigating Officer (IO) categorically stated before the Court that on the basis of the statements of eight independent witnesses recorded by him, the accused, even though present at the site of the occurrence, was neither involved in the commission of the offence nor was he carrying any weapon---Two of the co-accused had a specific role in the crime report but were granted bail by the High Court on similar statement of the IO that they while present at the site of occurrence were not involved in the commission of the offence and were not armed with any weapon---In view of the statement of the IO supported by the statement of the witnesses there were sufficient grounds for further inquiry into the guilt of the accused---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and accused was admitted to post-arrest bail.

James Joseph, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Ch. Muhammad Sarwar Sandhu, Additional P.G., Farhat, SHO, Jalil and Ghulam Yasin, I.Os. for the State.

Date of hearing: 8th October, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Petitioner seeks leave against the order dated 12.7.2021, wherein post arrest bail in case FIR No.325/2020, under sections 302, 148 and 149, P.P.C., Police Station Shah Jamal, district Muzaffargarh, was denied to the petitioner by the High Court.

2. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioner, as well as, the learned Additional Prosecutor General and the Investigating Officer (IO). It has been categorically stated before us by the IO that on the basis of the statements of eight independent witnesses recorded by him, the petitioner, even though present at the site of the occurrence, was neither involved in the commission of the offence nor was he carrying any weapon. At this juncture, learned Additional Prosecutor General vehemently pointed out that the statement of witnesses referred to by the IO have been recorded in the case diary (zimni) prepared under section 172 of the Cr.P.C and do not constitute statement of a witness under section 161, Cr.P.C.

3. Under section 161(3), Cr.P.C. the Police officer is to reduce in writing any statement made to him in the course of examination of any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case. The Police Officer is to make a separate record of the statement of each such person but in case the statement of such a person, recorded by the IO, is embodied in the case diary instead of being recorded separately, it is at best a procedural lapse on the part of the IO but the statement itself does not lose its character as a statement under section 161, Cr.P.C. The distinction between sections 161 and 172, Cr.P.C is that while one deals with the recording of the statement of witnesses / persons acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case, the other is the information or opinion of the IO which he gathers and forms during the course of the investigation. So if while recording his opinion in the case diary, the IO also records the statement of a witness, any such statement continues to pass for a statement under section 161, Cr.P.C. and does not become a part of the case diary under section 172, Cr.P.C.[1]

4. We have also noticed that two of the co-accused namely Mukhtiar Hussain and Ghulam Murtaza had a specific role in the crime report but were granted bail[2] by the High Court on similar statement of the Police that they while present at the site of occurrence were not involved in the commission of the offence and were not armed with any weapon.

5. In view of the statement of the investigation officer supported by the statement of the witnesses discussed above, we are of the view that there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into the guilt of the petitioner. The petitioner (Muhammed Ramzan) is, therefore, admitted to post-arrest bail, subject to furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.100,000/- with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial Court. This petition is converted into appeal and allowed accordingly.

MWA/M-62/SC Order accordingly.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 1

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Maqbool Baqar, Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Faisal Arab, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Sajjad Ali Shah, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, Munib Akhtar, Yahya Afridi and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ

JUSTICE QAZI FAEZ ISA and others---Petitioners

versus

The PRESIDENT OF PAKISTAN and others---Respondents

Constitution Petitions Nos. 17, 19 of 2019 and C.M.A. No.7417 of 2019 in Constitution Petition No. 19 of 2019 in Constitution Petitions Nos.20-30, 32 and 34 of 2019, decided on 19th June, 2020.

Per Umar Ata Bandial; Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Faisal Arab, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Sajjad Ali Shah, Munib Akhtar and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ agreeing; Maqbool Baqar, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Yahya Afridi, JJ agreeing with regard to quashing of Presidential reference against the judge but dissenting by not joining the majority as to the directions given to the Federal Board of Revenue for initiating proceedings against the judge's wife and children, and for submitting a report of said proceedings to the Supreme Judicial Council. [Majority view]

(a) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 184(3)---Constitutional jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Art. 184(3) of the Constitution---Scope and pre-requisites---In order to invoke the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Art. 184(3) of the Constitution, the impugned action must be shown to involve a matter of "public importance" arising from the breach of a fundamental right which affected the public at large.

Al-Jehad Trust and another v. Lahore High Court 2011 SCMR 1688 ref.

(b) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 4, 9, 10-A, 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner-judge before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Maintainability---Fundamental right of the general public which was claimed by the petitioner to be under threat was the derivative right of the independence of the judiciary---Said right was an essential prerequisite for the enjoyment of, inter alia, the principal fundamental right to access justice which was guaranteed to the people by Arts. 4, 9 & 10-A of the Constitution---In the absence of independence of the judiciary, all other facets of the right to access justice were essentially rendered null and void---Unlawful infringements of Art. 209 of the Constitution eroded the independence of the judiciary which was directly connected with the right to access justice---Present petition, therefore, satisfied the two-fold requirements of Art. 184(3) of the Constitution, and was accordingly maintainable.

Sh. Riaz-Ul-Haq v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2013 SC 501 and Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan PLD 2010 SC 61 ref.

(c) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 209(5) & 209(6) & Preamble---'Independence of judiciary' and 'accountability of judges', concepts of---Complementary concepts---Independence of the judiciary was not primarily for the benefit of the Judges, but existed instead to secure the interests, rights and benefits enjoyed by the whole of society---If one were to focus only on the protection of the judiciary from the depredations of the organs of the State (howsoever vitally important and crucial that may be), it would not be the independence of judiciary that would result but rather it would be the rule of Judges without any checks and balances---Accordingly, it was only fitting that judicial independence and accountability were treated as being complementary to each other.

(d) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3), 209(5)(b) & 211---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Proceedings before Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council' )---Bar of jurisdiction of courts---Whether Art. 211 of the Constitution that barred jurisdiction of courts in respect of proceedings before the Council was applicable in the present case---Held, that in present proceedings under Art. 184(3) of the Constitution the Supreme Court was neither adjudicating upon the process of the Council nor quashed its notice issued to the petitioner-judge---In fact, in view of the findings recorded in the present judgment, the Supreme Court had simply abated the notice---Factual information underlying the reference did cast a smear on the petitioner's name and could not be ignored; however, without confronting the owners of the foreign properties the information was at present inchoate to form the basis of proceedings under Art. 209 of the Constitution---In such circumstances, the same must be verified to test the veracity of the inference drawn in the reference about the source of funds---Nevertheless, as the reference had been quashed, the notice issued by the Council had no foundation except for the preliminary factual information contained in the reference---In this situation, the notice had rightly been abated because it also lacked the factual and legal material on which the reference was based---Accordingly, Art. 211 of the Constitution had no application to the available facts of the present case---Constitutional petitions were disposed of.

(e) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3), 209(5) & 209(6)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Superior Court before the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council')---Pre-reference proceedings---Whether the Supreme Court could strike down pre-reference proceedings on judicial review grounds---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') was a unique (and the only) body which could examine the conduct of a Superior Court Judge and decide whether the said Judge was fit to complete his tenure. Reference, which was an executive action under the Constitution, forwarded to the Council should not be struck down on ordinary judicial review grounds such as unreasonableness and proportionality, as doing so would be belittling its status, ignoring its competence and pre-empting its decisions based on appreciation of the record. Giving the power of judicial review to the Supreme Court to set aside pre-reference proceedings would be tantamount to rejecting the capacity and jurisdiction of the Council to adjudicate upon any question of unreasonableness, proportionality or suitability raised in relation to the merits of the President's actions; it would also open the floodgates of litigation by Judges who were the subject of a reference. Such course of action prima facie appeared to be contrary to the meaning of Article 209 of the Constitution which entrusted all matters regarding the merits of a case to a high powered Constitutional domestic forum within the judiciary.

Khan Asfandyar Wali and others v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2001 SC 607 and Sabir Iqbal v. Cantonment Board, Peshawar PLD 2019 SC 189 ref.

(f) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 209(5)(b) & 209(8)---Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts (framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Art. 209 (8) of the Constitution), Preamble---Supreme Judicial Council Procedure of Enquiry 2005, R. 3(l)---Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council')---Reference against a judge of the Superior Court on grounds of 'misconduct'---Misconduct---Meaning, scope and standard of proof.

Any conduct of a judge which conflicted with the mandated norms in the Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts (framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Article 209 (8) of the Constitution) ['the Code'] could attract scrutiny for possible misconduct. The Code primarily provided guidance to Judges of Superior Courts on the exemplary qualities they must possess, and it expected that Judges would conduct themselves with integrity, propriety and dignity both in their public and private lives and would not engage in controversy. Therefore, conduct that diverged from these qualities would constitute misconduct.

Articles of the Code were non-legal in nature. A violation of any of these Articles would neither sustain a civil lawsuit nor a criminal prosecution. However, an infringement thereof may very well lead to disciplinary proceedings under Article 209(5) of the Constitution. The Code does not only expect impeccable behaviour from a Judge in the courtroom but it also expected him to maintain these high standards of integrity, propriety and dignity outside the Court. Such qualities and conduct were necessary to preserve not only the prestige and honour of the Judge but also the prestige and honour of the institution of the judiciary. [p. 98] $Q_1$ & $R_1$

Misconduct was any conduct of the Judge which damaged the public's perception about his ability to discharge his duties or which undermined public confidence in the institution of the judiciary regardless of whether such conduct occurred in the professional arena or in the private life of a Judge. [p. 100] $T_1$

The Supreme Judicial Council Procedure of Enquiry, 2005 ('the 2005 Rules') had been framed by the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') to implement its mandate and regulate its own proceedings, therefore, they carried special force and stood on a higher pedestal than ordinary laws. The 2005 Rules provided guidelines for the conduct of the Council proceedings and the exercise of its jurisdiction. The Council as the constitutionally empowered body had been utilising the criteria of misconduct noted in Rule 3(l) of the 2005 Rules and elaborated upon in the Code to assess the culpability of Superior Court Judges. Rule 3(l)(i) of the 2005 Rules succinctly encapsulated the normative standards of misconduct provided in the Code whilst Rule 3(l)(iii) included an objective criterion that related to a Judge's professional performance. Both criteria were consistent with the Code. [pp. 93, 94] $M_1$ & $N_1$

The threshold that constituted misconduct for the purposes of Judges of the Superior Courts should manifest the intent and spirit of Article 209 of the Constitution. Accordingly, the standard for the commission of misconduct must not be so high that it was impossible to allege thus rendering Judges unanswerable for their conduct. On the other hand, the threshold for misconduct must also not be so lenient so as to become a weapon in the hands of disgruntled litigants, interest groups or Executive against honest, competent and independent Judges. [p. 96] $O_1$

Misconduct recognised under Article 209(5) of the Constitution gave discretion to the Council to determine whether any alleged conduct of a Judge came under the purview of misconduct. It also laid down a high threshold of misconduct to ensure that trivial indiscretions or infractions of the law by Judges or any minor shortcomings in their personal lives did not render them liable to removal proceedings. At the same time it protected the integrity of the judicial institution by allowing for the removal of Judges whose conduct without constituting a violation of a prescribed law was so improper that it rendered such Judge unfit for holding judicial office. [p. 97] $P_1$

Interpretation of misconduct set out by the Supreme Court in the case of The State v. Mr. Justice Akhlaque Husain (PLD 1960 SC 26) reflected the intent and spirit of Article 209(5) of the Constitution, the Code and the 2005 Rules. [p. 98] $S_1$

The State v. Mr. Justice Akhlaque Husain PLD 1960 SC 26; Lawrence v. Attorney General of Grenada 2007 UKPC 18 at para-25; Clark v. Vanstone 2004 FCA 1105 and Privy Council in Hearing on the Report of the Chief Justice of Gibraltar 2009 UKPC 43 at para-202 ref.

(g) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 209(5)(b) & Fifth Sched., Cl. 4---Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts (framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Art. 209(8) of the Constitution), Art. II---Federal Service Medical Attendance Rules, 1990, R. 10---Supreme Court Judges (Travelling Allowance) Rules, 1958, Rr. 3(4)(i) & 4(i)---Supreme Court Judges (Leave, Pension and Privileges) Order, 1997, Rr. 20, 21 & 25---UN Economic and Social Council Resolution 2006/23: Strengthening Basic Principles of Judicial Conduct, Cl. 4.7---Family members of a Judge of the Superior Court---Financial affairs---Question as to whether a Judge of the Superior Court needed to be aware/have knowledge of the financial affairs of his independent spouse and adult children---Held, that family members of a Judge were required to be careful (financially, socially and politically), moderate and fair in their dealings and exchange with others so that no controversy arose which may embarrass the Judge---High standards of propriety were expected of a Judge and his family members---Judges were supposed to have knowledge of the financial interests of their family members, however, if they did not, then they were expected to make reasonable efforts to acquire such information, moreso when they were questioned by a competent forum to explain the financial interests of their family members---Accordingly, there was a continuing obligation on a Judge to keep himself informed about the financial interests of his family members.

Judges, like other public office holders, occupied a position of sacred trust. They held positions where they exercised power and authority under the law. Under the Constitution and the law, such a position carried certain benefits and privileges accompanied by obligations and responsibilities. A Judge of the Superior Court was entitled to these perks and benefits which were also enjoyed by his spouse and family. [p. 101] $V_1$

Generally, every adult individual was recognised in law as an independent entity. However, different principles applied in relation to family members of public office holders. This was because any irresponsible act on the part of a family member may reflect adversely on the Judge. [p. 103] $X_1$

Entitlements of the Judge which he shared with his family [his spouse and members of his family who were either dependent on him or with whom he had financial dealings ("family members")] also carried certain responsibilities and obligations. One such obligation was the duty to enjoy these privileges with dignity, probity and discretion. Apart from the material benefits enjoyed by a Judge's family members during and after his service, they also received an advantage from the respect and recognition extended, through association, by people who interacted with them. In these circumstances, the family members of a Judge were required to be careful (financially, socially and politically), moderate and fair in their dealings and exchange with others so that no controversy arose which may embarrass the Judge. Although these responsibilities were shared by family members of all public office holders, they applied with particular force to family members of Judges as the latter were expected to be the embodiment of a person who was 'God fearing, law-abiding, abstemious, truthful of tongue, wise in opinion, cautious and forbearing, blameless, and untouched by greed' [Article II of the Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts (framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Article 209 (8) of the Constitution]. Accordingly, high standards of propriety were expected of a Judge and his family members. [p. 102] $W_1$

Suo Motu Case No. 5 of 2012 PLD 2012 SC 664 ref.

A Judge was required to make reasonable efforts to be aware about the financial affairs of his family members. This precaution helped to forewarn him about extraneous influences or vested interests which could compromise not only his independence and credibility but also the purity and honour of the institution to which he belonged. To understand the rationale behind the obligation on Judges to make reasonable efforts to be informed about or to watch over the financial affairs of their family members, one had to understand the nexus of this obligation with the nature of Judges work and the position they occupied in society. Judges exercised pre-eminent authority under the law. They adjudicated disputes between litigants, held parties appearing before them accountable and imposed liabilities and granted relief to such parties. With their authority came an even greater responsibility to decide cases fairly, independently and in accordance with law. In such a situation, it was imperative for a Judge that he should make reasonable efforts to be informed about the financial interests of his family members for the simple reason that if a case came before him which directly or indirectly involved the pecuniary, proprietary or other personal interests of any of his family members, he could recuse himself. [p. 104] $Y_1$ & $Z_1$

Government of N.W.F.P v. Dr. Hussain Ahmad Haroon 2003 SCMR 104 ref.

Another equally, if not more, important reason for requiring Judges to be aware of the financial interests of their family members was that the law's intent was to prevent a Judge's family from becoming a conduit to discreetly influence his opinions and views. This assured the Judge's independence and integrity apart from safeguarding the institution of the judiciary. [p. 105] $A_2$

Judges were supposed to have knowledge of the financial interests of their family members. However, if they did not, then they were expected to make reasonable efforts to acquire such information, moreso when they were questioned by a competent forum to explain the financial interests of their family members. What constituted 'reasonable effort' on the part of Judges would no doubt depend upon the circumstances of each case. However, a plea of lack of knowledge by a Judge in relation to the financial affairs of his family members was untenable in light of the general trend in international practice, the obligations imposed on a Judge under the Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts [framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Article 209(8) of the Constitution] and the law relating to public office holders including Judges. Accordingly, there was a continuing obligation on a Judge to keep himself informed about the financial interests of his family members. [p. 107] $B_2$

(h) Mala fides---

----Types of mala fides---'Mala fide in law' and 'malice in fact'---Distinction.

Traditionally, an action actuated with an ulterior purpose to harm another or benefit oneself was classified as an act that was malicious or malice in fact. However, in recent times, the Supreme Court had recognised another category of mala fides, namely, mala fide in law. Even though both were a species of mala fide, yet each had distinct ingredients and consequences. [p. 109] $C_2$

Said Zaman Khan v. Federation of Pakistan 2017 SCMR 1249 ref.

Apart from the generally recognised category of actions driven by a foul personal motive described as malice in fact, there was another category of reckless action in disregard of the law termed as mala fide in law. The first type of mala fide was attributed to a person whereas the second was levelled against the impugned action. While the former was concerned with a collateral purpose or an evil intention to hurt someone under the pretence of a legal action, the latter dealt with actions that were manifestly illegal or so anomalous that they lacked nexus with the law under which they were taken. Thus it was clear that malice in fact and mala fide in law had different ingredients, the former being comprised of factual elements with the latter being composed of legal features, that needed to be established as such for the respective consequences to ensue. Secondly, an accusation of mala fide in law involved more than errors of misreading the record or non-application of the law or lack of proportionality in the impugned action. Instead, this was a serious allegation of wanton abuse or disregard of the law. However, when an ulterior motive to cause harm was proved then the repercussions of malice in fact followed. It was for this reason that a mere allegation that an action had been taken wrongly could not be grounds to hold that such action suffered from mala fide in law or malice in fact. [p. 110] $D_2$

Imputing mala fide of either kind to a person or an action was a grave accusation. It should not be made lightly but could only be done when the facts or legal defects justified its use. [p. 110] $E_2$

(i) Mala fides---

----'Malice in fact'---Scope and standard of proof.

Plea of malice in fact required a high standard of proof. The rationale behind such an approach was that a plea of malice in fact frustrated the process of justice. After a complainant established malice in fact against a person, the entire proceeding by the latter was brought to an end. This resulted in the merits of the case being ignored. Moreover, the reputation of the person, against whom an allegation of malice in fact was made, became tarnished and if the said allegation was proved then his repute was forever ruined. He was made out to be avicious individual who harboured ill-intentions against others. Such were the negative consequences of this plea, if established. This reasoning applied with greater force if such an allegation was made against senior public functionaries of the State. [p. 110] $F_2$

Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan PLD 2010 SC 61 ref.

Federation of Pakistan v. Saeed Ahmed Khan and others PLD 1974 SC 151 ref.

An allegation of malice in fact was unlike any other ordinary allegation. It carried with it a stigma for the accused which could not easily be washed away. If a lower standard of proof for malice in fact was adopted, that would open the floodgates for recalcitrant litigants to make such allegations against their opposing side to derail the process of justice and to defame their opponents in Court. Therefore, to limit these allegations to only genuine claims of malice in fact, any person who wished to raise this plea must prove it to the satisfaction of the Court on the basis of positive and cogent evidence. [p. 111] $G_2$

Moreover, there was also an obligation on litigants to plead the particulars of malice in fact in detail. Vague allegations could not establish a plea of malice in fact. [p. 111] $H_2$

Federation of Pakistan v.. Saeed Ahmed Khan and others PLD 1974 SC 151 ref.

Government of West Pakistan v. Begum Agha Abdul Karim Shorish Kashmiri PLD 1969 SC 14 ref.

Accordingly, to raise the plea of malice in fact, it was necessary for the relevant party to pinpoint the specific incidents/events/actions which demonstrated the malice in fact of the opposing side. [p. 112] $I_2$

Allegation of malice in fact would be defeated if it was proved that a complaint levelled against a person was true. [p. 118] $R_2$

(j) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner-judge before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Question as to whether the reference was filed with mala fides (malice in fact) due to a judgment the petitioner-judge had authored in the past [Suo Motu Case No. 7 of 2017 (PLD 2019 SC 318)], wherein he had criticized the ruling political party and one of its coalition partners, and against which judgment said two parties had filed a review petition containing certain adverse remarks against the petitioner---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

Recourse to a review petition was a lawful remedy granted to litigants by the Constitution itself. Reference in question was based on the ownership of petitioner's wife's undeclared foreign properties. With the blemish attached to the ownership of undeclared foreign properties, such ownership automatically attracted speculation about its status and source. Recourse to a lawful remedy under Article 209(5) of the Constitution could not be malicious unless for ill motives an information alleged wrong or distorted or exaggerated facts, or sought relief that was inordinate or extraneous to the undisputed facts. Furthermore, the observations in the judgment [Suo Motu Case No. 7 of 2017 (PLD 2019 SC 318)], given by the petitioner-judge paled in comparison to the remarks passed by the Supreme Court in another judgment Air Marshal (Retd.) Muhammad Asghar Khan v. General (Retd.) Mirza Aslam Baig (PLD 2013 SC 1) in which far stronger observations about the country's politicians and political system failed to draw any adverse reaction from the Federal Government against any Judge. Consequently, no malice in fact was made out on such ground. Constitutional petitions were disposed of. [pp. 112, 113] $J_2$, $K_2$ & $L_2$

(k) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Reference based on information provided by a journalist---Plea of petitioner-judge that said journalist had a reputation of planting false stories---Question as to whether the reference had been filed against the petitioner-judge with mala fides (malice in fact)---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

When an information against a person (whether a public office holder or a private person) was to be evaluated, it was the substance, veracity and consequence of the information which mattered and not the credibility and credentials of the informant. Receipt of information from any source was cognizable by the Supreme Judicial Council under Article 209(5) of the Constitution and was sufficient to sustain an inquiry against a Judge of the Superior Courts. Word 'any' used in Article 209(5) of the Constitution meant that the antecedents of the informant were irrelevant unless the information was false, concocted, distorted, exaggerated or sought relief that was excessive in relation to the accepted facts. In the present case the underlying information in the reference to the extent of ownership of the foreign properties by the petitioner's wife and children was not disputed by the petitioner. In such circumstances the background of the informant became insignificant. As a result, the plea of malice in fact raised by the petitioner was repelled. [pp. 113, 114] $M_2$ & $N_2$

Pakistan Tobacco Company Ltd v. Federation of Pakistan 1999 SCMR 382 ref.

(l) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Confidentiality of a reference---Scope---Details of the reference leaked to the media---Plea of petitioner-judge that the government and its functionaries were behind such leaks---Whether mala fides of Government functionaries in leaking details of the reference---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

Reference filed against a Superior Court Judge had to be kept confidential. To hold any particular person/authority accountable for revealing the details of a reference, there needed to be at least some material on record that connected the leaks to one or more of such persons/authorities. From the chronology of events and case record of the present case it was not evident as to which event triggered the sudden disclosure of the reference. Although the allegation made against the respondents (Government and its functionaries) in the present case raised suspicion, it was still unsupported by any evidence. Consequently it could not suffice to conclusively hold that either one or more of the respondents leaked the reference to the media. On the basis of speculations and suspicions it could not be determined who leaked the reference, therefore no finding with respect to its disclosure and hence of malice in fact against any of the persons who were aware of its contents could be recorded. [pp. 114, 115, 116] $O_2$, $P_2$ & $Q_2$

Justice Shaukat Aziz Siddiqui and others v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2018 SC 538 ref.

(m) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 4, 90, 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Rules of Business, 1973, R. 2(1)(ii)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Assets Recovery Unit, constitution of---Legality---Question as to whether the constitution of the Assets Recovery Unit, which coordinated the collection of evidence against the petitioner-judge was lawful---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

To determine the legality of Assets Recovery Unit's creation, one had to consider whether the requisite legal actions and procedures for its establishment had been adopted by the person(s) competent and authorised to do so under the law. [p. 120] $S_2$

The Assets Recovery Unit (ARU) was a coordinating agency which brought under one umbrella the competent statutory authorities to stem the menace of tax evasion, money laundering and corruption in the country. Accordingly, the ARU was essentially executing the policy of the State to curb financial crimes in the country. It was therefore an executive office, in particular an 'Attached Department' of the Cabinet Division, performing executive functions. Having such status, it did not need the backing of an Act to grant validity to its creation and actions as required by Article 4 of the Constitution. [p. 121] $T_2$

Perusal of Rule 2(1)(ii) of the Rules of Business, 1973 made it clear that for any 'Attached Department' to exist and function, it needed to have a direct relation with a Division and had to be declared by the Federal Government as an 'Attached Department.' The material on record showed that these two essential steps were taken in relation to the creation of ARU. The first of such documents, demonstrating the procedure followed for constituting the ARU as an 'Attached Department,' was the Summary for the Cabinet dated 11-09-2018, followed by a Notification dated 19-09-2018. Said two documents proved that the creation of the ARU as an 'Attached Department' of the Cabinet Division was approved by the Cabinet itself. Article 90 of the Constitution established that the Cabinet with the Prime Minister as its head was the Federal Government. Consequently, it became evident that the approval for the creation of the ARU was given by the Federal Government. As a result, the two-fold requirement listed in Rule 2(1)(ii) of the Rules of Business, 1973 for the constitution of ARU as an 'Attached Department' had been satisfied in the present case. [pp. 121, 122] $U_2$ & $V_2$

The ARU did not act directly but instead operated through its members who had been borrowed from various statutory bodies of the country including the Federal Investigation Agency ("FIA"); the National Accountability Bureau ("NAB"); the Federal Board of Revenue ("FBR"); and the State Bank of Pakistan ("SBP"). As a result, the ARU was manned primarily with individuals whose powers and jurisdiction were exercised under a statutory regime. Accordingly, the ARU was simply a coordinating office attached to the Cabinet Division with the main purpose of facilitating the collaborative efforts of the relevant statutory functionaries. It therefore could not be accused of adversely affecting the rights of any citizen without the backing of law. This was made clear by the composition of the ARU and its terms of reference ("TORs") which were also set out in a Notification dated 06-11-2018. Clause 3 of the said TORs confirmed that when it came to dealing with the assets of citizens of Pakistan, the ARU was only authorised to act through its designated officer/member from the relevant department/ agency. Since these designated officers/members were simultaneously serving in statutory agencies, they were vested not only with the powers granted by the relevant statute governing their agency but were also bound by the procedural safeguards and obligations laid down in such a statute. As a result, any action attributed to the ARU in relation to the assets of citizens of Pakistan was taken through competent authorities strictly in accordance with the law. There was no defect in the creation of the Assets Recovery Unit. [pp. 122, 124] $W_2$ & $X_2$

(n) Notification---

----Non-publication of notification in Gazette---Effect---In ordinary circumstances, the non-publication of a Notification in the Gazette did not affect its validity except for in limited situations such as when a statute made publication in the Gazette mandatory or where the rights and liabilities of other persons were involved. [p. 125] $Y_2$

Saghir Ahmed v. Province of Punjab PLD 2004 SC 261 and Bahadur Khan v. Federation of Pakistan 2017 SCMR 2066 ref.

(o) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3), 199(b)(ii), 209(5)(b) & 260---Rules of Business, 1973, R. 4(6) & Sched. V-A, Sr. No. 1A ---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Special Assistant to Prime Minister (SAPM) on Accountability appointed as Chairman of an Assets Recovery Unit (ARU), which received information about the foreign properties in the name of the petitioner-judge's wife---Question as to whether the appointment of SAPM on Accountability was lawful---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

Rule 4(6) and serial number 1A of Schedule V-A of the Rules of Business, 1973 gave the Prime Minister the power to appoint a Special Assistant with such status and functions as he desired. Office of Special Assistant to the Prime Minister (SAPM) was mentioned in Article 260 of the Constitution as one of the posts that was excluded from the definition of 'Service of Pakistan.' Therefore, at present the post of an SAPM was a political appointment. Accordingly, the said appointment was made in the discretion of the Prime Minister and was not regulated by statute. Court would interfere in such appointment if the Prime Minister exercised his discretionary power 'arbitrarily, unlawfully or in a fanciful manner,' or if the appointment of a person as SAPM suffered from 'cronyism, nepotism or political favour.' In such a situation the appointment would be struck down under Article 199(b)(ii) of the Constitution. As a result, there was a judicial check on the exercise of the Prime Minister's discretion. Nonetheless, such relief could not be claimed in collateral proceedings. [p. 126] $Z_2$ & $A_3$

Muhammad Adil Chattha v. Federation of Pakistan (Constitution Petition No. 63 of 2018) and Qazi Hussain Ahmad v. General Pervez Musharraf PLD 2002 SC 853 ref.

In the present case petitioner had neither challenged the appointment of SAPM on Accountability in separate proceedings under Article 199(b)(ii) of the Constitution nor had he placed any material on record which disqualified the incumbent SAPM on Accountability from being appointed to such office. Therefore, without proof of illegal or arbitrary exercise of discretion by the Prime Minister, the Court could not interfere with his decision on this matter. Accordingly, there was no unlawfulness in the appointment of the SAPM on Accountability. [p. 127] $B_3$

(p) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 14(1), 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Right to privacy---Scope---Surveillance---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Tax and property records of the petitioner-judge and his family were accessed/searched to frame the reference against the petitioner---Question as to whether such searches were a breach of the petitioner's and his family's right to privacy enshrined in Art. 14(1) of the Constitution and thus amounted to covert surveillance---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

Surveillance primarily involved the monitoring or recording of a person's movements, conversations or other activities and communication. However, in the present case the petitioner-judge had not produced any evidence which demonstrated that either the petitioner or his family had been monitored or their communications had been intercepted. Only proof which the petitioner referred to was the admission by the respondents that the tax and property records of the petitioner and his family had been accessed from Government and public records. Indeed, there was no allegation that any information was obtained from the petitioner's personal or private records. [p. 128] $C_3$

Guarantee under Article 14(1) of the Constitution was for the privacy of home and that too subject to law. Such privacy did not extend to the tax and property records of either the petitioner or his family members. [p. 135] $J_3$

Mohatarma Benazir Bhutto v. President of Pakistan PLD 1998 SC 388 distinguished.

(q) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 260---Service of Pakistan---Scope---Office of Judge of the Superior Court---Such office fell within the category of "Service of Pakistan". [p. 130] $D_4$

Air Marshal (Retd.) Muhammad Asghar Khan v. General (Retd.) Mirza Aslam Baig PLD 2013 SC 1 ref.

(r) Public servant---

----Person holding judicial office---Such person was a public servant. [p. 131] $E_3$

Salahuddin v. Frontier Sugar Mills and Distillery Ltd. PLD 1975 SC 244 ref.

(s) Public office---

----Public servant, office of---Main ingredients.

Following are the five main ingredients present in the office of a public servant:

(i) The office was a trust conferred for a public purpose;

(ii) The functions of the office were conferred by law;

(iii) The office involved the exercise of a portion of the sovereign functions of Government whether that be executive, legislative or judicial;

(iv) The term and tenure of the office were determined by law; and

(v) Remuneration was paid from public funds. [p. 132] $F_3$

(t) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 176---"Public servant"---Scope---Judges of the Supreme Court were public servants. [p. 132] $G_3$

(u) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001), S. 216(3)(p)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Tax records of the petitioner-judge and his family disclosed by Federal Board of Revenue to the Assets Recovery Unit of the government---Question as to whether such disclosure was lawful, and whether the exception under S.216(3)(p) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 applied to the petitioner-judge and his wife---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

Section 216(1) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('the 2001 Ordinance') declared the tax records of taxpayers to be confidential. However, the same section also contained the exceptions to this general rule. For purposes of present case, the exception found in section 216(3)(p) of the 2001 Ordinance provided that disclosure of tax records was not precluded where the same may be required by any officer or department of the Federal Government or of a Provincial Government for the purpose of 'investigation' into the 'conduct and affairs' of any public servant. Judge of the Supreme Court was a public servant for the purposes of section 216(3)(p) of the 2001 Ordinance. In relation to the Judge of a Superior Court, an 'investigation' into his 'conduct and affairs' could only mean an investigation for the purposes of Article 209 of the Constitution. However, it was critical (for the exception in section 216(3)(p) to be attracted) that the 'investigation' was duly sanctioned and was being carried out in accordance with law at the time that the clause was invoked. If this was not so then clause (p) of section 216(3) could have no application and the information could not be disclosed. In the present case there was no proper investigation for the purposes of Article 209 when the Assets Recovery Unit (ARU) of the government sought the tax information of the petitioner from the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR). Consequently, the exception in section 216(3)(p) of the 2001 Ordinance was not applicable to the facts of the present case. [p. 132] $G_3$ & $H_3$

As far as the petitioner's wife, the language of section 216(3)(p) of the 2001 Ordinance suggested that it was not limited only to information relating to the public servant. However, since the jurisdictional prerequisites for carrying out an investigation against the petitioner did not exist, it therefore followed that the request made by the ARU for the tax information and the release of such information by the tax authorities did not fall within the exception contained in section 216(3)(p) of the 2001 Ordinance. As a result, the disclosure by the FBR was contrary to law. Presidential reference against the petitioner was quashed and in consequence thereof the proceedings pending in the Supreme Judicial Council against the petitioner-judge, including the show-cause notice issued to him, stood abated. [pp. 133, 169, 170] $I_3$, $O_4$ & $P_4$

(v) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 209(5)---Reference sent by the President to the Supreme Judicial Council against a Judge of the Superior Court---Standard of proof and care required for a Presidential reference stated.

Article 209(5) of the Constitution only required the President to form an opinion that a Superior Court Judge may have been guilty of misconduct. He did not need to be certain that a Judge was guilty of the conduct alleged. Nevertheless, his opinion must be based on positive and affirmative material and on the assurance that necessary legal and procedural safeguards had been observed in the preparation of the reference. Therefore, for the President to even form a prima facie opinion about a Judge's guilt, the President needed to verify that there had been compliance with the settled rules on authorisation; he needed to obtain proper advice on the contents of the reference from competent persons; and he needed to ascertain that there was sufficient material before him which satisfied the high thresholds of care and proof expected in the preparation of a reference. [p. 136] $K_3$

Complaint against a Superior Court Judge could be generated in one of three ways: a Presidential reference, a private complaint and the exercise of suo motu jurisdiction by Supreme Judicial Council. Since all three methods were distinct, therefore, the quality of their information/ complaint would also be different. Presidential reference was articulated on a different level compared to a private complaint. When the President, as the Head of State, sent a reference against a Judge, he had at his disposal State agencies and access to competent legal advice. He could utilise these to verify that valid authorization for investigation had been granted and that materials that were relevant and reliable were available to support the reference. However, stating that despite all the machinery of the Federal Government at his command, the President was only required/obliged to send a perfunctory reference which contained legal and factual defects, then nothing would be more harmful to the independence of the judiciary. Such a relaxation would give the Executive the room to send frivolous references with the expectation that if some nexus between the material and the object of Article 209 of the Constitution was demonstrated, the Supreme Judicial Council would itself find substance in the reference. Therefore, to protect and defend the independence of the judiciary, a reference sent by the President must contain authorised, serious, considered and verified information in both respects, legal and factual, in order to possess the gravity that should accompany a Presidential action. [p. 137] $L_3$ & $M_3$

(w) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 48, 90, 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Rules of Business, R. 15-A, Sched. V-B, Entry No. 35---Procedure for filing a Presidential reference before the Supreme Judicial Council---Scope---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Federal Law Minister providing authorization for investigation conducted prior to the filing of the reference---Whether such authorization was unlawful and could only be provided by the President at his discretion---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

President could not authorise an investigation against a Judge in his own discretion. Sending of a reference was an executive act performed by the Federal Government. To declare that the President was to authorise investigations into Superior Court Judges in his discretion would amount to inviting the President to arrogate powers in complete contradiction of the Constitutional scheme. [p. 143] $N_3$ & $O_3$

Under the Constitutional process for performing the executive function of authorising an investigation into an information against a Superior Court Judge, the President should act on the advice of the Prime Minister or the Cabinet under Article 48(1) of the Constitution and not invoke his discretionary power under Article 48(2). [p. 143] $P_3$

Entire process of a Presidential reference fell under the advice of the Prime Minister according to the Rules of Business, 1973. It was he (i.e. the Prime Minister) who had to advise the President on the steps that needed to be taken in a matter that bore relation to Article 209(5) of the Constitution. As a result, the approval by the President of the advice of the Prime Minister was necessary for commencing an investigation into a complaint made against a Judge of the Superior Court. Initial authorisation by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister to commence an investigation against a Judge in a complaint falling under Article 209(5) was a legal requirement for sustaining the validity of a Presidential reference that was ultimately filed with the Supreme Judicial Council. Such oversight by the highest Constitutional functionaries protected Judges from whimsical and arbitrary interference by Executive authorities in their personal judicial independence and privacy. Without valid authorisation the foundation of the reference suffered from an initial illegality which amounted to a Constitutional violation. Consequently, such an infirmity was fatal to the superstructure that was erected on it. In the present case with regard to the reference there was no such authorisation on record for commencing an investigation against the petitioner-judge. Instead the record showed that the only authorisation sought, for probing the complaint against the petitioner, was from the Law Minister who under any interpretation of the Constitution had no jurisdiction in such behalf. The competent authorities, namely, the Prime Minister and the President were never approached by the Ministry of Law for the requisite authorization. As a result the present reference was defective and illegal. Presidential reference against the petitioner was quashed and in consequence thereof the proceedings pending in the Supreme Judicial Council against the petitioner-judge, including the show-cause notice issued to him, stood abated. [pp. 145, 146, 168, 169, 170] $R_3$, $S_3$, $T_3$, $J_4$, $O_4$ & $P_4$

Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan PLD 2010 SC 61 ref.

(x) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 99(2) & 99(3)---Rules of Business, 1973---Said Rules were constitutionally mandated rules and must be followed by the Government in carrying out its functions. [p. 144] $Q_3$

Messrs Mustafa Impex, Karachi v. The Government of Pakistan PLD 2016 SC 808 ref.

(y) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 4, 10A, 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001), Ss. 116(1)(b) & 116(2)---Foreign Exchange Regulation Act (VII of 1947) S. 5---Anti-Money Laundering Act (VII of 2010),

Ss. 2(q), 2(s) & 3 & Sched., section XIIA---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Allegations in the reference, validity of---Whether there was any substance in the allegations contained within the reference---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

Counsel for the Government did not make any submissions on the petitioner's alleged violation of the provisions of Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947. In fact, he did not even nominate the relevant provisions of the said law. There was also no material, before the Court, which supported the said bald allegation of a violation of the claimed foreign exchange regime under Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947. Allegation of violating the provisions of the said Act was unsubstantiated assumption neither backed by evidence nor supported by the relevant provision that was allegedly breached. As such, it could not be sustained. [pp. 149, 169] $U_3$, $V_3$ & $M_4$

Next allegation levelled against the petitioner was that of money laundering. The primary legislation governing said subject matter was the Anti-Money Laundering Act, 2010 ('the 2010 Act'). Reading of sections 2 and 3 of the 2010 Act provided that a necessary element of the offence of money laundering was the commission of a predicate offence. The execution of this offence gave birth to the proceeds of crime, the movement of which attracted the criminal conduct of money laundering. Therefore, without the commission of a predicate offence there could be no offence of money laundering. In the present case, the main allegation against the petitioner was that he had failed to declare the foreign properties owned by his wife and children in his wealth statements. The contents of a wealth statement were provided in Section 116(1) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('the 2001 Ordinance'). In order to attract the offence of money laundering the non-declaration of assets under Section 116 of the 2001 Ordinance must constitute a predicate offence. Only then may the allegation of money laundering be made against the petitioner. Perusal of section XIIA of Schedule to the 2010 Act revealed that the non-declaration of assets by a taxpayer under the 2001 Ordinance was not a predicate offence under 2010 Act. The reference had not alleged the commission of any specific predicate offence under the 2010 Act by any person. Therefore, prima facie no case of money laundering could be made out against the petitioner on such count. [pp. 150, 169] $W_3$ & $L_4$

Equally, it was relevant to note that the four sections of the 2001 Ordinance were only inserted in the Schedule to the 2010 Act as predicate offences on 20-05-2016 whereas the foreign properties were purchased by the petitioner's family in 2011 and 2013. Consequently, it was an established fact that before 2016, violations of the 2001 Ordinance could not form the basis of a money laundering allegation. [p. 151] $X_3$

There was no allegation or material on record suggesting that the petitioner or his wife transferred money to the foreign country via illegal means/methods. [p. 152] $Y_3$

Primary allegation in the reference against the petitioner was his failure to disclose the foreign properties of his wife and children in his wealth statement. In the reference it was alleged that this obligation was imposed on the petitioner by virtue of Section 116(1)(b) of the 2001 Ordinance. No notice was ever issued to the petitioner or his wife under section 116(1). Petitioner's wife did receive notices for the years 2015, 2017 and 2018 but those were issued under section 114(4) of the 2001 Ordinance for her failure to file her tax returns. Moreover, on a perusal of the reference it became evident that the entire case under section 116 of the 2001 Ordinance rested on the opinion of an Assistant Commissioner (Inland Revenue) who stated that the petitioner was liable to disclose the foreign properties of his wife and children. Such opinion and that of the respondent-Government was based on a literal reading of section 116(1)(b). Such interpretation of the section 116(1)(b) had never been tested judicially before. Indeed, counsel for the Government candidly acknowledged that there was no case-law in our jurisprudence on the subject of declaration by a taxpayer of the assets of his spouse and children under section 116(1)(b).On an examination of the (several) instructions published by Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) for completing a wealth statement in tax years subsequent to 2013, it could be noticed that the FBR was itself unsure about the true interpretation of section 116(1)(b) of the Ordinance. Amongst all of the varying constructions of section 116(1)(b), there was also the overriding difficulty that the language of section 116(1)(b) was open to more than one interpretation. [pp. 154, 155, 156, 168] $A_4$, $B_4$, $C_4$ & $K_4$

Neither the Government nor the petitioner produced any case-law or other relevant material to support their respective interpretations of Section 116(1)(b). Even the FBR's own instructions on completing a wealth statement form were unclear and had wavered from year to year. Accordingly, the respondents' decision to charge the petitioner with a violation of section 116 of the 2001 Ordinance on the basis of an interpretation that was devoid of judicial consideration let alone approval, and which lacked any definitive and consistent departmental practice was conjectural. In such a situation, it would be better if this matter was determined in the first instance by the hierarchy of specialised fora specified in the 2001 Ordinance. [p. 157] $D_4$

To establish the source of funds for the acquisition of the foreign properties, the requirements of due process under Article 4 and Article 10A of the Constitution mandated that the first person concerned, namely, petitioner's wife ought to be given an opportunity through sending a notice to explain her sources of funding for the foreign properties and the reasons for not declaring such properties in her wealth statement. Without granting such opportunity/notice, the framing of the reference against the petitioner was premature, hypothetical, and impulsive. Presidential reference against the petitioner was quashed and in consequence thereof the proceedings pending in the Supreme Judicial Council against the petitioner-judge, including the show-cause notice issued to him, stood abated. [pp. 159, 169, 170] $E_4$, $O_4$ & $P_4$

(z) Interpretation of statutes---

----Special laws---Scope---When a special law regulated a particular subject area then another law enacted for a different special purpose could not affect the subject matter governed by the former special law---Statutes which were not pari materia could not govern each other's interpretation. [p. 152] $Z_3$

Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi v. Additional District and Sessions Judge 1994 SCMR 1299 and Halsbury's Laws of England (Volume 96, 2018) ref.

(aa) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 48(1), 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---President to form an opinion in terms of Art. 209(5) of the Constitution before sending the reference to the Supreme Judicial Council---Meaning and scope---Whether the President could seek advise from those involved in investigating or framing the reference---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

Sub-Article (5) of Article 209 of the Constitution provided that before directing the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') to hold an inquiry against a Supreme Court Judge, the President should have formed the opinion that the said Judge may be guilty of misconduct. However, the basis upon and the means by which the President needed to form his opinion was not readily discernible from Article 209(5) of the Constitution. Although it was not for the Court to specify a list of persons from whom legal advice may be sought by the President, however, there were certain persons who should not be approached by the President for legal advice on a reference under Article 209 of the Constitution. Fairness and objectivity dictated that those involved in the investigation and framing of the reference may brief the President but could not advise him on whether it was maintainable and appropriate for inquiry by the Council. This was because there was a clear conflict of interest for the architects of the reference to opine on the weaknesses of their work. But this was precisely what happened in the present reference. The President discussed the reference and its legal aspects with the Attorney General and the Law Minister. As senior functionaries of the Federal Government, both said persons were admittedly involved in the framing of the reference against the petitioner. Under Article 209(5) of the Constitution, the opinion formed by the President was expected to be considered, fair and objective. President's power clearly granted him the jurisdiction to evaluate the worth of the advice tendered to him. If he was so inclined he may require the same to be reconsidered once by the Prime Minister. In order to be objective and fair the President should rely upon counsel and legal experts not linked with the framing of the reference or working for the Federal Government. President's opinion in the present reference was influenced by the inadmissible advice of individuals who were involved in the preparation of the reference. In these circumstances, it could not be said that the President formed an informed opinion in terms of Article 209(5) of the Constitution, therefore, the reference against the petitioner was defective. Presidential reference against the petitioner was quashed and in consequence thereof the proceedings pending in the Supreme Judicial Council against the petitioner-judge, including the show-cause notice issued to him, stood abated. Constitutional petitions were disposed of.

[pp. 161, 163, 169, 170] $F_4$, $G_4$, $N_4$, $O_4$ & $P_4$

Federation of Pakistan v. Haji Muhammad Saifullah Khan PLD 1989 SC 166 ref.

(bb) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 48(1) &209(5)---Rules of Business, 1973, Sched. V-B---Presidential reference against a judge of the Superior Court sent to the Supreme Judicial Council---Advice of Prime Minister received by the President---Scope---In the filing of a reference the President was bound to act on the advice of the Prime Minister and not the Cabinet---If the reference was substantive, cogent, coherent, rational and lawful, then the President simply had to record his assent, and there was no additional obligation on him to set out his separate reasons---However, if the reference was defective factually and/or legally then the President must state his reasons for disagreement and call for reconsideration of the matter by the Prime Minister in the light of those reasons---If the President subsequently disagreed even with the reconsidered advice, then he was bound by Art. 48(1) to endorse the said advice leaving it for the Supreme Judicial Council to analyse the merits of the reference sent by the President. [p. 167] $H_3$

(cc) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 209(5)---Presidential reference sent to the Supreme Judicial Council against a Judge of the Superior Court---Pre-requisites---Federal Government must set out its reasons for preparing and sending a reference against a Judge of the Superior Court---In fact, the summary and statement of reference prepared by the Ministry of Law for the Prime Minister and the President were the documents which contained these reasons---Said documents contained the crux of the reference against a Superior Court Judge, therefore they needed to be factually and legally complete---Failure to comply with such requirement would render the reference unsustainable. [p. 168] $I_4$

(dd) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Supreme Court unanimously quashed the reference and declared that the same was of no legal effect whatsoever, and in consequence thereof the proceedings pending in the Supreme Judicial Council ("Council") against the petitioner-judge, including the show-cause notice issued to him, stood abated---Supreme Court (with a majority of 7 to 3) gave directions to the Commissioner, Inland Revenue and Federal Board of Revenue to inquire into and seek explanation from the spouse and children of the petitioner as to the nature and source of the funds whereby the three subject properties in a foreign country were acquired in their names, and also send a report in such regard to the Supreme Judicial Council, which had the powers if it considered justified, to commence proceedings against the petitioner in exercise of its suo motu jurisdiction---Reasons for referring the matter to the Federal Board of Revenue notwithstanding the quashing of the Presidential reference.

[Note: The directions can be found in the short order of the present judgment reported as (Mr.) Justice Qazi Faez Isa and

14 others v. The President of Pakistan and others (PLD 2020 SC 346), headnote (b)]

Notwithstanding the quashing of the Presidential reference against the petitioner-judge, the decision to direct the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) to commence tax proceedings against the petitioner's wife and children was primarily based on two grounds: to establish that Judges of the Superior Court were answerable for allegations casting aspersions not only on their personal integrity but also on the integrity of the institution; and to honour the petitioner's plea that his wife and children, who were independent taxpayers, should first be asked about their source of funds for the acquisition of the foreign properties. [pp. 170, 172] $Q_4$ & $T_4$

The illegalities in the present reference were a result of its careless and casual preparation. These errors or defects did not erase petitioner's wife's ownership of the foreign properties, the primary fact which formed the basis of the reference and which was not denied by the petitioner. Whilst the ownership of the foreign properties was not disputed, the source of funds for their purchase and the mode by which these funds were transferred abroad required explanation. Otherwise, an unexplained investment by the spouse of a Judge of the Superior Courts, who was a holder of public office, compromised the integrity of the Judge and ultimately the probity and credibility of the institution which he served. Rather than allowing the disturbing allegation against the petitioner and his family to circulate and attract innuendos thereby injuring the reputation and integrity of both the petitioner and the Supreme Court, the fair, impartial and transparent route was to allow petitioner's wife and her children to disclose the source of their funds to the relevant authorities, namely, the FBR. Such a transparent course of action was consistent with the Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts, the maintenance of institutional integrity and the image of Judges as the neutral and independent arbiters of law and justice. [p. 171] $R_4$

By referring the issue of source of funding to the FBR for verification from petitioner's wife and his children, the Supreme Court had chosen the path which in the first place should have been taken by the Government and its functionaries but which was casually ignored by them. By sending the matter to the FBR the Court had assured the substantive and procedural rights of each party under the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001. These rights and the right of the petitioner's family to appeal against adverse orders had specifically been preserved. Additionally, it was directed that only appropriate proceedings for undeclared or unexplained assets be initiated against the petitioner's family which should be concluded within a reasonable timeline. Therefore, by such referral to the FBR the controversy surrounding the allegation in the reference would be settled. [p. 172] $S_4$ & $U_4$

Supreme Court had also directed the Chairman FBR to submit his report, regarding the proceedings before the Commissioner (Inland Revenue), to the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') for its consideration. This was done to give the Council a chance, if it so wished, to commence proceedings against the petitioner in exercise of its suo motu jurisdiction. However, the direction issued to the Chairman FBR in no way obliged the Council to take any action based on the report. The Council may do so of its own volition if it considered that the report justified any action against the petitioner. Consequently, the Chairman FBR's report was a piece of information to be evaluated by the Council in its suo motu jurisdiction. The Council may if so inclined in the exercise of its suo motu jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution take into consideration any proceedings before the tax authorities or orders passed by them. [pp. 172, 173] $V_4$ & $W_4$

Per Faisal Arab, J; agreeing with the majority view regarding quashing of Presidential reference against the judge and the directions given to the Federal Board of Revenue for initiating proceedings against the judge's wife and children, but giving his own views on the interpretation of Article 48 of the Constitution, section 116(1)(b) of Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 and on the plea of mala fide raised by the petitioner.

(ee) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 209(5)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Superior Court sent to the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council')---Information against the judge---President and the Council had to judge whether such information was credible before initiating an inquiry---Had the Constitutional safeguard of formation of opinion on a particular information not been made a condition precedent, no judge would be able to work with the freedom and confidence required of him in discharge of the obligation of his or her office.

Use of the words 'from any source' appearing in Article 209(5) of the Constitution allowed information to come from a member of the general public or a government functionary or that which was based on a finding of fact of a judicial forum. No specific route from which information was to come had been laid down in the Constitution. While leaving the door wide open for the information to come in from any source, Article 209 (5) of the Constitution had also ensured that receipt of any and every information per se should not trigger inquiry against a Judge and only such information was to become actionable on which either the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') or the President had formed the opinion that the matter needed to be inquired into. The informant had no right to seek that the President or the Council must conduct inquiry on the information that had been placed by him before any of them. The Constitution had left such decision in its entirety in the hands of the Council and the President. Until either of them considered any information to be convincing enough to call for an inquiry only then the Council could embark upon the inquiry otherwise not. [p. 178] $X_4$

Had the Constitutional safeguard of formation of opinion on a particular information not been made a condition precedent, no judge would be able to work with the freedom and confidence required of him in discharge of the obligation of his or her office. On every kind of complaint made against them the Judges would remain unendingly entangled in putting up their defence in one inquiry after another and correspondingly the members of the Council would also be perpetually engaged in conducting inquiries upon whatever information was placed before them by any informant, crippling them from performing their normal judicial function. Apprehending such drawback, the Constitution had given primacy to the opinion that was formed on the information by either of the two opinion-makers (i.e. the President and the Council) described in Article 209 (5) of the Constitution. It was for this reason that when the Constitution admitted information from any source, it basically said that let there be search for the truth if in the opinion of any of the two opinion makers there was substance in the information regardless of the source. There was no independence of judiciary if there was no effective mechanism for its accountability. [p. 178] $Y_4$

(ff) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 209(5)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Superior Court sent to the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council')---Report submitted by the Council to the President---Discretion of President to accept or reject the report---Scope.

Once a matter was referred by the President to the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') to conduct an inquiry then it became a constitutional obligation of the Council to first conduct the inquiry and then submit its report to the President. Once that was done and in its report the Council returned its findings of guilt or otherwise, it was then for the President to either accept the report or reject it. He may not agree on removing a judge as Clause (6) of Article 209 of the Constitution used the word 'may', which clothed the President with such discretion. Where the Council exonerated a judge of the charges framed against him, in that eventuality the matter ended there. The exoneration brought the whole proceedings to an end which no more remained open to challenge, not even by the President by seeking judicial review before the Supreme Court [p. 179] $Z_4$

(gg) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3), 209(5) & 211 ---Presidential reference against a judge of the Superior Court sent to the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council')---Bar of jurisdiction under Article 211 of the Constitution---Scope and purpose.

The Supreme Court on its judicial side could not examine the merits of the allegations contained in a reference on account of the constitutional bar contained in Article 211 of the Constitution, which though appeared to be a clog on judicial review but if such a bar was not implanted through a constitutional provision, it would have deprived the most important organ, the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council'), of its vital powers in discharging its constitutional responsibility of inquiring into the conduct of Judges of the Superior Courts in an effective and efficient manner. In the face of the bar contained in Article 211, if any interference by the Supreme Court on the merits of the controversy gained currency, every Judge against whom the Council was to conduct inquiry would first come to the Supreme Court and seek examination of the credibility of the informant as well as of the merits of the information. If the Supreme Court was to first give its findings on the adequacy of the allegations or credibility of the informant and then decide whether to allow or restrain the Council from proceeding with the inquiry, it would be deviating from the scheme devised under the Constitution for the accountability of the judges of the Superior Judiciary. It would also set a very dangerous precedent for actions that may be taken under Article 209(5) of the Constitution in future. In every case the credentials of the informant and not the worth of the information disclosed against a judge would be examined first on the judicial side of the Supreme Court. Invasion of this Constitutional power by any Court would not only amount to demonstrating mistrust in the forum created exclusively for the accountability of judges but would also be in disregard of the Constitutional mandate contained in Article 211. Hence, where decision to conduct inquiry had been taken in terms of Article 209(5) of the Constitution, the allegations made against a sitting Judge could only be proved or disproved before the Council and not before a court through a judicial pronouncement. Any judicial interference that amounted to stifling the very function which the Constitution had assigned exclusively to the Council would be violative of Article 211 of the Constitution. [p. 179] $A_5$

(hh) Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908)---

----O. VI, R. 2---Pleadings---Scope---Pleadings were to be confined to a statement of material facts; it shall be presumed that reliance would be placed on such facts and what legal effects emerged from such facts need not be stated in the pleadings in order to seek the relief---Failure to state the legal effects, therefore, could not even be regarded as an omission in law much less fatal to any legal proceedings---In fact stating legal effects in the pleadings was regarded as lack of regard for the rules of pleadings. [p. 181] $B_5$

Budho v. Ghulam Shah PLD 1963 SC 553 ref.

(ii) Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----Ss. 116(1)(b)---Public office holder/tax payer---Wealth statement---Assets and liabilities of the tax payer's spouse, minor children, and other dependents, declaration of---Perusal of S.116(1)(b) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 revealed that the wealth in the names of the taxpayer's spouse or minor children had to be declared on account of mere existence of such relationship with the taxpayer---Dependency of such relations on the taxpayers was not a condition precedent---Scope and purpose of S.116(1)(b) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001. [Minority view]

Apart from detecting tax evasions on undeclared incomes, the declarations made under section 116 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('the 2001 Ordinance') could also be used by a forum that was entrusted with the function to initiate disciplinary proceedings against a public office holder in order to ascertain whether his undeclared assets were acquired beyond his known sources of income. In that sense the declarations made under section 116(1)(b) became a 'relevant fact' in order to prove a 'fact in issue' which was possessing assets beyond means. So, the utility of the declaration made under section 116 was not restricted to detecting probable tax evasion only but it could be utilized by a forum, other than income tax authorities, to examine the legitimacy of the source from which an asset was acquired when it came to examining the conduct of a public office holder. [p. 182] $C_5$

The source of undeclared asset must reconcile with the legitimate source of income of the holder of high public office or of the member of his or her household, in whose name the asset stood. Unless it was so demonstrated, non-disclosure was likely to cast doubts on his or her integrity and honesty and could be taken as an act of concealment of an illegal source from which the undeclared asset was acquired. Thus, in the context of accountability of a public office holder, the declaration under section 116(1)(b) of the 2001 Ordinance by itself was not a 'fact in issue' but only a 'relevant fact' which could be used to seek explanation with regard to source of acquisition of undeclared assets that stood either in the name of the public office holder or his spouse or children or any other person dependent upon him. No claim of privacy or privilege could justify withholding of financial disclosure that was relevant in such accountability process. Thus, the declaration of assets and liabilities made under section 116(1)(b) could be used as a 'relevant fact' before both the forums i.e. income tax authorities and the forum that was empowered to take disciplinary action against a holder of public office, as the object and purpose of both the forums was distinct. [p. 183] $D_5$

Declaration under section 116(1)(b) of the 2001 Ordinance had nothing to do with the spouse's financial dependency or otherwise on the resident taxpayer. Income tax law was not concerned with whether the spouse of a resident taxpayer was dependent or was a person of means. All that it intended was that no tax evasion took place by hiding one's undeclared source of income in the names of taxpayer's loved ones. Husband and wife were both presumptive heirs of each other. Any property in the name of any of them was also inheritable by their children. Hence, wealth in the name of taxpayer's spouse, irrespective of his or her own means of income, had to be declared on account of mere existence of such relationship with the taxpayer. If dependency of spouse of a public office holder was made a criterion, it may give rise to scenarios where a resident taxpayer may purchase property in the name of his or her spouse who was financially well off and was living as a member of the taxpayer's household and a property in his or her name remained undeclared and when such a fact got disclosed, the public office holder in order to avoid disciplinary proceedings would take the plea that his or her spouse was a person of means and not dependent on him or her, therefore, information about the source of acquisition of undeclared asset was not required to be divulged by him or her under section 116 of the 2001 Ordinance. [p. 184] $E_5$ & $F_5$

What section 116(1) (b) intended to mean was that the wealth in the names of the taxpayer's spouse or minor children had to be declared on account of mere existence of such relationship with the taxpayer. The dependency of such relations on the taxpayers was not a condition precedent. A resident taxpayer even in an action taken under the 2001 Ordinance, could not take the stand that unless his or her spouse was shown to be dependent on him or her, there was no legal obligation to declare the assets that stood in their names under section 116(1)(b) of the 2001 Ordinance. [p. 185] $G_5$

(jj) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner-judge before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Plea of mala fides raised by the petitioner---Question as to whether the reference against the petitioner could be quashed by the Supreme Court on grounds of mala fides based on the judgment reported as Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan (PLD 2010 SC 61 ref.)---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded. [Minority view]

As regards plea of mala fide, only on one occasion in the past the Supreme Court interfered with the proceedings of the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council'). This happened in the case of Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan (PLD 2010 Supreme Court 61). Even in that case the merits of allegations made in the Presidential reference against the then Chief Justice of the Supreme Court were not made basis for nullifying the proceedings but the Supreme Court noticed quite pronounced acts of mala fide on the part of the then President who under the then existing provisions of Article 209 (5) of the Constitution was the sole opinion-maker to initiate the inquiry. Presidential reference was not quashed by the Supreme Court on the basis of the allegations contained therein but because the Chief Justice's removal from his office was on account of his refusal to give assurance to the then President that his candidature in (military) uniform in the said elections would not be judicially invalidated. Hence, the unholy haste in first seeking resignation of the then Chief Justice under coercion followed by his mistreatment and forcible removal from office and then sudden convening of the meeting of the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') on one and the same day clearly demonstrated utter mala fide on the part of the then President who himself was the sole opinion-maker under Article 209(5) of the Constitution to refer the matter to the Council. That was the background that led to the quashment of the reference against the then Chief Justice by the Supreme Court. However in the present case the petitioner-judge had not alleged mala fide against the President but had raised such a plea only against the informant and the persons who processed the information forming basis of the reference. The present case was thus not even remotely close to what treatment was meted out to the then Chief Justice. [pp. 186, 187] $H_5$ & $I_5$

(kk) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 48(1), 48(2), 184(3) & 209(5)---Presidential reference before the Supreme Judicial Council---Scope---Discretion and independent opinion of the President---Scope---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Whether the President was bound to act on advice of the Prime Minister in terms of Art. 48(1) of the Constitution---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded. [Minority view]

From the contents of Article 209 (5) of the Constitution, it became clear that in forming his opinion the President was not dependent on the advice of the Prime Minister or the Cabinet. He could form opinion on any information that may have come to him from any other source. This was so as the Judiciary was separate and distinct from the Executive branch of the Government. It had to remain completely separate and uninfluenced by any decision of the Executive in the running of its affairs. So while examining the power of the President to call for inquiry under Clause (5) of Article 209 of the Constitution, it clearly indicated that the President had to act in his own discretion to which he was entitled to by virtue of Article 48(2) of the Constitution. All that the executive could do was to place information which it considered actionable before the President and then it was for him to either seek any further information or consider the information already provided sufficient enough to refer the matter to the Supreme Judicial Council for inquiry without being burdened with the constraints of Article 48 (1) of the Constitution. The Executive on its part could not compel the President by advising him on the strength of Article 48 (1) of the Constitution to send the reference proposed by it to the Supreme Judicial Council for inquiry against a judge of the superior judiciary. [p. 188] $J_5$ & $K_5$

In the present case the contents of the summary prepared for the Prime Minister in respect of reference against the petitioner showed that it was proposed to the Prime Minister to advice the President to direct the Supreme Judicial Council to probe into the allegations in terms of Article 209(5) of the Constitution, and after such inquiry submit a report to the President under Article 209(6) of the Constitution. The summary was then endorsed by the Prime Minister and placed before the President. The President acted on such advice and signed the reference, which was then sent to the Supreme Judicial Council to conduct inquiry against the petitioner under Article 209(5) of the Constitution. Thus, nothing was left for the President to decide on his own in terms of Article 209(5) of the Constitution. From what transpired from the whole process, it became abundantly clear that the President acted on the summary in terms of Article 48(1) of the Constitution and signed the reference considering the advice to be binding on him. Thus, the decision of filing the Reference was not based on President's own independent opinion. The Reference not being based on President's own independent opinion, the same was submitted to the Supreme Judicial Council beyond the contemplation of the provisions of Article 209(5) of the Constitution and thus was not maintainable in law. [p. 189] L5

(ll) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 209(5)---Reference before the Supreme Judicial Council against a judge of the Superior Courts---Information provided to the President or the Supreme Judicial Council by an informant---Credibility and motivation of the informant---Jurisdiction of the Supreme Judicial Council did not depend upon what motivated the informant to place the information on the desk of one of the two opinion makers (i.e the President or the Supreme Judicial Council) who found it to be credible enough to call for an inquiry---Function of the Supreme Judicial Council was to search for the credibility of the information rather than the credibility or motivation of the informant. [p. 191] $M_5$ & $O_5$

(mm) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 209(5)---Reference before the Supreme Judicial Council against a judge of the Superior Courts---Filing of the Reference becoming public news---Such news becoming public would not be enough to vitiate the proceedings before the Supreme Judicial Council. [p. 191] $N_5$

Per Yahya Afridi, J; agreeing with the majority view to the extent of quashing of the Presidential reference against the judge but finding the Constitutional petition filed by the judge under Article 184(3) of the Constitution as not maintainable, and also disagreeing with the majority view regarding directions given to the Federal Board of Revenue for initiating proceedings against the judge's wife and children, and for submitting a report of said proceedings to the Supreme Judicial Council. [Minority view]

(nn) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 188---Original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Art. 184(3) of the Constitution---Scope---Order passed by the Supreme Court under Art. 184(3) of the Constitution was final and not appealable---Only medium of challenge available to a person aggrieved of such an order was the limited jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under review. [p. 193] $P_5$

(oo) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 184(3)---Original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution---Pre-requisites -- Matter of public importance---Meaning and scope---Matter of public importance encompassed any issue affecting the legal rights or liabilities of the public or the community at large, and it was not restricted to an individual or a group of individuals, how so large the group might be. [p. 194] $Q_5$

Anwar Aziz v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2001 SC 49; Abdul Wahab v. HBL 2013 SCMR 1383; Asad Ali v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 1998 SC 161; Miss Benazir Bhutto v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 1988 SC 416 and Pakistan Muslim League (N) through Khawaja Muhammad Asif, M.N.A. and others v. Federation of Pakistan through Secretary Ministry of Interior and others PLD 2007 SC 642 ref.

(pp) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 184(3)---Original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Art. 184(3) of the Constitution---Pre-requisites---Matter of public importance---Scope---Independence of judiciary---Independence of the judiciary with all its legal, social and political implications was a matter of public importance. [p. 195] $R_5$

Asad Ali v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 1998 SC 161; Al-Jehad Trust v. Lahore High Court 2011 SCMR 1688; Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan through Secretary and others PLD 2010 SC 61 ref.

(qq) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 178, 184(3), 209(5)(b) & Third Sched.---Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts (framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Art. 209 (8) of the Constitution), Arts. II, III, V, VI & Preamble---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner-judge before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Maintainability---Whether present petition was maintainable, and whether it involved the enforcement of a Fundamental Right of the petitioner---Reasons for finding present Constitutional petition as not maintainable recorded. [Minority view]

Petitioner was a Judge of the Supreme Court and had assumed the office by taking an oath under the Constitution. The oath declared, inter alia, that the judge would abide by the Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts [framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Article 209 (8) of the Constitution] ('the Code'). On taking an oath, a Judge accepted to assume a constitutional position with all its trappings; be it the privileges and facilities attached therewith or the duties and obligations. Accordingly, where the declaration of his oath commanded him to avoid an act, the sitting Judge was constitutionally obligated under the oath to abstain therefrom. This act of self-restraint by the sitting Judge would not infringe or compromise his fundamental rights but only moderate the exercise of enforcing the same. And thus, once a person took an oath under the Constitution, he by his conduct subjected all rights and privileges available to him under the Constitution and the law, which may be contrary to or not in consonance with the behaviour expected of a sitting Judge, as prescribed under the Code. Consequently, the fundamental rights of a sitting Judge shall remain eclipsed, so far as their enforcement was not in consonance with the terms of his oath. [p. 196] $S_5$ & $T_5$

The Code demanded a Judge to be "cautious and forbearing"; "to keep his conduct in all things, official and private, free from impropriety"; to avoid publicity and "not engage in public controversy"; and most important and relevant to the present matter, "endeavour to avoid, as far as possible, either on his behalf or on behalf of others, in litigation". [p. 197] $U_5$

The subject matter of the present litigation, in pith and substance, revolved around allegations of impropriety. That being so, seeking to enforce the fundamental rights to challenge the very charges against him to be ultra vires, and that too without withstanding the prescribed enquiry would negate the very spirit of the oath taken by the petitioner-judge. [p. 198] $V_5$

Present petition was not maintainable. It starkly lacked one of the essential conditions - enforcement of fundamental rights - for the Supreme Court to invoke its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. Moreso, when the positive exercise of the said jurisdiction by the Supreme Court would in effect thaw the process of accountability of one holding a public office, be it a judge of the Supreme Court. Accordingly, the present petition being bereft of essential constitutional requirements was non-maintainable, and thus, must fail. [p. 198] $W_5$

(rr) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 10-A, 178, 184(3), 209(5)(b) & Preamble---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the judge's tax returns---

Constitutional petitions filed by different Bar Councils, Bar Associations and lawyers ('the petitioners') before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against the judge---Maintainability---Whether the petitions were maintainable---Reasons for finding the present petitions as maintainable recorded.

In essence, present petitions sought the enforcement of the fundamental rights i.e. access to justice and a fair and independent judiciary. These issues were matters of public importance.

For seeking matters of public importance relating to the enforcement of fundamental rights in the original constitutional jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the general petitioner need not be an aggrieved person in the strict sense. And more importantly, the present petitioners, unlike a sitting Judge of the superior court, were not shackled by any legal restrain of a constitutional oath to invoke the original constitutional jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Resultantly, the present petitioners fulfilled the two mandated condition precedents to invoke the constitutional court of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. Present petitions were held to be maintainable. [p. 199] $X_5$

Al-Jehad Trust v. President of Pakistan PLD 2000 SC 84; Suo Motu Action Regarding Eligibility of Chairman and Members of Sindh Public Service Commission 2017 PLC (C.S.) 984; Miss Benazir Bhutto v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 1988 SC 416 and Pakistan Muslim League (N) through Khawaja Muhammad Asif v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2007 SC 642 ref.

(ss) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 48(1), 48(2), 184(3) & 209(5)---Presidential reference before the Supreme Judicial Council---Discretion and independent opinion of the President---Scope---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the judge's tax returns---Constitutional petitions filed by different Bar Councils, Bar Associations and lawyers before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against the judge---Whether the President was bound to act on advice of the Prime Minister in regard to the reference in terms of Art. 48(1) of the Constitution---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded. [Minority view]

Constitutional mandate of the President under Article 209(5) of the Constitution was to form an "opinion", whether misconduct was made out against the Judge, and if so, then a reference was to be sent for an enquiry to the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council'). This decision or for that matter, the "opinion" was to be based on the "information" received from "any source". The "advice" of the Prime Minister when received by the President, would only be an "information" received from a "source", and thus lost its efficacy as an "advice", within the contemplation of clause (1) of Article 48 of the Constitution. In such circumstances, the "advice" of the Prime Minister would then fall within the exception to the general rule, as envisaged under clause (2) of Article 48 of the Constitution; where the President would have to apply his independent mind on the matter and then act accordingly. [p. 202] $A_6$

In the present case based on the complaint of a journalist, a summary was prepared and then moved by the Ministry of Law, and finally placed before the President, with the "advice" of the Prime Minister. The President signed and approved the summary with his handwritten note in terms that reflected, firstly, that the "advice" of the Prime Minister was unconditionally approved by the President; secondly, the approval so made by the President was without his independent application of mind on the "information" contained in the summary regarding the alleged misconduct against the judge; and finally, that, there was no formulation of an "opinion" by the President regarding the sufficiency of the "information" to constitute misconduct against the judge to file a reference. [pp. 200, 201] $Y_5$ & $Z_5$

The decision-making process leading to the President sending a reference to the Council under Article 209(5) deserved careful and thorough deliberation by the President. Given the facts relating to the opinion formed by the President in the present case, it demonstrated grossly negligent attitude lacking any application of mind. Instead of applying his independent mind to the seriously important matter placed before him, the President blindly accepted and followed the "advice" of the Prime Minister to send the reference to the Council. The formation of the "opinion" by the President was muddied by the blatant and uncalled for obedience to the "advice" of the Prime Minister. [p. 203] $B_6$

The President had grossly failed to discharge his constitutional obligations as ordained under Article 209(5) of the Constitution. Since the very foundation of the "opinion" formed by the President was based on the non-exercise of lawful jurisdiction, therefore the 'superstructure' built thereon, the signing and sending of the reference to the Council would lack legal sanction and be without lawful authority, and thus ultra vires of the Constitution. Consequently, the proceedings before the Council in furtherance of the Presidential reference against the judge stood abated. [p. 203] $C_6$

(tt) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 48(1), 48(2), 184(3) & 209(5)---Presidential reference before the Supreme Judicial Council---Information against the judge obtained and disclosed unlawfully---Effect---Information, obtained and disclosed unlawfully, if admitted would fall within the mischief of "information from any source"---Thus, it would remain the discretion of the Supreme Judicial Council to decide whether based on the admitted information, it would suo motu proceed against a sitting Judge or otherwise. [p. 205] $D_6$

(uu) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 14(1), 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Right to privacy---Scope---Surveillance---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the judge's tax returns---Constitutional petitions filed by different Bar Councils, Bar Associations and lawyers ('the petitioners') before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against the judge---Tax and property records of the judge and his family were accessed/ searched to frame the reference against him---Whether such searches amounted to unlawful surveillance---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

Had the information regarding the foreign properties owned by the family members of the judge not been freely and legally accessible, then it would have sufficed to establish the allegation of obtaining the said information through surveillance. The counsel for the Government was able to demonstrate that the information regarding any property in the foreign country (United Kingdom), including the one owned by the family members of the judge could be retrieved or accessed through internet searches. And further, placing on record, a copy of the title of the said foreign properties, pre-dating the complaint against the judge, and that too, from the relevant and competent authority under the laws of the foreign country (United Kingdom) confirmed that the requisite search under the laws of the foreign country (United Kingdom) had already been carried out. Hence, the stance of the petitioners regarding mala fide of the Federal Government did not cross the legal threshold to saddle it with the responsibility of unlawfully obtaining the said information by surveillance. [p. 205] $E_6$

(vv) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001), Ss. 198, 199 & 216(3)(p)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the judge's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by different Bar Councils, Bar Associations and lawyers before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against the judge---Law Minister directed the Chairman, Assets Recovery Unit (ARU), to seek verification of the ownership of the foreign properties from the income tax returns of the judge or his wife---Accordingly Chairman ARU sought confidential information of the judge and his wife from the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) of particulars of the income tax returns filed and maintained under Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("the 2001 Ordinance")---Said information was disclosed by the Chairman FBR to Chairman ARU; and finally, the said confidential information was further passed on by Chairman ARU to the Law Minister and was then made the basis for the Presidential reference---Question as to whether disclosure of such confidential information was lawful, and whether the exception under S.216(3)(p) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 applied to the judge and his wife---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded.

Income Tax Ordinance, 2001("the 2001 Ordinance") expressly provided for confidentiality of information recorded in the income tax returns of an assessee. The income tax officials, who were the custodian of the said information, were commanded under the law to jealously guard the same, and in case of any breach thereof, the offender was to face penal consequences under the Ordinance. However, this confidentiality of information would in no way prevent the competent income tax officials to seek from the assessee, the source of funds for the acquisition of any assets. In case, the competent income tax official was not satisfied with the explanation for the source of funds, he could departmentally proceed against the assessee for non-declaration and misdeclaration of assets under the enabling provisions of the 2001 Ordinance. [pp. 206, 207] $F_6$ & $G_6$

Law Minister and the Chairman ARU lacked the mandate to initiate an enquiry against a sitting Judge of the Supreme Court, as the legal domain to do so rested solely with the Supreme Judicial Council, and none other. Even otherwise, the information relating to income tax returns of the judge's wife would not fall within the scope of the purported enquiry of a "public servant" envisaged under section 216(3)(p) of the 2001 Ordinance. The particulars of the wife's income tax returns would remain immune from such permissible disclosures and thus retain its confidentiality. The legal position would have been otherwise, had the wife consented to allow such disclosure, which she did not or had the competent tax authorities initiated proceedings against her under the 2001 Ordinance, which they never did. [p. 209] $I_6$

In the present case, once the income tax officials had information regarding the alleged undeclared assets of the judge's wife, they despite having ample authority to legally proceed against her under the 2001 Ordinance, opted to proceed unlawfully by disclosing confidential information to unauthorized persons. Thus, prima facie, keeping in view the chain of directions emanating from the Law Minister leading to the unlawful disclosures of confidential information by the income tax officials, all persons at different rungs of the governmental hierarchy, who were part of this unlawful disclosure of confidential information, had exposed themselves to penal prosecution for commission of offences under section 198 read with section 199 and section 216 (1) of the Ordinance. The direction of the Law Minister and the Chairman ARU to solicit, obtain and receive, confidential information regarding the income tax returns of the judge and his wife, prima facia, exposed them to criminal prosecution for having committed an offence under section 199 read with sections 198 and 216(1) of the 2001 Ordinance. Similarly, the fact that the then Chairman FBR and the income tax officials having not refused the illegal directions of the Law Minister and Chairman ARU, and passing on confidential information to them, prima facie, exposed them not only to departmental action but also to penal consequences under section 198 read with section 216(1) of the 2001 Ordinance. Accordingly, the present Chairman, FBR should ensure that the entire record of the present case was placed before the FBR to proceed under the law, against the Law Minister, the Chairman ARU, the then Chairman, FBR and all the concerned income tax officers qua their role in ordering to inquire into, solicit, disclose and receive confidential information relating to the income tax returns of the judge and his wife. [Minority view] [pp. 207, 210] $H_6$ & $L_6$

Since the entire process leading to the filing of the Presidential reference was in violation of the law and the Constitution, the sending of the same to the Supreme Judicial Council lacked legal sanction and was without lawful authority, and thus ultra vires of the Constitution. Consequently, the proceedings before the Supreme Judicial Council in furtherance of the Presidential reference against the judge stood abated. [p. 211] $M_6$

Any directions by the Supreme Court to the tax authorities with specific time spans and setting the procedure for the income tax officials to proceed against the judge's wife, would amount to parallel legislation, when the 2001 Ordinance provided a framework for all such matters. More so, when such directions had been made against a person who was not a party to the present petitions. In the circumstances, any such directions of the Supreme Court would amount to prosecute her, and that too without providing her with an effective opportunity of hearing. [Minority view] [p. 209] $J_6$

(ww) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 248---Constitutional office holders---Illegal acts---Immunity from prosecution----Scope---No protection was extended to holders of constitutional office from prosecution for their illegal acts. [p. 209] $K_6$

Ch. Zahur Ilahi's case PLD 1975 SC 383; Aman Ullah Khan's case PLD 1990 SC 1092; Nawabzada Muhammad Umar Khan's case 1992 SCMR 2450; Baz Muhammad Kakar v. Federation of Pakistan through Ministry of Law and Justice, Islamabad PLD 2012 SC 870 and Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan through Secretary and others PLD 2010 SC 61 ref.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J; agreeing with the majority view to the extent of quashing of the Presidential reference against the judge but with his own views and also disagreeing with the majority view regarding directions given to the Federal Board of Revenue for initiating proceedings against the judge's wife and children, and for submitting a report of said proceedings to the Supreme Judicial Council. [Minority view]

(xx) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3), 209(5) & 211---Presidential reference against a judge of the Superior Court sent to the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council')---Bar of jurisdiction under Art. 211 of the Constitution---Scope and purpose.

A Presidential reference competently filed by the President against a constitutional court judge should not ordinarily be made subject to scrutiny in judicial review by any Constitutional Court including the Supreme Court, unless the extraordinary circumstances demanded such intervention in the interest of justice and fair play. [p. 218] $P_6$

Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan PLD 2010 SC 61 ref.

The proceedings before the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council'), its report to the President and the removal of the judge by the President under Article 209 could not be called in question in any court of law under Article 211 of the Constitution, unless the removal of the judge was without jurisdiction, mala fide or coram non judice. A limited judicial review on said three grounds was not affected by Article 211, as no ouster clause could keep the actions taken without jurisdiction, mala fide or coram non judice, beyond the scrutiny of the constitutional courts. Article 211 of the Constitution gave immunity to proceedings before the Council till the removal of the judge by the President. However, proceedings and steps taken before the matter landed before the Council escape the immunity under Article 211. [p. 217] $N_6$

Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan PLD 2010 SC 61 ref.

All acts preceding the proceedings before the Council were not hit by the ouster clause of Article 211. They were, therefore, subject to standard judicial review like any other executive or administrative act, on the grounds of substantive illegality, procedural impropriety and decisional irrationality. [p. 218] $O_6$

Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan PLD 2010 SC 61 ref.

(yy) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 209(5) ---Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council')---Complaint against judge of the Superior Courts---Council was the only constitutional forum available to inquire into the conduct or capacity of a constitutional court judge.

Only constitutional forum available to inquire into the conduct or capacity of a constitutional court judge was the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council'). So the Government, its Ministries, Divisions, Departments or Attached Departments and their officers were not authorized to entertain any complaint against a constitutional court judge, let alone proceed and collect evidence to supplement the complaint. They could at best return the complaint to the complainant and guide him to approach the constitutional forums under Article 209 of the Constitution. [p. 218] $Q_6$

Where any Ministry, Division, Attached Department or Department of the Government, in the course of its normal business, discovered some adverse information against a constitutional court judge that may attract impeachable misconduct, in addition to the legal proceedings under the relevant law, the concerned Department etc., in such situation, should at first proceed against the constitutional court judge on the basis of the adverse information in accordance with the law under which it functioned. For example, if it was the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) that discovered such an information, it could proceed against the judge under the tax laws and the judge would have a right to defend himself in accordance with law. Only when these proceedings came to a close after exhausting all the legal and judicial avenues and it was finally held that the judge had violated the law, the FBR may, in the interest of judicial accountability, send this information to the Federal Government through the Division with which it was attached under the Rules of Business, 1973 ("ROB") for information and necessary action. It would then finally rest with the Federal Government i.e., the Cabinet, to decide if the violation of law amounted to impeachable misconduct and whether the Federal Government should proceed against the constitutional court judge and place the "information" before the President. Such process found its justification from the foundational constitutional principles like independence of judiciary, rule of law and parliamentary democracy. [p. 219] $R_6$

(zz) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Rules of Business, 1973, R. 14 ---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Assets Recovery Unit purportedly established vide a Cabinet notification coordinated the collection of evidence against the petitioner-judge---Question as to whether the ARU could have entertained and investigated the complaint against the petitioner-judge---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded. [Minority view]

The complainant could only have approached the constitutional forums provided under Article 209(5) of the Constitution and could not have filed the complaint before any other office or authority. Therefore, the very act of approaching the Assets Recovery Unit (ARU) was per se unconstitutional and illegal. It was to be noted with concern and suspicion that how did the complainant, a citizen of the country, planned on filing the complaint against a constitutional court judge before the ARU, which had no public interface or the legal mandate to deal with such a matter and had earlier never conducted any inquiry for the accountability of a constitutional court judge. There was surprisingly nothing on the record to show how the complainant found out about ARU. The ARU was not a Ministry or Division of any Ministry of the Federal Government, or an Attached Department, neither was it a statutory authority nor had the notification of its establishment been published in the official gazette for public information. The ARU, therefore, for all practical purposes did not legally exist for the world outside the Prime Minister's Office. However, the complainant instead of approaching the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council'), which would have ordinarily come to the mind of a citizen, particularly in view of the publicly known recent removal of a High Court Judge by the President on the recommendation of the Council, approached the ARU for the accountability of judges. This looked more odd especially when the complainant claimed to be a journalist. Such an unusual step by the complainant raised eyebrows about the credibility of the complaint and the bona fide of the complainant. [p. 219] $S_6$

The Chairman, ARU on receiving the complaint from the complainant acted with surprising agility and activated his team to collect evidence of the alleged foreign properties. The ARU, which was to work under the Cabinet Division as per decision of the Cabinet, did not make any formal request to the Law and Justice Division through the Secretary, Cabinet Division for consultation on the matter in accordance with Rule 14 of the Rules of Business, 1973 ('the ROB'), despite noting in minutes of its meeting held on 15-04-2019 that the matter was sensitive as it related to the Judges of the Superior Judiciary. The informal discussion and consultation made by the Chairman and Members of the ARU with the Law Minister on 16-04-2019, and the oral advice of the Law Minister in that discussion carried no value in the eyes of law. The Law Minister, who was a distinguished constitutional lawyer, also did not realize the importance of his advice, even oral, and gave a "go ahead" to the ARU for inquiring into the veracity of the allegations made in the complaint against judges of the constitutional courts. The Chairman, ARU who was also a Barrister-at-law, and not a layman, knew well that an oral advice of the Law Minister was nothing in the eyes of law and he should have ascertained his legal authority to inquire into the allegations made against Judges of Constitutional Courts, before initiating the inquiry into the allegations made in the complaint. But both of them paid no heed to the constitutional mandate of Article 209 of the Constitution, and initiated the process of inquiring into the allegations. The Presidential reference against the petitioner judge was quashed, and as a result the proceedings, including the show cause notice, before the Supreme Judicial Council stood abated. [p. 224] $Y_6$

(aaa) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 82(2), 84, 99(3), 184(3), 209(5)(b) & 240(a)---Rules of Business, 1973, Rr. 2(1)(ii), 4(4), 4(5), 16(1)(m) & Sched. III---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Assets Recovery Unit purportedly established vide a Cabinet notification coordinated the collection of evidence against the petitioner-judge---Question as to what was the legal and budgetary status of the Assets Recovery Unit and that of its Chairman---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded. [Minority view]

The Assets Recovery Unit (ARU) was purportedly established by the Cabinet vide notification dated 06-11-2018. The Federation had defended the establishment of the ARU by the Cabinet, by referring to the provisions of Rules 4(5) and 16(1)(m) of the Rules of Business, 1973 ('the ROB'). The Federation argued that Rule 4(5) empowered the Prime Minister to establish agencies and offices for conducting the business of the Federal Government, and under Rule (16)(1)(m) the Cabinet had power to decide any matter referred to it by the Prime Minister, and that the Prime Minister referred the matter of establishing the ARU to the Cabinet, and the Cabinet thus competently approved the establishment of the ARU. [p. 220] $T_6$

Bare reading of the provisions of Rule 4(5) of the ROB made it clear that the said Rule did not empower the Prime Minister to establish new agencies or offices; it simply authorized him to refer the business of the Government to already established agencies and offices under the law. The word "determine" had been used in the Rule in the context of allocation or entrustment of the business of Government and not for the power to establish a new agency or office. In the absence of any power to establish a new agency or office, reference of the matter to the Cabinet under Rule 16(1)(m) by the Prime Minister was inconsequential, as the Cabinet also did not enjoy any such power. The scope of the ROB could not extend to creation of agencies or offices to perform functions in relation to any matter to which the executive authority of the Federation extended. Such agencies or offices could be established only by or under some law enacted by the Parliament on the subject over which it had the legislative power under the Constitution. The creation of the ARU by the Cabinet, could not be sustained treating it as an Attached Department of the Cabinet Division also. The Departments that had been declared as Attached Departments to particular Divisions were created by or under the law, and not by the Federal Government. The Federal Government, as per Rules 2(1)(ii) and 4(4) of ROB, could only declare them attached with a particular Division, but could not create them. [p. 220] $U_6$

The Terms of Reference (TORs) of the ARU defined its role and powers. The ARU did not pass as a coordinating agency or office under its TORs for the following reasons: first, as per its notification it was established as an entity separate from the Departments whose officials had been made its Members and also addressed as such in its TORs; second, there was no mention of its coordinating role in the TORs; third, the powers and functions had been prescribed in the TORs as that of the ARU, and not of its Members; and fourth, but most importantly, the ARU was conferred such wide and extensive powers which even its Members did not enjoy under the laws of their parent institutions, e.g., it was empowered to request any intelligence agency under the Government for assistance in obtaining any information on any subject within and outside the country, and authorized to seek assistance and information from law enforcement agencies and other Government departments, including the information relating to bank accounts, companies record, revenue record, travel record, NADRA record etc. With such intrusive investigative powers, the ARU could not be said to be an innocuous coordinating agency, office or unit. The establishment of the ARU was, therefore, absolutely without lawful authority. In the absence of any legal status of the ARU, its Chairman and Members also had no legal position or status. [p. 221] $V_6$

The appointment of the Chairman, ARU by the Cabinet was not backed by any law including any rule of the ROB. Even otherwise, the ROB made under Article 99(3) of the Constitution could not provide for creation of posts in connection with the affairs of the Federation. Such power must be conferred by some law enacted under Article 240(a) of the Constitution. Article 99(3) empowered the Federal Government to make rules only on two subjects: firstly, for the allocation of the business of the Federal Government to its different components, i.e., the Ministries; and secondly, for the transaction of that business. The Rules made under such power could regulate the procedural modalities of allocation and transaction of the business, i.e., by which Ministry or Division of a Ministry and how a matter was to be taken up and dealt with; such Rules could not grant substantive power to create posts in connection with the affairs of the Federation. The expression "allocation and transaction" of the business did not by any stretch of imagination imply such power. Thus, the appointment of the Chairman, ARU by the Cabinet was without lawful authority. [p. 222] $X_6$

Mustafa Impex v. Government of Pakistan PLD 2016 SC 808 ref.

Funds could be allocated for any Government activity only by the National Assembly in the Annual Budget Grants under Article 82(2) of the Constitution or supplementary and excess budget grants under Article 84 of the Constitution. The Annual Budget Statements for the relevant financial years 2018-19 and 2019-20 did not mention the allocation of any budget for the expenditure of ARU. The amounts as approved in the budget passed by the National Assembly could be utilized only for the purpose specified in the budget statement. Any re-appropriation of funds or their utilization for some other purpose was not justified under the Constitution; for this purpose, the supplementary budget statement had to be placed before the National Assembly following the procedure provided in Article 84 of the Constitution. Persons making the unauthorized expenditure from the Federal Consolidated Fund were personally responsible for that expenditure. The ARU, therefore, had no budgetary support and therefore did not pass for an executive authority. In such background, role of the ARU became more suspicious and raised the questions: who funded the investigation and the transnational surveillance of the petitioner judge; who paid for the law expert of the ARU; who paid for collecting information from the land registry of the foreign country and websites, which only provided access to information after payment; and who was funding the entire operation. These unanswered questions cast doubts on the bona fides of the Government and the Prime Minister, who was the Chief Executive of the Federation. The Presidential reference against the petitioner judge was quashed, and as a result the proceedings, including the show cause notice, before the Supreme Judicial Council stood abated. [p. 222] $W_6$

Action Against Distribution of Development Funds PLD 2014 SC 131; Mustafa Impex v. Government of Pakistan PLD 2016 SC 808 and Ram Jawaya v. State of Punjab AIR 1955 SC 549 ref.

(bbb) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 9, 14(1), 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---National Database and Registration Authority Ordinance (VIII of 2000), S. 28---Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001), S. 216---Government Servants (Conduct) Rules, 1964, R. 18---Investigation for Fair Trial Act (I of 2013), S.35---Right to privacy---Scope---Surveillance---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Property records and information relating to the petitioner-judge and his family were accessed/searched by the Assets Recovery Unit using different sources, including websites, to frame the reference against the petitioner---Question as to whether the information obtained through such searches was breach of the petitioner's and his family's right to privacy, dignity and personal liberty enshrined in the Constitution and amounted to covert surveillance---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded. [Minority view]

Chairman and legal expert of the Assets Recovery Unit (ARU) asserted that the details of those residing in any immovable property in the foreign country (United Kingdom) could be accessed through open source websites; that once the address was located, the owner of that immovable property could be found through open source such as the land registry website. However, it was important to note that said websites were not free or open source websites. To access the information from the websites, an account with username and password needed to be created, payment was to be made by debit/credit card, the website acknowledged the payment of charges by email, and sent the requested information by email. The Federation in defence did not produce any record of the searches made on the said websites: What and how many addresses were found and under whose names? Who created the account? Who made the payment of charges? What were the payment or credit card details? Who received the acknowledgement of payment and the requested information and at whose email address? More importantly, there was no evidence of what information was received that was allegedly used for searching on the land registry website. A paid source, which required registration and payment before allowing access to information, was not an open source as claimed by the Federation. It showed that no such search was conducted for tracing the properties through those websites; rather the details of the properties were gathered through covert surveillance of the petitioner judge and his family. Covert surveillance and interception were offensively intrusive investigative tools only available to intelligence agencies in the country. [p. 227] $Z_6$

The omission of the Federation and of the Chairman and legal expert, ARU to produce the website record as to procuring the address of the foreign properties of the spouse and children of the petitioner judge gave rise to a presumption that the legal expert, ARU never searched the addresses of the properties through the website. Even otherwise, the Chairman and legal expert, ARU in their concise statement made a general statement that an immovable property could be located through open source websites, but they did not make any specific and categorical statement therein that the foreign properties of the family of the petitioner judge were located by that method. [p. 227] $A_7$

Surveillance was permitted in the limited area of anti-state or terrorist activities and that too under judicial and executive oversight. Outside such limited area, surveillance was constitutionally prohibited. Intelligence agencies did not enjoy a free hand in conducting surveillance but are subject to strict rules of compliance and oversight by the court. The fact that the ARU did not possess the resources or the technical capacity to carry out surveillance of the petitioner and his family and the interception of their communications, gave credence to the stance of the petitioner that the surveillance was carried out in connivance and in collaboration with the intelligence agencies. The possibility of such happening, therefore, could not be ruled out in the absence of any other evidence furnished by ARU or the Law Minister. It was but obvious that in the present case the information about the addresses of properties were obtained through no other means but through covert surveillance and interception of the intelligence agencies which gathered the information from the private zone of privacy enjoyed by the petitioner judge and his family, without any authorization of law and by trampling over the constitutional guarantees of privacy, personal freedom and dignity. The issue of unlawful surveillance and invasion of privacy of the petitioner judge and his family was far more critical and graver than the information procured by the ARU. It was a naked threat to personal liberty, privacy and dignity guaranteed to the citizens under the Constitution. [pp. 228, 230, 233] $B_7$, $E_7$ & $J_7$

Employees of National Database and Registration Authority (NADRA), who were legally enjoined under section 28 of the National Database and Registration Authority Ordinance, 2000 not to communicate to any person any information acquired by them in the course of their employment, committed violation of that command of the law by making compliance with the command of the Chairman, ARU in communicating to the Chairman and other Members of the ARU the NADRA record relating to the petitioner and his family. Likewise, Member of the ARU from Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) committed violation of section 216 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 by disclosing the tax records of the petitioner and his spouse to the Chairman and other Members of the ARU. While Member of the ARU from the Federal Investigation Agency (FIA) breached Rule 18 of the Government Servants (Conduct) Rules, 1964 by making unauthorized communication of the official documents and information as to the passport/visa record and travelling history of the petitioner and his family. The Chairman and Legal Expert, ARU procured the information regarding the foreign properties by offending the fundamental rights of personal liberty, privacy and dignity of the petitioner and his family by procuring personal information regarding the foreign properties without the sanction of any law through covert surveillance and interception, and also by violating the confidentiality provisions of the National Database and Registration Authority Ordinance, 2000 and the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001. These actions of the Chairman and legal expert of ARU also attracted criminal liability under section 35 of Investigation for Fair Trial Act, 2013. For these illegal actions, the authorities concerned must initiate criminal and disciplinary proceedings against the Chairman, legal expert and Members of the ARU, as well as, the defaulting officials of FBR and NADRA under their respective laws. [pp. 236, 237, 240] $M_7$, $N_7$, $O_7$ & $R_8$

The admission and reliance on the material (evidence) illegally collected by the ARU without any enabling law empowering it to do so, in flagrant violation of the fundamental rights of the petitioner and his family was inadmissible, therefore, the Law Minister and Prime Minister could not have relied and acted upon it, for making the "summary" and advising the President. [pp. 240, 241] $R_7$ & $S_7$

The complainant journalist also appeared before the Court but did not explain his source of information regarding the foreign properties belonging to the petitioner's family. The complainant appeared to be a proxy, who could not have discovered the addresses of the foreign properties. After putting together, the facts relating to the information given by the complainant it was easy to discern that the complainant was fed the information to generate the complaint. Whoever fed him the information were the real actors of the present case. The Presidential reference against the petitioner judge was quashed, and as a result the proceedings, including the show cause notice, before the Supreme Judicial Council stood abated. [p. 229] $C_7$ & $D_7$

(ccc) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 9, 14(1) & 25---Right to privacy---Scope---Illegal surveillance by State agencies, impact of---Privacy affirmed the agency and autonomy of the individual and the right of every person to have the freedom and liberty to live a life of dignity---Privacy required that all information about a person was fundamentally his own, only for him to communicate or retain for himself---Privacy attached to the person and not to the place where it was associated---Intrusion by the State into the sanctum of personal space, other than for a larger public purpose, was violative of the constitutional guarantees---Right to privacy was deeply intertwined with the right to life, right to personal liberty and right to dignity---Illegal and illegitimate surveillance, by both State and private actors, had the impact of intrusion into the private lives of citizens, not only violating their constitutional rights but also intruding on the very personhood, privacy and personal liberty of those surveilled---Surveillance had disparate impact, violating principles of non-discrimination and equality as enshrined in the Constitution---Illegally procured private information amassed by the agencies could be used to manipulate and blackmail people for promoting political agendas; this crippled human security and dismantled democracy, lowering it slowly into an abyss of totalitarianism---Concept of privacy and social impact of illegal surveillance explained.

[pp. 230, 231, 232, 235] $F_7$, $G_7$, $H_7$, $I_7$ & $K_7$

Michael C. James, A Comparative Analysis of the Right to Privacy in the United States, Canada and Europe, Connecticut Journal of International Law, p.261, Vol. 29, Issue 2, (Spring 2014); John Stuart Mill, On Liberty, Batoche Books, p.13, (1859); [5 Coke 91: 1 Sm LC (13th Edn.) 104 at p. 105]; Warren and Brandeis, The Right to Privacy, Harvard Law Review, p. 193, (1890), Vol. 4, No. 5; 277 U.S.438, 478 (1928); Lawrence Lessig, Code and Other Laws of Cyberspace, p.153-55 (1999); Artavia Murillo ET AL. ("In Vitro Fertilization") v. Costa Rica (2012), Inter-Am. Ct. H.R. (Ser.C) No.257; Benazir Bhutto v. President of Pakistan PLD 1998 SC 388 and Jeffrey Rosen, The Unwanted Gaze: The Destruction of Privacy in America (2000) ref.

(ddd) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 9 & 14(1)---Right to personal liberty and privacy---Scope---Duty of State institutions/authorities with respect to personal information of citizens.

Rights to personal liberty and privacy under Articles 9 and 14 of the Constitution imposed a constitutional obligation on State authorities to protect the privacy and personal freedom of the citizens unless the law expressly authorized them to do otherwise in exceptional circumstances. In the absence of any law to the contrary, the rights to privacy and personal freedom became absolute and stood to protect the privacy and personal freedom of the citizen. No Government institution was to disclose the personal information of any citizen unless the law authorized the institution to do so. In the absence of any specific law, the umbrella of constitutional guarantees would come to cover and protect the citizen.

[p. 236] $L_7$

(eee) Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984)---

----Preamble---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 14(1)---Illegally collected evidence, admissibility of---Principles regarding the admission or exclusion of evidence obtained in violation of the constitutional rights. [Minority view]

The Irish Supreme Court in the case DPP v. JC [2015] IESC 31 laid down the following principles with regard to the admission or exclusion of the evidence obtained in violation of the constitutional rights, in order to balance the legitimate competing public interests: (i) The onus was on the prosecution to establish the admissibility of all evidence; (ii) If a claim was raised that evidence was obtained in breach of constitutional rights, the onus was on the prosecution to establish either that there was no unconstitutionality, or that despite any interference with constitutional rights the evidence should still be admitted; (iii) Where evidence was obtained in deliberate and conscious violation of constitutional rights, it should be excluded except in exceptional circumstances; (iv) Where evidence was taken in breach of constitutional rights, there was a presumption in favour of exclusion, which could be rebutted by evidence that the breach of rights was either inadvertent or derived from subsequent legal developments; and (v) Whether or not a breach of constitutional rights was deliberate and conscious required analysis of the conduct or state of mind of the individual who actually gathered the evidence, as well as, any senior official or officials within the investigating or enforcement authority concerned who was involved either in that decision or in decisions of that type generally or in putting in place policies concerning evidence-gathering of the type concerned. [p. 239] $P_7$

Neil M. Richards, The Dangers of Surveillance, Harvard Law Review, p.1935, Vol.126, (2013); [2006] 2 AC 221; [1970] HCA 21; [1978] HCA 22; 116 U.S. 616 (1886); 367 US 643 (1961) and [2015] IESC 31 ref.

Above stated principles as to inadmissibility of the illegally collected evidence had developed mostly in the cases where there was a law that regulated a constitutional right, but that law was not followed or was violated in the process of collecting evidence. The courts have held such evidence to be generally inadmissible, with few exceptions, mainly with the reason that the admission of such evidence would compromise the integrity of the judicial process and bring the administration of justice into disrepute. There was no hindrance in adopting the said principles in our jurisdiction. [p. 240] $Q_7$

(fff) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 48(1), 48(2), 184(3) & 209(5)---Rules of Business, Sched. V-B, Entry No. 35---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Prime Minister placing information/advice before the President with regard to misconduct of a judge---Independent opinion of the President---Scope---Entry 35 in Sched. V-B to the Rules of Business, 1973---Ultra vires the Constitution---Whether under Art. 209(5) of the Constitution, the President was to form his personal "opinion" or to act on the "advice" of the Cabinet or the Prime Minister as envisaged under Article 48(1) of the Constitution---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded. [Minority view]

The President was to examine the "information" placed before him under Article 209(5) as Head of State, acting as an arbiter between the two branches of the State, discharging his function as a person representing the unity of the Republic. Personal opinion of the President under Article 209(5) actualized the non-partisan role of the President and provided a check on any partisan adventurism by the Government of the day against the judiciary. If the President was just a rubber stamp acting on the advice of the Cabinet, a hostile Government could, theoretically, file references against a number of judges of the constitutional courts, resulting in initiation of inquiries against all of them. The "information" placed before the President under Article 209(5) was to be processed into a reference only if the President formed an opinion that the information made out a case for inquiry against the judge. [p. 244] $T_7$ & $U_7$

While the Constitution vested the President with the power to form an "opinion", it was difficult to imagine that this power was to be exercised by him in a mindless and mechanical manner, thus reducing him to just a rubber-stamp, who upon receiving information was to simply direct the Council to inquire into the conduct of a constitutional court judge. [p. 245] $V_7$

Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan PLD 2010 SC 61, paras 107 and 196 ref.

Entry 35 in Schedule V-B to the Rules of Business, 1973 that provided that President was to act on advice of the Prime Minister for making a reference to the Supreme Judicial Council under Article 209(5) of the Constitution was, therefore, ultra vires the Constitution. [p. 246] $W_7$

In the present case, the President did not apply his mind and form his own opinion on the "information" received; he simply approved the advice of the Prime Minister and signed the draft

Reference submitted with that advice. The formation of opinion and the direction to the Supreme Judicial Council to hold an inquiry was, therefore, not that of the President; both these acts were made without jurisdiction and were coram non judice, and thus unconstitutional and of no legal effect. [p. 246] $X_7$

(ggg) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts.184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001), Ss. 111, 114, 116(1)(b), 116A & 120(3)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns (wealth statement)---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Whether petitioner-judge was obliged under S.116(1)(b) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 to declare the assets and liabilities of his spouse and children in his wealth statement---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded. [Minority view]

Section 116(1), of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 (the 2001 Ordinance') simply provided for issuance of notice to a taxpayer for filing the wealth tax statement or wealth reconciliation statement along with the income tax return and provided for particulars to be included in such a statement. In case a taxpayer had already filed the said statements along with his return, section 116(1) appeared to have no relevance. It was not the case of the Federation that the petitioner failed to file the wealth tax statement or wealth reconciliation statement. In case the said statements were deficient or incorrect, the tax department could issue notice to the taxpayer under section 120(3) and consider the case in the light of Section 111 of the 2001 Ordinance. No such notice or proceedings were initiated by the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) against the petitioner. Directly leveling allegation of violation of section 116(1)(b) against the petitioner in such background was misconceived besides being premature. [p. 247] $Y_7$

One foreign property was purchased by the spouse of the petitioner in the year 2004, before his elevation to the Bench of the High Court in 2009; this property was therefore completely irrelevant for forming opinion of misconduct and making the reference against the petitioner. The other two foreign properties were acquired by the spouse and children of the petitioner in the year 2013, after his said elevation; they were, therefore, to be declared in the tax year 2013 by the petitioner if there was any legal obligation on him, at that time, to do so. The children of the petitioner were not minors in the year 2013; therefore, no question as to his obligation to declare their assets arose under section 116(1)(b). The current dispute related to his alleged obligation to declare the assets of his spouse only. Therefore, the question was whether the petitioner was under any legal obligation to declare the foreign assets of his spouse in his wealth statement along with his tax returns filed in the tax year 2013. The simple and straightforward answer as per FBR's own interpretation that was in vogue in 2013 was that he was not. The FBR, in the wealth statement form prescribed for the tax year 2013, required a taxpayer to declare the assets of his or her spouse if he or she had not filed income-tax return and wealth statement independently. It was an admitted fact that the spouse of the petitioner had filed her income-tax return and wealth statement independently, in the year 2013. It, therefore, appeared that there was no legal obligation on the petitioner to declare the assets of his spouse in his wealth statement as per the requirement of the FBR prevailing in the year 2013. [pp. 248, 249] $Z_7$ & $B_8$

PLD 2017 SC 265 ref.

The FBR's second interpretation expressed in the form prescribed for the tax year 2015 was that a taxpayer was required to declare only those assets of his or her spouse which had been acquired by funds provided by that taxpayer. There was neither any allegation in, nor was any material annexed with, the "summary" initiated for forming the opinion of misconduct against the petitioner that the funds for purchase of the foreign assets were provided by the petitioner to his spouse. No opinion of misconduct against the petitioner, thus, could have been made on the basis of these two departmental interpretations of the provisions of section 116(1)(b) of the 2001 Ordinance. [p. 248] $A_8$

In terms of the scheme envisaged in the 2001 Ordinance, once an asset was claimed by a person to have been sourced by him or her and, more so, such asset was also declared in the statutory declaration/wealth statement by that person, then only that person could be questioned and required to explain the source of acquiring such asset by the tax authorities. In the event that person failed to properly explain the source, an addition could be made in his or her income and that added income was taxed accordingly. Under no circumstances, any other person could be made directly or indirectly part of such proceedings. Thus, no opinion of misconduct against the petitioner could have been formed on the basis of even such interpretation of the provisions of section 116(1)(b) of the 2001 Ordinance. [p. 250] $C_8$

Another interpretation of section 116(1) of the 2001 Ordinance suggested by the Federation was that every individual resident taxpayer was to mention the assets of his or her spouse in the wealth statement irrespective of the fact that the latter was or was not his or her "dependent". Section 114 of the 2001 Ordinance required that the tax return for any tax year had to be accompanied by the wealth statement required under section 116. In case a wealth statement was not filed or was deficient, the income tax return filed was not considered complete. In case of any deficiency, the Commissioner, FBR was empowered to issue a notice to the taxpayer under section 120(3), informing the deficiency and providing him time to rectify it. If it was cured during the given time, the tax return was considered complete and accepted. Therefore, if the Commissioner, FBR had been of the view, as per the interpretation suggested by the Federation, that the petitioner was under legal obligation to declare the assets acquired by his spouse in the year 2013, in his wealth statement filed with tax return of 2013, he should have issued notice to the petitioner specifying the defect and providing him time to rectify it. The petitioner, in that case, could have defended that notice on all legal grounds available to him including the interpretation proposed by him as well as the interpretations put to the provisions of section 116(1)(b) by the FBR itself in the forms prescribed for wealth statement. No such notice, however, was issued to the petitioner. [p. 250] $D_8$

It was also important to highlight that Section 116A of the 2001 Ordinance which required a resident individual taxpayer to furnish statement of foreign assets, was inserted in the 2001 Ordinance in the year 2018 by the Finance Act, 2018. This amendment made in the year 2018 prima facie showed that there was earlier no obligation on a resident individual taxpayer to furnish such statement of even his own foreign assets, much less the foreign assets of his spouse and children. The Presidential reference against the petitioner judge was quashed, and as a result the proceedings, including the show cause notice, before the Supreme Judicial Council stood abated. [p. 251] $E_8$

(hhh)Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 12, 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Anti-Money Laundering Act (VII of 2010), Sched., section XIIA---Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001), Ss. 192, 192A, 194 & 199---Foreign Exchange Regulation Act (VII of 1947) Ss. 4 & 5---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Whether the petitioner violated any provisions of Anti-Money Laundering Act, 2010 or the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded. [Minority view]

The Federation argued that being a case of 'concealed income', the case against the petitioner-judge also fell under the Anti-Money Laundering Act, 2019 (AMLA) by referring to sections 192, 192A, 194 and 199 of Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('the 2001 Ordinance') mentioned in in section XIIA of the Schedule to the AMLA. The said sections in the Schedule of AMLA were inserted vide Notification

No. SRO 425(I)/2016 dated 14-05-2016 through which offences under sections 192, 192A, 194 and 199 of the 2001 Ordinance were listed as "predicate offences" for the purposes of invocation of the AMLA. In the present case, admittedly all three foreign properties were acquired prior to 14-05-2016; therefore, the AMLA was not applicable at all. Furthermore, principle of prohibiting retrospective punishment was a guaranteed fundamental right under Article 12 of the Constitution. Even otherwise, it was clear that the Legislature had put a precondition that 'tax sought to be evaded is ten million rupees or more' in all the four said sections of 2001 Ordinance mentioned in AMLA. Thus, for the invocation of the AMLA the law presupposed conclusion of proceedings under the relevant provisions of the 2001 Ordinance to determine the said threshold and that too in relation to tax liability for the period on or after 14-05-2016. No such determination had taken place in the present case; hence, there was no application of the AMLA. [p. 251] $F_8$

The Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947 (FERA) provided for regulation of payments and dealings in foreign exchange and securities, and the import and export of currency and bullion. Sections 4 and 5 of the FERA provided that no one could deal in foreign exchange except through an authorized dealer and imposed restrictions on transfer of money outside Pakistan. There was no evidence on the record that established or even prima facie showed any violation of the FERA against the petitioner. The Federation pointed out no violation of the FERA, even during the arguments. The Presidential reference against the petitioner judge was quashed, and as a result the proceedings, including the show cause notice, before the Supreme Judicial Council stood abated. [p. 252] $G_8$

(iii) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 209(5)(b) & 209(8)---Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts (framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Article 209 (8) of the Constitution), Preamble---Reference against a judge of the Superior Court on grounds of 'misconduct'---Impeachable misconduct---Meaning. [Minority view]

Impeachable misconduct was when there was a violation of law or violation of the Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts (framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Article 209(8) of the Constitution) ['the Code'] that was so grave that it ruptured judicial integrity, tarnished public confidence and pulled down legitimacy of the judicial institution. Short of this, it might be misconduct but not impeachable misconduct. It was commonsensical that not every infraction led to removal of a constitutional court judge or constituted impeachable misconduct. The best test was to see if the judicial integrity of a judge had been undermined resulting in lowering the public confidence and trust in the judiciary, thus impairing impartiality and legitimacy of the judicial institution. [p. 254] $H_8$

(jjj) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 209(8)---Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts (framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Art. 209(8) of the Constitution), Preamble---Standards under the said Code extended to the judge and judge alone---Said Code had no jurisdiction over or concern with the family, relatives and friends of the judge---Judge could not be made vicariously liable for the conduct of his family. [Minority view]

Judicial integrity and the Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts (framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Article 209(8) of the Constitution) ['the Code'] were judge specific, largely covering judicial conduct and partly his personal behavior. The standards under the Code extended to the judge and judge alone. The Code had no jurisdiction over or concern with the family, relatives and friends of the judge. [p. 254] $I_8$

The Code was a judge specific document and did not extend to family members and in no event, held a judge vicariously responsible for the conduct of his family - his spouse and children - who were independent, natural and legal persons in their own right and could do whatever they wanted. "Conduct" and "misconduct" were personal to a judge under the Code. Like any other citizen, a judge could not be held accountable for the conduct of someone else, there was no such thing as vicarious responsibility of a judge, unless the law required it or there was evidence that the wrongdoings of the judge had been concealed behind the family facade. [p. 255] $J_8$

Judges were not to be taken as supporting or endorsing their spouse's or partner's conduct if they did not publicly dissociate themselves from it. The law should recognize that they were independent actors and that the deeds of one were not to be visited on the other. [p. 255] $K_8$

Hearing on the Report of the Chief Justice of Gibraltar, [2009] UKPC 43. (4-3 minority view) ref.

(kkk) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3), 204(2)(b)& 209(5)(b)---Supreme Judicial Council Procedure of Enquiry 2005, R. 13---Contempt of Court Ordinance (V of 2003), Ss. 3 & 4---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Confidentiality of the reference---Details of proceedings of the reference publicized by the President and reported by the media---Proceedings by the President were to kept confidential---Reasons for quashing the Presidential reference recorded. [Minority view]

Paragraph 13 of the Supreme Judicial Council Procedure of Enquiry 2005 provided for the proceedings of the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') to be conducted in camera and also banned reporting the proceedings of the Council. There was an absolute restriction of confidentiality on the process of preliminary assessment of the allegations made against a constitutional court judge. Such restriction equally applied to publicizing the reference filed by the President and the allegations made therein. In the context of publicizing, proceedings of preliminary assessment of "information" conducted by the President was similar and equal to proceedings by the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council'). Therefore, if the proceedings were to be conducted by the Council in camera, then so should be the proceedings by the President. [pp. 255, 256] $L_8$ & $M_8$

Under Article 204(2)(b) of the Constitution, the constitutional courts had power to punish any person who scandalized the Court or otherwise did anything which tended to bring the Court or a Judge of the Court into hatred, ridicule or contempt. Publicizing a complaint or reference and the allegations made therein, of which veracity was yet to be determined after inquiry by the Council, definitely tended to bring the Judge into hatred, ridicule and contempt, and thus attracted the provisions of Article 204 of the Constitution and the Contempt of Court Ordinance, 2003. In the present case, it was a matter of record that the reference was publicized even when it had not yet been placed before the Council for preliminary consideration, as the filing of the reference and the allegations made therein against the petitioner was published in several newspapers and later during the proceedings before the Council the matter was discussed in press conferences and TV talk shows by the Government Ministers and even by the President. The act of publicizing the filing of the reference against the petitioner and of the allegations made therein, was clearly unconstitutional and fell within the scope of the provisions of Article 204 of the Constitution and the Contempt of Court Ordinance, 2003. The fact as to who leaked and publicised the matter was disputed and could not be resolved in the present proceedings, but the matter could not be left unnoticed and allowed to go unchecked. Such omission would encourage repetition of the mischief in future. Thus, the present matter was to be left to the discretion of the Chief Justice who was pater familias of the judiciary and was to protect its prestige, honour, reputation and integrity, to initiate appropriate proceedings for a thorough inquiry of the matter so that the right to fair trial of the persons involved in publicizing the reference and the allegations made therein, may not be infringed.

[pp. 256, 257, 263] $N_8$, $O_8$ & $S_8$

(lll) Mala fides---

----Types of mala fides---'Mala fide of law' and 'mala fide of fact'---Distinction.

Mala fide of law was constituted when a person inflicted an injury upon another person in flagrant contravention of the law; he was not allowed to say that he did so with an innocent mind. He was taken to know the law and act within the law. He may, therefore, be guilty of mala fide of law, although so far as the state of mind was concerned, he acted ignorantly and in that sense innocently. Thus, action of an authority was tainted with mala fide of law when it took the action which was so unreasonable, improbable or blatantly illegal that it ceased to be an action contemplated by the law under which it was purportedly taken, or took the action by violating the mandatory procedural requirements or without satisfying the jurisdictional requirements, or took the action which no reasonable person could have taken on the basis of the available material. On the other hand, an unlawful action done designedly, willfully or wantonly and not accidently, thoughtlessly or negligently fell within the domain of mala fide of fact. In such case, the action was taken in bad faith either to hurt the person against whom the action was taken or to benefit oneself or another, or in colourable exercise of powers for collateral or ulterior purposes not authorized by the law under which the action was purportedly taken. If the act suffered from mala fide of law, the mischief was corrected by nullifying the act; mala fide of fact, however, further entailed the consequences of making the actor accountable also. [p. 257] $P_8$

West Pakistan v. Begum Shorish Kashmiri PLD 1969 SC 14; Sarwar v. Punjab 1990 SCMR 999; Said Zaman v. Federation 2017 SCMR 1249; Abdul Rauf v. Abdul Hamid PLD 1965 SC 671 and Federation v. Saeed Ahmad PLD 1974 SC 151 ref.

(mmm) Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984)---

----Art.129(e)---Presumption of correctness attached to an official act---Scope---Public functionary, mala fide of---Proof.

Mala fide was difficult to prove against a public functionary because there was a presumption of regularity with regard to all official acts under Article 129(e) of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984.However, this presumption of regularity was available only to official acts done by a person or authority competent to do that. The presumption of regularity could not be attached to the acts done by the persons and authorities who had no legal authority to do those acts, rather a reverse presumption for lack of bona fide arose. In such a case, the onus to prove mala fide did not remain as high. Mala fide was inferential by construct. It could be drawn from direct or circumstantial evidence. The Court carefully took into consideration the surrounding circumstances of the action; the conduct of the persons involved; the object and purpose to be achieved; and the nature of the illegality. The court, in a way, reconstructed the whole act and its backdrop, and then evaluated the fides of the action and its actors. If mala fide on the part of the actors was apparent on the face of record, then the court of law seized with the matter was not supposed to shut its eyes from taking notice thereof. While full faith was given to public acts and record of the Government, this assumption was overturned if mala fide was borne out from the record. [p. 258] $Q_8$

Federation v. Saeed Ahmad PLD 1974 SC 151 ref.

(nnn) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 10A, 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001), Ss. 116(1)(b) & 122---Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts (framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Art. 209(8) of the Constitution), Preamble---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns (wealth statement)---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Supreme Court unanimously quashed the reference and declared that the same was of no legal effect whatsoever, and in consequence thereof the proceedings pending in the Supreme Judicial Council

("Council") against the petitioner-judge, including the show-cause notice issued to him, stood abated---Supreme Court (with a majority of 7 to 3) gave directions to the Commissioner, Inland Revenue and Federal Board of Revenue to inquire into and seek explanation from the spouse and children of the petitioner as to the nature and source of the funds whereby the three subject properties in a foreign country were acquired in their names, and also send a report in such regard to the Supreme Judicial Council, which had the powers to, if it considered justified, to commence proceedings against the petitioner in exercise of its suo motu jurisdiction---His Lordship (Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J) observed that after quashing of the Presidential reference against the petitioner, the case set out against him came to an end---Reasons given by His Lordship for not agreeing with the majority view as to the directions given to the Federal Board of Revenue after the reference had been quashed. [Minority view]

[Note: The directions can be found in the short order of the present judgment reported as (Mr. Justice Qazi Faez Isa and 14 others v The President of Pakistan and others (PLD 2020 SC 346), headnote (b)]

The spouse and children of the petitioner like all other citizens of the country were independent persons and enjoyed an inalienable right to the protection of law. As they were not party to the instant proceedings and were never summoned or made a party to the proceedings by the Court, any adverse order against them, would deprive them of their inalienable right to due process under the Constitution and the law, and would contravene the well-entrenched and deep-rooted principle of audi alteram partem. After the reference against the petitioner was unanimously quashed by the Court, the case set out against the petitioner came to an end. In the absence of any allegations of corruption against the petitioner or of his holding foreign properties in the names of his wife and children as a trustee or a benamidar, the Supreme Court, and for that matter the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council'), had no concern with the assets and properties of the spouse and the children of the petitioner. [p. 263] $T_8$

The Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) did not require any direction from the Supreme Court for taking any proceedings against any individual (including a constitutional court judge or his spouse and children) for a tax violation under the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('the 2001 Ordinance'), if any. Similarly, the Council was also free and independent to exercise its suo moto jurisdiction against any judge of the constitutional courts when so required. It was nobody's case that either the FBR or the Council were reluctant or unwilling to perform their functions under the law and the Constitution. [p. 264] $U_8$

Under Section 122 of the 2001 Ordinance an assessment order could not be reopened after a lapse of five years by the FBR. Also, the directions in the majority view regulating the Tax Commissioner to function and perform his duties within a prescribed time-line, which was not so provided under the 2001 Ordinance amounted to entering the realm of judicial legislation. [p. 264] $V_8$

The direction to the Chairman, FBR to send the report to the Council would make the Chairman, FBR a complainant and the report a new complaint. The FBR was an organ and instrumentality of the Federal Government and was not empowered to directly approach the President under Article 209 of the Constitution unless the Federal Government i.e., the Cabinet, approved to place such information before the Council through the President. [p. 264] $W_8$

The Supreme Court could not direct someone to file a complaint against a constitutional court judge before the Council and then make the Council consider the said complaint. This would have a far reaching effect as it would dismantle the independence and neutrality of the Council and the constitutional scheme under Article 209 that safeguarded a constitutional court judge. It also flouted the right to fair trial under Article 10A of the Constitution. [p. 265] $X_8$

The observation in the majority view that the right to appeal under the 2001 Ordinance would be available to the spouse and children of the petitioner while simultaneously, the Council may also commence proceedings - could lead to conflicting results and thereby, may render the appeal under the 2001 Ordinance otiose and futile. Besides, the Council did not enjoy any power to issue directions to any judicial or a quasi-judicial forum to speed up pending matters against a constitutional court judge. [p. 265] $Y_8$

The proceedings initiated through the majority view after the quashment of the reference against the petitioner would mean that the Council must now consider if a judge could be made vicariously liable for misconduct for his family's affairs, a concept that was alien to the Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts (framed by the Supreme Judicial Council under Article 209(8) of the Constitution) and had nothing to do with judicial integrity. [p. 265] $Z_8$

Per Maqbool Baqar, J; agreeing with the majority view to the extent of quashing of the Presidential reference against the judge but with his own views and also disagreeing with the majority view regarding directions given to the Federal Board of Revenue for initiating proceedings against the judge's wife and children, and for submitting a report of said proceedings to the Supreme Judicial Council. [Minority view]

(ooo) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 14(1), 90, 91, 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Rules of Business, 1973, R. 20(6)---Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001), Ss. 116(1)(b), 198 & 216---National Database and Registration Authority Ordinance (VIII of 2000), Ss. 28 & 29---Government Servants (Conduct) Rules, 1964, R. 18---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner-judge before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Held, that the purported reference was based on actual malice and ill-will harboured against the petitioner-judge by the concerned State functionaries on account of a judgment the petitioner-judge had authored in the past [Suo Motu Case No. 7 of 2017 (PLD 2019 SC 318)], wherein he had criticized the ruling political party and one of its coalition partners---Purported reference did not allege any dishonesty or corruption in the acquisition of the foreign properties and it was also not alleged that the petitioner did not have sufficient tax paid/white money to acquire the said properties, if he wanted to---Nothing was placed on the record to show that there had been any money laundering or that the petitioner failed to pay any tax due---Joint reading of Ss.114 & 116 of the Income Tax Ordinance 2001 ('the 2001 Ordinance') showed that the petitioner was not at all required to declare the assets of his non-dependent wife, and children, nor was there any other provision in the 2001 Ordinance creating any such obligation on the petitioner requiring him to disclose the assets of his non-dependent wife and children along with his income returns---Prime Minister bypassed the Cabinet altogether and sent his purported advice to the President for forwarding the purported reference to the Council, without the sanction of the Cabinet---President had not applied his independent mind while forwarding to the Council the purported reference---Assets Recovery Unit (ARU) and its Chairman were bereft of any legal status and had absolutely no power or authority to collect the material in connection with the purported reference---Information about the petitioner and his family available with the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) and National Database and Registration Authority (NADRA) was freely accessed, obtained and shared by/with the ARU and the media in violation of the respective statutory provisions relating to confidentiality and statutory prohibition on sharing such information---Complainant-journalist who informed the Chairman ARU of the foreign properties belonging to the petitioner's family was merely a proxy who was set up by the Government itself---Whole account of "complaint" followed by an "investigation" was to cover up the fact that the information about the foreign properties was, in fact, obtained by government agencies through covert surveillance---Petitioner's image was systematically damaged through selected leaks and press conferences by members of the Cabinet in relation to the reference---All illegal acts leading upto the filing of the reference were collusive involving at the very least the President, Prime Minister, Law Minister, Chairman Assets Recovery Unit (ARU) and the Attorney General---Malice could be inferred from their deeds and actions and the surrounding context---Law Minister, the Chairman ARU and officials of Federal Investigation Agency (FIA) were additionally liable under the relevant provisions of Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('the 2001 Ordinance') and the National Database and Registration Authority Ordinance, 2000 (NADRA Ordinance) for illegally obtaining/disclosing personal and confidential information of the petitioner and his family---Prime Minister himself was also liable under the 2001 Ordinance and NADRA Ordinance as it was on his orders and that of his team that the illegalities in relation to the reference were committed---Prime Minister was also liable for sending the purported advice to the President, which in the facts and circumstances of the case was infected with malice---Whereas, the then, Special Assistant to the Prime Minister on Information was liable for committing contempt of Court for the uncalled for and disrespectful comments she made in her press conference relating to the reference---Purported reference against the petitioner was quashed and the proceedings and the show cause notice in relation thereto stood abated---Illegalities and violations of the Constitution and relevant laws committed from the stage of pre-reference investigation/ proceedings to the filing of the Presidential reference before the Supreme Judicial Council stated in detail. [Minority view] [pp. 270, 271, 272, 276, 277, 278, 281, 286, 293, 294, 295, 298, 299, 300, 302, 303, 305, 306, 310] $A_9$, $B_9$, $C_9$, $D_9$, $E_9$, $F_9$, $G_9$, $H_9$, $K_9$, $N_9$, $Q_9$, $R_9$, $S_9$, $T_9$, $U_9$, $V_9$, $W_9$, $X_9$, $Y_9$, $Z_9$, $A_{10}$, $B_{10}$, $C_{10}$, $D_{10}$, $E_{10}$, $F_{10}$ & $K_{10}$

Messrs Mustafa Impex v. Government of Pakistan PLD 2016 SC 808; Mohtarma Benazir Bhutto's case PLD 1998 SC 388; Muhammad Yousuf v. Abdul Qayyum PLD 2016 SC 478, 483; State v. Ataullah Mengal PLD 1967 SC 78, 91; Shahbaz Khan's case PLD 2016 SC 1, 9; Aftab Ahmed Memon v. Chairman NAB 2019 YLR 1865, 1870; Khawaja Ahmed Hassan's case 2005 SCMR 186 and Jan e Alam v. State PLD 1965 SC 640 ref.

(ppp) Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----S. 116(1)(b)---Wealth statement---Assets in name of non-dependent spouse and children acquired by them through their own resources, disclosure of---Filer/taxpayer was certainly not required to disclose such assets of his independent spouse and children through the wealth statement that he/she was required to file along with his/her income return. [Minority view] [p. 282] $I_9$

(qqq) Interpretation of statutes---

----Notifications---Beneficial notifications, executive orders and instructions had retrospective effect. [p. 283] $J_9$

Messrs Army Welfare Sugar Mills Ltd. and others v. Federation of Pakistan and others 1992 SCMR 1652 and Elahi Cotton Mills Ltd. and others v. Federation through Secretary, Ministry of Finance, Islamabad and others PLD 1997 SC 582 ref.

(rrr) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 48(2) & 209(5)(b)---Presidential reference against a judge of the Superior Courts---President to form an 'opinion' in terms of Art. 209(5) of the Constitution before sending the reference to the Supreme Judicial Council---Meaning and scope---Whether the President could apply his independent mind or had to act on the advice of the Prime Minister---Held, that no concept of any "advice" was present in the constitutional scheme of initiating and maintaining any proceedings against a Judge---Article 209(5) of the Constitution, recognised the role of only two offices/entities, the President, and the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council')---Prime Minister had absolutely no role or participation in the entire process---Term "advice" was alien to the proceedings under Article 209---Article 209(5) of the Constitution did not state that President had to form an opinion on the advice of the Prime Minister, thus, it was the exclusive domain and prerogative of the President to form an opinion, whether or not to send the matter to the Council for it to hold an inquiry---President must personally and independently apply his mind as to whether a Judge had committed misconduct and, if so, whether it justified the sending of reference against him. [Minority view] [pp. 287, 288] $L_9$ & $M_9$

(sss) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 4 & 14(1)---Right to privacy---Scope---Surveillance---Collection of evidence through surveillance---Scope and permissibility. [Minority view]

State functionary could only embark upon the investigation or collection of material about a citizen under (i) the authority of an enabling law, (ii) by a functionary designated under the law; and (iii) only for a justifiable cause or reason. [p. 291] $O_9$

The State had no business to pry upon or collect personal information about its citizen, unless there was a just cause and legitimate purpose for doing so. No State functionary could embark upon an investigation or collection of material without the sanction of an enabling law, and even where such sanction and authority was available, the power and mandate thereunder was well regulated; neither could such power be exercised whimsically, nor could it travel beyond certain specified limits, and was always designed to be invoked/exercised under certain specified circumstances, and only where grounds and reasons justifying such exercise occurred or existed, and in a just, fair and a reasonable manner. Non-compliance of such prescription shall render the investigation, or collection of material, violative of Articles 4 and 14 of the Constitution. [p. 291] $P_9$

(ttt) Interpretation of statutes---

----Similar words in two different statutes---Interpretation of a word or a phrase could not be transported from one statute to another---Comparing the language of one statute with that employed in another was unsafe, even though the subjects covered by the two may involve similarities. [p. 307] $G_{10}$

Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi v. Additional and Sessions Judge 1994 SCMR 1299 and Federation of Pakistan through Secretary, Ministry of Finance v. Haji Mohammad Sadiq and others 2007 PTD 67 ref.

(uuu) Islamic law---

----Husband and wife---Individual ownership of property---Doctrine of proximity---Applicability---Separation of entities of the spouses regarding the holding of separate properties by them individually was clearly ordained in the Holy Quran---Islam stipulated separate identities of the spouses particularly in relation to their entitlement for holding of their properties separately from one another---Doctrine of proximity did not apply to the properties of spouses. [pp. 308, 309] $H_{10}$ & $I_{10}$

Verse 7 of Surah An Nisa; Verses 11 and 12 of Surah An Nisa; Verse 32 of Surah An Nisa and Verse 176 of Surah An Nisa ref.

(vvv) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 209(5)(b)---Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001), Ss. 116(1)(b) & 122---Presidential reference against a judge of the Supreme Court ('the petitioner') pending before the Supreme Judicial Council in relation to properties bought by his spouse and children in a foreign country that were not declared in the petitioner's tax returns (wealth statement)---Constitutional petition filed by the petitioner before the Supreme Court calling into question the constitutionality and legality of the reference against him---Supreme Court unanimously quashed the reference and declared that the same was of no legal effect whatsoever, and in consequence thereof the proceedings pending in the Supreme Judicial Council ("Council") against the petitioner-judge, including the show-cause notice issued to him, stood abated---Supreme Court (with a majority of 7 to 3) gave directions to the Commissioner, Inland Revenue and Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) to inquire into and seek explanation from the spouse and children of the petitioner as to the nature and source of the funds whereby the three subject properties in a foreign country were acquired in their names, and also send a report in such regard to the Supreme Judicial Council, which had the powers to, if it considered justified, to commence proceedings against the petitioner in exercise of its suo motu jurisdiction---His Lordship observed that after quashing of the Presidential reference against the petitioner, there was absolutely no justification for the said directions to the FBR as they were beyond the scope of the petition---Reasons given by His Lordship (Maqbool Baqar, J) for not agreeing with the majority view as to the directions given to the Federal Board of Revenue after the reference had been quashed. [Minority view]

[Note: The directions can be found in the short order of the present judgment reported as (Mr. Justice Qazi Faez Isa and 14 others v. The President of Pakistan and others (PLD 2020 SC 346), headnote (b)]

Upon quashment of the purported reference and abatement of the proceedings in relation thereto, and in view of the clear finding that the petitioner had not misconducted himself and had no concern, either with the foreign properties held by his spouse and children, or their tax affairs, if any, no question of public importance with reference to the fundamental right, amenable before the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, remained to be decided, or dealt with. The directions given to the Federal Board of Revenue by the majority view after quashment of the reference were extraneous to the present proceedings. [pp. 283, 287, 309, 310] $J_{10}$ & $L_{10}$

The properties having been acquired by the wife and children of the petitioner in the tax years 2004 and 2013, and five years period of limitation prescribed by law for opening of the tax assessment with regard thereto having expired several years before, they could not be lawfully required to furnish the source of funds for acquiring the said properties, or any income information for the said years. The assessments that had attained finality with the afflux of time could not be ordered to be re-opened. The Federal Board of Revenue's (FBR's) reopening the same shall be in violation of the legal prohibition and disability. Such would also violate the vested rights of the petitioner's wife and children. The directions given by the majority view required the wife and children of the petitioner to do what the law did not oblige them to do. [p. 288, 291, 311] $M_{10}$ & $P_{10}$

The directions to FBR given in the majority view had been passed against the persons (the wife and children of the petitioner) who were neither before the Court nor were they put to notice. No opportunity was provided to them to submit as to why the FBR be not so directed. The wife and children being private citizens, their tax matters had no nexus with the essential pre-requisite for invoking and maintaining any proceedings under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, and were thus not amenable to the proceedings that were invoked thereunder. The role and jurisdiction of the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council')was limited to the matters relating to the conduct and capability of the superior Court Judges; it was not mandated to delve into the affairs of someone who was not a judge of a superior Court. The directions in in the majority view tended to stretch the scope of the Council beyond its mandated jurisdiction, it rather vested in the Council the jurisdiction and authority not granted to it by the constitution. [p. 291] $N_{10}$ & $O_{10}$

The directions to FBR in the majority view tended to create an anomalous situation, for they provided that the proceedings before the Council as contemplated thereby, shall not be effected by the filing or pendency of any appeal under the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('the 2001 Ordinance') against the order/report of the Commissioner, or against any order made or decision taken at any appellate stage, as in the event the Council, on the basis of the report submitted by the Commissioner, recommended removal of the petitioner, but subsequently the petitioner succeeded in his challenge to the order of the Commissioner, and the said report was found not sustainable, the time for the retrieval may have passed, as by then the petitioner may have reached the age of superannuation. Even otherwise the damage inflicted upon the petitioner, and suffered by the Supreme Court, would be irretrievable. In the reverse scenario where the Council may not agree with the findings of the Commissioner, but such findings were upheld by forums before which the Commissioner's finding may be amenable to correction, an anomalous and embarrassing situation may arise for the Council. [p. 312] $R_{10}$

(www) Administration of justice---

----Courts could not and should not create any right, liability or obligation that was not founded in law. [p. 312] $Q_{10}$

State v. Ziaur Rehman PLD 1973 SC 49 ref.

Munir A. Malik, Senior Advocate Supreme Court along with Justice Qazi Faez Isa (appeared in person on 17.06.2020), Mrs. Qazi Faez Isa (appeared through video link on 18.06.2020), Tariq Mehmood, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, Salahuddin Ahmed, Advocate Supreme Court, Ch. Atif Rafiq, Advocate Supreme Court assisted by: Barrister Kabir Hashmi and Barrister Rabi-bin-Tariq; Babar Sattar, Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Miss Shohan Karimi, Advocate, Syed Kazim Hassan, Advocate Supreme Court and Kassim Mir Jat, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No.17 of 2019).

Hamid Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Naseebullah Tareen, Advocate Supreme Court, Munir Kakar, Advocate Supreme Court and Ajmal Ghaffar Toor, Advocate; Syed Qalb-e-Hassan, Advocate Supreme Court, Amanullah Kanarani, Advocate Supreme Court, Rasheed A. Rizvi, Senior Advocate Supreme Court assisted by: Abbas Rasheed Rizvi, Advocate and M.S. Khattak, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No. 19 of 2019).

Bilal Hassan Minto, Advocate Supreme Court and Ms. Hina Jillani, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner (in Constitutional Petition No. 20 of 2019).

Sardar Muhammad Aslam, Advocate Supreme Court, Syed Amjad Ali Shah, Advocate Supreme Court, Kamran Murtaza, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, Azam Nazeer Tarar, Advocate Supreme Court Abid Saqi, Advocate Supreme Court, Hafiz M. Idrees, Advocate Supreme Court, Salman Akram Raja, Advocate Supreme Court assisted by: Asad Ladha, Advocate, Malik Ghulam Sabir, Advocate and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No. 21 of 2019).

Naseebullah Tareen, Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Amjad Ali Shah, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No. 22 of 2019).

Hamid Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Naseebullah Tareen, Advocate Supreme Court, Munir Kakar, Advocate Supreme Court, Ajmal Ghaffar Toor, Advocate, Asif Reki, Advocate, Sh. Ahsan-ud-Din, Advocate Supreme Court and Khushal Kansi, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No. 23 of 2019).

Rasheed A. Rizvi, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Abbas Rasheed Rizvi, Advocate and M. Aqil, Advocate Supreme Court, Kassim Mir Jat, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No. 24 of 2019).

Hamid Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Naseebullah Tareen, Advocate Supreme Court, Munir Kakar, Advocate Supreme Court and Ajmal Ghaffar Toor, Advocate, Rashid A. Rizvi, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Abbas Rasheed Rizvi, Advocate for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No. 25 of 2019).

Mian Raza Rabbani, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Zeshan Abdullah, Advocate and Saalim Salim Ansari, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No. 26 of 2019).

Hafiz Abdul Rehman Ansari, Advocate Supreme Court, Taufiq Asif, Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No. 27 of 2019).

Rasheed A. Rizvi, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Abbas Rasheed Rizvi, Advocate and Syed Haider Imam, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No. 28 of 2019).

Syed Iftikhar Hussain Gillani, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Barrister Saad M. Buttar, Barrister Jibran Gillani and Miss Ramsha Hayat, Advocate, Abdul Latif Afridi, Advocate Supreme Court and Tariq Khan Hoti, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in Constitutional No. 29 of 2010).

Syed Iftikhar Hussain Gillani, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Barrister Saad M. Buttar, Barrister Jibran Gillani and Miss Ramsha Hayat, Advocate, Abdul Latif Afridi, Advocate

Supreme Court and Tariq Khan Hoti, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in Constitution Petition No. 30 of 2019).

Hamid Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Naseebullah Tareen, Advocate Supreme Court, Munir Kakar, Advocate Supreme Court and Ajmal Ghaffar Toor, Advocate, M.S. Khattak, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No. 32 of 2019).

Rasheed A. Rizvi, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, assisted by: Abbas Rasheed Rizvi, Advocate for Petitioners (in Constitutional Petition No. 34 of 2019).

Dr. Farogh Naseem, Senior Advocate Supreme Court along with Ch. Ishtiaq Ahmed Khan, Addl. A.G., Sajeel Sheryar Swati, Advocate Supreme Court assisted by: Barrister Maleeka Ali Bukhari, Ch. Hassan Murtza Mann, Advocate and Shahid Naseem Gondal, Advocate for Respondents Nos. 2 and 8.

Sohail Mehmood, DAG. for Respondent No.1.

Aamir Rehman, Addl. AG. for Respondent No. 3.

Irfan Qadir, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent No.4.

Dr. Khalid Ranjha, Senior Advocate Supreme Court along with Sajeel Sheryar Sawati, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent No.9.

Respondent No.10 (in-person).

Respondent No.11 (in-person).

Arbab Arif, Secretary, SJC/Khawaja Daud Ahmad, Secretary SJC for Supreme Judicial Council.

Dates of hearing: 17th, 24th September, 8th, 14th, 15th, 21st, 28th, 29th, October, 4th, 5th, 6th, 11th, 12th, 13th 18th, 19th, 27th, 28th November; 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 16th, 17th 18th, 19th December, 2019; 20th 21st, 22nd, 27th, 28th, 29th January, 3rd, 17th, 18th, 19th, 24th February, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 11th, 12th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th and 19th June, 2020.

JUDGMENT

UMAR ATA BANDIAL, J.---

786

"Surah An Nisa, Verse 135: O YOU who have attained to faith! Be ever steadfast in upholding equity, bearing witness to the truth for the sake of God, even though it be against your own selves or your parents and kinsfolk. Whether the person concerned be rich or poor, God's claim takes precedence over [the claims of] either of them. Do not, then, follow your own desires, lest you swerve from justice: for if you distort [the truth], behold, God is indeed aware of all that you do."

Translation by Muhammad Asad

(emphasis supplied)

Justice is an article of faith in our religion, whether that may be against our kith and kin or against the rich or poor. However, justice is an abstract concept attainable only where the scales of justice are held by persons (the Judges) who balance these equitably without regard to their personal desires. Indeed, the latter is the duty of the Superior Judiciary by virtue of their Oath to dispense justice without any fear or favour, affection or ill-will (ref: Third Schedule to the Constitution, Oath for Judges of the Superior Courts). This serves as proof that Judges of the Superior Courts are bound to be impartial and are entitled to be independent in the dispensation of justice.

2. In fact, an impartial and independent judiciary is universally recognised as a core value of any civilised democracy. This is evidenced by the international conventions that protect this value as a fundamental right of the people (ref: United Nations Basic Principles on the Independence of Judiciary and The (Montreal) Universal Declaration on the Independence of Justice). The significance of an independent judiciary is also deeply embedded in Pakistan with the Constitution itself guaranteeing in its Preamble that:

"...the independence of the judiciary shall be fully secured;"

Even this Court in its pronouncements on the meaningful working of the Constitutional scheme of trichotomy of powers has many a times reaffirmed that the judiciary must enjoy the confidence of the litigants and the general public in its impartiality and commitment to dispense justice in accordance with law. A prerequisite for these attributes is the guarantee of the independence of the judiciary, a fact which this Court acknowledged in the case of Muhammad Aslam Awan v. Federation of Pakistan (2014 SCMR 1289). The relevant portion which can be found at para-2 is produced below:

> "2: Judicial independence both of the individual Judge and of the Judiciary as an institution is essential so that those who bring their causes/cases before the Judges and the public in general have confidence that their cases would be decided justly and in accordance with law. Judicial independence is one of the foundational values of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan which is based on trichotomy of powers in which the functions of each organ of the State have been constitutionally delineated. The very Preamble of the Constitution pledges "wherein the independence of judiciary shall be fully secured". The Constitution makers conferred this independence because they wanted the Judges to "do right to all manner of people, according to law, without fear or favour, affection or ill-will" (Oath of office of Judges). The fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution cannot be secured unless Judiciary is independent because the enforcement of these rights has been left to Judiciary in terms of Articles 184(3) and 199 of the Constitution and the relevant law. Judiciary has not been made part of the Executive or the Legislature (Article 7). The separation of Judiciary from the Executive was made a Constitutional mandate (Article 175(3))."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

It is in this context that Justice Qazi Faez Isa ("the petitioner") submits that he has filed the present Constitution Petition No. 17 of 2019 ("petition") seeking to protect this basic fundamental right of the Pakistani people from unlawful interference by the Executive authorities. To our minds, the primary duty of the Bench in all matters, including the present petition, is to do justice impartially in accordance with law without compromising our independence.

FACTS

3. In the above background, we may now set out the events which led to the filing of this petition. The petitioner is a serving Judge of the Supreme Court. Prior to this he was appointed directly as Chief Justice of Balochistan High Court on 05.08.2009, following which he was elevated to the Supreme Court on 05.09.2014. The petitioner has thus been holding public office since the later part of 2009. On 10.04.2019, Respondent No. 4, Mirza Shahzad Akbar, Chairman Assets Recovery Unit ("ARU"), received a letter from a journalist, one Mr. Abdul Waheed Dogar ("Mr. Dogar") . The letter alleged that the petitioner had certain properties in the United Kingdom owned in the name of his wife, ("Mrs. Isa"), which he had not declared. Attached with this letter was a document detailing one of the properties, 40 Oakdale Road, London, E11 4DL. However, the respondents only produced this document once they commenced their arguments on 02.06.2020. Thereafter, the Chairman ARU met with the Law Minister on 16.04.2019 who authorised the ARU to investigate into the matter on the basis of the above mentioned information. This is recalled in the former's letter dated 10.05.2019 addressed to the Law Minister.

4. After the grant of the aforenoted authorisation on 16.04.2019, certain inquiries were made by ARU to confirm the veracity of the allegations levelled against the petitioner by Mr. Dogar: firstly, the legal expert of ARU, Barrister Zia Ul Mustafa Nasim, was asked to find out whether the petitioner owned any properties in the United Kingdom in the name of Mrs. Isa and secondly, the Chairman of Federal Board of Revenue ("FBR") was approached for examining the tax records of the petitioner and Mrs. Isa to determine whether any foreign properties had been declared in their wealth statements.

5. On 08.05.2019, the legal expert of ARU conveyed to the Chairman ARU that there were three properties in the United Kingdom belonging to Mrs. Isa and her children. Their details are as follows:

i. 50 Coniston Court which was originally leased to the petitioner's wife in 2004 for a sum of 236,000 and was later renewed in October 2011 with the daughter added as a co-lessee;

ii. 40 Oakdale Road which was purchased by the wife and daughter on 27.03.2013 for a sum of 245,000; and

iii. 90 Adelaide Road which was purchased by the wife and son on 28.06.2013 for a sum of 270,000 ("London Properties").

Subsequently, on 10.05.2019 the Assistant Commissioner (Inland Revenue) confirmed to the Commissioner (Inland Revenue) that neither the petitioner nor Mrs. Isa had declared these properties in their wealth statements. Additionally, he revealed that Mrs. Isa had stopped filing her tax returns from the tax year 2015 and onwards.

6. On receipt of this information, the Chairman of ARU wrote a memorandum to the Law Minister on 10.05.2019 apprising him about the recent findings. On the basis of this material, claimed to demonstrate the petitioner's ownership of undeclared foreign assets, the Ministry of Law and Justice on 17.05.2019 prepared a summary for the Prime Minister ("PM"). This summary recommended the PM to advise the President to file a Reference under Article 209(5) of the Constitution before the Supreme Judicial Council ("SJC") alleging misconduct against the petitioner. On 20.05.2019 the President approved and signed the Reference (this was later numbered as SJC Reference No. 1 of 2019) which was filed with Secretary SJC on 23.05.2019. The primary allegation in the Reference against the petitioner was that he had violated Section 116 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("the Ordinance") by not declaring the London Properties of Mrs. Isa and his children in his wealth statements. The Reference also alleged that the source of funds for purchasing these properties was not accounted for which meant that the aspect of money laundering could not be ruled out.

7. Consequent to the Reference being filed, the SJC by a formal intimation dated 14.06.2019 directed the petitioner to respond to the three allegations contained in the Reference (ref: Const. P. No. 17 of 2019, Part II), particularly:

"Page 106: ...the factum of ownership of the relevant properties mentioned in the Reference, the source of funds utilized for their acquisition and the mode of transfer of such funds."

(emphasis supplied)

The petitioner filed his Preliminary Response on 28.06.2019 in which he admitted that the London Properties were owned by his wife, who he claimed was a financially independent taxpayer, and his adult children (ref: page 128, Const. P. No. 17 of 2019, Part II). However, no explanation was provided for the other two questions posed by the SJC. As a result, the SJC by its order dated 02.07.2019 asked the former learned Attorney General ("AG") to assist the Council on the next date of hearing on 12.07.2019. Consequently, the AG filed a Rejoinder before the SJC on 11.07.2019. After considering the Preliminary Response of the petitioner and the Rejoinder and documents filed by the AG, on 12.07.2019 the SJC ordered the issuance of a Show Cause Notice ("SCN") to the petitioner. The SCN was issued on 17.07.2019. In his Interim Reply to the SCN dated 31.07.2019, the petitioner categorically rejected being the owner, both actual and ostensible, of the London Properties and further denied all knowledge of their particulars. Thereafter, he filed the present petition bearing the number Const. P. 17 of 2019 under Article 184(3) of the Constitution on 07.08.2019 with the following prayer:

A. Declare that Reference No. 1 and Reference No. 427 are not maintainable and non-est dismiss the same;

B. Declare that Reference No. 1 and Reference No. 427 are mala fide, filed with malice aforethought, filed for ulterior motives and to achieve a collateral purpose and therefore are not maintainable and liable to be dismissed;

C. Declare that proceeding any further with Reference No. 1 and Reference No. 427 undermines the independence of the judiciary, which independence is secured under the Constitution;

D. Declare that as Reference No. 1 has been filed by proxy it is not maintainable and cannot be entertained;

E. Declare that as there is every likelihood for this petition succeeding the Hon'ble Supreme Judicial Council be restrained from proceeding in the matter of Reference No. 1 and Reference No. 427 till the disposal of this Petition;

F. Declare that in camera proceedings of the Hon'ble Council in the context of this case are without lawful authority and in breach of fundamental rights;

G. Grant any other, further or better relief to which the Petitioner may be entitled to and which this Hon'ble Court deems fit and proper to grant under Article 184 (3) of the Constitution.

8. The above noted prayer in the petition is preceded by fifty-four questions of law. The main contentions formulated by the learned counsel for the petitioner are as follows:

i. There was no legal obligation on the petitioner to disclose the London Properties of his wife and children;

ii. The alleged misconduct has no nexus with the office of the petitioner;

iii. The Reference is a mala fide and colourable exercise of power;

iv. The petitioner and his family were subjected to covert State surveillance;

v. The evidence against the petitioner was collected illegally;

vi. The ARU was constituted without any legal authority;

vii. There was no authorisation from the President to collect material in support of the complaint;

viii. The President did not form his opinion in terms of Article 209(5) of the Constitution;

ix. No approval of the Federal Cabinet was taken prior to the filing of the Reference before the SJC;

x. There is no substance to the allegations levelled against the petitioner in the Reference; and

xi. The members of the SJC harbour bias against the petitioner (however, learned counsel for the petitioner did not press this argument during oral submissions).

On the factual plane, learned counsel for the petitioner repeatedly contended that because the London Properties are held in the names of the petitioner's financially independent taxpayer wife and adult children, the tax authorities should question them about the source of funds and the mode of their transfer, instead of harassing the petitioner through a Presidential reference filed under Article 209 of the Constitution.

9. Subsequent to the filing of Const. P. No. 17 of 2019 before this Court, the following Constitution Petitions were also filed by the Bar Councils and Associations and concerned citizens of Pakistan to defend the integrity of the petitioner:

i. Supreme Court Bar Association v. President of Pakistan and others (Const. P. No. 19 of 2019);

ii. Abid Hassan Minto and another v. Supreme Judicial Council through its Secretary and others (Const. P. No. 20 of 2019);

iii. Pakistan Bar Council v. President of Pakistan (Const. P. No. 21 of 2019);

iv. Abdul Basit President High Court Bar Association Quetta v. President of Pakistan (Const. P. No. 22 of 2019);

v. Muhammad Asif Reki President Quetta Bar Association v. President of Pakistan (Const. P. No. 23 of 2019);

vi. Sindh High Court Bar Association v. President of Pakistan (Const. P. No. 24 of 2019);

vii. Balochistan Bar Council v. President of Pakistan (Const. P. No. 25 of 2019);

viii. Sindh Bar Council v. Supreme Judicial Council through its Secretary (Const. P. No. 26 of 2019);

ix. Hafiz Abdur Rehman Ansari v. President of Pakistan (Const. P. No. 27 of 2019);

x. Karachi Bar Association v. President of Pakistan (Const. P. No. 28 of 2019);

xi. KPK Bar Council v. President of Pakistan (Const. P. No. 29 of 2019);

xii. Peshawar High Court Bar Association v. President of Pakistan (Const. P. No. 30 of 2019);

xiii. Punjab Bar Council v. President of Pakistan (Const. P. No. 32 of 2019); and

xiv. Pakistan Federal Union of Journalists v. President of Pakistan (Const. P. No. 34 of 2019).

These connected petitions primarily raised similar contentions as those agitated by the petitioner, namely, the non-application of mind by the President, mala fides on the part of the respondents in the framing and preparation of the Reference, the precise nature and scope of Article 209(5) of the Constitution, the unlawful creation of the ARU and the necessity of protecting the independence of the judiciary. In the interests of justice, these petitions were clubbed together and were heard along with the main petition filed by the petitioner.

10. In rebuttal to the petitioner's pleas and without assailing his integrity, the respondents submitted the following objections and contentions:

i. The petition is not maintainable for failing to cross the bar under Article 211 of the Constitution both in respect of the pre-reference proceedings and the unchallenged SCN issued by the SJC;

ii. The term misconduct is an inclusive term which includes not only conduct which violates the law but also conduct which is unbecoming of an officer;

iii. The conduct of the petitioner has to be viewed in light of the obligations laid out in the Code of Conduct;

iv. There is no ulterior purpose behind the filing of the Reference;

v. There has been no covert surveillance of the petitioner or his family or any breach of their right to privacy;

vi. There has been no illegal collection of evidence;

vii. The ARU has been properly constituted;

viii. The President has formed his opinion in accordance with law; and

ix. There is merit in the allegations levelled against the petitioner in the Reference.

11. At the outset, we would like to mention that the first hearing for this petition commenced on 17.09.2019 in front of a seven member Bench. However, learned counsel for the petitioner filed an objection application against two learned Judges of the Bench, namely, Justice Sardar Tariq Masood and Justice Ijaz ul Ahsan. He submitted that an adverse outcome for the petitioner, i.e. removal from office, would benefit both the learned Judges in the following manner: Justice Sardar Tariq Masood would become Chief Justice for six months in the year 2023 while Justice Ijaz ul Ahsan would thereafter see his tenure as Chief Justice increase from ten months to seventeen months. Accordingly, he requested the two learned Judges to recuse themselves from hearing this petition. The remaining five members of the Bench unanimously disapproved of this application of the learned counsel in their order dated 17.09.2019 reported as Justice Qazi Faez Isa v. The President of Pakistan (2019 SCMR 1875):

> "5: ... The submissions made by the learned counsel, however, do not disclose such an interest. On the other hand, the suggestion is that a tangible interest may accrue four years later. It involves a contingent, prospective and speculative interest. No precedent to hold such a future contingency to be a disqualifying factor for a Judge has been cited by the learned counsel. His plea is accordingly laden with contingencies and possibly fails the test of a "real likelihood" of prejudice from any Member of this Bench [Asif Ali Zardari v. State (PLD 2001 SC 568 at p.592)]. As such the submissions made by learned counsel prima facie do not carry weight."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

However, Justice Sardar Tariq Masood, immediately, and Justice Ijaz ul Ahsan, with strong reservations, recused themselves from the Bench to maintain the purity, dignity and sanctity of this Court. For convenience, a portion from the note penned by Justice Ijaz ul Ahsan is reproduced below:

> "2: However, in view of the reservations, unfortunately expressed on behalf of the petitioner, who is a brother Judge of this Court, which are neither justified nor have any basis whatsoever in fact, I do not consider it appropriate to hear these petitions, lest the petitioner entertain the remotest possibility of even a notional element of partiality or bias on my part."

(emphasis supplied)

It was in these circumstances that the file of this case was placed before the (then) Chief Justice to constitute a Full Court of eligible Judges who were neither members of the SJC nor were objected to by the petitioner.

12. As a result, a Bench comprising of ten learned Judges was formed which heard this petition for approximately 10 months, during which period learned counsel for the petitioner argued their case across 18 hearings, learned counsel in the connected petitions argued their cases across 10 hearings and learned counsel for the respondents argued his case across 13 hearings. Subsequently, this Court passed a short order on 19.06.2020 which is reproduced below for convenience:

"ORDER

For detailed reasons to be recorded later and subject to any orders made or directions given therein (if any), these petitions are allowed and disposed of in the following terms:

1. Subject to what is stated below, the Order of the Court is that Reference No. 1 of 2019 is declared to be of no legal effect whatsoever and stands quashed, and in consequence thereof the proceedings pending in the Supreme Judicial Council ("Council") against the Petitioner in C.P. 17/2019 (including the show-cause notice dated 17.07.2019 issued to him) stand abated.
2. Mr. Justice Yahya Afridi dismisses C.P. 17/2019 and disposes of the other petitions in terms as stated in para 1 herein above.
3. Mr. Justice Umar Ata Bandial, Mr. Justice Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Mr. Justice Faisal Arab, Mr. Justice Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Mr. Justice Sajjad Ali Shah, Mr. Justice Munib Akhtar and Mr. Justice Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed make the following orders as the further Order of the Court (paras 4 to 11 herein below):
4. Within 7 days of this Order, the concerned Commissioner of Inland Revenue shall himself (and not some other officer exercising delegated powers) issue appropriate notices under the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("2001 Ordinance") to the spouse and children of the Petitioner to offer an explanation regarding the nature and source of the funds (separately for each property) whereby the three properties in the United Kingdom (viz., No. 40, Oakdale Road, London E11 4DL; No. 90, Adelaide Road, London E10 5NW; and No. 50, Coniston Court, Kendal Street, London W2 2AN) that are in the names of the spouse and the children were acquired. For purposes of this Order the Commissioner Inland Revenue having jurisdiction over the spouse of the Petitioner (who must be a Commissioner exercising jurisdiction and performing functions at Islamabad) shall be deemed also to be the Commissioner having jurisdiction over the children. (The spouse and children are herein after referred to as "the respondents".) Any notices issued or proceedings taken (or proposed to be issued or taken) under the 2001 Ordinance in relation to any of the respondents in respect, or on account, of the properties aforesaid prior to the date of this Order stand terminated forthwith.
5. The notices shall be served at the official residence of the Petitioner at Islamabad through courier service and such other means as may be considered appropriate and shall be deemed served on the respondents when received at the said address.
6. The respondents shall furnish their replies to the notices along with such material and record as is deemed appropriate. In case any of them is outside the country, it shall be the responsibility of such person to timely file a response, and the proceedings before the Commissioner shall not be adjourned or delayed for the reason of non-availability in Pakistan of such person.
7. Upon receipt of the replies (and of such additional material/ record as may be filed in response to such clarification or explanation, if any, as the Commissioner may, in writing, have sought), the Commissioner shall give an opportunity of hearing to the respondents in person or through an authorized representative/ counsel and shall thereupon make an order in accordance with the 2001 Ordinance.

8. The proceedings shall be concluded before the Commissioner within 60 days of the date of receipt of the notices as aforesaid, and the order shall be issued by him within 75 days of the said date of receipt, and no adjournment or extension in time whatsoever shall be given as affects or extends the aforesaid periods.

9. Within 7 days of the issuance of the order by the Commissioner, the Chairman, Federal Board of Revenue ("FBR") shall submit a report (to be personally signed by him) to the Council through its Secretary (i.e., the Registrar of the Supreme Court) regarding the proceedings as aforesaid, appending thereto the entire record of the said proceedings. The Secretary shall forthwith place such report before the Chairman of the Council (i.e., the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan) who shall, in such manner as is deemed appropriate, have the report laid before the Council for such perusal, consideration, action, order or proceedings, if any, in relation to the Petitioner as the Council may determine. The receipt of the report, the laying of it before the Council and the action/ proceedings, if any, or orders or directions, if any, as may be taken, made or given by the Council thereon shall be deemed, for purposes of Article 209 of the Constitution, to be in exercise of the suo motu jurisdiction as is conferred by that Article on the Council.

10. If, within 100 days from the date of this Order, no report as aforesaid is received by the Secretary from the Chairman, FBR, he shall inform the Chairman of the Council accordingly and shall, if so directed by him, write to the Chairman, FBR requiring an explanation as to why the report has not been received. If in reply the report is filed, then the matter shall proceed in terms of para 9 herein above. If a reply is received without the report or no reply is received, then the Secretary shall bring such fact to the attention of the Chairman of the Council who may direct that the matter be placed before the Council for such perusal, consideration, action, order or proceedings, if any, in relation to the Petitioner (or any other person as deemed appropriate) as the Council may determine. The action/ proceedings, if any, or orders or directions, if any, as may be taken, made or given by the Council shall be deemed, for purposes of Article 209 of the Constitution, to be in exercise of the suo motu jurisdiction as is conferred by that Article on the Council. Without prejudice to the foregoing, if at any stage the report is received from the Chairman, FBR, then the matter shall in any case proceed (or be deemed to proceed, as the case may be) in terms of para 9 herein above.

11. For the removal of any doubts, it is clarified that any of the proceedings under the 2001 Ordinance as herein contemplated on the one hand, and before the Council in terms of paras 9 or 10 herein above on the other, are distinct and separate from each other. Accordingly, nothing contained in this Order shall affect or prejudice the right(s) of appeal of any of the respondents under the 2001 Ordinance, if they feel aggrieved by the order made by the Commissioner or (as the case may be) any order made or decision taken at any appellate stage. Any such appeal(s) shall be decided on the merits, in accordance with the 2001 Ordinance. At the same time (and needless to say), the consideration by the Council of any matter placed before it under either paras 9 or 10 herein above shall not be affected by the filing or pendency of any appeal as aforesaid. But the Council may, if it deems appropriate, notice such appellate proceedings or orders/ decisions and may (for purposes only of the matter before it) make such orders or give such directions in relation thereto as it deems appropriate.

12. Mr. Justice Maqbool Baqar, Mr. Justice Mansoor Ali Shah and Mr. Justice Yahya Afridi join in the Order of the Court only to the extent of para 1 herein above, and also make their own order.

Order per Maqbool Baqar, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Yahya Afridi, JJ.

13. For the reasons to be recorded later and without limiting our jurisdiction in any manner to appropriately enlarge the scope of or make appropriate declarations and directions in the detailed judgment, subject to para 15 hereunder, we hold the above petitions maintainable and allow the same. One of the outcomes of such declaration is that the Reference filed by the President of Pakistan against the Petitioner (Mr. Justice Qazi Faez Isa) is quashed, and as a result the proceedings along with the Show Cause Notice issued by Supreme Judicial Council stand abated.

14. One of our pivotal Constitutional values is that the independence of judiciary shall be fully secured. The same Constitution also ordains that to enjoy the protection of law and to be treated in accordance with law is the inalienable right of every citizen. Therefore, it is reiterated that in our constitutional democracy, neither the petitioner judge, nor any other judge, or any individual or any institution, is above the law. The doors of the constitutional forum i.e., Supreme Judicial Council are always open, either on its own motion or for anyone who has a genuine and a bonafide grievance, amenable to the jurisdiction of the Council against a Judge of the Constitutional Court. At the same time, it is equally important, that a Judge like any other citizen of Pakistan enjoys the inalienable constitutional right to be treated in accordance with law. These fundamental values are to be protected at all cost in order to uphold the majesty and supremacy of the Constitution and to honour the people of Pakistan who have adopted and given to themselves this Constitution.

15. Yahya Afridi, J. has however found Constitutional Petition No. 17/2019 as non-maintainable. Herein below are the detailed reasons for this short order.

MAINTAINABILITY

13. The first matter which requires our consideration is the issue of maintainability of this petition under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. Although no objection has been raised by the learned counsel for the respondents in this regard, it is still the bounden duty of this Court to establish the requisite jurisdictional facts under Article 184(3) regardless of whether the said point has been agitated or not. An examination of the jurisprudence of this Court makes it clear that in order to invoke its original jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, the impugned action must be shown to involve a matter of public importance arising from the breach of a fundamental right which affects the public at large. These Constitutional criteria have been reiterated in the case of Al-Jehad Trust and another v. Lahore High Court (2011 SCMR 1688) in which this Court held:

"11: ...unless the matter is of public importance relating to the enforcement of any of the fundamental rights conferred by Part II, Chapter 1 of the Constitution (Articles 8 to 28), the jurisdiction of the Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, cannot be invoked. The mere importance of a matter, without enforcement of any fundamental right or reference to a fundamental right without any public importance, will not attract the jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution."

14. The fundamental right of the general public which is claimed by the petitioner to be under threat is the derivative right of the independence of the judiciary. This right is an essential prerequisite for the enjoyment of, inter alia, the principal fundamental right to access justice which is guaranteed to the people of Pakistan by Articles 4, 9 and 10-A of the Constitution. This Court in Sh. Riaz-Ul-Haq v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2013 SC 501) observed that:

"28: It is to be noted that the right of "access to justice to all" is a well recognized inviolable right enshrined in Article 9 of the Constitution and is equally found in the doctrine of "due process of law". It includes the right to be treated according to law, the right to have a fair and proper trial and a right to have an impartial court or tribunal."

15. It will be useful at this stage to consider in greater detail the independence of the judiciary, in the absence of which all other facets of the right to access justice are essentially rendered null and void. Indeed, the constitutional necessity of an independent judiciary for providing such access to justice to the public has been elaborated succinctly in the case of Chief Justice of Pakistan Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan (PLD 2010 SC 61):

> "60: I would, therefore, conclude and hold that access to justice was a Fundamental Right which the Constitution had guaranteed to the people; that the existence of an independent and vibrant judiciary was indispensable and crucial for the enjoyment of the said constitutional assurance and in the absence thereof, this right would be a mere illusion; that without security to the Judges of the Superior Courts vis-a-vis, inter alia, their service and the tenure thereof, the independence of judiciary would be a mere delusion and a chimera;..."

Two crucial points emerge from the above quoted passage:

i. Firstly, it holds that any unlawful interference with Article 179 of the Constitution (which fixes the tenure of the Judges of the Supreme Court and sets the retiring age at 65 years), and any illegal bypass of the mechanism set out in Article 209 of the Constitution (which provides the procedure for the removal of Superior Court Judges) is an interference with the right to access justice. This is because such breaches erode the independence of the judiciary.

ii. Secondly, it affirms that although each individual Judge is guaranteed the right to be independent by the Constitution, it is in essence the judiciary as a whole whose independence has to be secured and protected.

Learned counsel for both the petitioner and the Bar Councils and Associations were at pains to stress this last point. It was emphasised by the latter that their principled stand was not just for the petitioner rather it was for the institution. It was the assault and targeting of the judiciary and the grave dangers which this posed to the right to access justice that compelled the Bar Councils and Associations to file the connected petitions.

16. However, in focusing on protecting Judges from the clutches of the Executive, learned counsel have failed to notice that the counterpoise of this fundamental right is judicial accountability. This necessarily follows from the indisputable fact that the independence of the judiciary is not primarily for the benefit of the Judges, but exists instead to secure the interests, rights and benefits enjoyed by the whole of society. Therefore, if one were to focus only on the protection of the judiciary from the depredations of the organs of the State (howsoever vitally important and crucial that may be), it will not be the independence of judiciary that will result but rather it would be the rule of Judges without any checks and balances. Accordingly, it is only fitting that judicial independence and accountability are treated as being complementary to each other. With that being said, it has to be kept in mind that the petitioner has alleged that there have been serious violations of Article 209(5) of the Constitution in the preparation of the Reference against him. As we have already observed, unlawful infringements of Article 209 erode the independence of the judiciary which is directly connected with the right to access justice. Therefore, the present petition satisfies the two-fold requirement of Article 184(3) of the Constitution.

17. Be that as it may, learned counsel for the respondents has objected to the maintainability of the petition on the ground that the SJC has taken cognizance of the Reference by issuing a SCN to the petitioner. This happened after SJC took into consideration the petitioner's Preliminary Response dated 28.06.2019 and Interim Reply dated 31.07.2019 on the merits of the Reference. However, as our short order dated 19.06.2020 has declared the Reference to be of no legal effect, this contention of the learned counsel is misplaced. The SCN issued by the SJC to the petitioner is premised on grounds given in the Reference. These have been held by us to suffer from serious illegalities. Notwithstanding the fact that the veracity and substance of the underlying factual information of ownership of the London Properties is not denied and remains intact, the SCN cannot survive on its own. This is for two reasons: firstly, although the factual matrix set out in the Reference attributes misconduct to the petitioner, the information contained in it without more is insufficient to sustain a reference for the removal of a Judge of the Superior Courts. Secondly, the allegations in the SCN that are derived from the Reference are discredited by the same illegalities that invalidate the grounds of the Reference. Therefore, the SCN stands abated.

18. Learned counsel for the respondents has countered this line of reasoning by invoking the ouster clause contained in Article 211 of the Constitution. For ease of reference, this provision is produced below:

"211. Bar of Jurisdiction. The proceedings before the Council, its report to the President and the removal of a Judge under clause (6) of Article 209 shall not be called in question in any court."

He has submitted that Article 211 ibid mandates that proceedings before the SJC are to be accorded a high degree of respect. He urged that such deference was confirmed in the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) which limited a challenge to the proceedings before the SJC to the following grounds:

"102: Having thus looked into the question of jurisdiction of this Court vis-a-vis the Supreme Judicial Council, I would conclude as under:--

(c) that the ouster clause of Article 211 of the Constitution would not protect acts which were mala fide or coram non judice or were acts taken without jurisdiction;"

19. He argued that because learned counsel for the petitioner did not press any of the three grounds mentioned in the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra), namely, coram non judice or actions that are mala fide or without jurisdiction, against the SJC during oral submissions, this Bench could not quash the SCN issued to the petitioner. While we are in complete agreement with the learned counsel's submission so far as it deals with the degree of respect to be afforded to the SJC and the sanctity attached to its proceedings, we cannot accept the conclusion that he has drawn from this argument. Such reasoning fails to grasp the crucial point that we have neither adjudicated upon the process of the SJC nor quashed its SCN issued to the petitioner. In fact, in view of the findings recorded in this judgment, we have simply abated the SCN. It is true that the factual information underlying the Reference casts a smear on the petitioner's name and cannot be ignored; however, without confronting the owners of the London Properties the information is at present inchoate to form the basis of proceedings under Article 209 of the Constitution. In these circumstances, we have agreed with the petitioner's plea that the same must be verified to test the veracity of the inference drawn in the Reference about the source of funds. Nevertheless, as the latter has been quashed, the SCN issued by the SJC has no foundation except for the preliminary factual information contained in the Reference. In this situation, the SCN has rightly been abated because it also lacks the factual and legal material on which the Reference was based. Accordingly, Article 211 has no application to the available facts of the present case.

20. Before parting with this area of discussion, we would like to clarify a very crucial aspect of this case that we believe has led to some confusion: namely, what standard of review ought to be applied by the Court for determining whether a reference filed before the SJC is legal or not. During oral submissions, learned counsel for the petitioner relied upon the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) to argue that pre-reference proceedings can be struck down on judicial review grounds. The relevant portion from the judgment is produced below:

"70: Having thus examined all aspects of this question, I would conclude and would consequently declare:--

..

(d) that the said matters not hit by the mischief of Article 211 and mentioned above, would be subject to examination, scrutiny and judicial review like any other executive or administrative act."

(emphasis supplied)

21. However, learned counsel's reliance on the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) for this point is of minor significance. In that case the Full Bench quashed the reference against the (then) Chief Justice on the ground of malice in fact. Nowhere does the judgment use any of the judicial review grounds to set aside the reference. Nonetheless, out of respect for the Larger Bench hearing the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra), we can only convey our reservations and not our disagreement with the aforesaid observation.

22. Be that as it may, it is by now well-settled that SJC is a unique (and the only) body which can examine the conduct of a Superior Court Judge and decide whether the said Judge is fit to complete his tenure. Reliance in this regard is placed on the case of Khan Asfandyar Wali and others v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2001 SC 607):

> "Page 946: The Supreme Judicial Council is a unique institution, which comprises the senior most Judges in judicial hierarchy and entrusted with the onerous responsibility of deciding complaints that are referred to it through references by the President alone. It is an essential prerequisite of the independence of judiciary that there is put in place a system of accountability. It should, therefore, be the endeavour of the Judges of the Superior Courts to make the Code fully applicable and ensure that it is strictly adhered to. As held in the case of Zafar Ali Shah (supra), the Judges of the Superior Courts are not immune from accountability. They are accountable only in the manner laid down under Article 209 of the Constitution."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

It may be noticed from the above quoted passage that the sanctity and uniqueness of the SJC is enhanced by its composition. It is comprised of the three senior most Judges in the country and the two senior most Chief Justices of the High Courts (ref: Article 209(2) of the Constitution). Indeed, the significant impact of the SJC's composition on the removal process of Judges was acknowledged in The President v. Mr. Justice Shaukat Ali (PLD 1971 SC 585):

> "Page 602: ...The forum [SJC] consists of Judges of superior Courts who also belong to the same profession. To be tried by one's peers is a protection because they understand one's difficulties, problems and the situation in which one was."

This dictum was subsequently approved in the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) at para-98. However, if we hold today that a reference, which is an executive action under the Constitution, forwarded to the SJC can be struck down on ordinary judicial review grounds such as unreasonableness and proportionality we will be belittling its status, ignoring its competence and pre-empting its decisions based on appreciation of the record. We should endeavour to avoid taking any such step which goes against the spirit and intent of the Constitution. But this is precisely the course of action we will be choosing if the standard of judicial review is adopted to examine the legality of pre-reference proceedings. To exemplify this standard reliance is placed on the decision in Sabir Iqbal v. Cantonment Board, Peshawar (PLD 2019 SC 189):

> "5: ... The court can examine and judicially review the executive discretion exercised by the authorized officer on the ground of proportionality. Alongside reasonableness, proportionality is now a central standard directing the action of the executive branch... Proportionality is a standard that examines the relationship between the objective the executive branch wishes to achieve, which has the potential of infringing upon a human right, and the means it has chosen in order to achieve that infringing objective. The fiduciary duty, from which the administrative duty of fairness and administrative reasonableness are derived, demands administrative proportionality as well... An administrative measure must not be more drastic than necessary or to sum up in a phrase - not taking a sledgehammer to crack a nut. According to De Smith's Judicial Review, the standards of proportionality and unreasonableness are inextricably intertwined. Unreasonableness contains two elements of proportionality when it requires the weight of relevant considerations to be fairly balanced and when it forbids unduly oppressive decisions. Under the first element, proportionality is a test requiring the decision- maker to maintain a fair balance. Under this category the courts evaluate whether manifestly disproportionate weight has been attached to one or other considerations relevant to the decision. The second element is that the courts consider whether there has been a disproportionate interference with the claimants rights or interests. A more sophisticated version of proportionality provides for a structured test. Here the courts ask first whether the measure, which is being challenged, is suitable to attaining the identified ends (the test of suitability). Suitability here includes the notion of "rational connection" between the means and ends. The next step asks whether the measure is necessary and whether a less restrictive or onerous method could have been adopted (the test of necessity - requiring minimum impairment of the rights or interest in question)."

(emphasis supplied)

23. It may be noticed from the above quoted passage that the scope of judicial review is not only vast but may also be intertwined with the merits of a case. We have already observed that SJC is the only constitutional authority which can examine the conduct of a Judge of the Superior Courts. Therefore, giving the power of judicial review to this Court to set aside pre-reference proceedings will be tantamount to rejecting the capacity and jurisdiction of the SJC to adjudicate upon any question of unreasonableness, proportionality or suitability raised in relation to the merits of the President's actions. It will also open the floodgates of litigation by Judges who are the subject of a Reference. This prima facie appears to be contrary to the meaning of Article 209 of the Constitution which entrusts all matters regarding the merits of a case to a high powered Constitutional domestic forum within the judiciary. It is also pertinent to mention here that even learned counsel for the petitioner challenged the pre-Reference proceedings in the present case on the grounds of mala fides and not judicial review.

THE CASE AGAINST THE PETITIONER

24. Before examining the questions of law raised in this petition, it will be useful to consider the provisions of Article 209 of the Constitution under which the present Reference has been filed:

"209. Supreme Judicial Council.

(1) There shall be a Supreme Judicial Council of Pakistan, in this Chapter referred to as the Council.

(2) The Council shall consist of,

(a) the Chief Justice of Pakistan;

(b) the two next most senior Judges of the Supreme Court; and

(c) the two most senior Chief Justices of High Courts.

Explanation:- For the purpose of this clause, the inter se seniority of the Chief Justices of the High Courts shall be determined with reference to their dates of appointment as Chief Justice [otherwise than as acting Chief Justice], and in case the dates of such appointment are the same, with reference to their dates of appointment as Judges of any of the High Courts.

(3) If at any time the Council is inquiring into the capacity or conduct of a Judge who is a member of the Council, or a member of the Council is absent or is unable to act due to illness or any other cause, then

(a) if such member is a Judge of the Supreme Court, the Judge of the Supreme Court who is next in seniority below the Judges referred to in paragraph (b) of clause (2), and

(b) if such member is the Chief Justice of a High Court; the Chief Justice of another High Court who is next in seniority amongst the Chief Justices of the remaining High Courts, shall act as a member of the Council in his place.

(4) If, upon any matter inquired into by the Council, there is a difference of opinion amongst its members, the opinion of the majority shall prevail, and the report of the Council to the President shall be expressed in terms of the view of the majority.

(5) If, on information from any source, the Council or the President is of the opinion that a Judge of the Supreme Court or of a High Court-

(a) may be incapable of properly performing the duties of his office by reason of physical or mental incapacity; or

(b) may have been guilty of misconduct, the President shall direct the Council to, or the Council may, on its own motion, inquire into the matter."

(6) If, after inquiring into the matter, the Council reports to the President that it is of the opinion,

(a) that the Judge is incapable of performing the duties of his office or has been guilty of misconduct, and

(b) that he should be removed from office, the President may remove the Judge from office.

(7) A Judge of the Supreme Court or of a High Court shall not be removed from office except as provided by this Article.

(8) The Council shall issue a code of conduct to be observed by Judges of the Supreme Court and of the High Courts."

(emphasis supplied)

25. It may be noticed from the above quoted sub-Article 209(5) that proceedings by the SJC may be initiated on grounds of misconduct or physical or mental incapacity of a Superior Court Judge. In the present case, the Reference has alleged misconduct on the part of the petitioner to seek his removal from office. It is specifically alleged that the petitioner has committed a violation of Section 116 of the Ordinance. This has led to the question of source of funds, the violation of the money laundering regime and the provisions of Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947 ("FERA").

26. Although seemingly straightforward, the word 'misconduct' has drawn extensive arguments from both sides. Moreover, despite the significance of this term, it has so far escaped a comprehensive definition. Article 209(5) of the Constitution, which is the primary provision dealing with the removal of Superior Court Judges, does not define it. Even the Code of Conduct ("CoC") issued under Article 209(8) of the Constitution to regulate the conduct of Superior Court Judges does not attribute any meaning to this term. However, it does prescribe the norms and standards of good judicial and personal behaviour expected of Judges. Therefore, any conduct which conflicts with the mandated norms in the CoC can attract scrutiny for possible misconduct. For instance, the CoC observes that the prime duty of a Judge of the Superior Courts 'is to present before the public an image of justice of the nation' (ref: Preamble of CoC). It also makes reference to the Oath of the Judges and their solemn duty to uphold and submit to the Constitution and the law (ref: Preamble of CoC). Therefore, simply put the CoC expects that Judges will conduct themselves with integrity, propriety and dignity both in their public and private lives and will not engage in controversy. It would be useful at this stage to set out what these generic terms actually entail:

"Chambers Dictionary

Page 471: Dignity: elevation of mind or character;

Page 869: Integrity: uprightness; honesty; purity.

Page 1376: Propriety: conformity with good manners; conformity with convention in language and conduct;"

It thus becomes clear that the CoC primarily provides guidance to Judges of Superior Courts on the exemplary qualities they must possess. Therefore, conduct that diverges from these qualities would constitute misconduct. However, ultimately the CoC is silent about the meaning of misconduct. Be that as it may, the Supreme Judicial Council Procedure of Enquiry, 2005 ("2005 Rules"), framed by the SJC, has drawn wisdom from case-law and the CoC to state certain general standards for Judges of the Superior Courts, namely:

"3. Definitions:

In the present Procedure, unless the context provides otherwise, the following expressions used in the Procedure will have the meaning as assigned to them hereunder;

.....

(l) "Misconduct", includes,

(i) conduct unbecoming of a Judge,

(ii) is in disregard of the Code of Conduct issued under Article 209(8) of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan,

(iii) is found to be inefficient or has ceased to be efficient."

27. In practical terms, Rule 3(l)(i) succinctly encapsulates the normative standards of misconduct provided in the CoC whilst Rule 3(l) (iii) includes an objective criterion that relates to a Judge's professional performance. Both criteria are consistent with the CoC and are primarily explanatory rather than definitional. The sanctity of the 2005 Rules can be traced to their Constitutional origin as these have been framed by the SJC in the exercise of its implied power to facilitate its own proceedings. Such status of the 2005 Rules has been affirmed by this Court in Justice Shaukat Aziz Siddiqui v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2018 SC 538) at para-60 which is produced below:

"60: The aforesaid leaves no manner of doubt that where the Constitution creates a forum (SJC) vested with the jurisdiction of accountability of the Judges of the Superior Courts and holders of other high Offices as mentioned in the Constitution or the law, such forum (SJC) has implied and ancillary power to give effect to the mandate of the Constitution, more particularly, by devising its own procedure."

(emphasis supplied)

Since the 2005 Rules have been framed by the SJC to implement its mandate and regulate its own proceedings, these carry special force and thus stand on a higher pedestal than ordinary laws. These Rules provide guidelines for the conduct of SJC proceedings and the exercise of its jurisdiction. Indeed, the SJC as the constitutionally empowered body has been utilising the criteria of misconduct noted in Rule 3(l) of the 2005 Rules and elaborated upon in the CoC to assess the culpability of Superior Court Judges.

28. To assist us on this matter learned counsel for the petitioner, Mr. Babar Sattar, submitted that the CoC imposes two separate obligations on Superior Court Judges: duties that are peculiar to judicial conduct and responsibilities that are specific to personal conduct. It was his case that it is only conduct which is connected with the office of a Judge that can form the basis of a Reference against the petitioner under Article 209(5) of the Constitution. Any other wrong committed by the petitioner in his personal life which has no connection whatsoever with his office can only be visited upon by penalties provided for the wrong committed under the relevant law. He further argued that only such misconduct of the petitioner is cognizable by the SJC that is committed during the former's current service as a Supreme Court Judge. Any misconduct committed previously by the petitioner during his tenure as the Chief Justice of Baluchistan High Court stands absolved. Next, he canvassed the proposition that the petitioner is only responsible for his own personal conduct and not that of his independent wife and children. On this analysis, learned counsel concluded that none of the allegations contained in the Reference satisfied the test of misconduct propounded by him. The London Properties he stated were owned by the Mrs. Isa and her children. Therefore, any justification for an alleged violation of the relevant law in Section 116 of the Ordinance and any explanation for the source of funds had to be sought from the petitioner's family and not the petitioner himself. In so far as the allegations of money laundering or FERA were concerned, learned counsel stated that there was simply no material before the Law Minister, PM and President which justified the inclusion of these charges in the Reference against the petitioner.

29. On the converse, learned counsel for the respondents, relying on case-law from Pakistan and India, argued that the test for misconduct is not whether it violates any prescribed law or rules, rather the test is whether the conduct alleged is wrong, or improper or fails to conform with the standards and norms expected of a Judge. This he submitted would include not only the professional conduct of a Judge but also his conduct in private life (whether that be his own conduct or the conduct of his family members). Furthermore, he stated such a test is concerned only with the gravity of the alleged misconduct and not the era in which such misconduct is said to have been committed. Therefore, in his opinion the factual matrix narrated in the Reference prima facie did disclose a case of misconduct against the petitioner. He stated that the London Properties were acquired in the names of the petitioner's family members at a time when the petitioner was the Chief Justice of Balochistan High Court i.e. he was a public office holder. Moreover, neither Mrs. Isa nor the petitioner had declared these properties in their wealth statements filed with the Inland Revenue authorities. Proof of this could be found in the Assistant Commissioner's (Inland Revenue) letter dated 10.05.2019. However, he argued the evidence which called for a Reference of misconduct to be filed were the tax returns of Mrs. Isa and the petitioner. The former's returns showed that she did not have sufficient funds for the purchase of these properties (the children have not filed any tax returns), while the latter's returns disclosed that he in fact did possess surplus funds. As a result, he submitted that such non-declaration of the London Properties on the part of the petitioner and Mrs. Isa coupled with their respective financial position, and the plain meaning of Section 116(1)(b) of the Ordinance supported the presumption that it was actually the petitioner who had financed these properties. Accordingly, an answer had to be provided by the petitioner about the source of funds to rule out any violation of Section 116 of the Ordinance and the money laundering regime. Such an answer could only be sought by the SJC which is why the Reference was filed against the petitioner.

30. In our considered view, to determine whether the facts of this case warranted the filing of a Reference alleging misconduct against the petitioner, the substance of the term 'misconduct' needs to be examined. Article 209(5) of the Constitution sets out misconduct as one of the two grounds of removal of a Superior Court Judge. Therefore, any meaning ascribed to misconduct should be consistent with the object of Article 209. Two decisions describe the purpose of Article 209 succinctly. The first is the case of Al-Jehad Trust v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 1996 SC 324) in which Justice Manzoor Hussain Sial held that:

> "Page 537: Undoubtedly, Article 209 guarantees the tenure of office of a Judge and explicitly secures the independence of Judiciary, which is dominant intent of the Constitution..."

The second case is Syed Zafar Ali Shah v. General Pervaiz Musharraf (PLD 2000 SC 869) in which this Court observed:

> "Page 1211: Clearly, the Judges of the Superior Judiciary enjoy constitutional guarantee against arbitrary removal. They can be removed only by following the procedure laid down in Article 209 of the Constitution by filing an appropriate reference before the Supreme Judicial Council and not otherwise."

It thus becomes obvious that Article 209 serves two purposes:

i. It provides security of tenure to Superior Court Judges by allowing them to be judged by their own peers thus insulating the removal process from the clutches of the Executive; and

ii. It also holds Superior Court Judges accountable for their wrongdoings by providing a mechanism for their removal.

The aforenoted two purposes are evidenced by Article 209(7) of the Constitution which reads:

> "209. Supreme Judicial Council
>
> (7) A Judge of the Supreme Court or of a High Court shall not be removed from office except as provided by this Article."

In the above background, Article 209(5) limits the grounds of unfitness for the removal of Judges while Article 209(7) guarantees that honest, competent and independent Judges do not become the target of a hostile Government/ Executive. Therefore, the threshold that constitutes misconduct for the purposes of Judges of the Superior Courts should manifest this intent and spirit of Article 209 of the Constitution. Accordingly, the standard for the commission of misconduct must not be so high that it is impossible to allege thus rendering Judges unanswerable for their conduct. On the other hand, the threshold for misconduct must also not be so lenient so as to become a weapon in the hands of disgruntled litigants, interest groups or Executive against honest, competent and independent Judges.

31. Against this background, one can now examine the features of misconduct recognised under Article 209(5) of the Constitution. The starting point in this regard should be the seminal judgment of this Court in The State v. Mr. Justice Akhlaque Husain (PLD 1960 SC 26). The relevant portion is reproduced below:

> Page 32: "... the word "misbehaviour" must be understood in its ordinary sense, viz. as implying misconduct, that is to say, conduct which is unbecoming of a Judge or renders him unfit for the performance of the duties of his office, or is calculated to destroy public confidence in him... We cannot therefore accept the respondent's contention that it is only on proof of misconduct in respect of a judicial proceeding or in respect of office or on proof of conviction that a High Court Judge may be removed and that no other conduct, however infamous or scandalous, or whatever defect of character it might disclose, can ever be a ground for his removal."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

This dictum was followed and approved in the Shaukat Ali case (supra) at page 623. Since the formulation is non-exhaustive, it gives discretion to the SJC to determine whether any alleged conduct of a Judge comes under the purview of misconduct. It also lays down a high threshold of misconduct to ensure that trivial indiscretions or infractions of the law by Judges or any minor shortcomings in their personal lives do not render them liable to removal proceedings. At the same time it protects the integrity of the judicial institution by allowing for the removal of Judges whose conduct without constituting a violation of a prescribed law is so improper that it renders such Judge unfit for holding judicial office. In fact, the meaning of misconduct gathered from the CoC also exemplifies this construction. As noted above, although the CoC does not contain a definition of misconduct, it does contain norms, conventions and guidance (reflected in its Articles) on the standards to be met by Superior Court Judges in their professional and private lives. What is notable about such guidance is that it hardly incorporates any legal obligations in the Code. Instead the Articles primarily consist of ethical guidelines and traditional norms and standards expected of a Judge. For instance, the Preamble to the CoC reads as follows:

> "...To be a living embodiment of these powers, functions, and obligations calls for possession of the highest qualities of intellect and character. Equally, it imposes patterns of behavior, which are the hall-mark of distinction of a Judge among his fellow-men."

Likewise, Article III observes:

> "Article-III: To be above reproach, and for this purpose to keep his conduct in all things, official and private, free from impropriety is expected of a Judge."

Similarly, Article V states:

> "Article-V: Functioning as he does in full view of the public, a Judge gets thereby all the publicity that is good for him. He should not seek more. In particular, he should not engage in any public controversy, least of all on a political question, notwithstanding that it involves a question of law."

Lastly, we have Article VI which requires:

> "Article-VI: A Judge should endeavor to avoid, as far as possible, being involved, either on his own behalf or on behalf of others, in litigation or in matters which are liable to lead to litigation such as industry, trade or speculative transactions.
>
> To employ the influence of his position to gain undue advantage, whether immediate or future, is a grave fault.
>
> A Judge must avoid incurring financial or other obligations to private institutions or persons such as may embarrass him in the performance of his functions."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

32. It may be noticed that the above Articles of the CoC are non-legal in nature. A violation of any of these Articles would neither sustain a civil lawsuit nor a criminal prosecution. However, an infringement thereof may very well lead to disciplinary proceedings under Article 209(5) of the Constitution. But, this is not the only remarkable feature of the CoC. For instance, on a careful examination of Article III, it can be observed that it expects Superior Court Judges to keep their conduct in all aspects of their lives, including private life, free from impropriety. Furthermore, Article VI calls upon Judges to avoid litigation and to be diligent in their financial affairs to minimise the chance of any embarrassment in the performance of their functions. This very clearly means that the CoC does not only expect impeccable behaviour from a Judge in the courtroom but it also expects him to maintain these high standards of integrity, propriety and dignity outside the Court. Such qualities and conduct are necessary to preserve not only the prestige and honour of the Judge but also the prestige and honour of the institution of the judiciary. Therefore, the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that the allegations against the petitioner pertain to his personal life and so cannot become the basis for a Reference has no force. Accordingly, there is no doubt in our minds that the interpretation of misconduct set out by this Court in the Justice Akhlaque Hussain case (supra) reflects the intent and spirit of Article 209(5) of the Constitution, the CoC and the 2005 Rules.

33. Additionally, the threshold of misconduct adopted by this Court and approved by the SJC is also similar to the tests used by Disciplinary Committees and Parliaments of foreign jurisdictions for the removal of Judges. For example, the requirement of upholding the confidence of the public is not unique to our Courts. In fact, it is a criterion which is applied across the world to enforce accountability of Judges and other public office holders. In Lawrence v. Attorney General of Grenada (2007 UKPC 18 at para-25) the Privy Council approved a passage from Clark v. Vanstone (2004 FCA 1105) in which the Federal Court of Australia held:

> "Para 85: ...For present purposes, the important proposition to be drawn from these expressions of opinion is that, in a case in which the term 'misbehaviour' is used with reference to the holder of an office, the content of its meaning is to be determined by reference to the effect of the conduct on the capacity of the person to continue to hold the office. In turn, the capacity to continue to hold an office has two aspects. The conduct of the person concerned might be such that it affects directly the person's ability to carry out the office. Alternatively, or in addition, it may affect the perceptions of others in relation to the office, so that any purported performance of the duties of the office will be perceived widely as corrupt, improper or inimical to the interests of the persons, or the organisation, for whose benefit the functions of the office are performed."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

This passage was cited again with approval by the majority of the Privy Council in Hearing on the Report of the Chief Justice of Gibraltar (2009 UKPC 43 at para-202). Even in the United States, where the process of impeachment of Judges is initiated by a Resolution of the House of Representatives ("House"), the Report dated 10.05.1989 accompanying the Resolution to Impeach United States District Judge Walter L. Nixon, Jr (ref: Report No. 101) stated:

> "Page 12: ...thus, from an historical perspective the question of what conduct by a Federal judge constitutes an impeachable offense has evolved to the position where the focus is now on public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. When a judge's conduct calls into questions his or her integrity or impartiality, Congress must consider whether impeachment and removal of the judge from office is necessary to protect the integrity of the judicial branch and uphold the public trust."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

Likewise in Australia, Sir George Bush sitting in the Parliamentary Commission inquiring into the alleged misconduct of Justice Lionel Keith Murphy, Judge High Court of Australia, held:

> "Page 8: If [judges] conduct, even in matters remote from their work, is such that it would be judged by the standards of the time to throw doubt on their own suitability to continue in office, or to undermine their authority as judges or the standing of their courts, it may be appropriate to remove them."

(emphasis supplied)

Even in the Justice Shaukat Ali case (supra), the SJC observed that:

"Page 602: ...It [inquiry by SJC] is simply the conduct of a Judge which is to be properly reviewed in the interest of the purity and honour of the judiciary..."

This dictum was later cited with approval in the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) at para-98. These tests, therefore, not only affirm this Court's interpretation of misconduct but also (again) dispel the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that only conduct which has a nexus with the petitioner's office can be the basis of an information under Article 209(5) of the Constitution. In fact, misconduct is any conduct of the Judge which damages the publics perception about his ability to discharge his duties or which undermines public confidence in the institution of the judiciary regardless of whether such conduct occurs in the professional arena or in the private life of a Judge.

34. As far the learned counsel's contention that the petitioner can only be removed for misconduct committed during his tenure as a Supreme Court Judge, it will suffice to reproduce what the House held in its report dated 08.07.1912 against Robert Wodrow Archbald, Judge of the United States Court of Appeal for the Third Circuit (Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and Virgin Islands) (ref: Report No. 946):

"Page 175: It is indeed anomalous if the Congress is powerless to remove a[n] ... unfit Federal judge from office because his... misdemeanor, however vicious or reprehensible, may have occurred during his tenure in some other judicial office under the Government of the United States prior to his appointment to the particular office from which he is sought to be ousted by impeachment, although he may have held a Federal judgeship continuously from the time of the commission of his offenses. Surely the House of Representatives will not recognize nor the Senate apply such a narrow and technical construction of the constitutional provisions relating to impeachments."

(emphasis supplied)

Similarly, the House in its report dated 04.03.2010 against G. Thomas Porteous, Jr., Judge of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana (ref: Report 427) noted that the critical question which needs to be addressed by the House and Congress is whether the alleged misconduct demonstrates a lack of integrity and judgment in the Judge which makes him unsuitable to continue to perform the functions of his post. The timing of the misconduct is irrelevant to such a determination (page 19) . Indeed, by accepting the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that a time bar should be imported into the process of judicial accountability, we would be granting immunity to Judges who have committed serious misconduct in their previous posts. This would be contrary to the demand for transparency and fairness in the accountability of Judges, especially when it is self-evident that previous behaviour of a Judge is a reflection of his character, disposition and professional or private ethics. Therefore, the submission of the learned counsel that the alleged misconduct of the petitioner has become a past and closed transaction because it was committed during his time as a High Court Judge is incorrect.

35. Lastly, learned counsel for the petitioner also raised the argument that the petitioner was not accountable for the financial affairs of his independent wife and adult children. While there is no cavil to the proposition that "the days are long gone when a husband and wife were treated as one person in law and the husband was that person" (ref: Chief Justice of Gibraltar case (supra) at para-257), the fact of the matter is that when it comes to public office holders the situation is different. Judges, like other public office holders, occupy a position of sacred trust. They hold positions where they exercise power and authority under the law. Under the Constitution and the law, such a position carries certain benefits and privileges accompanied by obligations and responsibilities. A Judge of the Superior Court is entitled to these perks and benefits which are also enjoyed by his spouse and family. Some of these benefits and privileges available to the spouse and family of a Judge of the Superior Courts are:

A. During Service

i. A medical allowance (ref: Rule 10 of The Federal Service Medical Attendance Rules, 1990);

ii. A travel allowance (ref: Rules 3(4)(i) and 4(i) of The Supreme Court Judges (Travelling Allowance) Rules, 1958); and

iii. The use of a Government maintained residence and an official car at the residence (Rules 20, and 21 of Supreme Court Judges (Leave, Pension and Privileges) Order, 1997) .

B. After Service

i. A pension to the spouse after the death of the Judge (ref: Clause 4 of the Fifth Schedule to the Constitution)

ii. A medical allowance (ref: Rule 10 of The Federal Service Medical Attendance Rules, 1990);

iii. The services of a driver and an orderly (ref: Rule 25 Supreme Court Judges (Leave, Pension and Privileges) Order, 1997); and

iv. 3000 free local telephone calls per month, 2000 units of electricity and 25HM3 of gas per month, free supply of water and 300 litres of petrol per month (ref: Rule 25 Supreme Court Judges (Leave, Pension and Privileges) Order, 1997).

36. As alluded above, these entitlements of the Judge which he shares with his family [his spouse and members of his family who are either dependent on him or with whom he has financial dealings ("family members")] also carry certain responsibilities and obligations. One such obligation is the duty to enjoy these privileges with dignity, probity and discretion. Apart from the material benefits enjoyed by a Judge's family members during and after his service, they also receive an advantage from the respect and recognition extended, through association, by people who interact with them. In these circumstances, the family members of a Judge are required to be careful (financially, socially and politically), moderate and fair in their dealings and exchange with others so that no controversy arises which may embarrass the Judge. Although these responsibilities are shared by family members of all public office holders, they apply with particular force to family members of Judges as the latter are expected to be the embodiment of a person who is 'God-fearing, law-abiding, abstemious, truthful of tongue, wise in opinion, cautious and forbearing, blameless, and untouched by greed' (ref: Article II of CoC). Accordingly, high standards of propriety are expected of a Judge and his family members. This is precisely why in a case of impropriety alleged against the son of a learned Judge, Justice Khilji Arif Hussain observed in Suo Motu Case No. 5 of 2012 (PLD 2012 SC 664) that:

"Page 679: Although family members of public functionaries are, properly speaking, not performing State functions, the alleged facts of this case highlight the necessity of extreme caution and discretion in their private and public dealings and conduct."

37. Generally, every adult individual is recognised in law as an independent entity. However, different principles apply in relation to family members of public office holders. This is because any irresponsible act on the part of a family member may reflect adversely on the Judge. This approach is recognised by the Judicial Codes of Conduct of various countries. The Guide to Judicial Conduct for Australian Judges states:

"Page 41: ...Issues involving a judge's relatives, especially close relatives, can give rise to particularly difficult questions... There are likely to be situations in which the activities or careers of relatives attract consideration of the principles identified in the Guide, because the situation presents an issue under the Guide which the judge must address... The response by a judge to such matters will depend on the particular circumstances. Matters affecting a spouse's or partner's career or appointment will, for example, call for consideration of public attitudes or perceptions, the kind of activity the partner engages in, the other persons present or participating... These are examples only. In the end, each situation must be resolved by the judge applying the principles identified in the Guide. A central issue will always be whether and how the situation might reflect adversely on the judge or the judiciary or might diminish public confidence in them."

(emphasis supplied)

Taking the connection between a Judge and his family in financial matters a step closer are the Bangalore Principles of Judicial Conduct ("Principles") which were drafted in 2001 and endorsed in 2002 by the Judicial Group on Strengthening Judicial Integrity (a body consisting of senior Judges from various legal systems of the world). These principles were later endorsed by the United Nations Economic and Social Council on 27.07.2006 in its Resolution 2006/23:

"Resolution

2006/23

Strengthening basic principles of judicial conduct

..

1. Invites Member States, consistent with their domestic legal systems, to encourage their judiciaries to take into consideration the Bangalore Principles of Judicial Conduct, annexed to the present resolution, when reviewing or developing rules with respect to the professional and ethical conduct of members of the judiciary; ..."

Under the heading of propriety, Rule 4.7 of the Principles reads:

"Value 4: PROPRIETY

Principle: Propriety, and the appearance of propriety, are essential to the performance of all of the activities of a judge.

..

4.7: A judge shall inform himself or herself about the judge's personal and fiduciary financial interests and shall make reasonable efforts to be informed about the financial interests of members of the judge's family."

To remove any doubts about what constitutes the family of a Judge, the Principles define a Judge's family to include:

"DEFINITIONS

"Judge's family" includes a judge's spouse, son, daughter, son-in-law, daughter-in-law, and any other close relative or person who is a companion or employee of the judge and who lives in the judge's household."

An obligation similar to the one set out in Rule 4.7 is also present in Canon 3(C)(2) of the United States Code of Conduct for Federal Judges. In essence, the above obligations require a Judge to make reasonable efforts to be aware about the financial affairs of his family members. This precaution helps to forewarn him about extraneous influences or vested interests which can compromise not only his independence and credibility but also in the words of this Court in Justice Shaukat Ali's case (supra) the "purity and honour" of the institution to which he belongs.

38. At first glance an obligation to remain informed about the financial affairs of one's family members seems archaic because modern jurisprudence emphasises the protection of the rights of the individual against the State and society. However, to understand the rationale behind the obligation on Judges to make reasonable efforts to be informed about or to watch over the financial affairs of their family members, one has to understand the nexus of this obligation with the nature of Judges work and the position they occupy in society. As has been held above, Judges exercise pre-eminent authority under the law. They adjudicate disputes between litigants, hold parties appearing before them accountable and impose liabilities and grant relief to such parties. With their authority comes an even greater responsibility to decide cases fairly, independently and in accordance with law. In such a situation, it is imperative for a Judge that he should make reasonable efforts to be informed about the financial interests of his family members for the simple reason that if a case comes before him which directly or indirectly involves the pecuniary, proprietary or other personal interests of any of his family members, he can recuse himself. Such recusal is a manifestation of the now well-established principle of law (ref: Government of N.W.F.P v. Dr. Hussain Ahmad Haroon 2003 SCMR 104):

> "Page 110: It is an age-old fundamental principle of law that justice should not only be done but manifestly and undoubtedly it should seen to have been done. To achieve this objective/goal it is of prime importance that a Judge/person equipped with the authority of decision should not be having any sort of personal interest in the outcome of the matter under issue before him."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

However, this is not the only object behind imposing such a burdensome obligation on Judges. Another equally, if not more, important reason for requiring Judges to be aware of the financial interests of their family members is that the law's intent is to prevent a Judge's family from becoming a conduit to discreetly influence his opinions and views. This assures the Judges independence and integrity apart from safeguarding the institution of the judiciary.

39. Likewise, the recently enacted Foreign Assets (Declaration and Repatriation) Act, 2018 ("the Act") also provides a rationale for imposing such an obligation on Judges of the Superior Courts. This piece of legislation provides an advantageous scheme to Pakistani citizens to disclose their undeclared foreign assets subject to payment of tax at a nominal rate set out in the Schedule to the Act. The object of the Act is to bring such assets on record in the documented tax economy. For obvious reasons, holders of public office are not eligible to avail this tax incentive. The significance of this Act for our purposes is that it treats the assets of the spouse and dependent children and the assets of the public office holder as identical. A Judge of the Superior Courts is included in the category of holder of public office. For ease of reference, the relevant Sections of the Act are produced below:

> "2. Definitions.---(1) In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,-
>
> .
>
> (h) "holder of public office" means a person who is or has been, during the preceding ten years,-
>
> .
>
> (iv) the Chief Justice or, as the case may be, a Judge of the Supreme Court, Federal Shariat Court, a High Court or a Judicial Officer whether exercising judicial or other functions or Chairman or member of a Law Commission, Chairman or Member of the Council of Islamic Ideology;
>
> ..
>
> 4. Application.---(1) The provisions of this Act shall apply to-(a) all citizens of Pakistan wherever they may be, except holders of public office, their spouses and dependent children;"
>
> (emphasis supplied)

40. Accordingly, neither public office holders nor their spouses and dependent children can avail the benefit of this scheme. The purpose of such an exclusion is to ensure that public office holders do not use their family members as a conduit to whiten their undeclared wealth. There is no relief in tax amnesty schemes even if the spouse is independent. This is a legal incident or consequence of being a holder of public office and introduces an element of transparent accountability in the financial matters of such officers.

41. Indeed, the Reference alludes to this element of financial accountability by implying that the London Properties are benami owned. However, it cites no evidence to support this contention. Nevertheless, during the course of his submissions, learned counsel for the petitioner submitted, after inquiring from his client, that the latter did not gift any amount of money to his family members during the preceding tax years. In any case, the elements of benami (or the evidence in support of it) need not be discussed here because it is not for us to determine at present whether the petitioner's family is his benamidar. This is a factual determination that can only be made by the competent forum after examining all the evidence. Nonetheless, unless the source of funding for the London Properties is duly explained by the petitioner's family, it will allow the resulting public controversy to continue which is neither beneficial for the petitioner in his personal capacity as a Judge nor for the institution of which he is a part.

42. Therefore, having seen that Judges are not as insulated from the conduct of their family members as are ordinary private citizens, we need to consider the extent of the obligation on Judges to be aware of the finan-cial interests of their family members. Both the UN Resolution 2006/23 (endorsing the Principles) and the United States Code of Conduct simply state that Judges need to make reasonable efforts to be informed about the financial interests of their family members. However, neither elaborate upon the scope of this obligation. Consequently, its ambit needs to be determined. To begin with, Oxford Dictionary has defined the term 'informed' in the following manner:

"Oxford Dictionary:

Informed: Having or showing knowledge of a subject or situation."

It, therefore, becomes clear that Judges are supposed to have knowledge of the financial interests of their family members. However, if they do not, then they are expected to make reasonable efforts to acquire such information, more so when they are questioned by a competent forum to explain the financial interests of their family members. What constitutes 'reasonable effort' on the part of Judges will no doubt depend upon the circumstances of each case. However, a plea of lack of knowledge by a Judge in relation to the financial affairs of his family members is untenable in light of the general trend in international practice, the obligations imposed on a Judge under the CoC and the law relating to public office holders including Judges. Accordingly, there is a continuing obligation on a Judge to keep himself informed about the financial interests of his family members. This view is consistent with the Preamble of the CoC which emphasises that Judges of the Superior Courts of the country are role models for their fellow men and women. Such an elevated standard of conduct is demanded from Judges so that the institution of the judiciary enjoys the trust and confidence of the nation for its integrity, probity, independence and transparency.

MALA FIDES

43. Having dealt with the preliminary matters arising out of this petition, we may now consider each plea of the petitioner in detail. This petition was primarily filed by the petitioner for the purposes of declaring the Reference null and void. Therefore, the bulk of the submissions of the learned counsel for the petitioner were centred around the contention that the filing of the Reference was a colourable and mala fide exercise of power. He submitted that the whole process was tainted with malice aforethought. He attributed this to the petitioner's judgment in Suo Motu Case No.7 of 2017 (PLD 2019 SC 318) ("Dharna Judgment") announced on 06.02.2019. In that case, the petitioner had passed adverse remarks against the two political parties that are presently the leading members of the ruling coalition in the Federal Government: Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf ("PTI") and Muttahida Qaumi Movement ("MQM"). Additionally, he had also made critical observations about the Army. The relevant extracts from this judgment are produced below:

"24: The leadership of TLP must have noted that despite the daylight slaughter of innocents on the streets of Karachi on 12th May, 2007 its principal conspirators and beneficiaries were not punished. They must also have noted that when PTI-PAT had camped in the Red Zone for several months they had achieved the setting up of a judicial inquiry commission. Though the findings of the Inquiry Commission had rebutted PTI's allegations no adverse consequences followed. PTI's leadership did not even tender an apology, let alone clean up the area or pay to clean and restore it. Instead PTI received a lot of free publicity.

53: For the reasons mentioned above this case is disposed of with the following declarations and directions:

..

(15) The Constitution emphatically prohibits members of the Armed Forces from engaging in any kind of political activity, which includes supporting a political party, faction or individual. The Government of Pakistan through the Ministry of Defence and the respective Chiefs of the Army, the Navy and the Air Force are directed to initiate action against the personnel under their command who are found to have violated their oath."

44. Learned counsel argued that this judgment, and in particular these remarks, angered the ruling coalition. This could be gathered from the review petitions filed by PTI and MQM against the Dharna Judgment. Both review petitions demanded the petitioner's removal from office under Article 209(5) of the Constitution for committing misconduct. He asserted that these review petitions were a coordinated exercise by PTI and MQM to oust the petitioner since they contained almost verbatim language and were even filed in Court on the same date. In addition, learned counsel also cited various other events/actions which he argued highlighted the mala fides behind the Reference. Briefly these are:

i. The use of a proxy complainant, Mr. Dogar;

ii. The leaking of the Reference and its contents to the media;

iii. The derogatory statements made by Mrs. Firdous Ashiq Awan, Special Assistant to Prime Minister ("SAPM") on Information and Broadcasting, about the petitioner;

iv. The haste with which action was taken against the petitioner after the Dharna Judgment; and

v. The charged language used by the AG in his Rejoinder to the SJC.

45. From the opposing side, learned counsel for the respondents negated all claims of mala fides levelled by the petitioner. He submitted that the allegations in their present form were too vague to satisfy the high threshold of mala fide and that the petitioner had failed to discharge the burden of proof. He maintained throughout the course of oral arguments that the Reference was simply filed to ensure judicial accountability and that there was no ulterior motive of the Federal Government. He submitted that he had the highest respect for the petitioner whom he considered an elder brother.

46. We have carefully examined the record and the relevant case-law and have arrived at a conclusion. However, before we discuss the merits of our decision on this complex and fiercely debated issue, we would like to first set out what mala fides actually entail. There is an abundance of case-law on mala fides rendered by this Court in landmark judgments, such as the case of Government of West Pakistan v. Begum Agha Abdul Karim Shorish Kashmiri (PLD 1969 SC 14) and Federation of Pakistan v. Saeed Ahmed Khan and others (PLD 1974 SC 151). However, there is still lack of uniformity in its definition and on the standard of proof that a party needs to satisfy in order to establish its claim of mala fide.

47. First and foremost, we shall examine the meaning of mala fide in the legal context. Traditionally, an action actuated with an ulterior purpose to harm another or benefit oneself is classified as an act that is malicious or malice in fact. However, in (relatively) recent times, this Court has recognised another category of mala fides, namely, mala fide in law. Even though both are a species of mala fide, yet each has distinct ingredients and consequences. A recent judgment of this Court in Said Zaman Khan v. Federation of Pakistan (2017 SCMR 1249) has studied not only the entire case-law on the subject but has also analysed the essential yet different ingredients of both mala fide in law and malice in fact. It would be useful at this stage to reproduce the relevant portions from the said judgment:

"82: ...where any action is taken or order passed not with the intention of fulfilling its mandate or to achieve its purpose but is inspired by a collateral purpose or instigated by a personal motive to wrongfully hurt somebody or benefit oneself or another, it is said to suffer from malice of facts. In such cases, the seat of the malice or bad faith is the evil mind of the person taking the action be it spite or personal bias or ulterior motive."

"83: ...where an action taken is so unreasonable, improbable or blatantly illegal that it ceases to be an action countenanced or contemplated by the law under which it is purportedly taken malice will be implied and [the] act would be deemed to suffer from malice in law or constructive malice. Strict proof of bad faith or collateral propose in such cases may not be required."

"90: ... The mere allegation that an action has been taken wrongly is not sufficient to establish mala fide of facts. Specific allegations of the collateral purpose or an ulterior motive must be made and proved to the satisfaction of the Court."

48. The crux of our analysis will be focused on malice in fact since the petitioner has primarily levelled allegations of ulterior motives against the respondents. However, to present a complete picture of mala fides, two general points of importance from the above quoted observations need to be stated. First, that apart from the generally recognised category of actions driven by a foul personal motive described here as malice in fact, there is another category of reckless action in disregard of the law termed as mala fide in law. The first type of mala fide is attributed to a person whereas the second is levelled against the impugned action. While the former is concerned with a collateral purpose or an evil intention to hurt someone under the pretence of a legal action, the latter deals with actions that are manifestly illegal or so anomalous that they lack nexus with the law under which they are taken. Thus it becomes clear that malice in fact and mala fide in law have different ingredients, the former being comprised of factual elements with the latter being composed of legal features, that need to be established as such for the respective consequences to ensue. Secondly, it is clarified that an accusation of mala fide in law involves more than errors of misreading the record or non-application of the law or lack of proportionality in the impugned action. Instead, this is a serious allegation of wanton abuse or disregard of the law. However, when an ulterior motive to cause harm is proved then the repercussions of malice in fact follow. It is for this reason that a mere allegation that an action has been taken wrongly cannot be grounds to hold that such action suffers from mala fide in law or malice in fact. This is also consistent with the view propounded in para-90 of the Said Zaman case (supra).

49. The aforementioned discussion confirms that imputing mala fide of either kind to a person or an action is a grave accusation. It should not be made lightly but can only be done when the facts or legal defects justify its use. In the present case, the petitioner has alleged bad faith and ulterior motives to the respondents personally. This amounts to a plea of malice in fact which requires a high standard of proof. The rationale behind such an approach is that a plea of malice in fact frustrates the process of justice. After a complainant establishes malice in fact against a person, the entire proceeding by the latter is brought to an end. This results in the merits of the case being ignored. Moreover, the reputation of the person, against whom an allegation of malice in fact is made, becomes tarnished and if the said allegation is proved then his repute is forever ruined. He is made out to be a vicious individual who harbours ill-intentions against others. Such are the negative consequences of this plea, if established. This reasoning applies with greater force if such an allegation is made against senior public functionaries of the State. Indeed, it was for this very reason that Justice Muhammad Nawaz Abbasi in his concurring note in the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) held as follows:

"Page 216: ...In view thereof the mala fide of fact in the normal circumstances is required to be established through the positive evidence and not merely on the basis of allegations but the personal malice of a person in official position can be examined in the context as to whether the action in official capacity was extraneous and for collateral purpose which was taken in bad faith or such an action was in good faith."

(emphasis supplied)

Similarly, this Court in the Saeed Ahmed Khan case (supra) observed:

Page 170: male fides is one of the most difficult things to prove and the onus is entirely upon the person alleging mala fides to establish it, because, there is, to start with, a presumption of regularity with regard to all official acts, and until that presumption is rebutted, the action cannot be challenged merely upon a vague allegation of mal [ a] fides."

(emphasis supplied)

50. We are in complete agreement with the views expounded by the members of this Court in the above noted judgments. An allegation of malice in fact is unlike any other ordinary allegation. It carries with it a stigma for the accused which cannot easily be washed away. If a lower standard of proof for malice in fact is adopted, that would open the floodgates for recalcitrant litigants to make such allegations against their opposing side to derail the process of justice and to defame their opponents in Court. Therefore, to limit these allegations to only genuine claims of malice in fact, we hold that any person who wishes to raise this plea must prove it to the satisfaction of the Court on the basis of positive and cogent evidence.

51. Moreover, there is also an obligation on litigants to plead the particulars of malice in fact in detail. This, has already been alluded to in the Saeed Ahmed Khan case (supra) wherein it was held that vague allegations cannot establish a plea of malice in fact. Such a duty was imposed more explicitly on parties by this Court in the Begum Agha Shorish Kashmiri case (supra). The relevant portion is reproduced below:

> "Page 35: mala fide must be pleaded with particularity and once one kind of mala fide is alleged, the detenu should not be allowed to adduce proof of any other kind of mala fide. Enquiries are not to be launched merely on the basis of vague and indefinite allegations."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

Accordingly, to raise this plea, it is necessary for the relevant party to pinpoint the specific incidents/ events/ actions which demonstrate the malice in fact of the opposing side.

52. With the foregoing background, we shall now consider each allegation raised by the petitioner to determine whether it crosses the threshold of malice in fact or not.

53. Firstly, an allegation has been made that this Reference is a direct consequence of the Dharna Judgment. The malice in fact is statedly evidenced by the review petitions filed by the coalition parties in the Federal Government before this Court. However, the recourse to a review petition is a lawful remedy granted to litigants by Article 188 of the Constitution. It, therefore, cannot be used as evidence for proving the malice in fact of the respondents. As far as the charged language used against the petitioner is concerned, it is noted that the review petition filed by PTI, which has been relied upon by the petitioner, was objected to by the office and was subsequently withdrawn. Its revision, as accepted by the learned counsel, does not contain any adverse averments against the petitioner. With respect to the review petition filed by MQM, undoubtedly it does contain the resentful remark that action needs be taken against the petitioner under Articles III, IV and V of the Code of Conduct. Such language has no place in any petition before this Court. However, the fact that the Dharna Judgment criticised the conduct of PTI and MQM without giving the two political parties a hearing may have disenchanted some members of the MQM party. Yet even such a feeling cannot justify the brazen accusations in the review petition.

54. Be that as it may, learned counsel for the petitioner contended that having availed the appropriate legal remedy of review, MQM, a minority member of the coalition government was so reviled by the Dharna Judgment that it influenced the Federal Government to file a Reference against the petitioner. This view seems implausible and does not demonstrate the plea of malice in fact urged by the petitioner. The Reference is based on Mrs. Isa's ownership of undeclared London Properties. With the blemish attached to the ownership of undeclared foreign properties, such ownership automatically attracts speculation about its status and source. In fact, in the year 2017 the SJC took cognizance of a similar information in the case of another learned Judge who resigned his office. Even the respondents' correspondence on the record shows that the SJC simultaneously received a Presidential reference on the same ground against another learned Judge of the High Court. In this perspective the filing of the present Reference cannot be held to suffer from malice in fact.

55. Indeed, recourse to a lawful remedy under Article 209(5) of the Constitution cannot be malicious unless for ill-motives an information alleges wrong or distorted or exaggerated facts, or seeks relief that is inordinate or extraneous to the undisputed facts. Furthermore, the observations in the Dharna Judgment pale in comparison to the remarks passed by this Court in Air Marshal (Retd.) Muhammad Asghar Khan v. General (Retd.) Mirza Aslam Baig (PLD 2013 SC 1) in which far stronger observations about our politicians and political system failed to draw any adverse reaction from the Federal Government against any Judge. Consequently, no malice in fact is made out on this ground.

56. The learned counsel for the petitioner next attacked the initiation of the Reference for being tainted with malice in fact as the complaint against the petitioner was filed by Mr. Dogar who has a reputation of planting false stories. He stated that the respondents did not make even the slightest effort to check the credibility of Mr. Dogar and instead accepted his complaint at face value. He submitted that considering the sensitivity of the matter and the fact that the complaint was against a sitting Judge of the Supreme Court, the respondents should at the bare minimum have scrutinised the antecedents of Mr. Dogar.

57. However, such an argument ignores the general law of the land that when an information against a person (whether a public office holder or a private person) is to be evaluated, it is the substance, veracity and consequence of the information which matters and not the credibility and credentials of the informant. Reference in this regard can be made to the decision in Pakistan Tobacco Company Ltd v. Federation of Pakistan (1999 SCMR 382) in which this Court observed:

> "10: We are inclined to hold that the question whether a particular Constitution petition filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution directly in this Court is maintainable is to be examined not on the basis as to who has filed the same, but the above question is to be determined with reference to the controversy raised in the Constitution petition, and if the controversy involves a question of public importance with reference to the enforcement of any of the Fundamental Rights the same will be sustainable."

58. In the present case, the information supplied by Mr. Dogar is not denied by the petitioner to the extent of ownership of the London Properties by Mrs. Isa and her children. This adds weight to the Court's observation in the above cited case. Although in the Pakistan Tobacco case (supra) this Court was mainly concerned with the maintainability of a petition filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, we consider that the same principles also apply to an information filed before the SJC under Article 209(5). The reason is that the receipt of information from any source is cognizable by the SJC under Article 209(5) of the Constitution and is sufficient to sustain an inquiry against a Judge of the Superior Courts. The word 'any' means that the antecedents of the informant are irrelevant unless the information is false, concocted, distorted, exaggerated or seeks relief that is excessive in relation to the accepted facts. As previously noted, the underlying information in the Reference to the extent of ownership of the London Properties by Mrs. Isa and her children is not disputed by the petitioner. Therefore, in such circumstances the background of the informant becomes insignificant. As a result, even this ground does not support the plea of malice in fact raised by the petitioner.

59. The next objection of the learned counsel for the petitioner was about the leaking of the Reference and its contents to the media. He urged that the disclosure was engineered by the respondents which constituted a violation of Rule 13 of the 2005 Rules. This provision is reproduced below:

> "13. Proceedings of the Council not to be reported:--
>
> (1) Proceedings of the Council shall be conducted in camera and shall not be open to public.
>
> (2) Only the findings of the proceedings shall be allowed to be reported.
>
> (3) Proceedings of the meetings of the Council or any other steps that Council may take shall not be reported, unless directed otherwise."

There is no cavil with the proposition that a reference filed against a Superior Court Judge has to be kept confidential. The rationale for adopting such a course of action has been provided in this Court's judgment in Justice Shaukat Aziz Siddiqui and others v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2018 SC 538). For convenience, the relevant portion is reproduced below:

> "80: ...Thus, we must attempt to discover the purpose and true intent of paragraph 13 of the SJC Procedure of Enquiry 2005, which alone would hold the key to its proper contextualized > interpretation. Various countries of the world have chosen either of two paths with regard to the process of accountability of Superior Court Judges. Broadly speaking, one path is through an open process including through a proceeding before a forum outside the judiciary e.g. Parliament in the full gaze of the public eye while the other path is of an insulated process of being dealt with by one's own peers. Our Constitutional Dispensation in principle has adopted the latter course of action. The framers of the Constitution of 1973 appear to have made a value judgment that such a course of action is best suited to our societal and cultural ethos, where allegations are routinely made against all and sundry without any qualms about the truthfulness or otherwise of such allegations. Perhaps the framers of the Constitution may have been inspired, in this behalf, by the mystical saint of Kasur who said that we live in the "Age of Suspicion", where people immediately believe the worst about others. It is said that the Judges like Caesar's wives ought to be above suspicion. An allegation no matter how baseless, if permitted to be made public, such Judge and his capacity to dispense justice would be irreparably prejudiced."

(emphasis supplied)

60. The reasoning in the Shaukat Aziz case (supra) has also been echoed by the learned counsel for the petitioner who has lamented the loss of reputation suffered by the petitioner and the harassment which he and his family have had to endure. One can appreciate the ordeal that the petitioner and his family may have lived through from the speculative media coverage on the Reference. Nevertheless, to hold any particular respondent accountable for revealing the details of the Reference, there needs to be at least some material on record that connects the leaks to one or more of the respondents. The chronology of events reveal that the Reference was signed on 20.05.2019 by the President; and it was filed by the Secretary Law with the SJC on Thursday, 23.05.2019. However, it was only on Tuesday, 28.05.2019 that news of the Reference broke out on social media, and by 29.05.2019 most news channels and papers in the country had reported on it. It was also on 28.05.2019 that the petitioner wrote the first of his letters to the President, inter alia, requesting a copy of the Reference. This letter too was leaked the next day on the media (as was the second letter written by the petitioner on 03.06.2019) . In this chain of events, another occurrence came to light as disclosed in paragraph 43 of the petition. Shortly after the filing of the Reference, a meeting took place between the petitioner and the (then) Chairman of SJC (former Chief Justice of Pakistan). The petitioner's application CMA No 7931/19 quotes in its paragraph 20 an order by the SJC dated 19.08.2019 passed in another proceedings against the petitioner:

> "Pages 20-21: The above mentioned meeting of the respondent-Judge with the Chief Justice of Pakistan shows that the respondent-Judge not only knew about filing of the Reference against him by the President but also about the actual contents thereof and the allegations levelled therein before he had started writing successive letters to the President on the subject professing his ignorance about the same."

61. The petitioner has not disputed the aforesaid meeting being held prior to 28.05.2019. As a result, it is clear that the petitioner had read the Reference and was aware of the allegations made against him. Therefore, before the Reference was leaked, probably on 28.05.2019, only a handful of individuals knew of its existence: the Law Minister, AG, President, PM, (then) Chairman SJC, (then) Secretary SJC and the petitioner himself. The date of the media report about the Reference is significant. Which fresh event triggered the sudden disclosure of the Reference is not evident from the record. Therefore, although the allegation made against the respondents raises suspicion, it is still unsupported by any evidence. Consequently it cannot suffice to conclusively hold that either one or more of the respondents leaked the Reference to the media. Since we cannot on the basis of speculations and suspicions determine who leaked the Reference, therefore no finding with respect to its disclosure and hence of malice in fact against any of the persons who were aware of its contents can be recorded. Be that as it may, learned counsel for the petitioner also raised issue with Mrs. Firdous Ashiq Awan's press conference on 30.05.2019. He criticised the derogatory manner in which she discussed the Reference against the petitioner and argued that this was irrefutable proof of the respondents' ill-will against the petitioner. We are in agreement with learned counsel that the press conference was in bad taste. Even though, by 30.05.2019 the news about the Reference was already in the public domain, Mrs. Awan used the information for political point scoring. It is not the petitioner's case that she had any role in preparing or framing the Reference. Therefore, her press conference cannot have any consequences vis a vis the Reference. However, even if the poor choice of words used by Mrs. Awan cannot on their own amount to malice in fact, their hostile and scandalous content during the press conference prima facie shows that she was deriding the petitioner (or was at least attempting to). By such conduct she violated not only Rule 13 of the 2005 Rules but also prima facie breached Article 204 of the Constitution by committing contempt against a sitting Judge of the Supreme Court. Consequently, she should be made answerable for her conduct under Article 204(2)(b) of the Constitution through independent proceedings.

62. Learned counsel for the petitioner next objected to the unusual despatch with which the respondents investigated, prepared and filed the Reference against the petitioner. He submitted that the complaint dated 10.04.2019 was received by Chairman ARU on 12.04.2019. Within four days of its receipt, Chairman ARU met the Law Minister who authorised the investigation against the petitioner. In about a month the entire investigation was completed, with 10.05.2019 being the busiest day. Thereafter, in ten days, on 20.05.2019 the President had signed the Reference. Learned counsel submitted that the completion of the investigation and the preparation of the Reference against the petitioner in such a short period of time strongly indicated ulterior motives on the part of the respondents. With respect to the learned counsel, we are unclear as to how this timeline conveys any ill-motives of the respondents in the matter. The information received by Chairman ARU in the PM's Secretariat was not any routine complaint. It was against a sitting Judge of the Supreme Court and thus received prompt attention from the ARU and the concerned officers of the Federal Government. It must also be said that in such sensitive matters, expeditious action is to be preferred so that if the information is baseless it can be filed without delay. Allowing the affair to linger may expose the process to untoward manipulation and may prejudice the institution and the learned Judge under complaint. But even if we disregard the foregoing view, the crucial question is how does departmental alacrity in the finalisation of the Reference demonstrate malice in fact of the respondents. There is no evidence of falsity of the material collected or of misrepresented facts being alleged by the respondents. Their expedition has no doubt resulted in legal errors (which are discussed below). However, this is still no ground for imputing malice in fact against the respondents. Therefore, this allegation of the petitioner is also without merit.

63. Finally, learned counsel for the petitioner took strong objection to the language used by the AG in his written Rejoinder to the petitioner's Preliminary Response filed before the SJC. He stated that this was clear evidence of the AG's hatred for the petitioner. He read out portions from the Rejoinder in Court, some of which are quoted in the petitioner's pleadings. A few of these are reproduced below:

> "It seems that the Respondent has two mental issues. Firstly, he has a self-persecution phobia; and secondly he considers himself a legend in his own mind, fully bestowed with honesty, integrity and competence and considers the rest of the world as dishonest and incompetent."
>
> "the Respondent craves for self-praise and cheap publicity."
>
> "the Respondent appears to be drenched in self-praise."

We would like to record our disapproval of the language used by the AG for a Judge of the Supreme Court. That being said, the brazen language is not used in the Reference but in the Rejoinder which answers the objections of the petitioner to the Reference. These objections include criticism of the AG's competence which can be found in the Preliminary Response. The AG may have made his harsh remarks about the petitioner in retaliation to the prickly comments made about him. Be that as it may, since the remarks, notwithstanding their indiscretion, were made in the Rejoinder as opposed to in the Reference, these did not form part of the record before the President. As a result, they did not influence the decision of the President to forward the Reference to the SJC for an inquiry. Therefore, being subsequent to the preparation of the Reference and its summary, the AG's remarks cannot be said to reveal malice in fact in the filing of the Reference.

64. Our conclusion about the absence of malice in fact in the filing of the Reference is reaffirmed by the petitioner's admission that the London properties are indeed owned by his wife and children. This is because it is now well-established in other areas of the law that an allegation of malice in fact gets defeated if it is proved that a complaint levelled against a person is true. Accordingly, we hold that the allegations of malice in fact levelled by the petitioner against the respondents fail.

CONSTITUTION OF ASSETS RECOVERY UNIT

65. Learned counsel for the petitioner next criticised the collection of evidence coordinated by the ARU for being unknown to the laws of Pakistan. He stated that the ARU finds no mention in the Constitution, any Act of Parliament or even the Rules of Business, 1973 ("ROB"). Instead, he submitted the ARU was created by the issuance of a Notification dated 06.11.2018 which the Government has not published in the Gazette. He contended that the entire functioning/working of the ARU was shrouded in a cloak of secrecy, notwithstanding that it seemed to be vested with unlimited powers that infringed upon the fundamental rights of the people of Pakistan.

66. Conversely, learned counsel for the respondents submitted that the ARU has been legally constituted. To support his contention he relied on two judgments of this Court reported as 2018 SCMR 574 and PLD 2018 SC 686 ("Foreign Currency Accounts Cases"), which he argued provided the impetus for creating the ARU to act as a coordinating agency between the different finance related institutions of the country to exercise oversight on economic matters of public importance. The purpose and object of the ARU, he urged, was to recover unlawful assets abroad which may have been created via funds obtained through money laundering, corruption or tax evasion. He relied on Rule 16(1)(m) of ROB read with the Notifications issued by the Cabinet Division to demonstrate that ARU had been created with the approval of the Federal Government in accordance with law.

67. In our considered view, the Foreign Currency Accounts Cases provide a backdrop for examining the legality of the ARU. These judgments noticed that a staggering amount of US$ 15.23 billion was transferred overseas, in the financial year 2016-2017, from private bank accounts without obtaining any explanation or proof that the remitted funds had been lawfully earned and taxed. Such transfers were in addition to the funds that may have been sent through covert hundi and hawala instruments. The detrimental effect on the national economy of such transfers cannot be exaggerated. These negative effects were also recognised by this Court in the Foreign Currency Accounts Case reported as PLD 2018 SC 686:

> "5: ...Clearly, both types of outflows have a huge impact on the stability of the foreign exchange reserves of the country and adversely affect the exchange rates of the Pakistani Rupee. Also as a result, the national economy can become vulnerable to pressure due to foreign currency obligations of the State; can suffer undue and disruptive inflation and can drain the exchequer of substantial amounts of tax on account of escaped income and wealth."

However, it must be observed here that the judgments in these cases did not specifically state the need for a body like the ARU to be created. The relevant extract from the judgment reported as PLD 2018 SC 686 is produced below:

> "11: Having said that, it is observed that any measures taken by the Federal Government in the public interest to protect the foreign exchange reserves of the country and to bring the hitherto undeclared foreign assets within the tax net are welcomed by the Court. Nevertheless, there are other deficiencies of the current tax laws and in the regulatory framework for the holding and transfer of foreign exchange that promote the accumulation of undeclared foreign assets and corresponding income. These have been highlighted by the Committee but remain unaddressed by the Federal Government. They require careful attention and deliberation by the concerned authorities. Let the Federal Government, FBR and the State Bank of Pakistan state their respective positions about these matters pointed out by the Committee and indicate if any reform is proposed to correct or remedy the same."

(emphasis supplied)

68. It can thus be observed that the Foreign Currency Accounts Cases did not consider or decide the legality of the status of the ARU established vide Notification dated 06.11.2018. At best, these judgments support reform in the tax and regulatory mechanism of foreign currency accounts and enhanced monitoring of foreign exchange transfers from Pakistan. Therefore, to determine the legality of ARU's creation, one has to consider whether the requisite legal actions and procedures for its establishment have been adopted by the person(s) competent and authorised to do so under the law.

69. In this context, learned counsel for the petitioner's primary grievance against the ARU was that no Act of Parliament had created it or conferred powers on it therefore it was void ab initio. However, this argument of the learned counsel appears to misconstrue the scope of Executive power under the Constitution. The nature and ambit of such power has been considered by the Indian Supreme Court in the case of Rai Sahib Ram Jawaya Kapur and others v. The State of Punjab (AIR 1955 SC 549):

"14: It may not be possible to frame an exhaustive definition of what executive function means and implies. Ordinarily the executive power connotes the residue of governmental functions that remain after legislative and judicial functions are taken away.

15: The executive function comprises both the determination of the policy as well as carrying it into execution. This evidently includes the initiation of legislation, the maintenance of order, the promotion of social and economic welfare, the direction of foreign policy, in fact the carrying on or supervision of the general administration of the State."

(emphasis supplied)

Para-14 of the above noted judgment was approved by this Court in Messrs Mustafa Impex, Karachi v. The Government of Pakistan (PLD 2016 SC 808 at para-69).

70. It can be noticed from these rulings that ordinarily executive functions involve the execution of law and policy and the supervision of the general administration of the State. As already stated above, the ARU is a coordinating agency which brings under one umbrella the competent statutory authorities to stem the menace of tax evasion, money laundering and corruption in our country. Accordingly, the ARU is essentially executing the policy of the State to curb financial crimes in the country. It is therefore an executive office, in particular an 'Attached Department' of the Cabinet Division, performing executive functions. Having such status, it does not need the backing of an Act to grant validity to its creation and actions as required by Article 4 of the Constitution. Evidence for this can be found in the ROB:

"2. Definitions.---(1) In these rules, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context:

..

(ii) "Attached Department" means a Department which has direct relation with a Division and has been declared as such by the Federal Government;"

71. A perusal of Rule 2(1)(ii) makes it clear that for any 'Attached Department' to exist and function, it needs to have a direct relation with a Division and has to be declared by the Federal Government as an 'Attached Department.' The material on record shows that these two essential steps were taken in relation to the creation of ARU. The first of such documents, demonstrating the procedure followed for constituting the ARU as an 'Attached Department,' is the Summary for the Cabinet dated 11.09.2018:

"CABINET DIVISION

SUBJECT: ASSETS RECOVERY UNIT (ARU)

..

3. In view of the above, and in pursuance of earlier decision of the Cabinet [05.09.2018], the following is submitted for consideration and approval of the Cabinet:

..

c. Placement of ARU, under Cabinet Division, to be housed in the Prime Minister's House;"

This was followed by the Notification dated 19.09.2018:

"CABINET SECRETARIAT

CABINET DIVISION

..

No. 643(S)/2018-Cab. The Cabinet, in its meetings held on 5th and 13th September, 2018, vide cases No. 546/35/2018 and No. 556/36/2018, decided to establish the Assets Recovery Unit (ARU) under Cabinet Division, to be housed in the Prime Minister's Office, Islamabad."

The above Notifications prove that the creation of the ARU as an 'Attached Department' of the Cabinet Division was approved by the Cabinet itself. Article 90 of the Constitution establishes that the Cabinet with the PM as its head is the Federal Government. It reads as follows:

"90. The Federal Government:

(1) Subject to the Constitution, the executive authority of the Federation shall be exercised in the name of the President by the Federal Government, consisting of the Prime Minister and the Federal Ministers, which shall act through the Prime Minister, who shall be the chief executive of the Federation."

(emphasis supplied)

Consequently, it becomes evident that the approval for the creation of the ARU was given by the Federal Government. As a result, the two-fold requirement listed in Rule 2 (1) (ii) of the ROB for the constitution of ARU as an 'Attached Department' has been satisfied in the present case.

72. Be that as it may, learned counsel's main objection against the ARU was its alleged interference with the rights and liabilities of individuals in the absence of any statute granting it such a power. However, the Notification dated 06.11.2018 issued by the Cabinet Division shows that the ARU does not act directly but instead operates through its members who have been borrowed from various statutory bodies of the country. These include:

i. The Federal Investigation Agency ("FIA");

ii. The National Accountability Bureau ("NAB");

iii. The FBR; and

iv. The State Bank of Pakistan ("SBP") .

As a result, the ARU is manned primarily with individuals whose powers and jurisdiction are exercised under a statutory regime. Accordingly, the ARU is simply a coordinating office attached to the Cabinet Division with the main purpose of facilitating the collaborative efforts of the relevant statutory functionaries. It therefore cannot be accused of adversely affecting the rights of any Pakistani citizen without the backing of law. This is made clear by the composition of the ARU and its terms of reference ("TORs") which are also set out in the above noted Notification dated 06.11.2018:

"CABINET DIVISION

..

NOTIFICATION

No. F.32/CM/2018-Cab. The Cabinet, in its meeting held on 5th September, 2018, vide case No.546/35/2018, approved the Establishment of Assets Recovery Unit for implementation of Recovery of Unlawful Assets Abroad.

2. The composition and terms of reference of Assets Recovery Unit shall be as follows:

A. Composition:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | SAPM on Accountability. | Chairman |
| 2. | Senior Officer from Federal Investigation Agency (FIA). | Member |
| 3. | Senior Officer from National Accountability Bureau (NAB). | Member |
| 4. | Senior Officer from Federal Board of Revenue (FBR). | Member |
| 5. | Senior Officer from State Bank of Pakistan (SBP). | Member |
| 6. | 2/3 Experts from private sector with expertise in forensic accounting, anti-money laundering, international criminal laws and transactional legal systems. | Members |
| 7. | Any other officer/agency/ firm/ or individual if so required by the Unit on temporary or permanent basis may be co-opted by the Unit. | |

B. Terms of Reference:

..

3. Assets Recovery Unit designated officers from relevant organization/ department/ other law enforcement agencies like NAB, FIA or FBR shall with consultation/ support of relevant LEA, trace/detect and pursue repatriation of unlawful assets from abroad. For this purpose, ARU may seek help/assistance of foreign governments/firms/lawyers or individuals if so required."

TOR 3 confirms that when it comes to dealing with the assets of Pakistani citizens, the ARU is only authorised to act through its designated officer/member from the relevant department/ agency. Since these designated officers/ members are simultaneously serving in statutory agencies, they are vested not only with the powers granted by the relevant statute governing their agency but are also bound by the procedural safeguards and obligations laid down in such a statute. As a result, any action attributed to the ARU in relation to the assets of Pakistani citizens is taken through competent authorities strictly in accordance with the law.

73. As far as the issue of non-publication of the Notification dated 06.11.2018, setting out the composition and TORs of the ARU, is concerned, this Court in the case of Saghir Ahmed v. Province of Punjab (PLD 2004 SC 261) has observed:

"9: It depends on the language employed in a particular statute as to whether the provisions regarding publication of a statutory instrument or a notification in the Official Gazette are to be treated as mandatory or directory.

10. Even otherwise, the provisions of a statute for the publication or a notification in official Gazette are generally regarded by the Courts as directory and where their strict non-compliance does not provide any consequences. The legal certainty also requires that ordinarily a statutory instrument should not be treated as invalid because of a failure on the part of public functionaries to publish it in the official Gazette. There may be many things done on the basis of such an instrument. It would seem unfortunate were these things held to be invalid if it were at some stage discovered that there had been a failure by a public authority to go meticulously by the manner and mode of publication of an instrument or notification in the Official Gazette.

...

11. However, no hard and fast rule of universal application can be laid down on the legal effect of non-publication of a notification in the official Gazette. In certain cases, keeping in view the nature and object of a particular statute and to carry out the legislative intent, the provisions for the publication of a notification in the official Gazette can be treated to be mandatory in nature where rights or liabilities of other persons are involved. ..."

(emphasis supplied)

The above quoted para-10 was subsequently affirmed by this Court in Bahadur Khan v. Federation of Pakistan (2017 SCMR 2066 at para-12). What can be noticed from the quoted passage is that in ordinary circumstances, the non-publication of a Notification in the gazette does not affect its validity except for in limited situations such as when a statute makes publication in the gazette mandatory or where the rights and liabilities of other persons are involved. In the present case before us there is no statute which makes publication of the Notification creating the ARU mandatory. Furthermore, wherever the rights and liabilities of citizens are affected, the existing statutory mechanisms are utilised to ensure actions taken are in accordance with the law. Even in the Reference against the petitioner, the material on record demonstrates that all intrusive actions were taken by officers belonging to the relevant statutory agencies. For example, the tax records of the petitioner were examined by the Assistant Commissioner (Inland Revenue), and the identification documents and travel records were accessed by Director FIA. Therefore, since none of the exceptions to non-publication apply to the facts of the present case, we find that there is no illegality that persuades us to hold that the publication of the Notifications dated 20.08.2018 and 06.11.2018 in the gazette was mandatory.

74. Next, learned counsel for the petitioner attacked the appointment of Mirza Shahzad Akbar as SAPM on Accountability. In response, learned counsel for the respondents relied on Rule 4(6) and serial number 1A of Schedule V-A of the ROB to defend the said appointment. For the sake of convenience, these are reproduced below:

"4. Organization of Divisions.

.

(6): There may be a Special Assistant or Special Assistants to the Prime Minister with such status and functions as may be determined by the Prime Minister.

.

Schedule V-A

[Rule 15(1)(g)(h)]

LIST OF CASES TO BE SUBMITTED TO THE PRIME MINISTER FOR HIS ORDERS

.

1A. Appointment, resignation and removal of Special Assistants to the Prime Minister and of persons holding the Minister's status without Cabinet rank, determination of their salaries, allowances and privileges."

It may be noticed from these provisions that they give the PM the power to appoint a Special Assistant with such status and functions as he desires. However, learned counsel for the petitioner disputed this assertion and questioned the appointment of Mirza Shahzad Akbar, Respondent No. 8, as SAPM by a simple Notification dated 20.08.2018, which reads as follows:

"No. 2-8/2018-Min-I.---In terms of rule 4(6) of the Rules of Business, 1973 read with serial number 1A of Schedule V-A of the said Rules, the Prime Minister has been pleased to appoint, with immediate effect, Mirza Shahzad Akbar as Special Assistant to the Prime Minister on Accountability, with the status of Minister of State."

He lamented that nothing was known about the educational qualifications or expertise of Mirza Shahzad Akbar. Even the process followed to select him from among other qualified persons as SAPM on Accountability was non-transparent. These questions of the learned counsel are addressed in this Court's judgment dated 26.12.2018 given in Muhammad Adil Chattha v. Federation of Pakistan (Constitution Petition No. 63 of 2018). The relevant portion at paragraph 14 is reproduced below:

"14: In view of the fact that the qualifications and antecedents for appointment of a Special Assistant to the Prime Minister are neither mentioned in the Constitution nor in the Rules of Business. It appears to have been left at the discretion of the Prime Minister of Pakistan on the basis of his subjective assessment about the ability of a person to perform the functions that the Prime Minister requires him to perform for such appointment..."

75. The above noted observations were made in the context that no substantive provisions of the Constitution create the office of SAPM. However, the said office is mentioned in Article 260 of the Constitution as one of the posts that is excluded from the definition of 'Service of Pakistan.' Therefore, at present the post of an SAPM is a political appointment. Accordingly, the said appointment is made in the discretion of the PM and is not regulated by statute. This aspect is highlighted by Rule 4(6) and serial number 1A of Schedule V-A of the ROB. However, it was observed in the Adil Chattha case (supra) that the Court will interfere if the PM exercises his discretionary power 'arbitrarily, unlawfully or in a fanciful manner,' or if the appointment of a person as SAPM suffers from 'cronyism, nepotism or political favour.' In such a situation the appointment will be struck down under Article 199(b)(ii) of the Constitution. As a result, there is a judicial check on the exercise of the PM's discretion. Nonetheless, this relief cannot be claimed in collateral proceedings, a principle which has been affirmed many a times by this Court. For instance, in the case of Qazi Hussain Ahmad v. General Pervez Musharraf (PLD 2002 SC 853) it was observed:

"73: ... No challenge muchless effective was thrown to the assumption of office of President by him and even in these petitions the challenge has been made only peripherally and collaterally while challenging the Referendum Order. It is well-settled that a writ of quo warranto cannot be brought through collateral attack. Such a relief has to be claimed directly. We are fortified in this behalf by the judgment of this Court in Pir Sabir Shah's case (PLD 1994 SC 738). Not only in this case but also in other cases it was held that for orderly and good governance validity of the appointment of incumbent of public office cannot be impugned through collateral proceedings."

(emphasis supplied)

The learned counsel for the petitioner has neither challenged the appointment of Respondent No.8 as SAMP Accountability in separate proceedings under Article 199(b)(ii) of the Constitution nor has he placed any material on record which disqualifies Mirza Shahzad Akbar from being appointed to this office. Therefore, without proof of illegal or arbitrary exercise of discretion by the PM, we cannot interfere with his decision on this matter.

76. In the light of our discussion, we declare that there is neither any fatal defect in the creation of ARU nor is there any unlawfulness in the appointment of Mirza Shahzad Akbar as SAPM Accountability.

SURVEILLANCE AND ILLEGALLY COLLECTED EVIDENCE

77. The learned counsel for the petitioner also criticised the respondents' method of collection of evidence in the present case. He stated that the tax and property records of the petitioner and his family were accessed to frame the Reference against the petitioner, a fact admitted by the respondents. These searches he alleged were a breach of the petitioner's and his family's right to privacy enshrined in Article 14(1) of the Constitution and thus amounted to covert surveillance. He, therefore, urged this Court to hold that such evidence had become inadmissible in all related future proceedings. Conversely, learned counsel for the respondents, without prejudice to his denial that there had been any illegality in the collection of evidence in the instant case, cited case-law from Pakistan, United Kingdom and India to demonstrate that the method of collection of evidence, irrespective of whether it was secured lawfully or otherwise, was no bar to its admissibility. Specifically, he relied on the following cases: Messrs Bisvil Spinners (Pvt.) Ltd. v. Pakistan (PLD 1992 SC 96), Kuruma v. The Queen ([1955] AC 197) and R.M. Malkani v. State of Maharashtra (AIR 1973 SC 157).

78. At the very outset it becomes clear that this plea of the petitioner raises two distinct issues: surveillance and illegal collection of evidence. To have a coherent discussion of each aspect of the petitioner's plea, the two issues are dealt with separately. Before arriving at any decision on the allegation of covert surveillance pressed by the petitioner, it needs to be understood what actions actually constitute surveillance. A comprehensive definition is not available in our laws but can be found in Section 48(2) of the UK's Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act, 2000:

"48 Interpretation of Part II

..

(2) Subject to subsection (3), in this Part "surveillance" includes-

(a) monitoring, observing or listening to persons, their movements, their conversations or their other activities or communications;

(b) recording anything monitored, observed or listened to in the course of surveillance; and

(c) surveillance by or with the assistance of a surveillance device."

It may be noticed from the above mentioned provision that surveillance primarily involves the monitoring or recording of a person's movements, conversations or other activities and communication. However, in the present case the learned counsel for the petitioner has not produced any evidence before us which demonstrates that either the petitioner or his family have been monitored or their communications have been intercepted in the above manner.

79. In fact, the only proof which learned counsel has referred to is the admission by the respondents that the tax and property records of the petitioner and his family have been accessed from Government and public records. Indeed, there is no allegation that any information was obtained from the petitioner's personal or private records. However, during arguments learned counsel for the petitioner denied that this distinction made any difference to his primary contention of invasion of privacy and unlawful surveillance because of what is now commonly known as the 'Marcel principle.' This principle has been aptly explained by the UK Supreme Court in Regina (Ingenious Media Holdings plc) v Revenue and Customs Commissioner ([2016] 1 WLR 4164):

"17: It is a well established principle of the law of confidentiality that where information of a personal or confidential nature is obtained or received in the exercise of a legal power or in furtherance of a public duty, the recipient will in general owe a duty to the person from whom it was received or to whom it relates not to use it for other purposes"

Nevertheless, it may also be noted that the 'Marcel Principle' is not absolute and can be deviated from. In fact, the House of Lords in Hamilton v Naviede ([ 1995] 2 AC 75) conceded this point when Lord Browne-Wilkinson speaking for the Court held:

"Page 102: In my view, where information has been obtained under statutory powers the duty of confidence owed on the Marcel principle cannot operate so as to prevent the person obtaining the information from disclosing it to those persons to whom the statutory provisions either require or authorise him to make disclosure."

The petitioner's case ignores the above mentioned qualification to the 'Marcel Principle.'

80. Starting first with Section 216(1) of the Ordinance: this provision declares the tax records of taxpayers to be confidential. However, the same Section also contains the exceptions to this general rule. For our purposes, the exception found in Section 216(3)(p) is most relevant. It is produced below for reference:

"216. Disclosure of information by a public servant

..

(3) Nothing contained in subsection (1) shall preclude the disclosure of any such particulars -

..

(p) as may be required by any officer or department of the Federal Government or of a Provincial Government for the purpose of investigation into the conduct and affairs of any public servant, or to a Court in connection with any prosecution of the public servant arising out of any such investigation;"

(emphasis supplied)

The learned counsel for the petitioner has strongly resisted the application of Section 216(3)(p) ibid to the facts of this case. He submitted that the petitioner is not a public servant for the purposes of the Ordinance. Therefore, his tax records could not be sought by an officer of the Federal Government for the purposes of an investigation. To fortify his submission, he stated that a Judge of the Supreme Court did not fall within the definition of "Service of Pakistan" laid down in Article 260 of the Constitution. For convenience, this provision is reproduced below:

"260 Definitions. (1) In the Constitution, unless the context otherwise requires, the following expressions have the meaning hereby respectively assigned to them, that is to say, "Service of Pakistan" means any service, post or office in connection with the affairs of the Federation or of a Province, and includes an All-Pakistan Service, service in the Armed Forces and any other service declared to be a service of Pakistan by or under Act of [Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament)] or of a Provincial Assembly, but does not include service as Speaker, Deputy Speaker, Chairman, Deputy Chairman, Prime Minister, Federal Minister, Minister of State, Chief Minister, Provincial Minister [,Attorney-General, [Advocate-General,] Parliamentary Secretary] [, Chairman or member of a Law Commission, Chairman or member of the Council of Islamic Ideology, Special Assistant to the Prime Minister, Adviser to the Prime Minister, Special Assistant to Chief Minister, Adviser to a Chief Minister] or member of a House or a Provincial Assembly;"

(emphasis supplied)

81. It may be observed from Article 260 quoted above that Judges of the Superior Courts are not explicitly included in the 'Service of Pakistan.' However, the essential features of such service are provided in Article 260 ibid. These have been interpreted by this Court to include the office of Judges of Superior Courts within the category of 'Service of Pakistan.' Reliance is placed on the case of Asghar Khan (supra) wherein it was observed:

"78: Besides the office of the President, the Judges and Chief Justices of the superior courts are also included in the scope of service of Pakistan by failing to make reference to them among the exclusions from service of Pakistan in Article 260."

(emphasis supplied)

Accordingly, Judges of the Supreme Court are engaged in the 'Service of Pakistan.' However, the exception to the confidentiality of tax records under Section 216(3)(p) of the Ordinance is available only where disclosure is required for the purposes of an 'investigation into the conduct and affairs of any public servant by any officer or department of the Federal Government.' Therefore, it needs to be determined what the terms 'investigation' and 'public servant' mean. If we examine the expression 'public servant' first, it becomes clear on a perusal of the Ordinance that this word has not been defined in the said law. However, it does find mention in the tax statutes that preceded the Ordinance, namely, the Income Tax Act, 1922 and the Income Tax Ordinance, 1979 ("predecessor tax laws"). Section 2(13) of the former and Section 2(36) of the latter described the term 'public servant' to have the same meaning as that ascribed to it by the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 ("P.P.C."). On a perusal of the P.P.C., it becomes clear that the predecessor tax laws are referring to Section 21 of the P.P.C. which reads:

""21. "Public Servant" The words "public servant" denotes a person falling under any of the descriptions herein after following, namely:-

First: [omitted]

Second: Every Commissioned Officer in the Military, Naval or Air Forces of Pakistan while serving under the Federal Government or any Provincial Government;

Third: Every Judge;"

82. A Judge is an appointee under law of a Court or a Tribunal. Such law may be enacted either by the Federation or the Province. Section 21 of P.P.C. declares every Judge in Pakistan to be a public servant. Therefore, a person holding judicial office is a public servant. Since Judges of the Superior Courts are appointed under the Constitution, it is only logical that the definition of public servant in Section 21 of the P.P.C. includes such Judges. As a result, it follows from well-established rules of interpretation (which need not be set out here) that the expression 'public servant' continues to bear the same meaning in the Ordinance as it did in the predecessor tax laws. Nevertheless, while in ordinary circumstances this would be sufficient to settle the debate on the question of whether Judges are public servants, in light of the constitutional importance of this petition it is advisable if this question is answered conclusively by applying the features of public office, set out by this Court, to the office of a Judge of the Superior Courts. Reference is made to the judgment of this Court in Salahuddin v. Frontier Sugar Mills and Distillery Ltd. (PLD 1975 SC 244) which quotes the following passage from Ferris's Extraordinary Legal Remedies, 1925 Edn, page 145, with approval:

"Pages 258-259: "a public office is the right, authority and duty created and conferred by law, by which an individual is vested with some portion of the sovereign functions of the Government to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public, for the term and by the tenure prescribed by law. It implies a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power. It is a trust conferred by public authority for a public purpose, embracing the ideas of tenure, duration emolument and duties. A public officer is thus to be distinguished from a mere employment or agency resting on contract, to which such powers and functions are not attached . . . . . The determining factor, the test, is whether the office involves a delegation of some of the sovereign functions of Government, either executive, legislative or judicial, to be exercised by the holder for the public benefit. Unless his powers are of this nature, he is not a public officer.""

(emphasis supplied)

83. It becomes plain from the above cited dictum that there are five main ingredients present in the office of a public servant. These are:

a. The office is a trut conferred for a public purpose;

b. The functions of the office are conferred by law;

c. The office involves the exercise of a portion of the sovereign functions of Government whether that be executive, legislative or judicial;

d. The term and tenure of the office are determined by law; and

e. Remuneration is paid from public funds.

84. When the office of a Judge of the Supreme Court is scrutinised against these ingredients, it becomes obvious that Judges of this Court are indeed public servants. Their office is created by the Constitution and so are the jurisdiction and powers that they possess. They perform an essential governmental function: the administration of justice for the benefit of the public at large. They have a fixed tenure, prescribed by Article 179 of the Constitution and their emoluments are paid from the Federal Consolidated Fund under Article 81 of the Constitution. As a result, there is no doubt that a Judge of the Supreme Court is a public servant for the purposes of Section 216(3) (p) of the Ordinance. We then have the terms 'investigation' and 'officer or department of Federal Government.' In our view, these expressions are not intended to be used in a narrow, technical or pedantic manner. Instead, they are to be given a natural, though contextual, meaning. For instance, the term 'investigation' is not to be used only in the sense in which it is defined in Section 4(1)(l) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. In fact, in relation to the Judge of a Superior Court, an 'investigation' into his 'conduct and affairs' can only mean an investigation for the purposes of Article 209 of the Constitution. However, it is critical (for the exception in Section 216(3)(p) to be attracted) that the 'investigation' is duly sanctioned and is being carried out in accordance with law at the time that the clause is invoked. If this is not so then clause (p) can have no application and the information cannot be disclosed. As will become clear later on in the judgment, there was no proper investigation for the purposes of Article 209 when the ARU sought the tax information of the petitioner from the FBR. Consequently, the exception in Section 216(3)(p) of the Ordinance is not applicable to the facts of the case.

85. As far as Mrs. Isa is concerned, the language of clause (p) suggests that it is not limited only to information relating to the public servant. Instead, provided that the other conditions laid down therein are met, this clause also applies to any other taxpayer as long as it can be shown that there is a real, direct and substantial connection/ nexus between the information sought in relation to the latter and the investigation underway into the conduct and affairs of the public servant. And, ipso facto, unless tax information is sought in respect of the public servant no such information of any taxpayer can be accessed. Hence, the exception under Section 216(3)(p) of the Ordinance also applies to Mrs. Isa. However, as already noted (and which will be discussed in detail later on) the jurisdictional prerequisites for carrying out an investigation against the petitioner did not exist. It therefore follows that the request made by the ARU for the tax information and the release of such information by the tax authorities did not fall within the exception contained in clause (p) . As a result, the disclosure was contrary to law.

86. Be that as it may, our conclusion that the petitioner or his spouse did not disclose the London Properties in their wealth statements is not based on the tax information unlawfully harvested by the respondents. Rather, in the case of the petitioner, we have relied on the stance taken by him in his pleadings that he has no connection whatsoever with the London Properties. It logically follows then that he did not declare these properties in his wealth statements. With respect to Mrs. Isa, we have based our decision on the oral statement she made in Court through video link on 18.06.2020 (elaborated more fully below) that prior to 2018 she had not declared the London Properties in her wealth statements. As a result, in these circumstances when we have not taken into consideration the tax information collected illegally by the respondents, we do not deem it necessary to pass any definitive finding on whether, and if so, in which circumstances and to what extent, such information is admissible in a court of law.

87. Finally, there is the property search carried out by the respondents in the United Kingdom. Although during the initial stage of oral arguments, learned counsel for the petitioner vehemently argued that these searches were a violation of the right to privacy, he later accepted that the property searches were in fact carried out from the public record. It would be useful at this stage to set out the procedure for such property searches. Essentially, the entire operation consists of a two-step process. In the first step, the name of the relevant person is searched on the open source website 192.com which gives a list of the addresses of the potential properties owned by the said person. Subsequently, these addresses are entered into the UK Land Registry website, on the payment of a fee ( 3 for each property search), which gives the details of not only the property but also the name of the owner. It is by now well-established that the UK Land Registry is an open source. This is corroborated by Section 66 of the Land Registration Act, 2002 which reads:

"66 Inspection of the registers etc

(1) Any person may inspect and make copies of, or of any part of-

(a) the register of title,

(b) any document kept by the registrar which is referred to in the register of title,

(c) any other document kept by the registrar which relates to an application to him, or

(d) the register of cautions against first registration."

(emphasis supplied)

Accordingly, the argument of the learned counsel for the petitioner that the property search was a violation of the right to privacy has become a moot point because it is now obvious that in searching these records the respondents have not violated any law. Indeed, there is no law to violate since property records are open to the public (and have been since 03.12.1990). Consequently, no confidentiality attaches to such records. Clearly then, the acts of the officers of ARU and the Federal Government in accessing the property records of the petitioner and his family cannot be classified as either invasion of privacy or covert surveillance.

88. While reaching this decision, we have been conscious of Article 14(1) of the Constitution produced herein below:

"14 Inviolability of dignity of man, etc.

(1) The dignity of man and, subject to law, the privacy of home, shall be inviolable."

However, it is pertinent to mention here that the guarantee under Article 14(1) is for the privacy of home and that too subject to law. Such privacy does not extend to the tax and property records of either the petitioner or his family members. Moreover, learned counsel's reliance on the case of Mohatarma Benazir Bhutto v. President of Pakistan (PLD 1998 SC 388) to support his contention of covert surveillance and a violation of the right to privacy is misplaced. The facts of that case are distinguishable from the facts of the present case. In the former it was established that the homes, Chambers and telephones of Judges of the Superior Courts were tapped and bugged:

> "27: The list of persons whose telephones were tapped and were under surveillance consists of Judges of the superior Courts including the Chief Justice of Pakistan, Chief Justice of the Federal Shariat Court, Chief Justice of the High Court of Balochistan, Chief Justice and Judges of the High Courts of Lahore and Sindh, rest houses and Chambers of the Judges were all subjected to such illegal act which will make a respectable nation to hang its head in shame...
>
> 28. The tapping and eaves-dropping of the telephones of the Judges of the superior or the subordinate Courts interferes in the discharge of duties and decision of cases, which a Judge is bound to do under law and the Constitution. A bug was planted in the Chambers of the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan wherever he was, bugs were also planted in the Judges' rest houses, their privacy in home, Chambers or in the rest houses was all under surveillance by illegal intrusion. It is a matter of common knowledge that the Judges while hearing the cases in a Bench usually discuss the merits and demerits in chambers and in privacy. They also dictate their judgments in their Chambers where no intrusion or interference is allowed. By tapping and bugging the Chambers and homes of the Judges, interference is made in the proper discharge of duties which is wholly destructive of the independence of judiciary and its ability to function as a coordinate branch and pillar of the State."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

However, no similar allegation has been levelled by the petitioner against the respondents. Therefore, while it was correct to hold that there had been unlawful surveillance and a violation of Article 14(1) of the Constitution in the Benazir Bhutto case (supra), giving the same ruling on the facts of the instant case will be tantamount to stretching the ratio decidendi of that case beyond its ambit. Consequently, we find that learned counsel's invocation of Article 14(1) in the present circumstances is erroneous.

DEFECTS IN THE REFERENCE

89. A strong objection was also raised by learned counsel for the petitioner about the defects inherent in the preparation of the Reference. This submission covered three main aspects: lack of authorisation by the President for investigating the affairs of the petitioner, the complete bypass of the judicial tax hierarchy by the Government before making out a case under Section 116 of the Ordinance against the petitioner and the non-application of mind by the President in sending the Reference to the SJC. In addressing us on these points, learned counsel for the petitioner adopted the findings of this Court given in the CJP case (supra). He argued that all stages of a Presidential reference prior to the SJC proceedings could be struck down on ordinary judicial review grounds (albeit he only pressed the ground of mala fide when touching upon the validity of the pre-SJC proceedings). He submitted that the Reference suffered from serious violations of law and procedure which rendered it liable to be quashed.

90. On the other hand, learned counsel for the respondents began his submissions with the contention that a Presidential reference needed to satisfy only a very low threshold of correctness, and that merely a prima facie case needed to be established by the respondents on the accuracy of the contents of the Reference. He further submitted that this Court could not analyse in any detail the opinion formed by the President in deciding to send the Reference to the SJC; instead we were only limited to examining whether there was some material before the President which had nexus with the object of Article 209 of the Constitution. In simple terms, learned counsel stated that only the 'structural elements' of the Reference could be looked into by this Court and any errors, whether minor or major, could not invalidate the opinion of the President as long as there existed some material which showed that a Superior Court Judge may have been guilty of misconduct. However, learned counsel for the respondents did not address the Bench on the critical issue of authorisation of an investigation against a Judge.

91. Before giving our findings on the defects in the Reference, highlighted by learned counsel for the petitioner, we would like to address the submission of learned counsel for the respondents that a Presidential reference needs to satisfy only a very low threshold of factual and legal correctness with regard to its contents. In our considered view, learned counsel has conflated a low burden of proof with a low standard of care. It is true that Article 209(5) of the Constitution only requires the President to form an opinion that a Superior Court Judge may have been guilty of misconduct. He does not need to be certain that a Judge is guilty of the conduct alleged. Nevertheless, his opinion must be based on positive and affirmative material and on the assurance that necessary legal and procedural safeguards have been observed in the preparation of the reference. Therefore, for the President to even form a prima facie opinion about a Judge's guilt, the President needs to verify that there has been compliance with the settled rules on authorisation; he needs to obtain proper advice on the contents of the reference from competent persons; and he needs to ascertain that there is sufficient material before him which satisfies the high thresholds of care and proof expected in the preparation of a reference.

92. At this stage it would be appropriate to consider why we have set out this requirement of a high standard of care and proof for the formulation of a reference. It needs to be kept in mind that a complaint against a Superior Court Judge can be generated in one of three ways: a Presidential reference, a private complaint and the exercise of suo motu jurisdiction by SJC. Since all three methods are distinct, therefore, the quality of their information/ complaint will also be different. Take for instance a complaint by an ordinary citizen. It is a certainty that when an individual files a complaint against a Judge, he will only be able to provide primitive or half-baked information. This is because an individual only has limited resources at his disposal. He cannot be expected to unearth all the necessary information needed to fully document his complaint. However, a Presidential reference is articulated on a different level compared to a private complaint. When the President, as the Head of State, sends a reference against a Judge, he has at his disposal State agencies and access to competent legal advice. He can utilise these to verify that valid authorisation for investigation has been granted and that materials that are relevant and reliable under the test laid down in Bisvil Spinners (supra) are available to support the reference. However, if this Court were to lay down that despite all the machinery of the Federal Government at his command, the President is only required/ obliged to send a perfunctory reference which contains legal and factual defects, then nothing will be more harmful to the independence of the judiciary. Such a relaxation will give the Executive the room to send frivolous references with the expectation that if some nexus between the material and the object of Article 209 of the Constitution is demonstrated, the SJC will itself find substance in the reference. Therefore, to protect and defend the independence of the judiciary, we hold that a reference sent by the President must contain authorised, serious, considered and verified information in both respects, legal and factual, in order to possess the gravity that should accompany a Presidential action.

AUTHORISATION FOR INVESTIGATION

93. Having determined that a reference needs to be thorough, it now needs to be decided whether the Reference against the petitioner satisfies this test. One of the basic objections to the validity of the Reference is the lack of authorisation for investigation conducted prior to the Reference's filing. Learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) is authority for the proposition that authorisation for investigating the affairs of the petitioner (or for that matter any other Superior Court Judge) could only have come from the President himself. The relevant portion from the judgment is produced below:

"64: A perusal of the above-quoted provisions of Article 209 would reveal that... clauses (5) and (6) of the said Article 209 tell us of various steps of the exercise leading to the removal of a Superior Court Judge... Reverting back to the various steps mentioned above, I would summarize the same as under:

(i) receipt of information by the President, from any source, about the mental or physical incapacity of a Judge or of his being guilty of misconduct;

(ii) collection of material in support of the said information;

(iii) formation of opinion by the President that such a Judge may well be incapable as above-mentioned or may have committed misconduct;

(iv) the consequent direction (generally called the Reference) by the President to the Council to inquire into the matter;"

(emphasis supplied)

94. Learned counsel argued that the above passage confirms that the only purpose for ensuring that information against a Judge is received by the President is to obtain his permission to proceed with the investigation to collect material in support of the said information. However, as the record shows this was not done. Instead, when the complaint of Mr.Dogar was received, the Chairman of ARU obtained the authorisation of the Law Minister on 16.04.2019 to commence an investigation against the petitioner. This is evident from the letter of the Chairman ARU dated 10.05.2019. However, such authorisation is against the law enunciated in the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra), and therefore cannot stand. The only reasoning advanced by learned counsel for the respondents to defend the act of the Law Minister authorising the investigation against the petitioner was item 21(10) of Schedule II of ROB which reads:

"Schedule II

[Rule 3(3)]

DISTRIBUTION OF BUSINESS AMONG THE DIVISIONS

..

21. Law and Justice Division

..

(10) Federal Government functions in regard to the... Supreme Judicial Council..."

However, this is a very widely worded provision which deals with the allocation of business and not the vesting of power in the Law Minister to authorise investigations against Superior Court Judges. Indeed, the ROB do not at all deal with the matter of investigations against Judges of the Superior Courts. Consequently, this issue has to be resolved by interpreting the relevant Constitutional provisions. While the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) does not make an explicit statement to the effect that authorisation for investigation must be granted by the President, the sequence of steps given in para-64 (reproduced above) of that judgment interpret Article 209(5) of the Constitution as granting the President such a power. However, logic dictates that the President cannot personally assess accusatory information against a Judge and instead requires assistance and advice in the matter. In this respect, there is no law that lays down the procedure for obtaining such support for the President. Therefore, in such a situation the Constitutional principles become relevant. To gather the Constitutional intent as to who is the competent authority for authorising an investigation against a Superior Court Judge, Article 209(5) of the Constitution should be the starting point of the discussion. For convenience, this sub-Article is reproduced below:

"209. Supreme Judicial Council.

..

(5) If, on information from any source, the Council or the President is of the opinion that a Judge of the Supreme Court or of a High Court-

(a) may be incapable of properly performing the duties of his office by reason of physical or mental incapacity; or

(b) may have been guilty of misconduct, the President shall direct the Council to, or the Council may, on its own motion, inquire into the matter."

95. It can be noticed that Article 209 involves only two Constitutional authorities in the initiation and consideration of a reference against a Superior Court Judge: the SJC and the President. The SJC only becomes involved in the proceedings once the reference is forwarded to it by the President. The observation in the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) about the collection of material in support of the information against a Judge has been referred above. Although the case was decided on the ground of mala fide of facts, however, the observation about collection of material against a Judge provides useful guidance. Under the Constitutional scheme the President cannot personally be responsible for authorising an investigation into an allegation against a Judge. He does not exercise his official functions as he desires but instead acts on the advice of the PM or the Cabinet under Article 48(1) except for in situations where the Constitution has directed him to act in his discretion under Article 48(2). However, the sequence of steps noted in para-64 of the CJP judgment (supra) does not deal with the constitutional mechanism under which the President may authorise collection of material against a Judge of the Superior Courts. At present there are three methods under Article 48 of the Constitution by which the President may possibly authorise such an investigation. To dilate further on this matter, it would be appropriate to read Article 48:

"48. President to act on advice, etc. (1) In the exercise of his functions, the President shall act on and in accordance with the advice of the Cabinet or the Prime Minister:

Provided that [after fifteen days] the President may require the Cabinet or as the case may be, the Prime Minister to reconsider such advice, either generally or otherwise, and the President shall, within ten days, act in accordance with the advice tendered after such reconsideration.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in clause (1), the President shall act in his discretion in respect of any matter in respect of which he is empowered by the Constitution to do so and the validity of anything done by the President in his discretion shall not be called in question on any ground whatsoever."

96. It may be noticed that the President may be required by the Constitution to act on the advice of the PM or Cabinet under sub-Article (1) of Article 48 or to act in his own discretion under sub-Article (2) of the said Article. It is an appealing hypothesis that the President should act in his discretion when authorising an investigation against a Superior Court Judge. Indeed, there is force in the proposition that the removal process of Judges must be as isolated from the Executive as possible. However, this conclusion conflicts with the Constitutional scheme. Security of tenure of Judges and independence of the judiciary are most certainly assured by our Constitution. However, these can be enforced in accordance with the Constitutional scheme for the functioning of the Federal Government which has significantly been altered by the 18th Amendment passed in the year 2010. A salient feature of this Constitutional Amendment is that it resets the balance of powers and functions between the President and the PM. Before this Amendment, several provisions in the Constitution allowed the President to carry out functions in his discretion. Some provisions are quoted to illustrate the point:

"48. President to act on advice, etc.

..

(6) If, at any time, the President, in his discretion, or on the advice of the Prime Minister, considers that it is desirable that any matter of national importance should be referred to a referendum, the President may cause the matter to be referred to a referendum in the form of a question that is capable of being answered either by "Yes" or "No".

58. Dissolution of the National Assembly

..

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in clause (2) of Article 48, the President may also dissolve the National Assembly in his discretion where, in his opinion,:-

(a) a vote of no-confidence having been passed against the Prime Minister, no other member of the National Assembly is likely to command the confidence of the majority of the members of the National Assembly in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution as ascertained in a session of the National Assembly summoned for the purpose; or

(b) a situation has arisen in which the Government of the Federation cannot be carried on in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution and an appeal to the electorate is necessary.

91. Cabinet

..

(2) The President shall in his discretion appoint from amongst the members of the National Assembly a Prime Minister who, in his opinion, is most likely to command the confidence of the majority of the members of the National Assembly."

(emphasis supplied)

After the 18th Amendment, almost all of the discretionary powers of the President have either been omitted or have been made exercisable on the advice of the PM or the Cabinet. The above mentioned provisions stand amended as follows:

"48. President to act on advice, etc.

..

(6) If at any time the Prime Minister considers it necessary to hold a referendum on any matter of national importance, he may refer the matter to a joint sitting of the Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament) and if it is approved in a joint sitting, the Prime Minister may cause such matter to be referred to a referendum in the form of a question that is capable of being answered by either "Yes" or "No".

58. Dissolution of National Assembly

..

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in clause (2) or Article 48, the President may dissolve the National Assembly in his discretion where, a vote of no-confidence having been passed against the Prime Minister, no other member of the National Assembly commands the confidence of the majority of the members of the National Assembly in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, as ascertained in a session of the National Assembly summoned for the purpose.

91. Cabinet

..

(4) The Prime Minister shall be elected by the votes of the majority of the total membership of the National Assembly..."

(emphasis supplied)

97. The only exception to this change, brought about by the 18th Amendment, is Article 58(2) which read with Article 91(7) of the Constitution still allows the President to dissolve the National Assembly in his discretion if a vote of no-confidence has been passed against the sitting PM and no other member of National Assembly commands the confidence of the majority. As a result, while the substance of Article 48(2) has remained the same, the subject matters governed by this Constitutional provision have been substantially curtailed. Therefore, to hold that the President can authorise an investigation against a Judge in his own discretion will be doing violence to the language of the Constitution. It is our considered view that Article 48(2) only applies where the President is specifically authorised by the Constitution to act in his discretion. No such command is given to the President in Article 209(5) of the Constitution which governs the removal of Judges.

98. Moreover, the sending of a reference is an executive act performed by the Federal Government. To declare that the President is to authorise investigations into Superior Court Judges in his discretion would amount to inviting the President to arrogate powers in complete contradiction of the Constitutional scheme. The 18th Amendment has shifted the Government's decision making in the working of the State. Evidence of this shift can be found in Article 90 of the Constitution which prior to the 18th Amendment read as follows:

"90. Exercise of executive authority of the Federation.

(1) The executive authority of the Federation shall vest in the President and shall be exercised by him, either directly or through officers subordinate to him, in accordance with the Constitution"

However, after the 18th Amendment, this provision has been significantly modified. For ease of reference, it is produced below:

"90. The Federal Government:

(1) Subject to the Constitution, the executive authority of the Federation shall be exercised in the name of the President by the Federal Government, consisting of the Prime Minister and the Federal Ministers, which shall act through the Prime Minister, who shall be the chief executive of the Federation.

(2) In the performance of his functions under the Constitution, the Prime Minister may act either directly or through the Federal Ministers."

99. It may be noticed that Article 90 no longer vests the executive authority of the Federation in the President nor is it exercised by him. Instead, executive authority is now exercisable by the Federal Government, consisting of the PM and the Federal Ministers, in the President's name. Therefore, the President has been replaced as the central figure of the State by the PM. As a result, under the Constitutional process for performing the executive function of authorising an investigation into an information against a Superior Court Judge, the President should act on the advice of the PM or the Cabinet under Article 48(1) of the Constitution and not invoke his discretionary power under Article 48(2).

100. Nevertheless, upon whose advice is the President to act under Article 48(1) of the Constitution. That Article simply states that the President is to act on the advice of either the Cabinet or the PM. Even Article 91(1) simply reiterates the two advising authorities nominated in Article 48(1). Article 90(1) clarifies that the Federal Government shall act through the PM unless the latter requires, under Article 90(2), his functions to be performed through the Federal Ministers. As a result, the Constitution omits to provide any guidelines or criteria to distinguish the executive functions that are to be performed under the advice of the Cabinet and those which are to be performed under the advice of the PM. It leaves that business to be determined by the Federal Government according to its requirements and exigencies from time to time.

101. Accordingly, Article 99(3) of the Constitution empowers the Federal Government to make rules for the allocation and transaction of its business. In exercise of such power, the Federal Government has framed the ROB that serve as a source of guidance on the instant subject. The ROB are constitutionally mandated rules and must be followed by the Government in carrying out its functions. The mandatory status of the ROB was affirmed by this Court in the case of Mustafa Impex (supra):

"50: The Constitution confers vast powers on the Government for the transaction of executive business. There is no reason to suppose, or believe, that the framers of the Constitution intended, in disregard of the explicit language employed, that the Federal Government could, in its discretion, either follow, or not follow, the provisions of the Rules of Business. The framer of rules [Federal Government] is as much bound by the content thereof as anyone else is subject thereto. These are basic precepts of constitutional interpretation. To allow the Executive to depart from the language of the Rules, in its discretion, would be to permit, and legitimize, unconstitutional executive actions. Quite independently of the above, there is ample case law stressing the importance of a structured exercise of discretionary power. In this case the discretionary executive powers have already been fettered by the Constitution. The framing of rules for this purpose is inextricably linked to the guided exercise of official power. The following of the Rules of Business is a salutary exercise intended to enhance, and amplify, concepts of good governance. We have no doubt that it is mandatory and binding on the Government, and so hold."

(emphasis supplied)

Consequently, Rule 15-A of the ROB specifies the procedure to be followed for functions that are required by the Constitution to be performed by the President. For sake of convenience, it is reproduced below:

"15-A. Reference to the President.---(1) Notwithstanding the provisions made in these rules, where in terms of any provision of the Constitution any function is to be performed or any orders have to be issued by the President or his specific approval is required, the Division concerned shall incorporate a paragraph to this effect in the summary entitled as "Summary for the Prime Minister". The Prime Minister shall render his advice and submit the case to the President. After the President has seen and approved the case, it shall be returned to the Prime Minister. The cases to which this sub-rule applies are enumerated in Schedule V-B.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions made in these rules, where in terms of any provisions of the Constitution, any function is to be performed or any orders have to be issued by the President in his discretion, the Division concerned shall submit the case to the President through the Prime Minister in the form of a self-contained, concise and objective summary entitled as "Summary for the President" stating the relevant facts and points for decision prepared on the same lines as prescribed in these rules for a Summary for the Cabinet, except that only one copy will be required which may not be printed. This procedure will not, however, be applicable where the President has conveyed the decision to the Prime Minster for issuing orders in respect of cases in his discretion. The cases to which this sub-rule applies are enumerated in Schedule VI."

(emphasis supplied)

102. It may be noticed that Rule 15-A(1) deals with cases that require the orders or approval of the President on the advice of the PM. Accordingly, the same Rule refers to Schedule V-B which sets out the list of cases in which the PM's advice is to be tendered. Serial number 35 of Schedule V-B reads: "Reference to Supreme Judicial Council." It is thus patent that the entire process of a Presidential reference falls under the advice of the PM according to the ROB. It is he who has to advise the President on the steps that need to be taken in a matter that bears relation to Article 209(5) of the Constitution. As a result, the approval by the President of the advice of the PM is necessary for commencing an investigation into a complaint made against a Judge of the Superior Court.

103. However, in the present Reference before us there is no such authorisation on record for commencing an investigation against the petitioner. Instead the record shows that the only authorisation sought, for probing the complaint against the petitioner, was from the Law Minister who under any interpretation of the Constitution had no jurisdiction in this behalf. The competent authorities, namely, the PM and the President were never approached by the Ministry of Law for the requisite authorisation envisaged by the CJP (supra) judgment. Both constitutional authorities got involved in the process after all the material had already been collected. The initial authorisation by the President on the advice of the PM to commence an investigation against a Judge in a complaint falling under Article 209(5) is a legal requirement for sustaining the validity of a Presidential reference that is ultimately filed with the SJC. Such oversight by the highest Constitutional functionaries protects Judges from whimsical and arbitrary interference by Executive authorities in their personal judicial independence and privacy. Without valid authorisation the foundation of the Reference suffers from an initial illegality which amounts to a Constitutional violation. Consequently, such an infirmity is fatal to the superstructure that is erected on it. As a result, this Reference is illegal and falls to the ground.

VALIDITY OF ALLEGATIONS IN THE REFERENCE

104. It is now important to consider the substance of the allegations made in the Reference filed against the petitioner. It would be appropriate at this stage to produce the relevant portions from this Reference:

> "9. Mr. Justice Qazi Faez Isa was elevated as the Chief Justice of the Baluchistan High Court on 5 August 2009 (see PLD 2010 Journal 1 at p.3). One of the aforementioned properties has been acquired in the year 2011, while two have been acquired in the year 2013. Since 2011 till date Justice Qazi Faez Isa has filed wealth statements, along with his tax returns, intentionally and deliberately concealing the above three properties, notwithstanding that all along under section 116(1)(b) of the 2001 Ordinance he was under a direct legal and juridical obligation to have declared the said properties. His wife also filed a wealth statement for the tax year 2014, and failed to declare the said properties.
>
> ..
>
> 11. Apart from the fact that the failure of Justice Qazi Faez Isa to declare the aforementioned foreign properties of his wife in his successive wealth statements violates section 116(1)(b) of the 2001 Ordinance, the same also gives rise to the following issues:-
>
> (a) the source to acquire the afore-stated expensive properties is not accounted for;
>
> (b) whether the properties as afore-stated were acquired through money laundering, is an aspect which cannot be ruled out.
>
> 12. By not declaring the afore-stated properties and accounting for them, the respective wealth conciliation statements filed by Justice Qazi Faez Isa are also totally incorrect and tainted with concealments. Hence, a clear violation of Section 116(2) and other penal provisions of the 2001 Ordinance are also made out.
>
> ..
>
> 16. A Judge of the Superior Court who omits to intentionally declare three expensive London properties jointly owned by his spouse and children, violates Section 116 of the 2001 Ordinance. The tax records of the learned Judge and his spouse are absolutely silent about the source through which the said properties had been acquired and how and from where the funds were made available to purchase the said properties, without violating the money laundering regime and the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947..."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

From a perusal of the above quoted excerpts it becomes clear that the Reference (repeatedly) emphasises that the petitioner has violated Section 116 of the Ordinance, the money laundering regime and FERA. These in turn raise questions about the source of funds used for acquiring the London Properties.

105. Similarly, the SCN issued by the SJC has also levelled corresponding allegations against the petitioner; and while we cannot examine the validity of the SCN issued by the SJC unless the bar under Article 211 is crossed, however, to appreciate the scope of the allegations in the Reference we are reproducing the said allegations in the SCN:

"(g) That allegedly the failure of your lordship to declare the afore-mentioned foreign properties of your wife in your lordship's successive wealth statements violates section 116(1)(b) of the 2001 Ordinance, and gives rise to the following issues:-

(a) the source to acquire the afore-stated expensive properties is not accounted for;

(b) whether the properties as afore-stated were acquired through money laundering, is an aspect which cannot be ruled out.

..

(i) Thus there is nothing on record to suggest that your lordship's wife and children had independent sources of income and that such funds were validly available with them to purchase the three foreign properties;

..

(k) That from the aforesaid it appears that at the relevant point of time of the purchase of the three properties your lordship's wife and the children were your dependents or at least were not possessed of known sources of income or pecuniary resources sufficient for acquisition of the properties in question. It appears that the said properties were concealed from the Income Tax Authorities in Pakistan. Furthermore, your lordship's worthy wife and children, in the context of the matter, are sufficiently connected to you, so as to put you, as a Judge of the superior Court of Pakistan, under a direct obligation to give a money trail of the three properties so as to establish that the source of funds and transfer thereof was not in violation of law.

..

o) That allegedly the tax records of your lordship and your lordship's spouse are absolutely silent about the source through which the said foreign properties had been acquired and how and from where the funds were made available to purchase the said properties, without violating the money laundering regime and the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947."

(emphasis supplied)

An examination of these extracts reveal that the main purpose of the SJC for initiating an inquiry against the petitioner was to establish the source of funding of the allegedly concealed London Properties. This is therefore further evidence that the removal proceedings against the petitioner were aimed not at alleged tax default but at determining where the funds for the London Properties came from.

106. Taking up the other grounds of action against the petitioner first, we would like to make it clear that learned counsel for the respondents did not make any submissions on the petitioner's alleged violation of the provisions of FERA. In fact, he did not even nominate the relevant provisions of the said law. There is also no material, before us, which supports the said bald allegation of a violation of the claimed foreign exchange regime under FERA. As a result, we have no doubt that this particular charge is completely without merit. It is, therefore, surprising that the Law Minister, the PM and the President all failed to notice the non-existent case made out against the petitioner for allegedly violating the provisions of FERA. The filing of a Presidential reference under Article 209(5) is a solemn matter. It has grave consequences for the Judge against whom such a reference is prepared. It prima facie constitutes an interference with the security of tenure guaranteed to Judges of the Supreme Court under Article 179 of the Constitution. Therefore, the allegation levelled in a reference should be based on cogent evidence and sound legal analysis. A Presidential reference cannot be filed on assumptions. However, in the present case, the allegation of violating the provisions of FERA against the petitioner is exactly that: an unsubstantiated assumption neither backed by evidence nor supported by the relevant rule that was allegedly breached. As such, it cannot be sustained.

107. In this context, the next allegation levelled against the petitioner is that of money laundering. The primary legislation governing this subject matter is the Anti-Money Laundering Act, 2010

("AMLA") . Section 2(q), (s) and Section 3 of this Act define the offence of money laundering. These are produced below:

"2 Definitions.---In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,-

..

(q) "proceeds of crime" means any property derived or obtained directly or indirectly by any person from the commission of a predicate offence or a foreign serious offence;

(s) "predicate offence" means an offence specified in the Schedule to this Act;

3 Offence of money laundering.---A person shall be guilty of offence of money laundering, if the person:-

(a) acquires, converts, possesses, uses or transfers property, knowing or having reason to believe that such property is proceeds of crime;

(b) conceals or disguises the true nature, origin, location, disposition, movement or ownership of property, knowing or having reason to believe that such property is proceeds of crime;

(c) holds or possesses on behalf of any other person any property knowing or having reason to believe that such property is proceeds of crime; or

(d) participates in, associates, conspires to commit, attempts to commit, aids, abets, facilitates, or counsels the commission of the acts specified in clauses (a), (b) and (c).

..

Explanation II.- For the purposes of proving an offence under this section, the conviction of an accused for the respective predicate offence shall not be required."

It may be noticed from a reading of both Sections 2 and 3 that a necessary element of the offence of money laundering is the commission of a predicate offence. The execution of this offence gives birth to the proceeds of crime, the movement of which attracts the criminal conduct of money laundering. Therefore, without the commission of a predicate offence there can be no offence of money laundering. However, not every statutory violation is a predicate offence; AMLA recognises this by setting out in its Schedule a list of statutory offences that constitute a predicate offence for the purposes of money laundering. In the present case, the main allegation against the petitioner is that he has failed to declare the London Properties owned by his wife and children in his wealth statements. The contents of a wealth statement are provided in Section 116(1) of the Ordinance. For the moment, ignoring our view that the said provision is vague about a taxpayer's obligation to disclose the assets of a financially independent spouse, it is clear that in order to attract the offence of money laundering the non-declaration of assets under Section 116 ibid must constitute a predicate offence. Only then may the allegation of money laundering be made against the petitioner. In this regard, the offences incorporated from the Ordinance to the Schedule to AMLA have to be examined. The gist of these offences is reproduced below:

""THE SCHEDULE"

..

Section XIIA The Income Tax Ordinance, 2001

192 Prosecution for false statement in verification- where tax sought to be evaded is ten million rupees or more[;]

192A Prosecution for concealment of Income-where tax sought to be evaded is ten million rupees or more[;]

Note: for the purposes of this Section, concealment of income includes any act referred to in subsection (1) of section 111 (unexplained income or assets)

194 Prosecution for improper use of National Tax Number [Certificate}- where tax sought to be evaded is ten million rupees or more[;]

199 Prosecution for abetment - where tax sought to be evaded is ten million rupees or more."

A perusal of the Schedule reveals that the non-declaration of assets by a taxpayer under the Ordinance is not a predicate offence under AMLA. Therefore, prima facie no case of money laundering can be made out against the petitioner on this count.

108. Be that as it may, it is a matter of record that the Reference has not alleged the commission of any specific predicate offence under AMLA by any person. Nevertheless, assuming for the sake of argument that the petitioner is under an obligation to list the assets of his wife in his wealth statement, the only predicate offence that appears remotely relevant to the case against him is under Section 192 of the Ordinance. Nonetheless, even though Section 3 of AMLA specifies that the commission of the offence of money laundering is not dependent upon the conviction of the petitioner for a predicate offence, it at least requires that a specific predicate offence be alleged. However, no predicate offence has been alleged against the petitioner in the Reference. Nor has any evidence been placed on record which may prima facie support the allegation of money laundering. In the above factual scenario, an allegation of money laundering against the petitioner is entirely fictional at this stage. The said allegation is therefore without merit.

109. Equally, it is relevant to note that the four sections of the Ordinance were only insertecd in the Schedule to AMLA as predicate offences on 20.05.2016 whereas the London Properties were purchased by the petitioner's family in 2011 and 2013. Consequently, it is an established fact that before 2016, violations of the Ordinance could not form the basis of a money laundering allegation. This proposition is backed by Article 12 of the Constitution:

"12. Protection against retrospective punishment

(1) No law shall authorize the punishment of a person:-

(a) for an act or omission that was not punishable by law at the time of the act or omission;"

110. The Constitution itself grants protection to individuals from retrospective punishment. Therefore, reliance by learned counsel for the respondents on an amendment made in 2016 to seek removal of the petitioner for acts committed in 2011 and 2013 appears to be improper. This will continue to be so unless the application of Section 192 is interpreted otherwise by the competent forum under the Ordinance.

111. Possibly, for the above mentioned reasons, learned counsel for the respondents submitted that the Reference does not allege that the petitioner has violated the provisions of AMLA. Instead, he argued the Reference simply refers to a violation of the money laundering regime in general. To support his contention he relied on certain Circulars and Notifications issued by SBP under FERA, some of which are produced below:

"Notification No. F.E. 2/98-SB

Dated the 21st July, 1998

In exercise of the powers conferred by subsection (2) of Section 8 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947 (Act No. VII of 1947), and in supersession of State Bank of Pakistan Notification No. F.E. 1/91-SB dated 26th February, 1991, the State Bank of Pakistan is pleased to permit:-

..

b. Any person maintaining an account expressed in a foreign currency, and held under any permission, general or otherwise, granted by the State Bank of Pakistan to take or send out of Pakistan, cheques or drafts drawn on such account.

F.E. Circular No. 17

..

No transfer of funds abroad shall be made through illegal channels such "Hundi system". All transfer of funds shall take place through banking channels, following the instructions given to the banks from time to time for the purpose."

After examining the above noted Circulars and Notifications, it is unclear how these help the respondents prove the charge of money laundering against the petitioner. There is no allegation or material on record suggesting that the petitioner or Mrs. Isa transferred money to the United Kingdom via illegal means/methods. Therefore, this novel argument is theoretical and speculative in content. The contention also lacks force for the simple reason that the offence of money laundering is governed by a special law, AMLA, since 2010. It is by now well-established that when a special law regulates a particular subject area then another law enacted for a different special purpose cannot affect the subject matter governed by the former special law. This is a principle of construction recognised by our Superior Courts. For instance, in the case of Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi v. Additional District and Sessions Judge (1994 SCMR 1299) this Court approved the principle that statutes which are not pari materia cannot govern each other's interpretation:

> "11: In this regard, it may be pertinent to refer to the case of Mahbub Ahmad v. First Additional District Judge and another (PLD 1976 Karachi 978)... It may be advantageous to reproduce the relevant portion which contains in para. 8 thereof and which reads as follows:--
>
> 8. "... It may also be pointed out that unless the provision is 'pari materia', it is not correct to construe a provision with reference to another provision in a different Act, for it is the language of the provision which is the determining factor."
>
> 12. Reference may also be made to the case of Mrs. M. Waterfield v. C.E. Lee Anan and another (PLD 1957 (W.P.) Lahore 882) and the case of Salah Muhammad v. Muhammad Roz and others (PLD 1962 (W.P.) Lahore 68). In both the cases, it has been held by Division Benches of the Lahore High Court that a statute cannot be interpreted in the light of language used in another statute except when the language which has to be interpreted is, in the context, open to more meanings than one.
>
> 13. We may also refer to the case of Hari Khemu Gawali v. The Deputy Commissioner of Police, Bombay and another (PLD 1957 SC (India) 90), in which the Indian Supreme Court has inter alia held that it is not safe to pronounce judgment on the provision of one Act with reference to decision dealing with the other Acts which are not pari materia."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

Even Halsbury's Laws of England (Volume 96, 2018) has affirmed this viewpoint:

> "809: Comparison between Acts not in pari materia or the decisions on them affords no reliable guide to their construction, since the same words used in different statutory codes may have different meanings in each code, according to the intentions of the Acts and the mischiefs they are designed to prevent."

112. It is, therefore, only logical that Circulars and Notifications (which are only subordinate legislation) issued under FERA cannot control the subject of money laundering defined and governed by AMLA. However, learned counsel for the respondents also relied upon the Anti-Money Laundering Regulations, 2008 ("2008 Regulations") to argue that the charge of money laundering in the Reference was simply an allusion to the regime in general. But this reliance of learned counsel is flawed because these were framed under the Anti-Money Laundering Ordinances of 2007 and 2009 ("AML Ordinances"). These AML Ordinances did not recognise the conduct attributed to the petitioner as a predicate offence. Consequently, reference to the 2008 Regulations is of no assistance to the respondents in justifying their allegation of money laundering against the petitioner.

113. This brings us to the primary allegation in the Reference against the petitioner: his failure to disclose the London Properties of his wife and children in his wealth statement. In the Reference it is alleged that this obligation is imposed on the petitioner by virtue of Section 116(1)(b) of the Ordinance. However, learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that no such obligation could be imposed on the petitioner under Section 116(1)(b) because this provision only applies to the assets and liabilities of a dependent spouse and minor children of a declarant taxpayer. On the other hand, the petitioner's wife is a financially independent taxpayer and their children are adults. They possessed these attributes even when the properties in question were acquired. Learned counsel also stated that no notice had been received either by the petitioner or Mrs. Isa under Section 116(1) of the Ordinance, therefore, it was not legally possible to level a charge of non-declaration of assets against the petitioner.

114. We have examined the record which reveals that indeed no notice was ever issued to Mrs. Isa or the petitioner under Section 116(1). Mrs. Isa did receive notices for the years 2015, 2017 and 2018 but those were issued under Section 114(4) of the Ordinance for her failure to file her tax returns. Moreover, on a perusal of the Reference it became evident that the entire case under Section 116 of the Ordinance rested on the opinion of an Assistant Commissioner (Inland Revenue) who thought that the petitioner was liable to disclose the London Properties of his wife and children. This is evidenced from para-7 of the Reference:

"7. The precise observations recorded by the learned Assistant Commissioner (IR) in his letter bearing No. 112 dated 10th May, 2019 (see Attachment VIII and IX) addressed to the Commissioner (IR), AEOI/International Taxes Zone, Large Taxpayers' Unit, Islamabad as follows:-

"(e) Offshore Properties

The properties' documents in respect of which are attached with the complaint are as under:-

| # | Owners | Property | Value | Purchase date |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | Ms. Sehar Isa Khoso and Ms. Zarina Montserrat Khoso Carrera | 90 Adelaide Road London E10 5NW | GBP 270,000 | 28.06.2013 (transferred 08.07.2013) |
| 2 | Ms. Zarina Montserrat Khoso Carrera and Arslan Isa Khoso | 40 Oakdale Road London E11 4DL | GBP 245,000 | 27.03.2013 |
| 3 | Ms. Zarina Montserrat and Ms. Sehar Isa Khoso | 50 Coniston Court, Kendal Street, London W2 2AN | | 20.10.2011 |

(B) Findings:--

(i) That, Mr. Justice Qazi Faez Isa did not declare the above offshore properties owned by his wife (and children).

(ii) That, Mrs. Sarina Isa Khoso is wife of Mr. Justice Qazi Isa as per CINC 42301- 9722154-2, who also file her tax return for Tax year 2014.

(iii) That, Mr. Justice Qazi was liable to declare the above offshore properties as per provisions of Section 116(1)(b) which mandate every taxpayer to file the Wealth Statement in the prescribed format declaring therein "the total assets and liabilities of the persons and his spouse, minor children, and other dependents."

(iv) That, Mrs. Sarina M. Isa (wife), Sehar Isa Khoso (daughter), and Arslan Isa Khoso (son) also did not declare the above properties since they did not file their tax declarations for the Tax Year 2014-2018.""

115. It appears from this extract that the mainstay of the respondents' allegation against the petitioner under Section 116 of the Ordinance is based on a literal reading of Section 116(1)(b) ibid. The respondents' interpretation of the said provision has never been tested judicially before. Indeed, during arguments learned counsel for the respondents candidly acknowledged that there was no case-law in our jurisprudence on the subject of declaration by a taxpayer of the assets of his spouse and children under Section 116(1)(b). However, learned counsel did provide us with the wealth statement form issued by the tax authorities under the Income Tax Rules, 2002 for the tax year 2013. What is notable about this form is that it only required a taxpayer to declare the assets of his spouse who had not filed a return of income along with a wealth statement independently. Moreover, only the assets of minor children had to be disclosed. It is an admitted fact that Mrs. Isa filed a return and wealth statement in the tax year 2013. As such, it seems that in the tax year 2013 the petitioner was under no obligation to declare the London Properties in his wealth statement. However, this is only the tip of the ice-berg. On an examination of the (several) instructions published by FBR for completing a wealth statement in subsequent tax years, we have noticed that the FBR is itself unsure about the true interpretation of Section 116(1)(b) of the Ordinance. At this stage, it would be appropriate to reproduce this provision:

> "116. Wealth Statement.---(1) [The] Commissioner may, by notice in writing, require any person [being an individual] to furnish, on the date specified in the notice, a statement (hereinafter referred to as the "wealth statement") in the prescribed form and verified in the prescribed manner giving particulars of -
>
> .
>
> (b) the total assets and liabilities of the person's spouse, minor children, and other dependents as on the date or dates specified in such notice"

116. As already mentioned above, in the tax year 2013 the FBR expected taxpayers to only declare assets of a spouse who had not filed a return and wealth statement. However, in the tax year 2015, FBR altered the scope of this duty. It asked taxpayers to declare only those assets of their spouse and minor children which had been created by funds provided by the taxpayer. In 2016, FBR again changed its interpretation of Section 116(1)(b). Now a taxpayer had to declare the assets of his spouse and minor children, whether in Pakistan or abroad, if they had been created by funds provided by the taxpayer. It is this last interpretation which has continued till date. Amongst all of these varying constructions of Section 116(1)(b), there is also the overriding difficulty that the language of Section 116(1)(b) is open to more than one interpretation. In fact, it is perhaps for this reason that both the parties before us have come up with completely divergent analyses of Section 116(1)(b). The respondents have opted for the literal interpretation under which no condition of dependency is attached to the term "spouse" because each and every word in Section 116(1)(b) is given its ordinary and natural meaning. This would indicate that taxpayers are obligated to give particulars of the total assets and liabilities of their spouses, irrespective of whether the said spouses are independent or dependent. However, learned counsel for the petitioner chose a different route. He applied the principle of statutory interpretation called noscitur a sociis. This Court in Ghulam Rasool v. Muhammad Hayat (PLD 1984 Supreme Court 385) defined the aforementioned principle as follows:

> "Page 390: ...Nevertheless, there is a rule of interpretation well-understood and recognised in law and it is of noscitur ex soci[i]s. Maxwell on Interpretation Statutes (12th Edn., page 289) explains it as follows :- "Where two or more words which are susceptible of analogous meaning are coupled together noscitur ex soci[i]s they are understood to be used in their cognate sense. They take as it were the colour from each other the meaning of the more general being restricted to a sense analogous to that of less general."
>
> Crawford on Statutory Construction (p. 325) comments on this rule of interpretation as follows- "In order to ascertain the meaning of any word or phrase that is ambiguous or susceptible to more than one meaning the Court may properly resort to the other words with which the ambiguous word is associated in the statute. Accordingly, if several words are connected by a copulative conjunction a presumption arises that they are of the same class unless of course a contrary intention is indicated. On the other hand, the maxim noscitur ex soc[i]is is not to be applied where the meaning of a word is clear and unambiguous. Nor is it to be used so as to render general words useless. Like all other principles of construction it is to be used only as an instrumentality for determining the intent of the Legislature where it is in doubt.""
>
> (emphasis supplied)

Under the above noted construction, the petitioner would only be obligated to give particulars of the total assets and liabilities of his dependent spouse because the term spouse would draw its characteristics from the other words used in Section 116(1)(b), namely, the terms 'minor children' and 'other dependents.' Nonetheless, as is evident from the above quoted passage, even this method of interpretation is not absolute.

117. Be that as it may, we are not inclined to decide this issue on the basis of either the respondents' present interpretation of Section 116(1)(b) or on the basis of the petitioner's interpretation of the said provision. Neither have produced any case-law or other relevant material to support their respective versions of Section 116(1)(b). Even the FBR's own instructions on completing a wealth statement form are unclear and have wavered from year to year. In such a situation, we consider that it would be better if this matter is determined in the first instance by the hierarchy of specialised fora specified in the Ordinance.

118. However, it has become plain that the respondents have framed the Reference against the petitioner on the untested opinion of an Assistant Commissioner (Inland Revenue) without giving much weight to the fact that their interpretation of the law in this area is unsupported by authority. Accordingly, the respondents' decision to charge the petitioner with a violation of Section 116 of the Ordinance on the basis of an interpretation that is devoid of judicial consideration let alone approval, and which lacks any definitive and consistent departmental practice is conjectural. When confronted, learned counsel for the respondents submitted that the Reference was not based solely on an alleged violation of Section 116 of the Ordinance. Instead, he argued that Section 116 was just a reference point in presenting the respondents reservations about the alleged conduct of the petitioner. He stated that the real case against the petitioner rested on violations of Articles II and III of the Code of Conduct. That the respondents concern was not the discharge of tax liability by the family of the petitioner but the source that had funded the purchase of the London Properties. With all due respect to learned counsel, this argument prematurely assumes both the lack of funds with Mrs. Isa and the commission of misconduct by the petitioner. According to our understanding of the duties of a Judge under the CoC, noted and discussed earlier in this judgment, a Judge may be made answerable for the financial affairs of his family members. However, we do not consider that such liability accrues in respect of speculative allegations. As the following narrative will confirm, this is precisely what the respondents attempted to achieve by preparing the present Reference.

119. On 17.06.2020, the petitioner of his own volition appeared in Court during the course of submissions by learned counsel for the respondents. He sought permission for Mrs. Isa to orally apprise the Court through video link about the improprieties committed by the respondents in preparing the complaint against her as she could not file an application or affidavit or provide documents to explain her position because she did not have a lawyer. Being personally affected by our proceedings, she sought to make a statement without oath through video link from her home. The Bench briefly conferred on the said request and in exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 187 of the Constitution to do complete justice granted her permission to address the Court on 18.06.2020. In her address to the Court, Mrs. Isa complained that neither she nor her authorised representative (AR) had been served with notices by the tax authorities under Section 114 of the Ordinance. These were apparently mailed to her outdated address at Patel Court, Bath Island, even though her new address, Phase II DHA was on the record of the tax authorities. She stated that the required amount of foreign currency was transferred through banking channels, a fact which was in the knowledge of the SBP, and that the tax authorities were aware that apart from her income from taxable sources she also had a stream of non-taxable agricultural income from agricultural land situated in Jacobabad, Sindh and Nasirabad, Baluchistan. We informed her that we could not hear or decide upon the merits which was an issue that could only be determined by the SJC. However, it became clear to us that Mrs. Isa was prima facie willing to offer an explanation for the source of funds used to purchase the London Properties. But such explanation had not been called for or considered by the tax authorities. As a result, the Reference was prepared against the petitioner in the absence of any determination by the tax authorities on the liability of either the petitioner or Mrs. Isa.

120. Consequently, the plea of the respondents that the case against the petitioner rests on his alleged violations of the CoC and not his infringements of Section 116 of the Ordinance subtly improves their original stance. However, to establish the source of funds for the acquisition of the London Properties, the requirements of due process under Article 4 and Article 10A of the Constitution mandate that the first person concerned, namely, Mrs. Isa ought to be given an opportunity to explain her sources of funding for the London Properties and the reasons for not declaring such properties in her wealth statement. Without granting such opportunity, the framing of the Reference against the petitioner was premature, hypothetical and impulsive. Accordingly, even this allegation against the petitioner is entirely presumptive.

APPLICATION OF MIND BY THE PRESIDENT

121. Another flaw in the Reference highlighted by the learned counsel for the petitioner is the President's failure to form an opinion in terms of Article 209(5) of the Constitution. For convenience, this provision is again reproduced:

"209. Supreme Judicial Council.

..

(5) If, on information from any source, the Council or the President is of the opinion that a Judge of the Supreme Court or of a High Court-

(a) may be incapable of properly performing the duties of his office by reason of physical or mental incapacity; or

(b) may have been guilty of misconduct, the President shall direct the Council to, or the Council may, on its own motion, inquire into the matter."

(emphasis supplied)

Sub-Article (5) of Article 209 of the Constitution makes it plain that before directing the SJC to hold an inquiry against a Supreme Court Judge, the President should have formed the opinion that the said Judge may be guilty of misconduct. However, the basis upon and the means by which the President needs to form his opinion is not readily discernible from Article 209(5). To comprehend the meaning and object of this function of the President, one needs to consider the nature of powers and functions that the President possesses under the Constitution. In the first instance, an analysis of the President's responsibility to form an opinion rendered in the additional note by Justice Chaudhry Ijaz Ahmed in the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) indicates one point of view:

"Page 247: Sub-Article (5) of Article 209 casts duty upon the President of Pakistan to form his opinion after receiving information qua the judges of the superior courts with regard to physical or mental incapacity to perform duties of his office or has been guilty of misconduct. The President of Pakistan has to form his opinion after application of mind reasonably, objectively with cogent reasons based on relevant material in good faith after application of mind."

(emphasis supplied)

Based on the facts and needs of that case, the said learned Judge concluded that the President's failure to perform his Constitutional duty had fatal consequences:

"Page 246: The perusal of record shows that neither the President nor the Prime Minister under the mandatory provisions of the Constitution has deliberated upon the matter and formed opinion by applying their independent mind. Hence, non-application of mind and non- formation of opinion is fatal and render the subsequent proceedings void."

122. It may be noted at the outset that the above noted view is not shared by the majority judgment in the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) which is silent about the substance of the President's opinion and the procedure for arriving at such an opinion under Article 209(5). However, during oral submissions, learned counsel for the petitioner argued that unlike the above quoted view the President had simply followed the PM's advice for sending the Reference to the SJC. In doing so he had not formed an opinion as required by Article 209(5) of the Constitution. Accordingly, the Reference framed against the petitioner lacked an essential Constitutional ingredient under Article 209(5), namely, the application of mind by the President. It was therefore seriously deficient. To support his contention, he relied on paragraph 18 of the Reference (ref: Const. P. No. 17 of 2019, Part II) which reads as under:

> "Page 80: As per the advice of the Prime Minister I have formed an opinion that Mr. Justice Qazi Faez Isa may have been guilty of misconduct; hence I hereby direct the Supreme Judicial Council to inquire into the matter..."

123. On the other hand, learned counsel for the respondents argued that the President had correctly formed his opinion as envisaged by Article 209(5) of the Constitution. He submitted that the President was provided with a comprehensive summary from the Ministry of Law and Justice along with all the relevant attachments and the PM's advice. He stated in Court that the President discussed the Reference with the Law Minister, a statement which he elaborated upon in his written arguments. It seems that after the Reference was sent to the President he not only reviewed it with the PM but also with the Law Secretary, the AG and the Law Minister. Input was also sought from Secretary to the President.

124. The Reference as it was sent to the President contained multiple allegations against the petitioner. These allegations involved both pure questions of law and mixed questions of law and fact. One such question was: whether the petitioner Judge (or for that matter any other citizen of Pakistan) is obligated under Section 116 of the Ordinance to declare the assets of his independent spouse? Another issue that arose was: whether the funds employed by Mrs. Isa to purchase the London Properties comprised proceeds of crime in order to involve the commission of the offence of money laundering under AMLA? To ponder over these matters or indeed to form an opinion on them required legal knowledge which the President admittedly himself does not possess. In such a situation, it became incumbent upon him to seek legal advice from persons who were well-versed in tax and financial matters.

125. Although it is not for this Court to specify a list of persons from whom legal advice may be sought by the President, however, we can set out the persons who should not be approached by the President for legal advice on a reference under Article 209 of the Constitution. Fairness and objectivity dictate that those involved in the investigation and framing of the reference may brief the President but cannot advise him on whether it is maintainable and appropriate for inquiry by the SJC. This is because there is a clear conflict of interest for the architects of the reference to opine on the weaknesses of their work. But this is precisely what happened in the present Reference. The President discussed the Reference and its legal aspects with the AG and the Law Minister. As senior functionaries of the Federal Government, both gentlemen were admittedly involved in the framing of the Reference against the petitioner. Under Article 209(5) of the Constitution, the opinion formed by the President is expected to be considered, fair and objective. This is because under Article 48(1) ibid the President has the power to return the advice by the PM or the Cabinet for reconsideration. In order to be objective and fair he should rely upon counsel and legal experts not linked with the framing of the reference or working for the Federal Government. Irrespective of whether such qualities, which have to form part of the President's opinion, are present in the officers of the Federal Government, their consultation becomes questionable on grounds of conflict of interest. The fact that the President also received legal input from his Secretary is unhelpful because the respondents do not claim his legal advice to have been rendered in writing. The President's failure to note under Article 48(1) a defect of gross illegality in the Reference, namely, an assumed view of Section 116 of the Ordinance and AMLA, suggests that the legal basis of the allegations made therein were not tested. We reckon that this happened because the President's opinion was influenced by the inadmissible advice of individuals who were involved in the preparation of the Reference. In these circumstances, it cannot be said that the President formed an informed opinion in terms of Article 209(5) of the Constitution.

126. Under the Constitutional scheme, one needs to understand the reason for the President's responsibility to apply his mind to form an opinion under Article 209(5). The starting point for such an examination should be this Constitutional provision itself. What is of significance for us is that after the 18th Amendment, Article 209(5) is the only provision in the Constitution which requires the President to form his opinion. However, prior to the 18th Amendment, Article 58(2) (reproduced under the heading 'Authorisation for Investigation') of the Constitution also imposed the same obligation on the President.

127. On a careful perusal of these Articles, it becomes clear that there is a distinction between the "opinion" to be formed by the President under the two provisions. Article 209(5) of the Constitution simply requires the President to form an opinion whereas Article 58(2) ibid required the President to form his opinion in the exercise of his discretion. Consequently, the President's opinion under Article 209(5) is directed by sub-Article (1) of Article 48 whereas his opinion under Article 58(2) was controlled by sub-Article (2) of Article 48. To understand why the application of mind is inherent in the formation of opinion under Article 209(5), we need to appreciate the meaning assigned to the President's opinion formed under a discretionary power as specified in Article 58(2). In this regard, reliance is placed on the case of Federation of Pakistan v. Haji Muhammad Saifullah Khan (PLD 1989 SC 166) wherein the Court settled the debate on this matter:

> "Pages 189-190: The discretion conferred by Article 58(2)(b) of the Constitution on the President cannot, therefore, be regarded to be an absolute but is to be deemed to be a qualified one, in the sense that it is circumscribed by the object of the law that confers it. It must further be noted that the reading of the provisions of Articles 48(2) and 58(2) shows that the President has to first form his opinion, objectively and then, it is open to him to exercise his discretion one way or the other, i.e. either to dissolve the Assembly or to decline to dissolve it... An obligation is cast on the President by the aforesaid Constitutional provision that before exercising his discretion he has to form his 'opinion' that a situation of the kind envisaged in Article 58(2)(b) has arisen which necessitates the grave step of dissolving the National Assembly... Thus, though the President can make his own assessment of the situation as to the course of action to be followed but his opinion must be founded on some material."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

The above quoted excerpt establishes that notwithstanding the element of discretion which was available to the President under Article 58(2), his opinion had to be based on some material and had to be objective. There is no reason why the President's opinion under Article 209(5) (which is not accompanied by any discretion) should not be governed by the same stringent principles. When the President is performing his function under Article 209(5) he is ultimately bound by the advice of the PM or the Cabinet as the case may be under sub-Article (1) of Article 48. However, the proviso to Article 48(1) ibid authorises the President to return, within fifteen days, the advice for reconsideration. Therefore, the President's power clearly grants him the jurisdiction to evaluate the worth of the advice tendered to him. If he is so inclined he may require the same to be reconsidered once by the PM or the Cabinet. Consequently, even Article 48(1) envisages that the President when performing his functions under this provision will apply his mind to the information before him. Otherwise the purpose of inserting a proviso, which permits the President to return the advice, becomes redundant if the President only has to mechanically agree with the PM or Cabinet.

128. Moreover, it has been noted above that the object of Article 209(5) is to protect the security of tenure of Superior Court Judges. Therefore, this Constitutional provision is intrinsically connected with the independence of judiciary. We have already observed that an independent judiciary is critical to the survival of a just democracy. By requiring the President, as the highest Constitutional authority in the country, to apply his mind and form an objective opinion in the exercise of his jurisdiction under the proviso to Article 48(1) of the Constitution before sending a reference to the SJC for inquiry, it is ensured that this fundamental right of the people is protected from arbitrary interference by the Executive.

129. Be that as it may, learned counsel's submission that the President had not formed an opinion in terms of Article 209(5) of the Constitution was focused on the fact that the President had solely based his opinion on the advice of the PM. Since his initial contention, that the President's opinion under Article 209(5) ought to be formed in the exercise of Presidential discretion under Article 48(2), conflicted with the 18th Amendment to the Constitution, learned counsel for the petitioner argued that the public importance of a reference under Article 209(5) was such that it required advice to the President to be tendered by the Cabinet rather than the PM. However, the short and simple answer to the said objection of learned counsel can be found in the ROB which provides in its Schedule V-B, serial number 35 that matters relating to 'Reference to Supreme Judicial Council' be approved by the President on the advice of the PM. The rationale for this rule becomes evident when the list of cases requiring Cabinet approval is examined. This list is contained in Rule 16(1) of the ROB:

16. Cases to be brought before the Cabinet.---(1) The following cases shall be brought before the Cabinet:-

(a) proposals for legislation, official or non-official, including money bills;

(b) promulgation and revocation of Ordinances;

(c) the budgetary position and proposals before the presentation of an Annual Budget Statement and a Supplementary Budget Statement or an Excess Budget Statement under Articles 80 and 84;

(d) proposals for levy, abolition, remission, alteration or regulation of any tax and floatation of loans;

(e) a reference to the Supreme Court for advice on a question of law under clause (1) of Article 186;

(f) generation of electricity and laying of interprovincial transmission lines;

(g) omitted vide S.R.O 368(1)/2010 dated 1st June 1, 2010

(h) proposals for signing of negotiated instruments with foreign countries and approval for ratification of the instruments:

(i) important reports and documents required to be laid before the Assembly or Senate;

(j) cases involving vital political, economic and administrative policies;

Note.- Cases of this nature shall first be brought to the notice of the Prime Minister by the Minister-in-Charge. The Prime Minister will decide whether any such case should be brought before the Cabinet.

(k) case which the Minister-in-Charge considers important enough for discussion in the Cabinet;

(l) other cases required to be referred to the Cabinet under the provisions of these rules; and

(m) any case desired by the Prime Minister to be referred to the Cabinet.

(emphasis supplied)

A perusal of this provision reveals that the matters which are placed before the Cabinet for approval mainly consist of proposals for legislation and issues pertaining to the economy such as fiscal, budgetary and monetary proposals including proposals for levy or abolition of taxes. Issues involving vital political, economic and administrative policies, international treaties and agreements and any case so desired by the Minister-in-Charge or the PM are also referred to the Cabinet. Accordingly, generally matters that affect a large section of the public or relations between the Federation and the Provinces in the political, economic and administrative area fall within the scope of Cabinet advice.

130. A similar mandate for Cabinet decisions also exists in foreign democratic jurisdictions. In Australia the Cabinet Handbook (13th Edn) sets out the following issues which require the Cabinet's deliberation:

"SECTION 4

CABINET BUSINESS

Matters for Cabinet Consideration

..

72: The following is an indication of the kind of issues that would normally require consideration by the Cabinet:

a. Proposals relating to the delivery of the Government's priorities

b. Significant or controversial policy issues

c. Proposals affecting the Government's financial position, or important financial commitments

d. Proposals that are challenging to implement due to their complexity or timeline for delivery

e. Significant matters affecting state and territory government relations

f. The most significant international business, including international treaties and agreements

g. National emergencies, including any decision to take military action

h. Proposals that affect Australia's constitutional arrangements

i. Proposals requiring significant new or amendments to legislation or regulations

j. Any significant or controversial exercise of a minister's statutory power

k. Significant Government appointments"

(emphasis supplied)

131. A comparable list of subject matters is also found in other foreign jurisdictions such as Canada, United Kingdom and New Zealand. What is significant for our purposes is that these lists demonstrate a consistent international practice that only issues that have a wholesale and widespread effect on the State, its society and political economy belong to the category of cases that need consideration by the Cabinet. The other spheres of State functions which lack the above features may be performed on the advice of the PM with the involvement of Cabinet not being necessary. Advice in relation to the filing of a reference is a function of the President which falls in the latter category. It is neither a legislative measure nor a political, economic or administrative proposal. It is also not a policy decision. As such it lacks the features that qualify for consideration from and debate by the Cabinet. In fact, if one examines in detail Schedule V-B of the ROB, it becomes plain that not only matters pertaining to the Supreme Judicial Council for the removal of Judges of the Superior Courts but also the removal of persons holding other key Constitutional Posts are decided on the advice of the PM:

"SCHEDULE V-B

[Rule 15-A(1)]

LIST OF CASES REQUIRING ORDERS OF
THE PRESIDENT ON THE ADVICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

..

2D. Appointment, resignation and removal of Provincial Governors, determination of their salaries, allowances and privileges

..

19. Auditor General of Pakistan:

(i) Appointment, removal, term of office and terms and conditions of service;

33. Federal Shariat Court: number of Judges, their appointments, transfer, resignation, removal, allowances and privileges.

..

35. Reference to Supreme Judicial Council.

36D. Council of Islamic Ideology:

(i) Appointment, resignation and removal of members and Chairman,"

(emphasis supplied)

132. Consequently, keeping in view the nature of cases which are deliberated upon by the Cabinet and the fact that the PM is consistently the single Constitutional authority who advises the President with regards to the removal of persons in Constitutional Posts, we hold that in the filing of a reference the President is bound to act on the advice of the PM and not the Cabinet. Therefore, it is only logical that in deciding whether to send the Reference against the petitioner to the SJC the President relied on the advice of the PM.

133. Furthermore, if the reference is substantive, cogent, coherent, rational and lawful, then the President simply has to record his assent. There is no additional obligation on him to set out his separate reasons. However, if the reference is defective factually and/or legally then the President must state his reasons for disagreement and call for reconsideration of the matter by the PM in the light of those reasons. If the President subsequently disagrees even with the reconsidered advice, then he is bound by Article 48(1) to endorse the said advice leaving it for the SJC to analyse the merits of the reference sent by the President.

134. It is pertinent to state here that the above discussion means that the Federal Government must set out its reasons for preparing and sending a reference against a Judge of the Superior Court. In fact, the summary and statement of reference prepared by the Ministry of Law for the PM and the President are the documents which contain these reasons. It is these documents which contain the crux of the reference against a Superior Court Judge, and therefore they need to be factually and legally complete. Failure to comply with this requirement will render the reference unsustainable.

135. Be that as it may, the crucial question remains whether in light of what has been discussed above, it can be said that the President applied his mind to the facts alleged in the Reference against the petitioner. As noted previously in this section, the President in forming his opinion sought the advice of the Law Minister and AG, both of whom were involved in the preparation of the Reference and therefore had a conflict of interest. Additionally, we have held under the heading 'Validity of the Allegations in the Reference' that the accusations against the petitioner have been made prematurely in the absence of statutory notice to Mrs. Isa to explain her sources of funds. Likewise, there was no evidence to support the allegations made under FERA and AMLA. Both these facts went unnoticed by the President. Consequently, keeping in view these circumstances, we find that the independent application of mind by the President is lacking in the present case. Instead he has followed the advice tendered to him without ascertaining its correctness. This is contrary to the requirements of both Article 209(5) and Article 48(1) of the Constitution and therefore renders the Reference defective.

CONCLUSION FOR DEFECTS IN THE REFERENCE

136. In the light of our discussion, noted above, it has become clear that there are multiple defects in the Reference. Briefly, these are:

i. No authorisation for investigating the affairs of the petitioner was given by the President and PM. Instead the authorisation of the Law Minister was obtained;

ii. No notice was issued to Mrs. Isa as required under Section 116(1) of the Ordinance prior to the filing of the Reference;

iii. The petitioner was presumed to be under the obligation to declare the assets of his independent wife and adult children on the basis of an unsettled and disputed interpretation of Section 116(1)(b) of the Ordinance;

iv. There was neither any evidence nor the nomination of a predicate offence in the Reference to support the allegation of money laundering against the petitioner;

v. Likewise, there was no evidence that the petitioner had violated the regime under FERA and even the relevant provisions from the said law were not specified in the Reference;

vi. The President received inadmissible advice from the AG and Law Minister, the chief architects of the Reference, on the strengths and weaknesses of the Reference;

vii. The President did not get considered, fair and objective advice from a third party on the questions of law noted in the Reference;

viii. The President failed to notice the various legal and procedural defects in the Reference;

ix. The President did not form a considered opinion under Article 209(5) of the Constitution;

x. As there was no valid authorisation for the investigation (noted in i above), the respondents illegally accessed the tax records of the petitioner and Mrs. Isa; and

xi. Mrs. Awan made contemptuous remarks about the petitioner in public.

These illegal acts of the respondents depict their utter disregard of the law. Filing a reference under Article 209 of the Constitution that is signed by the President and which presents a charge sheet against a Judge of the Superior Courts is a matter requiring utmost prudence and caution by its framers. However, in the present case the actions of the respondents have violated not only the express provisions of the Constitution, the ROB, the Ordinance and AMLA but have also ignored the law laid down in the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) which specifically set out certain safeguards to protect Superior Court Judges from arbitrary actions of the Executive. Therefore in essence, the respondents have paid scant attention to the mandate of the relevant laws governing the field of Presidential references. In these circumstances, the errors committed by them in the preparation and framing of the Reference cannot be termed as mere illegalities. Instead, in the context of Article 209 their errors amount to a wanton disregard of the law. Being arbitrary and illegal these act have ceased to be actions contemplated by any of the applicable laws such as the Constitution and the Ordinance (amongst others). As a result, although the preparation and framing of the Reference against the petitioner is not patently motivated with malice in fact, the scale and degree of the illegalities are such that the Reference is deemed to be tainted with mala fide in law. For this reason, the Reference is hereby quashed.

SHOW CAUSE NOTICE ISSUED BY THE SUPREME JUDICIAL COUNCIL

137. We have already observed in this judgment that the SCN dated 17.07.2019 issued by the SJC is almost entirely based upon the information given and the resulting allegations made in the Reference. In the preceding paragraphs we have struck down and quashed the Reference for being legally defective. The SCN issued by the SJC derives its substance from this quashed Reference. Therefore, except for the underlying factual information of Mrs. Isa's ownership of the undeclared London Properties, the remaining contents of the said Reference are without foundation. Accordingly, the narrative in the notice alleging misconduct against the petitioner and the subsequent direction to file a response have lost force and cannot be sustained. Even the not denied/admitted underlying information about ownership of the London Properties by Mrs. Isa and her children requires further probe by the respondents on the point of absence of declared lawful sources for the purchase of such properties to maintain a Reference against the petitioner. As a result, the notice dated 17.07.2019 cannot survive in limbo and must abate. Indeed, without the Reference the SCN is just a "blank piece of paper" (ref: R (on the application of Miller) v. The Prime Minister [2019 UKSC 41 at para-69]) which cannot become the basis for any subsequent inquiry against the petitioner. Consequently, the ongoing proceedings against the petitioner in the SJC also stand abated.

REFERRAL TO FEDERAL BOARD OF REVENUE

138. It would now be appropriate to elaborate upon our reasons for directing the FBR to commence tax proceedings against Mrs. Isa and her children, notwithstanding our order to quash the Reference against the petitioner. Our decision to take such a step was primarily based on two grounds: to establish that Judges of the Superior Court are answerable for allegations casting aspersions not only on their personal integrity but also on the integrity of the institution; and to honour the petitioner's plea that the allegation of absence of source of funds and money laundering must be first put to Mrs. Isa who is an independent taxpayer.

139. Since the start of these proceedings all the learned counsel in the present and connected petitions have termed their case a struggle for the independence of the judiciary. Learned counsel for the petitioner repeatedly urged before this Court that unless the Reference against the petitioner was quashed, it would undermine the independence of the judiciary. However, what has escaped the attention of learned counsel during this intense discourse is another equally important fundamental principle of the Constitution, namely, the accountability of the Judges of the Superior Courts. An independent judiciary is certainly a necessity for any civilised society governed by laws to prosper and thrive. But in utmost good faith neither Judges nor the institution can retain the public trust when serious stigmas are cast on their integrity. Recalling the quotation from the Holy Quran at the start of this judgment, the institution cannot be perceived to be ignoring an unpleasant allegation of undeclared foreign assets of a family member of a Judge.

140. In this regard, it may be mentioned that the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) is distinguishable from the facts and circumstances of the present case. In the Chief Justice of Pakistan case (supra) this Court quashed the reference against the (then) Chief Justice Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry and brought the matter to an end without further action on the information contained in the reference against him. It is not at all difficult to understand why the Larger Bench in that case adopted such a course of action. It is because the reference filed against the (then) Chief Justice was established on record to be so manifestly motivated by the malice in fact of the military ruler at the time that the allegations against the former were rendered insignificant.

141. However, in the present case no finding of malice in fact has been given. It is true that the Reference suffers from grave legal defects. But the consequences of illegality of an impugned action are different from those following a finding of malice in fact. The illegalities in the present Reference are a result of its careless and casual preparation. These errors or defects do not erase Mrs. Isa's ownership of the London Properties, the primary fact which forms the basis of the Reference and which is not denied by the petitioner. Whilst the ownership of the London Properties is not disputed, the source of funds for their purchase and the mode by which these funds were transferred abroad require explanation. Otherwise, an unexplained investment by the spouse of a Judge of the Superior Courts, who is a holder of public office, compromises the integrity of the learned Judge and ultimately the probity and credibility of the institution which he serves.

142. Rather than allowing the disturbing allegation against the petitioner and his family to circulate and attract innuendos thereby injuring the reputation and integrity of both the petitioner and this Court, we adopted the fair, impartial and transparent route of allowing Mrs. Isa and her children to disclose the source of their funds to the relevant authorities, namely, the FBR. Such a transparent course of action is consistent with the CoC, the maintenance of institutional integrity and the image of Judges as the neutral and independent arbiters of law and justice. The matter of undeclared and unexplained foreign wealth of public office holders bears a stigma in Pakistan that these assets have been acquired unlawfully (a stigma which applies with even greater force since the PANAMA leaks on 03.04.2016). Therefore, every public office holder including Judges of the Superior Courts, officers of the armed forces, elected representatives and public servants are accountable under the law. Indeed, neither the institution of the judiciary nor the other institutions of Pakistan can tolerate a contrary perception. Consequently, all public office holders remain accountable under their applicable legislation on misconduct. By referring the issue of source of funding to the FBR for verification from Mrs. Isa and her children, we have chosen the path which in the first place should have been taken by the respondents but which was casually ignored by them. Therefore, by this referral the controversy surrounding the allegation in the Reference will be settled.

143. It may be mentioned here that our decision to refer the matter for verification to the FBR grants the petitioner's plea from the very start of the proceedings that his wife and children should be asked about their source of funds for the acquisition of the London Properties. This was reiterated by learned counsel for the petitioner during arguments. He submitted that a determination by the tax authorities was essential to ensure that the due process rights of the petitioner and his family under Article 10A of the Constitution were not violated. Mrs. Isa also adopted a similar stance in her statement, given through video link, on 18.06.2020 to the Court. To our minds the FBR being the premier tax authority in Pakistan is the most well equipped to deal with questions of a financial nature. It not only maintains the complete tax records of taxpayers, including those of Mrs. Isa's, but also employs personnel who are well-versed in comprehending and analysing financial and tax records.

144. Moreover, as our short order bears out, by sending the matter to the FBR we have assured the substantive and procedural rights of each party under the Ordinance. These rights and the right of the petitioner's family to appeal against adverse orders have specifically been preserved. Additionally, we have ordered that only appropriate proceedings for undeclared or unexplained assets be initiated against the petitioner's family which should be concluded within a reasonable timeline.

SUO MOTU JURISDICTION OF SUPREME JUDICIAL COUNCIL

145. Next, we in our short order also directed the Chairman FBR to submit his report, regarding the proceedings before the Commissioner (Inland Revenue), to the SJC for its consideration. This was done to give SJC the chance, if it so wished, to commence proceedings against the petitioner in exercise of its suo motu jurisdiction. However, it is reiterated that our short order dated 19.06.2020 merely issues a direction to the Chairman FBR and in no way obliges the SJC to take any action based on the report. The SJC may do so of its own volition if it considers that the report justifies any action against the petitioner. But it may also file the report if it finds that the same contains no substance/ merit. The SJC is the only constitutional body which can examine the conduct of a Superior Court Judge. Therefore our direction for the disclosure of the findings and the record of the verification proceedings by the FBR to the SJC acknowledges the latter's exclusive jurisdiction in this matter. Consequently, the Chairman FBR's report is a piece of information to be evaluated by the SJC in its suo motu jurisdiction.

146. At the same time our short order has preserved the rights of the affected taxpayers, Mrs. Isa and her children, under the Ordinance. This includes the right to appeal against the decision of the Commissioner or against any other adverse order passed at the appellate stage. To our minds, the two directions, namely, the filing of the report by the Chairman FBR before the SJC and the protection of the affected persons right to appeal, issued by us were necessary in the interests of justice. The jurisdiction of the FBR is concerned with taxing income whereas the jurisdiction of the SJC is related only with the misconduct of a Judge. Therefore, the proceedings and/or the outcome before one forum do not affect those of the other forum. However, the SJC may if so inclined in the exercise of its suo motu jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution take into consideration any proceedings before the tax authorities or orders passed by them.

CONCLUSION

147. These then are the detailed reasons for our findings recorded in the short order dated 19.06.2020.

148. Before parting with our judgment, we would like to thank learned counsel for the petitioner in Const. P. No. 17 of 2019 and the connected petitions as well as learned counsel for the respondents, whose names are recorded in the title of the judgment, for their invaluable assistance to the Court. We also express our appreciation to all the learned counsel who appeared before us for presenting their well-reasoned arguments with grace and respect and for giving a patient ear to the questions posed by the Hon'ble members of the Bench.

Sd/- JUDGE Sd/- JUDGE

Sd/- JUDGE Sd/- JUDGE

Sd/- JUDGE Sd/- JUDGE

Sd/- JUDGE Sd/- JUDGE

Sd/- JUDGE Sd/- JUDGE

INDEX

| Sr. No | Topic | Para Nos |
|---|---|---|
| 1 | Introduction * Independence of Judiciary; Impartiality of Judges | 1-2 |
| 2 | Facts * Factual matrix; Petitioner's propositions; Connected petitions with main propositions; Respondents propositions; Recusal application by counsel for petitioner; Short order dated 19.06.2020 | 3-12 |
| 3 | Maintainability * Art 184(3) and bar of Art 211 on jurisdiction; Grounds of review of pre-reference proceedings; Petition maintainable | 13-23 |
| 4 | Case against the Petitioner * Reference to Art 209; Brief reference to the allegations; Reference to Code of Conduct; Reference to SJC Rules 2005; Meaning of misconduct; Timing of misconduct; Accountability for family's conduct (Judicial Estacode, Bangalore Principles, Amnesty Schemes, Scope of obligation on Judges to be informed of financial affairs of family members) | 24-42 |
| 5 | Mala Fides * Meaning and standard of proof of mala fides; Specific incidents raised by counsel for petitioner as highlighting the mala fides of respondents (Review petitions filed against Dharna Judgment, Proxy complainant, Leaking of Reference, Firdous Ashiq Awan's press conference, Hastiness of Government, Remarks of (former) AG in Rejoinder); No malice in fact | 43-64 |
| 6 | Constitution of ARU * Reference to Foreign Currency Accounts Cases; Creation of ARU (Executive authority, Notifications from Cabinet read with Rule 2 (1) (ii) ROB, Composition and TORs of ARU, Publication of Notification in gazette); Appointment of Shahzad Akbar as SAPM (Reference to Muhammad Adil Chattha case); Both creation and appointment legal | 65-76 |
| 7 | Surveillance and Illegally Collected Evidence * Meaning of surveillance and its application to the case; S.216(3)(p) ITO 2001 - reference to previous tax laws and Section 21 P.P.C.; Judges are public servants - includes discussion on Mrs. Isa's status; Tax information accessed illegally; UK property record search; Application of Art. 14 and distinction from Benazir Bhutto case | 77-88 |
| 8 | Defects in the Reference * Identification of the main defects; Quality of Presidential reference as distinguished from other methods of complaints against Judges | 89-92 |
| 9 | Authorisation for Investigation * Reference to para 64 of CJP case; Reference to item 21(10) of Schedule II of ROB; 18th Constitutional Amendment; Analysis on who is the competent authority for investigation (Whether President to act on advice or in his discretion, Whose advice is President to act on, Investigation illegal) | 93-103 |
| 10 | Validity of Allegations in the Reference * Reproductions from Reference and SCN; FERA (No submission by counsel for respondents, No merit in the allegation); Money laundering (Reference to provisions of AMLA, S.116 ITO 2001 not a predicate offence, Were other ITO 2001 offences predicate offences at relevant time, Counsel for respondents contention that petitioner had violated the money laundering regime rejected, Premature allegation); S.116 ITO 2001 (No notice issued to Mrs. Isa or petitioner, Entire case based on AC (IR) opinion, FBR's, petitioner's and respondents interpretation of S.116, Counsel for respondent's | 104-120 |

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| | subsequent reliance on Code of Conduct rejected, Mrs. Isa's address to the Court, Compliance of Arts 4 and 10A, Premature allegation) | |
| 11 | Application of Mind by the President * Reference to Ch. Ijaz Ahmed, J concurring note on substance of President's 'opinion'; President's reliance on advice from Law Minister and (former) AG; Reasons for President's obligation to apply his mind when forming an opinion under Art. 209(5) - reference to Art. 48(1) and proviso; Advice of PM, not Cabinet, to be relied on; Whose obligation is it to set out reasons for preparing a reference against a Judge; No independent application of mind | 121-135 |
| 12 | Conclusion for Defects in the Reference * Defects amount to malice in law | 136 |
| 13 | Show Cause Notice issued by SJC * Super structural in nature - hence abates | 137 |
| 14 | Referral to FBR * To safeguard integrity of petitioner and institution and to honour the former's plea; Distinguished CJP case; Accountability of public office holders; Plea of petitioner (in detail); FBR most appropriate authority to verify the information provided; No curtailment of any party's substantive and procedural rights | 138-144 |
| 15 | Jurisdiction of SJC * Suo motu jurisdiction; SJC proceedings separate from FBR proceedings | 145-146 |
| 16 | Conclusion | 147-148 |

DISSENT NOTE

Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J.-

Introduction

While it appears that this case is about the independence and accountability of a judge, it is truly about the independence and accountability of our institutions. It raises the questions: Are we governed by the Constitution and the Rule of Law or can the Government of the day conveniently get off the constitutional rails to suit its ends and come prying into the private lives of its citizens in disregard of their constitutional rights? Can a Special Assistant[1] to the Prime Minister, acting as Chairman, ARU,[2] assume a role larger than the statutory institutions of the State and spearhead investigation and surveillance into the life and conduct of a judge of the highest constitutional court, sidestepping the prescribed constitutional process? Can the Special Assistant wield power over statutory institutions like FBR, NADRA and FIA without any sanction of law? Can a Law Minister, ignore the law, the Constitution and the statutory institutions of the State and permit ARU to entertain, investigate and collect evidence on a private complaint against a constitutional court judge? Is the Law Minister justified to place a Summary based upon the evidence so collected, before the Prime Minister for approval? Is there a level of responsibility expected of the Prime Minister, who is the Chief Executive of the Federation and Head of the Cabinet, in approving Summaries placed before him? In a matter no less serious than the removal of a judge of the highest court in the land, was the Prime Minister required to inquire how the "information" placed before him was collected and whether the information collected actually made out a case of "misconduct" against the Petitioner Judge or is the Prime Minister to impetuously approve Summaries without any application of mind? Can Government in a constitutional democracy be driven by personal bias, malice, intolerance and bigotry or should an institutional process run it with collegiality, transparency, fairness, openness, diversity and inclusiveness as its hallmarks? Are we to expand our frontiers of freedom as we mature into a democracy and strengthen our constitutional guarantees

---

[1] The substantive legal post of Chairman, ARU, is that of a Special Assistant to the Prime Minister.

[2] Asset Recovery Unit ( discussed in detail later) with renewed confidence and enthusiasm or regress into darkness by permitting unconstitutional acts that allow muffling of a critical judicial voice in the name of judicial accountability? This case makes us think, whether we want our future generations to descend into a dystopia or grow up into a vibrant democracy with an understanding and conviction that "in a democracy, the State is neither with us nor against us. It is us."[3]

2. I concurred with the conclusion of the Majority recorded in the Short Order dated 19.6.2020, whereby the Reference filed against Justice Qazi Faez Isa was quashed and the subsequent proceedings before the Supreme Judicial Council stood abated. I have gone through the Majority Judgment and, with respect, hold a different view of the Constitution, the law and the facts of the case and have been unable to subscribe to the logic and reasoning of the Majority view. I have, therefore, penned my own reasons for quashing the Reference. I am also unable to agree with the directions[4] issued by the Majority in the Short Order and have given reasons for my dissent later in the judgment.

Judicial Independence and Judicial Accountability

3. "I have always thought…that the greatest scourge of angry heaven ever inflicted upon an ungrateful and a sinning people was an ignorant, a corrupt or a dependent judiciary," said John Marshall.[5] Judicial independence and judicial accountability are two sides of the same coin and one cannot co-exist without the other. Therefore, to compromise on judicial accountability is to compromise on our freedoms guaranteed under the Constitution; the Rule of Law; Independence of Judiciary; and Democracy itself. We all know that the court cannot buy support for its decisions by spending money or use force to coerce obedience of its decrees. The court's power lies in its legitimacy, a product of substance and perception that shows itself in the people's acceptance of the judiciary as fit to determine what the law means and to declare what it demands. The court's concern with legitimacy is not for the sake of the court but for the sake of the nation to which it is

---

[3] Jonathan Sumption, Trials of the State: Law and the Decline of Politics (2019).

[4] Paragraphs 4-11 of the Short Order dated 19.06.2020.

[5] Fourth Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court (1801-1835) - see Fazal Karim, Judicial Review of Public Actions, p.282, Vol-1 (2nd ed.).

responsible.[6] Foundations of judicial institution stand on public confidence and public trust that lend it legitimacy and public acceptance. Institutional legitimacy of the judiciary, in turn, is grounded in judicial integrity of the judges. According to John Marshall, ignorance, corruption and dependence of a judge are the evils that tarnish judicial integrity; Our Constitution also lays down the measure of judicial integrity of a judge. While taking oath a constitutional court judge makes a solemn promise before God that he will discharge his duties and perform his functions honestly and faithfully in accordance with the Constitution and the law; that he will not allow his personal interest to influence his official conduct or decisions; that he will abide by the code of conduct issued by the Supreme Judicial Council; and that he will always preserve, protect and defend the Constitution. This is the constitutional requirement of judicial integrity. A judge is to always tread the path of the Constitution and the law, must possess strength of character to never give in to external influence for personal benefit, and must be bold and courageous to always stand for the Constitution and to preserve, protect and defend it. Any compromise on this sacred promise with God, is to comprise judicial integrity.

4. While judicial accountability is critical for upholding the legitimacy of the judicial institution, equally important is the right of a Judge to enjoy the protection of law and to be treated in accordance with law. Judicial accountability, like any other accountability, must be according to the standards of due process guaranteed under Article 4 of the Constitution. We must remember that public confidence and public trust in the legitimacy of the judicial institution can only be attained when judges decide without fear or favour, in accordance with law, even while sitting in judgment over the affairs of their own colleague. While dealing with judicial accountability we are not to project a forced image of self- accountability to win accolades of the public or make extra effort to win over public confidence. We are to simply decide in accordance with the Constitution and the law – come what may.

---

[6] see: Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833 (1992)

Brief Facts

5. Justice Qazi Faez Isa ("Petitioner Judge") being part of a two Member Bench of this Court authored judgment in Suo Motu Case No.7 of 2017, known as Faizabad Dharna case,[7] decided on February 6, 2019, and made certain observations therein as to the 2014 Dharna of the current main ruling political party (PTI), the role of the coalition ruling party (MQM) at the time of Karachi incident of 2007, and the interference by the Military Intelligence Agencies in politics and freedom of Media. It was also directed in the judgment that proceedings should be taken against military officers who had violated their oath of office by engaging in political activity. Several review petitions were filed against that judgment, including the petitions by the PTI, MQM, and Ministry of Defense, Government of Pakistan, in March, 2019. The Ministry's petition sought for expunction of the observations and directions made regarding the Military Intelligence Agencies and its officers. The PTI and MQM (the political parties currently in Government), in their review petitions, asserted that the Petitioner Judge by making the objectionable observations in the judgment had violated his Oath of Office and Code of Conduct for Judges and was liable to be removed from office under Article 209 of the Constitution. This assertion of removal was made only against the Petitioner Judge, and not against the other learned Member of the Bench.

6. Soon thereafter, one Abdul Waheed Dogar ("Complainant") made a complaint titled "Accountability of Judges" to the Asset Recovery Unit ("ARU"), housed in the Prime Minister's Office, on April 10, 2019, against the Petitioner Judge and two other judges of the constitutional courts. The complainant alleged that these judges owned offshore properties. A meeting of the ARU was held on April 15, 2019 to discuss the complaint at the residence of the Chairman, ARU in the Minister's Colony, Islamabad, and it was decided in that meeting that since the matter pertained to the Judges of Superior Judiciary the opinion of the Law Minister should be sought. The Chairman and certain Members of the ARU met the Law Minister in his office on April 16, 2019 who advised orally that before taking any further action, the ARU should check the veracity of the allegations contained in the complaint. No formal correspondence took place between the ARU and the Law Ministry, in this regard. The Chairman, ARU, after that meeting, tasked Barrister Zia Naseem, Legal Expert of the ARU, to verify the property details attached with the complaint, and further conduct a wider property search in the names of persons mentioned in the complaint and of their family members. He also tasked Mr. Muhammad Rizwan, Member of the ARU from FIA, to obtain identification documents of persons mentioned in the complaint, copies of their CNICs and passports, all visas, if any, family tree and travel history. On the suggestion of Mr. Muhammad Ashfaq Ahmad, Member of the ARU from FBR, the Chairman decided to forward the complaint through a formal letter to the Chairman, FBR for assessment and analysis into declaration of assets of persons mentioned in the complaint. The Legal Expert of ARU submitted his report about UK properties in the name of the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge, on May 8, 2019. The Member of ARU from FIA submitted his report on May 10, 2019. Assistant Commissioner (IR), Commissioner (IR), and DG, (International Taxes)/Member of ARU from FBR, all three, submitted their reports on May 10, 2019. The Chairman, ARU then made his final Report on May 10, 2019 after examining all the reports and record submitted to him by the Legal Expert and Members of the ARU, and dispatched it to the Law Minister on the very same day, i.e., May 10, 2019. The Report also mentioned a meeting of the Chairman, ARU with the complainant held to inquire into the allegations made in the complaint.

---

[7] PLD 2019 SC 318.

7. The Chairman, ARU thus investigated the complaint; located properties in the UK, and obtained reports regarding record of the Petitioner Judge and his family from the FBR, NADRA and FIA. He found that there were three properties in the names of the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge in UK having been purchased in the years 2004 and 2013 and that those properties had not been declared by the Petitioner Judge and his family in their tax returns. One property was initially reported to have been purchased in 2011, but later on after filing of the Reference it was reported to have been purchased in the year 2004. The Chairman, ARU did not consider it fit to inquire into the alleged properties of one other judge mentioned in the complaint after noting in the minutes of meeting held on April 16, 2019 that the said judge had already resigned.

8. The Chairman, ARU, as mentioned earlier, submitted his report of the said investigation conducted on the complaint to the Law Minister on May 10, 2019. The Law Ministry, made a "Summary for the Prime Minister", on May 17, 2019, proposing to the Prime Minister to advise the President, under Article 48(1) of the Constitution, to form an opinion that the Petitioner Judge may be guilty of misconduct and direct the Council under Article 209(5) of the Constitution to inquire into the matter. The basis for the proposal was stated in the Summary as under:

> "A judge of the Superior Court who omits to intentionally declare three expensive London properties jointly owned by his spouse and children, violates Section 116 of the 2001 Ordinance. The tax records of the learned Judge and his spouse are absolutely silent about the sources through which the said properties had been acquired and how and from where the funds were made available to purchase the said properties, without violating the money laundering regime and the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947. The said mis-declaration seems glaring. Thus, the said Judge i.e. Justice Qazi Faez Isa appears to have committed gross misconduct and is liable to be removed upon the recommendations of the Supreme Judicial Council in terms of Article 209 of Constitution."

The draft Reference was also annexed with the Summary. On the same day, i.e., May 17, 2019 the Prime Minister, accordingly, advised the President to form his opinion, direct the Council and sign the draft Reference. The President approved the Prime Minister's advice and signed the Reference on May 20, 2019. The Secretary, Ministry of Law and Justice forwarded the Reference to the Supreme Judicial Council ("Council") on May 23, 2019. The Secretary, Council placed the Reference before the Chairman, Council, on May 29, 2019, and the Chairman, Council made an order to convene the meeting of the Council for June 14, 2019 to consider the matter. Even though the matter had not yet been taken up in the meeting of the Council for preliminary consideration, several newspapers published the filing of the Reference and the allegations made therein against the Petitioner Judge on May 28, 29, 30, 31, and June 1 and 3, 2019. Later during the proceedings before the Council the matter was discussed in press conferences and TV talk shows by the Government Ministers and even by the President of Pakistan.

Issues

9. The constitutional and legal issues I would address are as follows:

i. Could the Asset Recovery Unit (ARU) entertain and investigate a complaint against the conduct of a constitutional court judge under the law and Constitution?

ii. Was the ARU established with lawful authority under the law and Constitution? And what was the legal status of its Chairman?

iii. Did the ARU collect evidence in support of the allegations made in the complaint against the Petitioner Judge in accordance with the law and Constitution?

iv. If the answer to the above question is in the negative, could the Law Minister and the Prime Minister rely and act upon such evidence?

v. Was the President to form his independent personal "opinion", or to form the "opinion" on and in accordance with the advice of the Prime Minister, under Article 209(5) of the Constitution, on the "information" placed before him?

vi. Could an opinion as to the commission of misconduct be reasonably made against the Petitioner Judge, on the "information" given in the "Summary" and material annexed therewith?

vii. Does publicizing the act of sending the Reference against the Petitioner Judge and of the contents thereof attract proceedings under Article 204 of the Constitution and Contempt of Court Ordinance, 2003?

viii. Were the acts of entertaining the complaint, inquiring into and collecting evidence on the allegations, and making and filing of the Reference against the Petitioner Judge, malafide?

I endeavour to deal with these issues as per my humble understanding of the law and Constitution.

Constitutional Process for Removal of a Constitutional Court Judge

10. Article 209 of the Constitution provides the process for the removal of a constitutional court judge. A special constitutional forum - Supreme Judicial Council - has been vested with the exclusive jurisdiction under the Constitution to inquire into the capacity and conduct of a constitutional court judge, and recommend his removal. The Council is a collegium of judges headed by the Chief Justice of Pakistan and consisting of two next most senior judges of the Supreme Court and two most senior Chief Justices of High Courts. The process of the Council is set in motion when "information from any source" against a constitutional court judge reaches the President or the Council. Either of the two gatekeepers, as the case may be, principally verifies and assesses the gravity of the allegations and forms an "opinion" whether the matter calls for "inquiry" into the capacity or conduct of the judge by the Council.

11. The proceedings before the Council, its report to the President and the removal of the judge by the President under Article 209 cannot be called in question in any court of law under Article 211, unless the removal of the judge is without jurisdiction, malafide or coram non judice. A limited judicial review on these three grounds is not affected by Article 211, as no ouster clause can keep the actions taken without jurisdiction, malafide or coram non judice, beyond the scrutiny of the constitutional courts.[8] Article 211 gives immunity to proceedings before the Council till the removal of the judge by the President. However, proceedings and steps taken before the matter lands before the Council escape the immunity under Article 211. In the present case, there were several steps that preceded the proceedings before the Council: the filing of complaint ('information') by the complainant before the ARU; the entertainment of the complaint by the ARU; the mode and manner of dealing with the complaint by the ARU and Law Ministry; the investigation and collection of evidence to supplement and document the complaint by the ARU; the preparation of "Summary" for making the Reference by the Law Ministry; the advice of the Prime Minister on the Summary; and the approval of that advice by the President. All these acts preceded the proceedings before the Council and are not hit by the ouster clause of Article 211. They are, therefore, subject to standard judicial review like any other executive or administrative act, on the grounds of substantive illegality, procedural impropriety and decisional irrationality.[9] In a democracy governed by the rule of law, where arbitrariness in any form is eschewed, no Government or authority has the right to do whatever it pleases; where the rule of law prevails, there is nothing like unfettered discretion or unaccountable action.[10] It is, however, underlined that a Reference competently filed by the President against a constitutional court judge should not ordinarily be made subject to scrutiny in judicial review by any Constitutional Court including this Court, unless the extraordinary circumstances demand such intervention in the interest of justice and fair play.[11]

---

[8] see CJP Iftikhar Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan, PLD 2010 SC 61, per Khalil-ur-Rehman Ramday, J, paras 78, 80, 83 and 85.

12. While a citizen (a private person) can always directly approach these forums by placing the information before them, it is important to understand how the Government (Federal, Provincial or Local) or its Ministries, Divisions, Departments and officials place such "information" or complaint against a judge of a constitutional court before the President. Can any Ministry, Division, Attached Department or Department of the Government on receiving any information against a constitutional court judge, entertain it and proceed with it, or start collecting evidence or verify the contents of the complaint? The answer to this is in the negative in the light of Article 209(7) of the Constitution, which mandates that the only constitutional forum available to inquire into the conduct or capacity of a constitutional court judge is the Council. So the Governments, its Ministries, Divisions, Departments or Attached Departments and their officers are not authorized to entertain any complaint against a constitutional court judge, let alone proceed and collect evidence to supplement the complaint. They can at best return the complaint to the complainant and guide him to approach the constitutional forums under Article 209 of the Constitution.

13. Let us take a situation where any Ministry, Division, Attached Department or Department of the Government, in the course of its normal business, discovers some adverse information against a constitutional court judge that may attract impeachable misconduct, in addition to the legal proceedings under the relevant

---

[9] See Ibid, para 70.

[10] see State of W.B v. Debasish Mukherjee, (2011) 14 SCC 187.

[11] See CJP Iftikhar Chauhdry case (supra), Per Muhammad Nawaz Abbasi, J. p.215.

law. The concerned Department etc., in such situation, should at first proceed against the constitutional court judge on the basis of the adverse information in accordance with the law under which it functions. For example, if it is the FBR that discovers such an information, it can proceed against the judge under the tax laws and the judge will have a right to defend himself in accordance with law. Only when these proceedings come to a close after exhausting all the legal and judicial avenues and it is finally held that the judge has violated the law, the FBR may, in the interest of judicial accountability, send this information to the Federal Government through the Division with which it is attached under the Rules of Business, 1973 ("ROB") for information and necessary action. It will then finally rest with the Federal Government i.e., the Cabinet, to decide if the violation of law amounts to impeachable misconduct and whether the Federal Government should proceed against the constitutional court judge and place the "information" before the President. Such process finds its justification from the foundational constitutional principles like independence of judiciary, rule of law and parliamentary democracy.

Entertainment of Complaint by ARU

14. First and foremost, the complainant could only have approached the constitutional forums provided under Article 209(5) of the Constitution and could not have filed the complaint before any other office or authority. Therefore, the very act of approaching the ARU was per se unconstitutional and illegal. It is noted with concern and suspicion that how did the complainant, a citizen of this country, plan on filing the complaint against a constitutional court judge before the ARU, which had no public interface or the legal mandate to deal with such a matter and had earlier never conducted any inquiry for the accountability of a constitutional court judge. There is surprisingly nothing on the record to show how the complainant found out about ARU. The ARU was not a Ministry or Division of any Ministry of the Federal Government, or an Attached Department, neither was it a statutory authority nor had the notification of its establishment been published in the official gazette for public information. The ARU, therefore, for all practical purposes did not legally exist for the world outside the Prime Minister's Office. However, the complainant instead of approaching the Council, which would have ordinarily come to the mind of a citizen, particularly in view of the publically known recent removal of a High Court Judge by the President on the recommendation of the Council,[12] approached the ARU for the accountability of judges. This looks more odd especially when the complainant claims to be a journalist. Such an unusual step by the complainant raises eyebrows about the credibility of the complaint and the bonafide of the complainant.

Legal Status of ARU

15. The ARU was established by the Cabinet vide Notification dated 06.11.2018. The Federation has defended the establishment of the ARU by the Cabinet, by referring to the provisions of Rules 4(5) and 16(1)(m) of the ROB. The submission made on behalf of the Federation was that Rule 4(5) empowers the Prime Minister to establish agencies and offices for conducting the business of the Federal Government, and under Rule (16)(1)(m) the Cabinet has power to decide any matter referred to it by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister referred the matter of establishing the ARU to the Cabinet, and the Cabinet thus competently approved the establishment of the ARU. Rules 4(5) and 16(1)(m) of ROB are reproduced here for ready reference:

> 4. Organization of Divisions.
>
> .....
> .....
>
> (5) The business of Government, other than the business done in the Federal Secretariat or the Attached Departments, shall be conducted through such agencies and offices as the Prime Minister may determine from time to time.
>
> 16. Cases to be brought before the Cabinet.--(1) The following cases shall be brought before the Cabinet:-
> .....
> .....
>
> .....
>
> (m) any case desired by the Prime Minister to be referred to the Cabinet.

Bare reading of the provisions of Rule 4(5) makes it clear that the said Rule does not empower the Prime Minister to establish new agencies or offices; it simply authorizes him to refer the business of the Government to already established agencies and offices under the law. The word "determine" has been used in the Rule in the context of allocation or entrustment of the business of Government and not for the power to establish a new agency or office. In the

---

[12] Justice Shaukat Siddiqui's case, Report of the Council dated 11.10.2018.

absence of any power to establish a new agency or office, reference of the matter to the Cabinet under Rule 16(1)(m) by the Prime Minister is inconsequential, as the Cabinet also does not enjoy any such power. The scope of the ROB made under Article 99(3) of the Constitution cannot extend to creation of agencies or offices to perform functions in relation to any matter to which the executive authority of the Federation extends. Such agencies or offices can be established only by or under some law enacted by the Parliament on the subject over which it has the legislative power under the Constitution. The creation of the ARU by the Cabinet, cannot be sustained treating it as an Attached Department of the Cabinet Division also. The Departments that have been declared as Attached Departments to particular Divisions are created by or under the law, and not by the Federal Government.[13] The Federal Government, as per Rules 2(1)(ii) and 4(4) of ROB, can only declare them attached with a particular Division, but cannot create them. The Terms of Reference (TORs) of the ARU define its role and powers. The ARU does not pass as a coordinating agency or office under the TORs for the following reasons: first, as per its Notification it was established as an entity separate from the Departments whose officials have been made its Members and also addressed as such in its TORs; second, there is no mention of its coordinating role in the TORs; third, the powers and functions have been prescribed in the TORs as that of the ARU, and not of its Members; and fourth, but most importantly, the ARU was conferred such wide and extensive powers which even its Members did not enjoy under the laws of their parent institutions, e.g., it was empowered to request any intelligence agency under the Government of Pakistan for assistance in obtaining any information on any subject within and outside the country,[14] and authorized to seek assistance and information from Law Enforcement Agencies and other Government Departments, including the information relating to bank accounts, companies record, revenue record, travel record, NADRA record etc.[15] With such intrusive investigative powers, the ARU cannot be said to be an innocuous coordinating agency, office or unit. The

---

[13] See ROB, Schedule III.

[14] TOR No. 7.

[15] TOR No.8.

establishment of the ARU was, therefore, absolutely without lawful authority, and is hereby so declared. In the absence of any legal status of the ARU, its Chairman and Members also have no legal position or status.

Budgetary Status of ARU

16. It is important to see how the ARU was being funded. Were the funds allocated for the functioning of ARU duly reflected in the Annual Budget? Funds can be allocated for any Government activity only by the National Assembly in the Annual Budget Grants under Article 82(2) or supplementary and excess budget grants under Article 84 of the Constitution. The Annual Budget Statements for the financial years 2018-19 and 2019-20 do not mention the allocation of any budget for the expenditure of ARU. The power of the Federal Government, i.e., the Cabinet, under Article 82(3) is only recommendatory, and provisional under Article 84, both are subject to the assent by the National Assembly. The amounts as approved in the budget passed by the National Assembly can be utilized only for the purpose specified in the budget statement. Any re-appropriation of funds or their utilization for some other purpose is not justified under the Constitution; for this purpose, the supplementary budget statement has to be placed before the National Assembly following the procedure provided in Article 84 of the Constitution. Persons making the unauthorized expenditure from the Federal Consolidated Fund are personally responsible for that expenditure.[16] The ARU, therefore, had no budgetary support and therefore does not pass for an executive authority. In this background, role of the ARU becomes more suspicious and raises the questions: who funded the investigation and the transnational surveillance of the Petitioner Judge; who paid for the Law Expert of the ARU; who paid for collecting information from the UK HM Land Registry or 192.com, which are not open source, as one has to pay and register to access information; who was funding the entire operation. These unanswered questions cast doubts on the bonafides of the

---

[16] See Case of Action against Distribution of Development Funds, PLD 2014 SC 131; Mustafa Impex v. Govt. of Pakistan, PLD 2016 SC 808 and Ram Jawaya v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 549.

Government and the Prime Minister, the Chief Executive of the Federation.

Legal Status of the Chairman, ARU

17. The appointment of the Chairman, ARU by the Cabinet is not backed by any law including any rule of the ROB. Even otherwise, the ROB made under Article 99(3) of the Constitution cannot provide for creation of posts in connection with the affairs of the Federation. Such power must be conferred by some law enacted under Article 240(a) of the Constitution. Article 99(3) empowers the Federal Government to make rules only on two subjects: firstly, for the allocation of the business of the Federal Government to its different components, i.e., the Ministries; and secondly, for the transaction of that business. The Rules made under this power can regulate the procedural modalities of allocation and transaction of the business, i.e., by which Ministry or Division of a Ministry and how a matter is to be taken up and dealt with; such Rules cannot grant substantive power to create posts in connection with the affairs of the Federation.[17] The expression "allocation and transaction" of the business does not by any stretch of imagination imply such power. Thus, the appointment of the Chairman, ARU by the Cabinet was without lawful authority, and is so declared.

18. The prior appointment of the Chairman, ARU as Special Assistant to the Prime Minister on Accountability with the status of Minister of State, under Rule 4(6) of the ROB also appears to be questionable. The Constitution has prescribed a limitation for the total number of the Federal Ministers and Ministers of State: second proviso to Article 93 mandates that the total strength of the Cabinet, including Ministers of State, shall not exceed eleven percent of the total membership of Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament). This command of the Constitution cannot be circumvented and made redundant by doing a thing indirectly that cannot be done directly. The Constitution has envisaged the Federal Government consisting of the Prime Minister and the Federal Ministers to exercise the executive authority of the Federation,[18] and has allowed assistance in exercise of that authority by appointment of the Ministers of State[19] and the Advisers.[20] The Constitution does not provide for appointment of any Special Assistant to the Prime Minister. The scope of the Rules of Business made under Article 99(3), as above explained, is restricted only to the "allocation and transaction" of the business of the Government. The vires of Rule 4(6) of the ROB that empowers the Prime Minister to appoint Special Assistant, therefore, needs serious examination. This matter, however, is not directly in issue in the present case; therefore, it is left to be decided in an appropriate case some other time.

---

[17] See Mustafa Impex v. Govt. of Pakistan, PLD 2016 SC 808.

[18] The Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973, Article 90(1).

19. The ARU was, as aforesaid, neither supported by any law nor recognized by the ROB as a functional part of the Federal Government. It was at best an internal part of the Prime Minister's Office and possessed no legal status more than that of the status of its Chairman, i.e., the Special Assistant to the Prime Minster. Such an internal unit or wing or cell under the Cabinet Division and in the Prime Minister's Office had no power to deal with or pry into the affairs of a third party and more so of a citizen who at all times enjoys an inalienable right to the protection of law and the constitutional guarantee of fundamental rights. Without the backing of an enabling law, the ARU or the Chairman, ARU had no power or jurisdiction to deal or interact with any third party. There is no power inherent in the Executive; the Constitution and the law are the only source of its powers and duties.[21] No office or authority of the Executive can take any action detrimental to the life, liberty, body, reputation or property of any person except in accordance with law as mandated by Article 4 of the Constitution. Inspite of no legal standing, the ARU and its Chairman had arrogated to themselves the role of avatars of accountability, drawing their legal authority and power from the Terms of Reference (TORs) approved by the Cabinet. The TORs of the ARU, which set out various inquisitorial and investigative functions regarding the life, liberty, reputation and property of the citizens of Pakistan, have absolutely no legal value. The ARU, it is stated as a matter of example, was not even entitled to proceed against a peon at the Prime Minister's Office. However, audacity of the Chairman,

[19] Ibid., Article 92(1).

[20] Ibid., Article 93(1).

[21] See Muslim League v. Federation, PLD 2007 SC 642.

ARU had no bounds and he, on a vague complaint, without any authorization from any constitutional or legal source, started investigation into the affairs of a judge of the highest constitutional court of the land. A Special Assistant, a contractual employee, serving at the pleasure of the Prime Minister had no authority or power to embark upon this inquisition. It is not reasonable to accept that the Special Assistant to the Prime Minister or the Law Minister could have performed all these acts without any kind of tacit authorization from the Prime Minister. This misplaced overzealousness besides being illegal and without jurisdiction is also speaking, and speaks loudly, that there was more to it than meets the eye.

Investigation of the Complaint by the ARU

20. The Chairman, ARU on receiving the complaint from the complainant acted with surprising agility and unleashed his team to collect evidence of the alleged foreign properties. The ARU, which was to work under the Cabinet Division as per decision of the Cabinet, did not make any formal request to the Law and Justice Division through the Secretary, Cabinet Division for consultation on the matter in accordance with Rule 14 of the ROB, despite noting in minutes of its meeting held on April 15, 2019 that the matter was sensitive as it related to the Judges of the Superior Judiciary. The informal discussion and consultation made by the Chairman and Members of the ARU with the Law Minister on April 16, 2019, and the oral advice of the Law Minister in that discussion carries no value in the eyes of law. The Law Minister, who was a distinguished constitutional lawyer, also did not realize the importance of his advice, even oral, and gave a "go ahead" to the ARU for inquiring into the veracity of the allegations made in the complaint against judges of the constitutional courts. The Chairman, ARU who was also a Barrister-at-law, and not a layman, knew well that an oral advice of the Law Minister was nothing in the eyes of law and he should have ascertained his legal authority to inquire into the allegations made against Judges of Constitutional Courts, before initiating the inquiry into the allegations made in the complaint. But both of them paid no heed to the constitutional mandate of Article 209 of the Constitution, and initiated the process of inquiring into the allegations made in the complaint in such a manner which even the Council could not have done if the complaint had been made to it. This cannot be taken to be an innocent mistake by persons of such a legal caliber and standing.

21. The Chairman ARU, after the discussion with the Law Minister, on his own initiated the inquiry against the alleged properties of the judges of the constitutional courts and their family members. He tasked his team to procure the family records of the Petitioner Judge from NADRA and also their travelling history and the tax record from FIA and FBR, respectively. This fact is evident from the minutes of the meeting held on April 16, 2019 by the Chairman and Members of ARU with the Law Minister; there is no mention of discussion among the Members of the ARU on how to proceed further in the matter, or making of the decision by consensus or majority view of the Members. The Chairman, ARU did not obtain the opinion of or consult with the other Members of ARU. However, the other Members of ARU supplied information on the Petitioner Judge and his family without the authorization of law. It is clear from the minutes of the meeting that ARU was being run by the Chairman, ARU, and the other Members of ARU, even though representing statutory authorities, acted illegally and with alarming servitude.

22. Astonishingly, the Chairman, ARU on the oral advice of the Law Minister, decided not to inquire into the alleged foreign properties of another judge[22] mentioned in the complaint on the ground that the said judge had already resigned. This selective treatment unveils the true objective of the proceedings conducted by the Chairman, ARU and the Law Minister: to conduct a judicial witch-hunt rather than to recover alleged unlawful foreign assets and properties. Had the Chairman, ARU been acting for recovery of the alleged illegally acquired foreign assets of the Judges as per the so-called mandate of the ARU, the fact that a judge had resigned could have made no difference for taking legal proceedings for the recovery of his alleged illegally acquired foreign properties.

---

[22] Justice Farrukh Irfan Khan of the Lahore High Court.

Searching and Locating the Foreign Properties by the Legal Expert, ARU

23. This is the most sensitive, disturbing and scary part of the case for any law-abiding citizen and for a country governed by the rule of law. It is an admitted fact between the parties that ownership of an immovable property in UK can be traced through UK HM Land Registry's official website, only by giving its address (property number) and not by simply citing the name of the owner. This information was not supplied by the complainant and was not available on the record of FBR or any other office or authority in Pakistan. The critical question that requires explanation is, how did the complainant or the ARU find out the addresses of the UK properties, so that they could access UK HM Land Registry? Answer to this question will answer whether we have a Government of law or Government of men.

24. The Petitioner Judge asserted in his constitutional petition that the information forming the basis of the Reference was gathered through covert surveillance in stark violation of his and his family's fundamental rights of privacy and dignity. The response of the Federation in its concise statement was a simple denial to this assertion of the Petitioner Judge; no details were mentioned as to how the UK properties in the name of the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge were located. The report dated May 8, 2019 of the Legal Expert, ARU annexed with the concise statement only stated that after an asset search the properties had been found registered in names of the persons mentioned in that report. This report was also silent as to how that property search was conducted. Who carried out the search? How was the search carried out? Who paid for it and when, especially when ARU has not sanctioned budget? What was discovered in the search? No evidence to this effect has been placed before us. These are questions that go unanswered and are deeply worrying in a State that is governed by the Rule of Law.

25. It was much after the counsel of the Petitioner Judge had completed his arguments that on June 1, 2020 the Chairman, ARU and the Legal Expert, ARU filed their concise statement, and in that statement they asserted that the details of those residing in any immovable property in the UK can be accessed through open source websites such as 192.com and ukphonebook.com; that once the address is located, the owner of that immovable property can be found through open source such as the UK HM Land Registry. They further stated that there had been no covert surveillance of the Petitioner Judge or his family. The Petitioner Judge filed a CMA in response to the said concise statement of the Chairman and Legal Expert, ARU. He stated therein that 192.com, ukphonebook.com, and UK HM Land registry websites are not free or open source websites. He elaborated that to access the information from the website 192.com, an account with username and password need to be created, payment is to be made by debit/credit card, the website acknowledges the payment of charges by email, and sends the requested information by email, and likewise is the procedure of accessing information from the UK HM Land Registry website. The Federation in defence did not produce any record of the searches made on those websites: What and how many addresses were found and under whose names? Who created the account? Who made the payment of charges? What were the payment or credit card details? Who received the acknowledgement of payment and the requested information and at whose email address? More importantly, there is no evidence of what information was received that was allegedly carried to UK HM Land Registry. The Federation has papered over the gaps by referring to 192.com, which is not sufficient, unless details are furnished regarding the information retrieved from the said site. It is underlined that a paid source, which requires registration and payment before allowing access to information, is not an open source as claimed by the Federation. It shows that no such search was conducted for tracing the properties through those websites; rather the details of the properties were gathered through covert surveillance of the Petitioner Judge and his family. Covert surveillance and interception are offensively intrusive investigative tools only available to intelligence agencies in the country.[23]

26. Article 129(g) of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984 allows the Court to presume that evidence which could be and is not produced would, if produced, be unfavourable to the person who withholds it. When a party withholds best evidence available with him without any sufficient cause, an adverse presumption is drawn against that party, irrespective of who bears the onus of proof,[24] that the evidence withheld must have been against his version.[25] Thus, the omission of the Federation and of the Chairman and Legal Expert, ARU to produce the said record as to procuring the address of the UK properties of the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge through the 192.com website gives rise to a presumption that the Legal Expert, ARU never searched the addresses of the properties through the 192.com website. Even otherwise, the Chairman and Legal Expert, ARU in their concise statement made a general statement that an immovable property can be located through open source websites, but they did not make any specific and categorical statement therein that the UK properties of the family of the Petitioner Judge were located by that method. The ARU was not equipped to carry out surveillance or interception without the assistance of the intelligence agencies, for which it had been authorized in the TORs by the Cabinet without any lawful authority as discussed above. It is underlined that intelligence agencies were also aggrieved of the Faizabad Dharna judgment as it carried adverse observations regarding their role and activity. That is why the review petitions were filed by the Ministry of Defense on behalf of the intelligence agencies. Further, it is evident from the report dated June 26, 2019 of the Legal Expert, ARU that he hired a Tracing Agent firm to trace the residents of the properties over the years, and not to trace the addresses of the properties.

[23] See Investigation For Fair Trial Act, 2013

27. While regular inquiry and investigation is limited to reaching out to lawful and visible evidence existing at the time, covert surveillance and interception are modern intrusive investigative tools for discovering and creating evidence against a person by encroaching upon his privacy and personal liberty. While investigation is the collection of the available record and mostly after notice to the person under investigation, surveillance is far more secretive and clandestine operation which is designed to intrude into the private recesses of one's life, the confidential zone that stands protected under the constitutional guarantees of the right to privacy and personal liberty. It is for this reason that surveillance is permitted in the limited area of anti-state or terrorist activities and that too under judicial and executive oversight. Outside this limited area, surveillance is constitutionally prohibited. Intelligence agencies do not enjoy a free hand in conducting surveillance but are subject to strict rules of compliance and oversight by the court. In the absence of any other evidence furnished by ARU or the Law Minister, it is but obvious that in this case the information about the addresses of properties were obtained through no other means but through covert surveillance and interception of the intelligence agencies which gathered the information from the private zone of privacy enjoyed by the Petitioner Judge and his family, without any authorization of law and by brutally trampling over the constitutional guarantees of privacy, personal freedom and dignity. To trivialize the right to privacy by saying that the judge has nothing to hide is "no different than saying you don't care about free speech because you have nothing to say."[26] The mode and manner of procurement of information regarding the three UK properties cannot be lightly dismissed; in it lays the destiny of our people and the future course of our country.

---

[24] See Murugesam Pillai v. Manickavasaka Desika, (1917) I.L.R. 40.

[25] Rameshwar Singh v. Rajit Lal, AIR 1929 PC 95; Hiralal v. Badkulal, AIR 1953 SC 225; and, Muhammad Zubair v. State, 2007 SCMR 437.

28. The complainant is a party to these proceedings. He also appeared before us, but did not explain his source of information or cleared the allegations leveled against him. The complainant appears to be a proxy, who could not have discovered the addresses of the three foreign properties. This inference is further supported from the following facts. The complaint allegedly annexed the copy of title record of one foreign property of the spouse of the Petitioner Judge, with his complaint. That copy of the title record was tendered by the Federation in Court, with the concise statement of the Chairman and Legal Expert, ARU on June 1, 2020 belatedly as mentioned above. The notable aspect of this copy of the title record is that it bears the Spanish name of the spouse of the Petitioner Judge, which as per stance of the Federation came to surface when the Member of ARU from FIA obtained her NADRA record, passport record and travelling history record. It is alarming to imagine how the complainant had come to know of the Spanish name of the spouse of the Petitioner Judge and how on earth he got the access to the address of that property. When the complaint does not mention either. The Chairman, ARU stated in his report that he met the complainant but did not mention in that report how the complainant had known the Spanish name of the spouse of the Petitioner Judge and got the address of that property. To cover up these gaping omissions, the Federation took the stance during arguments that the complainant was a journalist and no journalist tells, or can be compelled to tell, the source of his information. The stance is misconceived; it has been taken without appreciating the fact that the complainant had not got published an investigative story in any newspaper, he had rather made a complaint for action against the judges of constitutional courts for their alleged misconduct. His status was that of a complainant, and not of a journalist, in making the complaint. It is no rocket science to put the facts together to discern that the complainant was fed the information to generate the complaint. Whoever fed him the information are the real actors of this saga. The credentials of the complainant give further credence to this story; he was an unknown journalist with rather dubious reputation. Report of the Chairman ARU dated May 10, 2019 compiled after thorough investigation of the allegations made in the complaint and submitted to the Law Minister goes silent as to why the complainant wanted to file the complaint, what was his source of information, what newspapers he worked for, and did his complaint qualify to hide behind the code of ethics of journalists.

[26] Edward Snowden, Permanent Record.

29. This aspect of the case as to the unlawful procurement of the information through unlawful surveillance of the Petitioner Judge and his family is deeply worrying and shakes the foundations of a democratic society based on the rule of law. The issue of unlawful surveillance and invasion of privacy of the Petitioner Judge and his family is far more critical and grave than the information procured by the ARU. It is a naked threat to personal liberty, privacy and dignity guaranteed to the citizens under the Constitution. In order to appreciate the gravity of the constitutional violation committed by the ARU or its Chairman, it is important to understand the concept of privacy and personal freedom in a constitutional democracy that protects our private lives, our friendships, our relationships, our thoughts and our very sense of being, which no State has the power to touch or encroach.

Concept of Privacy

30. The Greek philosopher Aristotle spoke of a division between the public sphere of political affairs (which he termed the polis) and the personal sphere of human life (termed oikos).[27] This dichotomy may provide an early recognition of "a confidential zone on behalf of the citizen."[28] Activities in the private realm are more appropriately reserved for "private reflection, familial relations and self-determination."[29] John Stuart Mill in his essay, 'On Liberty' (1859) gave expression to the private zone in one's life; "The only part of the conduct of any one, for which he is amenable to society, is that which concerns others. In the part which merely concerns himself, his independence is, of right, absolute. Over himself, over his own body and mind, the individual is sovereign."[30] Sir Edward Coke, perhaps the most influential English jurist of all time, famously declared in Semayne case[31] "that the house of everyone is to him as his Castle and Fortress as well for his defence against injury and violence, as for his repose." Justice Stephen Breyer in his book writes that "by privacy, I mean a person's power to control what others can come to know about him or her."[32] In the most famous essay on privacy ever written, published in the Harvard Law Review in 1890, Louis Brandeis and Samuel D Warren referred to the principle of the right to an "inviolate personality," and said that it was a part of the more general "right to be let alone."[33] Later Justice Louis Brandeis expressed the right to privacy in his dissent in Olmstead v. United States[34] in the terms that a core of freedom and liberty from which the human being had to be free from intrusion. The right to be let alone is a reflection of the inviolable nature of the human personality. "Privacy

---

[27] Justice K.S. Puttaswamy (Retd) v. Union of India, AIR 2017 SC 4161.

[28] Michael C. James, A Comparative Analysis of the Right to Privacy in the United States, Canada and Europe, Connecticut Journal of International Law, p.261, Vol.29, Issue 2, (Spring 2014)

[29] Ibid, at page 262

[30] John Stuart Mill, On Liberty, Batoche Books, p.13, (1859).

[31] [5 Coke 91: 1 Sm LC (13th Edn.) 104 at p. 105]

[32] Justice Stephen Breyer (Associate Judge of the United States Supreme Court) in Active Liberty

p.66

[33] Warren and Brandeis, The Right to Privacy, Harvard Law Review, p.193, (1890), Vol. 4, No. 5.

[34] 277 U.S.438, 478 (1928)

is…essential to democratic government because it fosters and encourages the moral autonomy of the citizen, a central requirement of a democracy."[35] Privacy therefore affirms the agency and autonomy of the individual and the right of every person to have the freedom and liberty to live a life of dignity. Privacy requires that all information about a person is fundamentally his own, only for him to communicate or retain for himself. The concept of private life includes the right to personal autonomy, personal development and the right to establish and develop relationships with other human beings and with the outside world.[36] "The freedom of a country can only be measured by its respect for the rights of its citizens, and … these rights are in fact limitations of state power that define exactly where and when a government may not infringe into that domain of personal or individual freedoms that during the American Revolution was called "liberty" and during the Internet Revolution is called "privacy."[37]

31. Recognizing and protecting the zone of privacy is the freedom and liberty our Constitution holds dear. Privacy attaches to the person and not to the place where it is associated. Home under Article 14 of the Constitution is not only the physical house but the entire treasure of personal life of a human being.[38] The intrusion by the State into the sanctum of personal space, other than for a larger public purpose, is violative of the constitutional guarantees. Right to privacy is deeply intertwined with the right to life, right to personal liberty and right to dignity. "Arguing that you don't care about the right to privacy because you have nothing to hide is no different than saying you don't care about free speech because you have nothing to say."[39] This is a cherished constitutional value, and it is important that human beings be allowed domains of freedom that are free of public scrutiny and protected against "unwanted gaze,"[40] unless they act in an unlawful manner.

---

[35] Lawrence Lessig, Code and Other Laws of Cyberspace, p.153–55 (1999).

[36] Artavia Murillo ET AL. ("In Vitro Fertilization") v. Costa Rica (2012), Inter-Am. Ct. H.R. (Ser.C) No.257

[37] Edward Snowden, Permanent Record.

[38] see Benazir Bhutto v. President of Pakistan, PLD 1998 SC 388.

[39] Edward Snowden, Permanent Record.

[40] Jeffrey Rosen, The Unwanted Gaze: The Destruction of Privacy in America (2000).

Social Impact of Violation of Privacy.

32. Illegal and illegitimate surveillance, by both State and private actors, has the impact of intrusion into the private lives of citizens, not only violating their constitutional rights but also intruding on the very personhood, privacy and personal liberty of those surveilled. Surveillance has disparate impact, violating principles of non-discrimination and equality as enshrined in our Constitution. Writing for the Harvard Law Review in 2013, Neil Richards stated that surveillance has a chilling effect on the exercise of our civil liberties.[41] Furthermore, surveillance is often exercised as a power by the watcher over the watched, as a form of control. "This disparity creates the risk of a variety of harms, such as discrimination, coercion, and the threat of selective enforcement, where critics of the government can be prosecuted or blackmailed for wrongdoing unrelated to the purpose of the surveillance."[42] Surveillance and illegitimate intrusions into privacy impact the essential work that journalists, academics and activists do. Undue surveillance can lead to a chilling effect on those critical of State institutions and societal norms. Undue interference with individual's privacy can both directly and indirectly limit the free development and exchange of ideas.[43]

33. In fledgling democracies, where institutional development is still finding its feet and the concept of rule of law has not firmly taken ground, special care is required to ensure that law enforcement and intelligence agencies fully comply with the law dealing with surveillance and interception. Any laxity or concession given to these agencies to step outside the law and collect evidence, can be a serious threat to constitutional guarantees of the people, in particular, and to democracy, in general. International experience[44] tells us that unconstitutional and illegally procured private information amassed by the agencies can be used to manipulate and blackmail people for promoting political agendas.

---

[41] Neil M. Richards, The Dangers of Surveillance, Harvard Law Review, p.1935, vol.126, (2013).

[42] Ibid

[43] see Digital Rights Foundation (DRF), Impact and Legality of Surveillance, A Policy Brief (2020). https://digitalrightsfoundation.pk/wp-content/uploads/2020/10/Impact-and-Legality-of- Surveillance-Final-Document-14.10.2020-1.pdf

[44] See Bolo Bhi, Surveillance, Interception and Evidence Gathering: Local Law and International Precedents, A Research Paper (2020). https://bolobhi.org/surveillance-interception-and-evidence- gathering-local-law-and-international-precedents/

This cripples human security and dismantles democracy, lowering it slowly into an abyss of totalitarianism. Any unconstitutional intrusion and unlawful collection of reels of unauthorized private data can make any law enforcement or intelligence agency become a Frankenstein – indestructible and uncontrollable. Infringing the foundational principle of separation of powers. In a parliamentary democracy with inbuilt checks and balances the question of who will guard the guards does not arise and should not arise.

34. Intercepted material through "surveillance" includes data, information or material in any documented form, whether written or recorded, through audio visual device, CCTV, still photography, observation or any other mode or technique. And, "interception" on communication medium includes: emails, SMS, IPDR (internet protocol detail record) or CDR (Call detail record) and any form of computer based or call phone based communication using wired or wireless or IP (internet protocol) based media or gadgetry.[45] The fact that the ARU did not possess the resources or the technical capacity to carry out surveillance of the Petitioner Judge and his family and the interception of their communications, gives credence to the stance of the Petitioner Judge that the surveillance was carried out in connivance and in collaboration with the intelligence agencies. The possibility of such happening, therefore, cannot be ruled out in the absence of any other evidence to the contrary, on the record.

Investigation for Fair Trial Act, 2013

35. The only law referred to us during arguments that allows surveillance of persons by the Law Enforcement and Intelligence Agencies is the Investigation for Fair Trial Act, 2013 ("IFTA"). The Legislature in the preamble provides that "being mindful that the existing laws neither comprehensively provide for nor specifically regulate, advance and modern, investigative techniques such as covert surveillance and human intelligence, property interference, wiretapping and communication interception that are used extensively in other jurisdictions to successfully prevent the offences and as an indispensable aid to the law enforcement and administration of justice."[46] It further provides that "in order to neutralize and prevent the threat or any attempt to carry out scheduled offences it is necessary that the law enforcement and other agencies be given certain authorizations to obtain evidence in time and only in accordance with law[47]." Regarding the evidence so collected the preamble provides that "it is also in order to declare the admissibility and use of the material obtained during lawful investigation under the present law, in the judicial proceedings and all other legal proceedings or process to ensure fair trial.[48]" The IFTA requires a notified officer to make an application under the Act, if there is reason to believe that a person may be associated with or is likely to act in a manner that constitutes a scheduled offence. However, the officer is required to obtain a warrant from court for surveillance or interception. Prior to obtaining a warrant, the officer is required to prepare a report with supporting material, present it to the Minister (Federal Minister for Interior) for permission and then move the application before a judge for issuance of the warrant. A warrant under the Act is to be issued by a judge of the High Court in chamber. Section 8 of IFTA lists the requirements the officer must meet when seeking permission for surveillance or interception, whereas Section 10 pertains to what is to be considered by the judge when issuing a warrant. The duration of the warrant under Section 14 of the IFTA is 60 days. It may be re-issued for another 60 days after a fresh application is made and reasons presented by the officer, for why the earlier time period was insufficient. If the request by the applicant is deemed arbitrary by the judge, under Section 15 of the law, departmental action can be recommended against the officer. Under Section 22 of the Act, the authorized officer is required to certify that the evidence collected is strictly in accordance with the warrant and has not been tampered with or altered, before turning it over to the investigating officer.

---

[45] The Investigation for Fair Trial Act, 2013, section 3(g).

36. The IFTA, thus, provides that intelligence agencies can carry out surveillance and interception of a suspect to gather information regarding anti-state or terrorist activities and that too after obtaining a warrant from a Judge of the High Court

---

[46] Ibid, preamble.

[47] Ibid.

[48] ibid

concerned. Intelligence agencies therefore do not have a carte blanche to probe into the lives of ordinary men and women of this country. These agencies are regulated by law and are subject to law. In 2013, a coalition of civil society organizations developed "International Principles on the Application of Human Rights to Communications Surveillance" highlighting a human rights approach to surveillance. These principles, though not adopted by any State party, the principles highlight the ways in which international human rights law applies to surveillance practices. The principles are 1) legality: "any imitation to the right to privacy must be prescribed by law"; 2) legitimate aim: "laws should only permit communications surveillance by specified State authorities to achieve a legitimate aim that corresponds to a predominantly important legal interest that is necessary in a democratic society. Any measure must not be applied in a manner which discriminates on the basis of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status;" 3) necessity: "strictly and demonstrably necessary to achieve a legitimate aim"; 4) adequacy: "must be appropriate to fulfill the specific legitimate aim identified;" 5) proportionality: "should be regarded as a highly intrusive act that interferes with the rights to privacy and freedom of opinion and expression, threatening the foundations of a democratic society"; 6) competent judicial authority: "determinations related to communications surveillance must be made by a competent judicial authority that is impartial and independent"; 7) due process: "that lawful procedures that govern any interference with human rights are properly enumerated in law, consistently practiced, and available to the general public"; 8) user notification: "individuals should be notified of a decision authorizing communications surveillance with enough time and information to enable them to appeal the decision"; 9) transparency: "about the use and scope of communications surveillance techniques and powers"; 10) public oversight: "establish independent oversight mechanisms to ensure transparency and accountability of communications surveillance";

11) integrity of communications and systems: "States should not compel service providers or hardware or software vendors to build surveillance or monitoring capability into their systems, or to collect or retain particular information purely for State surveillance purposes"; 12) safeguards for international cooperation: "States may not use mutual legal assistance processes and foreign requests for protected information to circumvent domestic legal restrictions on communications surveillance"; 13) safeguards against illegitimate access: "enact legislation criminalizing illegal communications surveillance by public or private actors."[49]

37. Any covert surveillance or interception of the citizens of Pakistan other than under IFTA is starkly offensive to their fundamental rights of privacy and personal liberty. There is no law in the country that authorizes any law enforcement or intelligence agency to pry into the privacy of home to dig out private family information through targeted surveillance, and to use it against them to achieve various ends. Any such surveillance into the inviolate private core of human life seriously threatens normal human existence as it clogs their freedoms and distorts the meaning of our constitutional democracy founded on the rule of law promised by our founding fathers. Such intrusion and encroachment into the private life of a citizen by the State actors totally demolishes the scheme of fundamental rights under the Constitution. Fundamental rights of privacy, personal liberty and dignity provide a bar against intrusion into the private life of a citizen through surveillance; which aims to continuously fish for something adverse against a citizen and then to use it against him when required. These are tricks of a totalitarian State and not the ways of an elected Government of a constitutional democracy which must rest its governance on the rule of law and supremacy of the Constitution.

Information Procured from NADRA, FBR & FIA by the ARU

38. The Member of the ARU from FIA, Assistant Commissioner (Inland Revenue), Commissioner (Inland Revenue), and DG (International Taxes)/Member of ARU from FBR, all four, submitted their reports on May 10, 2019. Rights to personal liberty

---

[49] Electronic Frontier Foundation, Necessary & Proportionate: International Principles on the Application of Human Rights Law to Communications Surveillance, (2014). Also see: Bolo Bhi, Surveillance, Interception and Evidence Gathering: Local Law and International Precedents, A Research Paper (2020)

and privacy under Articles 9 and 14 of the Constitution impose a constitutional obligation on State authorities to protect the privacy and personal freedom of the citizens unless the law expressly authorizes them to do otherwise in exceptional circumstances. In the absence of any law to the contrary, the rights to privacy and personal freedom become absolute and stand to protect the privacy and personal freedom of the citizen. No Government institution is to disclose the personal information of any citizen unless the law authorizes the institution to do so. In the absence of any specific law, the umbrella of constitutional guarantees will come to cover and protect the citizen. Employees of NADRA, who were legally enjoined under section 28 of the NADRA Ordinance, 2000 not to communicate to any person any information acquired by them in the course of their employment, committed violation of that command of the law by making compliance with the command of the Chairman, ARU in communicating to the Chairman and other Members of the ARU the NADRA record relating to the Petitioner Judge and his family. Likewise, Member of the ARU from FBR committed violation of section 216 of the ITO, 2000 by disclosing the tax records of the Petitioner Judge and his spouse to the Chairman and other Members of the ARU. While Member of the ARU from the FIA breached Rule 18 of the Government Servants (Conduct) Rules, 1964 by making unauthorized communication of the official documents and information as to the passport/visa record and travelling history of the Petitioner Judge and his family. It is astonishing that information which even the Prime Minister, any Federal Minister or the Cabinet could not solicit under the law was being made available to the Chairman, ARU by the officials of NADRA, FBR and FIA. At the cost of repetition, the Chairman, ARU examined all the reports and record submitted to him on May 10, 2019, made his final Report on May 10, 2019 and submitted it to the Law Minister on the very same day, i.e., May 10, 2019. All proceedings stand concluded in one day. This hurried exercise being against the normal course of business also points towards lack of bonafide in the whole process and proceedings.

39. The Chairman and Legal Expert, ARU procured the information regarding the UK Properties by offending the fundamental rights of personal liberty, privacy and dignity of the Petitioner Judge and his family by procuring personal information regarding the UK Properties without the sanction of any law through covert surveillance and interception, and also by violating the confidentiality provisions of the NADRA Ordinance and the ITO. These actions of the Chairman and Legal Expert of ARU also attract criminal liability under section 35 of IFTA. The ARU thus did not collect the evidence in support of the allegations made in the complaint against the Petitioner Judge, in accordance with the law and Constitution. Additionally, when the very establishment of the ARU and appointment of its Chairman were without any lawful authority, all the acts done by the Chairman, Legal Expert and Members of the ARU as to the investigation and collection of evidence in support of the allegations made in the complaint were also without lawful authority and are so declared. For these illegal actions, the authorities concerned must initiate criminal and disciplinary proceedings against the Chairman, Legal Expert and Members of the ARU, as well as, the deafulting officials of FBR and NADRA under the IFTA, ITO and NADRA Ordinance, 2000.

Reliance on the Illegally Collected Evidence by the Law Minister and Prime Minister

40. The Law Minister, a distinguished lawyer, did not raise any objection to the investigation and surveillance conducted by the ARU for accountability of a constitutional court judge, on receiving the report of the Chairman, ARU. He rather relied upon the evidence illegally collected in that inquiry for making the "Summary for the Prime Minister", and proposing to the Prime Minister to advise the President to form an opinion that the Petitioner Judge may be guilty of misconduct and direct the Council to inquire into the matter under Article 209 of the Constitution. Likewise, the Prime Minister also without asking the Law Minister or the Chairman ARU as to under what authority of law the ARU conducted inquiry into and collected evidence on the allegations made in a complaint against a constitutional court judge, advised the President on the basis of that illegally collected evidence to form the opinion, direct the Council and sign the draft Reference. It is important to assess whether the evidence/material collected by the ARU, passed on to the Law Minster and further put up before the Prime Minister was legally admissible.

Exclusionary Rule- Admissibility of Illegally Collected Evidence

41. Under the classic common law, the test of admissibility of evidence was whether it is relevant to the matter in issue. If it is, it is admissible, and the Court is not concerned with how it was obtained.[50] The law of evidence, i.e., the Evidence Act, 1872 (now Qanun-e-Shahdat Order, 1984) did not deal with the possibility of procurement of evidence through illegal and unconstitutional surveillance offending the fundamental rights of privacy, personal liberty and dignity. It also did not envisage that the right to a fair trial would be guaranteed as a fundamental right under the Constitution. There has, however, been a great shift in application of the said rule in major common law jurisdictions, with recognition of the importance of civil rights and liberties of the citizens in a State governed by the Rule of Law.

42. In United Kingdom, the mother of common law, Lord Hoffman has observed in A v. Secretary of State[51] that "the courts will not shut their eyes to the way the accused was brought before the court or the evidence of the guilt was obtained. Those methods may be such that it would compromise the integrity of the judicial process, dishonor the administration of justice, if the proceedings were to be entertained or the evidence admitted. In such a case the proceedings may be stayed or the evidence rejected on the ground that there would otherwise be an abuse of process of the court".

43. In Australia, Barwick CJ speaking for the Court in R v. Ireland,[52] held that when evidence is procured by unlawful or unfair acts, the judge has a discretion to reject the evidence. In the exercise of that discretion, the learned Chief Justice said, "the competing public requirements must be considered and weighed against each other. On the one hand there is the public need to bring to conviction those who commit criminal offences. On the other hand there is the public interest in the protection of the individual from unlawful and unfair treatment. Convictions obtained by the aid of unlawful or unfair acts may be obtained at too high a price. Hence the judicial discretion". This statement of

---

[50] See Kuruma v. Queen, 1955 AC 197; Pooran Mal v. Director of Inspection, AIR 1974 SC 348; and, Bisvil Spinners v Pakistan, PLD 1992 SC 96.

[51] [2006] 2 AC 221.

[52] [1970] HCA 21.

law was reaffirmed by the High Court of Australia in Bunning v Cross.[53]

44. In United States, the Fourth Amendment to the US Constitution guarantees the privacy rights by declaring that "[t]he right of people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized". A right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures is though declared by the Fourth Amendment, but how one is to translate the guarantee into concrete terms is not specified. Several possible methods of enforcement were considered by the US Courts over time; however, the US Supreme Court has settled the one as an effective means to make real the right, which is called the Exclusionary Rule. Under this Rule, the evidence seized in violation of the Fourth Amendment rights is excluded by the US Courts. Exclusion of evidence as a remedy for Fourth Amendment right violation was founded in Boyd v. United States,[54] and was developed in later cases. In Mapp v Ohio,[55] the US Supreme Court held that to admit evidence obtained in violation of the right would be, in effect, to "grant the right but in reality to withhold its privilege and enjoyment", and explained that the exclusionary rule is designed "to deter – to compel respect for the constitutional guaranty in the only effectively available way – by removing the incentive to disregard it".

45. In Canada, the principle governing the exclusion of evidence obtained in violation of the charter rights and freedoms has been codified. Section 24(2) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms declares that where a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

---

[53] [1978] HCA 22.

[54] 116 U.S. 616 (1886).

[55] 367 US 643 (1961).

46. The Irish Supreme Court has in DPP v. JC[56] laid down the following principles with regard to the admission or exclusion of the evidence obtained in violation of the constitutional rights, in order to balance the legitimate competing public interests: (i) The onus is on the prosecution to establish the admissibility of all evidence; (ii) If a claim is raised that evidence was obtained in breach of constitutional rights, the onus is on the prosecution to establish either (a) that there was no unconstitutionality, or (b) that despite any interference with constitutional rights the evidence should still be admitted; (iii) Where evidence is obtained in deliberate and conscious violation of constitutional rights, it should be excluded except in exceptional circumstances; (iv) Where evidence was taken in breach of constitutional rights, there is a presumption in favour of exclusion, which can be rebutted by evidence that the breach of rights was either (a) inadvertent or (b) derived from subsequent legal developments; and (v) Whether or not a breach of constitutional rights was deliberate and conscious requires analysis of the conduct or state of mind of the individual who actually gathered the evidence, as well as, any senior official or officials within the investigating or enforcement authority concerned who was involved either in that decision or in decisions of that type generally or in putting in place policies concerning evidence-gathering of the type concerned.

47. The above-stated principle as to inadmissibility of the illegally collected evidence has developed mostly in the cases where there was a law that regulated a constitutional right, but that law was not followed or was violated in the process of collecting evidence. The courts have held such evidence to be generally inadmissible, with few exceptions, mainly with the reason that the admission of such evidence would compromise the integrity of the judicial process and bring the administration of justice into disrepute. I concur in the principle, and see no hindrance in adopting it in our jurisdiction. The admission and reliance on the material (evidence) illegally collected by the ARU without any enabling law empowering it to do so, in flagrant violation of the fundamental rights of privacy, liberty, dignity and freedom of movement of the Petitioner Judge and his family, would compromise the integrity of the judicial process and bring the justice system into disrepute. Therefore, such material (evidence) was inadmissible even in view of the above-stated principle established in other common law jurisdictions and did not fall within the exceptions thereto, as the illegal acts done for collecting the material (evidence) were not inadvertent, rather were deliberate and conscious.

[56] [2015] IESC 31.

Surveillance, where there is no Law

48. The present case, however, poses different questions: What would be the effect of violation of a constitutionally guaranteed fundamental right, which is absolute as it is not regulated by any law? Would the prohibition on admissibility of evidence collected by infringing such right be absolute or be subject to exceptions? While the fundamental right to personal liberty and privacy guaranteed by Articles 9 and 14 of the Constitution are subject to law, there is no law in our country that authorizes any law enforcement or intelligence agency to pry into the privacy of any person through surveillance and interception, except the IFTA. The scope of the IFTA, as discussed above, is also restricted to the surveillance and interception of a person who is suspected to be involved in any terrorist or anti-state activity. Besides this limited scope under the IFTA, no other law regulates the fundamental right of privacy of citizens and allows probe into their lives through surveillance and interception. Thus, in the remaining sphere the right to privacy is absolute, until law is enacted to regulate it. The violation of this sphere of the absolute privacy right makes the inadmissibility of evidence collected in violation thereof also absolute. Absolute right entails absolute prohibition on its violation. The ARU collected evidence by violating the sphere of absolute privacy right of the Petitioner Judge and his family through surveillance, and without backing of any law for its authority to do so. Therefore, such evidence/material was liable to be excluded from consideration without any exception, and the Law Minister and Prime Minister could not have relied and acted upon it, for making the "Summary" and advising the President respectively.

49. The Law Minister opined in the Summary put up before the Prime Minister that the Petitioner Judge appeared to have committed "grave misconduct" by not declaring three London properties owned by his spouse and children and by not explaining the source of their purchase in his tax record, without appreciating, rather ignoring altogether, the fact that no office or authority in Pakistan, under the relevant law, had ever asked the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge to explain their sources to purchase the said properties and their failure to declare the same in their tax record, if there was any obligation for such declaration under the law.

50. The Prime Minister being the Chief Executive of the Federation, failed to verify and examine the information placed in the Summary before him. Advising the President to proceed against a judge of the highest court of the land required the Prime Minister to exercise due diligence and careful consideration of the contents of the Summary placed before him. It was not just any business he was attending to, he was approving initiation of inquiry against a Supreme Court judge, but he took no pains to see that the ARU, besides being a non-entity had no authority under the law to investigate and collect evidence on a complaint that could not have been entertained by the ARU. He also failed to verify how the addresses of the three foreign properties were discovered and who authorized the ARU to carry out transnational investigation and surveillance and whether any office or authority had asked the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge to explain the sources of purchase of those properties. Without attending to the above material objections against the information placed before him and without taking due care, he advised the President on the basis of the evidence illegally collected by the Chairman, ARU on the oral advice of the Law Minister, to direct the Council to hold an inquiry against the Petitioner Judge.

Opinion of the President under Article 209 (5) of the Constitution

51. The President also did not question under what authority of law the ARU conducted inquiry into the allegations made in a complaint against a constitutional court judge and whether any office or authority had asked the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge to explain the sources of purchase of those properties, and approved the Prime Minister's advice and signed the draft Reference annexed with the Summary without applying his independent mind, exercising his discretion and forming his own opinion. The constitutional question that arises for determination is: whether under Article 209(5) of the Constitution, the President is to form his personal "opinion" or to act on the "advice" of the Cabinet or the Prime Minister as envisaged under Article 48(1) of the Constitution. In order to answer this question, the unique nature of the role of the President under Article 209 (5) needs to be seen and purposively interpreted in the confluence of foundational constitutional principles: parliamentary democracy; separation of powers; independence of judiciary; the rule of law; and neutrality of the office of the President being Head of State and representing unity of the Republic.

52. In a parliamentary democracy, the President is largely a non-executive symbolic leader of the State who does not exercise executive or policymaking power. However, in the same parliamentary democracy a non-executive President may, nevertheless, possess and exercise powers of extraordinary political intervention as a constitutional arbiter or guarantor. This is premised on the principle that underscores that a non-executive President separates the representative embodiment of the permanent institutions of the State from the leader of the incumbent Government. The separation of offices between Head of Government and Head of State, a non-executive President, helps maintain a symbolic separation between the incumbent Government, which is party-political, and the permanent institutions of the State as such, which are supposed to be politically neutral and universal. The President symbolically ensures that the ruling party or the coalition is separate from a non-partisan embodiment of the whole.[57] President is a neutral and an impartial arbiter who while forming his "opinion" under Article 209(5) is to weigh both: the sanctity of a non-partisan judicial institution and the grievance of the political government against the judge in order to give true expression to judicial independence and judicial accountability. Only someone with the stature and position of a President can perform this challenging role.

---

[57] See Elliot Bulmer, Direct Democracy: International IDEA Constitution-Building Primer 3, International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance, (2nd ed. 2017)

53. The existence of judicial independence depends on the existence of legal arrangements that guarantee it. Judicial independence is composed of two foundations: independence of the individual judge and the independence of the judicial branch. The independence of the individual judge means that the judge is subject to no authority other than the law[58]. A judge will have "nothing to influence or control him but God and his conscience."[59] On matters of adjudication, the judge is alone. Second limb of judicial independence is the institutional environment in which the judge operates. It is a protective institutional wall around the individual judge that will guard him against the possibility of any inside or outside influence. A partisan Government or other specialized State institutions, at times, in order to achieve their political ends may try to influence or pressurize judges and invoke the removal process to penalize or intimidate judges. The real aim of proceedings may be to remove a judge whose judgments are considered troublesome by those in authority.[60] At this junction, the protective institutional design that guards the judge against external onslaughts becomes critical. The constitutional scheme of independence of judiciary is not to shut its eyes and ears to the complaints against the judge but to ensure that the judge gets to enjoy his constitutional protections till the last.

54. Separation of powers is the backbone of our democracy. The purpose of separation of powers is to strengthen freedom and prevent the concentration of power in the hands of one government actor in a manner likely to harm the freedom of the individual and other institutions. The principle requires that each branch of the State has a function that is its major function and the other branch should not impinge upon its nucleus. The institutions of the State have to walk the tightrope of checks and balances while

---

[58] Aharon Barak, The Judge in a Democracy, Princeton University Press (2006).

[59] Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245, 250 (1919) (quoting John Marshall, cited at Debates, Va. Conv. 1829-1831, 616, 619).

[60] See J. van Zyl Smit, The Appointment, Tenure and Removal of Judges under Commonwealth Principles: A Compendium and Analysis of Best Practice (Report of Research Undertaken by Bingham Centre for the Rule of Law), 79-81.

operating in their designated spheres outlined clearly in the Constitution. One branch of the State should not be able to destabilize or weaken the other branch. Constitutional design protects this through the principle of separation of powers and President's role under Article 209(5) actualizes this balance. This is a constitutional principle. It may not be written in the Constitution but it is written within the lines. The courts in a democracy have to give expression to this principle when interpreting the Constitution.

55. One of the basic principles of democracy is the Rule of Law. From the standpoint of democracy, the most important of the meanings is the substantive rule of law. The substantive rule of law is the rule of proper law, which balances the needs of society and the individual and strikes a balance between society's need for political, economic and judicial independence, on the one hand, and the right to personal liberty, and human dignity on the other.[61]

56. Constitution is philosophy, politics, society, and law all rolled into one.[62] Judiciary is the guardian of the Constitution. In interpreting a Constitution, other than the express language of the Constitution, its implied language conveys a meaning between the lines, which is otherwise invisible in words - it is derived from the structure of the Constitution. Any interpretation of the Constitution must be grounded in these foundational principles. Role of the President when considered in the background of these fundamental principles, best assumes the role of an "arbiter" and a "buffer" between a partisan government and a permanent neutral branch of the State, the judiciary. The President is to examine the "information" placed before him under Article 209(5) as Head of State, acting as an arbiter between the two branches of the State, discharging his function as a person representing the unity of the Republic. This unique function of the President is co-equal with the role of the Council under the same clause of Article 209 of the Constitution. Both have to form an "opinion;" both have to perform a somewhat quasi-judicial function; both have to take a decision on the basis of the information before them. Personal opinion of the President under Article 209(5) actualizes the non-partisan role of the President and provides a check on any partisan adventurism by the Government of the day against the judiciary. If the President is just a rubber stamp acting on the advice of the Cabinet, a hostile Government can, theoretically, file references against a number of judges of the constitutional courts, resulting in initiation of inquiries against all of them. Mere initiation of inquiry against the conduct of the constitutional court judges is enough to tarnish the image of judiciary, and weaken public confidence and public trust the nation reposes in the judicial institution.

---

[61] Aharon Barak, The Judge in a Democracy, Princeton University Press (2006).

[62] ibid

57. At a textual level, "information" is placed before the President under Article 209(5). This information is then processed into a Reference only if the President forms an opinion that the information makes out a case for inquiry against the judge. If information is actually an "advice," the words "President is of the opinion" become redundant. Second, it is absurd to conclude that under the same provision, the Council is empowered to form its own "opinion" but the President is not. Under Article 48(2), where the Constitution vests the President with a more personalized task of exercising his "discretion," he performs the same himself and not on the advice of the Cabinet or the Prime Minister. Quite similar is the function of forming an "opinion" which can only be done by the President himself.

58. As a Head of the State, the President is the best person to review the "information" placed against a constitutional court judge by a constituent of the State, be it Federal, Provincial or Local Government. The executive function of the Government is till the placement of "information" before the President. Beyond that, the formation of "opinion" by the President falls outside the realm of the executive function and becomes a more quasi-judicial function in nature. Parallel needs to be drawn between the two streams: the President and the Council. While the Council actualizes this quasi-judicial function through the Supreme Judicial Council Procedure, 2005, the President does no different without such procedure. This leaves no margin for a mechanical act by the President on the advice of the Cabinet.

59. While the Constitution vests the President with the power to form an "opinion", it is difficult to imagine that this power is to be exercised by him in a mindless and mechanical manner, thus reducing him to just a rubber-stamp, who upon receiving information is to simply direct the Council to inquire into the conduct of a constitutional court judge. His role under Article 209(5) is not to execute an executive function, but act as an arbiter on a conflict between two State institutions. Failure of the President to form his "opinion" in this case has resulted in the President rubber stamping unconstitutional and illegal "information" into a Reference by directing the Council to inquire into the matter of the Petitioner Judge. This has compromised the neutrality of the office of the President and besmirched his exalted office. If expression is to be given to the constitutional scheme and foundational principles discussed above, the constitutional role of the President is best actualized as an independent arbiter under Article 209 when he is to form his personal opinion. To this conclusion, I also find support from the majority judgment of a 13- Member Full Court Bench of this Court in C*JP Iftikhar Chaudhry case*.[63] The allegations of malafide in that case were made against the President, and the Court accepting those allegations quashed the Reference impugned therein. If the President had to act, in the opinion of the Court, on and in accordance with the advice of the Prime Minister, the proof of malafide against the President would not have entailed the result of quashment of the Reference. Further, in summarizing the various steps in the process of making a Reference by the President, the Court mentioned, amongst other steps, receipt of information by the President, formation of opinion by the President and direction (Reference) by the President; no step regarding advice of the Prime Minister was mentioned.[64] Entry 35 in Schedule V-B to the ROB that provides that President is to act on advice of the Prime Minister for making Reference to the Council under Article 209(5) is, therefore, ultra vires the Constitution and is so declared.

60. In the present case, the President did not apply his mind and form his own opinion on the "information" received; he simply approved the advice of the Prime Minister and signed the draft Reference submitted with that advice. The formation of opinion and the direction to the Council to hold an inquiry was, therefore, not that of the President; both these acts are declared to have been made without jurisdiction and coram non judice, and thus unconstitutional and of no legal effect.

---

[63] See CJP Iftikhar Chaudhry case (supra) , per Khalil-ur-Rehman Ramday, J, paras 107, 196.

[64] See Ibid., paras 64, 65.

"Information" does not constitute Misconduct

61. Without prejudice to the findings and declarations given above that the information (evidence) collected against the Petitioner Judge by the ARU with the blessing of the Law Minister was legally inadmissible, it is underlined that the said information even if considered, does not constitute misconduct. The allegations against the Petitioner Judge in the "information" put up as a "Summary for the Prime Minister" that ultimately took the form of the Reference relate to the alleged violation of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("ITO"), Anti-Money Laundering Act, 2010 ("AMLA") and the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947 ("FERA"). There is no charge of corruption or acquisition of the foreign properties by the Petitioner Judge in names of his spouse and children as ostensible owners (benamidar). The stance of the Petitioner Judge is that no violation of the said laws is made out against him and no misconduct on his part can be spelt out from the assertions and allegations made in the Reference.

Income Tax Ordinance, 2001

62. The alleged violation of Section 116(1)(b) of the ITO is the mainstay of the Reference filed against the Petitioner Judge. Provisions of the said Section are equivocal, and attract different constructions. There has not yet been any judicial interpretation of it. The parties have, therefore, proposed different interpretations on it. It would be advantageous to cite the provisions of Section 116(1)(b) of the ITO before embarking on discussion on the proposed interpretations, for ready reference:

> 116. Wealth statement.— (1) The Commissioner may, by notice in writing, require any person being an individual to furnish, on the date specified in the notice, a statement (hereinafter referred to as the "wealth statement") in the prescribed form and verified in the prescribed manner giving particulars of —
>
> .....
> .....

> (b) the total assets and liabilities of the person's spouse, minor children, and other dependents as on the date or dates specified in such notice;
>
> (2) Every resident taxpayer being an individual filing a return of income for any tax year shall furnish a wealth statement and wealth reconciliation statement for that year along with such return.

At the outset, it is pointed out that Section 116(1), ITO simply provides for issuance of notice to a taxpayer for filing the wealth tax statement or wealth reconciliation statement alongwith the income tax return and provides for particulars to be included in such a statement. In case a taxpayer has already filed the above statements alongwith his return, Section 116(1) appears to have no relevance. It is not the case of the Federation that the Petitioner Judge failed to file the wealth tax statement or wealth reconciliation statement. In case the said statements are deficient or incorrect, the tax department can issue notice to the taxpayer under Section 120(3) and consider the case in the light of Section 111 of the ITO. No such notice or proceedings were initiated by the FBR against the Petitioner Judge. Directly leveling allegation of violation of Section 116(1)(b) against the Petitioner Judge in this background is misconceived besides being premature.

63. It was argued on behalf of the Petitioner Judge, by referring to the principle of noscitur a sociis (known by its associates), that the meaning of the word "spouse" should be determined by considering the words "minor children, and other dependents" with which the former word is associated in clause (b) of Section 116(1). Therefore, an individual resident taxpayer, as per his version, is to mention the assets of his or her spouse in the wealth statement only if the latter is his or her "dependent". The stance of the Federation, on the other hand, was that the word "spouse" should be given its literal meaning. The Legislature has not used the word "dependant" with the word "spouse". Every individual resident taxpayer, as per its stance, is to mention the assets of his or her spouse in the wealth statement irrespective of the fact that the latter is or is not his or her "dependent". The possible interpretations do not end here. Rather, two other interpretations were also put to these provisions by the FBR while prescribing the forms of wealth statement. In the form prescribed for the tax year 2013, a taxpayer was required to declare the assets of his or her spouse if he or she had not filed income-tax return and wealth statement independently; while, in the form prescribed for the tax year 2015, a taxpayer was required to declare only those assets of his or her spouse which had been acquired by funds provided by that taxpayer. There are, as such, at least four possible interpretations of the provisions of Section 116(1)(b) of the ITO.

64. The matter of alleged tax violation has not reached this Court in its usual legal course routing through the tax authorities, tax tribunal and the High Court. I would therefore not give any definite finding on the said, or any other, possible interpretations of Sections 116(1)(b) of the ITO. I would rather examine the reasonability of forming the opinion of commission of misconduct against the Petitioner Judge on the basis of alleged violation of the provisions of Section 116(1)(b), and in doing so would test the formation of opinion on all the said four canvassed interpretations.

65. One foreign property was purchased by the spouse of the Petitioner Judge in the year 2004, before his elevation to the Bench of the Balochistan High Court in 2009; this property was therefore completely irrelevant for forming opinion of misconduct and making the Reference against the Petitioner Judge. The other two foreign properties were acquired by the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge in the year 2013, after his said elevation; they were, therefore, to be declared in the tax year 2013 by the Petitioner Judge if there was any legal obligation on him, at that time, to do so. The children of the Petitioner Judge were not minors in the year 2013; therefore, no question as to his obligation to declare their assets arises under Section 116(1)(b) of the ITO. The current dispute relates to his alleged obligation to declare the assets of his spouse only. Therefore, the question is whether the Petitioner Judge was under any legal obligation to declare the foreign assets of his spouse in his wealth statement along with his tax returns filed in the tax year 2013. The simple and straightforward answer as per its own interpretation of the FBR that was in vogue in 2013 is that he was not. As afore-mentioned the FBR, in the wealth statement form prescribed for the tax year 2013, required a taxpayer to declare the assets of his or her spouse if he or she had not filed income-tax return and wealth statement independently. It is an admitted fact that the spouse of the Petitioner Judge had filed her income-tax return and wealth statement independently, in the year 2013. It, therefore, appears that there was no legal obligation on the Petitioner Judge to declare the assets of his spouse in his wealth statement as per the requirement of the FBR prevailing in the year 2013. The departmental second interpretation expressed in the form prescribed for the tax year 2015 is that a taxpayer is required to declare only those assets of his or her spouse which had been acquired by funds provided by that taxpayer. There was neither any allegation in, nor was any material annexed with, the "Summary" initiated for forming the opinion of misconduct against the Petitioner Judge that the funds for purchase of the foreign assets were provided by the Petitioner Judge to his spouse. No opinion of misconduct against the Petitioner Judge, thus, could have been made on the basis of these two departmental interpretations of the provisions of Section 116(1)(b), ITO. It may be pertinent to mention here that though the courts of law are not bound by departmental interpretations and constructions of the laws yet they give due weight and consideration to such interpretations and constructions, and do not disregard them without cogent reasons. Such constructions have their basis in the necessary practice of executive and administrative officers construing statutes to execute and apply them, in advance of the judicial construction. These officers are usually expert on the subject dealt with by the law, and their practical construction of the law provides a sound basis for judicial interpretation.[65]

66. The interpretation offered by the Petitioner Judge is that an individual resident taxpayer is to mention the assets of his or her spouse in the wealth statement if the latter is his or her "dependent". For examining this interpretation, it would be useful to refer that during the hearing, the spouse of the Petitioner Judge requested the Court for allowing her to appear before the Court through video-link and make a statement. Her request was allowed. She then made her statement and referred to certain documents, copies of which were subsequently submitted in separate sealed envelopes to all Judges sitting in this Full Court Bench the next day. The documents submitted were: (i) copies of income tax returns and wealth statements for Tax Years 2018 and 2019; (ii) title documents in respect of agricultural land owned by her; (iii) evidence of liquid investment with National Savings Centre together with income derived therefrom; and (iv) certificate from a scheduled bank confirming movement of funds in her private foreign currency account etc. The wealth statements submitted by her include the foreign properties owned by her, the non-disclosure whereof in his wealth statements by the Petitioner Judge is the main basis for filing of the Reference against him. The FBR, in response to her statement, also submitted her available tax record. These documents include her income tax returns and wealth statements for various tax years including the Tax Years 2018 and 2019, and statutory notices requiring filing of tax returns for certain years when these were not voluntarily filed. The said documents and record amplify the version of the Petitioner Judge that his spouse is a separate and independent taxpayer/assesse in the records of the FBR, who has been separately and independently filing tax declarations in relation to income derived by her from her own sources. The tax record furnished by the FBR does not rebut this assertion, rather supports the same. In the background of this admitted position, the spouse of the Petitioner Judge cannot be said to be his dependent. Thus, the FBR could not have asked the Petitioner Judge to declare her assets in his wealth statement filed with the tax return in the tax year 2013, and sought explanation from him regarding the sources of purchase of the assets by his spouse. In arriving the conclusion that the spouse of the Petitioner Judge was not his dependent in the year 2013, I am supported by the following observations made in the case of Imran Khan v. Nawaz Sharif:[66]

[65] NS Bindra's Interpretation of Statutes, p.859-861 (10th Ed. 2007).

> 126. As far as the issue regarding respondent No.6 namely Mariam Safdar allegedly being a 'dependent' of her father namely Mian Muhammad Nawaz Sharif is concerned I have found that the material produced before us sufficiently established that respondent No.6 was a married lady having grown up children, she was a part of a joint family living in different houses situated in the same compound, she contributed towards some of the expenses incurred by the joint family, she submitted her independent tax returns, she owned sizeable and valuable property in her own name, she was capable of surviving on her > own and, thus, she could not be termed or treated as a 'dependent' of her father merely because she periodically received gifts from her father and brothers. In this view of the matter nothing turned on respondent No.1 not mentioning respondent No.6 as his dependent in the nomination papers filed by him for election to NA-120 before the general elections held in the country in the year 2013. (emphasis supplied)

---

[66] PLD 2017 SC 265.

67. In terms of the scheme envisaged in the ITO, once an asset is claimed by a person to have been sourced by him or her and, more so, such asset is also declared in the statutory declaration/wealth statement by that person, then only that person could be questioned and required to explain the source of acquiring such asset by the tax authorities. In the event that person fails to properly explain the source, an addition could be made in his or her income and that added income is taxed accordingly. Under no circumstances, any other person could be made directly or indirectly part of such proceedings. Thus, no opinion of misconduct against the Petitioner Judge could have been formed on the basis of this interpretation of the provisions of Section 116(1)(b), ITO.

68. The interpretation suggested by the Federation is that every individual resident taxpayer is to mention the assets of his or her spouse in the wealth statement irrespective of the fact that the latter is or is not his or her "dependent". Section 114 of the ITO requires that the tax return for any tax year has to be accompanied by the wealth statement required under Section 116. In case a wealth statement is not filed or is deficient, the income tax return filed is not considered complete. In case of any deficiency, the Commissioner, FBR is empowered to issue a notice to the taxpayer under Section 120(3) of the ITO, informing the deficiency and providing him time to rectify it. If it is cured during the given time, the tax return is considered complete and accepted. Therefore, if the Commissioner, FBR had been of the view, as per the interpretation suggested by the Federation, that the Petitioner Judge was under legal obligation to declare the assets acquired by his spouse in the year 2013, in his wealth statement filed with tax return of 2013, he should have issued notice to the Petitioner Judge specifying the defect and providing him time to rectify it. The Petitioner Judge, in that case, could have defended that notice on all legal grounds available to him including the interpretation proposed by him as well as the interpretations put to the provisions of Section 116(1)(b) by the FBR itself in the forms prescribed for wealth statement. No such notice, however, was issued to the Petitioner Judge. Further, if the Commissioner, FBR on the basis of some "definite information" had been satisfied that that the tax return and wealth statement filed by the Petitioner Judge in the year 2013 were not accurate and some income chargeable to tax had escaped taxation, he could have issued an amended assessment order under Section 122(5) of the ITO, after hearing the Petitioner Judge, within a period of five years prescribed in Section 122(2) of the ITO. No such legal exercise was done. Therefore, without any determination of, or even initiation of legal proceedings on, the alleged violation of Section 116(1)(b) by the Commissioner, FBR either under Section 120 or under Section 122 against the Petitioner Judge, no opinion of misconduct against the Petitioner Judge could have been formed on the basis of the interpretation suggested by the Federation also.

69. In the last on the current head of discussion, I consider it important to highlight that Section 116A which requires a resident individual taxpayer to furnish statement of foreign assets, was inserted in the ITO in the year 2018 by the Finance Act, 2018. This amendment made in the year 2018 prima facie shows that there was earlier no obligation on a resident individual taxpayer to furnish such statement of even his own foreign assets, much less the foreign assets of his spouse and children.

Anti-Money Laundering Act, 2010

70. The Federation argued that being a case of 'concealed income', the matter also falls under the AMLA by referring to following entries in the Schedule to the AMLA:

> Section XIIA The Income Tax Ordinance, 2001
>
> 192. Prosecution for false statement in verification-where tax sought to be evaded is ten million rupees or more
>
> 192A. Prosecution for concealment of Income-where tax sought to be evaded is ten million rupees or more
>
> 194. Prosecution for improper use of National Tax Number Certificate – where tax sought to be evaded is ten million rupees or more > 199. Prosecution for abetment – where tax sought to be evaded is ten million rupees or more.

The argument is hopelessly misconceived and misdirected. The aforesaid entries in the Schedule were inserted vide Notification No. SRO 425(I)/2016 dated May 14, 2016[67] through which offences under Sections 192, 192A, 194 and 199 of the ITO were listed as "predicate offences" for the purposes of invocation of the AMLA. In the present case, admittedly all three foreign properties were acquired prior to May 14, 2016; therefore, the AMLA is not applicable at all. Needless to mention, that the principle of prohibiting retrospective punishment is a guaranteed fundamental right under Article 12 of the Constitution. Even otherwise, it is manifestly clear that the Legislature has put a precondition that 'tax sought to be evaded is ten million rupees or more' in all the four entries mentioned above. Thus, for the invocation of the AMLA the law presupposes conclusion of proceedings under the relevant provisions of the ITO to determine the said threshold and that too in relation to tax liability for the period on or after May 14, 2016. No such determination has taken place; hence, there is no application of the AMLA to the present case.

Foreign Exchange Regulations Act, 1947

71. The FERA provides for regulation of payments and dealings in foreign exchange and securities, and the import and export of currency and bullion. Sections 4 and 5 of the FERA provide that no one can deal in foreign exchange[68] except through an authorized dealer and imposes restrictions on transfer of money outside Pakistan. There is no evidence on the record that establishes or even prima facie shows any violation of the FERA against the Petitioner Judge. The Federation pointed out no violation of the FERA, even during the arguments.

72. In view of the above analysis of the relevant provisions of the ITO, AMLA and FERA, no violation of any provision of those laws is made out against the Petitioner Judge on the basis of the assertions and allegations made in the "information" given in the "Summary for the Prime Minister" that ultimately took the form of the Reference; therefore, no opinion as to the prima facie commission of any misconduct by the Petitioner Judge could have reasonably been made on the basis of that "information."

---

[67] Published in Official Gazette on May 20, 2016.

[68] Defined in section 2(d) of FERA to mean foreign currency , etc.

Code of Conduct and Vicarious Responsibility of a Judge

73. A constitutional court judge can be removed from office if he or she commits "misconduct" as provided under Article 209 of the Constitution. "Misconduct" is a constitutional term and must draw its spirit and meaning from the Constitution. It is important that the meaning of constitutional "misconduct," the scheme of the Code of Conduct and the scope of the impeachable misconduct of a constitutional court judge must flow from the standard of judicial integrity set out by the Constitution. The constitutional standard of judicial integrity lies in the oath of a constitutional court judge, as discussed earlier; falling short of it would amount to impeachable misconduct. Under Article 209(8) of the Constitution, the Council issues a Code of Conduct, which is to be observed by the judges of the constitutional courts. This Code of Conduct for the Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts[69] ("Code") carries additional standards and etiquettes for Judges to follow in order to uphold the prestige and honour of the judicial institution. The Code formulated by the Supreme Judicial Council cannot control the constitutional meaning of the term "misconduct" but provides a helpful guideline. The Code is a basket of judicial obligations, etiquettes, and courtesies of varying degrees and effect, covering both judicial character and judicial behavior of a Judge.[70] While some Articles of the Code directly impinge on judicial integrity, others simply pass as mere guidelines of good behavior, civility and mannerism in conducting the court. It cannot be said that every deviation of the Code, how insignificant it may be, would constitute impeachable misconduct. For example, a judge's failure to decline to act in a case involving his own interest[71] may constitute an impeachable misconduct, while in case a judge who gets a speeding ticket for driving fast and offends the requirement of being law-abiding may not be liable for an impeachable

---

[69] Framed under the Constitution of 1962 and amended from time to time. Final version to date is till the last amendment made in the year 2009.

[70] See the preamble to the Code.

[71] Article III of the Code.

misconduct. Similarly, a judge who is not punctilious enough in sitting and rising in court, cannot be removed on this pretext, unless ofcourse, these violations are so frequent and regular that they weigh heavily on the public confidence and legitimacy of the judicial institution. So each case has to be seen in its own peculiar facts after examining the nature of the violation. It is underlined that the Code largely lays down judicial obligations and etiquettes for the Judge in his official capacity. Only Article II of the Code provides generalized yet more personal standards like "a Judge must be God-fearing, law-abiding, abstemious, truthful of tongue, wise in opinion, cautious and forbearing, blameless and untouched by greed." These saintly qualities are personal to the Judge. We must also remember that judges are humans at the end of the day, no matter how glorified and hallowed their office and the Code may make them appear. Chief Justice McLachlin[72] said: "Judges are not living Oracles. They are human beings, trained in the law, who struggle to understand the situations before them and to resolve them in accordance with the law and their conscience."[73] Impeachable misconduct is when there is a violation of law or violation of the Code that is so grave that it ruptures judicial integrity, tarnishes public confidence and pulls down legitimacy of the judicial institution. Short of this, it might be misconduct but not impeachable misconduct. Like under the service laws, gravity of misconduct determines the penalty, which ranges from mere censure all the way to dismissal from service. It is commonsensical that not every infraction leads to removal of a constitutional court judge or constitutes impeachable misconduct. The best test is to see if the judicial integrity of a judge has been undermined resulting in lowering the public confidence and trust in the judiciary, thus impairing impartiality and legitimacy of the judicial institution.

74. Judicial integrity and the Code are judge specific, largely covering judicial conduct and partly his personal behavior. The standards under the Code extend to the judge and judge alone. The Code has no jurisdiction over the family, relatives and friends of the judge. It is certainly ideal but it would be unfair to expect that the spouse and children of the Judge must be equally "God- fearing, law-abiding, abstemious, truthful of tongue, wise in opinion, cautious and forbearing, blameless and untouched by greed." The Code has no concern with the family or friends of the judge. Infact, it is totally impractical to think otherwise. Let us assume that the spouse or the family of a judge were remiss in managing their financial and tax affairs. In the absence of any charge or evidence of corruption against the judge, if the judge had time and again asked his spouse and family to be more careful and responsible in their tax matters, but they for some reason did not do so, what is the judge supposed to do in such a situation? Should the judge abandon his spouse and the family? Does the Code provide an answer? Does the Code expect and require that families of the judges must be exemplary and ideal members of the society? And if they do not come up to the expectation or if there is even the slightest of infraction on their part, the judge is liable for their misconduct? Is this responsibility part and parcel of the terms and conditions of service of a constitutional court judge? I think not. The Code is judge specific document and does not extend to family members and in no event, holds a judge vicariously responsible for the conduct of his family - his spouse and children - who are independent, natural and legal persons in their own right and can do whatever they want. "Conduct" and "misconduct" are personal to a judge under the Code. Like any other citizen, a judge cannot be held accountable for the conduct of someone else, there is no such thing as vicarious responsibility of a judge, unless the law requires it or there is evidence that the wrongdoings of the judge have been concealed behind the family façade. In the case of Chief Justice of Gibraltar,[74] Lord Hope (with whom Lord Rodger and Lady Hale agreed) while answering the question that to what extent, and in what circumstances, is a judge to be held accountable for the actions of his or her spouse or other close relatives, observed: "The days are long gone when a husband and wife were treated as one person in law and the husband was that person. It is not unknown for senior figures in public life to have spouses or partners who pursue their own careers and interests, in the course of which they may say or do things that, are controversial and embarrassing. Any difficulties that this may give rise to should be resolved between themselves, if they can be resolved at all, in private. Judges are not to be taken as supporting or endorsing their spouse's or partner's conduct if they do not publicly dissociate themselves from it. The law should recognize that they are independent actors and that the deeds of the one are not to be visited on the other." I fully subscribe to his views. Unless the personal or official conduct of the judge threatens public confidence in the judicial institution or the legitimacy of the judicial institution, the question of impeachable misconduct does not begin to arise.

---

[72] Chief Justice of Canada (2000-2017).

[73] Judging in a Democratic State: Remarks of the Right Honourable Beverley McLachlin, P.C. Chief Justice of Canada.

---

[74] Hearing on the Report of the Chief Justice of Gibraltar, [2009] UKPC 43. (4-3 minority view)

Publicizing the Reference

75. The matter of leaking and publicizing the filing of the Reference against the Petitioner Judge and of the allegations made therein is also of great concern and requires serious consideration. The Council has structured its discretion to process any "information" received in the form of a complaint, to make the preliminary assessment thereof and to conduct the "inquiry" by its Procedure of Inquiry, 2005. Paragraph 13 of the Procedure of Inquiry, 2005 provides for the proceedings of the Council to be conducted in camera and also bans reporting the proceedings of the Council. Validity of the Procedure of Inquiry, 2005 particularly of its Paragraph 13 was challenged in Justice Siddiqui Case,[75] but was upheld by this Court. Purpose of Paragraph 13 was stated to protect both the Judge whose conduct and capacity is to be inquired into and the institution of the judiciary. The Court held that the necessity of in camera proceedings prevails over the right to information provided by Article 19A of the Constitution, and observed that due to an open trial the name of a Judge facing inquiry could be maligned even though the allegations may eventually be rejected by the Council. The Court directed in clear terms that "the process of determination whether any prima facie case has been made for proceedings under Article 209 of the Constitution in any event should be held in camera". The Court thus put an absolute restriction of confidentiality on the process of preliminary assessment of the allegations made against a constitutional court judge. This restriction, therefore, equally applies to publicizing the Reference filed by the President and the allegations made therein. In the context of publicizing, proceedings of preliminary assessment of "information" conducted by the President is similar and equal to proceedings by the Council. Therefore, if the proceedings are to be conducted by the Council in camera, then so should be the proceedings by the President.

---

[75] Shaukat Aziz Siddiqui v. Federation of Pakistan, PLD 2018 SC 538.

76. Under Article 204(2)(b) of the Constitution, the constitutional courts have power to punish any person who scandalizes the Court or otherwise does anything which tends to bring the Court or a Judge of the Court into hatred, ridicule or contempt. Publicizing a complaint or Reference and the allegations made therein, of which veracity is yet to be determined after inquiry by the Council, definitely tends to bring the Judge into hatred, ridicule and contempt, and thus attracts the provisions of Article 204 of the Constitution and the Contempt of Court Ordinance, 2003. Needless to say that hostile publicity of a matter through modern media can orchestrate an unprecedented level of hostility towards a particular individual, and even an institution.[76] The restriction of confidentiality is to achieve a certain objective, i.e., preserving the integrity and honour of the judicial institution by maintaining public confidence. Publicizing a complaint or Reference undermines public confidence in the judiciary and lowers the esteem of the individual judge. The prestige and integrity of the judiciary is thus undermined without any concrete findings of misconduct against a Judge. The restriction is also to preserve, protect and safeguard the authority and dignity of the Judge who continues performing his functions on the Bench during the inquiry against him, as there is no provision in the Constitution to suspend his judicial powers during the inquiry proceedings.[77]

77. In the present case, it is a matter of record that the Reference was publicized even when it had not yet been placed before the Council for preliminary consideration, as the filing of the Reference and the allegations made therein against the Petitioner Judge was published in several newspapers on May 28, 29, 30 and 31, and June 1 and 3, 2019 and later during the proceedings before the Council the matter was discussed in press conferences and TV talk shows by the Government Ministers and even by the President of Pakistan. The act of publicizing the filing of the Reference against the Petitioner Judge and of the allegations made therein, is clearly unconstitutional and falls within the scope of the provisions of Article 204 of the Constitution and the Contempt of Court Ordinance, 2003. The fact as to who leaked and publicised this matter is disputed and cannot be resolved in the present proceedings, but the matter cannot be left unnoticed and allowed to go unchecked. Such omission would encourage repetition of the mischief in future. Thus, I would leave the matter to the discretion of the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan who is pater familias of the judiciary and is to protect its prestige, honour, reputation and integrity, to initiate appropriate proceedings for a thorough inquiry of the matter so that the right to fair trial of the persons involved in publicizing the Reference and the allegations made therein, may not be infringed.

---

[76] See David Corker and David Young, Abuse of Process and Fairness in Criminal Proceedings, Butterworths Law (2000).

[77] See Hlophe v. Constitutional Court of South Africa, (2008) ZAGPHC 289; and, Justice Paul Uuter Dery v. Tiger Eye P.I., 2016 SC (J1/29/2015), Ghana Supreme Court.

Is the Reference Malafide?

78. An administrative authority must act in a bonafide manner and should never act for an improper motive or ulterior purpose or contrary to the requirement of the statute or improperly exercise discretion to achieve some ulterior purpose. The determination of the plea of malafide involves two questions, namely – (i) whether the administrative action is contrary to the object and requirements of law, and (ii) whether there is a personal bias or an oblique motive. Malafide of law is constituted when a person inflicts an injury upon another person in flagrant contravention of the law; he is not allowed to say that he did so with an innocent mind. He is taken to know the law and act within the law. He may, therefore, be guilty of malafide of law, although so far as the state of mind is concerned, he acts ignorantly and in that sense innocently. Thus, action of an authority is tainted with malafide of law when it takes the action which is so unreasonable, improbable or blatantly illegal that it ceases to be an action contemplated by the law under which it is purportedly taken, or takes the action by violating the mandatory procedural requirements or without satisfying the jurisdictional requirements, or takes the action which no reasonable person could have taken on the basis of the available material.[78] On the other hand, an unlawful action done designedly, willfully or wantonly and not accidently, thoughtlessly or negligently falls within the domain of malafide of fact. In such case, the action is taken in bad faith either to hurt the person against whom the action is taken or to benefit oneself or another, or in colourable exercise of powers for collateral or ulterior purposes not authorized by the law under which the action is purportedly taken.[79] If the act suffers from malafide of law, the mischief is corrected by nullifying the act; malafide of fact, however, further entails the consequences of making the actor accountable also.

79. It is true that malafide is difficult to prove against a public functionary because there is a presumption of regularity with regard to all official acts under Article 129(e) of the Qanun-e- Shahdat Order, 1984.[80] However, this presumption of regularity is available only to official acts done by a person or authority competent to do that. The presumption of regularity cannot be attached to the acts done by the persons and authorities who have no legal authority to do those acts, rather a reverse presumption for lack of bonafide arises. In such a case, the onus to prove malafide does not remain as high. Malafide is inferential by construct. It can be drawn from direct or circumstantial evidence.[81] The Court carefully takes into consideration the surrounding circumstances of the action; the conduct of the persons involved; the object and purpose to be achieved; and the nature of the illegality. The court, in a way, reconstructs the whole act and its backdrop, and then evaluates the fides of the action and its actors. If malafide on the part of the actors is apparent on the face of record, then the court of law seized with the matter is

---

[78] See West Pakistan v. Begum Shorish Kashmiri, PLD 1969 SC 14, 32 (5-MB), per Hamoodur Rahman, J; Sarwar v. Punjab, 1990 SCMR 999, 1001, per Shafiur Rahman, J.; and, Said Zaman v. Federation, 2017 SCMR 1249, 1279-80 (5-MB), per Sh. Azmat Saeed, J.

[79] See Abdul Rauf v. Abdul Hamid, PLD 1965 SC 671, 675 (5-MB), per B. Z. Kaikaus, J.; Federation v. Saeed Ahmad, PLD 1974 SC 151, 170 (4-MB), per Hamoodur Rahman, C. J.,; Said Zaman v. Federation, 2017 SCMR 1249, 1279-80 (5-MB), per Sh. Azmat Saeed, J.

[80] Federation v. Saeed Ahmad, PLD 1974 SC 151.

[81] See CJP Iftikhar Chauhdry case (supra) p.215, Per Muhammad Nawaz Abbasi, J.

not supposed to shut its eyes from taking notice thereof.[82] While full faith is given to public acts and record of the Government, this assumption is overturned if malafide is borne out from the record.

80. If we start reading the events after the Faizabad Dharna judgment, one is compelled to conclude that the Petitioner Judge was deliberately targeted for his observations and directions made in that judgment, which perhaps were considered hostile and troublesome by those in power. This fact is floating on the record of the review petitions. The vengeance and resentment against the Petitioner Judge is more than visible from the strange and unprecedented assertions made for his removal on the ground of misconduct in the review petitions; soon it took shape of a vague complaint filed before an incompetent authority (ARU) housed in the office of the Prime Minister. The vengeance and resentment continued with the entertainment of the bogus complaint, unauthorized investigation and collection of evidence through the surveillance of the Petitioner Judge and his family, illegally seeking information from statutory institutions and using the illegally collected evidence for making advice to the President to send the Reference against the Petitioner Judge. These extraordinary facts and circumstances in the process of conducting the so-called accountability of the Petitioner Judge may be summarized in sequence, as under:

i. The current ruling parties (PTI and MQM) aggrieved of some observations made by the Petitioner Judge in the Faizabad Dharna judgement make an unprecedented and astonishing assertion in their review petitions filed against that judgment that the Petitioner Judge has violated his Oath of Office and Code of Conduct for Judges, and is liable to be removed from office under Article 209 of the Constitution.

ii. The complainant makes the complaint for "Accountability of Judges" to the ARU, housed in the Prime Minister's Office, and not to the Council, in the very next month of filing of those review petitions.

---

[82] Hazara Improvement Trust v. Qaisra Elahi, 2005 SCMR 678, p.698.

iii. The Chairman, ARU (substantive post - Special Assistant to the Prime Minister) discusses the matter with the Law Minister informally, without making any formal consultation through the Cabinet Division (under whom the ARU was to function as per decision of the Cabinet) with the Law and Justice Division in accordance with Rule 14 of the ROB.

iv. The Law Minister gives a "go ahead" to the ARU in an informal discussion, without realizing the importance of his advice, even oral, for inquiring into the veracity of the allegations made in the complaint against Judges of the Constitutional Courts.

v. The Chairman, ARU who is a Barrister-at-law, and not a layman, knowing well that an oral advice of the Law Minister has no value in the eye of law and without looking for his own legal authority to inquire into the allegations made against Judges of Constitutional Courts, initiates the inquiry into the allegations made in the complaint.

vi. The Chairman, ARU makes the decision alone to initiate the process of inquiring into the allegations made in the complaint, and does not obtain the opinion of or consults with the Members of the ARU as to whether the institutions they represent can inquire into the allegations made in a complaint against a constitutional court judge.

vii. The Chairman, ARU decides to proceed for accountability of the judges of constitutional courts, and not for recovery of their alleged foreign assets as per the so-called mandate of the ARU, for he decides not to inquire about the alleged properties of another judge named in the same complaint, while noting that the said judge has already resigned.

viii. The Members of the ARU make compliance of the directions of the Chairman, ARU and share with him the confidential information available in the record of their Departments, by violating the provisions of the law under which those Departments function.

ix. The Legal Expert, ARU, who is also a Barrister-at-law, in compliance with the directions of the Chairman, ARU causes surveillance of the Petitioner Judge and his family for locating the properties in London, in violation of their fundamental rights of liberty, privacy, dignity and freedom of movement, and in derogation of the provisions of IFTA.

x. The Member of the ARU from FIA, Assistant Commissioner (Inland Revenue), Commissioner (Inland Revenue), and DG (International Taxes), all four, submit their reports on May 10, 2019. The Chairman, ARU then examines all the reports and record submitted to him on May 10, 2019, makes his final report on May 10, 2019 and submit it to the Law Minister on the very same day, i.e., May 10, 2019. All proceedings stand concluded in one day, with admirable alacrity.

xi. The Law Minister (a distinguished lawyer) does not raise any objection to the inquiry conducted by the ARU for accountability of a constitutional court judge, on receiving the report of the Chairman, ARU. He rather, relying upon the illegally collected evidence in that inquiry, makes a "Summary for the Prime Minister" proposing to the Prime Minister to advise the President to form an opinion that the Petitioner Judge may be guilty of misconduct and direct the Council to inquire into the matter under Article 209 of the Constitution.

xii. The Law Minister opines that the Petitioner Judge appears to have committed "grave misconduct" by not declaring three London properties owned by his spouse and children and by not explaining the source of their purchase in his tax record, without appreciating, rather ignoring, the fact that no office or authority in Pakistan, under the relevant law, has ever asked the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge to explain their sources to purchase the said properties and their failure to declare the same in their tax record, if there was any obligation to declare the foreign assets under the ITO.

xiii. The Prime Minister remains unaware of the actions of his Special Assistant, the Chairman, ARU working right under his nose at the Prime Minister's Office. Further, the Prime Minister without asking the Law Minister or the Chairman, ARU about their unconstitutional and illegal investigation and evidence collection against a constitutional court judge and without inquiring whether any office or authority had asked the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge to explain the sources of purchase of those properties and whether the properties owned by the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge attract any liability of the Petitioner Judge, goes ahead, without any application of mind, to advise the President to form the opinion and direct the Council, and to sign the draft Reference.

xiv. The President also does not ask the said questions and approves the Prime Minister's advice and signs the draft > Reference annexed with the Summary without applying his independent mind, exercising his discretion and forming his own opinion.

Such blatant violations of the law and Constitution by the Chairman, and Legal Expert of the ARU, the officers of FBR, FIA and NADRA, the Law Minister and the Prime Minister; undue haste in processing the matter; dubious credentials and ring of anonymity around Mr. Dogar (the complainant); oddity of approaching ARU instead of the Council; failure on the part of ARU to convincingly show how they located the addresses of the three UK properties of the family of the Petitioner Judge; afterthought of referring to 192.com and again failing to show how 192.com helped; failure of the ARU to show who searched through 192.com and the UK HM Land Registry, who registered with them and who paid for it; keeping names of those persons in secret; resultant necessary inference of having done the covetous transnational surveillance of the Petitioner Judge and his family to dig out the addresses of the three properties with support of the intelligence agencies; and rushed and mechanical approval of the Summary by the Prime Minister, all these facts and circumstances when read in the background of the assertions made by the current ruling political parties (PTI and MQM) in their review petitions filed against the Faizabad Dharna judgment, lead to a clear and a convincing finding that the whole process initiated under the garb of accountability of the Petitioner Judge suffers from more than mere malafide of law and jumps up into the realm of malafide of fact also. In the present case, other than the legal and constitutional violations, extraneous considerations, as mentioned above, have come to surface, which reflect vindictiveness and ulterior motive. Knowing well that there was no determination of tax violation of the Petitioner Judge and no explanation of the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge was ever sought, the matter was still pushed ahead with the collateral purpose of defiling the honour of the Petitioner Judge and with the design to pressurize him into resignation or lead to his removal. These facts go beyond malafide of law and fall within the ambit of malafide of fact as they show bad faith and colourable exercise of powers for collateral or ulterior purposes not authorized by the law under which the actions were purportedly taken. Therefore, the actions of entertainment of the complaint, the investigation and surveillance for the collection of evidence, the putting up of Summary before the Prime Minister by the Law Minister and finally the approval of the Summary by the Prime Minister and placing the "information" before the President under Article 209(5) of the Constitution for removal of the Petitioner Judge from office are found to be tainted with both malafide of law and malafide of fact. All the Government actors mentioned above are held responsible. As the buck stops with the Prime Minister in a constitutional parliamentary democracy, the major burden of these malicious actions fall on his shoulders who also happens to be the leader of a political party that had filed the review petition with an astonishingly unique prayer seeking ouster of the Petitioner Judge for expressing an independent view.

Held

81. In view of the above findings, all the acts and steps from the entertainment of the complaint till the sanction of the "Summary" for placement of the "information" before the President by the Prime Minister are declared illegal, without jurisdiction, malafide of law and fact, and thus unconstitutional and of no legal effect. While, the acts of the President approving the advice of the Prime Minister, and signing and sending the Reference against the Petitioner Judge are declared without jurisdiction and coram non judice, and thus unconstitutional and of no legal effect. The outcome of the said declarations is that:

(i) the Reference against the Petitioner Judge is quashed, and as a result the proceedings, including the Show Cause Notice, before the Council stand abated;

(ii) the authorities concerned are directed to initiate criminal and disciplinary proceedings against the Chairman, Legal Expert and Members of the ARU, as well as, against the other defaulting officials of FBR and NADRA for their illegal acts, under the IFTA, ITO and NADRA Ordinance, 2000; and,

(iii) the Registrar of this Court is directed to place the matter before the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan for considering to initiate appropriate proceedings for a thorough inquiry of the matter of leaking and publicizing the Reference and the allegations made therein, and for taking legal action against the persons found involved therein.

I allow all the constitutional petitions in these terms.

Reasons for my Disagreement with the Short Order[83]

82. Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg[84] once commented, "Judges disagree without being disagreeable." While this is largely true for us judges, history is not as forgiving. Through Short Order dated 19.06.2020 the Reference against the Petitioner Judge was quashed by unanimous opinion of all the members of this Full Court Bench. However, the Majority added certain directions to the FBR and the Council whereby the Commissioner, FBR was directed to issue notices under ITO to the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge regarding the acquisition of the three foreign properties. He was also directed to decide the notices and the Chairman FBR was directed to submit a report of the decision to the Council. While the Council was asked to consider the matter by invoking its suo moto powers with or without there being a report filed by the Chairman, FBR. All these directions were to be actualized within a specified time-line provided in the Short Order. With respect, I could not persuade myself to concur with these directions. Here under are my reasons for the disagreement.

83. The spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge like all other citizens of Pakistan are independent persons and enjoy an inalienable right to the protection of law. As they were not party to the instant proceedings and were never summoned or made a party to the proceedings by the Court, any adverse order against them, will deprive them of their inalienable right to due process under the Constitution and the law, and will contravene the well- entrenched and deep rooted principle of audi alteram partem. The Court cannot go against the grain, values and scheme of our Constitution and the established principles of law. After the Reference against the Petitioner Judge was unanimously quashed by this Full Court Bench, the case set out against the Petitioner Judge came to an end. In the absence of any allegations of corruption against the Petitioner Judge or of his holding foreign properties in the names of his wife and children as a trustee or a benamidar, this Court, and for that matter the Council, have no concern with the assets and properties of the spouse and the children of the Petitioner Judge.

---

[83] Paragraphs 4-11, thereof.

[84] Former Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States (1933-2020)

84. The FBR does not require any direction from this Court for taking any proceedings against any individual (including a constitutional court judge or his spouse and children) for a tax violation under the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001, if any. Similarly, the Council is also free and independent to exercise its suo moto jurisdiction against any judge of the constitutional courts when so required. It is nobody's case that either the FBR or the Council were reluctant or unwilling to perform their functions under the law and the Constitution.

85. The principle is more than settled that if an Authority has no jurisdiction in the matter under the law, the jurisdiction cannot be conferred on that Authority by an order of the Court.[85] Under Section 122 of ITO an assessment order cannot be reopened after a lapse of five years by the FBR. Also, regulating the Tax Commissioner to function and perform his duties within a prescribed time-line, which is not so provided under the ITO amounts to entering the realm of judicial legislation.

86. With respect, direction to the Chairman, FBR to send the Report to the Council would make the Chairman, FBR a complainant and the Report a new complaint. The FBR is an organ and instrumentality of the Federal Government and is not empowered to directly approach the President under Article 209 of the Constitution unless the Federal Government i.e., the Cabinet, approves to place such information before the Council through the President. The Federal Government of any of its Departments cannot make a complaint or report in relation to the conduct of a judge directly to the Council, and it has to place such a complaint or report in the form of "information" before the President to form his "opinion" and make direction (Reference) in accordance with the provisions of Article 209 (5) of the Constitution. Clear letter of the Constitution cannot be bypassed. A thing required by law to be done in a certain manner must be done in the manner as prescribed by law or not to be done at all.[86]

---

[85] See Badshah Begum v. Additional Commissioner, 2003 SCMR 629.

87. This Court cannot, it is submitted with respect, direct someone to file a complaint against a constitutional court judge before the Council and then make the Council consider the said complaint. This would have a far reaching effect as it would dismantle the independence and neutrality of the Council and the constitutional scheme under Article 209 that safeguards a constitutional court judge. It also flouts the right to fair trial under Article 10A of the Constitution. The Council is a constitutional body which enjoys suo moto powers to inquire into the conduct and capacity of a judge. Acting on its own motion (suo moto) and being asked to act on its own motion (suo moto) are two inconsistent and irreconcilable concepts. The Council is structured under the Constitution to exercise its suo motu powers independent of any extraneous influence. I am fortified by the observations of Ajmal Mian, C.J. made in Ikram case.[87] The learned Chief Justice while declining the prayer, in that case, for issuing direction to the President to make Reference against some constitutional court judges under Article 209(5) of the Constitution observed that Article 209(5) "does not admit filing of a Constitutional petition for a direction to the Supreme Judicial Council or to the President to initiate proceedings of a judicial misconduct against a Judge of a superior Court. ... This Court or a High Court cannot take upon itself the exercise to record even a tentative finding that a particular Judge has committed misconduct warranting filing of a reference against him under Article 209 of the Constitution."

88. In my view, the observation that the right to appeal under the ITO would be available to the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge while simultaneously, the Council may also commence proceedings - can lead to conflicting results and thereby, may render the appeal under the ITO otiose and futile. Besides, the Council does not enjoy any power to issue directions to any judicial or a quasi-judicial forum to speed up pending matters against a constitutional court judge.

---

[86] See Assistant Collector v. Khyber Electric, 2001 SCMR 838; S.M.C. No. 18 of 2010, PLD 2011 SC 927; and, Zia Ur Rehman v. Ahmed Hussain, 2014 SCMR 1015.

[87] Ikram Chaudhry v. Federation, PLD 1998 SC 103, para 11.

89. The proceedings initiated through the short order after the quashment of the Reference against the Petitioner Judge would mean that the Council must now consider if a judge can be made vicariously liable for misconduct for his family's affairs, a concept that is alien to the Code of Conduct and has nothing to do with judicial integrity as discussed above.

In the end

90. In our constitutional democracy, it is essential that everyone enjoys his or her domain of freedom, free from Governmental intrusion - lest it aims to check an unlawful activity. Privacy, liberty, autonomy and agency are integral parts of dignity and life and are cherished constitutional values that determine the frontiers of a living constitutional democracy. There can be no compromise on either judicial independence or judicial accountability. These are essential pillars, which together uphold public confidence and legitimacy of the judicial institution. The real and enduring strength of the judiciary, however, is anchored in ruling according to the Constitution and the law without fear or favour, irrespective of public perception and irrespective of who is before the court, an ordinary litigant or a judge of the highest constitutional court of the land. An American poet once said:

The perfect judge fears nothing

- he could go front to front before God;
Before the perfect judge all shall stand back

- life and death shall stand back

- heaven and hell shall stand back.[88]

(Syed Mansoor Ali Shah)[89]
Judge

Islamabad,
the 04th November, 2020.
Approved for Reporting.
Sadaqat

[88] Walt Whitman, “Great are the Myths” in Leaves of Grass.

[89] Before parting I wish to appreciate and acknowledge the valuable assistance rendered by Mr. Zafar Iqbal Khokhar, Research Officer cum Civil Judge, Supreme Court Research Centre. (SCRC)

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 327

Present: Mushir Alam, Faisal Arab and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

Messrs CHERAT CEMENT CO. LTD., NOWSHERA and others---Petitioners/Applicants

Versus

FEDERATION OF PAKISTAN through Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Resources and others---Respondents

Civil Review Petitions Nos. 421 to 454, 458 and 459 of 2020 and Civil Miscellaneous Applications Nos.6317 to 6353, 6355 to 6421, 6423 to 6427, 6735, 6736, 6839, 6841, 6843 and 6845 of 2020 in Civil Review Petitions Nos. Nil of 2020.

(On review of this Court's judgment dated 13.08.2020 passed in Civil Appeal No. Civil Appeals Nos.1113 to 1155 of 2017 and Civil Petitions Nos.3124, 387-P, 389-P, 392-P, 393-P, 394-P, 399-P, 400-P, 3027, 3028, 3029, 3030, 3138, 3241, 3259, 3260, 3327, 3411 of 2017 and 3385 of 2018 etc.).

Per Mushir Alam, J; Faisal Arab, J; agreeing; Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. dissenting [Majority view]

(a) Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act (IV of 2015)---

----Ss. 3 & 4---Industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas---Gas Infrastructure Development Cess ( GIDC cess )---Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 ( GIDC Act, 2015'), vires of---[Per Mushir Alam, J: Supreme Court in the judgment under review had declared the GIDC Act, 2015 as intra vires the Constitution---When, the GIDC Act, 2015 had been declared to be intra vires by the Supreme Court then every provision of it, which either created an obligation or granted any relief was enforceable in law---None of the grounds urged by the petitioners called for reviewing the judgment under review---Review petitions were dismissed and the Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 (by a majority of 2:1, with Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J dissenting) was held to be intra vires the Constitution.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. dissenting [Minority view]

(b) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XXVI, R. 8---Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. XLVII, R.1---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 188---Review petition, hearing of---Constitution of Bench---Scope---Application/petition for review shall, as far as practicable, be posted before the "same Bench" that delivered the judgment or order sought to be reviewed---Judge who dissented from the majority judgment should be Member of the Bench that was to hear the review petition, as a judgment pronounced in terms of the majority opinion of a larger Bench could not be reviewed by a smaller Bench consisting of only the Judges holding the majority opinion---Jurisdiction and judicial power of the Judge who earlier dissented from the majority judgment of the Bench was similar and co-extensive with that of those Judges whose opinion became the majority judgment of the Bench, in hearing the review petition against that majority judgment. [Minority view]

Rule 8 of Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 very clearly and firmly prescribed that the application for review shall, as far as practicable, be posted before the "same Bench" that delivered the judgment or order sought to be reviewed. The expression "same Bench" left little room to speculate the constitution of the Bench: the "same Bench" meant the same judges, as far as practicable, and the same number of judges, i.e. the same numeric strength of the Bench.

PLD 2013 SC 1024; PLD 1979 SC 741; PLD 1979 SC 53 and 1979 SCMR 427 ref.

The Judge who dissented from the majority judgment, if available, should be Member of the Bench that was to hear the review petition, as a judgment pronounced in terms of the majority opinion of a larger Bench could not be reviewed by a smaller Bench consisting of only the Judges holding the majority opinion. It was utmost necessary to maintain quorum of the Bench that delivered the judgment under review. It was because of such legal compulsion, that new Members were added to the Bench when any of its earlier Members retired or was not available for any other reason, to maintain the quorum of the Bench for hearing the review petition.

Gadoon Textiles Mills v. WAPDA 1997 SCMR 641; Gandaf Steel Industries v. Federation 1997 SCMR 1669; Benazir Bhutto v. President of Pakistan PLD 1998 SC 388; Benazir Bhutto v. President of Pakistan

PLD 2000 SC 77; Nawaz Sharif v. Imran Khan PLD 2018 SC 1; Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar AIR 1987 SC 877 and Shyam Lal Sharma v. Union of India AIR 1987 SC 1137 ref.

Grounds of review which were, in fact, limitations on the power of review of the Supreme Court applied equally to the Judges whose opinion prevailed for being the majority view and to the Judge whose opinion remained inoperative for being the minority view. The Judge whose opinion remained the minority view in the main case could review the Judgment of the Bench that was pronounced in terms of the majority opinion, on any of the said grounds of review, as could a Judge who delivered the majority opinion.

PLD 1979 SC 741; PLD 1979 SC 53; AIR 1987 SC 877; Union of India v. Tulsiram Patel AIR 1985 SC 1416; Shyam Lal Sharma v. Union of India AIR 1987 SC 1137; [2011] 1 MLJ 25; Aamer Zaman v. Omar Ayub 2015 SCMR 890 and 2015 SCMR 1303 ref.

(c) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O. X, R. 1---Judgment/order delivered by a Bench of the Supreme Court---Majority view/opinion---Scope---Judgment pronounced or Order made in terms of the majority opinion was the judgment or order of the Bench, and not of the Judges holding the majority opinion. [Minority view]

When a case was heard by a Bench of two or more Judges, the case was decided in accordance with the opinion of such Judges or of the majority of such Judges. Judgment or order of the Court was pronounced in terms of the majority opinion; such judgment or order was of the Bench that heard the case and, for that matter, of the Court, and not only of the Judges whose opinion prevailed as a majority opinion. Numeric strength of the whole Bench determined the judicial power of its Members, and not the numbers of the individual Judges in majority.

(2018) 11 SCC 305 ref.

(d) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O. X, R. 1 & O.XI---Judgment of larger Bench of the Supreme Court---Scope---Such judgment was binding on the Benches of the Supreme Court consisting of Judges less than the larger Bench---Smaller Bench could not request for constitution of a larger Bench to revisit the opinion of a larger Bench on any question or principle of law; only a Bench of co-equal strength could make such request. [Minority view]

Muhammad Saleem v. Fazal Ahmad 1997 SCMR 315; Babar Shehzad v. Said Akbar 1999 SCMR 2518; All Pakistan Newspapers Society v. Federation PLD 2004 SC 600; Ata Ullah v. Surraya Parveen 2006 SCMR 1637; Azhar Siddiqui v. Federation PLD 2012 SC 774 and Central Board of Dawoodi Bohra Community v. State of Maharashtra AIR 2005 SC 752 ref.

(e) Cess---

----Scope---Visible co-relation must exist between the collection of Cess and its expenditure---In a case where the fee was to be utilized for service that was to be rendered in future, it was important to see how the moneys collected were being expended and whether there was a transparent and confidence inspiring co-relation between the two---Furthermore amount of Cess so collected was for a specified purpose and must be accounted for accordingly---Cess was not the collection of general revenue which could be utilized anywhere. [Minority view]

(f) Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act (IV of 2015)---

----Ss. 3 & 4---Industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas---Gas Infrastructure Development Cess ( GIDC cess )---Whether there was any co-relation between the collection of the GIDC cess and expenditure therefrom---Held, that the data provided by the Government showed that it already had Rs.101.357 billion of GIDC cess in excess after factoring in the expenditure to be incurred on certain gas pipelines and gas storage projects ( the Projects ) unless another gas pipeline project was put into motion---Co-relation between the collection and expenditure of GIDC cess stood completely frozen since the year 2011 raising fingers on the credibility and transparency of the Projects and on the availability of service (supply of natural gas) against the fee charged, in the near future---Further collection of arrears (in terms of the majority view of the judgment under review) in the sum of Rs. 456.946 billion, leading to an excess of Rs. 355.589 billion unduly promoted unjust enrichment and seriously offended the right to property and business of the petitioners guaranteed under the Constitution---After a decade of charging GIDC cess from gas consumers and after having collected Rs 295.40 billion to-date there was no sign of development of the gas pipeline projects in the country---Absence of the said projects and emphasis on the import of LNG suggested that the Government was either not willing to or was unable to complete the Projects and therefore the shortfall in gas supply was being increasingly plugged through imported LNG---Direction to recover arrears given by the majority in the judgment under review, was, therefore, not justified and legally sustainable and was liable to be recalled---Review petitions were allowed. [Minority view]

(g) Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act (IV of 2015)---

----Ss. 3 & 4---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts 78(1) & 78(2)---Industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas---Gas Infrastructure Development Cess ( GIDC cess )---Whether GIDC cess was to be deposited in the Federal Consolidated Fund or the Public Account of the Federation---GIDC cess amount collected under the Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 (GIDC Act) was to be credited in the Public Account with an entity distinct from the other revenues credited to it, and must be earmarked for utilization for the purposes specified in the GIDC Act only---No disbursement could be made from the GIDC cess amount for general governmental expenditures or any other purpose---Observations (of the majority in the judgment under review) regarding deposit of the GIDC cess amount in the Federal Consolidated Fund without appreciating the difference between the Federal Consolidated Fund and the Public Account under Article 78 of the Constitution, were, therefore, liable to be recalled. [Minority view]

Article 78(1) of the Constitution provided that all revenues received by the Federal Government, all loans raised by that Government, and all moneys received by it in repayment of loans shall form part of consolidated fund, to be known as the Federal Consolidated Fund. While all other moneys received by or on behalf of the Federal Government, or received by or deposited with the Supreme Court or any other court established under the authority of the Federation were to be credited to the Public Account of the Federation as per Article 78(2) of the Constitution. The expression "all revenues" used in Article 78(1) covered the revenues (taxes, duties, etc) raised for Governmental purposes, and did not include the revenue that could not be used for any Governmental purpose, like the compensatory fee collected for rendering any service to the payers of that fee. Such compensatory fee fell within the expression "all other moneys" used in Article 78(2) and was to be credited to the Public Account, and not to the Federal Consolidated Fund.

AIR 1953 Bom. 242 ref.

The GIDC cess amount collected under the Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 (GIDC Act) was to be credited in the Public Account with an entity distinct from the other revenues credited to it, and must be earmarked for utilization for the purposes specified in the GIDC Act only. No disbursement could be made from the GIDC cess amount for general governmental expenditures or any other purpose. The Supreme Court was not assisted on said point at the time of the hearing of the judgment under review, and made the observations (in the majority view) regarding deposit of the GIDC cess amount in the Federal Consolidated Fund without appreciating the difference between the Federal Consolidated Fund and the Public Account under Article 78 of the Constitution. The said observations were, therefore, liable to be recalled in review.

In case the GIDC Act became in-operational on failure of the Federal Government to take steps to commence work on the laying of the North South Gas Pipeline within six months, the amount of the GIDC cess collected were liable to be returned and refunded to the payers. Review petitions were allowed.

(h) Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act (IV of 2015)---

----Ss. 3 & 4 & Second Sched.---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 25---Industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas---Gas Infrastructure Development Cess ( GIDC cess )---Different rates of GIDC cess for different industrial and commercial consumers---Discrimination---Judgment under review did not consider the rationale behind fixing different rates for GIDC cess within different sectors but instead discussed the question of discrimination between the industrial/commercial consumers and the domestic consumers, which was not the question agitated by the petitioners---No intelligible differentia seemed to exist amongst the different industrial and commercial gas consumers mentioned in the Schedule for the purposes of the Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 ( the GIDC Act )---Discrimination in providing maximum limit of GIDC cess for different sectors was overlooked in the judgment under review, and thus provided a valid ground to review it---In terms of Art. 25 of the Constitution which ensured equality and equal treatment among equals, the Federal Government could not charge the GIDC cess at the rate more than Rs.100 per MMBTU from any category of gas consumers---Review petitions were allowed. [Minority view]

(i) Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act (IV of 2015)---

---Ss. 3 & 4---Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 11---Industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas---Gas Infrastructure Development Cess ( GIDC cess )---Res judicata, principle of---Scope and applicability---Four-Member Bench of the Supreme Court in the case of Pir Bukhsh and others v. Chairman, Allotment Committee (PLD 1987 SC 145) ( the Pir Bukhsh case ) elaborately discussed the principle of res judicata and concluded that in a controversy raising a dispute inter parties, the matter adjudged was conclusive as between the parties both on question of fact and question of law---However, an exception to said principle was created in the judgment under review, heard by a three-member Bench, by holding that it would be difficult to apply such a principle in matters where a power or a right or an obligation solely depended upon the very legitimacy of the enactment that had come under challenge in a Court of law on the touchstone of the Constitution---It was, not appropriate for the Three-Member Bench hearing the judgment under review to deviate from principle of res judicata laid down by an earlier Four-Member Bench---Three-Member Bench had two options: first, to follow the law declared earlier by the Four-Member Bench; or second, to refer the matter to a Four-Member Bench to decide whether that opinion should be reconsidered by a larger Bench---As the majority in the judgment under review did not opt for the second option, the principle of res judicata as settled in the Pir Bukhsh case was fully applicable to the decree holders/petitioners in the suit decided by the (Sindh) High Court---Review petitions were allowed. [Minority view]

Pir Bukhsh and others v. Chairman. Allotment Committee PLD 1987 SC 145 ref.

(j) Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act (IV of 2015)---

----Ss. 3 & 4---Constitution of Pakistan, Fourth Sched., Pt. I, Entry No. 51---Industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas---Gas Infrastructure Development Cess ( GIDC cess )---Tax imposed on natural gas through a Money Bill---Constitutionality---In the judgment under review while interpreting Entry No.51 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List contained in the Fourth Schedule to the Constitution, the majority took a view contrary to that of a Bench of co-equal strength expressed in Federation of Pakistan through Secretary Petroleum and Natural Resources v. Durrani Ceramic (2014 SCMR 1630 : PLD 2015 SC 354: 2014 PTD 2016) ( the Durrani Ceramic case ) by stating that "the National Assembly was fully competent to impose tax on natural gas through a Money Bill on the strength of Entry No. 51 of the Federal Legislative List. ---Said finding was against settled principles of the law of precedent and needed to be recalled---Review petitions were allowed. [Minority view]

Federation of Pakistan through Secretary Petroleum and Natural Resources v. Durrani Ceramic 2014 SCMR 1630 : PLD 2015 SC 354 and 2014 PTD 2016 ref.

(k) Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act (IV of 2015)---

----Ss. 3 & 4---Constitution of Pakistan, Fourth Sched., Pt. I, Entry No. 27 & Pt.II, Entry Nos. 2 & 15---Industrial and commercial consumers of natural gas---Gas Infrastructure Development Cess ( GIDC cess )---Whether Entry No.27 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List justified the legislative power of the Federation to enact the Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 ( the GIDC Act )---Held, that Entry No. 27 of Part I of the Federal Legislative Listread that "Import and export across customs frontiers as defined by the Federal Government, inter-provincial trade and commerce, trade and commerce with foreign countries; standard of quality of goods to be exported out of Pakistan."---Said entry clearly related to trade with foreign countries (import and export), and inter-provincial trade and commerce, and in no way covered the subject of "natural gas"---Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act had not taxed or charged fee on the foreign or inter-provincial trade and commerce; it had charged fee on use of natural gas---Entry No.27, in no terms, justified the legislative power of the Federation to enact the GIDC Act---Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act fells under Entry No. 2 read with Entry No.15 of Part II of the Federal Legislative List---Parties were not heard on said point at the time of original hearing of the case; which point, therefore, escaped notice of the Bench that heard the judgment under review---Such error appeared to be apparent on the face of the record and was liable to be recalled---Review petitions were allowed. [Minority view]

Makhdoom Ali Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners/Applicants (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 444 to 447, 453, 454 of 2020, C.M.As. Nos. 6326, 6330, 6332 and 6333 of 2020).

Muneer A. Malik, Senior Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners/Applicants (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 451 of 2020 and C.M.A. 6418 of 2020).

Isaac Ali Qazi, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners/Applicants (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 421, 437, 438, 449, 452 and C.M.A. 6407 of 2020).

Syed Ali Zafar, Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.As. Nos. 6411 and 6412 of 2020).

Rashid Anwar, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners/ Applicants (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 426 to 428, C.M.As. Nos. 6342 to 6346, 6348 to 6353, 6355 to 6382, 6384 to 6406, 6413 to 6415 of 2020).

Naeem Bokhari, Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.A. No.6341 of 2020).

Salman Akram Raja, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners/ Applicants (in C.R.Ps. Nos.422, 423 and 450 of 2020 and C.M.As. Nos. 6320, 6323 to 6325, 6327 to 6329, 6334, 6339 and 6340 of 2020).

Sardar Muhammad Ghazi, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 424, 425 and 426 of 2020).

Abid S. Zuberi, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners/ Applicants (in C.R.P. No. 427 and C.M.As. Nos. 6423 and 6424 of 2020).

Abdul Sattar Pirzada, Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.A. No. 6319 of 2020).

Qazi Ghulam Dastgir, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 439 to 443 of 2020).

Mahmood A. Sheikh, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners/Applicants (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 448, 453, 424 to 426 of 2020 and C.M.As. Nos. 6317 to 6421 of 2020).

Tariq Aziz, Advocate Supreme Court/Advocate-on-Record for Applicants (in C.M.As. Nos. 6317 and 6318 of 2020).

Mian Mahmood Rashid, Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.As. Nos. 6321 to 6322 of 2020).

Shahzada Mazhar, Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.As. Nos. 6331 and 6335 of 2020).

Arshad Ali Chaudhry, Advocate-on-Record and Habib-ur-Rehman, Advocate for Applicants (in C.M.As. Nos. 6336 and 6408 of 2020).

Ahsan Mehmood, Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.A. No.6338 of 2020).

M. Anas Makhdoom, Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.A. No. 6383 of 2020).

Haider Waheed, Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.As. Nos. 6409 and 6410 of 2020).

Mrs. Tasneem Amin, Advocate Supreme Court/Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners/Applicants (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 458 of 2020 and C.M.A. No. 6416 of 2020).

Barrister M. Abdur Rahman, Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.As. 6417, 6419 and 6420 of 2020).

Kh. M. Saeed, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in C.R.P. No. 458 of 2020).

Mrs. Navin Salim Merchant, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners/Applicants (in C.R.P. No. 459 and C.M.A. 6736 of 2020).

Naeem Suleman, Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.As. 6425, 6426, 6839, 6841 and 6843 of 2020).

Abdul Qadir Khan, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.As. Nos. 6425 to 6427 of 2020).

Khalid Javed, Advocate Supreme Court for Applicants (in C.M.A. No. 6735 of 2020).

Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners/Applicants (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 422, 423, 450, 428 to 436, 439 to 443, 450 of 2020 and C.M.As. Nos. 6320 to 6330, 6332 to 6334, 6337 to 6340, 6342 to 6353, 6365 to 6406, 6413 to 6415 of 2020).

K.A. Wahab, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners/Applicants (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 427, 459 of 2020 and C.M.As. 6423, 6424, 6735, 6737 and 6846 of 2020).

M. Kasim Mirjat, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 444 to 447, 451, 453 and 454 of 2020).

Ch. Akhtar Ali, Advocate-on-Record for Applicants (in C.M.As. Nos. 6331 and 6335 of 2020).

Ch. Aamir Rehman, Additional Attorney General for Respondents.

Dr. Arshad Malik, EDG, Ministry of Energy.

Abdul Rasheed Jokhio, Director (Technical), Ministry of Energy.

Umar Farooq, AD (Legal), Ministry of Energy.

Muhammad Waqar Rana, Advocate Supreme Court, Barrister Mian Belal Ahmed, Advocate Supreme Court, Assisted by Abdul Malik Baig, Advocate (for SNGPL).

Dates of hearing: 27th to 29th October and 2nd November, 2020.

JUDGMENT

C.M.As. Nos.6341, 6409, 6410, 6417, 6419, 6420, 6418 and 6421/2020

MUSHIR ALAM, J.---Since the counsel in the main cases have been appointed as Federal Law Minister/Advocate General KPK, subject to all just exception, these applications are allowed, the respective ASCs are granted permission to argue. Let the review petitions be numbered, which shall be disposed of along with other review petitions.

2. Applications for joinder by parties who were either not party in earlier round and/or not heard in the main appeals, in view of the order proposed to be passed in main CRPs' all the applications stand disposed off.

All Review Petitions and C.M.As.

3. The Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 (the GIDC, Act, 2015) became Act of the Parliament on 15.05.2015. Vires of the said Act was challenged. In the Sindh High Court suits were filed on its Original Side. The High Court declared the levy under the said Act to be unconstitutional vide its judgment dated 26.10.2016. Similar challenge was made in the Peshawar High Court by invoking its constitutional jurisdiction; which held the levy under the said Act to be intra vires the Constitution, vide its judgment dated 31.05.2017, Appeals from the judgment of the Peshawar High Court were preferred before this Court, whereas against the judgment of the Single Judge of the Sindh High Court only one High Court Appeal was filed in one suit though judgment dated 26.10.2016 was rendered in 377 suits.

4. On 22.10.2019 when this Court was hearing appeals arising from the decision of the Peshawar High Court it was pointed out to it that in so far as the decision of the Sindh High Court is concerned High Court Appeal No. 361 of 2016 is pending before Division bench of the High Court. On that date this Court passed an order that in all identical matters pending in all High Courts, opportunity be given to such litigants and their counsel to present their case before us on the merits of the controversy. This was done so that the challenge to the vires of the said Act be adjudicated upon once and for all at this Court's level. Pursuant to our order dated 22.10.2019 several miscellaneous applications for joining in these proceedings as party were filed by those who had challenged the vires of the GIDC Act, 2015 in various other High Courts. All of them were given opportunity to present their point of view on the merits of the controversy. Certain other petitions which were filed against the judgment of the Peshawar High Court and had not come up for hearing at the time of grant of leave to appeal were also taken up for hearing so that the same could be decided together with the appeals. This Court then finally vide its judgment dated 13.08.2020 declared that the Act in question is intra vires of the Constitution. The petitioners in all these petitions fixed before us are seeking review of our judgment dated 13.08.2020.

5. This Court distinguished the principle of res judicata enunciated by this Court in the case of Pir Bukhsh and others v. Chairman Allotment Committee (PLD 1987 SC 145) in paragraphs 10 and 11 of the judgment under review. The contents of paragraphs 10 and 11 of the judgment for convenience sake are reproduced below:-

> 10. Any relief which a litigant seeks in a judicial proceeding with regard to any power or a right or an obligation connected with some property or an office which power or right or obligation is not dependent upon the legitimacy of a legislative enactment and stands or falls on its own strength then in such cases when the decision rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction attains finality, there is no difficulty in applying the principle of res judicata to such a decision. However, it would be difficult to apply such a principle in matters where a power or a right or an obligation solely depends upon the very legitimacy of the enactment that has come under challenge in a Court of law on the touchstone of the Constitution. In such a situation the existence of such power or right or obligation would solely depend on the final adjudication as to the legal validity of the enactment itself. This could be understood from a situation where a controversy as regards constitutional validity of an enactment has come under challenge before two High Courts, one declaring the enactment ultra vires the Constitution and the other intra vires. If the principle of res judicata is applied to the decision of the High Court that declared the law ultra vires as the same was not challenged any further by the Government then two conflicting declarations would stand side by side on the legitimacy of a legislative enactment, one party treating the law valid and the other invalid. This would lead to treating an Act of the parliament valid for some and invalid for others though both the set of persons are similarly placed. If the decision rendered by the High Court that declared the law intra vires the Constitution is only challenged before the Supreme Court and after examining the merits of the case the enactment is declared by this Court to be intra vires the Constitution, then in such peculiar situation when this Court finally validates the legislative enactment then the same has to be applied uniformly to every person falling within its ambit. Such final judicial determination on the legitimacy of a legislative enactment has to be treated as a judgment in rem regardless of the fact that the judgment of the High Court that invalidated the very same enactment was not challenged before this Court. Such a situation warrants departure from the doctrine of res judicata. Omission of a public functionary to file appeal cannot put fetters on the universal application of a legislative enactment declared by this Court to be constitutionally valid as it would amount to repealing the statute for some and treating it valid for others. Hence conflicting decisions on the vires of a legislative enactment of two High Courts, decision of one remains unchallenged in the hierarchy as no appeal was preferred and the other is challenged before this Court, then the verdict of the High Court that went unchallenged, which is in conflict with the final decision. of this Court has to be treated as outmoded and no longer executable.
>
> 11. In the case of Pir Bukhsh and others v. Chairman Allotment Committee (PLD 1987 SC 145), on which much reliance was placed by Mr. Muneer A. Malik, the learned counsel for one of the intervenors, the controversy was with regard to a right of allotment of land which did not depend on the constitutionality of a legislative enactment. In that case, the principle of res judicata clearly applied but this principle, as discussed above, cannot be applied in the same manner to a case where any power or a right or an obligation of a person solely depend upon the legitimacy of a legislative enactment without which such power or right or obligation has no existence of its own. Hence, when the power of the government to charge and the obligation of the persons to pay a tar a fee depends on the determination of vires of a legislative enactment then the final determination of this Court has to be uniformly applied on all those upon whom the law was intended to apply otherwise it would be applied in a discriminatingly manner to a section of persons belonging to one and the same class of persons. The final determination of this Court on the legitimacy of a law has to apply even to those who had succeeded in obtaining a judgment from a Court lower in the hierarchy that the law is ultra vires the Constitution, they too would be bound by the judgment of this Court which being the final Court of the judicature has through a judicial pronouncement declared a legislative enactment to be valid. The power of the Federal Government to charge the Cess and the obligation of the payers to pay under GIDC Act, 2015 would depend upon such final determination by this Court. Such power or obligation arising from an enactment will not cease to exist for the reason that the High Court in some other proceedings has declared the said Act ultra vires the Constitution which remained unchallenged. We in our minds are therefore clear that where there are two conflicting adjudications with regard to the constitutionality of a legislative enactment, standing side by side, then the one that has the binding effect on the other has to become the law of the land on the subject without any distinction whatsoever as an Act of the Parliament in its application cannot be allowed to be regarded as intra vires the Constitution for one set of persons and ultra vires for another at the same time when both belong to the same class of persons. If this is allowed, it would result in discrimination as some would be bound to discharge the obligation arising from the Act of the Parliament thereby putting them in disadvantageous position against those who are discharged from the obligation on the principle of res judicata. Such a position cannot be allowed to be sustained.'

6. The other ground taken in the review petitions is about the non-utilization of the Cess-fee that had been so far collected. This Court dealt with the said question in paragraph 39 of the judgment in review. The findings arrived at were as follows:

39. The background of the legal history of the controversy in question can be traced back to 2011, when the levy under GIDC Act, 2011 was challenged before the Peshawar High Court which in 2013 declared the levy as ultra vires the Constitution and struck down the GIDC Act, 2011. The Islamabad High Court followed the same course in its judgment in 2014. As a result of these decisions, the matter came before this Court in the case which has come to be known as Durrani Ceramics case. This Court in its judgment refused to interfere with the decision rendered by the Peshawar High Court and declared the GIDC Act, 2011 as unconstitutional, holding that the levy in question was in fact a fee and not a tax, hence, it could not have been imposed through a Money Bill. The case came before this Court again in review, which was dismissed in 2015. Later, the Government enacted the GIDC Act, 2015 as a fee imposing enactment. The constitutional validity of the said Act was also challenged before the High Courts. The Sindh High Court declared the levy unconstitutional vide its judgment dated 26.10.2016 whereas the Peshawar High Court upheld the constitutionality of the new Act vide its judgment dated 31.05.2017. While several other similar matters awaited adjudication before other High Courts issue came before this Court for a second time, in which we vide order dated 22.10.2019 allowed the parties concerned to join the present proceedings as intervenors so that they can have a chance to assist us in the present proceedings and get an opportunity to present their version of the case before us. If we look at this matter in retrospect, there has been continuous litigation pertaining to the constitutional validity of the GIDC cess right from 2011 till July 2020 when we are finally deciding the controversy in these proceedings. Apart from continuous litigation on the issue, we were also told that due to international sanctions on Iran, the response to international tender for EPC contract was very poor as no contractor was willing to undertake the project. On TAPI it is stated that land acquisition proceedings is at an advance stage however work on laying of the pipeline could not start in Afghanistan on account of the insurgency in Afghanistan. It is also stated at the bar that now there are signs that work on laying the pipeline in Afghanistan may commence soon as the final draft of TAPI Project Land Management Law is on final review of the Government of Afghanistan. Hence the delay in the commencement of work on laying the pipelines on account of continuous proceedings in the High Courts as well as before this Court and the levy under both the enactments having been struck down as unconstitutional in the year 2013 and 2016, geopolitical situations in the neighboring countries which are beyond the control of the Federal 'Government. This means that the projects have not been deliberately abandoned and there is also no material on record to doubt the intentions of Federal Government in this behalf. The Executive, therefore, cannot be blamed for not laying down the pipelines in question. In such a situation where work has not yet started on the laying of the pipelines and no contract has been awarded it would also be premature to ask for laying any report before the National Assembly.

7. An argument, which was extraneous to the scope of the review, was that the benefits granted under its Section 8(2) of the GIDC Act, 2015 are not being extended by the government. We in our decision have not held that the benefit granted under Section 8(2) ibid, which has been extended to a particular class of the consumers of gas on certain. conditions shall not be extended. When the G1DC Act, 2015 has been declared to be intra vires by this Court then every provision of it, which either creates an obligation or grants any relief is enforceable in law. We may further clarify that to seek the relief granted under Section 8(2) of the GIDC Act, 2015 to a particular class entitled to it under certain conditions the remedy lies elsewhere and not in review.

8. However, before parting with this order, we may add here that the learned Additional Attorney General, has stated that the government is agreeable to recover the arrears in 48 installments instead of 24 installments but, the government may also be granted one year's time instead of six months as provided in paragraph 46 of the judgment in review.

9. Several other grounds were also urged before us but one of the grounds in our considered view call for review, hence we dismiss all the review petitions, All the C.M.As. for joinder are also dismissed.

Sd/- JUDGE

Sd/- JUDGE

Sd/- JUDGE

ORDER OF THE BENCH

By majority of 2:1, all the review petitions are dismissed.

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---I have had the privilege to go through the judgment of my learned brother Mushir Alam, J., with which Faisal Arab, J. has concurred. I, with respect, have not been able to agree with the majority view for the reasons discussed hereunder. As matter of background I had recorded a dissenting view in the judgment under review. While I maintain my view I hear the present review petitions not as a judge carrying a dissenting view but as a member of the Bench that delivered the judgment under review.

Constitution of a Review Bench

2. It may be pertinent to state that initially a three member Bench was constituted to hear these review petitions of which I as a dissenting judge was not a member. Perhaps for the reason that Order XXVI, Rule 8 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980, which requires that the same Bench to hear the review petition, was over-looked. Subsequently, the roster was revised and I was also made a member of the Bench, making it a four member Bench. The four-member Bench sat and unanimously decided to bring that aforesaid provisions of the Rules to the notice of the Hon'ble Chief Justice for re-constitution of the Bench, vide order dated 21.10.2020. The present Bench, which had earlier heard the case and delivered the impugned judgment, was thus constituted. This made me examine the office noting contained in the file. There seems to be lack of clarity regarding the meaning and scope of Order XXVI Rule 8 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980. I, therefore, before going into the merits of the case wish to state the legal position in this regard.

3. Article 188 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") states that the Supreme Court shall have power, subject to the provisions of any Act of Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament) and of any rules made by the Supreme Court, to review any judgment pronounced or any order made by it. The Parliament has not so far passed any Act under this Article; Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980, however, contains the rules that regulate the power of review of the Court. Rule 8 of that Order is relevant to the question under discussion. It is, therefore, reproduced hereunder for ease of reference:

8. As far as practicable the application for review shall be posted before the same Bench that delivered the judgment or order sought to be reviewed.

Rule 8 very clearly and firmly prescribes that the application for review shall, as far as practicable, be posted before the "same Bench" that delivered the judgment or order sought to be reviewed. The expression "same Bench" leaves little room to speculate the constitution of the Bench: the "same Bench" means the same judges, as far as practicable, and the same number of judges, i.e., the same numeric strength of the Bench. There is no ambiguity in this regard, in the said rule. Mian Saqib Nisar, J., in the review1 of Judges' Pension case observed:

1 PLD 2013 SC 1024

There is great wisdom in law, that the review, generally and ordinarily, should be heard by the same Court and the Court in this context is an interchangeable term with the Judge.

4. A seven-Member Full Court Bench of this Court heard the review petition in Zulfikar Ali Bhutto's case.2 The main appeal3 in that case was decided by a majority of four to three Judges. All the Judges comprising majority and minority, both, were on the Bench hearing the review of the majority judgment. While deciding an application4 made for adding two other Judges on the review Bench, Anwarul Haq, C.J., speaking for the Bench, held:

2 PLD 1979 SC 741

3 PLD 1979 SC 53

4 1979 SCMR 427

The position under the Supreme Court Rules is clear and unambiguous. Rule 6 of Order XXVI lays down that "as far as practicable the application for review shall be posted before the same Bench that delivered the judgment or order sought to be reviewed". Now, in the present case, the judgment under review was delivered by seven Judges of this Court, who are all available on the Bench for the disposal of the Review Petition. There is, accordingly, no justification for any departure or deviation from the relevant rule just mentioned.

(Emphasis added)

A question as to the inclusion of the three learned Judges who gave the dissenting judgment, in the Bench hearing the review petition also arose in that case, and it was held that as they were part of "the Bench that delivered the judgment sought to be reviewed" and were "available for the disposal of the review petition", their presence on the Bench was necessary. Muhammad Akram, J., mentioned the said decision of the Bench on this question, in his final order5 made on the review petition, thus:

5 PLD 1979 SC 741

At a subsequent stage a question arose as to the position of the three learned Judges of this Court who had recorded dissenting opinions in regard to the disposal of the petitioner's appeal. Again, relying upon the aforesaid rule 6, we took the view that as they were part of the Bench that delivered the judgment sought to be reviewed, their presence on the Bench was necessary, as they were continuing as Judges of the Supreme Court and were available for the disposal of the review petition.

(Emphasis added)

The notable point in the phrases underlined in the above quoted observations of Anwarul Haq, C.J., and Muhammad Akram, J., are that they both mentioned that the judgment sought to be reviewed was delivered by the Bench comprising seven judges of the Court. They did not consider that judgment as the judgment delivered by only four Judges comprising the majority. These observations of their lordships are in line with the language of Rule 8, which contains the expression "same Bench that delivered the judgment or order sought to be reviewed", and not the majority Members of the Bench who delivered the majority judgment or order sought to be reviewed.

5.

It is well-established practice of this Court that when a case is heard by a Bench of two or more Judges, the case is decided in accordance with the opinion of such Judges or of the majority of such Judges. Judgment or order of the Court is pronounced in terms of the majority opinion; such judgment or order is of the Bench that heard the case and, for that matter, of the Court, and not only of the Judges whose opinion prevailed as a majority opinion. This is why a unanimous opinion of a five-Member Bench on a legal question can be overruled by a majority of four Judges while sitting in a seven-Member Bench. It is the numeric strength of the whole Bench that determines the judicial power of its Members, and not the numbers of the individual Judges in majority. Justice Nariman of the Indian Supreme Court has stated this position in Shanti Fragrances v. Union of India,6 as under:

6 (2018) 11 SCC 305.

> Under the present practice, it is clear that the view of four learned Judges speaking for the majority in a 7 Judge Bench will prevail over a unanimous 5 Judge Bench decision, because they happen to speak for a 7 Judge bench.7

7 He has though expressed his desire to review this principle.

It is also a well-established principle of precedent that judgment of a larger Bench of this Court is binding on the Benches of this Court consisting of Judges less than that larger Bench.8 A smaller Bench cannot request for constitution of a larger Bench to revisit the opinion of a larger Bench on any question or principle of law; only a Bench of co-equal strength can make such request.9 This principle also necessitates that the Judge who dissented from the majority judgment should be Member of the Bench that is to hear the review petition, as a judgment pronounced in terms of the majority opinion of a larger Bench cannot be reviewed by a smaller Bench consisting of only the Judges holding the majority opinion. It is utmost necessary to maintain quorum of the Bench that delivered the judgment under review. It is because of this legal compulsion, that new Members are added to the Bench when any of its earlier Members retires or is not available for any other reason, to maintain the quorum of the Bench for hearing the review petition. Many instances may be cited in this regard: Gadoon Textiles Mills' case10 was decided by a five-Member Bench with three-two majority. The review petitions11 were filed against the majority judgment. The dissenting judges, Justices Saleem Akhtar and Fazal Karim, had retired by the time the review petitions were taken up for hearing; therefore, other Judges were added to the Bench to maintain the quorum of five Members, for hearing the review petitions. Benazir Bhutto case12 was decided by a seven-Member Bench with six-one majority. The review petition13 filed against the majority judgment of six Judges was heard by the Bench of seven Judges, not of six Judges. The quorum of the Bench was, thus, maintained for hearing the review petition. There are many other cases14 of our jurisdiction as well as the Indian jurisdiction wherein the dissenting Judges were part of the Benches that heard the review petitions against the judgments of the Court pronounced in terms of the majority opinion. It can, therefore, be safely concluded that a judge who dissented from the majority judgment, if available, must be Member of the Bench for hearing the review petition filed against that majority judgment.

8 See Muhammad Saleem v. Fazal Ahmad, 1997 SCMR 315; Babar Shehzad v. Said Akbar, 1999 SCMR 2518; All Pakistan Newspapers Society v. Federation, PLD 2004 SC 600; Ata Ullah v. Surraya Parveen, 2006 SCMR 1637; Azhar Siddiqui v. Federation, PLD 2012 SC 774, para 37.

9 See Central Board of Dawoodi Bohra Community v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2005 SC 752

10 Gadoon Textiles Mills v. WAPDA, 1997 SCMR 641.

11 Gandaf Steel Industries v. Federation, 1997 SCMR 1669.

12 Benazir Bhutto v. President of Pakistan, PLD 1998 SC 388.

13 Benazir Bhutto v. President of Pakistan, PLD 2000 SC 77.

14 See Nawaz Sharif v. Imran Khan, PLD 2018 SC 1 (Justices Asif Saeed Khosa and Gulzar Ahmed, the dissenting Judges, were on the Bench); Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 877 (Justice Tulzapurkar, the dissenting Judge, was on the Bench that admitted the review for hearing); Shyam Lal Sharma v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 1137 (Justice Thakkar, the dissenting Judge, was on the Bench to which the review petition was presented for decision by circulation.

6. So far as the scope of jurisdiction and judicial power of such Judge in hearing the review petition against the majority judgment is concerned, there is nothing in the Constitution or the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 that limits his jurisdiction and judicial power in a review in comparison with the Judges who delivered a majority judgment. He is a Member of the Bench with same jurisdiction and power like the other Members of that Bench. As afore-explained, the judgment pronounced or order made in terms of the majority opinion is the judgment or order of the Bench, and not of the Judges holding the majority opinion.

7. Rule 1 of Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 provides that subject to the law and the practice of the Court, the Court may review its judgment or order in a Civil proceeding on grounds similar to those mentioned in Order XLVII, Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 and in a criminal proceeding on the ground of an error apparent on the face of the record. As per Order XLVII, Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within knowledge of the applicant or could not be produced by him at the time when the judgment was pronounced or order made, some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, and any other sufficient reason are the grounds for review of a judgment or order made in a civil proceeding. These grounds of review which are, in fact, limitations on the power of review of this Court applies equally to the Judges whose opinion prevails for being the majority view and to the Judge whose opinion remains inoperative for being the minority view. The Judge whose opinion remained the minority view in the main case can review the Judgment of the Bench that was pronounced in terms of the majority opinion, on any of the said grounds of review, as can a Judge who delivered the majority opinion.

8. In Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto review case,15 review petition was dismissed unanimously by all the seven Judges who were divided into four-three in the judgment pronounced in the main appeal case.16 Muhammad Akram, J. speaking for the majority dismissed the review petition with the observations that "the errors and omissions pointed out by [the petitioner's counsel]... have been found by us to be of inconsequential import, having no material bearing upon the fundamental and essential conclusions reached in the majority Judgment as to the guilt of the petitioner, on the various counts on which his convictions have been upheld, as well on the question of sentence." And Dorab Patel, J. speaking for the minority also held that the review petition had to be dismissed and further agreed with the view of Akram, J. that the question of sentence could not be raised in a review petition, and if they were to alter the sentence in this review, they would be unsettling the settled law. Similar is the legal position in Indian jurisdiction: In the case of Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar,17 Justice Tulzapurkar, the Judge who earlier dissented with the majority judgment, was on the review-Bench, and admitted the review against the majority judgment for hearing, along-with two other Judges, i.e., one Judge who was earlier party to the majority judgment and the other judge added due to non-availability of a Judge18 in majority. Tulsiram case[19] was decided by a five-Judge Bench of the Indian Supreme Court with four-one majority. Justice Thakkar delivered the dissenting opinion. The review petitions[20] filed against the majority judgment were dismissed in limine by the four Judges, but Justice Thakkar held that the issues raised in the review petitions needed examination and the Review Petitions deserved to be admitted for hearing.

15 PLD 1979 SC 741

16 PLD 1979 SC 53

17 AIR 1987 SC 877

18 Justice Baharul Islam, who was by that time had resigned.

19 Union of India v. Tulsiram Patel, AIR 1985 SC 1416

20 Shyam Lal Sharma v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 1137

9.

A judgment of the Federal Court of Malaysia delivered in the case of Terengganu Forest Products v. Cosco Container Lines[21] may also be referred to on this point. The Federal Court, in that case, did not accept the argument that a judge who dissents at leave granting stage should not sit on the Bench hearing appeal, with the reason that the issues, considerations and arguments at the leave stage are different from that of the appeal hearing stage. Likewise, the considerations and grounds at the hearing of the review petition are different from that of the original hearing of the case; therefore, the judge who dissented at the original hearing of the case can sit on the review-Bench, and examine the considerations and grounds of review while hearing the review petition. There is another aspect of the matter to look at, i.e., when a Member newly added in the review Bench due to non-availability of an earlier Member, who was not earlier even part of the Bench, can make review of judgment, then how can any restriction or limitation be imposed on the jurisdiction and judicial power of review of the Member who earlier dissented. There are several instances when Members newly added on the Bench had recalled or reversed the original judgment or order in review jurisdiction despite contrary view of the Member who had earlier authored the judgment of the Court.[22] It can, therefore, be said with certainty that the jurisdiction and judicial power of the Judge who earlier dissented from the majority judgment of the Bench is similar and co-extensive with that of those Judges whose opinion became the majority judgment of the Bench, in hearing the review petition against that majority judgment.

21 [2011] 1 MLJ 25.

22 See Aamer Zaman v. Omar Ayub, 2015 SCMR 890 reviewed in 2015 SCMR 1303

Grounds of Review

10. A number of grounds highlighting errors apparent on the face of the record were agitated seeking review of the impugned judgment. It was argued: (i) that the principle of co-relation between the collection and expenditure of the amount of Cess as settled in the judgment under review was applied to stop further recovery of Cess, but it was not extended to restrain the collection of arrears of Cess, inspite of the fact that no developmental expenditure has taken place since 2011 and the Government has already collected Cess in excess of what is required for the foreseeable Projects; (ii) that the Court ordered that in case no work is carried out on North-South Gas Pipeline within six months, the Gas Infrastructure Development Cess Act, 2015 ("GIDC Act") would become permanently in-operational and considered dead for all intents and purposes, but has not made any order regarding return of the Cess collected to their payers or how and for what purpose the Cess collected would then be expended; (iii) that the decision of the Sindh High Court in 377 suits declaring the GIDC Act to be ultra vires the Constitution, being res judicata, has attained finality between the parties to those suits as it went unchallenged by the Federal Government, hence arrears, as well as, recovery of Cess in future could not be demanded of the petitioners who are decree holders in those suits. It was urged that the view expressed by a four-member Bench of this Court in Pir Bakhsh[23] was not fully appreciated; (iv) that the Second Schedule of the Act giving different maximum rates of Cess for different sectors is discriminatory as it lacks reasonable classification, giving no intelligible differentia that has any rational nexus with the object sought to be achieved by the statute in question; (v) that while interpreting Entry 51 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List the impugned judgment has disagreed with, rather overruled, the interpretation made in Durrani Ceramics. It was urged that this point was never pleaded before the Court by the parties and no arguments were heard on the point besides this Bench being of co-equal strength could not have so done as per the settled principles of precedent; (vi) that the GIDC Act does not fall within the scope of Entry No.27 of Part-I of the Federal Legislative List. It was submitted that the petitioners were not heard on this point before holding the said Entry applicable to the GIDC Act; (vii) that the petitioners have been wrongly deprived of the benefit of the first proviso to Section 8(2) of the GIDC Act by making order of recovering arrears of the Cess that are exempted under that proviso; and (viii) that the statement made in the impugned judgment that the Cess collected may form part of the Federal Consolidated Fund is not consistent with the Constitutional provisions.

23 PLD 1987 SC 145

11. My learned brothers have dealt with only two grounds: one, relating to res judicata and the other, regarding proviso to Section 8(2) of the GIDC Act. They have disposed of other grounds with the observation that "Several other grounds also urged before us but none of the grounds in our considered view call for review". I, thus, do not have the advantage to see the reasons that prevailed with their lordships in rejecting those grounds. My learned brothers have clarified that the impugned judgment has not held that "the benefit granted under Section 8(2) ibid, which has been extended to a particular class of the consumers of gas on certain conditions shall not be extended." I respectfully agree with this clarification. However, on the ground of res judicata I have a different view that I shall explain later herein.

Co-relation of collection and expenditure of Cess.

12. I now advert to the question whether there is any visible co-relation between the collection of Cess and expenditure therefrom. The impugned judgment held:

> 20. ..The other kind of a fee-levying legislation is where Cess is imposed as a compulsory exaction in the same manner where taxes are imposed with the distinction that it is imposed for achieving a specific purpose promised in the enactment itself which when realized would bring some advantage or benefit for the payers in future. It can be described as 'purpose specific' and in many judicial pronouncements have been termed as 'Cess-fee'. In such a form of levy, the specified purpose is pre-committed to the payers before the revenue is collected under the legislation. To quote a few examples, Cess is imposed to meet the extraordinary costs involved in providing infrastructure such as construction of dams or for importing oil or gas from abroad through pipelines or to build farm to mill roads in order to facilitate marketing of the agricultural produce or for conducting research and development in some specialized field. In such a form of levy the rule of quid pro quo does not exist in the same sense as it exists in a case where an existing service is rendered or a privilege is extended directly to the payer for a fee. What needs to be taken into consideration is whether the enactment has promised some benefit or advantage for the payers to be made available in future by utilizing the revenue, making it more akin to a fee then a pure revenue raising measure like taxes in general are imposed with no precondition attached for their spending.
>
> 25. When Cess as a fee is levied to meet an earmarked financial exigency spelt out in an enactment, it preserves the levy for such purpose only even with the change in the government setup. It cannot be levied as a general revenue collecting tool and the government would not be justified to collect it if the funds are diverted to some other expenditure .. The proceeds of Cess should be clearly identifiable in the accounts by using separate accounting codes so that its collection and utilization is reconcilable with the purposes stated in the enactment. A correlation between the revenue collected and the expenditure incurred for the promised specific purpose should always be maintained. In this manner the earmarked levy also provides information on the amount collected and spent. This also inculcates confidence in the payers as it contains the promise that the revenue would be utilized for the specific purpose only for which it was collected and they would have a claim to transparency and accountability of the utilization of the revenue so collected. They can claim that the revenue cannot be utilized for any other purpose other than for which they have been charged. When the revenue can only be utilized for the purpose promised in the fee-levying enactment then in that sense the levy could also be regarded as a temporary levy. Once the purpose for which it was imposed stands served, the justification for its imposition also comes to an end. The collection of Cess therefore should be based on some calculation keeping in view the funding requirements and as and when the purpose is achieved, the government loses it right to collect Cess regardless of the fact that the enactment continues to remain in force.

The principle settled by this Court was that there must exist a visible co-relation between the collection of Cess and its expenditure. In a case where the fee is to be utilized for service that is to be rendered in future, it is important to see how the moneys collected are being expended and whether there is a transparent and confidence inspiring co-relation between the two. The other principle settled was that the amount of Cess so collected is for a specified purpose and must be accounted for accordingly. It is not the collection of general revenue which can be utilized anywhere. Relying on these principles settled in the impugned judgment, further collection of Cess was stopped in the following manner:

42 However, keeping in view the ground realities discussed in the preceding paragraph and the fact that around 295 billion rupees have already been collected towards Cess-revenue and together with the outstanding amount the total sum by the end of this month would be in the vicinity of seven hundred billion rupees, which is more than what is the estimated cost of the projects mentioned in Section 4 of the GIDC Act, 2015, we are constraint to issue following directions: -

(i) From the date of this judgment, we restrain the Federal Government from charging Cess which power of the Federal Government shall remain suspended until the Cess-revenue collected and that which is accrued so far but not yet collected is expanded on the projects listed in Section 4 of the GIDC Act, 2015.

According to the figures given by the Government the Cess collected as on 30.06.2019 was as under:

TOTAL COLLECTION OF GIDC

| Levy and Collection of GIDC | | | | Rs. In Million |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Sr.# | Sector | GIDC Accrued | GIDC Collected | GIDC Outstanding |
| 1 | Fertilizer Feed (old) | 192,240.31 | 111,814.62 | 80,425.69 |
| 2 | Fertilizer Feed (New) | 68,281.71 | 1,142.89 | 67,138.82 |
| 3 | Fertilizer Fuel | 31,772.12 | 15,205.66 | 16,566.46 |
| 4 | General Industry | 70,729.64 | 24,402.27 | 46,327.37 |
| 5 | IPPs | 60,845.19 | 51,713.50 | 9,131.69 |
| 6 | KESC | 40,421.05 | 3,912.18 | 36,508.87 |
| 7 | GENCO/WAPDA | 67,317.33 | 44,753.78 | 22,563.55 |
| 8 | Captive Power | 119,247.65 | 17,522.73 | 101,724.92 |
| 9 | CNG Region-I | 53,420.68 | 11,765.63 | 41,655.05 |
| 10 | CNG Region-II | 48,073.10 | 13,169.51 | 34,903.59 |
| | Grand Total | 752,348.78 | 295,402.77 | 456,946.01 |

TOTAL EXPENDITURE OF GIDC

| Project | Iran Pakistan (IP) Gas Pipeline Project | TAPI Pipeline Project | North South Gas Pipeline Project | Underground Gas Storages | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| All amounts in PKR | | | | | |
| Estimated Project Cost | 271 billion | 1,500 billion | 405 billion | 75 billion | 2,251 billion |

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Pakistan share | 271 billion | 31.353 billion | 20.25 billion | 75 billion | 397.6 billion |
| Development Phase expenditure already incurred funded through GIDC (received todate) | Nil | 0.483 billion | Nil | Nil | 0.483 billion |
| Development Phase expenditure- already incurred funded by GHPL | 3.3 billion | 0.756 billion | 0.135 billion | 0.040 billion | 4.2 billion |
| Total development and construction cost- to be funded through GIDC | 271 billion | 30.513 billion | 20.250 billion | 75 billion | 396.7 billion |

| | |
|---|---|
| TOTAL AMOUNT COLLECTED | Rs.295.403 |
| Expenditure required for (1) TAPI + | |
| North South Gas Pipeline (2) +Underground Gas Storage (3) | Rs. 125.763 |
| Balance after deducting (1 + 2 + 3) | Rs. 169.643 |
| Required for Iran Pak | |
| (IP) Gas Pipeline | Rs.271.000 |
| Balance available for IP | Rs. 169.643 |
| Excess- required if at all | |
| IP proceeds | Rs.101.357 |
| Collection Ordered | Rs.456.946 |
| Excess | Rs.355.589 |

The above working shows that the Government already has Rs. 101.357 in excess after factoring in the expenditure to be incurred on TAPI Gas Pipeline, North South Gas Pipeline and Underground Gas Storages unless the Iran Pak (IP) Project is put into motion. The co-relation between the collection and the expenditure stands completely frozen since 2011 raising fingers on the credibility and transparency of the Projects and on the availability of service (supply of natural gas) against the fee charged, in the near future. The direction for further collection of arrears in the sum of Rs. 456.946 billion leading to an excess of Rs. 355.589 billion unduly promotes unjust enrichment and seriously offends the right to property and business of the petitioners guaranteed under the Constitution. The status of the Projects submitted before this Court during the hearing of these review petitions reveals that the Government plans to start the North South Gas Pipeline (NSGP) Project only. This Project will not generate natural gas but is a support infrastructural Project and will not redress the shortage of natural gas in the country. The Government without any further collection of fresh amount of Cess or the arrears has an excess amount in the sum of Rs.101 billion including the expenditure for TAPI which has not even begun as yet. The impugned judgment though stops further collection of Cess on the principle that there has been no expenditure and no development on the Projects mentioned in the Act yet at the same time allows recovery of arrears in the sum of Rs. 456.946 billion. Reference is made to Chapter 14 on "Energy" in the Pakistan Economic Survey 2019-2020 which states:

Pakistan is successfully overcoming energy crisis, which has direct and indirect impact on all sectors of the economy. Presently, Energy Sector is confronted with demand supply gap....in terms of energy-mix, Pakistan's reliance on thermal which includes imported coal, local coal and RLNG and natural gas has been decreasing over the last few years. Pakistan's dependence on natural gas in the overall energy mix is on decline and the reduction of its share in the energy mix may be attributed to declining natural gas reserves as well as to the introduction of LNG since 2015.

Gas Sector

Natural Gas is a clean, safe, efficient and environment friendly fuel. Its indigenous supplies contribute about 38 percent in total primary energy supply mix of the country. Pakistan produces around four (4) Billion Cubic Feet Per Day (Bcfd) of indigenous natural gas against an unconstrained demand of over six (6) Bcfd. To meet the shortfall, the GoP has initiated the import of LNG. (emphasis supplied)

Pakistan Economic Survey is silent regarding these Projects since 2015 and shows that the shortfall in natural gas is being successfully plugged through the import of LNG, which surprisingly, is not a GIDC funded Project. The above documents show that after a decade of charging GIDC from gas consumers and after having collected Rs 295.40 billion to-date there is no sign of development of the gas pipeline projects in Pakistan. Absence of the said projects and emphasis on the import of LNG in the latest Pakistan Economic Survey hazards a guess that the Government of Pakistan is either not willing to or is unable to complete these projects and therefore the shortfall in gas supply is being increasingly plugged through LNG imported from Qatar. There is a huge disconnect between the principle settled by the Court and its application leading to a material omission in assessing the correct ground and factual reality. The direction to recover arrears is, therefore, against the principle settled by this Court and is not justified and legally sustainable and is liable to be recalled.

Deposit of Cess (GIDC) in the Federal Consolidated Fund

13. The other principle established in the impugned judgment was:

25 .It cannot be levied as a general revenue collecting tool and the government would not be justified to collect it if the funds are diverted to some other expenditure . The proceeds of Cess should be clearly identifiable in the accounts by using separate accounting codes so that its collection and utilization is reconcilable with the purposes stated in the enactment. A correlation between the revenue collected and the expenditure incurred for the promised specific purpose should always be maintained.

38...it matters not if the revenue so collected forms part of the Federal Consolidated Fund as it is the mandate of Article 78 of the Constitution itself that all revenues of the Federal Government has to be made part of Federal Consolidated Fund.

The learned DAG was asked time and again during the hearing to provide the statement of GIDC account within the Federal Consolidated Fund but he failed to furnish the statement of account and instead furnished a general statement showing the amount so far collected to be Rs. 307.23 billion as on 30.07.2020. Initial reluctance and then the failure on the part of the Federal Government to place on record the statement of the account of GIDC gives rise to an adverse inference against the Federal Government under Article 129(g) of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984. It shows that the collected amount of Rs. 307.23 billion is not physically present in the account and has already been expended elsewhere. This offends the principle settled by the Court. Additionally, it is also highlighted that even today the amount of GIDC has been shown as a Tax Revenue in the Annual Budget Statements for the years 2019-2020 and 2020-2021 as under:

FEDERAL BUDGET 2019-2020

ANNUAL BUDGET STATEMENT

REVENUE RECEIPTS

Tax Revenue

(Rs. in million)

| Object Code | Description | Budget Estimates 2018-19 | Revised Estimates 2018-19 | Budget Estimates 2019-20 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| B. | Tax Revenue | | | |
| | a. FBR Taxes (i+ii) | 4,435,000 | 4,150,000 | 5,555,000 |
| B01 | I. Direct Taxes | 1,735,000 | 1,659,000 | 2,081,945 |
| B011 | Taxes on Income | 1,709,939 | 1,651,584 | 2,073,000 |
| B0 15 | Worker's Welfare Fund | 18,636 | 4,186 | 5,050 |
| B0 17-18 | Capital Value Tax (CVT) | 6,425 | 3,230 | 3,895 |
| B02 | ii. Indirect Taxes | 2,700,000 | 2,491,000 | 3,473,055 |
| B020-22 | Customs Duties | 735,000 | 735,000 | 1,000,500 |
| B023 | Sales Tax | 1,700,000 | 1,490,000 | 2,107,738 |
| B024-25 | Federal Excise | 265,000 | 266,000 | 364,817 |
| b. Other Taxes | | 453,645 | 243,876 | 267,160 |
| B026-30 | Other Indirect Taxes | 37,555 | 7,492 | 11,100 |
| B03064 | Airport Tax | 90 | 30 | 35 |
| B03083 | Gas Infrastructure Development Cess | 100,000 | 25,000 | 30,000 |
| B03084 | Natural Gas Develop-ment Surcharge | 16,000 | 8,000 | 10,000 |
| B03085 | Petroleum Levy | 300,000 | 203,354 | 216,025 |
| Total Tax Revenue (a+b) | | 4,888,645 | 4,393,876 | 5,822,160 |

FEDERAL BUDGET 2019-2020

ANNUAL BUDGET STATEMENT

REVENUE RECEIPTS

Tax Revenue

(Rs in million)

| Object Code | Description | Budges Estimates 2018-19 | Revised Estimates 2018-19 | Budges Estimates 2019-20 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| B. | Tax Revenue | | | |
| | a. FBR Taxes (i+ii) | 4,435,000 | 4,150,000 | 5,555,000 |
| B01 | i. Direct Taxes | 1,735,000 | 1,659,000 | 2,081,945 |
| B011 | Taxes on Income | 1,709,939 | 1,651,584 | 2,073,000 |
| B0 15 | Worker's Welfare Fund | 18,636 | 4,186 | 5,050 |
| B0 17-18 | Capital Value Tax (CVT) | 6,425 | 3,230 | 3,895 |
| B02 | ii. Indirect Taxes | 2,700,000 | 2,491,000 | 3,473,055 |
| B020-22 | Customs Duties | 735,000 | 735,000 | 1,000,500 |
| B023 | Sales Tax | 1,700,000 | 1,490,000 | 2,107,738 |
| B024-25 | Federal Excise | 265,000 | 266,000 | 364,817 |
| b. Other Taxes | | 453,645 | 243,876 | 267,160 |
| B026-30 | Other Indirect Taxes | 37,555 | 7,492 | 11,100 |
| B03064 | Airport Tax | 90 | 30 | 35 |
| B03083 | Gas Infrastructure Development Cess | 100,000 | 25,000 | 30,000 |
| B03084 | Natural Gas Development Surcharge | 16,000 | 8,000 | 10,000 |
| B03085 | Petroleum Levy | 300,000 | 203,354 | 216,025 |
| Total Tax Revenue (a+b) | | 4,888,645 | 4,393,876 | 5,822,160 |

14. The above Annual Budget Statements for the year 2019-2020 and 2020-2021 show the said collection under the head "other tax revenue" as a part of Federal Consolidated Fund. Provinces are paid their respective shares under the National Finance Commission Award24 from the Federal Consolidated Fund, and the possibility of the amount of GIDC being distributed amongst the Provinces cannot be ruled out. This Court, in the impugned judgment, held that "it matters not if the revenue so collected forms part of the Federal Consolidated Fund as it is the mandate of Article 78 of the Constitution itself that all revenues of the Federal Government has to made part of Federal Consolidated Fund."25 The Court in the impugned judgment ordered that "in case no work is carried out on North-South Gas Pipeline within the prescribed time and for laying any of the two other major pipelines (IP and TAPI) though the political conditions become conducive, the purpose of levying Cess shall be deemed to have been frustrated and the GIDC Act, 2015 would become permanently in-operational and considered dead for all intents and purposes." In that eventuality, the amount of Fee already collected under the GIDC Act will have to be refunded to the payers of fee. It would not be possible for the Federal Government to refund the same, if the amount of GIDC is made part of the Federal Consolidated Fund and shown as an amount available for general expenditures of the Government in the Annual Budget Statement.

24 Prescribed Share of all Provinces under the Distribution of Revenues and Grants-in-Aids Order, 2010

25 Para 38 of Impugned Judgment (Majority View)

15. Article 78(1) of the Constitution provides that all revenues received by the Federal Government, all loans raised by that Government, and all moneys received by it in repayment of loans shall form part of consolidated fund, to be known as the Federal Consolidated Fund. While all other moneys received by or on behalf of the Federal Government, or received by or deposited with the Supreme Court or any other court established under the authority of the Federation are to be credited to the Public Account of the Federation as per Article 78(2) of the Constitution. The expression "all revenues" used in Article 78(1) covers the revenues (taxes, duties, etc.) raised for Governmental purposes, and does not include the revenue that cannot be used for any Governmental purpose, like the compensatory fee collected for rendering any service to the payers of that fee. Such compensatory fee falls within the expression "all other moneys" used in Article 78(2) and is to be credited to the Public Account, and not to the Federal Consolidated Fund. This view is supported by Ratilal Gandhi v. State of Bombay,26 wherein the provisions of Article 266 of the Indian Constitution that are similar to that of Article 78 were interpreted in the following manner:

26 AIR 1953 Bom 242.

> It is only taxes raised and revenues raised for Governmental purposes that form part of this fund. But when moneys are received as a result of fees imposed for a specific purpose and when the fund collected is earmarked and set apart, such a fund does not form part [of the Consolidated Fund contemplated under Article 266 of the Indian Constitution].

The Cess amount collected under the GIDC Act is to be credited in the Public Account with an entity distinct from the other revenues credited to it, and must be earmarked for utilization for the purposes specified in the GIDC Act only. No disbursement can be made from the Cess amount for general governmental expenditures or any other purpose. The Court was not assisted on this point at the time of the hearing of the main case, and made the observations regarding deposit of the Cess amount in the Federal Consolidated Fund in the impugned judgment without appreciating the difference between the Federal Consolidated Fund and the Public Account under Article 78 of the Constitution. The said observations are, therefore, liable to be recalled in review. Further it is clarified that in case the GIDC Act becomes in-operational on failure of the Federal Government to take steps to commence work on the laying of the North South Gas Pipeline within six months, the amount of the Cess collected are liable to be returned and refunded to the payers.

Discrimination

16. The Act provides for the following maximum rates of cess for different Sectors:

SECOND SCHEDULE OF THE ACT

| S.No. | Sector | Maximum Rate of Cess (Rs./MMBTU) |
|---|---|---|
| (1) | (2) | (3) |
| | Fertilizer-Feed (Old) | 300.00 |
| | Fertilizer-Feed (New) | 300.00 |
| | Fertilizer-Fuel | 150.00 |
| | Captive Power | 200.00 |
| | Industry | 100.00 |
| | KESC/GENCO | 100.00 |
| | IPPs | 100.00 |

On the question of discrimination, the impugned judgment, with respect, did not consider the rationale behind fixing different rates within different sectors but instead discussed the question of discrimination between the industrial/commercial consumers and the domestic consumers, which was not the question agitated by the petitioners. There appears to be no intelligible differentia amongst the different Industrial and Commercial gas consumers mentioned in the Schedule for the purposes of the GIDC Act. The upper limit of GIDC for the Industry, KESC/GENCO and IPPs has been fixed as Rs.100 per MMBTU, while remaining categories of gas consumers have been allowed to be charged at the rate higher than that. This discrimination, with respect, was overlooked in the impugned judgment, and thus provides a valid ground to review it. As per Article 25 of the Constitution which ensure equality and equal treatment among equals, the Federal Government cannot charge the Cess at the rate more than Rs. 100 per MMBTU from any category of gas consumers.

Principle of Res-Judicata

17. On the ground of res judicata, the petitioners vehemently relied upon Pir Bukhsh. My learned brothers have distinguished that case in the impugned judgment by highlighting the difference of facts of that case and the facts of the present case, and have repelled the ground of review by quoting the observations made in paras 10 and 11 by them in the impugned judgment. I am afraid if this is the correct approach to distinguish a principle of law declared by a larger Bench of this Court, which is binding on this Bench. Pir Bukhsh was decided by a four-member Bench of this Court in 1987 almost 33 years ago and still holds the field. The Court, in that case, elaborately discussed and expounded the doctrine of res judicata and its application between the parties both on questions of law and fact. The Court, in that case, approvingly referred to a judgment of Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court delivered in Tarini Charan27 wherein it was held:

27 Tarini Charan v. Kedar Nuth (A I R 1928 Cal. 777)

To say ... that the previous decision was wrong and that it was wrong on a point of fact, or on a pure point of law, and that therefore, it may be disregarded, is an indefensible form of reasoning. For this purpose, it is not true that a point of law is always open to a party.

Finally, this Court in Pir Bakhsh came to the conclusion that in a controversy raising a dispute inter parties, the matter adjudged is conclusive as between the parties both on question of fact and question of law. However, an exception to this principle declared by a larger Bench was created in the judgment under review by holding that it would be difficult to apply such a principle in matters where a power or a right or an obligation solely depends upon the very legitimacy of the enactment that has come under challenge in a Court of law on the touchstone of the Constitution. It was, with respect, not appropriate for a three-member Bench to deviate from principle of res judicata laid down by an earlier four-member Bench. This Bench had two options: first, to follow the law declared by that Bench; or second, to refer the matter to a four-member Bench to decide whether that opinion should be reconsidered by a larger Bench. As the majority did not opt for the second option, the principle of res judicata as settled in Pir Bukhsh is fully applicable to the decree holders in the suit decided by the Sindh High Court.

Interpretation of Entry No. 51 of Part 1 of the Federal Legislative List

18.

The Court, in the impugned judgment while interpreting Entry No.51 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List contained in the Fourth Schedule to the Constitution took a view28 contrary to that of Bench of co-equal strength expressed in Durrani Ceramics29 by stating that "the National Assembly was fully competent to impose tax on natural gas through a Money Bill on the strength of Entry No.51 of the Federal Legislative List." This finding, it is submitted with respect, is against settled principles of the law of precedent30 and needs to be recalled.

28 In Durrani Ceramics case all items contained in Entry No.51 were read conjunctively, meaning thereby that Federal Government can levy tax on natural gas and mineral oil only if these sources of energy can be used to generate nuclear energy. It appears that no proper assistance on scientific lines was rendered by the law officers to this Court during the hearing of the

Durrani Ceramics case hence the scientific fact that it was not possible to generate nuclear energy from mineral oil and natural gas, as these sources cannot be used as nuclear fuel was not taken into consideration. (Para 41 of the judgment under review)

29 Federation of Pakistan through Secretary Petroleum and Natural Resources v. Durrani Ceramic (2014 SCMR 1630 : PLD 2015 SC 354: 2014 PTD 2016)

30 The Province of East Pakistan v. Dr. Azizul Islam, PLD 1963 SC 296; the Province of East Pakistan v. Abdul Basher Cohwdhury, PLD 1966 SC 854; Multiline Associates v. Ardeshir Choasjee, PLD 1995 SC 423; Ardeshir Cowasjee v. Karachi Building Control Authority, 1999 SCMR 2883; Gulshan Ara v. The State, 2010 SCMR 1162; Zahid Rehman v. The State PLD 2015 Supreme Court 77; Messrs WAK Limited Multan Road v. Collector Central Excise and Sales Tax, 2018 SCMR 1474; Shafqat @ Shafaat v. The State PLD 2019 Supreme Court 43;

Entry No.27 of Part-I of the Federal Legislative List

19. The Federation had defended its authority to legislate the GIDC Act on the basis of Entry No. 2 read with Entry No. 15 of Part II of the Federal Legislative List in the present case, and on Entry No. 51 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List in Durrani Ceramics. It was never the case of the Federation that it has competence to legislate a law relating to tax or fee on natural gas on the basis of Entry No. 27 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List. Entry No.27 reads as follows: "Import and export across customs frontiers as defined by the Federal Government, inter-provincial trade and commerce, trade and commerce with foreign countries; standard of quality of goods to be exported out of Pakistan." This entry clearly relates to trade with foreign countries (import and export), and inter-provincial trade and commerce, and in no way covers the subject of "natural gas". The GIDC Act has not taxed or charged fee on the foreign or inter-provincial trade and commerce. It has charged fee on use of natural gas. Entry No.27, in no terms, justify the legislative power of the Federation to enact the GIDC Act. The parties were not heard on this point at the time of original hearing of the case; this point, therefore, escaped notice of the Bench, and this error appears to be apparent of the face of the record and is liable to be recalled.

20. In view of the above errors that have been found apparent on the face of the record, the review petitions are allowed in the following terms:

(i) The benefit available under the provisos to section 8(2) of the GIDC Act shall not be affected by the judgment under review.

(ii) The direction to recover arrears of Cess is recalled.

(iii) In case the GIDC Act becomes in-operational on failure of the Federal Government to take steps to commence work on the laying of the North South Gas Pipeline within six months, the amount of the Cess collected shall be returned and refunded to the payers.

(iv) The principle of res judicata as settled in Pir Bukhsh, is fully applicable to the decree holders in the suits decided by the Sindh High Court.

(v) The Federal Government shall not charge the Cess at the rate more than Rs. 100 per MMBTU from any category of gas consumers in view of Article 25 of the Constitution.

(vi) The observation that "it matters not if the revenue so collected forms part of the Federal Consolidated Fund" is recalled and the amount of GIDC is to credited to the Public Account under Article 78(2) of the Constitution while maintaining a separate statement of account.

(vii) The finding on Entry No. 27 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List is recalled. The GIDC Act falls under Entry No. 2 read with Entry No. 15 of Part II of the Federal Legislative List.

(viii) The observations as to the interpretation of Entry No. 51 of Part I of the Federal Legislative List in the judgment under review being contrary to the judgment of co-equal Bench in Durrani Ceramics are recalled.

MWA/C-23/SC Order accordingly.

***

[1] PLD 2013 SC 1024

[2] PLD 1979 SC 741

[3] PLD 1979 SC 53

[4] 1979 SCMR 427

[5] PLD 1979 SC 741

[6] (2018) 11 SCC 305.

[7] He has though expressed his desire to review this principle.

[8] See Muhammad Saleem v. Fazal Ahmad, 1997 SCMR 315; Babar Shehzad v. Said Akbar, 1999 SCMR 2518; All Pakistan Newspapers Society v. Federation, PLD 2004 SC 600; Ata Ullah v. Surraya Parveen, 2006 SCMR 1637; Azhar Siddiqui v. Federation, PLD 2012 SC 774, para 37.

[9] See Central Board of Dawoodi Bohra Community v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2005 SC 752

[10] Gadoon Textiles Mills v. WAPDA, 1997 SCMR 641.

[11] Gandaf Steel Industries v. Federation, 1997 SCMR 1669.

[12] Benazir Bhutto v. President of Pakistan, PLD 1998 SC 388.

[13] Benazir Bhutto v. President of Pakistan, PLD 2000 SC 77.

[14] See Nawaz Sharif v. Imran Khan, PLD 2018 SC 1 (Justices Asif Saeed Khosa and Gulzar Ahmed, the dissenting Judges, were on the Bench); Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 877 (Justice Tulzapurkar, the dissenting Judge, was on the Bench that admitted the review for hearing); Shyam Lal Sharma v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 1137 (Justice Thakkar, the dissenting Judge, was on the Bench to which the review petition was presented for decision by circulation.

[15] PLD 1979 SC 741

[16] PLD 1979 SC 53

[17] AIR 1987 SC 877

[18] Justice Baharul Islam, who was by that time had resigned.

[19] Union of India v. Tulsiram Patel, AIR 1985 SC 1416

[20] Shyam Lal Sharma v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 1137

[21] [2011] 1 MLJ 25.

[22] See Aamer Zaman v. Omar Ayub, 2015 SCMR 890 reviewed in 2015 SCMR 1303

[23] PLD 1987 SC 145

[24] Prescribed Share of all Provinces under the Distribution of Revenues and Grants-in-Aids Order, 2010

[25] Para 38 of Impugned Judgment (Majority View)

[26] AIR 1953 Bom 242.

[27] Tarini Charan v. Kedar Nuth (A I R 1928 Cal. 777)

[28] In Durrani Ceramics case all items contained in Entry No.51 were read conjunctively, meaning thereby that Federal Government can levy tax on natural gas and mineral oil only if these sources of energy can be used to generate nuclear energy. It appears that no proper assistance on scientific lines was rendered by the law officers to this Court during the hearing of the Durrani Ceramics case hence the scientific fact that it was not possible to generate nuclear energy from mineral oil and natural gas, as these sources cannot be used as nuclear fuel was not taken into consideration. (Para 41 of the judgment under review)

[29] Federation of Pakistan through Secretary Petroleum and Natural Resources v. Durrani Ceramic (2014 SCMR 1630 : PLD 2015 SC 354: 2014 PTD 2016)

[30] The Province of East Pakistan v. Dr. Azizul Islam, PLD 1963 SC 296; the Province of East Pakistan v. Abdul Basher Cohwdhury, PLD 1966 SC 854; Multiline Associates v. Ardeshir Choasjee, PLD 1995 SC 423; Ardeshir Cowasjee v. Karachi Building Control Authority, 1999 SCMR 2883; Gulshan Ara v. The State, 2010 SCMR 1162; Zahid Rehman v. The State PLD 2015 Supreme Court 77; Messrs WAK Limited Multan Road v. Collector Central Excise and Sales Tax, 2018 SCMR 1474; Shafqat @ Shafaat v. The State PLD 2019 Supreme Court 43;

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 362

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

ALI HAIDER alias PAPU---Petitioner

Versus

JAMEEL HUSSAIN and others---Respondents

Criminal Petition No. 513 of 2020, decided on 7th January, 2021.

(Against the judgment of Lahore High Court, Multan Bench, dated 11.02.2020, passed in Criminal Appeal No. 436 of 2017 and Capital Sentence Reference No.61 of 2017).

(a) Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984)---

----Art. 164---Importance of modern forensic techniques and science under the criminal justice system explained.

For the law to serve people in today's technologically complex society, courts needed to understand and be open to science and its principles, tools and techniques. Legal decisions of the courts must fall within the boundaries of scientifically sound knowledge. A judge and more so a trial judge, acted as a gatekeeper of the scientific evidence and must, therefore, enjoy a good sense and understanding of science. As science grows so will the forensic techniques, tools and devices; therefore, courts must be open to developments in forensic science and embrace new techniques and devices to resolve a dispute, provided the said technique and device was well established and widely accepted in the scientific community as a credible and reliable technique or device.

Third Edition, Federal Judicial Centre, National Research Council of the National Academies, Washington, DC ref.

Article 164 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984 was the gateway allowing modern forensic science to come into courtrooms. Article 164 provided that courts may allow to be produced any evidence that may have become available because of modern devices and techniques. Proviso to Article 164, provided that conviction on the basis of modern devices and techniques may be lawful. Article 164 read with Article 59, inter alia, allowed modern forensic science to enter courts through the credible and valued scientific opinions of experts as evidence, in order to arrive at the truth.

(b) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 376, 377 & 377B---Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984), Arts. 53A, 59, 164, 164A & 164B---Qatl-i-amd, rape, unnatural offence, sexual abuse---Importance and admissibility of DNA evidence to establish the guilt or innocence of an accused.

The most significant advancement in criminal investigation since the advent of fingerprint identification is the use of DNA technology to help convict criminals or eliminate persons as suspects.

Deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) technology was widely used in many jurisdictions by police, prosecutors, defense counsel, and courts. This scientific evidence was much speedier, specific, accurate and conclusive than any other human evidence and could stand the scrutiny of the court to determine the guilt or innocence of an accused. In criminal cases, like rape, murder, etc., timely medical examination and proper sampling of body fluids followed by quality forensic analysis could offer irrefutable evidence. Through the use of DNA evidence, prosecutors could establish the guilt of accused and at the same time, DNA aided the search for truth by exonerating the innocent.

Modi. A Textbook of Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology, 26th Edition, LexisNexis. Pp 430- 453 and Studies in the Use of DNA Evidence to Establish Innocence After Trial by Edward Connors, Thomas Lundregan, Neal Miller, Tom McEwen, June 1996, U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, National Institute of Justice ref.

DNA report like any other opinion of an expert under Article 59 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984 ('QSO') was relevant and thus admissible. Article 164 of the QSO further underlined the admissibility, reliability and weightage of modern scientific forensic evidence, including the DNA test, as the said Article provided that convictions may be based on modern techniques and devices.

(c) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 376, 377 & 377B---Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 510---Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984), Arts. 59 & 164---Punjab Forensic Science Agency Act (XIII of 2007), S. 9---Qatl-i-amd, rape, unnatural offence, sexual abuse---DNA evidence/report, Per-se admissibility---Meaning---Requirement of examining the expert who prepared the DNA report explained.

While the admissibility of expert opinion was already recognized under the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984 ('the QSO'), section 510, Cr.P.C. dealt with special rules of evidence and made the evidentiary procedure simple by providing that certain reports of the chemical examiner, etc. may be used in any trial without calling the Government Chemical Examiner, Serologist, finger print expert or fire-arm expert as a witness. Allowing admission of reports of the said Governmental experts in evidence without their author appearing as a witness had the objective of saving time and speeding up criminal trials. This simple procedure of admission of these reports in evidence, was referred to as per se admissible. However, the court may if it considered necessary, in the interest of justice, summon and examine the person by whom such a report had been made. Section 510, Cr.P.C. referred to reports of certain experts only but did not specifically mention the expert who conducted DNA analysis, hence the DNA test report was not per se admissible but it was certainly admissible if tendered in evidence by examining as witness the expert under whose hand it was prepared as per the QSO. Additionally, under section 9 of the Punjab Forensic Science Agency Act, 2007 an expert of the Punjab Forensic Science Agency (PFSA) was considered to be an expert in terms of section 510, Cr.P.C. Therefore, DNA test report prepared by an expert of the PFSA was per se admissible

Azeem Khan v. Mujahid Khan 2016 SCMR 274 ref.

Article 164 of QSO held immense importance and demanded that the scope of expert opinions under Article 59 of QSO and the special rule of evidence under section 510, Cr.P.C. be interpreted progressively to come to give more space and recognition to modern forensic science. Supreme Court observed that use of the word "Chemical Examiner" in section 510, Cr.P.C. was almost obsolete and had no established definition; and, that it was time for the Government to consider revision of section 510, Cr.P.C. allowing reports of all the Government forensic scientists (as opposed to the specified ones under section 510, Cr.P.C.) to be per se admissible, to speed up the wheels of dispensation of criminal justice. Supreme Court directed that copy of present judgment be dispatched to the Ministry of Law and Parliamentary Affairs, for consideration of the said recommendation.

(d) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 376, 377 & 377B---Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984), Arts. 59 & 164,---Qatl-i-amd, rape, unnatural offence, sexual abuse---Concept of DNA evidence as the strongest corroborative piece of evidence explained.

DNA evidence was considered as a gold standard to establish the identity of an accused. DNA test due to its accuracy and conclusiveness was one of the strongest corroborative pieces of evidence. DNA test with scientific certainty and clarity pointed towards the perpetrator and was, therefore, considered one of the strongest corroborative evidence, especially in cases of rape. Supreme Court observed that usefulness of DNA analysis, however, depended mostly on the skill, ability and integrity shown by the investigating officers, who were the first to arrive at the scene of the crime; that unless the evidence was properly documented, collected, packaged and preserved, it would not meet the legal and scientific requirements for admissibility into a court of law.

Salman Akram Raja v. Government of Punjab 2013 SCMR 203; United States v. Yee 134 F.R.D 161 and Muhammad Shahid v. State PLD 2010 FSC 215 ref.

(e) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b) & 376---Qatl-i-amd, rape---Reappraisal of evidence---DNA evidence---Strong circumstantial evidence---Incident was unseen, however, the most important piece of circumstantial evidence in the present case, was the DNA test report---Furthermore wajtakkar evidence, evidence of extra-judicial confession of accused, medical evidence and DNA test report, considered together, clearly connected the accused with the rape and murder of the deceased---Chain of circumstantial evidence was firm and continuous, leaving no margin for the hypothesis of innocence of the accused---Convictions and sentences awarded to the accused by the trial court, including death sentence, were maintained.

Evidence of wajtakkar comprised of two witnesses, who were not chance witnesses, as they were residents of the locality and their presence near the place of occurrence, i.e., the field, was quite natural. They saw the accused coming out of that field while tightening the string of his shalwar at a time that was in line with the time of occurrence reported in the FIR and the approximate time of death of the deceased mentioned in the post-mortem report. The extra-judicial confession of accused though was a weak piece of evidence; but in the present case, it also inspired confidence when it was read in conjunction with other circumstantial evidence. The medical evidence, viz, the post mortem report and statement of the doctor who made the post-mortem examination of the deceased, supported the prosecution case. The fact established by the medical evidence that the deceased had suffered vaginal injury, as her hymen was found freshly torn with tear at 6 O'clock extending upto perineum with fresh bleeding, clearly supports the prosecution case that the deceased was raped before causing her death. The medical opinion of the doctor that the death of the deceased occurred due to throttling tallied with the DNA report regarding the swab obtained from the neck of the deceased: the DNA report stated matching of the DNA found in that swab with that of the accused.

According to the DNA test report the semen from vaginal swabs, as well as, the stain of the shalwar of the deceased matched the DNA of the accused. The DNA in the swab obtained from the neck of the deceased also matched the DNA of the accused.

The prosecution had thus proved its case against the accused beyond reasonable doubt. Convictions and sentences awarded to the accused by the trial court, including death sentence, were maintained. Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed and leave was refused.

Raja M. Shafat Khan, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Mirza Abid Majeed, DPG for the State.

Research Assistance by Rana Shaheryar, Research Officer/Civil Judge, SCRC, Islamabad.

Date of hearing: 7th January, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---This is a troubling and a gut-wrenching case of rape, murder and capital punishment. Almost eight year old, Rimsha Bibi ("deceased") who left her house for summer tuition in the neighbourhood was raped in the loneliness of a jawar (millet) field and then silenced forever by being brutally murdered. First Information Report ("FIR") was registered by the father of the deceased against an unknown person for offences under sections 302 and 376(i) of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 ("P.P.C.") on 29.06.2016. In the supplementary statement recorded the next day, the complainant revealed that Jabbar Hussain (PW-6) and Tufail Shah (PW-7) had seen Ali Haider alias Pappu ("petitioner") coming out of the jawar field from where the dead body of the deceased was recovered at 4:00 p.m. on the fateful day, while tightening the string of his shalwar.

2. The petitioner was indicted and tried for the alleged offences. On conclusion of the trial, he was convicted by the trial Court under section 302(b) of P.P.C., and sentenced to death and directed to pay compensation of Rs.200,000/- to the legal heirs of the deceased and in default thereof to undergo further simple imprisonment for six months. He was also convicted under section 376 of P.P.C. and sentenced to imprisonment for life with fine of Rs.30,000/- to be paid to the legal heirs of the deceased and in default thereof to further undergo simple imprisonment for three months. On appeal to the High Court by the petitioner, which was heard along with the Murder Reference sent up by the trial court, the High Court maintained the convictions and sentences of the petitioner. The murder reference was answered in the affirmative and the death sentence was confirmed through the impugned judgment.

3. We have examined the record of the case with the able assistance of the learned counsel for the parties. The gruesome incident was unseen. The circumstantial evidence pieced together by the prosecution, to tie the petitioner with the rape and murder of the deceased comprises: (i) the evidence of waj takkar of Jabbar Hussain (PW-6) and Tufail Shah (PW-7) who had seen the petitioner coming out of the place of occurrence, i.e., jawar field, at 04:00 p.m. tightening the string of his shalwar; (ii) the extra judicial confession of the petitioner, admitting commission of rape and murder of the deceased in the presence of the complainant (PW-1) and the said two witnesses of waj takkar evidence (iii) the medical evidence including the post-mortem report (Ex-PL) and the statement of Dr. Sunia (PW-11), WHO, DHQ Hospital Vehari, who had conducted the post-mortem examination of the deceased: and (iv) the DNA Test Report regarding the vaginal swabs of the deceased as well as the swab obtained from the neck of the deceased, which reported matching of the DNA found in those swabs with that of the petitioner.

Importance of modern forensic science and DNA

4. Before analyzing the circumstantial evidence, it might be useful to underline the role of science, modern forensic techniques and devices under our criminal justice system. For the law to serve people in this technologically complex society, courts need to understand and be open to science and its principles, tools and techniques. Legal decisions of the courts must fall within the boundaries of scientifically sound knowledge. A judge and more so a trial judge, acts as a gatekeeper of the scientific evidence and must, therefore, enjoy a good sense and understanding of science. As science grows so will the forensic techniques, tools and devices; therefore, courts must be open to developments in forensic science and embrace new techniques and devices to resolve a dispute, provided the said technique and device is well established and widely accepted in the scientific community as a credible and reliable technique or device.[1] Article 164 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984 (QSO) is our gateway allowing modern forensic science to come into our courtrooms. Article 164 provides that courts may allow to be produced any evidence that may have become available because of modern devices and techniques. Proviso[2] to Article 164, added in the year 2017, provides that conviction on the basis of modern devices and techniques may be lawful. Article 164 read with Article 59, inter alia, allows modern forensic science to enter courts through the credible and valued scientific opinions of experts as evidence, in order to arrive at the truth.

5. The most significant advancement in criminal investigation since the advent of fingerprint identification is the use of DNA technology to help convict criminals or eliminate persons as suspects. DNA as a scientific evidence means 'deoxyribonucleic acid.' DNA can be found in the human body and samples from semen, hair, blood, flesh can establish a DNA matching with the DNA of another human being. Each human being has a unique DNA pattern, which is acquired by inheriting it from the biological parents. DNA analyses on saliva, skin tissue, blood, hair, and semen can now be reliably used to link criminals to crimes. Increasingly accepted during the past 10 years, DNA technology is now widely used in many jurisdictions by police, prosecutors, defense counsel, and courts.[3] This scientific evidence is much speedier, specific, accurate and conclusive than any other human evidence and can stand the scrutiny of the court to determine the guilt or innocence of an accused. In criminal cases, like rape, murder, etc., timely medical examination and proper sampling of body fluids followed by quality forensic analysis can offer irrefutable evidence. Criminal justice system is in search for the truth. The development of DNA technology furthers the search for truth by helping police and prosecutors in the fight against violent crimes. Through the use of DNA evidence, prosecutors can establish the guilt of accused and at the same time, DNA aids the search for truth by exonerating the innocent.[4] An authoritative study on the forensic uses of DNA, conducted by the National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences, USA has noted that:

> "...the reliability of DNA evidence will permit it to exonerate some people who would have been wrongfully accused or convicted without it. Therefore, DNA identification is not only a way of securing convictions; it is also a way of excluding suspects who might otherwise be falsely charged with and convicted of serious crimes."[5]

Admissibility of DNA Test

6. DNA Report like any other opinion of an expert under Article 59 is relevant and thus admissible. Article 164 of the QSO further underlines the admissibility, reliability and weightage of modern scientific forensic evidence, including the DNA test, as the said Article provides that convictions may be based on modern techniques and devices. Over the years DNA test has also come to be recognized by our statutory criminal law. Section 164-A[6], Cr.P.C provides that where an offence of committing rape, unnatural offence or sexual abuse or an attempt to commit rape or unnatural offence or sexual abuse under section 376, section 377 or section 377B respectively of the P.P.C. is under investigation the victim shall be examined by a medical practitioner who shall examine the victim and prepare a report of examination giving, inter alia, the "description of material taken from body of the victim for DNA profiling" under section 164A(2)(c). Similarly, under section 53A[7] where a person is arrested on a charge of committing an offence of rape or unnatural offence or sexual abuse or an attempt to commit rape or unnatural offence or sexual abuse under section 376, section 377 or section 377B respectively of the P.P.C. and there are reasonable grounds for believing that an examination of the arrested person will afford evidence as to the commission of such offence it is lawful for the medical practitioner to make such an examination of the arrested person and to use such force as is reasonably necessary for that purpose. The medical practitioner conducting examination is to examine, without delay, such person and prepare a report of the examination giving, inter alia, the description of material taken from person of the accused for DNA profiling, under section 53A(2)(d). Under section 164-B[8] where an offence under sections 376, 377 or section 377B, P.P.C. is committed or attempted to have been committed or alleged to have been committed, DNA samples where practicable, are to be collected from the victim with his or her consent or with the consent of his or her natural or legal guardian as provided in section 164A and DNA samples of the accused under section 53A, both within optimal time period of receiving information relating to the commission of such offence. Under subsection (2) of section 164B, such DNA samples are to be sent, at the earliest, for investigation to a forensic laboratory where these are to be properly examined and preserved by observing confidentiality of such examination at all times. The above legislative framework underscores the relevancy and thus the admissibility of a DNA Test.

Admissible versus per se admissible

7. While the admissibility of expert opinion is already recognized under QSO, section 510, Cr.P.C. deals with special rules of evidence and makes the evidentiary procedure simple by providing that certain reports of the chemical examiner, etc. may be used in any trial without calling the Government Chemical Examiner, Serologist, finger print expert or fire-arm expert as a witness. Allowing admission of reports of the said Governmental experts in evidence without their author appearing as a witness has the objective of saving time and speeding up criminal trials. This simple procedure of admission of these reports in evidence, is referred to as per se admissible. However, the court may if it considers necessary, in the interest of justice, summon and examine the person by whom such a report has been made. Section 510, Cr.P.C refers to reports of certain experts only but does not specifically mention the expert who conducts DNA analysis, hence the DNA Test report is not per se admissible but it is certainly admissible if tendered in evidence by examining as witness the expert under whose hand it is prepared as per the QSO. Additionally, under section 9 of the Punjab Forensic Science Agency Act, 2007 an expert of the PFSA is considered to be an expert in terms of section 510 Cr.P.C. Therefore, DNA Test Report prepared by an expert of the PFSA is per se admissible.

8. This Court in Azeem Khan case[9] questioned the admissibility of the DNA Test Report on the touchstone of section 510, Cr.P.C. and left it open to be discussed in some other case. It is, therefore, important to address this question and clear the air regarding the admissibility of DNA Test Report. As explained above, per se admissibility is a procedural facility for tendering evidence extended to reports of certain experts but it does not affect or have any bearing on the admissibility of a document which is governed by the QSO, and any report or opinion of an expert in matters of science, etc., which is recognized to be relevant under Articles 59 and 164 QSO and is thus admissible under the law of evidence (QSO). Besides, much water has flown under the bridge, since Azeem Khan case. There has been new legislation giving DNA Test, statutory recognition and importance. Article 164 QSO holds immense importance especially after the insertion of the proviso through Act 4 of 2017 in the year 2017[10] and demands that the scope of expert opinions under Article 59 QSO and the special rule of evidence under section 510, Cr.P.C.

be interpreted progressively in the years to come to give more space and recognition to modern forensic science.

9. It is important to underline that the use of the word "Chemical Examiner" in section 510 Cr.P.C. is almost obsolete and has no established definition. Now, "forensic scientists" run and manage modern forensic laboratories. It is time for the Government to consider revision of section 510 Cr.P.C. allowing reports of all the Government forensic scientists (as opposed to the specified ones under section 510 Cr.P.C) to be per se admissible, to speed up the wheels of dispensation of criminal justice in the country. Needless to say that under the proviso to section 510 Cr.P.C the courts can always summon and examine the expert who has prepared and authored the report.

DNA, strongest corroborative piece of evidence today

10. DNA evidence is considered as a gold standard to establish the identity of an accused. As a sequel of above discussion, it can safely be concluded that DNA Test due to its accuracy and conclusiveness is one of the strongest corroborative pieces of evidence. In Salman Akram Raja case[11] this Court has held that DNA test help provides the courts the identity of the perpetrator with high degree of confidence, and by using of the DNA technology the courts are in a better position to reach at a just conclusion whereby convicting the real culprits and excluding the potential suspects, as well as, exonerating wrongfully involved accused. DNA test with scientific certainty and clarity points towards the perpetrator and is, therefore, considered one of the strongest corroborative evidence today, especially in cases of rape. The usefulness of DNA analysis, however, depends mostly on the skill, ability and integrity shown by the investigating officers, who are the first to arrive at the scene of the crime. Unless the evidence is properly documented, collected, packaged and preserved, it will not meet the legal and scientific requirements for admissibility into a court of law.

11. Coming back to the merits of the case, we find that Jabbar Hussain (PW-6) and Tufail Shah (PW-7) were not chance witnesses. They were residents of the locality and their presence near the place of occurrence, i.e., the jawar field, was quite natural. They saw the petitioner coming out of that field while tightening the string of his shalwar at a time that is in line with the time of occurrence reported in the FIR and the approximate time of death of the deceased mentioned in the post-mortem report. The extrajudicial confession though is a weak piece of evidence; but in the present case, it also inspires confidence when it is read in conjunction with other circumstantial evidence. The medical evidence, viz, the post mortem report (Ex-PL) and statement of Dr. Sunia (PW-11) who made the post-mortem examination of the deceased, supports the prosecution case. The fact established by the medical evidence that the deceased had suffered vaginal injury, as her hymen was found freshly torn with tear at 6 O'clock extending upto perineum with fresh bleeding, clearly supports the prosecution case that the deceased was raped before causing her death. The medical opinion of Dr. Sunia (PW-11) that the death of the deceased occurred due to throttling tallies with the DNA report regarding the swab obtained from the neck of the deceased: the DNA report states matching of the DNA found in that swab with that of the petitioner. The most important piece of circumstantial evidence in the present case, we find, is the DNA Test Report (Ex-PP) of the Punjab Forensic Science Agency ("PFSA"). Three vaginal swabs, one swab taken from the neck of the deceased and stained sections of the shalwar and shirt of the deceased along with buccal swab of the petitioner were sent to the PFSA for forensic examination. According to the DNA Test Report the semen from vaginal swabs, as well as, the stain of the shalwar of the deceased matched the DNA of the petitioner. The DNA in the swab obtained from the neck of the deceased also matched the DNA of the petitioner. The waj takkar evidence, evidence of extrajudicial confession, medical evidence and DNA Test Report, together and clearly connects the petitioner with the rape and murder of the deceased, Rimsha Bibi. The chain of circumstantial evidence is firm and continuous, leaving no margin for the hypothesis of innocence of the petitioner. The rope of circumstantial evidence, adduced by the prosecution, ties the dead body of the deceased with the neck of the petitioner. The prosecution has thus proved its case against the petitioner beyond reasonable doubt. Therefore, we are not persuaded to espouse a view different from that given by the trial court and confirmed by the High Court as to the convictions and sentences of the petitioner. Accordingly, leave is refused and this petition is dismissed.

12. Foregoing are the reasons for the short order dated 07.01.2021, which for the sake of convenience and completion of record is reproduced hereunder:-

"For the reasons to be recorded later, this criminal petition is dismissed in toto."

13. Office shall dispatch a copy of this judgment to the Ministry of Law and Parliamentary Affairs, Government of Pakistan for consideration of the recommendation made in para 9 above.

MWA/A-8/SC Petition dismisse

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 550

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

ATIF ZAREEF and others---Appellants

Versus

The STATE---Respondent

Criminal Appeal No.251 of 2020 and Criminal Petition No.667 of 2020, decided on 4th January, 2021.

(Against the judgment of Lahore High Court, Rawalpindi Bench, dated 09.06.2016, passed in Criminal Appeal No.393 of 2013, and Capital Sentence Reference No.14-T/2013 and against the Order dated 09.06.2020 of that Court declining suspension of sentence in Criminal Miscellaneous No. 822/M of 2020.)

(a) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----S. 376(2)---Gang rape---Reappraisal of evidence---Complainant/ victim while appearing before the trial court deposed each and every detail of the gruesome act committed on her, and her testimony could not be shaken as to any material part of the occurrence stated by her---Suggestions in cross-examination relating to her alleged immoral character were strongly denied by her, and in any case, the questions targeting her character had no relevance to the matter on trial, i.e., the commission of rape on her---Complainant being an educated lady, had no reason to falsely implicate the accused persons, and that too with a such self-deprecating allegation that would tarnish her honour and dignity---Prosecution witness, with whom the complainant was travelling, at the time of the incident deposed how he and the complainant, were interrupted by the accused persons and how the complainant was taken away by them on the day of occurrence---Said statement, fully corroborated the version of the complainant as to her forcible taking away by the accused persons---Testimony of the complainant as to commission of rape on her on the day of occurrence was supported by the medical evidence, i.e., the medico-legal report and the statement of the doctor who examined the complainant---Potency test of the accused persons was also positive, and their involvement in commission of the offence was corroborated by the DNA test report---Prosecution had thus proved its case against the accused persons beyond reasonable doubt---Convictions recorded against the accused persons were upheld, and their sentences of imprisonment for life, as modified by the High Court, were also maintained---Appeal to the extent of accused persons was dismissed.

(b) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----S. 376---Rape---Reappraisal of evidence---Testimony of victim---Sufficient for conviction---Rape was a crime that was usually committed in private, and there was hardly any witness to provide direct evidence of having seen the commission of crime by the accused person---Courts, therefore, did not insist upon producing direct evidence to corroborate the testimony of the victim if the same was found to be confidence inspiring in the overall particular facts and circumstances of a case, and considered such a testimony of the victim sufficient for conviction of the accused person---Rape victim stood on a higher pedestal than an injured witness, for an injured witness got the injury on the physical form while the rape victim suffered psychologically and emotionally.

State of U.P. v. Munshi AIR 2009 SC 370 ref.

(c) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----S. 376---Rape---Reappraisal of evidence---DNA test report---Evidentiary value---DNA test report due to its scientific accuracy and conclusiveness, was considered as a gold standard to establish the identity of an accused and a very strong corroborative piece of evidence.

(d) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----S. 376(2)---Gang rape---Reappraisal of evidence---Benefit of doubt---Possibility of mistaken identification---Accused was not nominated by the complainant/victim in the FIR, nor was there any explanation given in the supplementary statement of complainant, wherein he was nominated, as to how the complainant came to know that he was that unknown person who had committed rape on her with other persons---Such gap in the prosecution evidence cast a reasonable doubt about his involvement in the occurrence especially when it was appreciated in view of his negative DNA test report---Possibility of mistaken identification of the unknown person, as being the accused, could not be ruled out---Prosecution thus could not prove its case against the accused beyond reasonable doubt---Appeal was accepted to the extent of accused, his conviction and sentence were set-aside, and he was acquitted of the charge by extending him the benefit of doubt.

(e) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----S. 376---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 4(2)(a) & 14(1)---Rape---Sexual history/character of rape victim---Relevancy---"Two-finger test" (TFT) or "virginity test"---Constitutionality and legality---In rape cases sexual history/character of rape victim was not relevant and it could not be used to discredit the victim's credibility---Furthermore the two-finger test" (TFT) or "virginity test" had no scientific justification or evidentiary relevance to determine the commission of the sexual assault of rape---Reporting sexual history of a rape survivor amounted to discrediting her independence, identity, autonomy and free choice thereby degrading her human worth and offending her right to dignity guaranteed under Art. 14 of the Constitution---Principles relating to relevance of sexual history of rape victim and constitutionality of two-finger test" (TFT) or "virginity test" stated.

Modern forensic science showed that the two finger test must not be conducted for establishing rape-sexual violence, and the size of the vaginal introitus had no bearing on a case of sexual violence. The status of hymen was also irrelevant because hymen could be torn due to several reasons such as cycling, riding among other things. An intact hymen does not rule out sexual violence and a torn hymen does not prove previous sexual intercourse. Hymen must therefore be treated like any other part of the genitals while documenting examination findings in cases of sexual violence. Only those findings that were relevant to the episode of sexual assault, i.e., findings such as fresh tears, bleeding, oedema, etc., were to be documented. The medical officers instead of burdening themselves with reporting about the sexual history of the victim must ensure, in a case of sexual offence of rape to examine the external genital area for evidence of injury, seminal stains and stray pubic hair.

Modi's Textbook of Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology, 26th Edition. Lexis Nexis publications. P.766. ref.

Due to a combination of lack of training, inexperience the medico-legal certificate's (MLC) casually report the two finger test, to show that the vagina could admit phallus-like fingers to conclude that the survivor was sexually active at the time of the assault or a "virgin" as perceived by the society. Neither of these tests had any basis in medical science. Medical language of 'MLC' was riddled with gender biases and immediately called into question the character of the rape survivor. It was used to support the assumption that a sexually active woman would easily consent for sexual activity with anyone. Examination of a rape victim by the medical practitioners and use of the medical evidence collected in such examination by the courts should be made only to determine the question whether or not the alleged victim was subjected to rape, and not to determine her virginity or chastity.

Dragging sexual history of the rape survivor into the case by making observations about her body including observations like "the vagina admits two fingers easily" or "old ruptured hymen" was an affront to the reputation and honour of the rape survivor and violated Article 4(2)(a) of the Constitution, which mandated that no action detrimental to the body and reputation of person shall be taken except in accordance with law. Similarly, Article 14 of the Constitution mandated that dignity shall be inviolable, therefore, reporting sexual history of a rape survivor amounts to discrediting her independence, identity, autonomy and free choice thereby degrading her human worth and offending her right to dignity guaranteed under Article 14 of the Constitution.

A woman, whatever her sexual character or reputation may be, was entitled to equal protection of law. No one had the license to invade her person or violate her privacy on the ground of her alleged immoral character. Even if the victim of rape was accustomed to sexual intercourse, it was not determinative in a rape case; the real fact-in-issue was whether or not the accused committed rape on her. If the victim had lost her virginity earlier, it did not give to anyone the right to rape her.

Shakeel v. State PLD 2010 SC 47; Shahzad v. State 2002 SCMR 1009 and State of U.P. v. Munshi AIR 2009 SC 370 ref.

Evidence relating to sexual history should not be admitted in order to draw inferences supporting the 'twin myths', namely, that by reason of that sexual history, it was more likely that the complainant may have consented or become less worthy of belief.

PLD 2009 FSC 65 ref.

(f) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----S. 376---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 4(2)(a) & 14(1)---Rape cases---Use of expressions, like "habituated to sex", "woman of easy virtue", "woman of loose moral character", and "non-virgin", for alleged rape victims in court judgments---Supreme Court observed that such intrusive and inappropriate expressions should be discontinued by the courts, even if they found that the charge of rape was not proved against the accused, and that such expressions were unconstitutional and illegal. (g) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----S. 376---Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984), Arts. 146 & 151(4)[since omitted]---Punjab Witness Protection Act (XXI of 2018), S. 12(3)---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 4(2)(a) & 14(1)---Rape---Prohibition on putting questions to a rape victim in cross-examination, and leading any other evidence, about her alleged "general immoral character" for the purpose of impeaching her credibility---Scope---Omission of Art.151(4) of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984 ('the QSO') by the Legislature left no doubt in discovering and ascertaining the intention of the Legislature that in a rape case the accused could not be allowed to question the complainant about her alleged "general immoral character---However, the omission of Art. 151(4) of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984, implied prohibition on questions put in cross-examination or the defence evidence led as to the reputation of the complainant to show her as of "generally immoral character", and not on the questions put or defence evidence led to prove that some other person, and not the accused, was perpetrator and source of semen or injury found on the body of the complainant; nor did that omission completely shun the admissibility of questions in cross-examination or defence evidence, on the previous sexual relation of the complainant with the accused when the accused took the defence, and intended to prove, that the complainant consented to the sexual activity that was an issue in the case---Section 12(3) of the Punjab Witness Protection Act, 2018 codified such position when it obligated the court to forbid a question to the victim of a sexual offence relating to any sexual behavior of the victim on any previous occasion with the accused or any other person, but also empowered the court to allow such a question if, in the court's opinion, it was a relevant fact in the case---To the same effect were the provisions of Art. 146 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat, 1984, under which the court may forbid such questions if it found that they were 'indecent' or 'scandalous', but could allow them if they related to facts-in-issue or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts-in-issue existed---However, while allowing or disallowing such questions the court must be conscious of the possibility that the accused may have been falsely involved in the case, and should balance the right of the accused to make a full defence and the potential prejudice to the complainant's rights to dignity and privacy, to keep the scales of justice even for both.

Section 276(1) of the Canadian Criminal Code ref.

Sardar Abdul Raziq Khan, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellants/Petitioners (in both cases).

Mirza Abid Majeed, DPG for the State.

Date of hearing: 4th January, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---According to the crime report,[1] 20 year old Saadia Rani ("complainant") while travelling to Rawalpindi from Kotli Sattian with one Hameed Abbasi (PW-2) on 28.08.2012, was intercepted on the roadway by the appellants and others, taken off-road and raped. After the gruesome act, the complainant, straight from the place of alleged occurrence, went to the police station and reported the matter. She nominated (i) Sajjad Hussain alias Jajji, (ii) Sher Baz Khan alias Sheru, (iii) Atif Zareef and two unknown persons as perpetrators who, all five, allegedly committed rape on her, one after the other. Later (iv) Nafees Ahmed and (v) Waqas Hameed were nominated by her as having committed rape on her in supplementary statement recorded the next day. Her statement under section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 ("Cr.P.C") was also recorded by a learned Magistrate on 29.08.2012, wherein she reiterated her version of having been raped by the aforesaid five persons.

2. Sajjad Hussain alias Jajji and Waqas Hameed became proclaimed offenders, while Sher Baz Khan alias Sheru, Atif Zareef and Nafees Ahmed ("appellants") were sent up for trial and found guilty of having committed rape on the complainant (PW-1) . They were convicted under section 376(2) of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 ("P.P.C.") and sentenced to death with the direction to pay Rs.500,000/- as compensation to the complainant or in default thereof to undergo simple imprisonment for six months by the trial court. The appellants challenged their conviction and sentence in appeal before the High Court, and the trial court also sent the Capital Sentence Reference (CSR) to the High Court for confirmation of the death sentence or otherwise. The appeal and the CSR were heard together by the High Court. Vide the impugned judgment, the High Court maintained the conviction of the appellants, however, reduced their sentence to that of imprisonment for life and extended them benefit of section 382-B, Cr.P.C. also.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at length and examined the record of the case minutely with their able assistance. The prosecution evidence produced in the case to prove the charge against the appellants consists of: (i) the testimony of the complainant (PW-1) as to commission of rape on her by the appellants and others; (ii) the testimony of Hameed Abbasi (PW-2) as to taking away the complainant by the appellants and others; (iii) the medical evidence including the medico-legal report (Ex-PA) and the statement of Dr. Shehla Waqar (PW-5), confirming commission of sexual assault on the complainant; (iv) the Chemical Examiner's report (Ex-PR) that reported detection of semen in the vaginal swabs of the complainant; and (v) the DNA test report (Ex-PS) that reported matching of the DNA found in the vaginal swabs of the complainant with that of the appellant Sher Baz Khan alias Sheru and matching of the DNA found in the stained section of the Shalwar of the complainant with that of the appellant Atif Zareef.

4. We observe that the complainant while appearing as PW-1 deposed each and every detail of the gruesome act committed on her, and her testimony could not be shaken as to any material part of the occurrence stated by her. The suggestions in cross-examination relating to her alleged immoral character and her alleged illicit relation with Hameed Abbasi (PW-2) were strongly denied by her. In any case, the questions targeting her character had no relevance to the matter on trial, i.e., the commission of rape on her. The complainant being an educated lady, studying in B. Ed. after completing her B.A. degree at the time of this agonizing incident had no reason to falsely implicate the appellants, and that too with a such self-deprecating allegation that would tarnish her honour and dignity. The bald assertion of the appellants, without any supporting evidence, that they had seen her in a compromising position with Hameed Abbasi (PW-2) was even otherwise of little value to discredit the testimony of the complainant, which is found to be trustworthy and confidence inspiring.

5. Hameed Abbasi (PW-2) also deposed how he and the complainant, who were travelling to Rawalpindi from Kotli Sattian, were interrupted by the appellants and how the complainant was taken away by them on the day of occurrence. His statement, thus, fully corroborates the version of the complainant as to her forcible taking away by the appellants and some other persons. It is true that he admitted in cross-examination that he did not see the appellants committing rape with the complainant. Rape is a crime that is usually committed in private, and there is hardly any witness to provide direct evidence of having seen the commission of crime by the accused person. The courts, therefore, do not insist upon producing direct evidence to corroborate the testimony of the victim if the same is found to be confidence inspiring in the overall particular facts and circumstances of a case, and considers such a testimony of the victim sufficient for conviction of the accused person. A rape victim stands on a higher pedestal than an injured witness, for an injured witness gets the injury on the physical form while the rape victim suffers psychologically and emotionally.[2] In the present case, the testimony of the complainant as to commission of rape on her on the day of occurrence is supported by the medical evidence, i.e., the medico-legal report (Ex-PA) and the statement of Dr. Shehla Waqar (PW-5). The potency test of the said appellants was also positive. The involvement of Sher Baz Khan alias Sheru and Atif Zareef in commission of this offence is corroborated by the DNA test report (Ex-PS), which is considered, due to its scientific accuracy and conclusiveness, as a gold standard to establish the identity of an accused and a very strong corroborative piece of evidence. The prosecution has thus proved its case against the appellants, Sher Baz Khan alias Sheru and Atif Zareef beyond reasonable doubt. We, therefore, uphold their conviction recorded by the trial court and confirmed by the High Court, and also maintain the sentence passed on them by the High Court. The appeal to their extent is dismissed.

6. So far as the case of the appellant Nafees Ahmad is concerned, we find it to be distinguishable from that of the other appellants. He was not nominated by the complainant in the FIR, nor was there any explanation given in the supplementary statement (Ex-DA), wherein he was nominated, as to how the complainant came to know that he was that unknown person who had committed rape on her with other persons. This gap in the prosecution evidence casts a reasonable doubt about his involvement in the occurrence especially when it is appreciated in view of his negative DNA test report. The possibility of mistaken identification of the unknown person, as being Nafees Ahmad, cannot be ruled out. The prosecution thus could not prove its case against the appellant, Nafees Ahmad, beyond reasonable doubt. The rule of giving benefit of doubt to accused person is essentially a rule of caution and prudence, and is deep rooted in our jurisprudence for safe administration of criminal justice. Releasing a guilty by mistake is better than punishing an innocent by mistake. We, therefore, accept this appeal to the extent of appellant Nafees Ahmad, set aside his conviction and sentence, and acquit him of the charge by extending him the benefit of doubt. He shall be released forthwith if not required to be detained in any other case.

7. It is important to observe that, while examining and reappraising the evidence available on record, we have noted that during the cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, particularly the complainant/ victim (PW-1), Gul Hameed Abbasi (PW-2) and Muhammad Latif, Investigating Officer (PW-10), the defence tried to build a case that Mst. Sadia Rani, the complainant/victim (PW-1), was a woman of immoral character for having illicit relations with Gul Hameed Abbasi (PW-2), and therefore her testimony was unreliable and untrustworthy. The lady Doctor Shehla Waqar, WMO (PW-5), who medically examined Mst. Sadia Rani (PW-1), the complainant/victim, and issued the MLR (Ex-PA) was also cross-examined on these lines. A portion of her cross-examination is relevant and being reproduced:

> "It is correct that there is nowhere mentioned in Ex-PA that hymen was freshly ruptured or old ruptured. It is correct that in Ex-PA there is nowhere mentioned whether the vagina was admitting one finger or two fingers. It is correct that by doing this it can be assessed that whether the victim was virgin or habitual."

In this background of the case, we find it important to examine whether recording sexual history of the victim by carrying out "two-finger test" (TFT) or the "virginity test" has any scientific justification or evidentiary relevance to determine the commission of the sexual assault of rape, and whether the myth that "unchaste", "impure" or "immoral" women are more likely to consent to sexual intercourse and are not worthy of reliance have any legal basis. This further begs the questions whether "sexual history", "sexual character" or the very "sexuality" of a rape survivor can be used to paint her as sexually active and unchaste and use this to discredit her credibility; and whether her promiscuous background can be made basis to assume that she must have consented to the act. These important questions require to be examined in the light of our Constitution, the law and modern forensic science as it stands today.

Modern forensic science - sexual history and virginity testing

8. Lynn Enright in her book "Vagina - a Re-education" [3] writes that we are taught from an early age that the hymen is associated with female purity. It is imagined as a sheath protecting the opening of the vagina. But this is false. The hymen has no biological function, it has been made into a symbol of virginity around the world. These inaccuracies are largely rooted in misogyny. Medical jurisprudence textbooks had previously prescribed certain tests of medical evaluation to determine prior virginity of an alleged rape victim, viz, assessment of the elasticity of her vaginal orifice by insertion of two fingers in her vagina and examination of the state of her genitals particularly the hymen. These textbooks had a significant impact on the adjudication of rape cases in the British India, as well as, in Pakistan and India post-independence.[4] Our National Commission on the Status of Women (NCSW) has reported[5] that crime of rape is viewed in the patriarchal context of sexual conduct of the survivor. Rape is also seen as a crime of lust and passion rather than a crime of control. Since then, much water has flown under the bridge, and today modern forensic science shuns the virginity test as being totally irrelevant to the sexual assault. The latest edition of the Modi's Textbook of Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology[6] states: "The pre-occupation of the medical community was to examine the hymenal status of the victim and determination of vaginal laxity to give opinion on past sexual history. It is time to get past the assessment of virginity and focus attention on appropriate medical care and psychological counseling. It will be illegal, irrelevant and wholly inappropriate to record a finding whether the victim was sexually active or not prior to and after the incident." The latest scientific research studies dispute accuracy of such virginity tests and opinions.[7] The World Health Organization (WHO), the Office of the High Commissioner of the United Nations and the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women have stated in "Eliminating Virginity Testing: An Interagency Statement"[8] that "virginity testing, also referred to as hymen, two-finger or pre vaginal examination... has no scientific merit or clinical indication" and "the appearance of a hymen is [also] not a reliable indication of intercourse and there is no known examination that can prove a history of vaginal intercourse." They have clarified that "like all human tissues, vaginal and hymnal tissue can be injured during trauma... [T]he purpose of the examination for sexual assault is to evaluate for and treat injuries ... not to assess virginity status."

9. Modern forensic science thus shows that the two finger test must not be conducted for establishing rape-sexual violence, and the size of the vaginal introitus[9] has no bearing on a case of sexual violence. The status of hymen is also irrelevant because hymen can be torn due to several reasons such as cycling, riding among other things. An intact hymen does not rule out sexual violence and a torn hymen does not prove previous sexual intercourse. Hymen must therefore be treated like any other part of the genitals while documenting examination findings in cases of sexual violence. Only those findings that are relevant to the episode of sexual assault, i.e., findings such as fresh tears, bleeding, oedema, etc., are to be documented. "Rape is a crime and not a medical diagnosis to be made by the medical officer treating the victim... [T]he only statement that can be made by the medical officer is whether there is evidence of recent sexual activity and about injuries noticed in and around the private parts. The duty of the medical officer extends principally to provide adequate healthcare and comfort to the victim and secondarily to assist the prosecution with appropriate medical evidence."[10] The medical officers instead of burdening themselves with reporting about the sexual history of the victim must ensure, according to Modi's Textbook of Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology,[11] in a case of sexual offence of rape to examine the external genital area for evidence of injury, seminal stains and stray pubic hair.

10. Due to a combination of lack of training, inexperience the medico-legal certificate's (MLC) casually report the two finger test, to show that the vagina can admit phallus-like fingers to conclude that the survivor was sexually active at the time of the assault or a "virgin" as perceived by the society. Neither of these tests have any basis in medical science. Medical language of MLC is riddled with gender biases and immediately calls into question the character of the rape survivor. It is used to support the assumption that a sexually active woman would easily consent for sexual activity with anyone. The World Health Organization (WHO), the Office of the High Commissioner of the United Nations and the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women in "Eliminating Virginity Testing: An Interagency Statement" proclaim, "the practice is a violation of the victim's human rights and is associated with both immediate and longterm consequences that are detrimental to her physical, psychological and social well-being." In view of this firm and reliable Interagency Statement, examination of a rape victim by the medical practitioners and use of the medical evidence collected in such examination by the courts should be made only to determine the question whether or not the alleged victim was subjected to rape, and not to determine her virginity or chastity.

Constitutionality of "sexual history"

11. Dragging sexual history of the rape survivor into the case by making observations about her body including observations like "the vagina admits two fingers easily" or "old ruptured hymen" is an affront to the reputation and honour of the rape survivor and violates Article 4(2)(a) of the Constitution, which mandates that no action detrimental to the body and reputation of person shall be taken except in accordance with law. Similarly Article 14 of our Constitution mandates that dignity shall be inviolable, therefore, reporting sexual history of a rape survivor amounts to discrediting her independence, identity, autonomy and free choice thereby degrading her human worth and offending her right to dignity guaranteed under Article 14 of the Constitution which Right to dignity under Article 14 of the Constitution is an absolute right and not subject to law. Dignity means human worth: simply put, every person matters. No life is dispensable, disposable or demeanable. Every person has the right to live, and the right to live means right to live with dignity. A person should live as "person" and no less.[12] Human dignity hovers over our laws like a guardian angel; it underlies every norm of a just legal system and provides an ultimate justification for every legal rule.[13] Therefore, right to dignity is the crown of fundamental rights under our Constitution and stands at the top, drawing its strength from all the fundamental rights under our Constitution and yet standing alone and tall, making human worth and humanness of a person a far more fundamental a right than the others, a right that is absolutely non-negotiable.

12. A woman, whatever her sexual character or reputation may be, is entitled to equal protection of law. No one has the license to invade her person or violate her privacy on the ground of her alleged immoral character. Even if the victim of rape is accustomed to sexual intercourse, it is not determinative in a rape case; the real fact-in-issue is whether or not the accused committed rape on her. If the victim had lost her virginity earlier, it does not give to anyone the right to rape her.[14] In a criminal trial relating to rape, it is the accused who is on trial and not the victim. The courts should also discontinue the use of painfully intrusive and inappropriate expressions, like "habituated to sex", "woman of easy virtue", "woman of loose moral character", and "non-virgin", for the alleged rape victims even if they find that the charge of rape is not proved against the accused. Such expressions are unconstitutional and illegal.

13. It appears that the courts had been allowing opinion evidence of the medical experts as to the said tests to be brought on record in cases of rape in view of the provisions of Article 151(4) of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984 ("QSO") [Section 155(4) of the erstwhile Evidence Act, 1872] which provided that "when a man is prosecuted for rape or an attempt to ravish, it may be shown that the victim was of generally immoral character to impeach her credibility." This has now become inadmissible in evidence after the omission of Article 151(4) of the QSO by the Criminal Law Amendment (Offences Relating to Rape) Act, 2016. Earlier, a Full Bench of the Federal Shariat Court of Pakistan had also declared the provisions of Article 151(4) of the QSO to be repugnant to the Injunctions of Islam, in Mukhtar Ahmad v. Govt. of Pakistan.[15]

14. While the omission of Article 151(4) of the QSO implies prohibition on putting questions to a rape victim in cross-examination, and leading any other evidence, about her alleged "general immoral character" for the purpose of impeaching her credibility. Section 12(3) of the Punjab Witness Protection Act, 2018 has specifically provided that "the court shall forbid a question to the victim of a sexual offence relating to any sexual behavior of the victim on any previous occasion with the accused or any other person, unless such a question, in the opinion of the court, is a relevant fact in the case". Therefore, evidence relating to sexual history should not be admitted in order to draw inferences supporting the 'twin myths', namely, that by reason of that sexual history, it is more likely that the complainant may have consented or become less worthy of belief.

15. Omission of Article 151(4) of the QSO by the Legislature leaves no doubt in discovering and ascertaining the intention of the Legislature that in a rape case the accused cannot be allowed to question the complainant about her alleged "general immoral character. Declaration of the Federal Shariat Court of Pakistan as to the provisions of Article 151(4) of the QSO, since omitted, also bars such questions. However, it may be important to underline that the omission of Article 151(4) of the QSO implies prohibition on questions put in cross-examination or the defence evidence led as to the reputation of the complainant to show her as of "generally immoral character", and not on the questions put or defence evidence led to prove that some other person, and not the accused, is perpetrator and source of semen or injury found on the body of the complainant; nor does that omission completely shun the admissibility of questions in cross-examination or defence evidence, on the previous sexual relation of the complainant with the accused when the accused takes the defence, and intends to prove, that the complainant consented to the sexual activity that is an issue in the case. Section 12(3) of the Punjab Witness Protection Act, 2018 codifies this position when it obligates the court to forbid a question to the victim of a sexual offence relating to any sexual behavior of the victim on any previous occasion with the accused or any other person, but also empowers the court to allow such a question if, in the court's opinion, it is a relevant fact in the case. To the same effect are the provisions of Article 146 of the QSO, under which the court may forbid such questions if it finds that they are 'indecent' or 'scandalous', but can allow them if they relate to facts-in-issue or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts-in-issue existed. However, while allowing or disallowing such questions the court must be conscious of the possibility that the accused may have been falsely involved in the case, and should balance the right of the accused to make a full defence and the potential prejudice to the complainant's rights to dignity and privacy, to keep the scales of justice even for both.[16]

16. Foregoing are the reasons for our short order dated 04.1.2021, whereby Criminal Appeal No.251/2020 was partly allowed in the above terms. For ease of reference and completion of record, the said short order is reproduced hereunder:-

> "For reasons to be recorded later, the instant criminal appeal is allowed to the extent of appellant No.3 Nafees Ahmad son of Muhammad Ashraf and his conviction and sentence is set aside. He is acquitted of the charge framed against him. He is behind the bars and is ordered to be released forthwith, if not required to be detained in any other case. The instant criminal appeal, however, is dismissed to the extent of appellant No.1 Atif Zareef and appellant No.2 Sher Baz Khan alias Sheru."

Criminal Petition No.667/2020:

17. Through this petition, the appellants have sought suspension of their sentences. Since the main appeal has been decided, this petition has become infructuous and is accordingly dismissed and leave refused.

Direction to I. G., Punjab Police

18. Before parting with the judgment, we consider it just and proper to highlight that two accused persons, Sajjad Hussain alias Jajji and Waqas Hameed (proclaimed offenders), allegedly involved in this case are still at large despite lapse of a period of about 8 years since the incident. It appears that the case file has been dumped under the dust of time. We, therefore, direct the office to send a copy of this judgment to the Inspector General of Police, Punjab who shall personally supervise the efforts of the District Police, Rawalpindi in bringing the proclaimed offenders to justice, in accordance with the law. The Inspector General of Police, Punjab shall submit the progress report in this regard within one month from the date of receipt of copy of this judgment, which shall be placed before us in Chambers for our perusal.

MWA/A-16/SC Order accordingly.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 571

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

Mian IRFAN BASHIR---Petitioner

Versus

The DEPUTY COMMISSIONER (D.C.), LAHORE and others---Respondents

C. P. No. 446-L of 2019, decided on 27th January, 2021.

(On appeal from the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 24.01.2019, passed in I.C.A. No.4343 of 2019).

(a) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 199---Constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court---Scope---High Court did not enjoy suo motu jurisdiction under Art. 199 of the Constitution.

There must exist a dispute before the High Court before it exercises judicial power. "On the application of an aggrieved party" was an essential pre-requisite to invoke the constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 199 of the Constitution. There must be an application and an applicant to invoke the jurisdiction of judicial review as the High Court did not enjoy suo motu jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution.

Dr. Imran Khattak and another v. Ms. Sofia Waqar Khattak, PSO to Chief Justice and others 2014 SCMR 122 and Jehanzaib Malik v. Balochistan Public Procurement Regulatory Authority through Chairman Board of Directors and others 2018 SCMR 414 ref.

(b) Provincial Motor Vehicles Ordinance (XIX of 1965)---

----S. 89-A---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9, 18 & 199---Constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court---Scope---Suo motu exercise of judicial power under Art. 199 of the Constitution was not available to the High Court---Where the High Court issued directions in its constitutional jurisdiction with respect to an issue or dispute that was not before the Court, it would amount to judicial overreach.

A Traders Association, approached the constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court to challenge a notice issued by the Zonal Officer (Regulation) Metropolitan Corporation for the removal of signboards and advertisements from their shops within 24 hours. Single Bench of the High Court while dealing with this issue thought it best to also discuss and pass directions on to a totally different issue, which was not even before the Court, regarding wearing of helmets by motorcyclists plying their bikes on the Mall Road. Without there being any dispute before it, the Court examined the compliance by the motorcyclists of wearing helmets when plying their bikes on the Mall Road. The High Court exercising suo motu powers, passed directions to the effect that the petrol pumps shall not fill in the petrol tanks of the motorcyclists who did not wear helmets and in case any owner of the filling station was found to provide petrol to such motorcyclist, the petrol pump would be sealed and heavy fine would be imposed. Intra Court Appeal filed before the Division Bench of the High Court was dismissed and Order of the Single Bench was upheld.

In the instant case, the direction against the motorcyclists (who did not wear helmets) and the petrol pump owners was a suo motu exercise of judicial power not available to the High Court under the Constitution. There was no such lis or dispute before the High Court. The grievance agitated before the High Court was regarding the signboards and advertisements put up by the traders on the Mall Road and this matter was not even remotely connected to the motorcyclists, helmets or the purchase of petrol by them.

The use of helmets was provided under section 89-A of the Provincial Motor Vehicle Ordinance, 1965 which provided that no person shall drive or ride the pillion seat of a two-wheeled motor vehicle without wearing a crash helmet. While the requirement of wearing helmets by the motorcycle riders and those on the pillion seat was provided under the law, there was no legal backing for the impugned direction issued by the High Court. There was no law or executive policy supporting such a ban on sale and purchase of petrol by the petrol pump owners to the motorcyclists not wearing helmets. The impugned direction was above the law and had no legal legitimacy or sanctity. Such exercise of judicial power by a judge passed for judicial overreach i.e., exercise of judicial power without any backing of law and clearly interfering in and encroaching on the legislative and executive domain.

In the present case, the order passed by the single bench of the High Court had no law or executive policy behind it. It was a clear example of judicial legislation and thus judicial overreach. High Court was not vested with any such jurisdiction under the Constitution. Impugned direction by the High Court placing a ban on motorcyclists without a helmet to purchase petrol, lost sight of the fundamental rights guaranteed to the petrol pump owners and the motorcyclists under the Constitution. The impugned direction deprived the petrol pump owners of their business guaranteed under Article 18 of the Constitution and the motorcyclists of their right to mobility and right to livelihood guaranteed under Article 9 of the Constitution. The High Court, in its desire to make The Mall Road, an iconic thoroughfare, overstepped its jurisdiction, forgetting that a Judge was bound by the Constitution and the law.

Supreme Court set aside the impugned orders passed by the Single Bench as well as Division Bench of the High Court to the extent of the direction issued to the petrol pump owners of placing a ban on the sale of petrol to motorcyclists plying without a helmet, as the same were unconstitutional, illegal and without jurisdiction. Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed.

(c) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 199---'Judicial review', 'Judicial activism' and 'Judicial overreach'---Meaning and distinction.

Judicial review was the power of the courts to examine the actions of the legislative, executive, and administrative arms of the government and to determine whether such actions were consistent with the Constitution. Actions judged inconsistent were declared unconstitutional and, therefore, null and void. Judicial review was the genus and judicial activism or judicial restraint were its subspecies. While exercising judicial review, there came a point when the decision rested on judicial subjectivity; which was not the personal view of a judge but his judicial approach. One judge may accord greater significance to the need for change, while the other may accord greater significance to the need for certainty and status quo. Both types of judges acted within the zone of law; neither invalidated the decision of another branch of the Government unless it deviated from law and was unconstitutional.

Activist judges (or judicial activism) were less influenced by considerations of security, preserving the status quo, and the institutional constraints. On the other hand, self-restrained judges (or judicial restraint) gave significant weight to security, preserving the status quo and the institutional constraints. Both judicial activism and judicial self-restraint operated within the bounds of judicial legitimacy.

Aharon Barak, The Judge in a Democracy. Princeton. Chapter 15 ref.

It was one thing for a judge to progressively interpret the law because of human rights considerations about which he had substantial information. It was quite another to change or ignore the law for economic or social or political reasons based on polycentric considerations beyond the judge's expertise. Judicial power was never exercised for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the judge; but always for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the legislature; or in other words, to the will of the law. When courts exercised power outside the Constitution and the law and encroached upon the domain of the Legislature or the Executive, the courts committed judicial overreach.

Christopher Wolfe, 'The Rehnquist Court and "Conservative Judicial Activism"' in Christopher Wolfe (ed), That Eminent Tribunal: judicial supremacy and the constitution (Princeton 2004) ref.

Judicial overreach was when the judiciary started interfering with the proper functioning of the legislative or executive organs of the government. This was totally uncharacteristic of the role of the judiciary envisaged under the Constitution and was most undesirable in a constitutional democracy. Judicial overreach was transgressive as it transformed the judicial role of adjudication and interpretation of law into that of judicial legislation or judicial policy making, thus encroaching upon the other branches of the Government and disregarding the fine line of separation of powers, upon which was pillared the very construct of constitutional democracy. Such judicial leap in the dark was also known as "judicial adventurism" or "judicial imperialism." A judge was to remain within the confines of the dispute brought before him and decide the matter by remaining within the confines of the law and the Constitution. The role of a constitutional judge was different from that of a King, who was free to exert power and pass orders of his choice over his subjects. Having taken an oath to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution, a constitutional judge could not be forgetful of the fact that he himself, was first and foremost subject to the Constitution and the law. When judges uncontrollably treaded the path of judicial overreach, they lowered the public image of the judiciary and weakened the public trust reposed in the judicial institution. In doing so they violated their oath and turned a blind eye to their constitutional role. Constitutional democracy leaned heavily on the rule of law, supremacy of the Constitution, independence of the judiciary and separation of powers. Judges by passing orders, which were not anchored in law and did not draw their legitimacy from the Constitution, unnerved the other branches of the Government and shook the very foundations of democracy.

Muqatadir Akhtar Shabbir, Advocate Supreme Court and Nasrullah Khan Babar, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Ch. Zafar Hussain Ahmad, Addl. A.G. along with Mudassar Riaz Malik, D.C., Amir Shafiq, ADC (Headquarters), Hammad, CTO, Lahore and Sajid Sharif, Law Officer for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 27th January, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---As a matter of background, The Mall Road Traders Association, approached the constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court to challenge Notice dated 16.07.2018 issued by the Zonal Officer (Regulation) Metropolitan Corporation, Lahore for the removal of signboards and advertisements from their shops within 24 hours. Learned Single Bench of the High Court while dealing with this issue in Order dated 20.12.2018 thought it best to also discuss and pass directions on to a totally different issue, which was not even before the Court, regarding wearing of helmets by motorcyclists plying their bikes on the Mall Road. Without there being any dispute before it, the Court examined the compliance by the motorcyclists of wearing helmets when plying their bikes on the Mall Road. The Court was informed that 99% motorcyclists were now wearing helmets. As if this was not enough, the Court exercising suo motu powers, passed the following direction in paragraph 13 of order dated 20.12.2018:

> "13. ... Today, it is also ordered, that the petrol pumps shall not fill in the petrol tanks of the motorcyclists who have not worn the helmets and in case any owner of the filling station is found to provide the petrol to those motorcyclist, the petrol pump will be sealed and heavy fine will be imposed. It has also been reported that some of the petrol pumps are providing helmets for few minutes i.e. during pouring the petrol, just to flout the order of this Court, therefore, in case if any owner of petrol pump is found doing this, he will be dealt with iron hands of law." (emphasis supplied)

The petitioners assailed this part of the Order in appeal (ICA) before the learned Division Bench of the High Court, who vide impugned order dated 24.01.2019 dismissed the appeal and upheld the Order of the learned Single Bench in the following manner:-

> "3...It is not denied by the learned counsel that every person riding a motorbike is required by law to wear a helmet. If that is so, the direction given by learned Single Judge in Chambers is not unlawful rather it is in accordance with law. (emphasis supplied)

2. After hearing the learned counsel for the parties, we at the very outset wish to point out that there must exist a dispute before the High Court before it exercises judicial power. "On the application of an aggrieved party" is an essential pre-requisite to invoke the constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 199 of the Constitution. There must be an application and an applicant to invoke the jurisdiction of judicial review as the High Court does not enjoy suo motu jurisdiction under Article 199.[1]

3. In the instant case, the direction against the motorcyclists (who do not wear helmets) and the petrol pump owners is a suo motu exercise of judicial power not available to the High Court under the Constitution. There was no such lis or dispute before the High Court. The grievance agitated before the High Court was regarding the signboards and advertisements put up by the traders on the Mall Road and this matter was not even remotely connected to the motorcyclists, helmets or the purchase of petrol by them.

4. The use of helmets is provided under section 89-A of the Provincial Motor Vehicle Ordinance,1965 which provides that no person shall drive or ride the pillion seat of a two-wheeled motor vehicle without wearing a crash helmet. While the requirement of wearing helmets by the motorcycle riders and those on the pillion seat is provided under the law, there is no legal backing for the impugned direction issued by the High Court. There is no law or executive policy supporting such a ban on sale and purchase of petrol by the petrol pump owners to the motorcyclists not wearing helmets. The impugned direction is above the law and has no legal legitimacy or sanctity. Such exercise of judicial power by a judge passes for judicial overreach i.e., exercise of judicial power without any backing of law and clearly interfering in and encroaching on the legislative and executive domain. At this junction it might be opportune to shed some light on the distinction between judicial review, judicial activism and judicial overreach. Judicial review is the power of the courts to examine the actions of the legislative, executive, and administrative arms of the government and to determine whether such actions are consistent with the Constitution. Actions judged inconsistent are declared unconstitutional and, therefore, null and void.[2] Judicial review is the genus and judicial activism or judicial restraint are its subspecies. While exercising judicial review, there comes a point when the decision rests on judicial subjectivity; which is not the personal view of a judge but his judicial approach. One judge may accord greater significance to the need for change, while the other may accord greater significance to the need for certainty and status quo. Both types of judges act within the zone of law; neither invalidates the decision of another branch of the Government unless it deviates from law and is unconstitutional. Activist judges (or judicial activism) are less influenced by considerations of security, preserving the status quo, and the institutional constraints. On the other hand, self-restrained judges (or judicial restraint) give significant weight to security, preserving the status quo and the institutional constraints. Both judicial activism and judicial self-restraint operate within the bounds of judicial legitimacy.[3]

5. It is one thing for a judge to progressively interpret the law because of human rights considerations about which he has substantial information. It is quite another to change or ignore the law for economic or social or political reasons based on polycentric considerations beyond the judge's expertise. According to Chief Justice John Marshall, judicial power is never exercised for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the judge; but always for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the legislature; or in other words, to the will of the law.[4] When courts exercise power outside the Constitution and the law and encroach upon the domain of the Legislature or the Executive, the courts commit judicial overreach.

6. Judicial overreach is when the judiciary starts interfering with the proper functioning of the legislative or executive organs of the government. This is totally uncharacteristic of the role of the judiciary envisaged under the Constitution and is most undesirable in a constitutional democracy. Judicial overreach is transgressive as it transforms the judicial role of adjudication and interpretation of law into that of judicial legislation or judicial policy making, thus encroaching upon the other branches of the Government and disregarding the fine line of separation of powers, upon which is pillared the very construct of constitutional democracy. Such judicial leap in the dark is also known as "judicial adventurism" or "judicial imperialism." A judge is to remain within the confines of the dispute brought before him and decide the matter by remaining within the confines of the law and the Constitution. The role of a constitutional judge is different from that of a King, who is free to exert power and pass orders of his choice over his subjects. Having taken an oath to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution, a constitutional judge cannot be forgetful of the fact that he himself, is first and foremost subject to the Constitution and the law. When judges uncontrollably tread the path of judicial overreach, they lower the public image of the judiciary and weaken the public trust reposed in the judicial institution. In doing so they violate their oath and turn a blind eye to their constitutional role. Constitutional democracy leans heavily on the rule of law, supremacy of the Constitution, independence of the judiciary and separation of powers. Judges by passing orders, which are not anchored in law and do not draw their legitimacy from the Constitution, unnerve the other branches of the Government and shake the very foundations of our democracy.

7. In the present case, the order passed by the single bench of the Lahore High Court has no law or executive policy behind it. It is a clear example of judicial legislation and thus judicial overreach. High Court is not vested with any such jurisdiction under the Constitution. Needless to mention, that the impugned direction by the High Court placing a ban on motorcyclists without a helmet to purchase petrol, loses sight of the fundamental rights guaranteed to the petrol pump owners and the motorcyclists under the Constitution. The impugned direction deprives the petrol pump owners of their business guaranteed under Article 18 of the Constitution and the motorcyclists of their right to mobility and right to livelihood guaranteed under Article 9 of the Constitution. The High Court, in its desire to make The Mall Road, an iconic thoroughfare, overstepped its jurisdiction, forgetting that a Judge is bound by the Constitution and the law.

8. We, therefore, for the above reasons, set aside the impugned orders passed by the learned Single Bench dated 20.12.2018, as well as, learned Division Bench of the High Court dated 24.01.2019 to the extent of the direction issued to the petrol pump owners of placing a ban on the sale of petrol to motorcyclists plying without a helmet. The impugned direction is declared to be unconstitutional, illegal and without jurisdiction. Resultantly, this petition is converted into appeal and allowed.

MWA/I-2/SC Petition allowed.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 581

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

Mst. SAMRANA NAWAZ and others---Appellants

Versus

M.C.B. BANK LTD. and others---Respondents

C. A. No. 17-L of 2019, C.P. 2646-L of 2018 and C.A. 364-L of 2020, decided on 16th March, 2021.

(Against the judgment dated 20.11.2018 passed in E.F.A. No.17 of 2012, judgment dated 20.11.2018 passed in E.F.A. No.620 of 2011 and judgment dated 03.02.2020 passed in E.F.A No.231782 of 2018 respectively by the Lahore High Court, Lahore).

(a) Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908)---

----O.XXI, R. 90, Second Proviso---Second proviso to O.XXI R.90, C.P.C.---Interpretation and scope---Sale of mortgaged property---Judgment debtor objecting to sale---Question as to whether a 20% deposit of the auction price was obligatory for an objector without an order by the Banking Court requiring the same to be deposited in terms of second proviso to R. 90 of O.XXI, C.P.C.---Held, that the second proviso to O.XXI, R. 90, C.P.C. ('the second proviso') contemplated a prior direction of the court to deposit the sum or furnish the security for entailing penal consequences of dismissing the objection petition due to non-deposit of the amount or non-furnishing of the security, which was required to be deposited or furnished under the second proviso for entertaining the objection petition---Punitive action could be taken only when the applicant failed to comply with the direction of the court, and in absence of such direction the objection petition could not be dismissed for non-deposit of the 20% of the sum realised at sale---Expression "as the Court may direct" used in the second proviso left little room to speculate whether the applicant/objector was to deposit the 20% of the sale amount at the time of filing the objection petition or at a subsequent stage under direction of the court---Furthermore the expression "such amount not exceeding twenty percent" further strengthened the position that the amount required to be deposited by the applicant/objector was to be determined by the court which must not exceed twenty percent of the sale amount but could be less than that---Applicant could not anticipate what the direction of the court would be in such regard and, therefore, he cannot deposit the requisite amount at the time of filing the objection petition---Mandatory requirement of the second proviso appeared to become operative only once the court determined the "amount not exceeding twenty percent of the sum realised at the sale" and directed the applicant/objector to deposit the same---Supreme Court observed that said interpretation of the second proviso was, however, in contrast to the view expressed by a three-member Bench in the case of Habib and Company v. MCB (PLD 2020 SC 227), and according to established practice and procedure the present three member Bench was bound by the view in the said case; that since only a Bench larger than the present three member Bench could reconsider the question as to the interpretation of the second proviso, and revisit (if found necessary) the view expressed by the three member Bench in the case of Habib and Company v. MCB (PLD 2020 SC 227), therefore, office should place the matter before the Chief Justice for appropriate order.

Alhamdi Begum v. NBP PLD 1976 Kar. 723; Shafique Shah v. Irshad Begum 1981 CLC 369; Rukhsana v. Muhammad Ilyas 1993 CLC 1949; Ali Match Industries v. IDB 1999 MLD 2127; Niamat Ali v. Muhammad Imran PLD 2003 Lah. 42; Sultan Mahmood v. HBFC 2006 YLR 2776 and Khursheed v. Inam-Ur-Rehman PLD 2009 Lah. 552 and Hindusthan Commercial Bank v. Punnu Sahu AIR 1970 SC 1384 ref.

Wali Khan v. Manager, ADB PLD 2003 SC 500 distinguished.

Habib and Company v. MCB PLD 2020 SC 227 contrary to language of second proviso to O.XXI, R. 90, C.P.C, but binding upon the present Three Member Bench till it was revisited by a larger Bench.

(b) Precedent---

----Judgments of the Supreme Court---Binding precedent---Scope---Earlier judgment of a Bench of the Supreme Court was binding not only upon the Benches of smaller numeric strength but also upon the Benches of coequal strength; a Bench of co-equal strength could not deviate from the view held by an earlier Bench, and if a contrary view had to be taken, then the proper course was to request the Chief Justice (of the Supreme Court) for constitution of a larger Bench to reconsider the earlier view---Smaller Bench cannot request for the constitution of a larger Bench to revisit the opinion of a larger Bench on any question or principle of law; only a Bench of co-equal strength can make such a request---As a judgment of a larger Bench was binding on the smaller Benches, judicial discipline and propriety demanded that a two member Bench should follow decision of a three member Bench, and if a two member Bench concluded that an earlier judgment of a three member Bench was so incorrect that in no circumstances could it be followed, the proper course for it was to set out the reasons why it could not agree with the judgment of the three member Bench and to refer the matter to the Chief Justice for constitution of a three member Bench---If the three member Bench also came to the conclusion that the earlier judgment of a three member Bench was not correct, then the reference of the matter to a five member larger Bench was justified---Two member Bench cannot jump over a three member Bench and directly ask for constitution of a Bench larger than three member Bench, to review the principle of law declared by that Bench.

Ardeshir Cowasjee v. KMCA 1999 SCMR 2883; Ameer Zeb v. State PLD 2012 SC 380; Muhammad Saleem v. Fazal Ahmad 1997 SCMR 315; Babar Shehzad v. Said Akbar 1999 SCMR 2518; All Pakistan Newspapers Society v. Federation PLD 2004 SC 600; Ata Ullah v. Surraya Parveen 2006 SCMR 1637; Azhar Siddiqui v. Federation PLD 2012 SC 774; Charat Cement Co. v. Federation PLD 2021 SC 327 and Pradip Chandra v. Pramod Chandra AIR 2002 SC 296 ref.

Shahid Ikram Siddiqui, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellants/ Petitioners.

Umar Farooq, Advocate Supreme Court, Ashar Elahi, Advocate Supreme Court and Hafeez Saeed Akhtar, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 16th March, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question before us requires interpretation of the second proviso to Rule 90 of Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 ("C.P.C."), which is reproduced hereunder for ready reference:

> Provided further that no such application shall be entertained unless the applicant deposits such amount not exceeding twenty per cent of the sum realised at the sale, or furnishes such security, as the Court may direct.

In C.P. No.756-L of 2020 (now numbered as C.A. 364-L of 2020), a two-member Bench of this Court after citing several judgments of this Court, and observing that "there appears to be some ambiguity in the law laid down by this court", granted leave to appeal to consider the question:

> whether a 20% deposit of the auction price is obligatory for an objector without an order requiring the same being passed by the Banking Court in terms of second proviso to Rule 90 of Order XXI, C.P.C.

2. Learned counsel for the appellants/ petitioners has contended that the deposit of an amount not exceeding 20% of the sum realized at the sale, or the furnishing of security, by the applicant making an application under Order XXI, Rule 90 of the C.P.C. is to be directed by the court, and the said proviso does not come into action without such direction. He has further submitted that the maximum amount that can be directed to be deposited for the purpose of entertaining the said application, must not exceed 20% of the sum realized at the sale; however, the court can reduce the same or can order for furnishing any security instead of deposit of any sum. On the other hand, learned counsel for the respondents have maintained that the applicant making an application under Order XXI, Rule 90, of the C.P.C. has to deposit of 20% of the sum realised at the sale without waiting for direction of the court in this regard, and the said application is to be accompanied by deposit of such amount for being entertained by the court. They have, in this regard, placed reliance upon the judgments of this Court reported in Messrs Habib and Company and others v. Muslim Commercial Bank Limited and others (2019 SCMR 1453) and Messrs Habib and Company and others v. Muslim Commercial Bank Limited and others (PLD 2020 SC 227). The impugned judgments expressing the same view have relied upon the judgments of this Court reported in Messrs Nice 'N' Easy

Fashion (Pvt.) Ltd. and others v. Allied Bank of Pakistan and another (2014 SCMR 1662) and Zakaria Ghani and 4 others v. Muhammad Ikhlaq Memon and 8 others (PLD 2016 SC 229).

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties on the said question, and with their able assistance have noted that the following judgments of this Court, as well as, of our High Courts are relevant to be considered for answering the question. Some of these judgments have dealt with the question under consideration while the others have made only passing remarks as to the nature, scope and applicability of the provisions of second proviso to Rule 90 of Order XXI, C.P.C.

Judgments of this Court

1. Wali Khan v. Manager, ADB PLD 2003 SC 500
2. Nadia Malik v. Makki Chemical Industries 2011 SCMR 1675
3. Nice 'N' Easy Fashion v. ABL 2014 SCMR 1662
4. Zakaria Ghani v. Muhammad Ikhlaq PLD 2016 SC 229
5. Muhammad Ashraf v. UBL 2019 SCMR 1004
6. Habib and Company v. MCB 2019 SCMR 1453
7. Habib and Company v. MCB PLD 2020 SC 227

Judgments of the High Courts

1. Alhamdi Begum v. NBP PLD 1976 Kar. 723 (DB)
2. Shafique Shah v. Irshad Begum 1981 CLC 369
3. Rukhsana v. Muhammad Ilyas 1993 CLC 1949
4. Ali Match Industries v. IDB 1999 MLD 2127 Pesh. (DB)
5. Niamat Ali v. Muhammad Imran PLD 2003 Lah. 42
6. Sultan Mahmood v. HBFC 2006 YLR 2776
7. Khursheed v. Inam-Ur-Rehman PLD 2009 Lah. 552 (DB)

4. The second proviso, under consideration in the present case, was added to Rule 90 of Order XXI of the C.P.C. in the year 1972 by the Law Reforms Ordinance, 1972, and the study of the above-noted cases shows that the question of its interpretation arose for the first time in the year 1975 and was considered by a Division Bench of the Sindh High Court in the case of Alhamdi Begum.[1] The Bench was consisted of two distinguished Judges, namely, Justice Dorab Patel and Justice Zaffar Hussain Mirza, who both were later elevated to the bench of this Court. In the said case, Justice Zaffar Hussain Mirza, with whom Justice Dorab Patel agreed, answered the question thus:

> 7. .A bare reading of the proviso in question shows that the bar on entertainment of the application results from the failure of the applicant to "deposit such amount not exceeding twenty per cent of the sum realised at the sale", or on the failure of the applicant to furnish "such security, as the Court may direct". Therefore, the bar on entertainment of application can become effective only when the Court first determines the amount to be deposited or security to be furnished and no applicant can possibly anticipate what the order of the Court would be in this regard, so that he could be put to the duty of tendering the requisite amount or security.
>
> 9. .In my humble opinion, the Court had to pass an order either to direct the deposit of a sum up to twenty per cent of the auction amount or to direct furnishing of security as was deemed appropriate under the circumstances, and then give an opportunity to the appellant to comply with such order. It was only when the appellant had failed to comply with such an order that his application under rule 90 could be summarily dismissed.

This interpretation put by the Sindh High Court to the provisions of the second proviso to Rule 90 of Order XXI, C.P.C. was later-on adopted and followed by the Peshawar High Court in the case of Ali Match Industries[2] and by the Lahore High Court in the cases of Shafique Shah,[3] Rukhsana,[4] Niamat Ali,[5] Sultan Mahmood,[6] and Khursheed.[7] In Niamat Ali and Khursheed the High Court held as under:

Niamat Ali v. Muhammad Imran PLD 2003 Lahore 42

> 5. ..the said proviso is an enabling and directory provision, which empowers the Court either to direct for the deposit of the amount not exceeding 20% of the sum realized at the sale or for the furnishing of the security. This has been left to the discretion of the Court, obviously to be exercised according to the judicial standard, but the direction of the Court in this behalf is sine qua non, as is clear from the following words of the proviso:

"as the Court may direct."

which controls and regulates the earlier part of the proviso. It is only, if the direction of the Court is not complied with, the objections can be dismissed for non-compliance thereof.

Khursheed v. Inam-Ur-Rehman PLD 2009 Lahore 552 (DB)

16. Mr. Kazmi is right in arguing that the order for the deposit of 20% should not have preceded, rather succeeded the objections. The logic and wisdom behind the proviso to Order XXI, Rule 90, C.P.C. obviously is to curtail and circumvent frivolous and baseless objection and it is only after examining the same, the Court could assess the quality and nature thereof and to decide whether a security should be required or the deposit and what should be the quantum, if the deposit is directed; obviously it is only after considering the worth and strength of the objections, the law has conferred a discretion upon the Court to pass appropriate order and not before that, but from the tenor of the above order, the Court virtually before even examining the objections has shunned and stultified the appellants' remedy of filing those and such order can aptly be termed as placing a horse before the cart, which is absolutely impermissible and against the spirit of law.

It was thus the considered and consistent view of the High Courts of the country, without a single dissent, that the proviso contemplates a prior direction of the court to deposit the sum or furnish the security for entailing penal consequences of dismissing the objection petition due to non-deposit of the amount or non-furnishing of the security, which is required to be deposited or furnished under the proviso for entertaining the objection petition: the punitive action can be taken only when the applicant fails to comply with the direction of the court, and in absence of such direction the objection petition cannot be dismissed for non-deposit of the 20% of the sum realised at sale. It may be pertinent to mention here that these judgments of the High Courts have not been considered, nor have they been specifically overruled, by this Court in any case.

5. Coming to the judgments of this Court, we have observed that in Wali Khan v. Manager, ADB (PLD 2003 SC 500) this Court set aside the order of the Banking Court, whereby that court had dismissed the objection petition of the judgment-debtors filed under Order XXI, Rule 90, C.P.C. mainly on the ground of non-deposit of the 20% of the auction-sale price, and remanded the matter to that court to decide the objection petition on merits. This Court made the said order with the following observation:

9. No doubt, the objectors had not deposited an amount up to twenty percent of the auction price in compliance with the orders passed by the Banking Court on 13-1-1998 and 4-3-1998 but the technical defect stood removed when a sum of Rs.2,50,000 was deposited by them before the target date fixed by the High Court. In the wake of the said deposit the matter ought to have been remanded to the Banking Court for decision on merits particularly when an application under section 148, C.P.C. was made at the lower forum by the objectors for enlargement of time for making the requisite deposit and appeal is a continuation of proceedings. The said deposit is envisaged by the second proviso to Rule 90, C.P.C. The rationale behind the proviso is to discourage frivolous objections. The deposit made by the appellants in the High Court, which far exceeds twenty percent of the auction price, certainly served the purpose for which the said proviso was incorporated in Rule 90 by means of an amendment through Law Reforms Ordinance, 1972.

It is evident that in this case the executing court had made direction for deposit of the 20% of the auction amount, which the judgment-debtors failed to comply with but they on appeal in the High Court made application for enlargement of the time for making the requisite deposit and also made the deposit within the time fixed by the High Court. Therefore, the question under consideration in the present case was neither raised nor decided in this case. In the case of Nadia Malik v. Makki Chemical Industries (2011 SCMR 1675), the executing court had not made any direction for deposit of the 20% of the auction amount nor had the objection petitioners made such deposit. The High Court on appeal of the objection petitioners set aside the sale on finding illegalities in the process of auction proceedings. The argument regarding non-deposit of the 20% of the auction amount was raised before this Court; it was, however, not entertained by this Court with the following observations:

17. .The issue of non-deposit of amount of 20% by the private respondents in exceptional circumstances can be condoned when the auction has been conducted in deviation of the mandatory provisions of Order XXI; Rules 54(2), 69, 85 and 86, C.P.C. and the executing court, in law, has erroneously confirmed the sale. The object of deposit of 20% of amount by a person objecting to sale under Rule 90 of Order XXI is meant to ensure that the objections are made by bona fide person and the rule is not misused to frustrate the sale, however, it could not be applied to the advantage of the appellant to have premium over his default.

The reading of other cases, except the review case of Habib and Company v. MCB,[8] also show that only the passing remarks (obiter dicta) were made by this Court without having been raised therein and deciding the question that is under consideration in the present case. Relevant observations made in those cases are reproduced hereunder for convenience of reference:

Nice 'N' Easy Fashion v. ABL 2014 SCMR 1662

10. The appellants have filed objection petition apparently on the ground that auction proceedings were irregular and the Banking Court has failed to follow the procedure provided under Order XXI, C.P.C. The appellants themselves moved the Banking Court under section 19(7) of the Ordinance and have not made an application under Order XXI, Rule 89 or 90, C.P.C. Even if the objection petition of the appellants is treated as an Application under Order XXI, Rule 89 or 90, C.P.C., then the said Rules mandate that the objector should deposit the amounts mentioned therein along with the application. In absence of the deposit, as mandated by the Rules, the application and/or objections cannot be entertained by a Banking Court.

Zakaria Ghani v. Muhammad Ikhlaq PLD 2016 SC 229

4. There is a great deal of difference between these two provisions of law. Under Order XXI, Rule 89 a judgment debtor is not obligated to show any legal infirmity in the order of sale. He has an unqualified right to have the sale set aside provided he complies with the conditions laid down therein, namely, that he should deposit the full decretal amount in court plus 5% to be paid to the auction purchaser. The time period for making such an application is 30 days. Admittedly he failed to do so and accordingly, it follows, by necessary implication of law that a vested right accrued in favour of the auction purchaser. The second provision, namely, Order XXI, Rule 90, C.P.C., proceeds on a different basis. In order to succeed it is mandatory for the judgment debtor to satisfy the court, on the merits, that the sale should be set aside on the ground of a material irregularity, or fraud, in publishing or conducting it. Yet another condition is prescribed by means of the proviso thereto which stipulates that no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud unless, upon the facts proved before the Court, it is established that the judgment debtor has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud. Yet another condition is prescribed by the second proviso which states that no application shall be entertained in terms of this provision of law unless and until the judgment debtor deposits an amount equal to 20% of the sum realized at the sale or furnish such security as the court may direct. These are stringent conditions which make the policy of the law crystal clear. A mere allegation is not sufficient. It has to be established that not merely an irregularity but a material irregularity has taken place, or, in the alternative, that fraud has been perpetrated in the process of carrying out the sale. Then is super added the requirement that even if these conditions are complied with the judgment debtor must satisfy the court that he has sustained a substantial injury by reason thereof. Finally, in order to discourage frivolous applications intended to delay the execution of the decree it is mandatory on the judgment debtor to deposit 20% of the sale amount or furnish such security as the court may direct.

Muhammad Ashraf v. UBL 2019 SCMR 1004

8. The mainstay of the contentions of the learned counsel for the Respondent Bank and the auction purchaser is the alleged non-deposit of 20% of the decretal amount in terms of Order XXI, Rule 90, C.P.C. Such is also the primary basis of the impugned judgment dated 06.06.2016 of the learned High Court. Without dwelling further on this aspect of the matter, we are constrained to observe that there can be no escape from the fact that even in the absence of an Objection Petition, learned Executing Court is not required to automatically confirm an auction mechanically and without application of mind by not even, considering the law applicable.

Habib and Company v. MCB 2019 SCMR 1453

5. Having heard the learned counsel for the petitioners, we find that there was no material on record brought by the petitioners to show that the property had been sold at a throwaway price. Even otherwise, the objection petition filed by the petitioners was misconceived and not maintainable in view of the fact that the petitioners did not deposit 20% of the highest bid with their objection petition. The provisions of Order XXI, Rule 90, C.P.C. have come under discussion in various judgments pronounced by this Court in which it has conclusively been held that the statutory deposit of 20% by the judgment debtor is mandatory and that without such a deposit the objection application under Order XXI, Rule 90, C.P.C. is not maintainable.

6. It was only in the review case of Habib and Company v. MCB (PLD 2020 SC 227) that the question, under consideration in the present case, was specifically raised by the counsel for the petitioners and decided by this Court. The argument of the counsel for the petitioners and the decision of this Court are as follows:

4. Learned Counsel for the Petitioners has based his arguments mainly on the contention that there was no specific order passed by the court directing the Petitioner to deposit 20% of the auction price with the objection petition filed by the Petitioners under Order XXI, Rule 90 of the C.P.C. In the absence of such an order by the executing court, the learned counsel contends, the Petitioners' objection petition could not be dismissed by the executing court and that consequently both the High Court and this Court in the Impugned Order have erred in correctly applying the Law.

7. We have heard the learned Counsel for the Petitioners and have also perused the record with his assistance. As far as his first contention regarding the requirement of depositing 20% of the auction price with an objection petition under Order XXI, Rule 90 of the C.P.C. is concerned, we note that the requirement itself is derived from the second proviso of Order XXI, Rule 90 itself . ..

A bare reading of the second proviso to Order XXI, Rule 90 clearly shows that the deposit of a sum of 20% of the auction price is mandatory for the application to be entertained in the first place, i.e. an application will not be maintained unless such a sum is deposited. A closer reading of the provision also shows that the discretion provided to the court is not with respect to furnishing of the security at all, but rather the amount of the security to be deposited.

8. In our view, the correct reading of the second proviso to Order XXI, Rule 90 of the C.P.C. is that it mandates every application under the provision to be accompanied by 20% of the auction price in order to be entertained. If the argument of the learned counsel were to be accepted the entire legislative intent of adding the said, proviso to Order XXI, Rule 90 would clearly be defeated.

..

Hence, we reject the interpretation of the proviso advanced by the learned Counsel for the Petitioners.

10. It is also evident from the record and the same has also been admitted by learned Counsel for the Petitioners, that the Petitioners filed the objection petition under Order XXI, Rule 90 on 22.09.2003 and the cheques deposited by the Petitioners in support of this objection petition were submitted on 03.03.2004. As such, the objection petition was not maintainable from its inception and any later deposit of money cannot be used to argue otherwise, as was held by us in the Impugned Order.

(Emphasis added)

With utmost respect, we are constrained to observe that the second proviso to Rule 90, Order XXI, C.P.C. where an applicant is to "deposit such amount not exceeding twenty per cent of the sum realised at the sale", or "furnish such security", as the Court may direct, went unnoticed. The expression "as the Court may direct" leaves little room to speculate whether the applicant is to deposit the 20% of the sale amount at the time of filing the objection petition or at a subsequent stage under direction of the court. The expression "such amount not exceeding twenty percent" further strengthens the position that the amount required to be deposited by the applicant is to be determined by the court which must not exceed twenty percent of the sale amount but can be less than that. An applicant cannot anticipate what the direction of the court would be in this regard and, therefore, he cannot deposit the requisite amount at the time of filing the objection petition. The mandatory requirement of the second proviso appears to become operative only once the court determines the "amount not exceeding twenty percent of the sum realised at the sale" and directs the applicant to deposit the same. The observations made by the learned Bench that second proviso to Order XXI, Rule 90 of the C.P.C. mandates every application under the provision to be accompanied by 20% of the auction price in order to be entertained and an objection petition which is not so accompanied by the deposit of 20% of the auction sale price is not maintainable from its inception, appears to be contrary to the language of the proviso. It appears that the learned Bench was influenced, in making these observations, by the expression "entertained" used in the proviso. The expression "entertain", as observed by the Sindh High Court in Alhamdi Begum case[9] and by the Indian Supreme Court in Punnu Sahu case[10] does not refer to the filing of the objection petition by the applicant, or receiving of the objection petition by the court. It means to "adjudicate upon" or "proceed to consider merits of" the objection petition; the barring clause of the proviso applies only to the consideration of the objection petition on merits for setting aside the sale, and does not prohibit the court from applying its judicial mind to the question as to determining the quantum of sum to be deposited or the nature of security to be furnished, instead of deposit of sum, by the applicant.

7. We are, however, bound by the judgment delivered by a Bench of co-equal strength, i.e., a three member Bench, in the said case and therefore cannot hold otherwise. It is now a well-established principle of practice and procedure of this Court that the earlier judgment of a Bench of this Court is binding not only upon the Benches of smaller numeric strength but also upon the Benches of coequal strength; a Bench of co-equal strength cannot deviate from the view held by an earlier Bench, and if a contrary view has to be taken, then the proper course is to request the Hon'ble Chief Justice for constitution of a larger Bench to reconsider the earlier view.[11] For, the law declared by this Court should be clear, certain and consistent, as it is binding on all other courts of the country, under Article 189 of the Constitution of Pakistan, 1973. The doctrine of binding precedent promotes certainty and consistency in judicial decisions, and ensures an organic and systematic development of the law.

8. It would be important to mention here that our learned brother, Justice Umar Ata Bandial, was a member of the three member Bench that decided the case of Habib and Company (supra) and was also the member, and author of the order, of the two member Bench that granted leave in C.P. No.756-L of 2020 (now numbered as C.A. 364-L of 2020) to consider the question under discussion. This shows that his lordship also doubted the correctness of the view expressed in the said case and deemed it proper to re-consider the same. The two-Member Bench that granted the leave, however, did not make a request to the Hon'ble Chief Justice for constitution of a larger Bench to reconsider the question, for a smaller Bench cannot request for the constitution of a larger Bench to revisit the opinion of a larger Bench on any question or principle of law; only a Bench of co-equal strength can make such a request. As a judgment of a larger Bench is binding on the smaller Benches,[12] judicial discipline and propriety demand that a two member Bench should follow decision of a three member Bench, and if a two member Bench concludes that an earlier judgment of a three member Bench is so incorrect that in no circumstances can it be followed, the proper course for it is to set out the reasons why it could not agree with the judgment of the three member Bench and to refer the matter to the Hon'ble Chief Justice for constitution of a three member Bench. If the three member Bench also comes to the conclusion that the earlier judgment of a three member Bench is not correct, then the reference of the matter to a five member larger Bench is justified. A two member

Bench cannot jump over a three member Bench and directly ask for constitution of a Bench larger than three member Bench, to review the principle of law declared by that Bench.[13]

9. In these circumstances, we are of the opinion that only a Bench larger than a three member Bench can reconsider the question as to the interpretation of the second proviso to Rule 90 of Order XXI of CPC, and revisit (if found necessary) the view expressed by a three member Bench in the case of Habib and Company v. MCB (PLD 2020 SC 227). We, therefore, direct the office to place the matter before the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan for appropriate order.

10. It is always considered necessary that execution of a decree should be made in the most expeditious manner. The present matter involves execution of the decrees. The office shall, therefore, take it as an urgent matter and place it before the Hon'ble Chief Justice, forthwith.

C.M.A. No.3753-L/2019 in C.A. 17-L of 2019,

C.M.A. No.3409-L/ 2014 in C.P. 2646-L of 2018

11. In the meanwhile, the status quo shall be maintained.

MWA/S-15/SC Order accordingly.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 600

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

NAVEED ASGHAR and 2 others---Petitioners

Versus

The STATE---Respondent

Jail Petition No. 147 of 2016, decided on 7th December, 2020.

(Against the judgment of the Lahore High Court, Rawalpindi Bench, Rawalpindi dated 12.02.2016 passed in Criminal Appeal No. 16-J of 2011, Criminal Revision No. 31 of 2011 and M.R. No. 25 of 2011).

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----Ss. 374, 375, 376 & 423---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9, 10A & 14---Murder reference sent by the Trial Court to the High Court for confirmation of death sentence---Scope---Duty cast on the High Court in deciding a murder reference under S.374, Cr.P.C. was a heavy one and could only be discharged once the entire evidence was reappraised to fully exhaust all the points having a bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the convicted person---High Court, in dealing with a murder reference, was not only to see whether the order passed by the Trial Court was correct, but to examine the case for itself and even direct a further enquiry or the taking of additional evidence if the Court considered it desirable in order to ascertain the guilt or the innocence of the convicted person---Scope of a murder reference and principles in relation thereto stated.

Normally, the High Courts hear and decide the appeal filed by the convicted person and the reference sent by the trial court for confirmation of the death sentence, together. While doing so the Judges of the High Courts some times remain content with examining and deciding only the arguments and contentions advanced in appeal, and do not by themselves scrutinize the whole material available on record of the case. Apart from deciding those arguments and contentions, it was incumbent upon the High Courts, in discharge of their statutory duty under sections 375 and 376 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 ("Cr.P.C."), to read and appraise each and every piece of evidence, and to examine also whether any evidence had been improperly admitted or excluded, or had been misread or non-read by the trial court.

Ordinarily, in a criminal appeal against conviction, the appellate Court, under section 423 of the Cr.P.C., could dismiss the appeal if the court was of the opinion that there was no sufficient ground for interference, after examining all the grounds urged before it for challenging the correctness of the decision given by the trial court. It was not necessary for the appellate court to examine the entire record for the purpose of arriving at an independent decision of its own whether the conviction of the appellant was fully justified. The position was, however, different where the appeal was by an accused who was sentenced to death, so that the High Court dealing with the appeal had before it, simultaneously with the appeal, a reference for confirmation of the capital sentence under section 374 of the Cr.P.C. On a reference for confirmation of sentence of death, the High Court was required to proceed in accordance with sections 375 and 376 of the Cr.P.C. and the provisions of these sections made it clear that the duty of the High Court, in dealing with the reference, was not only to see whether the order passed by the trial court was correct, but to examine the case for itself and even direct a further enquiry or the taking of additional evidence if the Court considered it desirable in order to ascertain the guilt or the innocence of the convicted person.

Bhupendra Singh v. State of Punjab AIR 1968 SC 1438 ref.

Section 374 of the Cr.P.C. provided that when the Court of Session passed sentence of death, the proceedings shall be submitted to the High Court and the sentence shall not be executed unless it was confirmed by the High Court. As the death sentence passed by the trial court, i.e., the Court of Session, could not be executed without being it confirmed by the High Court, proceedings before the High Court on reference under section 374, Cr.P.C. was yet another tier of judicial assessment of the evidence to examine "any point bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the convicted person." The High Court had been given very wide powers to prevent any possible miscarriage of justice. The proceedings were a reappraisal and reassessment of the entire facts of the case and of the law applicable. This extensive power actually cast an onerous duty on the High Court to ensure safe administration of criminal justice by considering in the reference proceedings all aspects of the case and coming to an independent conclusion, apart from the view expressed by the Court of Session. The High Court had to decide on reappraisal of the whole evidence whether the conviction was justified and, having regard to the circumstances of the case, whether the sentence of death was appropriate.

Jumman v. State of Punjab AIR 1957 SC 469; Ram Shankar v. State of West Bengal AIR 1962 SC 1239 and Masalti v. State of U.P. AIR 1965 SC 202 ref.

The worth and sanctity of human life were a test and mark of civilized societies, and were increasingly reflected in the criminal jurisprudence. The Legislature had provided in confirmation proceedings a final safeguard and had laid this duty upon the High Court. The duty of judgment was laid in the first instance upon the trial Judge. But equally and with all that weight, the High Court in confirmation proceedings must finally weigh for itself the whole evidence, and was to confirm the conviction and sentence or make any other order according to its own final conclusion on the guilt or innocence of the sentenced person in the discharge of the duty laid upon it by law. Right to life and liberty, right to fair trial and right to dignity were fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 9, 10A and 14 of the Constitution. The importance of human life went to the heart of these fundamental rights, the rigorous two-tiered process of appraisal, assessment and examination under section 374, Cr.P.C. also met the test of these fundamental rights. The duty cast on the High Court in deciding a murder reference under section 374, Cr.P.C. was a heavy one and could only be discharged once the entire evidence was reappraised to fully exhaust all the points having a bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the convicted person.

AIR 1921 Sindh 84 ref.

(b) Criminal trial---

----Heinous nature of crime---Nature of the crime should not influence the mind of the judge---Duty of the court was to assess the probative value (weight) of every piece of evidence available on record in accordance with the settled principles of appreciation of evidence, in a dispassionate, systematic and structured manner without being influenced by the nature of the allegations.

The frightful nature of crime should not blur the eyes of justice, allowing emotions triggered by the horrifying nature of the offence to prejudge the accused. Cases were to be decided on the basis of evidence and evidence alone and not on the basis of sentiments and emotions. Gruesome, heinous or brutal nature of the offence may be relevant at the stage of awarding suitable punishment after conviction; but it was totally irrelevant at the stage of appraising or reappraising the evidence available on record to determine guilt of the accused person, as possibility of an innocent person having been wrongly involved in cases of such nature could not be ruled out.

Observations of the Courts recorded in judgments Muhammad Fazil v. State 1982 PCr.LJ 510; Abdul Ghaffar v. State 2005 PCr.LJ 887; Muhammad Arif v. State 2006 PCr.LJ 1827 and Kazim Hussain v. State 2008 PCr.LJ 971 in regard to deciding cases on basis of evidence alone and not on the basis of sentiments and emotions approved.

Azeem Khan v. Mujahid Khan 2016 SCMR 274 ref.

No matter how heinous the crime, the constitutional guarantee of fair trial (under Article 10A of the Constitution) could not be taken away from the accused. It was, therefore, duty of the court to assess the probative value (weight) of every piece of evidence available on record in accordance with the settled principles of appreciation of evidence, in a dispassionate, systematic and structured manner without being influenced by the nature of the allegations. Any tendency to strain or stretch or haphazardly appreciate evidence to reach a desired or popular decision in a case must be scrupulously avoided or else highly deleterious results seriously affecting proper administration of criminal justice would follow.

State v. Mushtaq Ahmad PLD 1973 SC 418 ref.

(c) Criminal trial---

----Presumption of innocence of accused---Scope---Accused person was presumed to be innocent till the time he was proven guilty beyond reasonable doubt, and this presumption of his innocence continued until the prosecution succeeded in proving the charge against him beyond reasonable doubt on the basis of legally admissible, confidence inspiring, trustworthy and reliable evidence. [p. 617] F

(d) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 10-A---Right to fair trial---Scope---Principles of fair trial, guaranteed as a Fundamental Right under Art. 10-A of the Constitution, were to be read as an integral part of every sub-constitutional legislative instrument that dealt with determination of civil rights and obligations of, or criminal charge against, any person.

(e) Criminal trial---

---Circumstantial evidence---Standard of care required for relying on circumstantial evidence stated.

Circumstantial evidence may some times be conclusive, but it must always be narrowly examined. In cases that rested entirely on circumstantial evidence, it was of the utmost importance that the circumstances should be ascertained with minute care and caution, before any conclusion or inference adverse to the accused person was drawn. The process of inference and deduction involved in such cases was of a delicate and perplexing character, liable to numerous causes of fallacy. This danger pointed the need for great caution in accepting proof of the facts and circumstances, before they were held to be established for the purpose of drawing inferences therefrom. A mere concurrence of circumstances, some or all of which were supported by defective or inadequate evidence, could create a specious appearance, leading to fallacious inferences. Hence, it was necessary that only such circumstances should be accepted as the basis of inferences that were, on careful examination of the evidence, found to be well-established. A high quality of evidence was, therefore, required to prove the facts and circumstances from which the inference of the guilt of the accused person was to be drawn.

Lejzor Teper v. Queen PLD 1952 PC 117; Fazal Elahi v. Crown PLD 1953 FC 214 and Saeed Ahmad v. Muhammad Irfan PLD 1986 SC 690 ref.

There were chances of fabricating evidence in cases that were based solely on circumstantial evidence; therefore, the court, in such cases, should take extra care and caution to examine the evidence with pure judicial approach on strict legal standards to satisfy itself about its proof, probative value and reliability. When there were apparent indications of possibility of fabricating evidence by the investigating officer in making the case, the court must be watchful against the trap, which may misled to drawing a false inference, and satisfy itself about the fair and genuine collection of such evidence. The failure of the court to observe such care and caution could adversely affect the proper and safe administration of criminal justice.

Hashim Qasim v. State 2017 SCMR 986 and Fayyaz Ahmad v. State 2017 SCMR 2026 ref.

(f) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----S. 302(b)---Qatl-i-amd---Circumstantial evidence---Approach to determine sufficiency of circumstantial evidence stated.

The settled approach to deal with the question as to sufficiency of circumstantial evidence for conviction of the accused person was that, if, on the facts and circumstances proved, no hypothesis consistent with the innocence of the accused person could be suggested, the case was fit for conviction of the accused person on such conclusion; however, if such facts and circumstances could be reconciled with any reasonable hypothesis compatible with the innocence of the appellant, the case was to be treated one of insufficient evidence, resulting in acquittal of the accused person. Circumstantial evidence, in a murder case, should be like a well-knit chain, one end of which touched the dead body of the deceased and the other the neck of the accused. No link in chain of the circumstances should be broken and the circumstances should be such as cannot be explained away on any reasonable hypothesis other than guilt of accused person. Chain of such facts and circumstances had to be completed to establish guilt of the accused person beyond reasonable doubt and to make the plea of his being innocent incompatible with the weight of evidence against him. Any link missing from the chain broke the whole chain and rendered the same unreliable; in that event, conviction could not be safely recorded, especially on a capital charge. Therefore, if the circumstantial evidence was found not of the said standard and quality, it would be highly unsafe to rely upon the same for conviction; rather, not to rely upon such evidence would a better and a safer course.

Siraj v. Crown PLD 1956 FC 123; Nazir Hossain v. State 1969 SCMR 388; Sairan v. State PLD 1970 SC 56; Karamat Hussain v. State 1972 SCMR 15; Saeed Ahmad v. Muhammad Irfan PLD 1986 SC 690; Barkat Ali v. Karam Elahi 1992 SCMR 1047; Ibrahim v. State 2009 SCMR 407; Muhammad Hussain v. State 2011 SCMR 1127; Imran v. State 2015 SCMR 155 and Azeem Khan v. Mujahid Khan 2016 SCMR 274 ref.

(g) Criminal trial---

----Chance witness, evidence of---Scope---Chance witness was witness who in view of his place of residence or occupation and in the ordinary course of events was not supposed to be present at the place of the occurrence but claimed to be there by chance---Testimony of such witness required cautious scrutiny and was not accepted unless he gave satisfactory explanation of his presence at or near the place of the occurrence at the relevant time.

Javed Ahmad v. State 1978 SCMR 114; Zafar Hayat v. State 1995 SCMR 896; Muhammad Rafique v. State 2004 SCMR 755; Muhammad Khalid v. Abdullah 2008 SCMR 158; Sughra Begum v. Qaiser Pervez 2015 SCMR 1142 and Ibrar Hussain v. State 2020 SCMR 1850 ref.

(h) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 392, 452 & 34---Qatl-i-amd, robbery, house trespass, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Chance witness, evidence of---Explanation given by the chance witness, who saw the accused persons entering the house of the deceased, was that he happened to pass by in front of the house of the deceased, as he was going from his house to a nearby village for condolence on the death of the father of a person---However, said witness did not mention the name of the person on whose father's death he was going for condolence; nor could he tell the name of the late person on whose death he was going for condolence---Further, his assertion of going for condolence at such odd hours, i.e., about 08:30 p.m., on a winter-night of the month of January did not fit in the customary time of visiting people for condolence on death of someone, in rural areas: people usually made such visits during daytime---Explanation of chance witness of being present before the house of the deceased, at the relevant time was thus found far less than being satisfactory one, and therefore, his testimony could be discarded on such ground alone---Prosecution had failed to complete the chain of circumstances so as to establish conclusively the guilt of the accused persons in a manner that could rule out every hypothesis inconsistent with their innocence---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and the accused persons were acquitted of the charges against them.

(i) Criminal trial---

----Witness---Material improvements made by a witness in his statement---Effect---Deliberate and dishonest improvements made by a witness in his statement to strengthen the prosecution case cast serious doubts on his veracity, and made him untrustworthy and unreliable---Relying on the testimony of such witness was quite unsafe, even on facts deposed by him other than those improvements unless it received corroboration from some other independent piece of reliable evidence.

Hadi Bakhsh v. State PLD 1963 (W. P.) Karachi 805; Shahzada v. Hamidullah 1968 PCr.LJ 176; Amir Zaman v. Mahboob 1985 SCMR 685; Saeed Muhammad v. State 1993 SCMR 550; Khalid Javed v. State 2003 SCMR 1419; Akhtar Ali v. State 2008 SCMR 6; Muhammad Rafique v. State 2010 SCMR 385; Muhammad Saleem v. Muhammad Azan 2011 SCMR 474; Sardar Bibi v. Munir Ahmed 2017 SCMR 344 and 1968 PCr.LJ 176 ref.

(j) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 392, 452 & 34---Qatl-i-amd, robbery, house trespass, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Material improvements made by a witness in his statement---Effect---Witness who claimed to have seen the accused persons entering the house of the deceased stated to the investigation officer in his statement recorded under S.161, Cr.P.C. that due to darkness he could not recognize the accused persons when he saw them standing at the door of the house of the deceased; but in his statement in court he said that the accused persons were those whom he saw at the door of the deceased---Said witness also stated that there was light, not darkness, at the door of the house of the deceased at that time---Such improvement made by the witness was very glaring and material---Said witness admitted in his cross-examination that he had not mentioned any identifying features, like age, height, colour of complexion etc., of the persons in his statement to the investigating officer---If the witness had really seen and recognized the persons standing at the door of the deceased, he would definitely have described their identifiable features to the investigating officer, and had he described such recognizable features of those persons, the investigating officer would have conducted the test identification of the accused persons on their arrest in the case---Such deliberate and dishonest improvement made by the witness made him unreliable---Prosecution had failed to complete the chain of circumstances so as to establish conclusively the guilt of the accused persons in a manner that could rule out every hypothesis inconsistent with their innocence---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and the accused persons were acquitted of the charges against them.

(k) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 392, 452 & 34---Qatl-i-amd, robbery, house trespass, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Recovery of motorcycle allegedly used for reaching the place of occurrence---No specification of the motorcycle, i.e., its make, colour, engine power, or registration number was mentioned in the FIR, therefore, it could not be said with certainty that it was the motorcycle that the chance witness saw with the persons outside the house of the deceased and was mentioned in the FIR---Statement of the investigating officer that the seat-cover of the recovered motorcycle was bloodstained and such fact suggested that it was the same motorcycle that was used in the crime was not found confidence inspiring; had the seat-cover of the motorcycle been really bloodstained, the investigating officer would have sent the same for examination by the Chemical Examiner for ascertaining whether the bloodstain was that of human blood and whether that bloodstain matched with the blood of any of the deceased persons or the accused persons---In absence of the reports of the Chemical Examiner and the Serologist on these facts, the assertion of the investigating officer as to use of the said motorcycle in commission of the crime carried no legal worth---Failure on part of the investigating officer to ascertain registration number and name of the registered owner of the motorcycle was also fatal to his assertion that the recovered motorcycle belonged to one of the accused persons---Non-preparation of the site-map of the place of recovery of motorcycle added further suspicion to the alleged recovery of the motorcycle from the house of one of the accused persons---Recovery of the motorcycle, in view of the said omissions made by the investigating officer, was found completely deficient as an incriminatory piece of circumstantial evidence to connect the accused persons with the commission of the offence---Prosecution had failed to complete the chain of circumstances so as to establish conclusively the guilt of the accused persons in a manner that could rule out every hypothesis inconsistent with their innocence---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and the accused persons were acquitted of the charges against them.

(l) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 392, 452 & 34---Qatl-i-amd, robbery, house trespass, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Recovery of stolen items on the alleged pointation of accused persons---Investigating officer deposed that during the inspection of the place of occurrence he found empty boxes of jewellery scattered there which indicated the commission of offence of robbery---Prosecution story of interrogation of the accused persons at the place of their arrest (a snooker club) and then leading of the accused persons from the very place of their arrest to the recoveries of the alleged stolen property appeared to be intrinsically doubtful: it did not even fit in with the ordinary human conduct---Accused persons who, as per the prosecution story, were enjoying play snooker in a snooker club, admitted the commission of offence that may entail death penalty forthwith on their arrest, and not only admitted the commission of offence but also cooperated well to lead to the recovery of the stolen property then and there---Such story was very hard to believe for a prudent person---Non-mentioning the alleged fact of finding any scattered jewellery boxes at the place of occurrence in the FIR shook the foundation of the prosecution story---Investigating officer also stated in his examination-in-chief that a crime scene expert was summoned at the spot, who took photographs of the dead bodies and the place of occurrence---All said photographs were available on record but in none of them were there any scattered empty jewellery boxes---Said photographs, tendered in evidence by the prosecution itself, completely negated the alleged fact of finding scattered empty jewellery boxes at the place of occurrence---Prosecution had failed to complete the chain of circumstances so as to establish conclusively the guilt of the accused persons in a manner that could rule out every hypothesis inconsistent with their innocence---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and the accused persons were acquitted of the charges against them.

(m) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----S. 392---Robbery---Recovery of alleged stolen property in absence of prior description---Effect---In absence of any description of the stolen property given in the FIR, or in the supplementary statement of the complainant or any witness recorded under S.161, Cr.P.C., prior to the alleged recovery, it could not be said with certainty the recovered property was that which was allegedly stolen.

Observations of the Federal Shariat Court on the issue of recovery of alleged stolen property in absence of prior description made in judgments Noor Ullah v. State 2012 YLR 2618; Changez v. Shahid 2018 MLD 1136 and Tariq Hussain v. State 2018 MLD 1573 approved

(n) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 392, 452 & 34---Qatl-i-amd , robbery, house trespass, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Recovery of stolen items on the alleged pointation of accused persons---Investigating officer neither got the allegedly stolen laptop and cameras identified from the surviving daughters of the deceased, nor got done forensic audit of these articles from the expert concerned who may have retrieved data therefrom indicating the persons who were in use of these cameras and laptop---Such failure on part of the investigating officer made the recovery of said articles, even if presumed to have been effected from the accused persons, useless for the purpose of crafting any link in the chain of circumstantial evidence against the accused persons to connect them with the commission of offences of robbery and murders---Prosecution had failed to complete the chain of circumstances so as to establish conclusively the guilt of the accused persons in a manner that could rule out every hypothesis inconsistent with their innocence---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and the accused persons were acquitted of the charges against them.

(o) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 392, 452 & 34---Qatl-i-amd, robbery, house trespass, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Recovery of mobile phones belonging to the deceased persons on the alleged pointation of accused persons---Clear contradiction existed in the oral stance of the investigation officer and the proceedings of recovery reduced into writing by him in the recovery memos, which made the recoveries of mobile phones doubtful---Furthermore it was also not consistent with the normal human conduct that the offenders would have taken the mobiles phones of some of the deceased persons, and had left the mobile phone of one of the deceased laying it on a conspicuous place, i.e., on a table beside the dead body of the said deceased---Non-mentioning the theft of the mobile phones of the deceased persons in the FIR or in the supplementary statement of the complainant, non-joining in investigation the brothers of the accused persons who had allegedly brought the mobile phones to the investigating officer, and not bringing on record their names and the details as to the place from where they got the said mobile phones, all these omissions, also made the alleged recoveries unreliable---Prosecution had failed to complete the chain of circumstances so as to establish conclusively the guilt of the accused persons in a manner that could rule out every hypothesis inconsistent with their innocence---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and the accused persons were acquitted of the charges against them.

(p) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 392, 452 & 34---Qatl-i-amd, robbery, house trespass, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Recovery of the bloodstained weapons of offence on the alleged pointation of accused persons---Both the witnesses associated during recovery proceedings were close relatives of the complainant and astonishingly they reached the police station at the time when the investigating officer planned to make a raid for arrest of the accused persons and also when the accused persons were ready to cooperate for making recoveries during investigation---Prosecution story became further doubtful as particulars of said witnesses were written on the recovery-memos in handwriting patently different from all other writings thereon; it indicated that the particulars of the witnesses were added and their signatures obtained subsequently on the already prepared recovery memos---As per version of the investigating officer, there were 7/8 shops and two villages near the place of alleged recoveries, but no person from those nearby shops and villages was associated in the recovery-proceedings---Although it was a fact that the persons from the general public usually did not come forward to be witness to such police proceedings, but the assertion of the investigating officer that no person of the locality other than the said witnesses was there to see the proceedings that allegedly continued for about three hours of the day made the proceedings further doubtful---Story of wrapping up bloodstained knives, the alleged weapons of offence and gloves into polythene shopper bags and then burying them in the ground close to a water stream by the offenders, for a future recovery therefrom, instead of throwing them into that water stream or a nearby river also did not appeal to a prudent mind---Prosecution had failed to complete the chain of circumstances so as to establish conclusively the guilt of the accused persons in a manner that could rule out every hypothesis inconsistent with their innocence---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and the accused persons were acquitted of the charges against them.

2017 SCMR 344 and 2017 SCMR 486 ref.

(q) Criminal trial---

----Recovery---Recovery of weapon of offence--- Corroborative evidence---Scope---Recovery of weapon of offence was only a corroborative piece of evidence; and in absence of substantive evidence, it was not considered sufficient to hold the accused person guilty of the offence charged---When substantive evidence failed to connect the accused person with the commission of offence or was disbelieved, corroborative evidence was of no help to the prosecution as the corroborative evidence could not by itself prove the prosecution case.

Saifullah v. State 1985 SCMR 410; Ali Muhammad v. Bashir Ahmed 2003 SCMR 868; Israr-ul-Haq v. Muhammad Fayyaz 2007 SCMR 1427; Hayatullah v. State 2018 SCMR 2092; PLD 1956 FC 123 and 1985 SCMR 410 ref.

(r) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 302(b), 392, 452 & 34---Qatl-i-amd, robbery, house trespass, common intention---Reappraisal of evidence---Recovery of the bloodstained knives (churri) on the alleged pointation of accused persons---Such recovery, without a positive forensic report matching the blood found thereon with that of the deceased, could not be considered as a substantive or corroborative piece of evidence against the accused persons to connect them with the commission of offence---Prosecution had failed to complete the chain of circumstances so as to establish conclusively the guilt of the accused persons---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and the accused persons were acquitted of the charges against them.

2015 SCMR 840; 2003 SCMR 1419; 2011 SCMR 1233 and 2017 SCMR 486 ref.

(s) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----S. 302(b)---Qatl-i-amd---Medical evidence---Scope---Medical evidence was in the nature of supporting, confirmatory or explanatory of the direct or circumstantial evidence, and was not "corroborative evidence" in the sense the term was used in legal parlance for a piece of evidence that itself also had some probative force to connect the accused person with the commission of offence---Medical evidence by itself did not throw any light on the identity of the offender---Such evidence may confirm the available substantive evidence with regard to certain facts including seat of the injury, nature of the injury, cause of the death, kind of the weapon used in the occurrence, duration between the injuries and the death, and presence of an injured witness or the injured accused at the place of occurrence, but it did not connect the accused with the commission of the offence---Medical evidence could not constitute corroboration for proving involvement of the accused person in the commission of offence, as it did not establish the identity of the accused person.

Yaqoob Shah v. State PLD 1976 SC 53; Machia v. State PLD 1976 SC 695; Muhammad Iqbal v. Abid Hussain 1994 SCMR 1928; Mehmood Ahmad v. State 1995 SCMR 127; Muhammad Sharif v. State 1997 SCMR 866; Dildar Hussain v. Muhammad Afzaal PLD 2004 SC 663; Iftikhar Hussain v. State 2004 SCMR 1185; Sikandar v. State 2006 SCMR 1786; Ghulam Murtaza v. Muhammad Akram 2007 SCMR 1549; Altaf Hussain v. Fakhar Hussain 2008 SCMR 1103 and Hashim Qasim v. State 2017 SCMR 986 ref.

(t) Criminal trial---

----Conviction---Conjectures and probabilities---Not the substitute of proof---In criminal cases finding of guilt against an accused person could not be based merely on the high probabilities that may be inferred from evidence in a given case---Accused person could not be convicted on the basis of mere "suspicion" or "probability" unless and until the charge against him was "proved beyond reasonable doubt"---Finding as regards guilt should be rested surely and firmly on the evidence produced in the case and the plain inferences of guilt that may irresistibly be drawn from that evidence---Mere conjectures and probabilities could not take the place of proof---If a case was decided merely on high probabilities regarding the existence or nonexistence of a fact to prove the guilt of a person, the golden rule of giving "benefit of doubt" to an accused person, which was a dominant feature of the administration of criminal justice would be reduced to a naught.

Muhammad Luqman v. State PLD 1970 SC 10 ref.

(u) Criminal trial---

----Prosecution----Standard of proof--- Scope--- Benefit of doubt---Scope---Prosecution was under the obligation to prove its case against the accused person at the standard of proof required in criminal cases, namely, beyond reasonable doubt standard, and could not be said to have discharged this obligation by producing evidence that merely met the preponderance of probability standard applied in civil cases---If the prosecution failed to discharge its said obligation and there remained a reasonable doubt, not an imaginary or artificial doubt, as to the guilt of the accused person, the benefit of that doubt was to be given to the accused person as of right, not as of concession.

Tariq Pervez v. State 1995 SCMR 1345 ref.

Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners.

Nemo for the Complainant.

Mirza Abid Majeed, D.P.G., Punjab for the State.

Date of hearing: 7th December, 2020.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---On January 21, 2010 Parvez Akhtar, a retired WAPDA employee, his wife Firdous Kausar, his daughters Ghazala and Bushra and his granddaughter Zarmina were mercilessly murdered in their house, their throats slit open by a sharp edged weapon. One Mirza Muhammad Umar told the complainant, Mobeen Akhtar, the brother of the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar, that a night before at about 08:30 p.m. he had seen three persons with a motorcycle outside the house of Pervaiz Akhtar. Mobeen Akhtar reported these facts to the Police and that apparently his deceased brother had no enmity with anyone. First information report (FIR)[1] of the tragic incident was recorded with these brief facts. Mirza Muhammad Umar, in his statement to the Police, narrated that he could not recognize those three persons as there was darkness in the street at that time. During investigation, the investigating officer suspected it to be a robbery that ended with five brutal murders.

2. On January 24, 2010 one Fazal Karim[2] told the Police that in the evening of January 20, 2010 he had seen Qadeer Ahmad, the son-in-law of the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar, along with two other boys going towards Dhok Tama (the locality where the house of the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar was situate) on a motorcycle. The Police arrested Qadeer Ahmad, Khurram Shahzad and Naveed Asghar ("petitioners") on January 31, 2010 and recovered two bloodstained knives (the alleged weapons of offence), a motorcycle (allegedly used by the accused persons for coming to the place of occurrence), mobile phones, a laptop, three cameras, an amount of cash amount, gold ornaments and some Defence Saving Certificates (the alleged looted property). An application was made for recording confessional statement of the accused, Naveed Asghar, but it was turned down by the Magistrate with the observation that the accused appeared to be under pressure of the Police.

3. With the said incriminating material, the petitioners were sent up for trial. The learned trial court convicted them, vide its judgment dated 22.01.2011, for the offences of house trespass, robbery and murder, and sentenced each of them to three years rigorous imprisonment with fine of Rs.10,000/- under section 452, of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 ("P.P.C."); five years rigorous imprisonment with fine of Rs.10,000/- under section 392, P.P.C.; and death on five counts under section 302(b), P.P.C. read with section 34, P.P.C. Each of them was also directed to pay compensation of Rs.100,000/- to the legal heirs of the deceased persons, under section 544-A, Cr.P.C. The High Court dismissed the jail-appeal filed by the petitioners and confirmed the death sentence, vide its judgment dated 12.02.2016. Hence, this jail petition is filed by the petitioners for leave to appeal.

4. The main contentions of the learned counsel for the petitioners are that: the occurrence was unseen and the petitioners has falsely been involved in the case; the circumstantial evidence produced by the prosecution is totally insufficient to connect the petitioners with the commission of offences; the learned courts below have wrongly relied upon the incredible testimony of Muhammad Umar (PW-13) and fake recoveries of alleged weapons of offence and looted property; and, the High Court has not appreciated the prosecution-evidence in depth and has referred to the prosecution-evidence in a cursory and casual manner for confirmation of death sentence. Learned counsel for the State, on the other hand, has supported the judgments of the courts below, which according to him are well-reasoned and therefore do not merit interference.

5. Submissions of the counsel for the parties and examination of the record of the case with their able assistance give rise to the following points of law for our consideration: what is the nature, scope and extent of reappraisal of evidence by the High Court while hearing an appeal and a reference sent by the trial court for confirmation of the death sentence; whether it was necessary to complete the chain of the circumstantial evidence in order to connect the accused with the commission of the offence; whether reliance could be placed on a testimony of a witness who made improvements in his statement; whether recovery of the alleged stolen property without their prior identification or in absence of any proof that they were owned by the deceased persons could connect the accused with the commission of offence; whether recovery of the alleged weapons of offence, viz, bloodstained knives, without a positive forensic report as to matching the bloodstains found thereon with the blood of any of the deceased persons could connect the accused with the commission of offence; and, whether medical evidence, viz, postmortem reports etc., could corroborate the other prosecution evidence against the petitioners.

Reappraisal of evidence by the High Court in deciding the appeal and the reference for confirmation of death sentence

6. Normally, the High Courts hear and decide the appeal filed by the convicted person and the reference sent by the trial court for confirmation of the death sentence, together. It has been noticed that while doing so the learned Judges of the High Courts sometimes, as it appears to have done in the present case, remain content with examining and deciding only the arguments and contentions advanced in appeal, and do not by themselves scrutinize the whole material available on record of the case. Apart from deciding those arguments and contentions, it is incumbent upon the High Courts, in discharge of their statutory duty under sections 375 and 376 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 ("Cr.P.C."), to read and appraise each and every piece of evidence, and to examine also whether any evidence has been improperly admitted or excluded, or has been misread or non-read by the trial court. Even non-filing of appeal or withdrawal of appeal by the convicted person,[3] or any concessional statement by the state counsel[4] does not relieve the High Court from performing its duty of reappraising the whole evidence available on record. Ordinarily, in a criminal appeal against conviction, the appellate Court, under section 423 of the Cr.P.C., can dismiss the appeal if the court is of the opinion that there is no sufficient ground for interference, after examining all the grounds urged before it for challenging the correctness of the decision given by the trial court. It is not necessary for the appellate court to examine the entire record for the purpose of arriving at an independent decision of its own whether the conviction of the appellant is fully justified. The position is, however, different where the appeal is by an accused who is sentenced to death, so that the High Court dealing with the appeal has before it, simultaneously with the appeal, a reference for confirmation of the capital sentence under section 374 of the Cr.P.C. On a reference for confirmation of sentence of death, the High Court is required to proceed in accordance with sections 375 and 376 of the Cr.P.C. and the provisions of these sections make it clear that the duty of the High Court, in dealing with the reference, is not only to see whether the order passed by the trial court is correct, but to examine the case for itself and even direct a further enquiry or the taking of additional evidence if the Court considers it desirable in order to ascertain the guilt or the innocence of the convicted person.[5]

7. Section 374 of the Cr.P.C. provides that when the Court of Session passes sentence of death, the proceedings shall be submitted to the High Court and the sentence shall not be executed unless it is confirmed by the High Court. As the death sentence passed by the trial court, i.e., the Court of Session, cannot be executed without being it confirmed by the High Court, proceedings before the High Court on reference under section 374, Cr.P.C. is yet another tier of judicial assessment of the evidence to examine "any point bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the convicted person." The High Court has been given very wide powers to prevent any possible miscarriage of justice. The proceedings are a reappraisal and reassessment of the entire facts of the case and of the law applicable. This extensive power actually casts an onerous duty on the High Court to ensure safe administration of criminal justice by considering in the reference proceedings all aspects of the case and coming to an independent conclusion, apart from the view expressed by the Court of Session. The High Court has to decide on reappraisal of the whole evidence whether the conviction is justified and, having regard to the circumstances of the case, whether the sentence of death is appropriate.[6]

8. As back as in the year 1921, Madgaonkar, A.J.C., while exploring the scope of power of High Court in confirmation proceedings under section 374 in the case of Gul v. Empror,[7] observed that the worth and sanctity of human life are a test and mark of civilized societies, and are increasingly reflected in the criminal jurisprudence. The Legislature has provided, he noted, in confirmation proceedings a final safeguard and has laid this duty upon the High Court. The duty of judgment is laid in the first instance upon the trial Judge. But equally and with all that weight, the High Court in confirmation proceedings must finally weigh for itself the whole evidence, and is to confirm the conviction and sentence or make any other order according to its own final conclusion on the guilt or innocence of the sentenced person in the discharge of the duty laid upon it by law. These significant observations of the learned Judge become more nuanced when viewed in the constitutional context. Right to life and liberty, right to fair trial and right to dignity are fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 9, 10A and 14 of the Constitution. The importance of human life goes to the heart of these fundamental rights, the rigorous two-tiered process of appraisal, assessment and examination under section 374, Cr.P.C. also meets the test of these fundamental rights. The duty cast on the High Court in deciding a murder reference under section 374, Cr.P.C. is a heavy one and can only be discharged once the entire evidence is reappraised to fully exhaust all the points having a bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the convicted person.

9. The High Court, in the present case, has made only a general and cursory reference to the prosecution evidence in its judgment, and has failed to reappraise it thoroughly. In such a situation, we would have ordinarily remanded the matter to the High Court to hear and decide the case afresh, but in the present case much water has flown under the bridge. Remand will entail further delay and hardship, besides, the points of law noted above also require a clear determination by this Court. We, therefore, decided to answer those points of law and to reappraise the prosecution evidence ourselves for safe administration of criminal justice.

Heinous nature of allegations and appraisal of evidence

10. The ruthless and ghastly murder of five persons is a crime of heinous nature; but the frightful nature of crime should not blur the eyes of justice, allowing emotions triggered by the horrifying nature of the offence to prejudge the accused. Cases are to be decided on the basis of evidence and evidence alone and not on the basis of sentiments and emotions.[8] Gruesome, heinous or brutal nature of the offence may be relevant at the stage of awarding suitable punishment after conviction; but it is totally irrelevant at the stage of appraising or reappraising the evidence available on record to determine guilt of the accused person, as possibility of an innocent person having been wrongly involved in cases of such nature cannot be ruled out.[9] An accused person is presumed to be innocent till the time he is proven guilty beyond reasonable doubt, and this presumption of his innocence continues until the prosecution succeeds in proving the charge against him beyond reasonable doubt on the basis of legally admissible, confidence inspiring, trustworthy and reliable evidence. No matter how heinous the crime, the constitutional guarantee of fair trial under Article 10A cannot be taken away from the accused. It is, therefore, duty of the court to assess the probative value (weight) of every piece of evidence available on record in accordance with the settled principles of appreciation of evidence, in a dispassionate, systematic and structured manner without being influenced by the nature of the allegations. Any tendency to strain or stretch or haphazardly appreciate evidence to reach a desired or popular decision in a case must be scrupulously avoided or else highly deleterious results seriously affecting proper administration of criminal justice will follow.[10] It may be pertinent to underline here that the principles of fair trial have now been guaranteed as a Fundamental Right under Article 10-A of the Constitution and are to be read as an integral part of every sub-constitutional legislative instrument that deals with determination of civil rights and obligations of, or criminal charge against, any person.

Standard of care required for relying on circumstantial evidence

11. The occurrence in the present case is unseen one, and the case of the prosecution against the petitioners is wholly based on the following circumstantial evidence: (i) last seen evidence of Mirza Muhammad Umar (PW-13); (ii) recovery of a motorcycle allegedly used for reaching the place of occurrence; (iii) recovery of the alleged stolen property; (iv) recovery of the alleged bloodstained weapons of offence and gloves; and (v) medical evidence as to post-mortem examination of the deceased persons. Before examining the said circumstantial evidence, we think it necessary to state the standard of care required for relying on circumstantial evidence and the approach to determine sufficiency of such evidence for reaching the conclusion of guilt of an accused person.

12. Circumstantial evidence may sometimes be conclusive, but it must always be narrowly examined. In cases like the present one that rest entirely on circumstantial evidence, it is of the utmost importance that the circumstances should be ascertained with minute care and caution, before any conclusion or inference adverse to the accused person is drawn. The process of inference and deduction involved in such cases is of a delicate and perplexing character, liable to numerous causes of fallacy. This danger points the need for great caution in accepting proof of the facts and circumstances, before they are held to be established for the purpose of drawing inferences therefrom. A mere concurrence of circumstances, some or all of which are supported by defective or inadequate evidence, can create a specious appearance, leading to fallacious inferences. Hence, it is necessary that only such circumstances should be accepted as the basis of inferences that are, on careful examination of the evidence, found to be well-established. A high quality of evidence is, therefore, required to prove the facts and circumstances from which the inference of the guilt of the accused person is to be drawn.[11]

13. There are chances of fabricating evidence in cases that are based solely on circumstantial evidence; therefore, the court, in such cases, should take extra care and caution to examine the evidence with pure judicial approach on strict legal standards to satisfy itself about its proof, probative value and reliability. When there are apparent indications of possibility of fabricating evidence by the investigating officer in making the case, the court must be watchful against the trap, which may misled to drawing a false inference, and satisfy itself about the fair and genuine collection of such evidence. The failure of the court to observe such care and caution can adversely affect the proper and safe administration of criminal justice.[12]

Approach to determine sufficiency of circumstantial evidence

14. The settled approach to deal with the question as to sufficiency of circumstantial evidence for conviction of the accused person is this: If, on the facts and circumstances proved, no hypothesis consistent with the innocence of the accused person can be suggested, the case is fit for conviction of the accused person on such conclusion; however, if such facts and circumstances can be reconciled with any reasonable hypothesis compatible with the innocence of the appellant, the case is to be treated one of insufficient evidence, resulting in acquittal of the accused person.[13] Circumstantial evidence, in a murder case, should be like a well-knit chain, one end of which touches the dead body of the deceased and the other the neck of the accused. No link in chain of the circumstances should be broken and the circumstances should be such as cannot be explained away on any reasonable hypothesis other than guilt of accused person. Chain of such facts and circumstances has to be completed to establish guilt of the accused person beyond reasonable doubt and to make the plea of his being innocent incompatible with the weight of evidence against him. Any link missing from the chain breaks the whole chain and renders the same unreliable; in that event, conviction cannot be safely recorded, especially on a capital charge.[14] Therefore, if the circumstantial evidence is found not of the said standard and quality, it will be highly unsafe to rely upon the same for conviction; rather, not to rely upon such evidence will a better and a safer course.[15]

Last seen evidence of Mirza Muhammad Umar (PW-13)

15. In the present case, the first link in the chain of circumstantial evidence relied upon by the prosecution is the last seen evidence of Mirza Muhammad Umar (PW-13). The said witness while appearing in the witness-box deposed that on 20.01.2010 at about 08:00 or 08:30 p.m. he was passing by in front of the house of the deceased, Pervaiz Akhtar. He saw three persons there who had worn shawls (Chaddar) over themselves. A motorcycle High Speed 70 was also parked there. The said three persons knocked the door of house of the deceased, Pervaiz Akhtar. The door was opened, and the said three persons went inside the house along with the motorcycle. He further stated that the three accused persons present in the court were the same persons. This was his statement made in examination-in-chief. He explained in cross-examination that on 20.01.2010 when he happened to pass by in front of the house of the deceased, Pervaiz Akhtar, he was going from his house to "Wattay di Dari" for condolence on the death of the father of some person known to him. He stated that he did not know the name of the person on whose death he went to condole. He denied the suggestion put to him that he did not know the name of that deceased person because no such death had taken place. He stated that the village "Wattay di Dari" was at a distance of about one kilometer from his house. On questioning about identification of the accused person, he explained that the accused person though had put on shawls (Chaddar) at that time but their faces were visible. There was light, not darkness, at that time in front of the house of the deceased, Pervaiz Akhtar. He had not mentioned the names of the accused persons in his statement to the police. He did not know the names of the accused person at that time. He had not mentioned the description, the age and colour of the complexion, of the accused person to the police. He was specifically asked, which he denied, that in his statement before the police he had mentioned that because of darkness he could not identify the accused persons. Then, he was duly confronted with his statement (Exh-DE) made to the investigating officer under section 161, Cr.P.C., and it was noted by the trial court that it was so recorded in that statement. Then, he denied the suggestion put to him that he had deposed about identification of the accused persons only on instruction of the prosecution.

16. Reading of the statement of Mirza Muhammad Umar (PW-13) shows that he is a chance witness: a witness who in view of his place of residence or occupation and in the ordinary course of events is not supposed to be present at the place of the occurrence but claims to be there by chance. Testimony of such witness requires cautious scrutiny and is not accepted unless he gives satisfactory explanation of his presence at or near the place of the occurrence at the relevant time.[16] The explanation of Mirza Muhammad Umar (PW-13) is that he happened to pass by in front of the house of the deceased, Pervaiz Akhtar, as he was going from his house to "Wattay di Dari" for condolence on the death of the father of some person known to him. He, however, did not mention the name of the person known to him on whose father's death he was going for condolence; nor could he tell the name of the late person on whose death he was going for condolence. Further, his assertion of going for condolence at such odd hours, i.e., about 08:30 p.m., on a winter-night of the month January does not fit in the customary time of visiting people for condolence on death of someone, in rural areas: people usually make such visits during daytime. His explanation of being present before the house of the deceased, Pervaiz Akhtar, at the relevant time is thus found far less than being satisfactory one. His testimony may be discarded on this ground alone. But there is another solid reason also that makes him unreliable: a very material improvement made by him in his testimony as to recognizing the accused persons at the time of seeing them in the night of the occurrence and identifying them at the time of making his statement in court.

Effect of material improvements made by a witness

17. Deliberate and dishonest improvements made by a witness in his statement to strengthen the prosecution case cast serious doubts on his veracity, and makes him untrustworthy and unreliable. It is quite unsafe to rely on testimony of such witness, even on facts deposed by him other than those improvements unless it receives corroboration from some other independent piece of reliable evidence.[17] In the case of Shahzada v. Hamidullah,[18] a five-member Bench of this Court, on appraising the evidence of a witness, found that he had improved upon the version he had earlier given to the police while making statement in Court, and upon such finding held that the improvement had affected his veracity rendering it unsafe to rely upon his evidence. Hamoodur Rahman, J., speaking for the Bench observed: "[The witness] also tried to improve upon the version he earlier gave to the police by introducing the story of his having seen the [accused] respondent Hamidullah actually loading his gun in the middle of the bazar. In his police statement he had only stated that when he saw Hamidullah first he appeared to be proceeding to the shop of the deceased to purchase snuff. This definite attempt at embellishment clearly affected his veracity and rendered it unsafe to rely upon his evidence." In the case of Akhtar Ali v. State[19] the complaint initially made statement that four unknown persons had committed the offence and did not name any person therein, but subsequently nominated the accused persons in his supplementary statement despite the fact that one of the accused person was already known to him. A four-member Bench of this Court, which heard the case, noted with concern that improvement made by the complaint even during investigation and discarded his testimony making the observations that "when a witness improves his version to strengthen the prosecution case, his improved statement subsequently made cannot be relied upon as the witness has improved his statement dishonestly, therefore, his credibility becomes doubtful."

18. Mirza Muhammad Umar (PW-13) stated to the investigation officer in his statement (Ex-DE) recorded under section 161, Cr.P.C. that due to darkness he could not recognize the accused persons when he saw them standing at the door of the house of the deceased, Pervaiz Akhtar; but in his statement in court he said that the accused persons were those whom he saw at the door of the deceased, Pervaiz Akhtar. He stated also that there was light, not darkness, at the door of the house of the deceased, Pervaiz Akhtar at that time. This was a very glaring and material improvement made by the witness. He admitted in cross-examination that he had not mentioned any identifying features, like age, height, colour of their complexion etc., of those persons in his that statement. If he had really seen and recognized the persons standing at the door of the deceased, Pervaiz Akhtar, he would definitely have described their identifiable features to the investigating officer. And had he described such recognizable features of those persons, the investigating officer would have got conducted the test identification of the accused persons on their arrest in the case. This deliberate and dishonest improvement made by the witness makes him unreliable. The observation of the High Court that the value of his testimony is not diminished despite the said improvement is totally flawed and untenable.

Recovery of motorcycle allegedly used for reaching the place of occurrence

19. The second incriminatory circumstantial evidence relied upon by the prosecution is the recovery of a motorcycle, Speed Smart CD SR-70, that is alleged to have been used by the petitioners for reaching the place of occurrence. Sub-Inspector Fazal Hussain, the investigating officer, appeared in the witness-box as PW-16. About the said recovery, he stated that on 27.01.2010 he raided the house of the accused Qadeer at Langurpur Baily. The accused Qadeer was not found there. One Bashir, the brother of the accused Qadeer, met there and led to the recovery of the motorcycle from his house. Bloodstains were found present on the seat-cover of the motorcycle. He took the motorcycle into his possession vide recovery-memo (Exh-

PR), which was owned by the accused Khurram Shahzad. In cross-examination, he explained that the semi-washed bloodstains on the seat-cover of the motorcycle suggested use of the said motorcycle in the commission of crime. He admitted that he did not send the bloodstained part of the seat of the motorcycle for examination to the Chemical Examiner. He denied the suggestion that there were no bloodstains on the seat of the motorcycle. He stated that on 27.01.2010 he had no proof of ownership of the motorcycle; Bashir, brother of the accused Qadeer, told him that motorcycle was of the accused Khurram Shahzad. He admitted that throughout the investigation he did not collect any proof as to ownership of the motorcycle. He also admitted that he did not prepare the site-plan of the place from which the motorcycle was recovered. He denied the suggestion that the site-plan was not prepared as the motorcycle was not recovered from the house of the accused Qadeer in village Langarpur Baily. The recovery witness, Waheed Ahmad, 459/c (PW-9) made similar statement as to proceedings of the recovery of the motorcycle.

20. By close examination of the prosecution-evidence as to the recovery of that motorcycle as well as the assertion that the same was used in commission of the crime, we have noticed that no specification of the motorcycle, i.e., its make, colour, power-70, 100 or 125, or registration number was mentioned in the FIR. Therefore, it cannot be said with certainty that it is the motorcycle that Mirza Muhammad Umar (PW-13) saw with the persons outside the house of the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar and was mentioned in the FIR. The statement of the investigating officer (PW-16) that the seat-cover of the recovered motorcycle was bloodstained and this fact suggested that it was the same motorcycle that was used in the crime is not found confidence-inspiring; had the seat-cover of the motorcycle been really bloodstained, the investigating officer would have sent the same for examination by the Chemical Examiner for ascertaining whether the bloodstain is that of human blood and whether that bloodstain matches with the blood of any of the deceased persons or the accused persons. In absence of the reports of the Chemical Examiner and the Serologist on these facts, the assertion of the investigating officer as to use of the said motorcycle in commission of the crime carries no legal worth. The failure on part of the investigating officer to ascertain registration number and name of the registered owner of the motorcycle is also fatal to his assertion that the recovered motorcycle is of the accused Khurram Shahzad. He stated that Bashir brother of the accused Qadeer told him that the motorcycle was of the accused Khurram Shahzad; but neither the statement of the said Bashir to this effect was recorded in the course of investigation under section 161, Cr.P.C. nor was he examined as a witness during trial about the alleged ownership of the accused Khurram Shahzad as well as about the alleged recovery of the motorcycle on his pointation from the house of the accused Qadeer. The non-preparation of the site-map of the place of recovery of motorcycle adds further suspicion to the alleged recovery of the motorcycle from the house of the accused Qadeer. The recovery of the motorcycle, in view of the said omissions made by the investigating officer, is found completely deficient as an incriminatory piece of circumstantial evidence to connect the accused Qadeer or the accused Khurram Shahzad with the commission of the offence.

Recovery of gold ornaments etc alleged to be stolen property

21. Recovery of the alleged stolen or looted property is the third link that the prosecution tried to join in the chain of circumstantial evidence. Sub-Inspector Fazal Hussain, the Investigating Officer, (PW-16) deposed that during the inspection of the place of occurrence he found empty boxes of jewellery scattered there which indicated the commission of offence of robbery; therefore, he also added section 392, P.P.C. to the crime report. He arrested the accused persons, Khurram Shahzad, Qadeer and Naveed, on 31.01.2010, in a raid made at a snooker club in village Pakwal. On interrogation, the accused persons made disclosure that they could lead to recoveries. Firstly, the accused Qadeer led him to the recovery of gold bangles, gold rings, gold locket, five currency notes of Rs. 1000, four currency notes of Rs. 5000 and two Defence Saving Certificates of the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar, from his rented house situated in village Pakwal. Thereafter, the accused Khurram Shahzad led to the recovery of gold bangles, gold ring, gold ear ring, gold chain, fourteen currency notes of Rs.500, three Defence Saving Certificates, one laptop, one movie camera and two still cameras, from his house situated in village Aima Ilyas. Then the accused Naveed led to the recovery of gold ring, pair of ear rings, pair of ear topes, fourteen currency notes of Rs.500, one Defence Saving Certificate, from his house situated in village Jandal. He took the said recovered things into his possession, and prepared their recovery-memos and site-plans of the places of recovery. In cross-examination, he admitted that the fact of finding scattered empty boxes of jewellery at the place of occurrence was not mentioned in the FIR, and he did not take any such empty box into his possession. About interrogation of the accused person and recoveries, he explained that he interrogated the accused persons outside the snooker club for about one hour. From the snooker club they first went to the house of the accused Qadeer. The accused Qadeer got key of the main gate of the house from an old lady and then opened the gate. He admitted that he did not mention this fact in the case dairy that the accused Qadeer opened the gate by obtaining key from an old lady. He denied the suggestion that the accused Qadeer had not hired any house, nor was any recovery made on his pointation. About the recovery made from the house of the accused Khurram Shahzad, he stated that nobody was present in the house of the accused Khurram Shahzad; however, one woman came there and opened the lock of the door. He admitted that he did not record statement of the said woman. As to the recovery from the house of the accused Naveed Asghar, he said that four or five women were there in the house of the accused Naveed Asghar when they reached there. He stated that he did not join any person from the locality in the recovery proceedings. He denied the suggestion that the whole recovery proceedings were recorded fictitiously by him while sitting in the police station, and that the accused persons were already in police custody and their arrest was fictitiously shown to have been made on 31.01.2010. The recovery-witness, Tahir Akhtar (PW-11) who is cousin of the complainant made statement supporting the due conduct of the recovery proceedings, in his examination-in-chief. He, however, could not tell the time when the recoveries were made from the houses of the accused persons, Qadeer, Khurram Shahzad and Naveed Asghar. He denied the suggestion that recoveries were planted on the accused persons and nothing was recovered from them.

22. It may be said straight away without any deep deliberation that the prosecution story of interrogation of the accused persons at the place of their arrest and then leading of the accused persons from the very place of their arrest to the recoveries of the alleged stolen property appears to be intrinsically doubtful: it does not even fit in with the ordinary human conduct. The accused persons who, as per the prosecution story, were enjoying play snooker in a snooker club, admitted the commission of offence that may entail death penalty forthwith on their arrest, and not only admitted the commission of offence but also cooperated well to lead to the recovery of the stolen property then and there. It is very hard for a prudent person to believe such story. Non-mentioning the alleged fact of finding any scattered jewellery boxes at the place of occurrence in the FIR shakes the foundation of the story. Fazal Hussain, SI (PW-16) also stated in his examination-in-chief that crime scene expert Masood Ahmad was summoned at the spot, who took photographs of the dead bodies and the place of occurrence. Masood Ahmad appeared in the witness-box as PW-7, and tendered the photographs of the deceased persons in evidence as Exh-P 1 to P5 and the photographs of the crime scene as Exh-P6 to P10. All these photographs are available on record of the case. In none of the photographs there are any scattered empty jewellery boxes. These photographs, tendered in evidence by the prosecution itself, completely negate the alleged fact of finding scattered empty jewellery boxes at the place of occurrence.

23. It was denied on behalf of the accused Qadeer by putting suggestion in cross-examination to the investigating officer (PW-16) in the terms that the accused Qadeer had not hired any house. The investigating officer did not join in investigation the landlord of that alleged rented house to bring on record the facts when the accused Qadeer had got the house on rent from him, especially when as per its own version of the prosecution the accused Qadeer was resident of the village, Langurpur Baily, from where the investigating officer recovered the motorcycle allegedly used for reaching the place of occurrence. Further, not associating the women in investigation, who brought the keys of the houses of the accused persons Qadeer and Khurram Shahzad, and even non-mentioning their names in the case dairy create dent in the story of recoveries.

Recovery of alleged stolen property in absence of prior description

24. Even otherwise, in absence of any description of the stolen property given in the FIR, or in the supplementary statement of the complainant or any witness recorded under section 161, Cr.P.C., prior to the alleged recovery, it cannot be said with certainty the recovered property is that which was allegedly stolen.[20] The recovered jewellery, the alleged stolen property, has been attempted to be identified and proved as the one belonging to the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar by the testimony of the goldsmith, Mehmood Ahmad (PW-12). The said witness (PW-12) stated in his examination-in-chief that he identified the gold ornaments produced before him by the investigating officer in the police station. The said gold ornaments were got prepared from him by the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar. On 07.08.2008, the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar got repaired the said gold ornaments from him, and he had issued the receipt (Exh-PPP) at the time of receiving the gold ornaments for repair. In cross-examination, he said that the receipt (Exh-PPP) was not produced by him to the investigating officer. Record of the case is silent from where the said receipt was found by the investigating officer, or who tendered it to him. The goldsmith, Mehmood Ahmad (PW-12), did not state the date when the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar had purchased the said gold ornaments from him. He did not produce any receipt book of his shop showing any entry of sale of gold ornaments to the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar, nor did he bring with him, at the time of his testimony in court, the receipt book containing the entry of receiving the gold ornaments from the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar for repair. His testimony is therefore of little value to prove that the gold ornaments allegedly recovered from the accused persons really belong to the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar. Tahir Akhtar (PW11), the witness to the alleged recoveries, who is the cousin of the complainant and of the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar said in his cross-examination that the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar had five daughters. Two daughters of the deceased Pervaiz were killed in the incident of the present case, but the remaining three daughters would have been the best persons to identify the gold ornaments. If these ornaments had really belonged to their deceased father Pervaiz Akhtar, they must have been in use of their deceased mother or their deceased sisters and they would definitely have seen those ornaments in their use. Similar is the position with the identification of laptop and cameras, the alleged stolen articles. The investigating officer neither got them identified from the daughters of the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar, nor got done forensic audit of these articles from the expert concerned who may have retrieved data therefrom indicating the person who were in use of these cameras and laptop. Such failure on part of the investigating officer makes the recovery of these articles, even if presumed to have been effected from the accused persons, useless for the purpose of crafting any link in the chain of circumstantial evidence against the petitioners to connect them with the commission of offences of robbery and murders.

Recovery of mobile phones and sims

25. As to the alleged recovery of the mobile phones of the deceased persons Bushra, Ghazal and Zarmina, Fazal Hussain, SI, (PW-16) deposed that on 02.02.2010 after making recoveries of the alleged weapon of offences at Manara Pulley the accused Naveed Asghar produced the mobile phone of the deceased Bushra by sending for the same from his house through his brother, and at the same place the accused person Khurram Shahzad also produced two mobile phones of the deceased persons, Zarmina and Ghazala by calling the same through his brother. He further stated that he took the said mobile phones into his possession vide recovery-memos, Exh-PLL and Exh-PNN. In cross-examination, he admitted that he did not mention the fact of calling the mobile phones by the accused persons at Manara Pulley from their houses through some third persons. He admitted that the persons through whom the accused persons had sent for the mobile phones were not associated in the investigation proceedings. He admitted it also that the names and particulars of those persons who had brought the mobile phones were not mentioned in the case dairy. He expressed his inability to tell the names of those persons. We have also read the recovery-memos, Exh-PLL and Exh-PNN. It is mentioned in the recovery-memo, Exh-PLL, that the accused Naveed Asghar has got recovered from his house the mobile phone that was in use of the deceased Bushra. Similarly, in recovery memo, Exh-PNN, it is mentioned that the accused Khurram Shahzad has got recovered from his house the two mobile phones that were in use of the deceased persons, Zarmina and Ghazala. The clear contradiction in the oral stance of the investigation officer (PW-16) and the proceedings of recovery reduced into writing by him in the recovery memos (Exh-PLL and Exh-PNN) makes the recoveries doubtful. It is not understandable how did the accused persons who were in police custody call their brothers to bring the mobile phones at a place where they were making recoveries of the alleged weapons of offence, i.e., Manara Pulley, not in the police station, and why did they not get those mobile phones recovered on 31.01.2010 when, as per version of the prosecution, they got recovered the other stolen articles from their houses. It is also not consistent with the normal human conduct that the offenders would have taken the mobiles phones of some of the deceased persons, and had left the mobile phone of the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar laying it on a conspicuous place, i.e., on a table beside the dead body of the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar. Non-mentioning the theft of the mobile phones of the deceased persons in the FIR or in the supplementary statement of the complainant, non joining in investigation the brothers of the accused persons who had allegedly brought the mobile phones, and not bringing on record their names and the details as to the place from where they got the said mobile phones, all these omissions, also make these alleged recoveries unreliable.

26. The prosecution has also attempted to connect the accused Khurram Sahzad with the commission of offence with the assertions that mobile phone having sims numbers 0333-5841554 and 0332-5801685 was recovered from him on his arrest on 31.01.2010 as per recovery-memo, Exh-PEE, and that the sim bearing number 0332-5801685 was used from 27.01.2010 to 28.01.2010 in the phone set bearing IMEI No. 354176029652580 of the deceased Bushra, as per the calls data (Exh-PTT). These assertions has been made on behalf of the prosecution during arguments in the courts below as well as in this Court, and was not stated as facts by the complainant (PW-15) and the investigating officer (PW-16) in their statements while appearing in the witness-box; therefore, the accused persons could not get opportunity to test the veracity of the said facts in cross-examination. Nor was this fact with the said specification put to the accused Khurram Shahzad in his statement recorded under section 342 of the Cr.P.C., and he, therefore, could not explain his stance to the prosecution evidence on it against him. Although the said assertions of the prosecution, which appears to have greatly influenced the mind of the courts below against the accused persons, cannot be entertained on these grounds only, but the close scrutiny of the prosecution evidence relied upon for making the said assertions also shows several flaws in it to connect the accused Khuram Shahzad with the commission of offence. Firstly, the empty box of a mobile phone set bearing IMEI No.354176029652580 is alleged to have been tendered by the complainant to the investigating officers on 21.01.2010, the day on which the FIR was registered, the investigating officer (PW-16) made site inspection, and the crime scene expert (PW-7) took photographs of the place of occurrence. But the fact of finding the said empty box was not mentioned in the FIR, nor was it noticed by the investigating officer during site inspection, nor was it captured by the crime scene expert while taking the photographs of the place of occurrence. Had it really been there at the place of occurrence on 21.01.2010, the investigation officer himself, not waiting for its tendering by the complainant, would have taken it into his possession. Secondly, the complainant (PW-15) stated that the said empty box was of mobile phone Nokia which was owned by the deceased Zarmina Mehak but was in use of the deceased Bushra. However, he did not state how did he came to know about these facts on 21.01.2010 when the investigating officer had not yet even applied for obtaining the calls data of the sims of the deceased persons. Thirdly, as per the calls data (Exh-PTT), on 27.01.2010 two outgoing calls were made from a phone set bearing IMEI No.354176029652580 with sim number 0332-5801685 to some person having sim number 0345-5526628 and on 28.01.2010 two outgoing calls were made to some person having sim number 0303-5431302, one outgoing call to and one incoming call from some person having sim number 0301-5826884, and one outgoing call to some person having landline number 54-4656497. But none of the said persons were joined in investigation to bring on record who had made those calls to them from that phone, nor was the record as to registered owner of the sim number 0332- 5801685 obtained. Therefore, it cannot be said with certainty that the accused Khurram Shahzad used the mobile phone bearing IMEI No.354176029652580 and made calls to those persons with sim number 0332-5801685, on January 27 and 28, 2010. Lastly but very importantly a fact has been noted, which coupled with the said noted flaws makes the whole story of recording supplementary statement of the complainant as to finding scattered jewellery boxes, his tendering the empty box of mobile phone and addition of the offence of robbery punishable under section 392, P.P.C. in the case by the investigating officer on 21.01.2010 untrustworthy and unreliable. It is this: Admittedly the investigating officer received the clothes of the deceased persons after their postmortem examination on 22.01.2010 and took the said clothes in his possession as a piece of evidence in the case vide recovery memos (Exh-PP, PQ, PT, PU and PV) dated 22.10.2010. In all these five recovery memos prepared on 22.01.2010 the offence of robbery punishable under section 392, P.P.C. is not mentioned; this fact clearly shows that the section relating to the offence of robbery, i.e., section 392, P.P.C. had not been added in the case till 22.01.2010. Then mentioning of section 392, P.P.C. on the recovery memo (Exh-PRR) purportedly prepared on 21.01.2010 as to recovery of empty box of a mobile phone bearing IMEI No.354176029652580 makes that recovery and the recovery proceedings entirely doubtful.

Recovery of the bloodstained weapons of offence and gloves

27. The fourth incriminatory circumstantial evidence relied upon by the prosecution is the recovery of the bloodstained weapons of offence, i.e., two knives (Churri), and gloves allegedly made on pointation of the accused persons during investigation. Statement of Fazal Hussain, SI (PW-16) about the said recovery is as follows. He stated that he arrested the accused persons, Khurram Shahzad, Qadeer and Naveed, on 31.01.2010 and obtained their physical remand on 01.02.2010 for five days. On 02.02.2010 during investigation, the accused persons disclosed that they could lead to recovery from underneath Manara Pulley. In pursuance to the disclosure of the accused persons he took them to Manara Pulley situated on Mangla Road. On reaching Manara Pulley, firstly the accused Naveed Asghar led him to the recovery of knife (Churri) from underneath Manara Pully by digging out the soil. Thereafter, the accused Khuram Shehzad got recovered a bloodstained knife (Churri) and a pair of gloves from underneath Manara Pulley by digging out the earth. And then the accused Qadeer led to the recovery of a pistol and a pair of gloves from underneath the Manara Pulley by digging out the earth. He also got exhibited the recovery memos of the said recoveries as Exh-PKK, Exh-PMM and Exh-POO respectively. In cross-examination, he stated that the witnesses to the recovery, Tahir Akhtar (PW-11) and Gul Awaiz, had reached the police station on their own. The said persons were the witnesses to all recoveries made on 27.01.2010, 31.01.2010 and 02.02.2010. There were about 7/8 shops beside the Manara Pulley, the place of alleged recoveries, but no person from amongst the shopkeepers was associated in the recovery proceedings. Village Ladhar was located at a distance of about 100/150 yards and village Shiekhupur at a distance of about 200/300 meters, from the place of recovery. No person from the localities of those villages was associated in the recovery proceedings. Manara Pulley was situated on the main road. Traffic was plying on that road round the clock. The recovery proceedings were not seen by any person from public other than the said witnesses to the recovery. The depth of Manara Pulley was about 5/6 feet from the road. Water flow area of the Manara Pulley was about 15/20 feet. The place of recovery was not inside the Manara Pulley. The accused persons dug out the earth beneath the pulley from outside. The knives (Churri) got recovered by the accused Naveed Asghar and Khurram Shahzad were wrapped in polythene shopper bags. The pistol got recovered by the accused Qadeer and the gloves got recovered by the accused Khurram Shahzad were also wrapped in polythene shopper bags. That shopper bags were not taken into possession. In the recovery memo, recovery of shopper bags was not mentioned. Tahir Akhtar (PW-11), one of the witnesses to the alleged recoveries made the similar statement. He, however, admitted in cross-examination that he was the cousin of the complainant and the other witness to the recovery proceedings, Gul Awaiz, was also his cousin, and on question stated that river Jehlum was at a distance of 100/ 150 yards form village Sheikhupur onwards.

28. It may be stated at the outset of the appraisal of the prosecution evidence as to the recoveries of the knives (Churri), the alleged weapons of offence, that it is quite astonishing that both Tahir Akhtar (PW-11) and Gul Awaiz were close relatives of the complainant reached the police station at the time when the investigating officer planned to make a raid for arrest of the accused persons and also when the accused persons were ready to cooperate for making recoveries during investigation, and thus become witnesses to all the recoveries made on 27.01.2010, 31.01.2010 and 02.02.2010. The story becomes further doubtful when we notice that the particulars of these witnesses are written on the recovery-memos (Exh-PKK, Exh-PMM and Exh-POO) in handwriting patently different from all other writings thereon. It indicates that the particulars of the witnesses were added and their signatures obtained subsequently on the already prepared recovery memos. There were, as per version of the investigating officer, 7/8 shops and two villages near the place of alleged recoveries, but no person from those nearby shops and villages was associated in the recovery-proceedings. We are aware of the fact that the persons from the general public usually do not come forward to be witness to such police proceedings, but the assertion of the investigating officer that no person of the locality other than the said witnesses was there to see the proceedings that allegedly continued for about three hours of the day from about 02:15 to 5:00 p.m. makes the proceedings further doubtful. The story of wrapping up bloodstained knives, the alleged weapons of offence, and gloves into polythene shopper bags and then burying them in the ground close to a water stream by the offenders, for a future recovery therefrom, instead of throwing them into that water stream or a nearby river also does not appeal to a prudent mind. In the case of Sardar Bibi v. Munir Ahmed,[21] this Court disbelieved the alleged recovery of bloodstained weapon of offence, i.e. a chaff cutter (Toka), made after about one month of the occurrence, with the observations that "it is not expected from an accused person to keep such weapon (stained with blood) as souvenir because during the said period there was ample time to destroy or at least washout the said weapon." Similarly, in the case of Muhammad Asif v. State[22] this Court did not believe the alleged recovery of weapon of offence, i.e., a dagger, observing that it is "normal practice and conduct of culprits that when they select night time for commission of such crime, their first anxiety is to conceal their identity so that they may go scot-free unidentified and in that course they try their level best to conceal or destroy each piece of evidence incriminating in nature which, might be used against them in the future thus, human faculty of prudence would not accept the present story [of recovering the dagger from the shop of the appellant] rather, after committing crime with the dagger, the appellant could throw it away anywhere in any field, water canals, well or other place and no circumstances would have chosen to preserve it in his own shop if believed so because that was susceptible to recovery by the police." Recovery of weapon of offence, a corroborative evidence

29. Even otherwise, recovery of weapon of offence is only a corroborative piece of evidence; and in absence of substantive evidence, it is not considered sufficient to hold the accused person guilty of the offence charged. When substantive evidence fails to connect the accused person with the commission of offence or is disbelieved, corroborative evidence is of no help to the prosecution as the corroborative evidence cannot by itself prove the prosecution case.[23] A four-member Bench of the Federal Court of Pakistan[24] while reappraising the circumstantial evidence in Siraj v. Crown,[25] held that two out of three circumstances had not been proved while the third, namely, recovery of the blood stained handle of hatchet, that had been alleged to be weapon of offence, was insufficient to form the basis of a conviction. Muhammad Munir, C.J., speaking for the Bench said: "The circumstance that the appellant [accused] produced the handle of a hatchet, which had stains of human blood on it, is by itself plainly insufficient to prove that the, appellant [accused] committed the murder in question." Likewise, in Saifullah v. State[26] a four-member Bench of this Court held the recovery of a blood-stained knife, the alleged weapon of offence, insufficient for conviction on excluding the testimony of alleged eye-witness from consideration and finding the occurrence as an unseen one. The Court observed: "Considering all the facts on the record we are of the view that it was an unwitnessed occurrence... We have therefore no option but to exclude the testimony of the aforementioned two witnesses from consideration with the result that no evidence is left on the record to connect the accused with the crime in question, as the recovery of the blood-stained knife, even if believed, could only be used as evidence corroborating the testimony of the eye-witnesses, if any. But since evidence of the eye-witnesses in this case has been excluded this recovery is hardly of any use." Evidentiary value of a bloodstained alleged weapon of offence without a forensic report matching the blood found thereon with that of the deceased

30. The recovery of bloodstained knives and gloves if presumed to have been made from the petitioners, for the sake of argument, it cannot even then connect them with the commission of murders of the five deceased persons in the present case. This Court observed in the case of Irfan Ali v. State[27] as to recovery of bloodstained alleged weapon of offence, i.e., dagger, that "when no grouping of the blood was made with the blood stained clothes of the deceased to create a nexus between the two, the same is of no help to the prosecution." Similarly in the case of Khalid Javed v. State,[28] this Court discarded the prosecution evidence of recovery of bloodstained alleged weapon of offence, i.e., the dagger and knife (Churri), and of bloodstained clothes of the accused persons in absence of matching report of the bloodstains with the blood group of deceased. In Hamid Nadeem v. State,[29] a five-member Shariat Appellate Bench of this Court rejected the recovery of bloodstained clothes of the accused as an incriminating piece of evidence while observing that the bloodstains on the recovered clothes were not got matched with the blood of the deceased. While, in the case of Muhammad Asif v. State,[30] this Court deemed it essential to point out that "mere sending the crime weapons, blood stained, to the chemical examiner and serologist would not serve the purpose of the prosecution nor it will provide any evidence to inter link different articles... unless the blood stained earth or cotton and blood stained clothes of the victim are not sent with the same for opinion of serologist to the effect that it was human blood on the crime weapons and was of the same group which was available on the clothes of the victim and the blood stained earth/cotton, such inconclusive opinion cannot be used as a piece of corroboratory evidence." The legal position may be summed up thus: As in absence of a positive report of Forensic Science Laboratory as to matching of crime empty with the allegedly recovered firearm from an accused person, the recovery of alleged weapon of offence cannot be considered as the corroborative piece of evidence against that accused person,[31] so is the legal position regarding recovery of a bloodstained alleged weapon of offence without a positive forensic report matching the blood found thereon with that of the deceased. It can also be not used as a substantive or corroborative piece of evidence against an accused person to connect him with the commission of offence. Therefore, the prosecution evidence as to recoveries of bloodstained knives (Churri) and gloves that are alleged to have been used for the commission of offence is also not found sufficient to connect the petitioners with the commission of the offences charged.

Medical evidence, not corroborative rather supporting evidence

31. The prosecution has attempted to complete the chain of circumstantial evidence by medical evidence relating to the post mortem examinations of the deceased persons. This evidence proves only the factum that death of the deceased persons was caused by cutting their throats through some sharp edge weapon; it does in no way indicate who had cut their throats and with what particular weapon. Medical evidence is in the nature of supporting, confirmatory or explanatory of the direct or circumstantial evidence, and is not "corroborative evidence" in the sense the term is used in legal parlance for a piece of evidence that itself also has some probative force to connect the accused person with the commission of offence. Medical evidence by itself does not throw any light on the identity of the offender. Such evidence may confirm the available substantive evidence with regard to certain facts including seat of the injury, nature of the injury, cause of the death, kind of the weapon used in the occurrence, duration between the injuries and the death, and presence of an injured witness or the injured accused at the place of occurrence, but it does not connect the accused with the commission of the offence. It cannot constitute corroboration for proving involvement of the accused person in the commission of offence, as it does not establish the identity of the accused person.[32] Therefore, the medical evidence is of little help to the prosecution for bringing home the guilt to the petitioners.

32. We have noted it also that although Mirza Muhammad Umar (PW-13) had stated in his statement recorded under section 161, Cr.P.C. on 21.01.2010 by the investigating officer during investigation that due to darkness he could not identify the persons standing at the door of the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar, but one Fazal Hussain is alleged to have stated in his statement recorded under section 161, Cr.P.C. on 24.01.2010 that in the evening of 20.01.2010 he had seen the petitioner, Qadeer (who was known to him) going towards the locality where the house of the deceased Pervaiz Akhtar was situated, on a motorcycle with two other persons who were not known to him. Therefore, it was necessary for the investigating officer to get conducted the test identification proceedings as to the identification of the petitioners, Khurram Shahzad and Naveed Asghar, by the said Fazal Karim and to join him in investigation, on their arrest. As per record of the case, the said Fazal Karim was never joined again in investigation after his that alleged statement dated 24.01.2010. Non joining of Fazal Karim, purportedly the most important witness, in investigation after arrest of the petitioners in the case creates doubt even about his statement that is alleged to have been recorded on 24.01.2010. The said Fazal Karim died during trial of the case, and could not be examined as witness by the prosecution for proving the facts allegedly narrated by him in his statement dated 24.01.2010, nor was veracity of his that statement could be checked through cross-examination on behalf of the petitioners. Therefore, his alleged statement under section 161, Cr.P.C. dated 24.01.2010 could not be used for drawing any adverse inference against the petitioners. The omission of the investigating officer to get conducted the test identification proceedings of the petitioners, Khurram Shahzad and Naveed Asghar, was a serious failure in performance of his duty to conduct the investigation of the case diligently and efficiently. The way how the investigation of this very serious case involving gruesome murder of five persons of one family was conducted speaks loudly about lack of expertise and competency of the investigating officer to collect the legally admissible evidence and detect the real culprits in cases that solely rest upon circumstantial evidence. The investigating officer, in the present case, instead of collecting the evidence attempted to create it. Apart from the omissions and faults noted above in the course of appraising the prosecution evidence, the observation of the Magistrate made while declining application of the investigating officer for recording confessional statement of the petitioner, Naveed Asghar that "the accused appeared to be under pressure of the Police" also throws some light on the manner in which the investigation was conducted.

33. It is a well-established principle of administration of justice in criminal cases that finding of guilt against an accused person cannot be based merely on the high probabilities that may be inferred from evidence in a given case. The finding as regards his guilt should be rested surely and firmly on the evidence produced in the case and the plain inferences of guilt that may irresistibly be drawn from that evidence. Mere conjectures and probabilities cannot take the place of proof. If a case is decided merely on high probabilities regarding the existence or non-existence of a fact to prove the guilt of a person, the golden rule of giving "benefit of doubt" to an accused person, which has been a dominant feature of the administration of criminal justice in this country with the consistent approval of the Constitutional Courts, will be reduced to a naught.[33] The prosecution is under obligation to prove its case against the accused person at the standard of proof required in criminal cases, namely, beyond reasonable doubt standard, and cannot be said to have discharged this obligation by producing evidence that merely meets the preponderance of probability standard applied in civil cases. If the prosecution fails to discharge its said obligation and there remains a reasonable doubt, not an imaginary or artificial doubt, as to the guilt of the accused person, the benefit of that doubt is to be given to the accused person as of right, not as of concession.[34] The rule of giving benefit of doubt to accused person is essentially a rule of caution and prudence, and is deep rooted in our jurisprudence for safe administration of criminal justice. In common law, it is based on the maxim, "It is better that ten guilty persons be acquitted rather than one innocent person be convicted". While in Islamic criminal law it is based on the high authority of sayings of the Holy Prophet of Islam (peace be upon him): "Avert punishments [hudood] when there are doubts";[35] and" Drive off the ordained crimes from the Muslims as far as you can. If there is any place of refuge for him [accused], let him have his way, because the leader's mistake in pardon is better than his mistake in punishment".[36] A three-member Bench of this Court has quoted probably latter part of the last mentioned saying of the Holy Prophet (peace be upon him) in Ayub Masih v. State[37] in the English translation thus: "Mistake of Qazi (Judge) in releasing a criminal is better than his mistake in punishing an innocent."

34. Keeping in view the said golden rule of giving benefit of doubt to an accused person for safe administration of criminal justice, we are firmly of the opinion that all the circumstantial evidence discussed above is completely unreliable and utterly deficient to prove the charge against the petitioners beyond reasonable doubt. The prosecution has miserably failed to complete the chain of circumstances so as to establish conclusively the guilt of the petitioners in a manner that can rule out every hypothesis inconsistent with their innocence. The circumstantial evidence tendered by the prosecution is not found to be like a well-knit chain, one end of which can touch the dead body of the deceased persons and the other the neck of the petitioners. We find that the missing links have been liberally filled up by the courts below, apparently being influence by the heinous nature of the charges involved in the case, on the basis of surmises and conjectures, and this has resulted in grave injustice. The courts below have overlooked serious pitfalls and grave infirmities in the prosecution evidence by adopting a superficial and cursory approach, not befitting the seriousness of the crime charged in the present case. The concurrent verdict returned by the courts below (trial court and appellate court) is manifestly erroneous, having been arrived at without a complete and comprehensive appreciation of all the evidence and relevant aspects of the case. The petition is therefore converted into appeal and is allowed: the judgments of the courts below are set aside and the petitioners are acquitted of the charges. They shall be released forthwith, if they are not required to be detained in some other case.

35. Before parting with the judgment, we feel constrained to observe though at the cost of some repetition but for the sake of clarity that in a criminal trial an accused person cannot be convicted on the basis of mere "suspicion" or "probability" unless and until the charge against him is "proved beyond reasonable doubt", a standard of proof required in criminal cases in almost all common law jurisdictions. An accused person cannot be deprived of his constitutional right[38] to be dealt with in accordance with law, merely because he is alleged to have committed a gruesome and heinous offence. The zeal to punish an offender even in derogation or violation of the law would blur the distinction between arbitrary decisions and lawful judgments. No doubt, duty of the courts is to administer justice; but this duty is to be performed in accordance with the law and not otherwise. The mandatory requirements of law cannot be ignored by labelling them as technicalities in pursuit of the subjective administration of justice. One guilty person should not be taken to task at the sacrifice of the very basis of a democratic and civilised society, i.e., the rule of law. Tolerating acquittal of some guilty whose guilt is not proved under the law is the price which the society is to pay for the protection of their invaluable constitutional right to be treated in accordance with the law. Otherwise, every person will have to bear peril of being dealt with under the personal whims of the persons sitting in executive or judicial offices, which they in their own wisdom and subjective assessment consider good for the society.

36. Foregoing are the reasons for our short order dated 07.12.2020, which for ease of reference and completion of record is reproduced hereunder:-

> "For reasons to be recorded later, the instant jail petition is converted into an appeal and the same is hereby allowed. The convictions and sentences of appellants Naveed Asghar, Khurram Shehzad and Qadeer Ahmed alias Saqib are set aside. They are acquitted of the charge(s) framed against them. They are behind the bars and are ordered to be released forthwith, if not required to be detained in any other case."

MWA/N-2/SC Petition allowed.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 684

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

Messrs LUNG FUNG CHINESE RESTAURANT, LAHORE and others---Petitioners

Versus

PUNJAB FOOD AUTHORITY and others---Respondents

C.P. 1331-L of 2017, decided on 13th April, 2021.

(Against the judgment of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 27.01.2017, passed in W.P. No.25124 of 2015).

(a) Punjab Food Authority Act (XVI of 2011)---

----Ss. 4, 7(3) & 9---International key principles integral to the architecture of food laws stated.

General Food Regulations of the European Commission-EC Regulation No. 178(2002); Principles of food safety legislation, J.L. Jouve, Food Control. Vol.9. No.2-3. pp.75-81, 1998 Elsevier Science Ltd. and The General Food Law Regulation by the European Food Safety Authority (EFSA) ref.

(b) Punjab Food Authority Act (XVI of 2011)---

----Ss. 13(1)(c), 18 & 31(2)---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 18, 23 & 25---Powers of Food Safety Officer to seal premises under S. 13(1)(c) of the Punjab Food Authority Act, 2011 ('the 2011 Act')---Constitutionality and legality---Power of sealing in the hands of the Food Safety Officer (FSO) could easily be applied arbitrarily which could not be permitted under the constitutional scheme, as any such act would offend fundamental rights under Arts. 18, 23 & 25 of the Constitution---Power of sealing of premises by the FSO, in its present form, was therefore ex facie discriminatory---Power of the FSO to "seal any premises" in S.13(1)(c) of the 2011 Act was declared to be unconstitutional and illegal, and it was further declared that any Rules, Regulations or SOPs promulgated under the 2011 Act dealing with "sealing of the premises" by the FSO in the absence of any sealing power under the Act were, ultra vires the 2011 Act and also illegal and without any legal effect.

The Punjab Food Authority Act, 2011 ('the 2011 Act') did not lay down any parameters or guidelines as to when the power of "sealing of premises" could be invoked by the Food Safety Officer (FSO) under section 13(1)(c) of the 2011 Act. No ground or any other legislative guideline had been given in section 13(1)(c) that permitted or empowered the FSO to exercise his discretion and invoke the power of sealing. Section 13(1)(c) simply stated that FSO could seal any premises where he believed any food was prepared, preserved, packaged, stored, conveyed, distributed or sold, examined any such food and examined anything that he believed was used, or capable of being used for such preparation, preservation, packaging, storing, conveying, distribution or sale. Nowhere did section 13(1)(c) provide when the sealing powers could be invoked. Further, the act of "sealing" was not supported by a remedial mechanism as in the case of seizure of food. Therefore, there was no legal remedy available to a food operator or food business after the premises had been sealed. There was also no provision for de- sealing under the Act. More importantly, a similar power had been actually vested in the FSO under section 18 of the Act for passing emergency prohibition orders whereby a food operator could be restrained from carrying on food business. The difference was that within twenty-four hours the aggrieved party could approach the Food Authority for its redressal against such order (Section 18(2)). The so-called sealing power under section 13(1)(c) amounted to frustrating section 18 and the scheme of the 2011 Act.

In the absence of any legislative policy or guideline clearly spelling out when the sealing could take place and there being no remedial process provided against sealing, the power of sealing in the hands of the FSO could easily be applied arbitrarily which could not be permitted under the constitutional scheme, as any such act would offend fundamental rights under Articles 18, 23 and 25 of the Constitution. The power of sealing of premises by the FSO, in its present form, was therefore ex facie discriminatory. Supreme Court declared that the power of the FSO to "seal any premises" in section 13(1)(c) was unconstitutional and illegal, hence, the power to seal the premises of a food operator or a food business by the FSO was struck down; that reference to "sealing" in section 31(2) was also to be accordingly struck down; that the rest of the provision [section 13(1)(c)] shall remain intact and continue to be enforceable; that any Rules, Regulations or SOPs promulgated under the 2011 Act dealing with "sealing of the premises" by the FSO in the absence of any sealing power under the Act were, therefore, ultra vires the Act and also illegal and without any legal effect.

(c) Punjab Food Authority Act (XVI of 2011)---

----Ss. 13(1)(ca), 16, 18 & 39(1)(d)---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 10A---Powers of Food Safety Officer (FSO) to impose fines, issue Improvement Notice or issue Emergency Prohibition Orders under the Punjab Food Authority Act, 2011 ('the 2011 Act')---Constitutionality---All said powers enjoyed by the FSO provided a supporting remedial forum for the aggrieved party---Said powers and their corresponding provisions in the 2011 Act not only met the requirement of Art.10A of the Constitution regarding fair trial and due process, but they also gave the FSO the choice to make risk analysis and then adopt a proper risk management strategy by either issuing a Notice of Improvement or imposing a fine or taking a more stern action by seizing the food item which contravened the provisions of the 2011 Act or if the risk to human health was imperative, to issue Emergency Prohibition Order and restrain the food operator from carrying on food business under S. 18 of the 2011 Act---The enforcement interventions by the FSO under the 2011 Act were laid out in a manner that highlighted the concept of proportionality and must be applied in such spirit on case to case basis.

(d) Punjab Food Authority Act (XVI of 2011)---

----Ss. 7, 13 & Preamble---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 18 & 24(1)---Powers of Food Authority and Food Safety Officers---Principles of 'scientific risk analysis' and 'proportionality'---Scope---Punjab Food Authority Act, 2011 ('the 2011 Act') could only be put to an effective use to achieve its goal of food safety and protection of human health if the key principles of scientific knowledge, risk analysis, proportionality and precautionary principle were kept in mind by the Food Safety Officer (FSO) and the Food Authority---Additionally, the FSO must be of the requisite qualification as provided under S.13 of the 2011 Act, he must be abreast with the latest food and health science to be able to make intelligent and smart risk analysis of the risk and danger to food and healthy safety in any given situation---Any drastic step by the Food Authority or its officers that was not based on scientific risk analysis or was not proportionate to the health hazard involved, could cause huge economic and financial loss to the food business by bringing the business of a food operator to a crushing halt, thereby offending the constitutional rights to business and property of a food operator or food business---If the contravention under the 2011 Act could be remedied through a less harsh mechanism provided under the law, taking of a more drastic step should be avoided; this was a balancing act the Food Authority had to undertake to meet the international food law principle of proportionality.

(e) Punjab Food Authority Act (XVI of 2011)---

----S. 38---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 10A---Publication of names of convicts in newspapers---Constitutionality and scope---Section 38 of the Punjab Food Authority Act, 2011 ('the 2011 Act') dealt with publication in the newspapers and provided that after the conviction under the 2011 Act had attained finality, the Food Authority with the permission of the Special Court could publish the name of the food operator or food business in the newspapers or in any other mode for information---Section 38 clearly barred the Food Authority and its officers to publicize any proceedings taken against a food business or a food operator under the 2011 Act unless the conviction had attained finality and there was permission granted by the court for its publication----Food Authority and Food Safety Officers (FSOs), therefore, cannot release any information during the pendency of the proceedings under the 2011 Act---Section 38 of the 2011 Act was in line with the requirement of due process and fair trial---Any violation of S.38 would make the FSO or any other officer of the Food Authority liable to departmental action.

(f) Punjab Food Authority Act (XVI of 2011)---

----Ss. 7, 13 & Preamble---Powers of Food Authority and Food Safety Officers---'Precautionary principle'---Scope---Precautionary principle [Article 7 of EU Law Regulation (EC) No. 178/2002] referred to specific situations where: (i) there were reasonable grounds for concern that an unacceptable level of risk to health existed and (ii) the available supporting information and data were not sufficiently complete to enable a comprehensive risk assessment to be made---When faced with these specific circumstances, decision makers or risk managers may take measures or other actions based on the precautionary principle, while seeking more complete scientific and other data---Such measures were provisional until the time when more comprehensive information concerning the risk could be gathered and analysed---Precautionary principle had no application where the food items inspected by the Food Safety Officer (FSO) were found to be adulterated, substandard or misbranded, unsafe or suffered from false advertisement or false labelling or were kept under unhygienic and unsanitary conditions---No scientific uncertainty existed about such contravention and could easily be checked on the spot or in a food laboratory---Precautionary principle was to be applied where the health and food safety risk attached to a food item was scientifically uncertain and created doubt of health risk, in such a case, till such time that there was scientific certainty, such a food item could be seized or recalled as the case may be.

M. Irfan Khan Ghaznavi, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners.

Iftikhar Ahmad Mian, Advocate Supreme Court, Ch. Sultan Mahmood, Advocate Supreme Court, Sheheryar Sultan, Secretary, Food Department, Government of the Punjab, Rafaqat Ali Niswana, D.G. Punjab Food Authority, Anum Gulraiz Mir, Addl. Director Legal and Usman Samad, Assistant Director, Legal for Respondents.

Ahmad Awais, A.G. Punjab and Rana Shamshad Khan, Addl. A.G. Punjab on Court's notice.

Date of hearing: 9th March, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---On 08.08.2015, Food Safety Officer ("FSO") of the Punjab Food Authority visited LUNG FUNG, Chinese restaurant in Lahore. After carrying out inspection of six freezers installed in the restaurant, the FSO sealed the said restaurant on the same day allegedly invoking his powers under section 13 (1) (c) of the Punjab Food Authority Act, 2011 ("Act")[1]. Later on the said restaurant was allegedly de-sealed on 17.08.2015 and the restaurant was served with an Improvement Notice under section 16 of the Act. The petitioner-restaurant and its proprietors challenged the act of sealing of the restaurant by FSO, the methodology of enforcement under the Act and the constitutionality and vires, inter alia, of the power of "sealing" exercised by the FSO under section 13(1)(c) of the Act.

2. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at some length and have examined the provisions of the Act. Brief facts are that the FSO upon examining the freezers installed in the kitchen sealed the premises (restaurant) vide sealing order dated 08.08.2015, which is reproduced hereunder for convenience and reference:-

Form 18

ORDER OF SEALING

(Under section 13 (1) (c) (g) of the Punjab Food Authority Act, 2011)

The powers conferred under section 13 read with section 51 of the Punjab Food Authority Act, 2011, the undersigned has reason to believe that there are sufficient grounds for sealing of your premises. I being an authorized officer, hereby direct you to keep the following food stock sealed till such orders as may be issued subsequently in relation thereto:-

(Name of the Food Business Operator and address of the premises)

Lung Fund Chines Restaurant,

Kashmir Road, Near Governor House.

| Sr. No. | Name of the product | Batch No. | No. of Units | Qty. in KGs. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1. | Freezers | | 6 | |

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 2. | | | | |
| 3. | | | | |
| 4. | | | | |
| 5. | | | | |

> Fine was imposed last time;

> Workers were not wearing caps.

> Dirty washing area.

> Stagnant water on kitchen floor.

> Raw and cooked food stored together in freezer.

> Expired bread found of 24.07.2015;

> Poor premises hygiene.

> Flies found on uncovered food.

Even though the tenor of the above Order shows that only the food stock (i.e., in the six freezers) has been sealed but admittedly, on ground the entire restaurant was sealed. Later on the restaurant was allegedly de-sealed on 17.08.2015 and Improvement Notice under section 16 of the Act was served on the petitioner, which is reproduced hereunder:-

3. Learned counsel for the respondents was unable to explain, on what grounds and under whose authority were the premises of the food business sealed and then de-sealed, under the Act. The respondents, inspite of our repeated queries failed to produce the de-sealing order or refer to the relevant law in this regard. They also failed to explain whether the law provided for any grounds or reasons for "sealing of premises" under section 13(1)(c) of the Act.

4. In this factual background, before examining the relevant provisions of the Act, it would be useful to have an understanding of the international key principles that are integral to the architecture of food laws. Consideration of these principles is in line with section 7(3) of the Act which provides that the Food Authority shall exercise its functions, as far as possible, in accordance with the well established scientific principles and international best practices. According to well established General Food Regulations of the European Union,[2] modern food safety legislation must protect the interests and concerns of consumers[3] and the legitimate interests of food operators[4]. The constitution of the Food Authority under the Act (section 4) is therefore broad based and inclusive of all the competing interests: the Government, scientific experts, legislators, representatives of the food operators and of the consumers. Under international best practice, food safety legislation is required to be science based; reliant on risk analysis including: risk assessment and risk management; must maintain proportionality - finding solutions proportionate to health risks; achieve health protection on a preventive basis;[5] and apply the precautionary principle, where required. The measures to be taken to protect health and food safety must be underpinned by strong science. It is for this reason that a Scientific Panel has been constituted under the Act (section 9) to formulate recommendations for the Food Authority on food standards, procedures, processes and guidelines in relation to technical aspect of food. The European Commission[6] has been at the forefront of the development of risk analysis principles, including risk assessment and risk management, that must be undertaken in an independent, objective and transparent manner based on the best available science. Risk management is the process of weighing policy alternatives in the light of results of a risk assessment and selecting the appropriate actions necessary to prevent, reduce or eliminate the risk. In the risk management phase, the decision makers need to consider a range of other information in addition to the scientific risk assessment e.g., feasibility of controlling a risk; socio-economic effects; environmental impact[7] and other techniques of risk analysis, such as cost/benefit analysis. Proportionality is normally understood as the right balance between ends and means. Action taken must be proportionate to real health risks involved. Wherever possible, health protection and food safety should be achieved on a preventive basis. In case where there is scientific uncertainty about the health risk attached to a food item, the use of precautionary principle has been imported from the world of environmental law into food laws to address such a situation. These principles are fully in line with our constitutional mandate and promote fundamental rights to fair trial (Article 10A), to business (Article 18) and to property (Article 23) of a food operator or a food business.

5. The objective of the Act is to establish the Punjab Food Authority to protect public health, provide safety and standards of food. There are three regulatory regimes under the Act that provide for food safety and public health: (i) powers enjoyed by Food Safety Officer; (ii) powers enjoyed by the Food Authority and (iii); powers of the Special Court. FSO, the field officer, who visits food businesses and food operators, enjoys the power to seize food, apparatus, etc. if it appears to him to be in contravention of the Act. Contraventions have been spelled out in the shape of offences e.g., selling adulterated food;[8] manufacturing, selling, storing, distributing, importing and exporting of substandard or misbranded food[9]; or unsafe food;[10] selling food using false advertisement[11]; or preparing and packing any food using false labeling[12] and keeping food under unhygienic and unsanitary conditions.[13] The powers of seizure are invoked if there is a contravention of the Act by the FSO and is elaborately dealt with in section 13(3), (4), and (5) providing detailed mechanism whereby an aggrieved person can within seven days approach the Special Court against the said seizure. As opposed to seizure, the Act does not lay down any parameters or guidelines as to when the power of "sealing of premises" can be invoked by the FSO under section 13(1)(c). The provision is reproduced hereunder for reference;--

> 13. Powers of Food Safety Officer.---(1) A Food Safety Officer may-
>
> (a) take sample of any food or any substance, which appears to him to be intended for sale, or has been sold as food;
>
> (b) seize any food, apparatus or utensil which appears to the Food Safety Officer to be in contravention of this Act, the rules or the regulations;
>
> (c) enter or seal any premises where he believes any food is prepared, preserved, packaged, stored, conveyed, distributed or sold, examine any such food and examine anything that he believes is used, or capable of being used for such preparation, preservation, packaging, storing, conveying, distribution or sale; (emphasis supplied)

No ground or any other legislative guideline has been given in section 13(1)(c) that permits or empowers the FSO to exercise his discretion and invoke the power of sealing. Section 13(1)(c) simply states that FSO can seal any premises where he believes any food is prepared, preserved, packaged, stored, conveyed, distributed or sold, examine any such food and examine anything that he believes is used, or capable of being used for such preparation, preservation, packaging, storing, conveying, distribution or sale. Nowhere does section 13(1)(c) provide when the sealing powers can be invoked. Further, the act of "sealing" is not supported by a remedial mechanism as in the case of seizure of food. Therefore, there is no legal remedy available to a food operator or food business[14] after the premises[15] have been sealed. There is also no provision for de-sealing under the Act. More importantly, a similar power has been actually vested in the FSO under section 18 of the Act for passing emergency prohibition orders whereby a food operator can be restrained from carrying on food business. The difference is that within twenty-four hours the aggrieved party can approach the Food Authority for its redressal against such order (Section 18(2)). The so-called sealing power under section 13(1)(c) amounts to frustrating section 18 and the scheme of the Act. In the absence of any legislative policy or guideline clearly spelling out when the sealing can take place and there being no remedial process provided against sealing, the power of sealing in the hands of the FSO can easily be applied arbitrarily which cannot be permitted under our constitutional scheme, as any such act would offend fundamental rights under Articles 18, 23 and 25 of the Constitution. The power of sealing of premises by the FSO, in its present form, is therefore ex facie discriminatory. We, therefore, declare that the power of the FSO to "seal any premises" in section 13(1)(c) to be unconstitutional and illegal. Hence, the power to seal the premises of a food operator or a food business by the FSO is struck down. Reference to "sealing" in section 31(2) is also accordingly struck down. The rest of the provision [section 13(1)(c)] shall remain intact and continue to be enforceable. Any Rules, Regulations or SOPs promulgated under the Act dealing with "sealing of the premises" by the FSO in the absence of any sealing power under the Act are, therefore, ultra vires the Act and are also declared illegal and without any legal effect.

6. Other than the above, the FSO can also impose fines

(subject to delegation of powers under section 51), issue Improvement Notice or issue Emergency Prohibition Orders. The relevant provisions are:

13 Powers of Food Safety Officer.---(1) A Food Safety Officer may-

(a)

(b)

(c)

(ca) impose fine on a food operator if the Authority has delegated such power to him;

read with section 39((1)(d) where a Food Authority can impose fine on the food operator which may extend to one million rupees:

16 Improvement notice.---(1) If a Food Safety Officer has reasons to believe that any food operator has failed to comply with any provisions of this Act, the rules or the regulations, he may serve an improvement notice upon the food operator-

(a) stating the grounds for believing that the food operator has failed to comply with any provisions of the Act or the rules or the regulations;

(b) specifying the matters which constitute the food operator's failure so to comply; and

(c) intimating the measures which the food operator should take in order to secure compliance with the relevant provisions of the law.

(2) If the food operator fails to comply with the improvement notice within the prescribed time, the Food Authority may cancel or suspended his licence or take such other action as it deems appropriate.

18. Emergency prohibition orders.---(1) If the Food Safety Officer is satisfied that the health risk condition exists with respect to any food business, he may, after serving a notice on the food operator and for reasons to be recorded in writing, restrain him from carrying on the food business with or without specifying conditions or period of such restraint.

(2) The Food Safety Officer shall, within twenty four hours of the action taken under sub-section (1), report such action to the Food Authority which may, after serving a notice on the food operator and for reasons to be recorded in writing, confirm, modify or set aside the order of the Food Safety Officer.

All these powers enjoyed by the FSO provide a supporting remedial forum for the aggrieved party. These provisions not only meet the requirement of Article 10A of the Constitution regarding fair trial and due process, but they also give the FSO the choice to make risk analysis and then adopt a proper risk management strategy by either issuing a Notice of Improvement or imposing a fine or taking a more stern action by seizing the food item which contravenes the provisions of the Act or if the risk to human health is imperative, to issue Emergency Prohibition Order and restrain the food operator from carrying on food business under section 18. The enforcement interventions by the FSO under the Act are laid out in a manner that highlight the concept of proportionality and must be applied in this spirit on case to case basis.

7. The second regulatory regime is under the Food Authority itself. Section 7 lays down the powers and functions of the Food Authority, which are reproduced hereunder for reference:-

"S 7. Powers and functions of the Food Authority.---

(1) The Food Authority shall regulate and monitor the food business in order to ensure provision of safe food.

(2) Without prejudice to the provisions of sub-section (1), the Food Authority may-

(a) formulate standards, procedures, processes and guidelines in relation to any aspect of food including food business, food labelling, food additive, and specify appropriate enforcement systems;

(b) specify procedures and guidelines for setting up and accreditation of food laboratories;

(c) formulate method of sampling, analysis of samples and reporting of results;

(d) specify licensing, prohibition orders, recall procedures, improvement notices or prosecution;

(e) determine terms and conditions of service of its employees;

(f) provide scientific advice and technical support to the Government in matters relating to food;

(g) collect and analyze relevant scientific and technical data relating to food;

(h) establish a system of network of food operators and consumers to facilitate food safety and quality control;

(i) organize training programmes in food safety and standards;

(j) promote general awareness as to food safety and standards;

(k) levy fee for registration, licensing and other services;

(l) certify food for export;

(m) perform any other prescribed function; and

(n) do any other thing which is necessary for the discharge of its functions under this Act.

(3) The Food Authority shall exercise its functions, as far as possible, in accordance with the well-established scientific principles and international best practices."

(emphasis supplied)

The Food Authority issues licenses, imposes fines and also sits as an appellate authority over the Emergency Prohibition Orders passed by the FSO. Relevant provisions are as under:

15 Licensing of food business.---(1) A person shall not use any place for food business except under the prescribed registration or licence.

(2) The Food Authority may, in the prescribed manner, exempt a class of food operators from obtaining compulsory registration or licence under this section.

18. Emergency prohibition orders.---(1) If the Food Safety Officer is satisfied that the health risk condition exists with respect to any food business, he may, after serving a notice on the food operator and for reasons to be recorded in writing, restrain him from carrying on the food business with or without specifying conditions or period of such restraint.

(2) The Food Safety Officer shall, within twenty four hours of the action taken under subsection (1), report such action to the Food Authority which may, after serving a notice on the food operator and for reasons to be recorded in writing, confirm, modify or set aside the order of the Food Safety Officer.

39. Jurisdiction of the Food Authority---(1) On information received rom any source, the Food Authority may, for reasons to be recorded in writing-

(a)

(b)

(c) impose fine on the food operator which may extend to one million rupees.

Read with section 45: where these fines can be recovered as arrears of land revenue.

The Food Authority or its officers can also register criminal cases or file a criminal complaint for the contravention of the Act.

8. The third regulatory regime is under the Special Court. Offences and Penalties provided under Chapter IV including selling food against the law; or relating to substandard or misbranded food; unsafe food; false advertisement and false labeling; unhygienic or unsanitary conditions[16] or passing Prohibition Orders, are dealt with by the Special Court[17]:-

17 Prohibition orders.---If any food operator is convicted of an offence under this Act and the Court is satisfied that the health risk exists with respect to the food business, the Court, may impose the following prohibitions-

(a) a prohibition on the use of a process, treatment, premises or equipment for purposes of the food business; or

(b) a prohibition, with or without specifying period of prohibition, on the food operator to conduct or operate the food business.

9. On the whole, the Act can only be put to an effective use to achieve its goal of food safety and protection of human health if the key principles of scientific knowledge, risk analysis, proportionality and precautionary principle are kept in mind by the FSO and the Food Authority. Additionally, the FSO must be of the requisite qualification as provided under section 13 of the Act, he must be abreast with the latest food and health science to be able to make intelligent and smart risk analysis of the risk and danger to food and healthy safety in any given situation. For example in the present case, the food in the freezers of the petitioner restaurant could have been seized or fine imposed or an Improvement Notice issued. Any drastic step by the Food Authority or its officers that is not based on scientific risk analysis or is not proportionate to the health hazard involved, can cause huge economic and financial loss to the food business by bringing the business of a food operator to a crushing halt, thereby offending the constitutional rights to business and property of a food operator or food business. If the contravention under the Act can be remedied through a less harsh mechanism provided under the law, taking of a more drastic step should be avoided. This is a balancing act the Food Authority has to undertake to meet the international food law principle of proportionality.

10. Section 38 of the Act deals with publication in the newspapers and provides that after the conviction under the Act has attained finality, the Food Authority with the permission of the Special Court can publish the name of the food operator or food business in the newspapers or in any other mode for information. This clearly bars the Food Authority and its officers to publicize any proceedings taken against a food business or a food operator under the Act unless the conviction has attained finality and there is permission granted by the court for its publication. The Food Authority and FSOs, therefore, cannot release any information during the pendency of the proceedings under the Act. This is also in line with the requirement of due process and fair trial. Any violation of section 38 would make the FSO or any other officer of the Food Authority liable to departmental action. It is also noted with concern that the Act mandatorily provides for the inclusion of several females in the composition of the Food Authority under section 4. We asked the concerned Secretary, of the Government of the Punjab, if the requirement of gender balance has been complied with. The Secretary assured us that section 4 has been given full effect to and the composition of the Authority is complete in accordance with the law.

11. Reliance in the impugned judgment by the High Court on the precautionary principle to justify the sealing of the premises in the present circumstances is somewhat misplaced. The precautionary principle (Article 7 of the General Food Law) refers to specific situations where: (i) there are reasonable grounds for concern that an unacceptable level of risk to health exists and (ii) the available supporting information and data are not sufficiently complete to enable a comprehensive risk assessment to be made. When faced with these specific circumstances, decision makers or risk managers may take measures or other actions based on the precautionary principle, while seeking more complete scientific and other data. Such measures are provisional until the time when more comprehensive information concerning the risk can be gathered and analysed.[18] This principle has no application where the food items inspected by the FSO are found to be adulterated, substandard or misbranded, unsafe or suffer from false advertisement or false labelling or are kept under unhygienic and unsanitary conditions. There is no scientific uncertainty about such contravention and can easily be checked on the spot or in a food laboratory. Precautionary principle is to be applied where the health and food safety risk attached to a food item is scientifically uncertain and creates doubt of health risk, in such a case, till such time that there is scientific certainty, such a food item can be seized or recalled as the case may be. This is an important principle but has no application to the present case and has been incorrectly relied upon by the High Court in justifying an unconstitutional provision of law.

12. For all the above reasons we set aside the impugned judgment and declare the power to seal the petitioner restaurant by the Food Safety Officer under section 13(1)(c) vide Order dated 08.08.2015 to be unconstitutional and illegal. We, therefore, convert this petitions into an appeal and allow the same in the above terms.

MWA/L-4/SC Petitions allowed.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 708

Present: Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

Shahzada QAISER ARFAT alias QAISER---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE and another---Respondents

Criminal Petition No. 801-L of 2020, decided on 3rd February, 2021.

(Against the order of the Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 03.03.2020, passed in Crl. Misc. No.7155-B of 2020).

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 498---Pre-arrest bail, grant of---Grounds---Mala fides of complainant---Scope---Mala fide being a state of mind could not always be proved through direct evidence, and it was often to be inferred from the facts and circumstances of the case.

Khalil Ahmed v. State PLD 2017 SC 730 ref.

(b) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 54---Police Order [22 of 2002], Art. 4(1)(j)---Police Rules, 1934, R. 26.1---Power of police to arrest an accused---Scope---Ordinarily no person was to be arrested straightaway only because he had been nominated as an accused person in an FIR or in any other version of the incident brought to the notice of the investigating officer by any person until the investigating officer felt satisfied that sufficient justification existed for his arrest---Investigating officers should not mechanically make the arrest of a person accused of having committed a cognizable offence, rather they must exercise their discretion in making the arrest of such person judiciously by applying their mind to the particular facts and circumstances of the case and consciously considering the question: what purpose would be served and what object would be achieved by arrest of the accused person.

Sughran Bibi v. State PLD 2018 SC 595 ref.

(c) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 498---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9, 10-A & 14(1)---Pre-arrest bail---Constitutional grounds for pre-arrest bail stated.

The power of the High Courts and the Courts of Sessions to grant pre-arrest bail, first and foremost, must be examined in the constitutional context of liberty, dignity, due process and fair trial. Pre-arrest bail was in the nature of a check on the police power to arrest a person. The non-availability of incriminating material against the accused or non-existence of a sufficient ground including a valid purpose for making arrest of the accused person in a case by the investigating officer would as a corollary be a ground for admitting the accused to pre-arrest bail, and vice versa. Reluctance of the courts in admitting the accused persons to pre-arrest bail by treating such a relief as an extraordinary one without examining whether there was sufficient incriminating material available on record to connect the accused with the commission of the alleged offence and for what purpose his arrest and detention was required during investigation or trial of the case, and their insistence only on showing mala fide on part of the complainant or the police for granting pre-arrest bail did not appear to be correct, especially after recognition of the right to fair trial as a fundamental right under Article 10A of Constitution. Protection against arbitrary arrest and detention was part of the right to liberty and fair trial.

2014 SCMR 1349 and A Basic Guide to Legal Standards and Practice, published by Lawyers Committee for Human Rights USA (2000) ref.

(d) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 498---Pre-arrest bail, grant of---Grounds---Mala fides of complainant---Scope and proof---In many cases, accused persons were granted pre-arrest bail after the court found that there were no reasonable grounds for believing their involvement in the commission of the alleged offences and the court did not require independent proof of mala fide on part of the police or the complainant before granting such relief---Despite non-availability of the incriminating material against the accused, his implication by the complainant and the insistence of the police to arrest him were the circumstances which by themselves indicated the mala fide on the part of the complainant and the police, and the accused need not lead any other evidence to prove mala fide on their part.

Muhammad Fayyaz v. State 1976 SCMR 183; Zakaullah v. State 1987 SCMR 1720; Zakia Begum v. State 1991 SCMR 297; Bashir Ahmad v. State 1993 SCMR 919; Muhammad Gul v. State 1998 SCMR 576; Dildar Ali v. State 1999 SCMR 1316; Rizwan Iqbal v. State 2007 SCMR 1392; Meeran Bux v. State PLD 1989 SC 347; Muhammad Firdaus v. State 2005 SCMR 784; Darbar Ali v. State 2015 SCMR 879 and Aqsa Safdar v. State 2019 SCMR 1923 ref.

(e) Penal Code (XLV of 1860)---

----Ss. 109 & 120-B---Abetment and conspiracy---Proof---Court must base its conclusion as to involvement of an absentee accused as abettor or conspirator on some solid material collected during the course of investigation, and not on surmises or conjectures, either tentatively at bail stage or finally at judgment stage---Conspiracy to commit a crime by its very nature was usually secret, and could not be proved by direct evidence in most cases, however, it did not mean that the prosecution was absolved from its duty to prove the allegation of conspiracy, or that mere allegation of conspiracy was sufficient for holding the accused liable---In case of non-availability of direct evidence, the police must collect during investigation, and the prosecution must lead during trial, such circumstantial evidence from which a court could draw a legitimate inference of the existence of conspiracy and involvement of the accused in that conspiracy.

(f) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 498---Penal Code (XLV of 1860), Ss. 302, 109, 148 & 149---Qatl-i-amd, abetment, rioting armed with deadly weapons, unlawful assembly---Pre-arrest bail, grant of---Material available as to the alleged involvement of the accused in hatching alleged conspiracy of committing murder of the deceased persons, so far as the FIR was concerned, was confined to mere allegation of conspiracy/abetment without disclosing any details of such conspiracy/abetment, such as place and time of the alleged conspiracy/abetment and names of the persons who heard such conspiracy/abetment---However, later on the police recorded statements of certain persons, under S.161, Cr.P.C. wherein they had stated that while passing through the Bazar outside the house of the accused persons, they overheard the accused persons say that they would take revenge of the murder of their brother---Prosecution had not claimed that the accused was present at the spot or that he had caused any injury to any deceased or anybody else---In such circumstances there was no chance of any recovery at the instance of the accused if he was arrested---All the incriminating material against the accused was already with the prosecution---Present case was a fit case for exercise of discretion to admit the accused to pre-arrest bail to save him from unjustified arrest, consequent humiliation and the curtailment of his right to liberty---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and accused was granted pre-arrest bail.

M. Sohail Dar, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners along with petitioner in person.

Respondent No.2 in person.

Khurram Khan, Addl. P.G. for the State along with Humayun Rashid, SI.

Date of hearing: 3rd February, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---

Crl. M.A. No. 310/2020: This is an application for condonation of delay. For the reasons given therein, the same is allowed, and the delay in filing the main petition is condoned.

Crl. Petition No.801-L of 2020

2. On December 7, 2019 at about 12 a.m., three persons were shot dead on G.T. Road in Ferozewala, District Sheikhupura. Five brothers and three unknown persons were nominated in the first information report ("FIR")1 to be the assailants; while their sixth brother, Qaisar ("petitioner") and their father were nominated as abettors, alleged to have instigated and conspired the murders. As Shabbir Hussain (one of the deceased) was involved in the murder of their seventh brother, Asim, the motive alleged was that they wanted to avenge the murder of their seventh brother. Accused Qaisar, the alleged abettor, is the petitioner before us. The Court of Sessions and High Court have dismissed his petitions for pre-arrest bail. The order dated 03.03.2020 of the High Court has been impugned before us through the present petition.

3. Learned counsel for the petitioner has submitted that the Hon'ble High Court has failed to appreciate the mala fide of the complainant in nominating all the male family members of the accused persons, and the material prime facie showing non-involvement of the petitioner in the alleged offence, i.e., the entries in the passport of the petitioner according to which he was not in Pakistan on the day of occurrence. On the other hand, learned counsel for the State has opposed this petition.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and perused the record of the case. The High Court has declined the relief of pre-arrest bail to the petitioner making the observation that pre-arrest bail is an extra-ordinary relief and can only be extended to an innocent person who is implicated in the case on the basis of mala fide, but the petitioner has failed to point out to any mala fide. The learned High Court did not appreciate that the "mala fide" being a state of mind cannot always be proved through direct evidence, and it is often to be inferred from the facts and circumstances of the case.2

5. No doubt, a police officer has, under section 54 of the Cr.P.C., the power to arrest a person who has been involved in any cognizable offence or against whom a complaint has been made or credible information has been received or a reasonable suspicion exists of his having been so concerned. Having the power to arrest is one thing but the justification for the exercise of that power is quite another. A police officer that makes arrest of a person must be able to justify the exercise of that power in making the arrest apart from his having the power to do so. He cannot make arrest of a person, only because he has the power to do so. He must also show sufficient grounds for making the arrest. Article 4(1)(j) of the Police Order, 2002 states this legal position when it prescribes that it is the duty of every police officer to "apprehend all persons whom he is legally authorised to apprehend and for whose apprehension sufficient grounds exist". And Rule 26.1 of the Police Rules, 1934 explains this by providing that the authority given under Section 54 of the Cr.P.C. to the police to arrest without a warrant is permissive and not obligatory. As per the said Rule whenever escape from justice or inconvenient delay in completion of the investigation or commencement of the trial is likely to result from the police failing to arrest, they are bound to do so, but in no other cases. "Ordinarily no person is to be arrested straightaway only because he has been nominated as an accused person in an FIR or in any other version of the incident brought to the notice of the investigating officer by any person until the investigating officer feels satisfied that sufficient justification exists for his arrest."3 The investigating officers should not mechanically make the arrest of a person accused of having committed a cognizable offence, rather they must exercise their discretion in making the arrest of such person judiciously by applying their mind to the particular facts and circumstances of the case and consciously considering the question: what purpose will be served and what object will be achieved by arrest of the accused person?

6. The power of the High Courts and the Courts of Sessions to grant pre-arrest bail, first and foremost, must be examined in the constitutional context of liberty, dignity, due process and fair trial. Pre-arrest bail is in the nature of a check on the police power to arrest a person. The non-availability of incriminating material against the accused or non-existence of a sufficient ground including a valid purpose4 for making arrest of the accused person in a case by the investigating officer would as a corollary be a ground for admitting the accused to pre-arrest bail, and vice versa.5 Reluctance of the courts in admitting the accused persons to pre-arrest bail by treating such a relief as an extraordinary one without examining whether there is sufficient incriminating material available on record to connect the accused with the commission of the alleged offence and for what purpose his arrest and detention is required during investigation or trial of the case, and their insistence only on showing mala fide on part of the complainant or the Police for granting pre-arrest bail does not appear to be correct, especially after recognition of the right to fair trial as a fundamental right under Article 10A of Constitution of Pakistan, 1973.6 Protection against arbitrary arrest and detention is part of the right to liberty and fair trial.7 This Court has, in many cases,8 granted pre-arrest bail to accused persons after finding that there are no reasonable grounds for believing their involvement in the commission of the alleged offences and has not required independent proof of mala fide on part of the Police or the complainant before granting such relief.9 Despite non-availability of the incriminating material against the accused, his implication by the complainant and the insistence of the Police to arrest him are the circumstances which by themselves indicate the mala fide on the part of the complainant and the Police, and the accused need not lead any other evidence to prove mala fide on their part.

7. It is the case of the petitioner that he along with his father were in Saudi Arabia for performing Umra when the occurrence took place. No doubt, managing one's presence in a foreign country at the time of actual commission of an offence may be a tactic to escape criminal liability for being involved in the commission of that offence as abettor or conspirator; but the court must base its conclusion as to involvement of an absentee accused as abettor or conspirator on some solid material collected during the course of investigation, and not on surmises or conjectures, either tentatively at bail stage or finally at judgment stage. It is true that a conspiracy to commit a crime by its very nature is usually secret, and cannot be proved by direct evidence in most cases. It, however, does not mean that the prosecution is absolved from its duty to prove the allegation of conspiracy, or that mere allegation of conspiracy is sufficient for holding the accused liable. In case of non-availability of direct evidence, the police must collect during investigation, and the prosecution must lead during trial, such circumstantial evidence from which a court could draw a legitimate inference of the existence of conspiracy and involvement of the accused in that conspiracy.

8. The material available as to the alleged involvement of the present petitioner in hatching alleged conspiracy of committing murder of the deceased persons, so far as the FIR is concerned, is confined to mere allegation of conspiracy /abetment without disclosing any details of such conspiracy/abetment, such as place and time of the alleged conspiracy/abetment and names of the persons who heard such conspiracy/abetment. However, later on the Police recorded statements of certain persons, under section 161, Cr.P.C. wherein they have stated that while passing through the Bazar outside the house of the accused persons in the night of 18 and 25 November, 2019, they overheard the accused persons say that they would take revenge of the murder of their brother from Shabbir Hussain. It is not the case of the prosecution that the petitioner was present at the spot or he caused any injury to any deceased or anybody else and in such circumstances there is no chance of any recovery at the instance of the petitioner if he is arrested. All the incriminating material against the petitioner is already with the prosecution.

9. In the circumstances, we find it a fit case for exercise of discretion to admit the petitioner to pre-arrest bail to save him from unjustified arrest, consequent humiliation and the curtailment of his right to liberty. We, therefore, convert this petition into appeal and allow the same.

10. These are the reasons of our short order of even date, which is reproduced hereunder for ready reference:

> "For reasons to be recorded later, the instant criminal petition is converted into an appeal and the same is hereby allowed. Petitioner Shahzada Qaiser Arafat alias Qaiser is allowed pre-arrest bail subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.100,000/- (Rupees one hundred thousand) with one surety in the like amount, to the satisfaction of the trail Court/Illaqa Magistrate, within fifteen days."

MWA/S-18/SC Bail granted.

***

---

1 FIR No. 1441/19, dated 07.12.2019, Police Station Ferozewala, District Sheikhupura, Offences under sections 302, 148, 149 and 109, P.P.C.

2 See Khalil Ahmed v. State PLD 2017 SC 730.

3 See Sughran Bibi v. State PLD 2018 SC 595. (7-MB)

4 Pre-trial detention should be the exception reserved only for situations where the likelihood exists that the accused would abscond, destroy evidence, influence witnesses, avoid investigation, flee from the jurisdiction of the state or is likely to repeat the crime due to his past record- Bail and Liberty-by Reema Omar, The Dawn, 22.06.2019.

5 Also see 2014 SCMR 1349.

6 "While incorporating Article 10A in the Constitution and making the right to a 'fair trial' a fundamental right the legislature did not define or describe the requisites of a 'fair trial'. By not defining the term the legislature, appears to have given to it the same meaning as is broadly universally recognized and also embedded in our own jurisprudence." (Suo Motu Case No.4 of 2010, PLD 2012 SC 553 (7-MB), per Nasir-ul-Mulk, J.)

7 See What Is A Fair Trial: A Basic Guide to Legal Standards and Practice, published by Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, USA (2000).

8 See Muhammad Fayyaz v. State 1976 SCMR 183; Zakaullah v. State 1987 SCMR 1720; Zakia Begum v. State 1991 SCMR 297; Bashir Ahmad v. State 1993 SCMR 919; Muhammad Gul v. State, 1998 SCMR 576; Dildar Ali v. State, 1999 SCMR 1316; Rizwan Iqbal v. State, 2007 SCMR 1392.

9 See also Meeran Bux v. State PLD 1989 SC 347; Muhammad Firdaus v. State 2005 SCMR 784, Darbar Ali v. State 2015 SCMR 879; Aqsa Safdar v. State 2019 SCMR 1923.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 738

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

MUHAMMAD SARFRAZ ANSARI---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE and others---Respondents

Criminal Petition No.435 of 2021, decided on 17th May, 2021.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 05.3.2021, passed in Crl. Misc. No.2378/B of 2020).

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497---Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984), Art. 43---Bail---Accused implicated on basis of confessional statement of co-accused recorded under S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Cr.P.C)---Such confessional statement of a co-accused needed independent corroboration even at the bail stage.

Conviction of a co-accused could not be recorded solely on the basis of confessional statement of one accused unless there was also some other independent evidence corroborating such confessional statement. The principle ingrained in Article 43 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat was applied at the bail stage and the confessional statement of an accused could lead the court to form a tentative view about prima facie involvement of his co-accused in the commission of the alleged offence; but as in the trial, at the bail stage also, the prima facie involvement of the co-accused could not be determined merely on the basis of confessional statement of other accused without any other independent incriminating material corroborating the confessional statement.

Javed Masih v. State PLD 1994 SC 314; Faqir Ullah v. Khalil-uz-Zaman 1999 SCMR 2203; Mushtaq v. State 2012 SCMR 109; Naseem Malik v. State 2004 SCMR 283; Muhammad Irshad v. Muhammad Bashir 2006 SCMR 1292 and Ghulam Ahmed v. State 2013 SCMR 385 ref.

(b) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497---Bail---Appreciation of evidence---Scope---At bail stage the court was not to make deeper examination and appreciation of the evidence collected during investigation or to conduct anything in the nature of a preliminary trial to determine the accused's guilt or innocence---However, for deciding the prayer of an accused for bail, the question whether or not there existed reasonable grounds for believing that he had committed the alleged offence could not be decided in vacuum---Court, for answering the said question, had to look at the material available on record when the bail was applied for and be satisfied that there was, or was not, prima facie some tangible evidence which, if left unrebutted, may lead to the inference of the guilt of the accused.

Khalid Saigol v. State PLD 1962 SC 495 and Muhammad Hanif v. Manzoor 1982 SCMR 153 ref.

(c) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497(2)---Penal Code (XLV of 1860), Ss. 409, 420, 468, 471 & 109---Prevention of Corruption Act (II of 1947), S.5(2)---Criminal breach of trust by public servant, cheating and dishonestly inducing delivery of property, forgery for purpose of cheating, using as genuine a forged document, abetment, criminal misconduct---Bail, grant of---Further inquiry---Accused implicated on basis of confessional statement of co-accused---Co-accused stated in his confessional statement that the fake bills were prepared, and eighty percent of the withdrawn amount was taken by the accused---However, there was no sufficient material to corroborate the said statement---Recovered data from the mobile phone did not implicate the accused of the act besides it related to the sale tax invoices and contractor bills of a firm, which was different from the firms owned by the co-accused, in whose favour the alleged fake bills were encashed---Prosecution also failed to refer to any material to substantiate the finding recorded by the investigating officer that the accused , as a result of the fraud, had amassed wealth and purchased two apartments in a housing scheme---Accused being a former, and not a present, employee in the office of Controller Military Accounts prima facie had no control or influence on the matter of passing the alleged fake bills for encashment---Material currently available on record of the case was not sufficient to connect the accused with the commission of the alleged offences, and there were no reasonable grounds for believing that he had committed the alleged offences; but there were sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt in terms of S.497(2) of Cr.P.C.---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and accused was extended the concession of bail.

(d) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497---Bail, grant of---Discretion of Supreme Court---Scope---Practice of the Supreme Court was not to intervene in bail matters ordinarily, leaving them to the discretion of the courts inquiring into the guilt of the accused persons---However, in cases where the discretion was found to have been exercised arbitrarily, perversely or contrary to the settled principles of law, the Supreme Court did not hesitate to interfere with that wrong exercise of discretion, in the interest of justice.

Haider Mehmood Mirza, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Moulvi Ijaz ul Haq, D.A.G. or the State.

Date of hearing: 17th May, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Through this petition, the petitioner has sought leave to appeal against the order dated 05.03.2021, passed by the Lahore High Court, whereby his application seeking post-arrest bail in case FIR No.35 dated 07.8.2020, registered at Police Station FIA Anti-Corruption Circle, Islamabad, for the offences punishable under Sections 420, 468, 471, 409 and 109 of the Pakistan Penal Code, 1860 read with Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, was dismissed.

2. Facts of the case, as alleged in the FIR, briefly are that one Waqas Aslam ("co-accused"), in connivance with the officers/ officials of the office of Controller Military Accounts (CMA) fraudulently withdrew an amount of Rs.52,254,074/- through thirty three fake bills of Central Ordinance Depot (COD), Rawalpindi, in favour of his four firms and deposited in five different bank accounts of those firms, operated by him. It was mentioned in the FIR that the role of the other persons involved in the said fraud would be thrashed out during investigation. The co-accused, Waqas Aslam, implicated the present petitioner, an ex-official of the CMA, during investigation in his confessional statement recorded under Section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Cr.P.C.), for being his partner in, rather mastermind of, the whole fraud. One Muhammad Haider Altaf, an official of the CMA, was also found to have abetted in the commission of the alleged offences, and was arrested in the case, during investigation; he has, however, been admitted to post arrest bail by the High Court vide order dated 12.11.2020.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have gone through the record of the case. We have noticed that the petitioner is not nominated in FIR; he has rather been implicated in the case by the co-accused Waqar Aslam, the prima facie beneficiary of the alleged fraud, in his confessional statement during investigation, which has been relied upon by the learned counsel for the State to oppose the prayer of the petitioner for bail. No doubt, as per Article 43 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order, 1984 when more persons than one are being jointly tried for the same offence and a confession made by one of such persons admitting that the offence was committed by them jointly, is proved, the court may take into consideration the confessional statement of that co-accused as circumstantial evidence against the other co-accused(s). However, this Court has, in several cases,1 held that conviction of a co-accused cannot be recorded solely on the basis of confessional statement of one accused unless there is also some other independent evidence corroborating such confessional statement. The principle ingrained in Article 43 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat is applied at the bail stage and the confessional statement of an accused can lead the court to form a tentative view about prima facie involvement of his co-accused in the commission of the alleged offence;2 but as in the trial, at the bail stage also, the prima facie involvement of the co-accused cannot be determined merely on the basis of confessional statement of other accused without any other independent incriminating material corroborating the confessional statement. Therefore, we have to examine whether there is any other tangible incriminating material available on the record that corroborates the confessional statement of the co-accused, by connecting the petitioner with the commission of the alleged offences.

4. We are fully cognizant of the well-settled principle that at the bail stage the court is not to make deeper examination and appreciation of the evidence collected during investigation or to conduct anything in the nature of a preliminary trial to determine the accused's guilt or innocence. However, for deciding the prayer of an accused for bail, the question whether or not there exist reasonable grounds for believing that he has committed the alleged offence cannot be decided in vacuum. The court, for answering the said question, has to look at the material available on record when the bail is applied for and be satisfied that there is, or is not, prima facie some tangible evidence which, if left unrebutted, may lead to the inference of the guilt of the accused.[3]

5. The co-accused, Waqar Aslam, stated in his confessional statement that the fake bills were prepared, and eighty percent of the withdrawn amount was taken by the present petitioner. However, there is no sufficient material to corroborate the said statement. The recovered data from the mobile phone does not implicate the petitioner of the act besides it relates to the sale tax invoices and contractor bills of a Firm, namely, Ali Traders, and not to the Firms owned by the co-accused, Waqar Aslam, in whose favour the alleged fake bills were encashed. The learned counsel for the State also failed to refer to any material to substantiate the finding recorded by the investigating officer that the petitioner, as a result of the above fraud, has amassed wealth and purchased two apartments in top housing schemes in Rawalpindi. The petitioner being a former, and not a present, employee in the office of C.M.A. prima facie had no control or influence on the matter of passing the alleged fake bills for encashment. We, therefore, find that the material currently available on record of the case is not sufficient to connect the accused with the commission of the alleged offences, and there are no reasonable grounds for believing that he has committed the alleged offences; but there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt in terms of section 497(2) of Cr.P.C.

6. No doubt, it is the practice of this Court not to intervene in bail matters ordinarily, leaving them to the discretion of the courts inquiring into the guilt of the accused persons. However, in cases where the discretion is found to have been exercised arbitrarily, perversely or contrary to the settled principles of law, this Court does not hesitate to interfere with that wrong exercise of discretion, in the interest of justice. In the present case, the trial court and the High Court have not exercised their discretion in accordance with the principles of law governing such discretion. We, therefore, convert this petition into appeal and allow the same, and extend the concession of bail to the petitioner subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.500,000/- with two sureties in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial Court. Needless to say that the observations made in this order are tentative and will not influence the trial Court while concluding the said case.

MWA/M-31/SC Bail granted.

***

1 See Javed Masih v. State PLD 1994 SC 314; Faqir Ullah v. Khalil-uz-Zaman 1999 SCMR 2203 and Mushtaq v. State 2012 SCMR 109.

2 See Naseem Malik v. State 2004 SCMR 283; Muhammad Irshad v. Muhammad Bashir 2006 SCMR 1292 and Ghulam Ahmed v. State 2013 SCMR 385.

3 See Khalid Saigol v. State PLD 1962 SC 495 and Muhammad Hanif v. Manzoor 1982 SCMR 153.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 799

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ

IFTIKHAR AHMAD---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE---Respondent

Criminal Petition No. 529 of 2021, decided on 14th July, 2021.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 19.04.2021, passed in Criminal Miscellaneous No. 5350-B of 2021).

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497(1)---Bail, grant of---Offences not falling within prohibitory clause of S.497(1), Cr.P.C.---Grant of bail in such offences was a rule and refusal thereof an exception.

Tariq Bashir v. State PLD 1995 SC 34; Imtiaz Ahmad v. State PLD 1997 SC 545; Subhan Khan v. State 2002 SCMR 1797; Zafar Iqbal v. Muhammad Anwar 2009 SCMR 1488 and Muhammad Tanveer v. State PLD 2017 SC 733 ref.

(b) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497(1)---Post-arrest bail---Offences not falling within prohibitory clause of S.497(1), Cr.P.C.---Principles relating to post-arrest bail in offences not falling within prohibitory clause of S.497(1), Cr.P.C. stated.

The main purpose of keeping an under-trial accused in detention was to secure his attendance at the trial so that the trial was conducted and concluded expeditiously or to protect and safeguard the society, if there was an apprehension of repetition of offence or commission of any other untoward act by the accused. Therefore, in order to make the case of an accused person fall under the exception to the rule of grant of bail in offences not covered by the prohibitory clause of section 497(1) Cr.P.C., the prosecution had to essentially show from the material available on the record, such circumstances that may frustrate any of the said purposes, if the accused person was released on bail. Some of the circumstances or conduct of the accused person that may bring his case under the exceptions to the rule of granting bail included the likelihood of: (a) his abscondence to escape trial; (b) his tampering with the prosecution evidence or influencing the prosecution witnesses to obstruct the course of justice; or (c) his repeating the offence keeping in view his previous criminal record or the desperate manner in which he had prima facie acted in the commission of offence alleged. A court which dealt with an application for grant of bail in an offence not falling within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. must apply its judicious mind to the facts and circumstances of the case and to the conduct of the accused person, and decline to exercise the discretion of granting bail to him in such offence only when it found any of the noted circumstances or some other striking circumstance that impinged on the proceedings of the trial or posed a threat or danger to the society, justifying his case within the exception to the rule, as the circumstances mentioned above were not exhaustive and the facts and circumstances of each case were to be evaluated for application of the said principle.

Tariq Bashir v. State PLD 1995 SC 34; Zafar Iqbal v. Muhammad Anwar 2009 SCMR 1488 and Muhammad Tanveer v. State PLD 2017 SC 733 ref.

(c) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497---Penal Code (XLV of 1860), Ss. 420, 468 & 471---Cheating and dishonestly inducing delivery of property, forgery for purpose of cheating, using as genuine a forged document---Bail, grant of---Offences not falling within prohibitory clause of S.497(1), Cr.P.C.---Courts below had not mentioned any circumstance that may bring the case of the accused under the exception of declining bail in offences not falling within the prohibitory clause of S.497(1), Cr.P.C. nor the counsel for State or complainant could show any such circumstance or conduct of the accused that would bring his case under exception to the rule of granting bail in such offences---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and accused was granted bail.

Rana Muhammad Zahid, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Mirza Usman, DPG for the State.

Syed Farhad Ali Shah, Advocate Supreme Court for the Complainant.

Date of hearing: 14th July, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 19.04.2021, passed by the Lahore High Court, whereby post arrest bail was denied to him in case FIR No.789 dated 22.6.2020, registered at Police Station Batapur, district Lahore, for offences under Sections 420, 468 and 471, P.P.C.

2. The case set out in the crime report (FIR), briefly stated, is that the complainant had rented out a property (a hospital building) to the petitioner, who while being a tenant prepared a forged sale deed of the property in his favour and started claiming to be the owner of the said property.

3. What concerns us, in the present case, is that the courts below have not exercised their discretion while declining bail to the petitioner, under subsection (1) of section 497, Cr.P.C., in accordance with the principle of law enunciated by this Court regarding grant of bail in offences not falling within the prohibitory clause of that subsection. They have viewed the case against the petitioner under subsection (2) of section 497, Cr.P.C. and simply relied, for declining bail, on the incriminating material available on the record to connect the petitioner with the commission of the offences alleged. All the offences alleged against the petitioner do not fall within the prohibitory clause of subsection (1) of section 497, Cr.P.C. and thus attract the principle that grant of bail in such offences is a rule and refusal an exception as authoritatively enunciated by this Court in several cases.1

4. The main purpose of keeping an under-trial accused in detention is to secure his attendance at the trial so that the trial is conducted and concluded expeditiously or to protect and safeguard the society, if there is an apprehension of repetition of offence or commission of any other untoward act by the accused. Therefore, in order to make the case of an accused person fall under the exception to the rule of grant of bail in offences not covered by the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C., the prosecution has to essentially show from the material available on the record, such circumstances that may frustrate any of the said purposes, if the accused person is released on bail. This Court in the cases of Tariq Bashir,2 Zafar Iqbal3 and Muhammad Tanveer4 has time and again illustrated such circumstances or such conduct of the accused person that may bring his case under the exceptions to the rule of granting bail.5 They include the likelihood of: (a) his abscondence to escape trial; (b) his tampering with the prosecution evidence or influencing the prosecution witnesses to obstruct the course of justice; or (c) his repeating the offence keeping in view his previous criminal record or the desperate manner in which he has prima facie acted in the commission of offence alleged. A court which deals with an application for grant of bail in an offence not falling within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. must apply its judicious mind to the facts and circumstances of the case and to the conduct of the accused person, and decline to exercise the discretion of granting bail to him in such offence only when it finds any of the above noted circumstances or some other striking circumstance that impinges on the proceedings of the trial or poses a threat or danger to the society, justifying his case within the exception to the rule, as the circumstances mentioned above are not exhaustive and the facts and circumstances of each case are to be evaluated for application of the said principle. This Court has already cautioned the courts below in Muhammad Tanveer case 6, on not following the said principle, in the following terms:

> Once this Court has held in categorical terms that grant of bail in offences not falling within the prohibitory limb of section 497, Cr.P.C. shall be a rule and refusal shall be an exception, then the Courts of the country should follow this principle in its letter and spirit because principles of law enunciated by this Court are constitutionally binding [under Article 189] on all Courts throughout the country including the Special Tribunals and Special Courts.

5. In the present case, neither the courts below, including the learned High Court, have mentioned any circumstance that may bring the case of the petitioner under the exception of declining bail in offences not falling within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. nor the learned counsel for the State and the learned counsel for the complainant could show us any such circumstance or conduct of the petitioner that would bring the case of the petitioner under exception to the rule of granting bail in such offences. The courts below, including the learned High Court, have failed to adhere to the principle of law enunciated by this Court for exercise of discretion to grant bail in offences not falling within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The impugned order passed by the learned High Court is thus not sustainable under the law and calls for interference by this Court. The petition is, therefore, converted into appeal and allowed: the impugned order is set aside and the application of the petitioner for grant of post arrest bail is accepted. Resultantly, the petitioner is admitted to post-arrest bail subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.500,000/- with two sureties in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial court.

6. Needless to say that the observations made in this order are of tentative nature and shall not influence the trial court while concluding the case. The learned trial court is to expeditiously proceed with the trial in accordance with law, and in case of abuse or misuse of the concession of bail by the petitioner, including causing delay in conclusion of the trial, the prosecution may approach the competent court for cancellation of bail under section 497(5), Cr.P.C.

MWA/I-8/SC Bail granted.

***

1 See Tariq Bashir v. State PLD 1995 SC 34; Imtiaz Ahmad v. State PLD 1997 SC 545; Subhan Khan v. State 2002 SCMR 1797; Zafar Iqbal v. Muhammad Anwar 2009 SCMR 1488 and Muhammad Tanveer v. State PLD 2017 SC 733.

2 Tariq Bashir v. State PLD 1995 SC 34 (2-MB).

3 Zafar Iqbal v. Muhammad Anwar 2009 SCMR 1488 (4-MB).

4 Muhammad Tanveer v. State PLD 2017 SC 733 (3-MB).

5 See cases ibid.

6 Muhammad Tanveer v. State PLD 2017 SC 733.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 804

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

MUHAMMAD RASHID---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE and others---Respondents

Crl. P. 457-L of 2021, decided on 19th July, 2021.

Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O. IV, Rr. 2, 17 & O.VII, R.1---Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), Ss. 154 & 197---Advocate-on-Record, duty of---Better copy of FIR, omissions in---In the present case, the better copy of FIR appended with bail petition was missing certain (important) lines---Better copy of FIR placed in judicial file which carried the same omission, had been duly attested by the Advocate-on-Record ("AOR"), while the copy placed in the paper books before the Supreme Court did not carry the said attestation---Held, that such grave omission could totally misdirect the course of justice and result in injustice---Under O. VII, R. 1 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules) copies of documents, if not forming part of the record of the Court appealed from, filed for the use of the Supreme Court, shall be certified to be true copies by the AOR for parties presenting the same---Under O. IV, R. 17 of the Rules the AOR undertook to abide by the Rules---Under O. IV, R. 2 an AOR could be adjudged guilty of professional misconduct or otherwise be considered unfit to be enrolled or allowed to remain as an advocate---In the present case, the better copy of the FIR attested by the AOR carried serious omissions---Supreme Court issued notice to the AOR to furnish his explanation for filing the incomplete better copy of the FIR in question and directed that Office shall ensure that only better copy duly attested by the AOR must be placed before the Court and to avoid any confusion, the actual copy of the FIR must accompany the better copy; that similarly, in the case of the Medico legal Certificate ("MLC"), if a better copy of the MLC was placed on the record, it must be duly attested by the AOR as per the Rules and the actual copy of the MLC must accompany the better copy---Case was adjourned for next date of hearing with the counsel for accused undertaking to place complete better copy of the FIR, as well as, the medical evidence before the Court.

Ch. Ahmad Khan Gondal, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Khurram Khan, Addl. P.G. along with Riaz Ahmed, S.I. for the State.

Date of hearing: 19th July, 2021.

ORDER

The petitioner, Muhammad Rashid seeks post arrest bail in case FIR No.262/2020 dated 10.08.2020 registered at Police Station Shahkot, District Sahiwal for offences under sections 324, 337-F(ii), 337-A(i), 337-L(2), 337-A(ii), 148 and 149, P.P.C. The specific role of the petitioner, as mentioned in the impugned order dated 11.02.2021 is that he made a fire shot that hit the right thigh of one Muhammad Nasir. Upon perusal of the better copy of FIR No.262/2020 dated 10.08.2020 appended with the petition, it is noticed that there is no mention of the petitioner or of his making the fire shot thereby injuring Muhammad Nasir. Later, upon examination of the judicial file, it was discovered that the following lines were missing from the better copy of the FIR placed before this Court:-

It is also noticed that the better copy of the FIR placed in the judicial file which carries the same omission, has been duly attested by the Advocate on Record ("AOR") namely Shaukat Ali Mehr, while the copy placed in the paper books before us does not carry the said attestation. We are deeply disturbed by this. Such grave omission can totally misdirect the course of justice and result in injustice. Advocate-on-Record under the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules) is to act and plead for a party in the Supreme Court.[1] Under Order VII, Rule 1 of the Rules copies of documents, if not forming part of the record of the Court appealed from, filed for the use of this Court, shall be certified to be true copies by the AOR for parties presenting the same. Under Order IV, Rule 17 of the Rules the AOR undertakes to abide by the Rules. Under Order IV, Rule 2 an AOR can be adjudged guilty of professional misconduct or otherwise be considered unfit to be enrolled or allowed to remain as an advocate.

2. In the present case, the better copy of the FIR attested by the AOR carries serious omissions mentioned above. We, therefore, issue notice to Shaukat Ali Mehr, AOR in the instant case to furnish his explanation for filing the incomplete better copy of the FIR in question. Office shall also for better dispensation of criminal justice system ensure that only better copy duly attested by the AOR must be placed before the Court and to avoid any confusion, the actual copy of the FIR must accompany the better copy. Similarly, in the case of the Medicolegal Certificate ("MLC" ), if a better copy of the MLC is placed on the record, it must be duly attested by the AOR as per the Rules and the actual copy of the MLC must accompany the better copy.

3. Learned ASC for the petitioner undertakes to place complete better copy of the FIR, as well as, the medical evidence in this case before the Court by the next date of hearing. The AOR shall also furnish his written explanation on the next date of hearing. To come up on 27.07.2021.

MWA/M-45/SC Order accordingly.

***

---

[1] Order I, Rule 2(1) of the Rules.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 809

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

MUHAMMAD NAWAZ---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE and others---Respondents

Crl. P. 1050-L of 2020, decided on 26th July, 2021.

(Against the order dated 16.09.2020 passed by the Lahore High Court, Lahore in Crl. Misc. No.39205-B/2020)

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----Ss. 497 & 498---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Bail---Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and High Courts---Difference between the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Art. 185(3) of the Constitution in bail matters and the original jurisdiction of the High Court under S.498, Cr.P.C. to grant bail highlighted.

Section 498, Cr.P.C. conferred original and concurrent jurisdiction on the High Court and Court of Session to grant bail, by stating that "the High Court or Court of Session may in any case direct that any person be admitted to bail". That was why when a trial court, for instance, a Court of Magistrate, declined to grant post arrest bail under section 497, Cr.P.C. to a person accused of having committed a non-bailable offence, the accused filed a fresh petition under section 498, Cr.P.C. in the Court of Session and, in case of failure to obtain the relief once again approached the High Court. The Court of Session and the High Court had original jurisdiction to grant bail and they made their own independent orders on the said petitions without commenting upon and setting aside the order of the trial court. The power of the High Court and the Court of Session, under section 498, Cr.P.C., to grant post arrest bail was thus co-extensive and concurrent with that of the trial court under section 497 Cr.P.C., while the power to grant pre-arrest bail under the said section was exclusive to them.

Muhammad Ayoob v. Muhammad Yakoob PLD 1966 SC 1003 ref.

The appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, under Article 185(3) of the Constitution, in bail matters was quite distinct from the original jurisdiction of the High Court and Court of Session under section 498, Cr.P.C. The essential criterion of appellate jurisdiction was that it examined and if required corrected the errors, if any, of a lower forum. That being the nature of appellate jurisdiction, the Supreme Court examined the legality of the orders passed by the High Court in bail matters and corrected those orders in appellate jurisdiction under Article 185(3) of the Constitution only when it found that the High Court had exercised the discretion in granting or declining bail arbitrarily, perversely or contrary to the settled principles of law, regulating bail matters.

Haq Nawaz v. State 1969 SCMR 174 and Zaro v. State 1974 SCMR 11 ref.

Ms. Tasnim Ameen, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioner along with Petitioner.

Khurram Khan, Addl. P.G. along with Akmal, S.I. for the State.

Date of hearing: 26th Junly, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---This is a petition seeking leave to appeal, under Article 185(3) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution"), against order dated 16.09.2020 passed by the High Court whereby pre-arrest bail petition filed by the petitioner, under sections 497/498 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 ("Cr.P.C."), has been dismissed as withdrawn with the following observation:

> "After arguing this case at full length, learned counsel for petitioner opts to withdraw this petition, which stands dismissed as such."

The High Court has dismissed the bail petition of the petitioner on the very statement of the learned counsel for petitioner, opting to withdraw the same. In the present petition no legal error has been pointed out in the said order of the High Court; it has simply been averred in the petition that the petitioner is entitled to pre-arrest bail in the facts and circumstances of the case, and he may be admitted to bail. Same grounds, as agitated before the High Court, have been reiterated. In this backdrop, the learned counsel for the petitioner (Advocate-on-Record) at the very outset requested to withdraw the titled petition.

2. We have noted in our course of hearings that several petitions filed for leave to appeal against the orders of the High Court dismissing post or pre arrest bail petitions are argued as if they are fresh petitions for bail before this Court. Some learned counsel often plead the case for grant of bail, without identifying the legal error purportedly committed by the High Court in exercise of its discretion by declining the relief of bail. This present petition is a classic example of such misconception, wherein after full arguments the bail petition was withdrawn before the High Court yet relief of bail has been prayed for by the petitioner as if this Court has jurisdiction concurrent with the courts below to entertain bail petitions. We think it proper to clear the said confusion and clarify the difference between the appellate jurisdiction of this Court under Article 185(3) of the Constitution in bail matters and the original jurisdiction of the High Court to grant bail under section 498, Cr.P.C.

3. Section 498, Cr.P.C. confers original and concurrent jurisdiction on the High Court and Court of Session to grant bail, by stating that "the High Court or Court of Session may in any case ... direct that any person be admitted to bail". That is why when a trial court, for instance, a Court of Magistrate, declines to grant post arrest bail under section 497, Cr.P.C. to a person accused of having committed a non-bailable offence, the accused files a fresh petition under section 498, Cr.P.C. in the Court of Session and, in case of failure to obtain the relief once again approaches the High Court. The Court of Session and the High Court have original jurisdiction to grant bail and they make their own independent orders on the said petitions without commenting upon and setting aside the order of the trial court. The power of the High Court and the Court of Session, under section 498, Cr.P.C., to grant post arrest bail is thus co-extensive and concurrent with that of the trial court under section 497, Cr.P.C., while the power to grant pre-arrest bail under the said Section is exclusive to them.[1]

4. The appellate jurisdiction of this Court, under Article 185(3), in bail matters is quite distinct from the original jurisdiction of the High Court and Court of Session under section 498, Cr.P.C. The essential criterion of appellate jurisdiction is that it examines and if required corrects the errors, if any, of a lower forum. That being the nature of appellate jurisdiction, this Court examines the legality of the orders passed by the High Court in bail matters and corrects those orders in appellate jurisdiction under Article 185 (3) of the Constitution only when it finds that the High Court has exercised the discretion in granting or declining bail arbitrarily, perversely or contrary to the settled principles of law, regulating bail matters.[2]

5. In the present case, the bail petition filed in the High Court was withdrawn by the petitioner himself and the High Court accordingly dismissed the same as withdrawn. The grounds agitated in the petition do not point out any legal error in the order of the High Court and gives no justification for filing of the present petition, which is therefore utterly misconceived. Though the learned counsel for the petitioner (Advocate-on-Record) has requested to withdraw the present petition, we are of the view that the filing of such a vexatious petition has wasted the precious public time of the Court. Therefore, while allowing the petitioner to withdraw the present petition we dismiss the same as withdrawn, and also impose costs of Rs. 10,000/- on the petitioner, under Rule 3 of Order XXVIII of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules"). The said costs shall be deposited by the petitioner with any recognized charitable organization and receipt thereof be submitted with the office of the Deputy Registrar at Lahore Branch Registry of this Court, within 15 days from today. In case of failure by the petitioner to deposit the said costs, the Advocate-on-Record for the petitioner, shall be personally liable to deposit the said costs in terms of Rule 25 of Order IV of the Rules.

MWA/M-46/SC Petition dismissed.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 822

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

AKASH MASIH---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE and others---Respondents

Crl. P. No. 1079-L of 2020, decided on 30th July, 2021.

(Against the order dated 11.09.2020 passed by the Lahore High Court, Lahore in Crl. Misc. No.23063-B/2020).

Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O. IV, Rr.6, 15, 22 & 25 & Sixth Sched., Form 5---Advocate-on-Record---Duties of an Advocate-on-Record and importance of his/her role under the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 stated.

Role of an Advocate-on-Record (AOR) was pivotal in the dispensation of justice in the Supreme Court. Under Rule 6 of Order IV of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ( Rules ), no advocate other than an AOR could appear or plead in any matter unless he was instructed by an AOR. Under Rule 15 of Order IV of the Rules, no advocate other than an AOR was entitled to act for a party in any proceedings in the Court. Further, every AOR before acting on behalf of any person or party was to file in the Registry a power of attorney in the manner prescribed in Form 5 of the Sixth Schedule to the Rules. Under the terms of the prescribed power of attorney an AOR was, inter alia, authorized to appear and defend his or her client; to file and take back documents; to accept the processes of the Court; to appoint and instruct counsel; to represent his client in the matter and to do all things incidental to such acting for the client. Under Rule 25 of Order IV of the Rules, every AOR in the case was personally liable to the Court for due payment of all fees and charges payable to the Court. These provisions unambiguously showed the fundamental role played by an AOR in the life of a case filed before the Supreme Court.

Case and court management system at the Supreme Court was hugely dependent on the quality of professional services rendered by the AOR. Failure of the AOR to carry out his/her obligations as envisaged under the Rules or the terms of his/her Power of Attorney unnecessarily delayeda matter and seriously hampered the reduction of pendency of cases before the Supreme Court.

Mst. Tasneem Amin, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioner.

Rana Abdul Majeed, Addl. P.G. for the State.

Date of hearing: 30th July, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.----This matter pertains to pre-arrest bail of the petitioner, but insipte of repeated calls the petitioner has not tendered appearance. Ms. Tasneem Ameen, Advocate on Record ("AOR") submits that she has no information regarding the whereabouts of the petitioner and submits that learned ASC for the petitioner has since passed away. Upon our asking, the learned AOR informed us that she does not even have the contact details of the petitioner.

2. It is important to highlight that the role of an AOR is pivotal in the dispensation of justice in this Court. Under Rule 6 of Order IV of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules"), no advocate other than an AOR can appear or plead in any matter unless he is instructed by an AOR. Under Rule 15 of Order IV of the Rules, no advocate other than an AOR is entitled to act for a party in any proceedings in the Court. Further, every AOR before acting on behalf of any person or party is to file in the Registry a power of attorney in the manner prescribed in Form 5 of the Sixth Schedule to the Rules.1 Under the terms of the prescribed power of attorney an AOR is, inter alia, authorized to appear and defend his or her client; to file and take back documents; to accept the processes of the Court; to appoint and instruct counsel; to represent his client in the matter and to do all things incidental to such acting for the client. Under Rule 25 of Order IV of the Rules, every AOR in the case is personally liable to the Court for due payment of all fees and charges payable to the Court. These provisions unambiguously show the fundamental role played by an AOR in the life of a case filed before this Court. However, much to our regret, it is noticed in the instant case that the learned AOR has not been able to perform her responsibilities as envisaged under the Rules.

In the present case the AOR has no knowledge of the whereabouts of the petitioner or even has his contact details to verify the reason for his absence. It is underlined that the case and court management system at the Supreme Court is hugely dependent on the quality of professional services rendered by the learned AOR. Failure of the learned AOR to carry out her obligations as envisaged under the Rules or the terms of her Power of Attorney unnecessarily delays the matter and seriously hampers the reduction of pendency of cases before this Court. The Rules also point towards the removal of the name of the AOR from the Rolls for professional misconduct or for being unfit to be enrolled. However, for now, we are confident that the learned AOR has been sufficiently cautioned and we are sanguine that the learned AOR will perform her duties more onerously, vigilantly and responsibly in accordance with the Rules, from now on.

3. Since the petitioner is not present in Court in this pre-arrest bail matter, the learned AOR is not aware of his whereabouts, the petitioner has made no effort to contact the learned AOR, thus, in this background, we are of the view that this petition cannot proceed further in terms of section 498-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 read with the second proviso to Rule 8 of the Order 23 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980. Leave is therefore refused and this petition is dismissed.

MWA/A-33/SC Petition dismissed.

***

1 Order IV Rule 22

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 886

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

SHAZAIB and others---Petitioners

Versus

The STATE---Respondent

Crl. P. No. 1075-L of 2020, decided on 29th July, 2021.

(Against the order dated 28.09.2020 passed by the Lahore High Lahore in Crl. Misc. No.39004-B of 2020).Court,

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 498-A---Pre-arrest bail petition---Accused not present before the Court at the time of hearing of his pre-arrest bail petition---Effect---In case the petitioner-accused was not personally present in Court, the Court was not authorized to grant him (pre-arrest) bail and the petition was to be dismissed for his lack of presence in Court---However, in case some explanation was furnished for his non-appearance, the Court may, if it found that explanation to be satisfactory, exempt his presence for that day and adjourn the hearing of the petition for a short period---Court could not, in the absence of the personal appearance of the petitioner, travel further into the case and examine the merits of the case---Abdul Rehman v. State 1981 PCr.LJ 61; Salima Bibi v. State 2000 PCr.LJ 138; Abdul Rashid v. State 2006 YLR 2058 and Tariq Hanif v. State 2021 PCr.LJ 250 not approved.

After the insertion of section 498-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 ("Cr.P.C.") if the accused, seeking pre-arrest bail, was not present before the Court, the Court was not authorized to grant bail to such an accused and therefore, the (bail) petition was liable to be dismissed in the light of the said statutory provision.

Section 498-A, Cr.P.C. created a statutory fetter or a statutory precondition requiring the presence of the petitioner (accused) in person in Court for the exercise of jurisdiction by the court for granting pre-arrest bail. In case the petitioner was not personally present in Court, the Court was not authorized to grant him bail and the petition was to be dismissed for his lack of presence in Court. However, in case some explanation was furnished for his non-appearance, the Court may, if it found that explanation to be satisfactory, exempt his presence for that day and adjourn the hearing of the petition for a short period. The Court could not, in the absence of the personal appearance of the petitioner, travel further into the case and examine the merits of the case. In fact the examination of the merits of the case in the absence of the accused totally defeated the intent and purpose of the section 498-A, Cr.P.C. This was because once the Court proceeded to examine the merits of the case, then the Court had the option to either dismiss or allow the bail petition, while under section 498-A, Cr.P.C. the Court was not authorized to admit the accused to bail in his absence.

Abdul Rehman v. State 1981 PCr.LJ 61; Salima Bibi v. State 2000 PCr.LJ 138; Abdul Rashid v. State 2006 YLR 2058 and Tariq Hanif v. State 2021 PCr.LJ 250 not approved.

Umra Khan v. State PLD 1980 Pesh. 145; Shabbir Ahmad v. State PLD 1981 Lah. 599 (FB); Kalan Khan v. State 1982 PCr.LJ 149 and Zeeshan Kazmi v. State 1997 MLD 273 approved.

In case the petition was dismissed for non-appearance of the accused in a pre-arrest bail matter under section 498-A, Cr.P.C., the petitioner could file a fresh bail petition before the same Court provided that he furnished sufficient explanation for his non-appearance in the earlier bail petition and the Court was satisfied with his said explanation. But if he failed to furnish any satisfactory explanation, his second bail petition was liable to be dismissed on account of his conduct of misusing the process of Court disentitling him to the grant of discretionary relief of pre-arrest bail.

Mukhtar Ahmad v. State 2016 SCMR 2064 ref.

Ad interim bail granted in a pre-arrest application on the first hearing was to simply ensure that the petitioner was present on all the subsequent dates of hearing in the pre-arrest bail matter. Petitioner s presence was, therefore, required throughout the proceedings of the pre-arrest bail petition and the fact that he appeared on the first date when ad interim bail was granted did not in any manner lessen the rigours of section 498-A, Cr.P.C. or absolve the responsibility of the accused from appearing in person before the court.

Syed Farhad Ali Shah, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner along with petitioners.

Humayoun Aslam, D.P.G. along with Muhammad Ashraf, S.I. for the State.

Raja Akhtar Nawaz, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent No.2.

Date of hearing: 29th July, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Petitioners seek leave to appeal against the order dated 28.09.2020 passed by the Lahore High Court in case FIR No.246 dated 25.04.2020 registered at Police Station Yousaf Wala, District Sahiwal for offences under sections 337-A(i)-F(i)(v)-L(2)-U(i), 148 and 149, P.P.C., whereby the pre-arrest bail petition of the petitioners has been dismissed for non-prosecution, as well as, on merits.

2. As the petitioners did not personally appear, in spite of the repeated calls, before the High Court, their bail petition before the High Court could not have proceeded further in terms of section 498-A, Cr.P.C. No reason has been given by the petitioners in the instant petition before us regarding their non-appearance before the High Court, and the petitioners have thus shown no legal defect in the impugned order, for dismissing their pre-arrest bail petition due to their non-appearance; this alone merits dismissal of the instant petition.

3. However, learned counsel for the petitioners submits that the petitioners have approached this Court because the High Court has also decided their petition on merits. In this backdrop, we deem it proper to underline the import of section 498-A, Cr.P.C. and explain how a pre-arrest petition is to be dealt with in case the accused-petitioner does not make himself present in Court at the time of hearing the petition.

4. After the insertion of section 498-A1 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 ("Cr.P.C.") if the accused, seeking pre-arrest bail, is not present before the Court, the Court is not authorized to grant bail to such an accused and therefore, the petition is liable to be dismissed in the light of the said statutory provision. For convenience, section 498-A, Cr.P.C. is reproduced hereunder:-

> "498-A. No bail to be granted to a person not in custody, in Court or against whom no case is registered, etc.: Nothing in section 497, or Section 498 shall be deemed to require or authorize a Court to release on bail, or to direct to be admitted to bail, any person who is not in custody or is not present in Court or against whom no case stands registered for the time being and an order for the release of a person on bail, or a direction that a person be admitted to bail, shall be effective only in respect of the case that so stands registered against him and is specified in the order or direction."

Section 498-A, Cr.P.C. creates a statutory fetter or a statutory precondition requiring the presence of the petitioner in person in Court for the exercise of jurisdiction by the court for granting pre-arrest bail. In case the petitioner (accused) is not personally present in Court, the Court is not authorized to grant him bail and the petition is to be dismissed for his lack of presence in Court. However, in case some explanation is furnished for his nonappearance, the Court may, if it finds that explanation to be satisfactory, exempt his presence for that day and adjourn the hearing of the petition for a short period. The Court cannot, in the absence of the personal appearance of the petitioner, travel further into the case and examine the merits of the case. In fact the examination of the merits of the case in the absence of the accused totally defeats the intent and purpose of the aforementioned statutory provision. This is because once the Court proceeds to examine the merits of the case, then the Court has the option to either dismiss or allow the bail petition, while under section 498-A, Cr.P.C. the Court is not authorized to admit the accused to bail in his absence.

5. We are cognizant of the fact that before the addition of section 498-A in the Cr.P.C., the view of the High Courts was that once a petition for pre-arrest bail is admitted for hearing and notice is given to State, it has to be decided on merits notwithstanding the absence of the petitioner on the date fixed for hearing the petition.2 However, after the addition of section 498-A in the Cr.P.C., there are divergent views of the High Courts, on this point: one set of judgments still retain to the said view,3 while the other set of cases hold the view that the petition for pre-arrest bail is to be dismissed if the petitioner is not present in Court on the date fixed for hearing the petition and it is not be decided on merits in his absence, unless the Court exempts his presence.[4] We approve the judgments of the High Courts noted above, which have considered the change in the legal position after addition of section 498-A in the Cr.P.C. and disapprove those that still retain the earlier view as they have not taken account of the true import and meaning of section 498-A, Cr.P.C.

6. We have noted that the Lahore High Court, in Tariq Hanif v. State,[5] has held that once a pre-arrest bail application is admitted and notice is given to the State it should be decided on merits even if the accused fails to put up appearance and has placed reliance on the judgment of this Court in Muhammad Saleem Akhtar v. State[6] for the said view. It is important to clarify that in the said judgment of this Court, it was not clear whether the Court was dealing with a matter involving pre-arrest or post-arrest bail; we, therefore called for the original file of that case. Perusal of the record available in the file, particularly the order of the High Court impugned therein, revealed that the petitioners before this Court had initially filed post arrest bail petitions in the High Court. During pendency of those petitions, the High Court admitted the petitioners to ad interim post arrest bail. Subsequently on a date fixed for hearing of those post arrest petitions the petitioners did not appear before the Court, and the High Court dismissed their post arrest bail petitions for non-prosecution. After that the petitioners filed pre arrest bail petitions in the High Court which the High Court dismissed with the observation that they failed to explain their absence in the previous post arrest bail petitions. It was in this context that this Court in Muhammad Saleem Akhtar's case observed:

> "If the High Court considered it appropriate or necessary for the accused to be present on each and every date of hearing, it was required to have given them clear directions to remain present at the fixed dates. This is evident from the record that it was not done-by the Court. This may be the reason for the confusion which happened for the accused to appear or not to appear before the Court on the relevant date. We are, therefore, not satisfied with the reasons of the High Court to reject the bail applications of the petitioners for non-prosecution. In this view of the matter, bail application of the petitioners would be deemed to be still pending adjudication on merits."

The High Court had dismissed the post arrest bail petitions of the petitioners for non-prosecution and not their pre arrest bail petitions. The said observations of this Court related to the ad interim bail granted in the post arrest bail petitions and dismissal of those post arrest bail petitions for non-prosecution, and not the pre arrest bail petitions. This aspect has not been fully brought out in the recent judgment of Tariq Hanif's case[7].

7. It is also clarified that in case the petition is dismissed for non-appearance of the accused in a pre-arrest bail matter under section 498-A, Cr.P.C., the petitioner can file a fresh bail petition before the same Court provided that he furnishes sufficient explanation for his non-appearance in the earlier bail petition and the Court is satisfied with his said explanation. But if he fails to furnish any satisfactory explanation, his second bail petition is liable to be dismissed on account of his conduct of misusing the process of Court disentitling him to the grant of discretionary relief of pre-arrest bail[8]. In the present case, the High Court could not have dismissed the petition on merits, in addition to dismissing the same for non-prosecution due to the personal absence of the petitioner under section 498-A, Cr.P.C.; therefore, the observations of the High Court regarding the merits of the case are not sustainable and hereby set aside. The petitioners are free to file a fresh bail petition, if so advised, before the High Court by giving explanation for their absence before the Court in their first bail petition and if the Court is satisfied with their explanation, it would decide their petition on merits.

8. It is also clarified that ad interim bail granted in a pre-arrest application on the first hearing is to simply ensure that the petitioner is present on all the subsequent dates of hearing in the pre-arrest bail matter. Petitioner's presence is, therefore, required throughout the proceedings of the pre-arrest bail petition and the fact that he appeared on the first date when ad interim bail was granted does not in any manner lessen the rigours of section 498-A, Cr.P.C. or absolve the responsibility of the accused from appearing in person before the court.

9. This petition is, therefore, converted into appeal and is partly allowed by setting aside the impugned order to the extent of observations on merits of the case, with the above observations.

MWA/S-41/SC Order accordingly.

***

---

1 Inserted by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act (Act XIII of 1976), S.4 (w.e.f. 15.04.1976)

2 See Fateh Muhammad v. State PLD 1973 Lah. 874 and Ahmad Raza Qasuri v. State 1974 PCr.LJ 482.

3 See Abdul Rehman v. State 1981 PCr.LJ 61; Salima Bibi v. State 2000 PCr.LJ 138; Abdul Rashid v. State 2006 YLR 2058 and Tariq Hanif v. State 2021 PCr.LJ 250.

4 See Umra Khan v. State PLD 1980 Pesh. 145; Shabbir Ahmad v. State PLD 1981 Lah. 599 (FB); Kalan Khan v. State 1982 PCr.LJ 149 and Zeeshan Kazmi v. State 1997 MLD 273.

5 Tariq Hanif v. State 2021 PCr.LJ 250

6 Muhammad Saleem Akhtar v. State PLD 1996 SC 735

7 Supra

8 Mukhtar Ahmad v. State (2016 SCMR 2064)

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 892

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

INAM ULLAH---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE and others---Respondents

Crl. P. No. 39-L of 2021, decided on 13th August, 2021.

(Against the order dated 22.12.2020 passed by the Lahore High Court, in Crl. Misc. No.67963-B of 2020).

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 498---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Pre-arrest bail---Second pre-arrest bail petition filed after withdrawal of the first pre-arrest bail petition without satisfactory explanation for withdrawing the earlier petition---Maintainability---In case the accused failed to give satisfactory explanation for his withdrawal of the earlier pre-arrest bail petition and the need for filing the fresh one, his second or successive pre-arrest bail petition shall not be maintainable.

Filing a pre-arrest bail petition, enjoying the concession of ad interim bail granted therein and then simply withdrawing the petition in order to file another one after sometime and availing the same benefit of ad interim bail once again, in the absence of any lawful explanation or justification, was a sheer abuse of the process of the court.

Muhammad Sadiq v. State 2015 SCMR 1394 ref.

While the accused could approach the same court with a fresh pre-arrest bail petition if the earlier one had been withdrawn without advancing arguments on merits, the court must be watchful that the successive petition was not readily entertained or the concession of ad interim bail granted to the accused, unless he furnished satisfactory explanation for withdrawal of the first petition and filing of the second one; otherwise, an unscrupulous accused could abuse the process of court for ulterior purposes. Therefore, the accused must be required by the court to furnish satisfactory explanation for withdrawing the first pre-arrest bail petition at the time of entertaining the second pre-arrest bail petition. Unless there was satisfactory explanation, the second bail petition should not be entertained, because otherwise the accused would have an unchecked license to abuse the concession of ad interim pre-arrest bail by misusing the court-process, and hoodwink the police to prolong the investigation.

While the accused had access to courts to seek pre-arrest bail, even successively for justifiable reasons, he could not be permitted to abuse the concession of ad interim bail to stall the investigation and play hide and seek with the criminal justice system. In case the accused failed to give satisfactory explanation for his withdrawal of the earlier pre-arrest bail petition and the need for filing the fresh one, his second or successive pre-arrest bail petition shall not be maintainable.

Mian Subah Sadiq Wattoo, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner along with Petitioner.

Jaffar Addl. P.G. for the State along with M. Akhtar, ASI.

Date of hearing: 13th August, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner filed a pre-arrest bail petition before the High Court in case FIR No.541 of 2020 dated 14.09.2020, registered at Police Station Yousaf Wala, District Sahiwal for offences punishable under sections 324, 148 and 149, P.P.C., which was withdrawn without arguments in merits on 03.12.2020 by the petitioner. Thereafter, the petitioner filed a second pre-arrest bail petition on 21.12.2020. The High Court dismissed the second pre-arrest bail petition vide impugned order dated 22.12.2020, with the observation that the petitioner was trying to play hide and seek with the court in order to deliberately prolong the matter and create hurdles in the way of the investigation; hence, the present petition for leave to appeal.

2. We observe, at the very outset, that filing a pre-arrest bail petition, enjoying the concession of ad interim bail granted therein and then simply withdrawing the petition in order to file another one after sometime and availing the same benefit of ad interim bail once again, in the absence of any lawful explanation or justification, is a sheer abuse of the process of the court. This Court has already disapproved and deprecated such practice in Muhammad Sadiq v. State,[1] with the following observations:

> Filing of pre-arrest bail petitions again and again amounts to misuse of law and it also increases the backlog of the Courts and this growing trend should have to be stopped by the learned Courts below. When the second application was withdrawn by the learned counsel for the petitioners, the petitioners could not avail the said remedy even after the deletion of section 365, P.P.C. by the investigating officer as it had attained finality but the petitioners adopted the policy of hide and seek by moving a number of applications.

While the accused can approach the same court with a fresh pre-arrest bail petition if the earlier one has been withdrawn without advancing arguments on merits, the court must be watchful that the successive petition is not readily entertained or the concession of ad interim bail granted to the accused, unless he furnishes satisfactory explanation for withdrawal of the first petition and filing of the second one; otherwise, an unscrupulous accused can abuse the process of court for ulterior purposes. Therefore, the accused must be required by the court to furnish satisfactory explanation for withdrawing the first pre-arrest bail petition at the time of entertaining the second pre-arrest bail petition. Unless there is satisfactory explanation, the second bail petition should not be entertained, because otherwise the accused would have an unchecked license to abuse the concession of ad interim pre-arrest bail by misusing the court-process, and hoodwink the Police to prolong the investigation. Therefore, while the accused has access to courts to seek pre-arrest bail, even successively for justifiable reasons, he cannot be permitted to abuse the concession of ad interim bail to stall the investigation and play hide and seek with the criminal justice system. In case the accused fails to give satisfactory explanation for his withdrawal of the earlier pre-arrest bail petition and the need for filing the fresh one, his second or successive pre-arrest bail petition shall not be maintainable.

3. In the instant case, the petitioner has not furnished any explanation as to why the earlier pre-arrest bail petition was withdrawn by him and what has prompted him to file the second one. Therefore, we find that the High Court has rightly rejected his second petition, and the impugned order does not call for any interference. Leave to appeal is, therefore, declined and this petition is dismissed.

MWA/I-10/SC Petition dismissed.

***

1 2015 SCMR 1394.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 894

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

AZAM SALEEM and another---Petitioners

Versus

The STATE and others---Respondents

Crl. Ps. Nos. 797-L and 799 of 2021, decided on 6th August, 2021.

(Against the consolidated order dated 25.05.2021 passed by the Lahore High Court, in Crl. Misc. No. 16835-B of 2021 and Crl. Misc. No. 10047-B of 2021).

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 498-A---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Pre-arrest bail---Maintainability---Second pre-arrest bail petition filed after dismissal of the first pre-arrest bail petition for non-appearance of the accused and lack of his satisfactory explanation for his non-appearance in the earlier pre-arrest bail petition---Such second pre-arrest bail petition was not maintainable.

Failure on the part of the accused to explain his absence in Court on the date fixed for hearing of his first pre-arrest bail petitions and his filing of second (bail) petition seeking the same relief amounted to playing hide and seek with the Court. Such conduct disentitled the accused from maintaining the second pre-arrest bail petition.

If a pre-arrest bail petition was dismissed for non-appearance of the accused under section 498-A, Cr.P.C, the second pre-arrest bail petition was maintainable only if the accused furnished satisfactory explanation for his absence in the first petition. Only if the explanation was found satisfactory could the Court proceed further and decide the second petition on merits. However, if the explanation was found to be unsatisfactory, the second petition was not maintainable and was liable to be dismissed without going into the merits of the case.

Shazaib v. State Crl. P. No. 1075-L of 2020, dated 29.07.2021 ref.

Muhammad Ijaz Janjua, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner (in Crl. P. No. 797-L of 2021).

Mian Ghulam Hussain, Advocate-on-Record along with Petitioner (in Crl. P. No. 799-L of 2021).

Khurram Khan, Addl. P.G. along with Abdul Ghafoor, S.I. Asghar Ali, S.I. for the State.

Ch. Abdul Razzaq Kamboh, Advocate Supreme Court for the Complainant.

Date of hearing: 6th August, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Petitioners (Azam Saleem and Shan Ali) seek leave to appeal against the consolidated order dated 25.05.2021 passed by the Lahore High Court in case FIR No.1004/2020 dated 20.11.2020 registered at Police Station Mozang, District Lahore for offences under sections 420, 468, 471, P.P.C., whereby their second pre-arrest bail petitions have been dismissed. Their first pre-arrest bail petitions were dismissed by the High Court for non-prosecution vide orders dated 09.02.2021 and 04.03.2021 respectively. The first pre-arrest bail petition of the petitioner, Azam Saleem, was dismissed, in addition to non-prosecution, for his failure to furnish bail bonds for ad-interim bail.

2. The High Court took up both the second pre-arrest bail petitions of the petitioners together and without inquiring into the reasons for non-appearance of the petitioners in their first pre-arrest bail petitions and without inquiring from one of the petitioners (Azam Saleem) why bail bonds were not furnished in the earlier petition, proceeded to decide the petitions on merits vide the impugned order dated 25.05.2021.

3. We have recently held in Shazaib v. State[1] that in case a pre-arrest bail petition is dismissed due to non-appearance of the accused in Court, under section 498-A, Cr.P.C., a fresh pre-arrest bail petition can be entertained only if it furnishes explanation for the absence of the accused before the Court on the date of the dismissal of the first pre-arrest bail petition. Once the Court is satisfied with the explanation given for the absence of the accused can it travel into the merits of the case. The relevant portion of the order passed in Shazaib case is reproduced hereunder for ready reference:-

7. It is also clarified that in case the petition is dismissed for non-appearance of the accused in a pre-arrest bail matter under section 498-A, Cr.P.C., the petitioner can file a fresh bail petition before the same Court provided that he furnishes sufficient explanation for his non-appearance in the earlier bail petition and the Court is satisfied with his said explanation. But if he fails to furnish any satisfactory explanation, his second bail petition is liable to be dismissed on account of his conduct of misusing the process of Court disentitling him to the grant of discretionary relief of pre-arrest bail. In the present case, the High Court could not have dismissed the petition on merits, in addition to dismissing the same for non-prosecution due to the personal absence of the petitioner under section 498-A, Cr.P.C.; therefore, the observations of the High Court regarding the merits of the case are not sustainable and hereby set aside. The petitioners are free to file a fresh bail petition, if so advised, before the High Court by giving explanation for their absence before the Court in their first bail petition and if the Court is satisfied with their explanation, it would decide their petition on merits.

In order to examine the explanation given for the non-appearance of the petitioners in their second pre-arrest petitions, we called for the complete record of their second bail petitions from the High Court. In the petition of Azam Saleem the explanation furnished for the non-appearance of the petitioner in his first petition on 04.03.2021 was that his real sister had passed away. Perusal of the documents attached with the petition shows that the sister of the petitioner had passed away on 17.02.2021, whereas the bail petition was dismissed for non-prosecution on 04.03.2021. Additionally, no reason or justification was stated for non-furnishing of the bail bonds by the petitioner. In the petition of Shan Ali no explanation, at all, has been furnished in the second bail petition for his non-appearance before the Court on 09.02.2021, when his first pre-arrest bail petition was dismissed for non-prosecution due to his non-appearance.

4. While there is no explanation given by the petitioner, Shan Ali, the explanation given by the petitioner, Azam Saleem, for his non-appearance is unconvincing and unsatisfactory and there is no explanation for his not furnishing the bail bonds after the grant of ad interim bail. Failure on the part of the petitioners to explain their absence in Court on the date fixed for hearing of their first pre arrest bail petitions and their filing of second petitions seeking the same relief amounts to playing hide and seek with the Court, and is a sheer abuse of the concession of ad interim bail extended to them in the first petitions. Such conduct disentitles the petitioners from maintaining the second pre-arrest bail petitions, therefore, the said petitions should have failed before the High Court on this score alone. The second pre-arrest bail petitions being not maintainable for the said reason, there was no need for the High Court to discuss the merits of the case. The petitioners have not even agitated any ground in the present petitions before us that explains their absence before the High Court in their first pre-arrest bail petitions.

5. As we are of the view that the second pre arrest bail petitions of the petitioners were not maintainable before the High Court, due to lack of satisfactory explanation furnished by them for their non-appearance in their first petitions, we are not required to discuss the merits of this case. However, as the High Court has discussed the merits of the case, we have examined the findings of the High Court in the light of the material available on record, in the interest of justice, and have noticed that there is sufficient incriminating material to establish that the petitioner, Azam Saleem, had fraudulently transferred the vehicle in question, in favour of the petitioner, Shan Ali. The statement of Saadi Ahmad, the actual owner of the vehicle, confirms that he never transferred the vehicle in favour of the petitioner, Shan Ali. Besides, the complainant, Adil Javed, had never instructed the petitioner, Azam Saleem, to get the car transferred in favour of the petitioner, Shan Ali. In the presence of the said incriminating material which is sufficient to connect the petitioners with the commission of the alleged offences, even on merits no case for grant of pre-arrest bail to them is made out and thus we see no reason to interfere with the impugned order on this score also.

6. In the end we reiterate, for the sake of clarity, that if a pre-arrest bail petition is dismissed for non-appearance of the petitioner under section 498-A, Cr.P.C., the second pre-arrest bail petition is maintainable only if the petitioner furnishes satisfactory explanation for his absence in the first petition.

Only if the explanation is found satisfactory can the Court proceed further and decide the second petition on merits. However, if the explanation is found to be unsatisfactory, the second petition is not maintainable and is liable to be dismissed without going into the merits of the case.

7. For all that what has been discussed above, we are not inclined to interfere in the impugned consolidated order of the High Court. Leave to appeal is, therefore, declined and these petitions stand dismissed.

MWA/A-35/SC Petitions dismissed.

***

1 Crl.P. No. 1075-L of 2020 decided vide order dated 29.07.2021.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 903

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

MUHAMMAD IMRAN---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE and others---Respondents

Crl. P. No. 860-L of 2021, decided on 5th August, 2021.

(Against the order dated 26.05.2021 passed by the Lahore High Court, Lahore in Crl. Misc. No. 31719-B of 2021).

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S.497---Post-arrest bail---Offences not falling within the prohibitory clause of S.497(1), Cr.P.C (Non-prohibitory offences)---Denial of post-arrest bail in non-prohibitory offences---Principles.

For an offence which did not fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C, bail was a rule and refusal an exception. The grounds for the case to fall within the exceptions meriting denial of bail included (i) the likelihood of the accused s abscondence to escape trial; (ii) his tampering with the prosecution evidence or influencing the prosecution witnesses to obstruct the course of justice; or (iii) his repeating the offence keeping in view his previous criminal record or the desperate manner in which he had prima facie acted in the commission of offence alleged. The prosecution had to show if the case of the accused fell within any of these exceptions on the basis of the material on the record.

Tariq Bashir v. State PLD 1995 SC 34; Zafar Iqbal v. Muhammad Anwar 2009 SCMR 1488 and Muhammad Tanveer v. State PLD 2017 SC 733 ref.

(b) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497---Penal Code (XLV of 1860), S. 489-F---Dishonestly issuing a cheque---Bail, refusal of---Accused prone to repeating the offence and absconding---Record showed that the accused had been booked in as much as eight criminal cases under the same offence (S.489-F, P.P.C.) with different complainants and involving sizable amounts of money---Said cases spanned over the years 2018 to 2020 and three cases had been registered after the registration of the present case---Even though the accused had obtained bail in those cases, it did, prima facie, establish that the accused was prone to repeating the offence---Accused having been declared an absconder in the present case for over one and a half year generated the apprehension that he may avoid standing trial and hence delay the prosecution of the case---Material on record made the case of the accused fall under the exceptions to the rule of grant of bail in non-prohibitory offences---Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed and leave was declined.

Tariq Bashir v. State PLD 1995 SC 34; Zafar Iqbal v. Muhammad Anwar 2009 SCMR 1488 and Muhammad Tanveer v. State PLD 2017 SC 733 ref.

Sheikh Abdul Raheem v. The State and others 2021 SCMR 822 distinguished.

Malik Matee Ullah, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Khurram Khan, Addl. P.G. along with M. Anwar, ASI. for the State.

Respondent No.2: in person.

Date of hearing: 5th August, 2021

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Post arrest bail was denied to the petitioner in case FIR No.458 dated 07.08.2019, registered at Police Station Larri Adda, Lahore, for offence under section 489-F, P.P.C. through order dated 26.05.2020, passed by the Lahore High Court. He seeks leave to appeal against the said order.

2. According to the crime report the petitioner had issued three cheques in favour of the business of the complainant in the sum of Rs. 2 million each, which were subsequently dishonoured. Learned counsel for the petitioner submits that for an offence not falling within the prohibitory clause grant of bail is a rule and refusal an exception. Relying on Sheikh Abdul Raheem v. The State and another (2021 SCMR 822) learned counsel submitted that previous criminal cases filed against the petitioner, in which he has obtained bail, do not affect his entitlement to the concession of bail. On the other hand learned APG pointed out that eight other criminal cases have been registered against the petitioner by different parties under the same offence, involving sizable amounts. He adds that the FIR in this case was registered on 07.08.2019 but inspite of the best efforts of the Police the petitioner could not be arrested and was declared a proclaimed offender. Finally, the petitioner was arrested on 28.04.2021 after more than a year and a half.

3. We have heard the learned counsel and have examined the record of the case. We are cognizant of the fact that the offence under section 489-F, P.P.C. does not fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. and bail in such a matter is a rule and refusal an exception. The grounds for the case to fall within the exceptions meriting denial of bail include (a) the likelihood of the petitioner's abscondence to escape trial; (b) his tampering with the prosecution evidence or influencing the prosecution witnesses to obstruct the course of justice; or (c) his repeating the offence keeping in view his previous criminal record or the desperate manner in which he has prima facie acted in the commission of offence alleged. The prosecution has to show if the case of the petitioner falls within any of these exceptions on the basis of the material on the record. See Tariq Bashir,1 Zafar Iqbal2, Muhammad Tanveer3 and order dated 14.07.2021 passed in Criminal Petition No.529 of 2021.

4. Record shows that the petitioner has been booked in as much as eight criminal cases under the same offence with different complainants and involving sizable amounts of money. These cases span over the years 2018 to 2020 and three cases have been registered after the registration of the instant case. Even though the petitioner has obtained bail in those cases, it does, prima facie, establish that the petitioner is prone to repeating the offence. Petitioner having been declared an absconder in this case for over one and a half year generates the apprehension that the petitioner may avoid standing trial and hence delay the prosecution of the case. The material on record makes the case of the petitioner fall under two exceptions to the rule of grant of bail as mentioned above.

5. Reliance of the petitioner on Sheikh Abdul Raheem case[4] hardly advances his case. First, the said bail order is based on its own peculiar facts besides it does not dislodge the principles settled in the above cited cases. The facts of the instant case involve eight (8) criminal cases registered against the petitioner for the same offence against different parties and some of them have even been registered after the instant case. Additionally, the petitioner has been a proclaimed offender. Therefore, the factual matrix of the instant case is very different from the one cited by the learned counsel.

6. For the above reasons we are not inclined to interfere in the well considered findings of the High Court. Leave is, therefore, declined and this petition is dismissed.

MWA/M-51/SC Bail refused.

***

1 Tariq Bashir v. State PLD 1995 SC 34 (2-MB).

2 Zafar Iqbal v. Muhammad Anwar 2009 SCMR 1488 (4-MB).

3 Muhammad Tanveer v. State PLD 2017 SC 733 (3-MB).

4 Sheikh Abdul Raheem v. The State etc. 2021 SCMR 822 (3-MB).

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 913

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

Mrs. SAMINA MEHR-UN-NISA MAZARI---Appellant

Versus

PUBLIC AT LARGE and others---Respondents

C.A. No. 184-L of 2010, decided on 3rd August, 2021.

(Against the order dated 02.04.2007 passed by the Lahore High Court, in C. R. No.716 of 2007).

(a) Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920)---

----S. 7 & Preamble---Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 (the 1920 Act)---Scope and application---Said Act dealt with the insolvency of an individual, while corporate insolvency was dealt with separately under the company law---Therefore, insolvent companies were not amenable to the law of insolvency but underwent a separate process known as liquidation, or winding up, administered under separate law. (b) Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920)---

----Ss. 7 & 8---Insolvency petition---Exemption of corporation, etc., from insolvency proceedings---Scope---Appellant-lady filed an insolvency petition under S.7 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 ("the 1920 Act") to be declared insolvent; she arrayed all her institutional creditors as respondents in the petition---Petition was dismissed by the Trial Court on the basis of S.8 of the 1920 Act holding that no insolvency petition could be filed against any corporation or association or company registered under any enactment for the time being in force---Question as to whether S.8 of the 1920 Act barred an insolvency petition to be filed by the debtor seeking his own insolvency by arraying corporate banks as creditors to the petition---Held, that S.8 of the 1920 Act exempted corporations and companies from any insolvency proceedings against them, however, in the present case the insolvency petition filed by the appellant was not an insolvency petition filed against any corporate person but instead, was filed by the debtor (the appellant) to get herself adjudged as an insolvent---Arraying the creditor banks (corporations or companies) as respondents in the insolvency petition did not mean that an insolvency petition had been filed against corporate persons to seek their insolvency---Exemption contained in S.8 of the 1920 Act had no application to the present case---Orders of courts below were set-aside and Supreme Court directed that insolvency petition would be deemed to be pending before the Trial Court, which shall decide the same in accordance with law---Appeal was allowed.

Kazim Ali Shah v. United Bank Limited 1988 CLC 913 ref.

Muhammad Azeem Malik, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellant.

M. Naveed Sheikh, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent No.2.

Ashar Elahi, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent No.3.

Mian Azhar Saleem, AHC for Respondent No.7.

Shahnawaz Khan and Umer Qureshi Bank representatives for Respondent No.6.

Nemo for Respondents Nos. 4 and 8.

Date of hearing: 3rd August, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Brief facts of the case are that the petitioner filed an insolvency petition under section 7 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 19201 ("Act") to be declared insolvent. The petitioner arrayed all her institutional creditors as respondents in the petition. The petition was dismissed by the trial court on the basis of section 8 of the Act. According to the trial court no insolvency petition could be filed against any corporation or association or company registered under any enactment: for the time being in force. The appeal of the petitioner before the lower appellate court was also dismissed and the Civil Revision filed by the petitioner before the High Court also met the same fate vide impugned order dated 02.04.2007. The sole question before us is whether Section 8 of the Act bars an insolvency petition to be filed by the debtor (petitioner) seeking his own insolvency by arraying corporate banks as creditors to the petition? Leave was granted vide order dated 30.04.2010 to examine this question.

2. The essence of the concept of insolvency consists in debtor's ultimate inability to meet his financial commitments. The central character of the Act is the "debtor" who is an individual. Acts of insolvency" under the Act[2] refer to different acts of the debtor which constitute acts of insolvency. Under section 6(f), filing of an insolvency petition by the debtor to be adjudged as an insolvent, is an act of insolvency. A debtor can file an insolvency petition if he commits an act of insolvency and be adjudged as an insolvent by obtaining an "order of adjudication." It is important to distinguish that the Act deals with the insolvency of an individual, while corporate insolvency is dealt with separately under the company law. Therefore, insolvent companies are not amenable to the law of insolvency but undergo the separate process known as liquidation, or winding up, administered under separate law. Hence from the point of view of an unsatisfied creditor wishing to initiate insolvency proceedings, the question of whether his debtor is an individual or an incorporated company assumes vital significance.[3]

3. Section 8 of the Act provides as under;

> No insolvency petition shall be presented against any corporation or against any association or company registered under any enactment for the time being in force.

In the instant case, the courts below have concurrently held that section 8 exempts corporations and companies from any insolvency proceedings against them. This is the correct interpretation of law. The courts below have, however, failed to appreciate that the insolvency petition filed by the appellant was not an insolvency petition filed against any corporate person but instead was filed by the debtor (the appellant) to get herself adjudged as an insolvent. Arraying the creditor banks (corporations or companies) as respondents in the insolvency petition does not mean that an insolvency petition has been filed against corporate persons to seek their insolvency. The exemption contained in section 8 has no application to the present case. The courts below have missed out on this important aspect of the case. The opinion expressed by Lahore High Court in Kazim Ali Shah[4] (1988) is correct and is fully endorsed.

4. We, therefore, set aside the orders of the courts below. The insolvency petition will be deemed to be pending before the trial court with the direction to the trial court to decide the same, in accordance with law, preferably within a period of three months, from the receipt of this order. Resultantly this appeal is allowed in the above terms. Office shall dispatch a copy of this order to the respondents, as well as, the trial court concerned for information and necessary action.

MWA/S-45/SC Appeal allowed.

***

---

1 Act V of 1920 dated 25.02.1920

2 See Section 6.

3 Ian F. Fletcher, The Law of Insolvency. 4th edition, Sweet and Maxwell.

4 Kazim Ali Shah v. United Bank Limited 1988 CLC 913. As per Abaid Ullah Khan, J.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 916

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

MUHAMMAD IQBAL KHAN NOORI and another---Petitioners

Versus

NATIONAL ACCOUNTABILITY BUREAU (NAB) and others---Respondents

Civil Petitions Nos.3637 and 3638 of 2019, decided on 16th June, 2021.

(Against the order dated 26.6.2019 of the Islamabad High Court, passed in Writ Petitions Nos.2104 and 2105 of 2019)

(a) National Accountability Ordinance (XVIII of 1999)---

----Ss. 9 & 10---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 4, 9, 10A, 14, 185(3) & 199---Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 497---Person accused of an offence under the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ( NAB Ordinance )---Grant of bail in Constitutional jurisdiction of the High Court/Supreme Court---Scope---High Courts had the power to grant bail, under Art. 199 of the Constitution, to any person accused of an offence under the NAB Ordinance, independent of any statutory source of jurisdiction and notwithstanding the prohibition contained in S.9(b) of the NAB Ordinance---High Court, under Art.199 of the Constitution, had the power to judicially review an order passed by the Executive, viz, Chairman NAB or some other authorized officer of the NAB, regarding arrest and detention of a person---High Court while exercising its jurisdiction under Art. 199 of the Constitution for the enforcement of fundamental rights could pass appropriate orders, which included an unconditional release or release on bail, to grant the relief to the aggrieved person---For the enforcement of fundamental rights under the Constitution and not under the sub-constitutional statutory grounds provided in S.497, Cr.P.C., the Supreme Court had been granting bails to the accused persons in NAB cases in exercise of constitutional jurisdiction under Art. 199 read with Art. 185(3) of the Constitution, mainly on the grounds of: (i) delay in conclusion of the trial (ii) life-threatening health condition of the accused, and (iii) non-availability of sufficient incriminating material against the accused.

Asfandyar Wali v. Federation PLD 2001 SC 607; Manzoor Ilahi v. Federation PLD 1975 SC 66; Anwar Saifullah v. State 2001 SCMR 1040; Zulfiqar Ali v. State PLD 2002 SC 546; Arif Sharif v. Chairman, NAB 2004 SCMR 1805; Aga Jehanzeb v. National Accountability Bureau 2005 SCMR 1666; Himesh Khan v. National Accountability Bureau 2015 SCMR 1092; Zulfiqar Ali v. State PLD 2002 SC 546; Saeed Mehdi v. State 2002 SCMR 282; Nawaz Sharif v. State 2019 SCMR 734; Asif Zardari v. Federation 2005 SCMR 422 and Maqbool Ahmed v. National Accountability Bureau 2016 SCMR 154 ref.

(b) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 199---Judicial review of executive actions---Scope---Reasonableness and proportionality were recognized as established grounds of judicial review of executive action.

Salman Rafique v. National Accountability Bureau PLD 2020 SC 456 ref.

(c) National Accountability Ordinance (XVIII of 1999)---

----Ss. 5(a), 9, 10, 12(a), 24(a) & 24(d)---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 4, 9, 10A, 14, 185(3) & 199---Person accused of an offence under the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ( NAB Ordinance )---Bail, grant/refusal of---Requirement of "sufficient material" against the accused---Scope---Law authorised proceedings against a person accused of an offence under the NAB Ordinance, and for the freezing of his property, only when there were reasonable grounds for believing that the accused had committed an offence triable under the Ordinance---In order to ascertain whether reasonable grounds existed or not, the Court should not probe into the merit of the case, but restrict itself to the material placed before it by the prosecution (NAB) to see whether some tangible material/evidence was available against the accused which may lead to the inference of his guilt---Mere accusation of an offence would not be sufficient to disentitle an accused from being bailed out; there should be reasonable grounds as distinguished from mere allegations or suspicion---Prosecution (NAB) had to show reasonable grounds to believe that the accused had committed the crime---If the Court was not satisfied that there existed reasonable grounds to believe that the accused was guilty, the Court was to grant bail in enforcement of his fundamental rights---

Sufficiency of material/evidence connecting the accused with the crime must be viewed with utmost care and caution at the bail stage.

(d) National Accountability Ordinance (XVIII of 1999)---

----Ss. 9 & 10---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Corruption and corrupt practices---Bail, grant of---Material on the record indicated that the accused was the Director, while the co-accused was the Accountant, in company P , the company which availed the financial facility (loan) from the Banks---However, they had no concern with the management of company PLE , whose Directors were alleged to be the ultimate beneficiary of the loan---Banks had filed suits for recovery of their loan in the court of competent jurisdiction, which were pending adjudication---If, after the decree, their company failed to pay the decretal amount, the decree would be satisfied by auction of the mortgaged property---Neither the banks nor the National Accountability Bureau (NAB) had alleged that the property mortgaged against the loan did not exist or its ownership was disputed or forged---Counsel for NAB and representatives of the Bank were unable to show the court from the material available as to how the accused and co-accused had committed any fraud or forgery, or the offence of corruption or corrupt practices as defined in S. 9 of the NAB Ordinance, in obtaining the loan for the company they were working for---Material on record did not point out that there existed reasonable grounds to believe that the accused and co-accused had committed the offence alleged---Furthermore a period of more than two years has lapsed since their arrest in the present case, but the completion of the trial was not yet in sight, for no fault of theirs---Petitions for leave to appeal were converted into appeals and allowed, and accused and co-accused were granted bail.

(e) Jurisdiction---

----Objection as to jurisdiction of a Court/Tribunal---Such objection was to be taken first of all before the same Court or Tribunal for its decision.

Abbas Hussain v. State 1992 SCMR 320 ref.

Barrister Umar Aslam, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners (in both cases).

Imran-ul-Haq, D.P.G. along with Qasim, A.D. NAB for Respondents/NAB.

Date of hearing: 16th June, 2021

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The National Accountability Bureau ("NAB") has arrested and detained the petitioners in the course of investigation in NAB Case No. NABR-20190123158165/ 2019/IW/ INV, which was, and is still, being conducted for the alleged offence of corruption and corrupt practices, as defined in section 9 and punishable under section 10 of the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ("Ordinance"), against persons involved in the fake bank accounts scam of obtaining bank loans and their misappropriation by Messrs Parthenon (Pvt.) Ltd., Messrs Park Lane Estates (Pvt.) Ltd. and others. The petitioners filed two separate writ petitions in the Islamabad High Court under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution") praying for their release on bail till decision of the case. The High Court dismissed their petitions vide its consolidated order dated 26.06.2019 ("impugned order"). They have, therefore, filed the present petitions, under Article 185(3) of the Constitution, for leave to appeal against the said order of the High Court.

2. The allegations against the petitioner, Muhammad Iqbal Khan Noori, are that he as the shareholder and director of a dummy and front company, Messrs Parthenon (Pvt.) Ltd, fraudulently obtained loans from the National Bank of Pakistan and the Summit Bank and misappropriated the same by extending the benefit to the real beneficiaries, i.e., the directors of Messrs Park Lane Estates (Pvt.) Ltd., hence causing loss to the Banks and Government exchequer. While the other petitioner, Muhammad Hanif, is alleged to have abetted other accused persons/ beneficial owners in fraudulently obtaining the financial facility (loan) from the said Banks, in his capacity as the accountant in Messrs Park Lane Estates (Pvt.) Ltd. and the company secretary in the front/dummy company, Messrs Parthenon (Pvt.) Ltd.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have gone through the record with their able assistance. The High Court has, in the impugned order, observed while declining the relief of bail prayed for that "[t]he offence with which the petitioners have been charged falls within the prohibitory clause of section 497 Cr.P.C." section 9(b) of the Ordinance has specifically made section 497, along with other related sections, of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 ("Cr.P.C") to be not applicable in NAB cases while prohibiting Courts to grant bail to persons accused of offences under the Ordinance. The said observation of the High Court has, therefore, prompted us to elucidate briefly that these are the grounds under the Constitution and not the statutory grounds mentioned in section 497 of the Cr.P.C, which are relevant and are to be considered by the High Courts for allowing or declining bail to any person accused of an offence under the Ordinance.

4. It needs hardly any argument to state that provisions of section 9(b) of the Ordinance being sub-constitutional legislation do not affect the constitutional jurisdiction of the High Courts under Article 199 of the Constitution. Clauses (1)(a)(ii) and (1)(b)(i) of Article 199 empower the High Courts to pass orders of the kind[1] of writ of certiorari[2] and writ of habeas corpus[3] against persons performing functions in connection with the affairs of the Federation, a Province or a local authority and Clause (1)(c) of that Article authorizes to make an order giving appropriate directions to any person or authority for the enforcement of any of the Fundamental Rights.[4] Such orders, under Article 199, can also be passed in relation to the actions of arrest and detention of a person by an executive authority. That is why this Court held in Asfandyar Wali v. Federation[5] that the High Courts have the power to grant bail, under Article 199 of the Constitution, to any person accused of an offence under the NAB Ordinance, independent of any statutory source of jurisdiction and notwithstanding the prohibition contained in section 9(b) of the Ordinance.

5. Under our democratic constitutional scheme, firmly anchored in the rule of law, the constitutional courts are to jealously protect and safeguard the fundamental rights of a person. The High Court, under Article 199, has the power to judicially review the order passed by the Executive, viz, Chairman NAB or some other authorized officer of the NAB, regarding arrest and detention of a person. Article 4 mandates that no action detrimental to the life, liberty, body, reputation or property of any person shall be taken except in accordance with law. Article 9 is a cherished fundamental right of a person, which, inter alia, guarantees right to liberty, which may be curtailed "save in accordance with law." The phrase except or save in accordance with law implies that not only should the procedural requirements of the "law" be fully met but also its substantive content i.e., there must be sufficient material/ evidence on the record that can justify the application of such a "law." Therefore, material/evidence must be sufficient enough to persuade the constitutional court to deprive an individual of his fundamental right. The requirement of sufficiency of material is also echoed in the right guaranteed under Article 10, which requires that any person who is arrested shall not be detained in custody without being informed of the grounds for such arrest. The word "grounds" used in Article 10 is not limited to mere allegations but means allegations supported by sufficient material/evidence connecting the person with the offence justifying his arrest and detention. Article 10-A creates a constitutional obligation to conduct a fair trial and ensures due process. The spectrum of fair trial and due process is extensive and over-arching; an arrest and detention of a person without any sufficient incriminating material/ evidence would offend his right to fair trial. Right to dignity under Article 14 is an absolute constitutional standard, which is not subject to law. This is because dignity inheres in a human person and is not granted by law or cannot be taken away by law.[6] Human dignity encapsulates the notion that every person has inherent equal worth; no one's life and liberty is more important than any other person's. Arresting and detaining a person without any incriminating material offends his or her right to dignity. This brings us to the most familiar maxim in criminal justice: the presumption of innocence - the principle that a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty by a court of law. This principle is pillared on constitutional right to liberty, fair trial and human dignity. This presumption can only be dislodged if there is sufficient incriminating material against a person as underlined and reinforced by the aforesaid constitutional rights. Over the years reasonableness and proportionality have also come to be recognized as established grounds of judicial review of the executive action.[7] Thus, while exercising jurisdiction under Article 199, the High Court has to examine the order of arrest and detention passed by the Chairman NAB and see if it passes the constitutional muster. The High Court while exercising its jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution for the enforcement of fundamental rights can pass appropriate orders, which include an unconditional release or release on bail, to grant the relief to the aggrieved person.8 It is for the enforcement of fundamental rights under the Constitution and not the sub-constitutional statutory grounds provided in section 497, Cr.P.C., that this Court has been granting bails to the accused persons in NAB cases in exercise of constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 read with Article 185(3) of the Constitution, mainly on the grounds of: (i) delay in conclusion of the trial,9 (ii) life-threatening health condition of the accused,10 and (iii) non-availability of sufficient incriminating material against the accused.11

6. The Ordinance requires the Chairman NAB to form an "opinion" if proceedings are to be initiated against any person and the matter referred for inquiry or investigation. After appraising the material and the evidence collected during the inquiry or investigation, the Chairman NAB, if finds that there is "sufficient material" to justify filing of a reference, refer the matter to the Accountability Court for trial. While section 24(a) of the Ordinance provides that the Chairman NAB shall have the power, at any stage of the inquiry or investigation under this Ordinance, to direct that the accused, if not already arrested, shall be arrested. Section 24(d) mandates that NAB shall, as soon as may be, inform the accused of the "grounds" and "substance" on the basis of which he has been arrested. Section 5(a) defines that "accused" shall, inter alia, include a person in respect of whom there are "reasonable grounds" to believe that he is or has been involved in the commission of any offence triable under this Ordinance. Section 12(a) states that the Chairman NAB or the Court trying an accused for any offence as specified under the Ordinance, may, at any time, if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed such an offence, order the freezing of his property. The combined reading of all these provisions of the Ordinance leaves no room for doubt that the law authorises proceedings against a person accused of an offence under the Ordinance, and for the freezing of his property, only when there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed an offence triable under the Ordinance.

7. In order to ascertain whether "reasonable grounds" exist or not, the Court should not probe into the merit of the case, but restrict itself to the material placed before it by the prosecution (NAB) to see whether some tangible material/ evidence is available against the accused which may lead to the inference of his guilt. Mere accusation of an offence would not be sufficient to disentitle an accused from being bailed out. There should be "reasonable grounds" as distinguished from mere allegations or suspicion. It is for the prosecution (NAB) to show reasonable grounds to believe that the accused has committed the crime. If the Court is not satisfied that there exist reasonable grounds to believe that the accused is guilty, the Court is to grant bail in enforcement of the aforesaid fundamental rights. Pre-trial arrest and detention of the accused casts a heavy burden on the conscience of the court. If after trial the accused is acquitted there is no recompense or reparation for the loss of his valuable years spent behind bars including its economic, social and psychological impact on the accused, as well as, his family or near ones due to denial of bail. The sufficiency of material/ evidence connecting the accused with the crime must therefore be viewed with utmost care and caution at the bail stage.

8. Coming to the merits of the case, we have carefully gone through the material available on record, to ascertain whether reasonable grounds and sufficient incriminating material exist for believing that the petitioners have committed the offence alleged, as arrest and detention on the basis of reasonable grounds and sufficient incriminating material meet the requirement of fair trial, due process and human dignity. The material on the record indicates that the petitioner, Muhammad Iqbal Khan Noori, is the Director, while the petitioner, Muhammad Hanif, is the Accountant, in M/s. Parthenon (Pvt.) Ltd., the company which availed the financial facility (loan) from the Banks. However, they have no concern with the management of M/s. Park Lane Estates (Pvt.) Ltd., whose Directors are alleged to be the ultimate beneficiary of the loan. The petitioners have not disputed obtaining the loan from the Banks by Messrs Parthenon (Pvt.) Ltd. against the security of mortgaged property. Their stance is that the loan was obtained for the company, and not for their personal benefit, against mortgaging the property to the satisfaction of the Banks. They assert that they have not committed any fraud in this regard with the Banks, nor have the Banks made any complaint to the NAB alleging fraud against them. The Banks have filed suits for recovery of their loan in the court of competent jurisdiction, which are pending adjudication. If, after the decree, their company fails to pay the decretal amount, the decree would be satisfied by auction of the mortgaged property. Neither the Banks nor the NAB has alleged that the property mortgaged against the loan does not exist or its ownership is disputed or forged. We, for our satisfaction as to the version of the petitioners, issued notice to the said Banks in the present petitions; whose representatives have appeared before us and verified that the Banks have filed suits for recovery of the loan amount with interest due thereon against the borrowers as well as against the mortgagers of the property, which are pending adjudication. We asked the learned counsel for the NAB and the representative of the Banks to show us from the material available on record of the case as to how the petitioners have committed any fraud or forgery, or the offence of corruption or corrupt practices as defined in section 9 of the Ordinance, in obtaining the loan for the company they were working for, but they failed to point out any such material. We are, therefore, not satisfied, in view of the material currently available on record of the case, that there exist reasonable grounds to believe that the petitioners have committed the offence alleged. The petitioners were arrested in the present case in the month of April 2019; a period of more than two years has lapsed since then, but the completion of the trial is not yet in sight, for no fault of the petitioners.

9. In view of these circumstances, we find that the further detention of the petitioners in the case would be without lawful authority. We are of the considered view that it was a fit case for exercise of constitutional jurisdiction by the High Court, under Article 199 of the Constitution. We, therefore, convert these petitions into appeals and allow the same. We set aside the impugned order, accept their constitutional petitions and make order that the petitioners shall be released on bail subject to their furnishing bail bonds in the sum of rupees one million each with one surety each in the like amount to the satisfaction of learned Accountability Court. Needless to say that the observations made in this order are tentative and shall not influence the trial court while concluding the case after recording evidence.

10. Before parting with the judgment, we think it our obligation to mention that the learned counsel for the petitioners, during arguments, also emphasized the points that the NAB and Accountability Court have no jurisdiction to proceed in the present matter without a reference from Governor, State Bank of Pakistan as provided in section 31D of the Ordinance, and that only the relevant Court under the Financial Institutions (Recovery of Finances) Ordinance 2001 has jurisdiction to proceed in the matter. The High Court has not given any finding on these two points in the impugned order. We also do not consider it proper to decide these points in the present bail matter, and leave them open to be agitated by the petitioners, if so advised, before the trial court, i.e., the Accountability Court, as the objection pertaining to the jurisdiction of a Court or Tribunal is to be taken first of all before the same Court or Tribunal for its decision.[12]

11. Foregoing are the reasons for our short order dated 16.6.2021, whereby these petitions were converted into appeals and allowed. For the sake of convenience and for completion of record, the same is reproduced hereunder:-

> For the reasons to be recorded later, petitioners are granted bail subject to their furnishing bail bonds in the sum of rupees one million each with one surety each in the like amount to the satisfaction of learned Accountability Court. Both these petitions are converted into appeal and allowed.

MWA/M-59/SC Bail granted.

***

1 The use of the terminology of traditional "writs" was done away with in the 1962-Constitution and this discontinuance was carried on in the 1973-Constitution by the Legislature, making the exercise of constitutional jurisdiction untrammelled by the substantive limitations and procedural formalities of the old prerogative writs. See Manzoor Ilahi v. Federation PLD 1975 SC 66 per Salahuddin, J. and Paper on "Judicial Review of Administrative Action" by Fazal Karim.

2 Talat Ishaq v. NAB PLD 2019 SC 112.

3 Government of Sindh v. Raeesa Farooq1994 SCMR 1283.

4 Manzoor Ilahi v. Federation PLD 1975 SC 66 per Anwar ul Haq, J.

5 PLD 2001 SC 607.

6 Erin Daly, James R. May - Dignity Law - Global recognition, cases and perspectives. (see preface)

7 See Salman Rafique v. National Accountability Bureau PLD 2020 SC 456.

8 Manzoor Ilahi v. Federation PLD 1975 SC 66.

9 Anwar Saifullah v. State 2001 SCMR 1040; Zulfiqar Ali v. State PLD 2002 SC 546; Arif Sharif v. Chairman, NAB 2004 SCMR 1805; Aga Jehanzeb v. NAB 2005 SCMR 1666 and Himesh Khan v. NAB 2015 SCMR 1092.

10 Zulfiqar Ali v. State PLD 2002 SC 546; Saeed Mehdi v. State 2002 SCMR 282 and Nawaz Sharif v. State 2019 SCMR 734.

11 Asif Zardari v. Federation 2005 SCMR 422 and Maqbool Ahmed v. NAB 2016 SCMR 154.

12 Abbas Hussain v. State 1992 SCMR 320

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 927

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ

MUHAMMAD ARSHAD NADEEM---Appellant

Versus

The STATE---Respondent

Criminal Petition No.408-L of 2021, decided on 13th July, 2021.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 14.12.2020, passed in Crl. Misc. No. 62691-B of 2020).

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J; Umar Ata Bandial, J agreeing; Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed also agreeing but with different reasons.

(a) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XXIII, R. 2, Second proviso.---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Petition for leave to appeal in a criminal matter filed before the Supreme Court---Condonation of delay---Sufficient cause, determination of---Sufficiency of the cause was to be determined in each case on the basis of its own peculiar facts and circumstances.

Sherin v. Fazal Muhammad 1995 SCMR 584 ref.

(b) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XXIII, R. 2, Second proviso.---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 9, 10A, 14, 185(3)---Petition for leave to appeal in a criminal matter filed before the Supreme Court---Condonation of delay---Sufficient cause---In cases relating to imprisoned accused (seeking post-arrest bail) or convicted persons sufficient cause for condoning delay was to be viewed through the lens of fundamental rights to liberty, dignity and fair trial, and determined with a lenient and liberal approach for providing such persons with equal access to court and proper opportunity to defend themselves---Person approaching a court of law for the redressal of his grievance from behind bars, suffered a disability in comparison to those who enjoyed liberty and freedom of movement---Incarceration of an accused seeking post arrest bail by itself constituted sufficient cause to allow condonation of delay, unless it was established that the delay was caused by the accused due to some ulterior motive.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J [Majority view]

Consistent practice of the Supreme Court was to lean in favour of deciding on merits, the petitions including jail petitions, for leave to appeal and the appeals filed by or on behalf of the persons imprisoned against their convictions and sentences by condoning the delay with a lenient and liberal approach, in the interest of justice. The reason for taking such a permissive view of sufficient cause in the said cases appeared to be founded on the assumption that a person behind bars had a restricted access to the outside world; as a result he faced numerous impediments in pursuing his legal remedies before the courts. The delay, therefore, usually occurred due to constraints imposed on him for being in prison and not because of his contumacious conduct or some ulterior purpose.

Muhammad Bakhsh v. State 1968 SCMR 1269; Amjad Ali v. M.C.B. 2002 CLD 1143; Mureed v. State 2003 SCMR 64; Zafar v. Muhammad Abad 2011 SCMR 218 and Director FBR v. Akhtar Zaman 2011 SCMR 1951 distinguished.

Muhammad Nawaz v. State PLD 2002 SC 287; Qalab Ali v. Sipahia 2005 SCMR 1857; Badar Munir v. State 2009 SCMR 569; Razia v. State 2009 SCMR 1428; Muhammad Fayyaz v. State 2012 SCMR 522; Faiz-Ur-Rehman v. State 2012 SCMR 538 and Asia Bibi v. State PLD 2019 SC 64 ref.

In a criminal case where the liberty and freedom of a person was at stake, sufficient cause was to be viewed by the Court through the lens of fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution, in particular through the right to liberty, dignity and fair trial guaranteed to an accused under Articles 9, 14 and 10A of the Constitution, which primarily translated into providing the accused, behind bars, with equal access to court and proper opportunity to defend and avail remedies allowed by law, as were available to a free person.

The reasons to condone delay in jail petitions or criminal appeals filed against convictions applied with same force to matters of post-arrest bail, as it also attracted the right to liberty, human dignity and fair trial. A person approaching a court of law for the redressal of his grievance from behind bars, suffered a disability in comparison to those who enjoyed liberty and freedom of movement. Therefore, incarceration of the accused-petitioner seeking post arrest bail by itself constituted sufficient cause to allow condonation of delay, unless it was established that the delay was caused by the petitioner due to some ulterior motive. Per Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, J [agreeing with his own views]

Supreme Court being the highest Court of appeal ordinarily did not interfere with the discretion exercised by a High Court in bail matters, if found reasonably within the remit of law; it was only in those extraordinary situations, manifestly requiring further probe into the guilt of an offender that may represent a compelling option for the Supreme Court to substitute finding recorded by the High Court and in so doing the Supreme Court had shown a consistent generosity in condoning a belated approach beyond prescribed period of limitation. It was even more generous in examining the propriety of a conviction, impugned beyond the period of limitation.

Prosecution of offences was essentially a State attribute as well as a responsibility that it owed to its people to protect their life and liberty; it was also important to safeguard the society by placing an effective and meaningful control on criminal behaviour to deter the potential offenders and it was for this reason that right of freedom was subject to observance of laws as well as under the shadow of equal protection thereof. However, the forfeited freedom may be restored through recourse to mechanisms provided under the procedural law. Grant of bail, having regard to the categories of offences providing different sentences, was one form of restoration of interim freedom pending trial. Thus, in the given statutory framework, consideration of a motion warranted a dynamic and liberal approach being the only appropriate course to ensure a judicial oversight on an unjustified detention, though temporary, even beyond the prescribed period of limitation as it conferred no vested right on the prosecution.

Another reason for this latitude was that flux of time could not validate a flawed adjudication in criminal jurisdiction involving one sided irreversible corporeal consequences for an alleged offender and, thus, such a liberal approach was most essential to ensure safe administration of criminal justice.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J [Majority view]

(c) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Petition for leave to appeal before the Supreme Court seeking bail---Bail, grant of---Scope---Practice of the Supreme Court was not to intervene in bail matters ordinarily, leaving them to the discretion of the courts inquiring into the guilt of the accused persons, unless it was found that those courts had exercised the discretion arbitrarily, perversely or contrary to the settled principles of law regulating bail matters.

Haq Nawaz v. State 1969 SCMR 174 and Zaro v. State 1974 SCMR 11 ref.

(d) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Petition for leave to appeal before the Supreme Court seeking bail---Offence falling within prohibitory clause of S.497(1), Cr.P.C---Bail, grant/refusal of---Principles.

Bail was not to be withheld as a punishment. However, refusal of bail to an accused found prima facie involved in the commission of offences falling within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. was not a punitive measure but was more of a preventive step, taking care of the bi-focal interests of justice towards the right of the individual involved and the interest of the society affected. The law presumed that the severity of the punishment provided for offences falling within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. was such that it was likely to induce the accused person to avoid conviction by escaping trial or by tampering with the prosecution evidence including influencing the prosecution witnesses. The law allowed bail, in such cases, if there were no reasonable grounds for believing that the accused had committed a non-bailable offence, but there were sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt. Otherwise by declining bail, the courts ensured the presence of the accused person to face trial and protect the prosecution evidence from being tampered with or the prosecution witness from being influenced. The courts attempted to balance the interest of the society in bringing the offenders to justice and the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused person, by determining whether or not there were reasonable grounds for believing that the accused person had committed the offence, in exercising their discretion to grant or decline the relief of bail.

(e) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Penal Code (XLV of 1860), Ss. 409, 420, 468, 471, 477-A & 109---Prevention of Corruption Act (II of 1947), S. 5(2)---Preparing forged deed, managing fake Bank guarantees, and misappropriation of public money---Bail, refusal of---Allegation against the accused was that he along with the co-accused prepared forged deed of Joint Venture for a builder and contractor, obtained two construction contracts worth Rs.67,92,88,000/- on the basis of that deed for construction of the building of the government school, managed fake Bank guarantees, and misappropriated an amount of Rs.13,79,06,538/- of the Provincial Government paid for construction of the building of the school---Counsel for accused was unable to explain why the accused had been a beneficiary of Rs 20 million, in the absence of any construction supplies made to the contractors of the Joint Venture---Counsel although submitted that said payment was the commission due to the accused, yet remained unable to explain the nature of the said commission---In such background, the conclusion of the High Court that there were reasonable grounds for believing that the accused had committed the offences alleged was consistent with the incriminating material available on the record of the case, and was in no manner perverse or arbitrary---Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed, and accused was refused bail.

Zahid Saleem, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Syed Nayab Hussain Gardezi, D.A.G. for the State with Aftab Gohar, S.I.

Syed Najaf Hussain Shah, Advocate Supreme Court for the Complainant.

Date of hearing: 13th July, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.--- Application for condonation of delay in a post-arrest matter Crl. M. A. No. 123-L of 2021

There is a delay of 72 days in filing the present petition for leave to appeal against the order of the High Court whereby post-arrest bail has been declined to the petitioner. In the application for condonation of delay the petitioner submits that he is behind bars and there is no male member in his family to pursue the case; the delay has occurred in contacting and engaging the counsel for filing the petition, hence it is neither deliberate nor intentional. The counsel for the State and the complainant have opposed the application and have placed reliance on the judgments of this Court reported as Muhammad Bakhsh v. State 1968 SCMR 1269, Amjad Ali v. M.C.B. 2002 CLD 1143, Mureed v. State 2003 SCMR 64, Zafar v. Muhammad Abad 2011 SCMR 218 and Director FBR v. Akhtar Zaman 2011 SCMR 1951.

2. Rule 2 of Order XXIII, Supreme Court Rules, 1980 provides that a Petition for leave to appeal, under Article 185(3) of the Constitution, in criminal matter shall be lodged within thirty days from the date of judgment or final order sought to be appealed from. The second proviso to the said Rule authorizes the Court to condone the delay, if "sufficient cause" is shown. The expression "sufficient cause" cannot be defined with any precision or exactitude; the sufficiency of the cause is, therefore, to be determined in each case on the basis of its own peculiar facts and circumstances.1

3. It has been the consistent practice of this Court to lean in favour of deciding on merits, the petitions including jail petitions, for leave to appeal and the appeals filed by or on behalf of the persons imprisoned against their convictions and sentences by condoning the delay with a lenient and liberal approach, in the interest of justice.2 The reason for taking such a permissive view of "sufficient cause" in the said cases appears to be founded on the assumption that a person behind bars has a restricted access to the outside world; as a result he faces numerous impediments in pursuing his legal remedies before the courts. The delay, therefore, usually occurs due to constraints imposed on him for being in prison and not because of his contumacious conduct or some ulterior purpose. In a criminal case where the liberty and freedom of a person is at stake, "sufficient cause" is to be viewed by the Court through the lens of fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution, in particular through the right to liberty, dignity and fair trial guaranteed to an accused under Articles 9, 14 and 10A of the Constitution, which primarily translates into providing the accused, behind bars, with equal access to court and proper opportunity to defend and avail remedies allowed by law, as are available to a free person.

4. The reasons to condone delay in jail petitions or criminal appeals filed against convictions applies with same force to matters of post-arrest bail, as it also attracts the right to liberty, human dignity and fair trial. It would be fair to assume that a person approaching a court of law for the redressal of his grievance from behind bars, suffers a disability in comparison to those who enjoy liberty and freedom of movement. Therefore, incarceration of the petitioner seeking post arrest bail by itself constitutes "sufficient cause" to allow condonation of delay, unless it is established that the delay was caused by the petitioner due to some ulterior motive.

5. The cases referred to and relied upon by the counsel for the State and the counsel for the complainant have different facts and do not negate the said rule of practice. The cases of Zafar and Akhtar Zaman relate to petitions for leave to appeal filed by the complainants and not by the imprisoned accused persons. They were filed against bail granting order and not against refusal of bail and order refusing to cancel the bail granted, respectively. The case of Amjad Ali arose out of a civil matter, i.e., an application for setting aside an ex-parte decree. In the case of Mureed, the Court after hearing the argument of the parties, dismissed the petition on merits as well as on the ground of limitation, and not solely on the point of limitation. In the case of Muhammad Bakhsh, the ground of ignorance of law, viz, "a relative of the petitioners who was pursuing the case for them was under the impression that there was no time limit for filing a petition in this Court in a bail matter" was pleaded for condoning the delay which the Court did not accept stating it to be "manifestly untenable." Even otherwise, there is no discussion in these cases on the points deliberated above; they can, therefore, hardly be cited as guiding precedents on the point.

6. The ground stated by the petitioner for condonation of the delay, in the present case, has not been disputed on behalf of the State and the complainant. We, therefore, accept it as a "sufficient cause" for condoning the delay, in the facts and circumstances of the present case, by following the practice of taking a lenient and permissive view in cases of persons imprisoned, for the above reasons. We, therefore, allow the application and condone the delay.

Petition for leave to appeal

Crl.P.L.A. No. 408-L of 2021

7. The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against order dated 04.11.2020 of the High Court whereby his application for grant of post-arrest bail filed under section 497, Cr.P.C. has been dismissed, in case FIR No.37/2020 dated 07.10.2020 registered at Police Station FIA/CCC, Lahore for the offences under sections 409, 420, 468, 471, 477-A/ 109 of the P.P.C., and section 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947.

8. As per the crime report (FIR), the allegations against the petitioners, briefly stated, are that he along with other co-accused prepared forged deed of Joint Venture for Ajwad Builders with Mehsud Engineers and Contractors, obtained two construction contracts of worth Rs.67,92,88,000/- on the basis of that deed for construction of the building of the Danish School in District Bhakkar, managed fake bank guarantees, and misappropriated an amount of Rs.13,79,06,538/- of the Punjab Government paid for construction of the building of the Danish School.

9. We have heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties, on merits of the petition, at some length and perused the record of the case minutely.

10. The High Court, after thorough and careful examination of the material available on record of the case, has observed in the impugned order that "there is sufficient incriminating material available on record showing strong nexus of the petitioner with this case", and has therefore declined the grant of relief of post-arrest bail to the petitioner. It is the practice of this Court not to intervene in bail matters ordinarily, leaving them to the discretion of the courts inquiring into the guilt of the accused persons, unless it is found that those courts have exercised the discretion arbitrarily, perversely or contrary to the settled principles of law regulating bail matters.3 The learned counsel for the petitioner has failed to point out that the said observation of the High Court and the exercise of discretion in declining the relief of bail to the petitioner in offences, some of which fall within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. as well as the prohibitory provisions of Section 5(6) of the Offences in Respect of Banks (Special Courts) Ordinance, 1984, are the result of gross misreading of the material available on record, and are thus arbitrary and perverse, or that the High Court has acted contrary to some settled principle of law in exercise of that discretion.

11. It is by now well-established that bail is not to be withheld as a punishment. However, refusal of bail to an accused found prima facie involved in the commission of offences falling within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. is not a punitive measure but is more of a preventive step, taking care of the bi-focal interests of justice towards the right of the individual involved and the interest of the society affected. The law presumes that the severity of the punishment provided for offences falling within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. is such that it is likely to induce the accused person to avoid conviction by escaping trial or by tampering with the prosecution evidence including influencing the prosecution witnesses.4 The law allows bail, in such cases, if there are no reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed a non-bailable offence, but there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt. Otherwise by declining bail, the courts ensure the presence of the accused person to face trial and protect the prosecution evidence from being tampered with or the prosecution witness from being influenced. The courts attempt to balance the interest of the society in bringing the offenders to justice and the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused person, by determining whether or not there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused person has committed the offence, in exercising their discretion to grant or decline the relief of bail.

12. In the present case, the learned counsel for the petitioners has been unable to explain why the petitioner has been a beneficiary of Rs. 20 million, in the absence of any construction supplies made to the contractors of the Joint Venture. The learned counsel although submitted the said payment was the "commission" due to the petitioner, yet remained unable to explain the nature of the said commission. In this background, we find that the conclusion of the High Court that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the petitioner has committed the offences alleged is consistent with the incriminating material available on the record of the case, and is in no manner perverse or arbitrary. The impugned order, therefore, does not call for any interference by this Court. The petition being devoid of merit is hereby dismissed. It is needless to mention that the observations made in the impugned order as well as in this order are tentative and shall not influence the trial court while concluding the case after recording evidence.

Sd/-

JUDGE

Sd/- Sd/-

JUDGE JUDGE

QAZI MUHAMMAD AMIN AHMED, J.---I agree with the conclusions drawn by Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. with concurrence of Umar Ata Bandial, J., Judges with erudition par excellence, both on condonation of delay in filing of Criminal Petition No.408-L of 2021 as well as its dismissal on merit, however, my agreement on condonation of delay in filing of criminal petitions, both by under-trial prisoners or convicts, is structured upon reasons, somewhat different; these are elaborated below:

Though the Statutes provide period of limitation for filing an appeal against conviction or acquittal, as the case may be, there is no timeframe restricting an under-trial prisoner to make a motion for his release on bail before a Magisterial Court, Court of Session or the High Court pending conclusion of the trial, however, his approach to the Supreme Court for interlocutory relief, through leave of the Court, is subject to a statutory timeframe. The Supreme Court being the highest Court of appeal ordinarily does not interfere with the discretion exercised by a High Court in bail matters, if found reasonably within the remit of law; it is only in those extraordinary situations, manifestly requiring "further probe" into the guilt of an offender that may represent a compelling option for this Court to substitute finding recorded by the High Court and in so doing the Court has shown a consistent generosity in condoning a belated approach beyond prescribed period of limitation. It is even more generous to examine the propriety of conviction, impugned beyond the period of limitation.

Prosecution of offences, injury to an individual notwithstanding, is essentially a State attribute as well as a responsibility that it owes to its people to protect their life and liberty; it is also important to safeguard the society by placing an effective and meaningful control on criminal behaviour to deter the potential offenders and it is for this reason that right of freedom is subject to observance of laws as well as under the shadow of equal protection thereof. However, the forfeited freedom may be restored through recourse to mechanisms provided under the procedural law, principles whereof are by now well settled. Grant of bail, having regard to the categories of offences providing different sentences, is one form of restoration of interim freedom pending trial and, thus, in the given statutory framework, consideration of a motion warrants a dynamic and liberal approach being the only appropriate course to ensure a judicial oversight on an unjustified detention, though temporary, even beyond the prescribed period of limitation as it confers no vested right on the prosecution.

Yet another reason for this latitude is that flux of time cannot validate a flawed adjudication in criminal jurisdiction involving one sided irreversible corporeal consequences for an alleged offender and, thus, such a liberal approach is most essential to ensure safe administration of criminal justice.

Sd/-

JUDGE

MWA/57/SC Bail refused.

***

1 See Sherin v. Fazal Muhammad 1995 SCMR 584.

2 See Muhammad Nawaz v. State PLD 2002 SC 287; Qalab Ali v. Sipahia 2005 SCMR 1857; Badar Munir v. State 2009 SCMR 569; Razia v. State 2009 SCMR 1428; Muhammad Fayyaz v. State 2012 SCMR 522; Faiz-Ur-Rehman v. State 2012 SCMR 538 and Asia Bibi v. State PLD 2019 SC 64

3 See Haq Nawaz v. State 1969 SCMR 174 and Zaro v. State 1974 SCMR 11.

4 The constitutionality of the presumption as embodied in the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C., wherein an accused, applying for bail is not provided with an opportunity to rebut it, is yet open to examination on the touchtone of the fundamental rights.

P L D 2021 Supreme Court 940

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ

COMMISSIONER INLAND REVENUE, MULTAN ZONE, RTO, MULTAN---Petitioner

Versus

FALAH UD DIN QURESHI---Respondent

C. P. No. 159 of 2021, decided on 12th October, 2021.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Multan Bench dated 11.02.2020, passed in T.R. No.8 of 2019)

Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O. I, R. 2 & O. IV, Rr. 2, 6, 15, 22, 26, 30, 31 & 32---Advocate-on-Record ( AOR )---Responsibilities/duties towards the client and the Supreme Court stated.

Principal responsibility under the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ( the Rules ) to act, appear and plead on behalf of the party was that of the Advocate-on-Record ( AOR ). It was the AOR who engaged the Advocate Supreme Court ( ASC ) and it on the instructions of the AOR that such ASC pleaded the case of the party. Engagement of the ASC did not absolve the AOR of his primary responsibility to attend to the case on behalf of the party before the Court, and in case the ASC was not available, it was the responsibility of the AOR to appear and plead the case of the party. It was, of course, the discretion of the Court to grant adjournment in any particular case if the ASC was not available, considering the nature and complexity of the case, but that did not relieve the AOR from his responsibility under the Rules to be fully prepared to act, appear and plead the case of the party, irrespective whether the ASC was present or not.

The concept of enrolling AORs at the Supreme Court, as the Rules signified, was to ensure that the cases filed in the Supreme Court were handled by certain designated lawyers called the AORs; this ensured proper management of cases, timely service of court-process to parties and certainty of representation before the Court leaving no margin for adjournments as was in other courts. All this was to achieve timely decisions of cases by the apex Court. Supreme Court observed that if the AORs were not performing their responsibility, it certainly begged the questions: whether the institution of AORs was required anymore?; had it outlived its utility and was causing more disservice to the litigants and the Court than achieving the benefits of this institution alluded to in the Rules?

Syed Rifaqat Husain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioner.

Nemo for Respondent.

Date of hearing: 12th October, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---No one appeared on behalf of the petitioner when the case was called as there was a written request for adjournment by the Advocate-on-Record ("AOR") for the petitioner on behalf of the Advocate Supreme Court of Pakistan ("ASC"). We sent for the AOR in the case, who appeared later in the day. He was asked to address the Court on the question of limitation, as the petition for leave to appeal before this Court was barred by time and the application for condonation of the delay did not disclose any sufficient cause to condone the delay. Learned AOR, instead of arguing the application, submitted without any remorse that he was not aware of the application (which had been signed and filed by him) and did not even have the file of the case, with him.

2. We are thus constrained to remind the learned AOR of his responsibilities to his client, the petitioner, and the Court under the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules"). Relevant provisions of the Rules are reproduced hereunder for ready reference:

ORDER I, Rule-2

> "Advocate-on-Record" means an Advocate, who is entitled, under these Rules, to act and plead for a party in the Supreme Court. "Party" and all words descriptive of parties to proceedings before the Court (such as "appellant", "respondent", "plaintiff", "defendant" and the like) include, in respect of all acts proposed to be done by an Advocate-on-Record, Advocate-on-Record of the party in question, when it is represented by an Advocate-on- Record....

ORDER IV

ADVOCATES AND ADVOCATES-ON-RECORD

2. A Senior Advocate, an Advocate and an Advocate-on-Record shall be entitled to appear and plead before the Court on signing his respective Roll; Provided that an Advocate shall not be allowed to sign the Roll unless he produces a certificate of enrolment from the Pakistan Bar Council; and Provided further that the Chief Justice and the Judges may refuse to allow a person to sign the Roll or remove his name from the Roll after affording him an opportunity of oral hearing if he has, at any time, been adjudged guilty of professional misconduct or is otherwise considered unfit to be enrolled or allowed to remain as an advocate.

..

6. No Advocate other than an Advocate-on-Record shall appear or plead in any matter unless he is instructed by an Advocate-on-Record.

..

15. No Advocate other than an Advocate-on-Record shall be entitled to act for a party in any proceedings in the Court.

..

22. Every Advocate-on-Record shall, before acting on behalf of any person or party, file in the Registry a power of attorney in the prescribed form authorizing him to act.

..

26. No person having an Advocate-on-Record in the case shall be heard in person save by special leave of the Court:

Provided that where a person is not represented by an Advocate-on-Record or has been permitted by the Court to appear in person, he shall be subject to same discipline and restrictions as are applicable to an Advocate-on-Record.

..

30. Where, on the complaint of any person or otherwise, the Chief Justice or the Court is of the opinion that a Senior Advocate or an Advocate or an Advocate-on-Record has been guilty of misconduct or conduct unbecoming of an Advocate, with regard to any matter concerning the Court, the Chief Justice or the Court may either after affording him an opportunity of oral hearing, take such disciplinary action, including suspension and removal form practice of the Court, against him as it may deem fit, or refer to the Pakistan Bar Council for inquiry and action under the Legal Practitioners and Bar Councils Act, 1973.

31. In an appropriate case, where the Chief Justice or the Court is of the opinion that a Senior Advocate or an Advocate-on-Record is unfit to act and plead as such, the Chief Justice or the Court may, after providing him an opportunity of oral hearing, direct removal of his name from the Roll of Senior Advocates or of Advocates- on-Record, as the case may be.

32. Nothing in this Order shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent powers of the Court to make such order and take such action as may be necessary for the conduct and proceedings of the Court.

Perusal of the above Rules shows that the AOR is defined as an Advocate, who is to act and plead for a party in the Supreme Court. The definition of "party" also include an AOR, when such a party is represented by the AOR. Rule 2 of Order IV states that the AOR is entitled to appear and plead before the Court on signing his respective roll. Rule 6 of the said Order provides that no Advocate other than AOR shall appear and plead on behalf of the party unless he is instructed by the AOR while Rule 15 states that no Advocate other than AOR shall be entitled to act on behalf of a party in any proceedings in the Court. Rules 22 and 26 underline that every AOR on submission of his power of attorney shall act on behalf of the party and that no person having an AOR shall be heard in person except with specific leave of the Court.

3. The above provisions clearly show that the principal responsibility under the Rules to act, appear and plead on behalf of the party is that of the AOR. It is the AOR who engages the ASC and it on the instructions of the AOR that such ASC pleads the case of the party. Engagement of the ASC does not absolve the AOR of his primary responsibility to attend to the case on behalf of the party before the Court, and in case the ASC is not available, it is the responsibility of the AOR to appear and plead the case of the party. It is, of course, the discretion of the Court to grant adjournment in any particular case if the ASC is not available, considering the nature and complexity of the case, but that does not relieve the AOR from his responsibility under the Rules to be fully prepared to act, appear and plead the case of the party, irrespective whether the ASC is present or not.

4. In the instant case, the learned AOR did not even find it appropriate to appear before the Court after having submitted a written application for adjournment on behalf of the ASC, and when he appeared, a simple question was asked by the Court to justify whether condonation of the delay in filing the petition for leave to appeal can be granted on the ground agitated in the application, which stated:

> "2. That since it is the official matter and there are many formalities to be fulfilled while getting the permission of high-ups for filing the petition against any order/judgment before any higher forum which takes time."

The response of the learned AOR was that he does not even have the file of the case. It is important to draw the attention of the AOR to Rules 30 and 31, reproduced above, under which such a behavior may make the AOR liable for misconduct, leading to disciplinary action against him including suspension of his license and removal from the practice of the Court. Therefore, the AOR ought to have taken his responsibility seriously.

5. The concept of enrolling AORs at the Supreme Court, as the Rules signify, is to ensure that the cases filed in the Supreme Court are handled by certain designated lawyers called the AORs; this ensures proper management of cases, timely service of court-process to parties and certainty of representation before the Court leaving no margin for adjournments as is in other courts. All this is to achieve timely decisions of cases by the apex Court. However, if the AORs are not performing their responsibility, as in this case, it certainly begs the questions: Whether the institution of AORs is required anymore? Has it outlived its utility and is causing more disservice to the litigants and the Court than achieving the benefits of this institution alluded to in the Rules?

6. We have examined the application for condonation of delay (C.M.A. No. 949/2021) in the presence of the learned AOR for the petitioner, which does not disclose any sufficient cause for condonation of the delay. The learned AOR has not rendered any assistance or made any other submission. The application for condonation of the delay is found meritless and is therefore dismissed. Consequently, the main petition for leave to appeal is also dismissed as being barred by time.

MWA/C-17/SC Petition dismissed.

***

2022 S C M R 1

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Muhammad Ali Mazhar, JJ

SHAKEEL SHAH---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE and others---Respondents

Criminal Petition No. 1072 of 2021, decided on 4th October, 2021.

(Against the order of Islamabad High Court, Islamabad dated 08.12.2020 passed in Criminal M. No. 677-B of 2021)

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497(1), third & fourth provisos---Offence not punishable with death---Bail---Delay in conclusion of the trial---Extent and scope of the right of an accused to bail on the statutory ground of delay in conclusion of the trial under the third proviso to S. 497(1), Cr.P.C. and the exceptions to such right provided under the fourth proviso, stated.

Part (a) of third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. envisaged that in an offence not punishable with death, the trial of the accused was to be concluded within a period of one year from the date of detention of the accused, and in case the trial was not so concluded, the law mandated the release of the accused on bail. The accused, thus, had a statutory right to be released on bail if his trial for such offence was not concluded within a period of one year from the date of his detention. Period of one year for the conclusion of the trial began from the date of the arrest/detention of the accused and it was of little importance as to when the charge was framed and the trial commenced. The purpose and objective of the provision was to ensure that the trial of an accused was conducted expeditiously and the pre-conviction detention of an accused did not extend beyond the period of one year, in cases involving offences not punishable with death. In such cases, if the trial of an accused was not concluded within a year of his detention, the statutory right to be released on bail ripened in his favour.

This statutory right to be released on bail was, however, subject to two exceptions: one was embodied in the third proviso itself and the second was provided in the fourth proviso to section 497, Cr.P.C. As per these exceptions, the right to be released on bail on the ground of delay in conclusion of the trial was not available to an accused if: (i) the delay in conclusion of the trial was occasioned by an act or omission of the accused or by any other person acting on his behalf, or (ii) the accused was a convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or was in the opinion of the court a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal or was accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

With respect to the first exception the act or omission on the part of the accused to delay the timely conclusion of the trial must be the result of a visible concerted effort orchestrated by the accused. Merely some adjournments sought by the counsel of the accused could not be counted as an act or omission on behalf of the accused to delay the conclusion of the trial, unless the adjournments were sought without any sufficient cause on crucial hearings, i.e., the hearings fixed for examination or cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, or the adjournments were repetitive, reflecting a design or pattern to consciously delay the conclusion of the trial. Thus, mere mathematical counting of all the dates of adjournments sought for on behalf of the accused was not sufficient to deprive the accused of his right to bail under the third proviso.

The second exception to the right of the accused to be released on bail on the ground of delay in conclusion of the trial was provided in the fourth proviso to section 497, Cr.P.C. According to which the provisions of the third proviso did not apply to the accused who was: (i) a convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life; or (ii) a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, in the opinion of the Court; or (iii) an accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

Conditions (i) and (iii) above were self-explanatory and must be borne out from the record. Under condition (i), the accused must have been earlier convicted by a court of law for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life. Under condition (iii), the accused must be accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life. It was condition (ii) which required the Court to apply its judicious mind to the facts and circumstances of the case and make an opinion as to whether or not the accused was a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal. The words hardened, desperate or dangerous had been couched in between conditions (i) and (iii) and therefore signified the same sense of gravity and seriousness as to the nature of the offence and character of the accused. "Dangerous" meant harmful, perilous, hazardous or unsafe - someone who could cause physical harm or injury or death. "Hardened" was someone who was pitiless, hardhearted, callous or unfeeling and set in his bad ways and no longer likely to change, having a tendency of repeating the offence and was, thus, dangerous to the society. "Desperate" was someone who was reckless, violent and ready to risk or do anything; such person was, therefore, also dangerous to society. All the three words painted a picture of a person, who was likely to seriously injure and hurt others without caring for the consequences of his violent act. Therefore, for this exception to apply, there had to be material to show that the accused was such a person who would pose a serious threat to the society if set free on bail. In the absence of any such material, bail could not be denied to an accused on the statutory ground of delay in conclusion of the trial. Moundar v. State PLD 1990 SC 934 rel.

(b) Interpretation of statutes---

----Maxim "noscitur a sociis"---Scope---Word or phrase in an enactment must always be construed in the light of the surrounding text, and their colour and meaning must be derived from their context.

Bennion on Statutory Interpretation. 7th edition. p. 459 ref.

(c) Interpretation of statutes---

----Ejusdem generis, principle of---Scope---Ejusdem generis principle was a principle of constriction whereby wide words associated in the text with more limited words were taken to be restricted by implication to matters of the same limited character---For the said principle to apply, there must be sufficient indication of the category or word that could be properly described as the class or genus, which was to control the general words---Genus must be narrower than the general words it was to regulate.

Bennion on Statutory Interpretation. 7th edition. pp. 554 and 557 ref.

Raja Ikram Ameen Minhas, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Israr-ul-Haq, Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for the Complainant.

Sub-Inspector Mehboob Hasan and ASI, Ishaq for the State.

Date of hearing: 4th October, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Criminal M. A. No.1276/2021: For the reasons given in the application, the delay in the filing of this criminal petition by the petitioner, an imprisoned person, is condoned. (See Arshad Nadeem v. State[1]).

Criminal Petition No.1072/2021:

2. The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 14.07.2021 passed by the Islamabad High Court, whereby post-arrest bail on the statutory ground of delay in the conclusion of the trial, has been denied to him in case FIR No.399 registered at Police Station Sabzi Mandi, Islamabad for offences punishable under sections 392 and 411 read with section 75, P.P.C. The High Court observed that the delay in the conclusion of the trial was caused by the petitioner and that the petitioner having been previously convicted for other offences was a hardened, desperate and dangerous criminal.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the record of the case with their able assistance. In order to examine the legality of the impugned order, it would be useful to first examine the extent and scope of the right of an accused to bail on the statutory ground of delay in conclusion of the trial under the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The said proviso and the related fourth proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. are reproduced hereunder for ready reference and convenience:

497. When bail may be taken in case of non-bailable offence.

(1) ..

Provided

Provided

Provided further that the Court shall, except where it is of the opinion that the delay in the trial of the accused has been occasioned by an act or omission of the accused or any other person acting on his behalf, direct that any person shall be released on bail-

(a) Who, being accused of any offence not punishable with death, has been detained for such offence for a continuous period exceeding one year or in case of a woman exceeding six months and whose trial for such offence has not concluded' or

(b) Who, being accused of an offence punishable with death, has been detained for such offence for a continuous period exceeding two years and in case of woman exceeding one year and whose trial for such offence has not concluded:

Provided further that the provisions of the foregoing proviso shall not apply to a previously convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or to a person who, in the opinion of the court, is a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal or is accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

The petitioner is charged with offences punishable under sections 392 and 411, P.P.C., which are not punishable with death; his bail plea is, therefore, covered by part (a) of the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The above provision envisages that in an offence not punishable with death,[2] the trial of the accused is to be concluded within a period of one year from the date of detention of the accused, and in case the trial is not so concluded, the law mandates the release of the accused on bail. The accused, thus, has a statutory right to be released on bail if his trial for such offence is not concluded within a period of one year from the date of his detention. The period of one year for the conclusion of the trial begins from the date of the arrest/detention of the accused and it is of little importance as to when the charge is framed and the trial commenced. The purpose and objective of the provision is to ensure that the trial of an accused is conducted expeditiously and the pre-conviction detention of an accused does not extend beyond the period of one year, in cases involving offences not punishable with death. In such cases, if the trial of an accused is not concluded within a year of his detention, the statutory right to be released on bail ripens in his favour.

4. This statutory right to be released on bail is, however, subject to two exceptions: one is embodied in the third proviso itself and the second is provided in the fourth proviso. As per these exceptions, the right to be released on bail on the ground of delay in conclusion of the trial is not available to an accused if: (i) the delay in conclusion of the trial is occasioned by an act or omission of the accused or by any other person acting on his behalf, or (ii) the accused is a convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or is in the opinion of the court a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal or is accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

Delay in conclusion of the trial if occasioned by an act or omission of the accused or by any other person acting on his behalf.

5. The act or omission on the part of the accused to delay the timely conclusion of the trial must be the result of a visible concerted effort orchestrated by the accused. Merely some adjournments sought by the counsel of the accused cannot be counted as an act or omission on behalf of the accused to delay the conclusion of the trial, unless the adjournments are sought without any sufficient cause on crucial hearings, i.e., the hearings fixed for examination or cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, or the adjournments are repetitive, reflecting a design or pattern to consciously delay the conclusion of the trial. Thus, mere mathematical counting of all the dates of adjournments sought for on behalf of the accused is not sufficient to deprive the accused of his right to bail under the third proviso. The statutory right to be released on bail flows from the constitutional right to liberty and fair trial under Articles 9 and 10A of the Constitution. Hence, the provisions of the third and fourth provisos to section 497(1), Cr.P.C must be examined through the constitutional lens and fashioned in a manner that is progressive and expansive of the rights of an accused, who is still under trial and has the presumption of innocence in his favour. To convince the court for denying bail to the accused, the prosecution must show, on the basis of the record, that there is a concerted effort on the part of the accused or his counsel to delay the conclusion of the trial by seeking adjournments without sufficient cause on crucial hearings and/or by making frivolous miscellaneous applications.

6. In the present case, the petitioner was arrested on 21.01.2020 and the charge against him was framed on 08.12.2020. He moved the application for bail on statutory ground of delay in January, 2021. The order sheet of the period commencing from 08.12.2020, the date of framing charge, till the date of his filing the application for bail does not reflect any design, pattern or concerted effort on the part of the accused to delay the conclusion of the trial. The adjournments mentioned in the impugned order are after the lapse of the first year of detention of the accused and are therefore of little significance, besides the impugned order does not discuss whether the said adjournments were on crucial dates and without sufficient cause.

The accused, a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, in the opinion of the Court

7. The second exception to the right of the accused to be released on bail on the ground of delay in conclusion of the trial is provided in the fourth proviso. According to which the provisions of the third proviso do not apply to the accused who is:

(i) a convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life; or

(ii) a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, in the opinion of the Court; or

(iii) an accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

Conditions (i) and (iii) are self-explanatory and must be borne out from the record. Under condition (i), the accused must have been earlier convicted by a court of law for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life. Under condition (iii), the accused must be accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life. It is condition (ii) which requires the Court to apply its judicious mind to the facts and circumstances of the case and make an opinion as to whether or not the accused is a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal. The words hardened, desperate or dangerous have been couched in between conditions (i) and (iii) and therefore signify the same sense of gravity and seriousness as to the nature of the offence and character of the accused. The principle that the meaning of a word is recognized by its associates is traditionally expressed in the Latin maxim noscitur a sociis. A word or phrase in an enactment must always be construed in the light of the surrounding text, and their colour and meaning must be derived from their context.[3]

8. Further, the words hardened, desperate or dangerous are to be understood collectively. The ejusdem generis principle is a principle of constriction whereby wide words associated in the text with more limited words are taken to be restricted by implication to matters of the same limited character.[4] For the said principle to apply, there must be sufficient indication of the category or word that can be properly described as the class or genus, which is to control the general words. The genus must be narrower than the general words it is to regulate[5]. Applying this principle to the phrase a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, it is the word dangerous which not only meets the requirements of conditions (i) and (iii) discussed above, it is also precise and narrow in order to regulate the meaning of the other two words. "Dangerous" means harmful, perilous, hazardous or unsafe - someone who can cause physical harm or injury or death.[6] "Hardened" is someone who is pitiless, hardhearted, callous or unfeeling and set in his bad ways and no longer likely to change,[7] having a tendency of repeating the offence and is, thus, dangerous to the society. "Desperate" is someone who is reckless, violent and ready to risk or do anything;[8] such person is, therefore, also dangerous to society. All the three words paint a picture of a person, who is likely to seriously injure and hurt others without caring for the consequences of his violent act. Therefore, for this exception to apply, there has to be material to show that the accused is such a person who will pose a serious threat to the society if set free on bail. In the absence of any such material, bail cannot be denied to an accused on the statutory ground of delay in conclusion of the trial. (See Moundar v. State (PLD 1990 SC 934), 8(sic.) In the present case, the earlier convictions of the petitioner passed in the years 2004-2005 do not fall under the offences mentioned in the fourth proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C., i.e., an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life. Further, according to the prosecution, there has been no criminal case registered against the petitioner since 2005, which shows that for the last fourteen years, he has had no criminal record. Even otherwise, he has served out his sentences under the earlier convictions and even the nature of the said offences are not such as to indicate that he is a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal who can pose a serious threat to the society at large if released on bail, nor do the facts and circumstances of the present case give such indication.

9. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the delay in concluding the trial of the petitioner beyond the period of one year from the date of his arrest/detention has not been occasioned by an act or omission of the petitioner or any other person acting on his behalf, and that in the facts and circumstances of the case the accused does not appear to be a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal. The petitioner has, thus, made out a case for grant of bail as a matter of right under the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. The High Court has failed to correctly appreciate the scope of the third and fourth proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C in the light of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution. This petition is, therefore, converted into appeal and allowed: the impugned order is set aside, the application of the petitioner for grant of post arrest bail is accepted and he is admitted to post-arrest bail subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.100,000/- with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial court.

10. Foregoing are the reasons for our short order dated 04.10.2021, which is reproduced hereunder for completion of record:

> For reasons to be recorded separately, this petition is converted into an appeal and allowed. Resultantly, the petitioner is admitted to bail subject to furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.100,000/- with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial Court, with further directions to the trial Court to proceed with the trial expeditiously and conclude the same at the earliest.
>
> MWA/S-54/SC Bail granted.

2022 S C M R 42

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Mushir Alam, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Munib Akhtar, JJ

Civil Appeals Nos. 1498 and 1499 of 2018

(On appeal under section 9(5) of the Elections Act, 2017 against the order dated 1.10.2018 passed by the Election Commission of Pakistan in Cases Nos. 30(26)/2018-Leg and 1(19)/2018)

And

Civil Petitions Nos. 972-L and 973-L of 2019

(On appeal from the judgment dated 26.2.2019 passed by the Lahore High Court, Multan Bench in W.Ps. Nos.14893/18 and 16234/18)

MUHAMMAD SALMAN---Petitioner

Versus

NAVEED ANJUM and others---Respondents

Civil Appeals Nos. 1498 and 1499 of 2018 and Civil Petitions Nos.972-L and 973-L of 2019, decided on 17th August, 2021.*

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J; agreeing with Munib Akhtar, J. but with a different view on the scope of Explanation to section 9(1) of the Elections Act, 2017.

(a) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 62, 63 & 218(3)---Elections Act (XXXIII of 2017), S. 9(1)---Qualification/disqualification/eligibility of a candidate or member of Parliament---Power of the Election Commission ('the Commission')---Scope---Commission had no jurisdiction, either under Art. 218(3) of the Constitution or under S. 9(1) of the Election Act, 2017, to deal with and decide the matter of alleged pre-election qualification or disqualification of a returned candidate.

(b) Elections Act (XXXIII of 2017)---

----S. 9(1)--- Representation of the People Act (LXXXV of 1976), S. 103AA [since repealed]---Powers and jurisdiction of the Election Commission ('the Commission') to declare a poll void under S. 9 of the Elections Act, 2017 ('the 2017 Act')---Scope---Power of the Commission to declare the poll at one or more polling stations or in the whole constituency void, being ancillary and incidental, was implied in the power conferred on the Commission by S. 9(1) of the 2017 Act to declare that grave illegalities or violations of the provisions of the 2017 Act or the Rules had materially affected the result of the poll and in its power to call upon the voters in the polling station or stations concerned or in the whole constituency, as the case may be, to recast their votes---Such was also the mandate of S. 103AA of the erstwhile law, i.e., the Representation of the People Act, 1976---Without declaring the result of the earlier poll(s) void (i.e., cancelled) the Commission could not call upon the voters to recast their votes, as results of two polls could not co-exist---Therefore, it was inevitable for the Commission to declare the result of the earlier poll(s) void before calling upon the voters to recast their votes.

(c) Elections Act (XXXIII of 2017)---

----S. 9(1), Explanation ---Representation of the People Act (LXXXV of 1976), S. 103AA(1) [since repealed]---Conditions under which the Election Commission ('the Commission') could declare a poll void under S. 9 of the Elections Act, 2017 ('the 2017 Act')---Scope---Section 9(1) of the 2017 Act read with its "Explanation" specified two conditions in which the Commission could exercise its jurisdiction under that section, namely; (i) grave illegalities and (ii) violation of the provisions of the 2017 Act or the Rules --- Implementation of an agreement restraining women from casting their votes as provided in S. 9(1) of the 2017 Act, was not, an independent third condition rather was part of the first two conditions.

(d) Interpretation of statutes---

----Explanation provided after a section/provision of the statute---Scope---Ordinary purpose that an Explanation was supposed to serve was to facilitate the proper understanding of a provision---Meaning of an Explanation could not generally go beyond the controlling main provision.

(e) Elections Act (XXXIII of 2017)---

----S. 9(1), Explanation---Representation of the People Act (LXXXV of 1976), S. 103AA(1) [since repealed]---Conditions under which the Election Commission ('the Commission') could declare a poll void under S. 9 of the Elections Act, 2017 ('the 2017 Act')---Scope---Implementation of an agreement restraining women from casting their votes in the constituency---Explanation to S. 9(1) of the 2017 Act simply added a presumption in the context of the ground of "implementation of an agreement restraining women from casting their votes" and provided that if the turnout of women voters was less than ten percent of the total votes polled in a constituency, the Commission may presume that the women voters had been restrained through an agreement from casting their votes---In pith and substance, this was all what the Explanation explained---Word "election" used in the Explanation was though somewhat confusing, but in order to harmonize and balance the meaning and import of the "Explanation" and also to keep it within the fold of the main provision, the word "election" may be read to mean "poll"---Explanation to S. 9(1), did not attract any "special case," where the "election" instead of the "poll" in the whole constituency may be declared void.

Muhammad Shahzad Shaukat, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellant/Petitioner (in call cases).

Tahir Munir Malik, Advocate Supreme Court, Kh. Waseem Abbas, Advocate Supreme Court and Imran Humayun Cheema, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent No. 1 (in C.A. 1498/18).

Waqar Ahmed Rana, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent No.4 (in C.A. 1498/18).

Hamid Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Respondent No. 1 (in C.A. 1499/18).

Sajeel Shehryar Swati, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent No.5 (in C.Ps. 972-L and 973-L/18).

Ch. Aamir Rehman, Additional A.G.P. on Court's Notice on 28 and 29/1/2020.

Dates of hearing: 28th, 29th January and 3rd February, 2020.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---I have had the privilege of perusing the eloquent opinions recorded by my learned brethren, Justice Mushir Alam and Justice Munib Akhtar. With all deference, I could not make myself agree to the opinion of Justice Mushir Alam. I concur with the opinion handed down by my learned brother Justice Munib Akhtar that the Election Commission ("Commission") has no jurisdiction, either under Article 218(3) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") or under Section 9(1) of the Election Act, 2017 ("Election Act") to deal with and decide the matter of alleged pre-election qualification or disqualification of a returned candidate, and that the present appeals should therefore be allowed. I also agree with the interpretation of the provisions of Article 218 of the Constitution and generally on the construction of the provisions of Section 9 of the Election Act, by Justice Munib Akhtar. With respect, I have a slightly different view on the construction of section 9(1) and its Explanation, which I consider my solemn obligation to express; hence this note.

2. I respectfully disagree with the view of my learned brother stated in para 20 of the judgment that "the Commission no longer has the power to declare the poll in a constituency (or in any one or more polling stations) void except in the special case." To my humble understanding, the power of the Commission to declare the poll at one or more polling stations or in the whole constituency void, being ancillary and incidental, is implied in the power conferred on the Commission by section 9(1) to declare that grave illegalities or violations of the provisions of the Act or the Rules have materially affected the result of the poll and in its power to call upon the voters in the polling station or stations concerned or in the whole constituency, as the case may be, to recast their votes. This was also the mandate of section 103AA of the erstwhile law, i.e., the Representation of the People Act, 1976. It is obvious that without declaring the result of the earlier poll(s) void (i.e., cancelled) the Commission cannot call upon the voters to recast their votes - the result of two polls cannot co-exist. Therefore, it is inevitable for the Commission to declare the result of the earlier poll(s) void before calling upon the voters to recast their votes.

3. My learned brother has held that Section 9(1) read with its "Explanation" specifies three conditions in which the Commission could exercise its jurisdiction under that Section, namely; (i) grave illegalities,

(ii) violation of the provisions of the Act or the rules, and (iii) implementation of an agreement restraining women from casting their votes, while section 103AA(1) of the erstwhile law stipulated only the first two conditions. I, with respect, differ and find that the conditions still continue to be two under the new law, as were the case under the old law: (i) grave illegalities, and (ii) violation of the provisions of the Act or the rules. "The implementation of an agreement restraining women from casting their votes" is not, in my opinion, an independent third condition rather is part of the first two conditions. The word 'including' used in section 9(1) has led me to this finding. The Election Act contains several provisions to ensure participation of women in the election process, and preventing women from exercising their right to vote has been made an offence of corrupt practice under its section 167(a) read with Section 170(vii). The implementation of an agreement restraining women from casting their votes is thus a grave illegality and violation of the provisions of the Act, which materially affects the result of the poll.

4. My next concern is as to the finding of my learned brother to the effect that the "Explanation" to Section 9(1) can render in some "special case" the entire election in the constituency void meaning thereby that fresh elections shall be held in the constituency, as opposed to declaring the poll(s) void resulting in recasting of the votes for the same contesting candidates afresh. In my humble understanding, the "Explanation" to section 9(1) serves the ordinary purpose that an Explanation is supposed to serve, i.e., to facilitate the proper understanding of a provision. The power of the Commission under section 9(1) is only to declare the poll at one or more polling stations or in the whole constituency void, which then leads to recasting of the votes for the same candidates. The grounds of declaring the polls to be void are: (i) grave illegalities, or (ii) violation of the provisions of the Act or the rules including "the implementation of an agreement restraining women from casting their votes." The Explanation simply adds a presumption in the context of the ground of "implementation of an agreement restraining women from casting their votes" and provides that if the turnout of women voters is less than ten percent of the total votes polled in a constituency, the Commission may presume that the women voters have been restrained through an agreement from casting their votes. In pith and substance, this is all what the Explanation explains. The word "election" used in the Explanation is though somewhat confusing, but in order to harmonize and balance the meaning and import of the "Explanation" and also to keep it within the fold of the main provision, the word "election" may be read to mean "poll"; as the meaning of an Explanation cannot generally go beyond the controlling main provision. The Explanation to section 9(1), in my understanding, does not attract any "special case," where the "election" instead of the "poll" in the whole constituency may be declared void. However, we are not faced with the interpretation of the word "election" in this case, therefore, it is best to leave it to be considered more elaborately in an appropriate case, where the facts of the case would so require.

MWA/M-52/SC Appeals/Petitions allowed.

2022 S C M R 72

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Munib Akhtar, JJ

C.M.A.5777/2021 IN C.P.NIL/2021

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 26.01.2021, passed in I.C.A. No.5251/2021)

and

Civil Petition No.4944 of 2021

(Against the order of Islamabad High Court, Islamabad dated 02.8.2021, passed in W.P No.2391/2021)

MAMOON WAZIR and others---Petitioners

Versus

ABWA KNOWLEDGE VILLAGE (PVT) LIMITED FAISALABAD and others.---Respondents

C.M.A. No. 5777/2021 in C.P. NIL/2021 and Civil Petition No.4944 of 2021, decided on 27th September, 2020.

Pakistan Medical Commission Act, 2020---

----Ss. 8(1), 8(2), 8(3) & 18---Pakistan Medical Commission Admission Regulations 2020-2021, Reglns. 13 & 14---Medical and dental undergraduate programs for the academic year 2021---Admission---"Medical and dental colleges admissions test" ("MDCAT")---MDCAT was the basic minimum mandatory requirement, across the board, for admission to all medical and dental colleges, both public or private, in the country---Said requirement had been made applicable to students who had enrolled in the medical and dental undergraduate program for the year 2021 and onwards---While the private colleges enjoyed the flexibility of setting their own admission criteria including an entrance test (detailed in their prospectus) any such criteria or entrance test were over and above the basic statutory minimum requirement of MDCAT, which was mandatory for admission to both the private or public medical and dental colleges - Regulation 14 of the Pakistan Medical Commission Admission Regulations 2020-2021 ('the Regulations') did not in any manner dispense with the requirement of MDCAT and therefore had no bearing on the issue of MDCAT, which stood regulated under S. 18 of the Pakistan Medical Commission Act, 2020 ('the Act')---Even otherwise, Regulations, being subordinate to the Act, could not dilute or dispense with the statutory requirement provided under the Act---Regulations 13 & 14 of the Regulations, neither authorized the private colleges to dispense with the requirement of MDCAT nor were they inconsistent with S. 18 of the Act.

Muhammad Akram Ch. Senior Advocate Supreme Court, Noor Alam Khan, Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners.

Ch. Muhammad Umar, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 27th September, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---C.M.A. No.5777/2021: The applicants seek permission to file the instant petition against the decision of the learned Division Bench of the Lahore High Court dated 26.01.2021 passed in I.C.A. No.5251 of 2021, reason being that the said judgment has been adopted and followed by the Islamabad High Court, Islamabad in its judgment dated 02.08.2021 passed in Writ Petition No.2391 of 2021, which is impugned before us by the petitioner in Civil Petition No.4944 of 2021, fixed with this case today. As same question arises for determination in the instant matter, we allow this application, therefore, the petition filed by the applicants/ petitioners be put up for hearing along with C.P. No.4944/2021 before us today, after it is registered and numbered by the office.

Main Petitions:

2. Petitioners are newly enrolled students in the medical and dental undergraduate program for the academic year 2021 at the ABWA Knowledge Village (Pvt.) Limited (respondent No.1), a private medical college. Their admissions were subsequently cancelled due to their failure to pass the "medical and dental colleges admissions test" ("MDCAT"). They have challenged the pre-admission requirement of MDCAT introduced through section 18 of the Pakistan Medical Commission Act, 2020 ("Act") on the ground that it is violative of Regulations Nos.13 and 14 of the Admission Regulations (Amended) 2020-2021 ("Regulations")[1] in as much as the admissions to a private medical college is governed by the respective prospectus of the medical college, which in this case, did not require the petitioners to take MDCAT.

3. Learned counsel for the petitioners explaining their ground of challenge submitted that the Prospectus issued by respondent No.1 (private medical college), did not provide for MDCAT, but instead, set out their own admission criteria, which the petitioners have successfully met and were thereafter granted admission. They cannot be subjected to the requirement of MDCAT which falls outside the prospectus. Learned counsel for the respondent on the other hand supported the impugned judgment and submitted that statutory requirement of MDCAT under the Act is a mandatory requirement and even the Regulations do not dispense with the said requirement.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the Act and the Regulations. Section 18 of the Act and regulations Nos. 13 and 14 of the Regulations are reproduced hereunder for convenience:-

Section 18 of the Act:

18. Medical and dental colleges admissions tests (MDCAT)----(1) The Authority shall conduct annually on a date approved by the Council and as per standards approved by the Board a single admissions test which shall be mandatory requirement for all students seeking admission to medical or dental undergraduate programs anywhere in Pakistan.

(2) No student shall be awarded a medical or dental degree in Pakistan who has not passed the MDCAT prior to obtaining admission in a medical or dental college in Pakistan:

Provided that such requirement shall be mandatory for all students who have been enrolled in medical or dental under-graduate programs in the year 2021 and thereafter.

(3) The admission to medical or dental programs conducted by the public colleges shall be regulated as per the policy of the Provincial Governments strictly on merit and admission to a private college shall be in accordance with the criteria and requirements stipulated by the private college at least one year in advance of admissions including any additional entrance test as may be conducted by a private college subject to any conditions imposed by the relevant university to which such college is affiliated:

Provided that the marks obtained by a student in the MDCAT conducted by the Authority shall constitute a minimum of fifty percent of the weightage for the purposes of admission in the public colleges.

Regulations Nos.13 and 14 of the Regulations:

Private College Admissions

13. Both Agha Khan University and NUMS in respect of its constituent, affiliated and administered colleges have a previously declared admission criteria for admissions which includes in addition to the MDCAT an entry test and other criteria specific to such colleges hence substantially fulfilling the requirement of prior disclosure of admission criteria pursuant to Section 18(3) of the PMC Act, 2020. Therefore, admissions in the Army Medical College and all constituent, affiliated and administered colleges of NUMS shall be undertaken by NUMS and admissions to Agha Khan Medical College shall be undertaken by Agha Khan University respectively, subject to the mandatory requirement of any student admitted having passed the MDCAT. Any student seeking to apply to said colleges shall be required to apply directly to the relevant university and fulfill the additional requirements for admission imposed and declared by such colleges.

Provided quota for special seats in colleges under the administrative control of NUMS shall be regulated by NUMS as may be notified by the relevant Directorate and approved by the Ministry of Defence subject to the maximum allocated seat limit of each college.

Provided further, that students admitted against special quotas seats shall be required to have mandatorily passed the MDCAT and obtained a high school leaving certificate/degree.

14. Admissions to all private medical and dental [colleges] shall be conducted only for the 2021 Session through a centralized automated admission system.

Section 18 of the Act clearly mandates that the Authority (i.e., the National Medical Authority constituted under section 15 of the Act) shall conduct MDCAT, which shall be a mandatory requirement for all students seeking admission to medical or dental undergraduate program anywhere in Pakistan. Subsection (2) provides that no student shall be awarded a medical or dental degree in Pakistan who has not passed the MDCAT prior to obtaining the admission in a medical or dental college in Pakistan. MDCAT is the basic minimum mandatory requirement, across the board, for admission to all medical and dental colleges, both public or private, in Pakistan. This requirement has been made applicable to students who have enrolled in the medical and dental undergraduate program for the year 2021 and onwards.

5. Section 8(3) of the Act when read with sections 8(1) and 8(2) shows that while the private colleges enjoy the flexibility of setting their own admission criteria including an entrance test (detailed in their prospectus) any such criteria or entrance test are over and above the basic statutory minimum requirement of MDCAT, which is mandatory for admission to both the private or public medical and dental colleges. Proviso to section 18(3) lays down that public colleges are to assign 50% weightage to MDCAT, while no such weightage requirement is provided for the private colleges. However, for the enrollment in the year 2021 (as in this case) the weightage of 50% was retained by the private colleges and is not in dispute[2] or under challenge in this case.

6. Coming to the Regulations framed under section 8(2)(f) of the Act. Regulation 2 provides as follows:

2. Any student seeking admission in any medical or dental college shall mandatorily be required to have passed the MDCAT examination held by PMC. The passing marks for the MDCAT examination shall be 60%.

..

Regulation 13 reiterates the mandatory requirement of MDCAT for private colleges and is, therefore, in sync with section 18. Regulation 14, according to PMC, was a one-time arrangement for admissions to the year 2021. As per PMC, MDCAT was introduced through the Act in September, 2020 and students took the MDCAT in November, 2020, leaving little time for the students to apply to colleges independently, therefore, in order to meet the shortage of time, PMC extended the database facility of Centralized Automated Admission System to the students whereby the students could directly apply online through the PMC portal. Other than this administrative facility, Regulation 14 does not in any manner dispense with the requirement of MDCAT and therefore has no bearing on the issue of MDCAT, which stands regulated under section 18 of the Act. Even otherwise, Regulations, being subordinate to the Act, cannot dilute or dispense with the statutory requirement provided under the Act. Regulations 13 and 14, therefore, in no manner authorize the private colleges to dispense with the requirement of MDCAT or are inconsistent with section 18 of the Act. The criteria, as well as, other entrance tests devised by private colleges are in addition to MDCAT, which is the basic minimum statutory requirement for admissions to any medical college in Pakistan, be it private or public.

7. In light of the above, we see no reason to take a view different from the one taken by the High Court in the impugned judgment and in the judgment of the learned single judge. These petitions are, therefore, dismissed and leave refused.

MWA/M-78/SC Order accordingly.

2022 S C M R 277

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ

GOVERNMENT OF KHYBER PAKHTUNKHWA through District Collector/District Officer (R&E) (Now) Deputy Commissioner Mardan and others---Petitioners

Versus

MISAL KHAN and others---Respondents

Civil Review Petitions Nos.758 and 759 of 2019 and Civil Review Petitions Nos. 7 to 84 and 121 of 2020, decided on 14th October, 2021.

(For review of the order dated 14.11.2019, passed by this Court, in Civil Appeal No.169-P/2018 and other connected matters)

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894)---

----S. 28 [as amended by the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Land Acquisition (Amendment) Ordinance 2001]---Interest on enhanced compensation---Scope---Section 28 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 as it existed in the Province of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (KPK), authorized the Court to determine the amount of compensation to be paid to a land owner, which was over and above the enhanced sum of compensation awarded by the Court---Said determination of the amount included the interest on the enhanced sum of the compensation for the period when the possession of the land was taken till the payment of the enhanced sum of the compensation to the land owner---In the Province of KPK the Court was not bound by any fixed rate of interest and could grant interest at any just, proper and reasonable rate as it determined, which could also be the rate determined by the State Bank of Pakistan.

Atif Ali Khan, Additional A.G. Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and Malik Akhtar Awan, Additional A.G. Kbyber Pakhtunkhwa for Petitioners (in all cases).

Nemo for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 14th October, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---These review petitions have been filed against the consolidated order dated 14.11.2019 passed by this Court, whereby the civil appeals filed by the Government of KPK through District Collector, Mardan were dismissed. The solitary contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners in these petitions is that section 28 of Land Acquisition Act, 1894 ("Act") as amended by the North-West Frontier Province Land Acquisition (Amendment) Ordinance 2001, does not provide for payment of 6% interest on the enhanced compensation to the landowner from the date of taking possession of the land till the date of payment, yet the same has been granted by the Referee Court and the High Court and maintained by this Court in the order under review. It is further contended that the amended section 28 of the Act simply provides for the payment of the enhanced compensation to the landowners without any interest irrespective of the date of possession and the actual date of payment of compensation to the landowner.

2. We have considered the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners. Section 28 of the Act, as amended by the North-West Frontier Province Land Acquisition (Amendment) Ordinance, 2001 (XVII of 2001) provides as follows:-

28. lf the sum which, in the opinion of the Court, the Collector ought to have awarded as compensation is in excess of the sum which the Collector did award as compensation, the award of the Court may direct that the Collector shall deposit with the Court such amount as determined by it. (emphasis supplied)

Before we examine the meaning and scope of the aforementioned amended section 28, it is important to trace the genealogy of section 28 from its inception in the year 1894. History of section 28 of the Act, across Pakistan, shows that interest has been an integral part of the enhanced compensation which is paid to the landowner to cover for the period between the actual taking over of the possession of the land and the actual date of payment to the landowner. The said interest has originally been 6%, which was increased to 8% compound interest in 1969, as shown below:-

Land Acquisition Act, 1894

28. Collector may be directed to pay interest on excess compensation: If the sum which, in the opinion of the Court, the Collector ought to have awarded as compensation is in excess of the sum with the Collector did award as compensation; the award of the Court may direct that the Collector shall pay interest on such excess at the rate of six per centum per annum from the date on which he took possession of the land to the date of payment of such excess into Court.

Provincial Amendments

West Pakistan Amendment of 1969 (applicable to all the provinces including Punjab)

By Land Acquisition (W.P. Amendment) Act, III of 1969.

In Section 28, for the words "interest on such excess at the rate of six per centum" the words "compound interest on such excess at the rate of eight per centum" shall be substituted; and the following proviso be added at the end:

Provided that in all cases where the Court has directed that Collector shall pay interest on such excess at the rate of six per centum from the date on which possession was taken and the payment of compensation or a part thereof has not been made up to the commencement of the Land Acquisition (West Pakistan Amendment) Act, 1969, the rate of compound interest on such excess or balance shall be eight per centum.

Sindh Amendment of 1971 By the Land Acquisition (W.P. Amd.) (Repeal) Ordinance, VI of 1971

The Land Acquisition (West Pakistan Amendment) Act, 1969 was repealed and section 28 was substituted with the following:

Where a Court has directed payment of interest on any amount of compensation payable under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 (Act I of 1894), at a rate exceeding six per centum simple interest per annum, interest shall be able on such amount, notwithstanding any judgment, decree or order of the Court, at six per centum simple interest per annum.

Balochistan Amendment of 1985 By the Land Acquisition (Balochistan Amd.) Act, XIII of 1985

Section 34 was omitted and section 28 was substituted with the following:

28. Additional compensation: In addition to the compensation fixed on the basis of market-value as prevailing on the date of notification under section 4, an additional amount of fifteen per cent per annum of the compensation so fixed shall be paid from the date of the notification under Section 4 to the date of payment of compensation.

N.W.F.P. Amendment of 1983 By the Land Acquisition (N.-W.F.P. Amd.) Ordinance, V of 1983.

For Section 28, the following section shall be substituted:

28. Collector may be directed to pay interest on excess compensation: If the sum which, in the opinion of the Court, the Collector ought-to have awarded as compensation is in excess of the sum which the Collector did award as compensation, the award of the Court may direct that the Collector shall pay simple interest on such excess at the rate of six per centum per annum from the date on which he took possession of the land to the date of payment of such excess into Court.

N.W.F.P. Amendment of 2001 By the NWFP Land Acquisition (Amendment) Ordinance, 2001

In section 28, for the words "pay simple interest on such excess at the rate of six per centum per annum from the date on which he took possession of the land to the date of payment of such excess into Court", the words "deposit with the Court such amount as determined by it" were substituted.

Reading of the above provisions shows that interest is to be paid for the period from the date of the taking over of the possession of the land till the date of the payment of the enhanced compensation and this is the position prevalent all over Pakistan. In this background, we examine the amended section 28 which reads that once the "sum" of compensation granted by the collector is enhanced by the court, the court shall direct the Collector to deposit such "amount" (as opposed to the enhanced "sum") as determined by it. The amendment has retained the power of the Referee Court to determine the "amount" payable by the Collector to the landowner over and above the enhanced sum of compensation after considering the factum of possession and the date of actual payment. If it were just the enhanced sum of the award which had to be paid to the landowner, the phrase "amount as determined by it" would have no significance. Section 28 envisages that after the enhanced sum of the award has been worked out, the Court then embarks upon determining the "amount" to be paid to the landowner after considering the sum and the delay in payment. This determination has to be of the period that has passed by after the possession of the land of the landowner was taken over and of the interest over and above the enhanced sum of the compensation to be paid to the landowner who has been deprived of this amount of compensation since then. Our reading of the amended section 28 in KPK shows that the court is now free to award any rate of interest on the enhanced sum of compensation and is not bound by the limit of 6%. It does not mean that the court is not to grant any interest on the sum enhanced. The argument of the learned counsel for the petitioner that the enhanced sum of compensation by the court, even though paid to the landlord several years after taking over of the possession of the land, will still be the same sum and will carry no interest because the amendment takes away the term 6% interest, appears to us to be not only fanciful but also hopelessly misconceived. The distinction between the terms sum and amount to be determined is that while the "sum" is simply the enhanced compensation, the "amount" is the interest over and above the enhanced compensation to provide for the loss caused to the landowner due to the delay in making payment of the adequate compensation since the taking over of the possession of the land. This construction of section 28 (KPK amendment) blends with the prevalent law in other provinces in Pakistan and is true to the spirit of the original law and is also constitutionally compliant with Article 24 of the Constitution of Pakistan 1973.

3. Another dimension of the case which reinforces the concept of interest is under section 34 of the Act (which was not amended by the 2001 Ordinance in KPK), which deals with the payment of interest on the sum of compensation awarded by the Collector. Section 34 states as follows:

> 34. When the amount of such compensation is not paid or deposited on or before-taking possession of the land, the Collector shall pay the amount awarded with simple interest thereon at the rate of six per centum from the time of so taking possession until it shall have been so paid or deposited.

Under the said provision, the Collector is to pay simple interest at the rate of 6% on the amount of the compensation for the delay in the payment of compensation from the date of taking over of the possession of the land till the date of payment. This provision is still intact in KPK. So, while interest is provided for on the compensation awarded by the Collector, the same cannot be denied when the compensation is enhanced by the court. Sections 28 and 34 have to complement each other and, therefore, section 28 also provides for interest but unlike other provinces, KPK has no statutory limit on the interest to be granted by court.

4. For the above reasons we hold that section 28 of the Act, as it exists in the Province of KPK, authorizes the Court to determine the amount of compensation to be paid to a land owner, which is over and above the enhanced sum of compensation awarded by the Court. This determination of the amount includes the interest on the enhanced sum of the compensation for the period when the possession of the land was taken till the payment of the enhanced sum of the compensation to the land owner. Under the amended section 28, the court is no more bound by any fixed rate of interest and can grant interest at any just, proper and reasonable rate as it determines, which could also be the rate determined by the State Bank of Pakistan. Therefore, the award of 6% interest is well within the scope of the powers of the Referee Court under section 28 of the Act (as amended) and is in line with the interest to be granted under section 34 of the Act.

5. For the above reasons, we find no merit in these review petitions, which are therefore dismissed.

MWA/G-30/SC Petitions dismissed.

2022 S C M R 515

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Khan, JJ

SALMAN KHAN---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE---Respondent

Criminal P. No. 127-Q of 2021, decided on 13th January, 2022.

(Against the order dated 09.10.2021 passed by the High Court of Balochistan, Quetta in Criminal Bail Application No.633 of 2021)

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497(1)---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Penal Code (XLV of 1860), Ss. 302, 319, 322, 324 & 34---Qatl-bis-sabab, qatl-i-khata---Bail, grant of---Four members of the law enforcement agency, including the accused, allegedly signaled the car of the complainant to stop but he continued to drive on, whereupon the accused fired at the car, which ended up in causing injuries to the complainant and death of his cousin, who was also seated in the car---Accused and other members of the law enforcement agency were on their routine duty of maintaining law and order in the city, at the time of incident---Nothing was available on record to show that there was a background of any enmity between the parties, or the incident was the result of some provocation, or the accused fired at the car that had tainted glasses, with the intention to cause death of the complainant and his cousin---From the contents of the crime report, it appeared that an offence of qatl-bis-sabab punishable under S. 322, P.P.C. was made out other than qatl-i-khata punishable under S. 319, P.P.C.---However, qatl-i-amd under S. 302 did not appear to be made out in the present facts and circumstances of the case---Section 322, P.P.C. fell outside the prohibitory clause of S. 497(1), Cr.P.C. while S. 319, P.P.C. was bailable---Detention of the accused pending trial could only be justified if the case fell within the scope of any of the exceptions stated in the cases of Tariq Bashir v. State PLD 1995 SC 34, Muhammad Tanveer v. State PLD 2017 SC 733 and Zafar Iqbal v. Muhammad Anwar 2009 SCMR 1488---However, nothing was available on record that may attract any of the said exceptions and justify denial of post arrest bail to the accused---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and the accused was admitted to bail.

Manzoor v. State 1992 PCr.LJ 1374; Muhammad Nadeem v. State 1998 MLD 1537; Yousuf Khan v. State 2000 PCr.LJ 203; Aamir v. State 2006 PCr.LJ 1236; Tariq Bashir v. State PLD 1995 SC 34; Muhammad Tanveer v. State PLD 2017 SC 733 and Zafar Iqbal v. Muhammad Anwar 2009 SCMR 1488 ref.

Kamran Murtaza, Senior Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Qazi Mushtaq Ahmed, Additional P.G. Balochistan for the State.

Amir Muhammad Lehri, Advocate Supreme Court for the Complainant.

Date of hearing: 13th January, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 09.10.2021 passed by the High Court of Balochistan, whereby post-arrest bail has been denied to him in case FIR No.68/2021 registered at Police Station Sariab, for offences punishable under sections 302, 324 and 34, P.P.C.

2. The allegation in the crime report against the petitioner, a member of the Eagle Squad (a law enforcement agency), briefly stated is that four members of the Eagle Squad, including the petitioner, signaled the car of the complainant to stop but he continued to drive on, whereupon the petitioner fired at the car, which ended up in causing injuries to the complainant and death of his cousin, Faizan, who was also seated in the car.

3. We have heard the parties and examined the record. The petitioner and others members of the Eagle Squad were on their routine duty of maintaining law and order in the city, at the time of incident. There is nothing on record to show that there was a background of any enmity between the parties, or the incident was the result of some provocation, or the petitioner fired at the car that had tainted glasses, with the intention to cause death of the complainant and his cousin. From the contents of the crime report, it appears that an offence of qatl -bis-sabab punishable under section 322, P.P.C. is made out other than qatl-i-khata punishable under section 319, P.P.C. However, qatl-i-amd under section 302 does not appear to be made out in the present facts and circumstances of the case. Section 322, P.P.C. falls outside the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C.[1] while section 319, P.P.C. is bailable. That being so, the detention of the petitioner pending trial can only be justified if this case falls within the scope of any of the exceptions stated in the cases of Tariq Bashir[2], Muhammad Tanveer[3] and Zafar Iqbal.[4] There is, however, nothing on record that may attract any of the said exceptions and justify denial of post arrest bail to the petitioner.

4. The High Court has not exercised its discretion judiciously in denying the relief of post arrest bail to the petitioner. This petition is, therefore, converted into appeal and allowed: the impugned order is set aside and the bail application of the petitioner is accepted. The petitioner is admitted to bail subject to his furnishing the bail bond in the sum of Rs. 100,000/- with one surety each in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial Court.

5. Needless to mention that the observations made in this order are of tentative nature which shall not in any manner influence the trial court, and that this concession of bail may be cancelled, under section 497(5), Cr.P.C., if the petitioner misuses it in any manner, including causing delay in the expeditious conclusion of the trial.

MWA/S-3/SC Bail granted.

2022 S C M R 580

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Sajjad Ali Shah and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

COMMISSIONER OF INLAND REVENUE---Petitioner

Versus

Messrs MUGHAL BOARD INDUSTRY---Respondent

Civil Petition No. 1026-L of 2019, decided on 2nd November, 2021.

(Against the order dated 13.02.2019 of the Lahore High Court, Lahore passed in STR No. 8160 of 2019)

(a) Sales Tax Act (VII of 1990)---

----S. 34A---Illegally adjusted input tax---Default surcharge and penalties---Amnesty Scheme---Purpose and scope---Purpose of an amnesty scheme is to incentivize payment and collection of stuck-up revenue---Taxpayer who had made voluntary payment before the cut-off date under the amnesty scheme can avail the amnesty scheme.

Plain reading of SRO No. 606(I)/2012 dated 01.06.2012 ("amnesty notification") shows that if the default surcharge and penalties payable by a registered person are outstanding on account of illegally adjusted input tax, the registered person may avail exemption against default surcharge and penalties provided the whole of the principal amount of illegally adjusted input tax is deposited by 25th June, 2012 and any case or complaint filed by the registered person against the department is withdrawn by the said date.

The contention of the (tax) department that the amount of sales tax must be outstanding against the person on 01-06-2012 for the amnesty notification to apply, is not convincing. The spirit and object of the amnesty notification is to incentivize quick recovery of stuck up tax revenue, hence the notification offers that if only the principal amount of illegally adjusted sales tax is deposited by 25th June, 2012 the default surcharge and penalties stand exempted. The importance is of the cut-off date i.e. 25th June, 2012. There appears to be no bar in the notification and no possible disadvantage caused to the department, if the principal amount of sales tax is deposited prior to the date of the amnesty notification. In fact it is advantageous for the department as the stuck up tax revenue has been voluntarily deposited by the taxpayer, which is in line with the scheme of the amnesty being offered by the department. The other condition is the withdrawal of any case or complaint filed by the registered person against the department in this regard. Admittedly, the respondent (tax payer) deposited the principal amount of sales tax before 01-06-2012, and the respondent has not filed any case, etc against the department except the present case, hence the respondent successfully meets the conditions of the amnesty notification and is, therefore, entitled to the benefit of it.

The main purpose of the amnesty scheme is to incentivize payment and collection of stuck up tax revenue and, therefore, what matters is the payment by or before the cut-off date. The government must actually welcome any voluntary payment made by a taxpayer before the cut-off date. In any case, extension of the benefit of the amnesty notification to the tax payer ensures level playing field, creasing out any trace of discrimination amongst taxpayers who have already paid the principal amount of tax before the cut-off date.

There was no justification to deny the benefit of the amnesty notification to the respondent taxpayer. Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed.

(b) Sales tax---

----Amnesty scheme--- Notification--- Interpretation--- Amnesty notification being beneficial subordinate legislation must be viewed liberally in favour of the taxpayer in order to achieve the solitary fiscal objective of quick recovery of stuck up tax revenue.

Ms. Kausar Parveen, Advocate Supreme Court (video-link from Lahore) along with Naeem Hassan, Secy (Lit.) FBR for Petitioner.

Nemo for Respondent.

Date of hearing: 2nd November, 2021.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The sole question that has come up for our determination is whether the benefit of SRO 606(I)/2012 dated 01.06.2012 ("amnesty notification"), reproduced hereunder, can be extended to the respondent. The amnesty scheme under the notification grants exemption of the whole amount of default surcharge and penalties to a person against whom an amount of sales tax is outstanding on account of illegally adjusted input tax provided that two conditions are met: (i) the whole principal amount of illegally adjusted sales tax is paid by the 25th June, 2012 and (ii) any case, complaint or proceedings filed by the registered person before any court of law, etc. are withdrawn by the said date. Once the above conditions are complied with, all criminal proceedings lodged against the taxpayer by the department shall also abate.

GOVERNMENT OF PAKISTAN MINISTRY OF FINANCE, ECONOMIC AFFAIRS, STATISTICS AND REVENUE (REVENUE DIVISION)

Islamabad, the 1st June, 2012.

NOTIFICATION

(SALES TAX)

S.R.O. 606(I)/2012.---In exercise of the powers conferred by section 34A of the Sales Tax Act, 1990, the Federal Government, in supersession of its Notification No. S.R.O. 563(I)/2012, dated 25th May, 2012, is pleased to exempt the whole amount of default surcharge and penalties payable by a person against whom an amount of sales tax is outstanding on account of illegally adjusted input tax, subject to the following conditions:-

(i) whole of the principal amount of illegally adjusted sales tax is paid by the 25th June, 2012, and

(ii) any case, complaint or proceedings filed by the registered person before any court of law, Federal Tax Ombudsman or any other authority is withdrawn by the said date.

2. Any criminal proceedings lodged by the department shall abate from the date of complying with the above conditions by the registered person.

[C.No.4(2 1)ITP/2011-Pt.II]

Sd/-

(Shahid Hussain Asad)

Additional Secretary

2. In the present case, the respondent registered person deposited the whole of the principal amount of sales tax payable in lieu of illegally adjusted input tax much before 01.06.2012 (date of the amnesty notification). Proceedings were initiated against the respondent for the recovery of default surcharge and penalties by issuance of show cause notice dated 20.11.2012. The respondent sought the benefit of the amnesty notification, which came subsequent to the deposit of the principal amount of sales tax by the petitioner. However, the benefit of the amnesty notification was denied to the petitioner by the department on the ground that it was only applicable to registered persons against whom the principal amount of sale tax was outstanding on 01.06.2012. The High Court while hearing the sales tax reference filed by the respondent disagreed with the view of the department and allowed the benefit of the amnesty notification to the respondent. The order of the High Court has been assailed by the department before us.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioner-department and have carefully gone through the amnesty notification. Plain reading of the amnesty notification shows that if the default surcharge and penalties payable by a registered person are outstanding on account of illegally adjusted input tax, the registered person may avail exemption against default surcharge and penalties provided the whole of the principal amount of illegally adjusted input tax is deposited by 25th June, 2012 and any case or complaint filed by the registered person against the department is withdrawn by the said date. The contention of the department that the amount of sales tax must be outstanding against the person on 01.06.2012 for the amnesty notification to apply, is not convincing. The spirit and object of the amnesty notification is to incentivize quick recovery of stuck up tax revenue, hence the notification offers that if only the principal amount of illegally adjusted sales tax is deposited by 25th June, 2012 the default surcharge and penalties stand exempted. The importance is of the cut-off date i.e. 25th June, 2012. There appears to be no bar in the notification and no possible disadvantage caused to the department, if the principal amount of sales tax is deposited prior to the date of the amnesty notification. In fact it is advantageous for the department as the stuck up tax revenue has been voluntarily deposited by the taxpayer, which is in line with the scheme of the amnesty being offered by the department. The other condition is the withdrawal of any case or complaint filed by the registered person against the department in this regard. Admittedly, the respondent deposited the principal amount of sales tax before 01.06.2012, and the respondent has not filed any case, etc against the petitioner department except the instant case, hence the respondent successfully meets the conditions of the amnesty notification and is, therefore, entitled to the benefit of it.

4. Any other interpretation of the amnesty notification will lead to anomalous results. For example, if the respondent had not deposited the principal amount of sales tax before 01.06.2012, he would still be entitled to avail the amnesty notification if he were to deposit the principal amount of sales tax by 25th June, 2012 along with the withdrawal of any case or complaint filed by the registered person by the said date. In such a situation the taxpayer is encouraged to withhold the principal amount of sales tax, draw benefit on it till the last date and then deposit the same to avail the benefits of the amnesty notification. However, on the other hand, in the present case, the petitioner, in the absence of an amnesty notification, voluntarily deposited the whole of the principal amount of illegally adjusted input tax before the cut-off date i.e., 25th June, 2012, while the amnesty scheme was notified subsequently. Denial of relief to such a registered person would imply that the notification penalizes voluntary deposit of tax by a taxpayer and adds premium on an intentional withholding of the tax and delay in payment of tax. This cannot be the purpose of any taxing law or of any amnesty scheme under such law. The main purpose of the amnesty scheme is to incentivize payment and collection of stuck up tax revenue and, therefore, what matters is the payment by or before the cut-off date. The government must actually welcome any voluntary payment made by a taxpayer before the cut-off date. In any case, extension of the benefit of the amnesty notification to the petitioner ensures level playing field, creasing out any trace of discrimination amongst taxpayers who have already paid the principal amount of tax before the cut-off date. Additionally, amnesty notification being beneficial subordinate legislation must be viewed liberally in favour of the taxpayer in order to achieve the solitary fiscal objective of quick recovery of stuck up tax revenue.

5. We, for the above reasons see no justification to deny the benefit of the amnesty notification to the respondent taxpayer. This petition, therefore, fails and is accordingly dismissed.

MWA/C-2/SC Petition dismissed.

2022 S C M R 1082

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, C.J., Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ

COMMISSIONER OF INLAND REVENUE,LAHORE---Petitioner

Versus

Messrs SARGODHA SPINNING MILLS (PVT.) LTD. FAISALABAD and others---Respondents

Civil Petition No.757-L of 2021, decided on 3rd February, 2022.

(Against the judgment dated 01.02.2021 of the Lahore High Court, Lahore passed in S.T.R. No. 17 of 2012)

Sales Tax Act (VII of 1990)---

----Ss. 46 & 47---Sales tax Reference to the High Court---Findings of facts determined by the Tribunal/Appellate Tribunal---Interference by the High Court---Tax Tribunal is the final fact finding body---Only "question of law" is to be examined by the (High) Court in a Sales tax Reference.

Tribunal is the final forum for determination of facts in tax matters. The Appellate Tribunal is therefore the final fact-finding body and its findings of facts are conclusive; the High Court cannot disturb them unless it is shown that there was no evidence on which the Appellate Tribunal could arrive at its conclusion and record such findings, or the same are perverse or based on surmises and conjectures. Further, the High Court cannot go behind any finding of fact recorded by the Appellate Tribunal even on such grounds, unless it has been expressly challenged by raising a 'question of law' relating thereto in the application. Without raising a 'question of law' in the terms, like, 'whether there was evidence to support the finding of the Appellate Tribunal on such and such fact', the High Court is bound by the finding of fact recorded by the Tribunal. Thus, in a case, where no question of law is raised to challenge the finding of fact recorded by the Appellate Tribunal as being not supported by any evidence or being perverse, the finding recorded by the Tribunal attains finality.

Messrs Shah Nawaz v. Commissioner of I.T. 1969 SCMR 123; Commissioner of I.T. v. Messrs Smith, Kline and French 1991 SCMR 2374; Commissioner of I.T. v. Messrs Farrokh Chemical 1992 SCMR 523; Ibrahim Ishaq v. Commissioner of I.T. 1993 SCMR 287; Messrs Irum Ghee Mills v. I.T. A.T. 2000 SCMR 1871; Commissioner of I.T. v. Muhammad Ismail & Co. 1986 SCMR 968 and Oriental investment Co. v. Commissioner of I.T. 1972 PTD 181 ref.

The "question of law" must arise from the decision of the Appellate Tribunal and in the absence thereof, any Reference before the High Court is not maintainable.

Messrs Mohammad Akbar v. I.T.A.T. 1972 SCMR 409; Messrs F.M.Y. Industries v. Deputy Commissioner I. T. 2014 SCMR 907; Messrs PTV Corporation Ltd. v. Commissioner Inland Revenue 2017 SCMR 1136 and Messrs Squibb Pakistan v. Commissioner of I.T. 2017 SCMR 1006 ref.

Sarfraz Ahmed Cheema, Advocate Supreme Court and Naeem Hassan, Secretary (Lit.) FBR for Petitioner.

Anis-ur-Rehman, Legal Advisor for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 3rd February, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question of law raised before the High Court in the Sales Tax Reference by the petitioner Department was whether the respondent assesse could claim refund on the goods in respect of which sales tax had not been deposited in the government treasury by the respective supplier, hence violating sections 2(14), 7, 8, 8A, 10, 22, 26 and 36 of the Sales Tax Act, 1990 ("Act") .

2. As a matter of background, during the process of refund, a claim of Rs.158,523/- by the registered person (respondent) for tax period 12/2005 was deferred by the department against the invoices issued by the black-listed units. In this regard, the petitioner department issued show cause notices to the registered persons charging them with the violation of various provisions of the Act and the Sales Tax Refund Rules, 2006 ("Rules"). Order in Original dated 18.5.2007 was passed against the petitioner. The appeal before the Collectorate of Customs, Sales Tax and Federal Excise (Appeals) was also dismissed vide order dated 17.12.2007. However, on appeal before the Appellate Tribunal, Inland Revenue, Lahore, the same was allowed vide order dated 29.9.2011. The Tribunal determined the factual controversy in the case by holding that the department failed to refer or produce any document or evidence to establish that the invoices issued by the suppliers were fake or forged and that the same could not have been issued by the suppliers to the respondent assesse. With this factual determination, the appeal of the respondent assesse was allowed against the department. The department filed a sales tax reference before the High Court. The only question of law raised was that could the Tribunal allow refund based on invoices where sales tax was not deposited in the government treasury by the respective supplier. No question of law specifically regarding gross misreading of evidence by the Tribunal was raised as a question of law.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the department and have examined the record of the case. It is now well established that the Tribunal is the final forum for determination of facts in tax matters. The Appellate Tribunal is therefore the final fact-finding body and its findings of facts are conclusive; the High Court cannot disturb them unless it is shown that there was no evidence on which the Appellate Tribunal could arrive at its conclusion and record such findings, or the same are perverse or based on surmises and conjectures.[1] Further, the High Court cannot go behind any finding of fact recorded by the Appellate Tribunal even on such grounds, unless it has been expressly challenged by raising a 'question of law' relating thereto in the application. Without raising a 'question of law' in the terms, like, 'whether there was evidence to support the finding of the Appellate Tribunal on such and such fact', the High Court is bound by the finding of fact recorded by the Tribunal. Thus in a case, where no question of law is raised to challenge the finding of fact recorded by the Appellate Tribunal as being not supported by any evidence or being perverse, the finding recorded by the Tribunal attains finality.[2] It has also been established and clearly borne out from section 47(1) of the Act that the "question of law" must arise from the decision of the Appellate Tribunal and in the absence thereof, any such reference is not maintainable.[3]

4. In the present case, the High Court has clearly noted in the impugned order that the Tribunal has settled the factual controversy and the department has failed to produce or establish that the tax receipts from the suppliers were illegal or no tax was deposited against them by the suppliers in the Government Treasury. In this background the High Court held that no "question of law" arose from the order of the Tribunal and declined to exercise advisory jurisdiction.

5. For the above reasons, we see no reason to take a view different from the one taken by the High Court. Leave is, therefore, declined and this petition is dismissed.

MWA/C-10/SC Petition dismissed.

2022 S C M R 1104

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX (LEGAL)---Petitioner

Versus

Messrs ASKARI BANK LIMITED, RAWALPINDI and others---Respondents

Civil Petitions Nos.2597 to 2600 of 2020, decided on 1st February, 2022.

(Against the judgment dated 16.07.2020 of the Islamabad High Court, Islamabad passed in I.T.Rs. Nos.24 to 27 of 2009)

Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----S. 23---Eligible depreciable asset---Initial allowance, deduction of---Scope---Taxpayer can claim deduction of initial allowance for an eligible depreciable asset (Such as a building) being put to use by the taxpayer for the first time in a tax year, irrespective of the fact that the said building had been in use in the past in the hands of other taxpayers.

Section 23 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 states that "A person who places an eligible depreciable asset into service in Pakistan for the first time in a tax year." It means that the term "first time in a tax year" relates to the first time use of the building by the taxpayer and has no concern with the history of usage of the building prior to it falling in the hands of the taxpayer. The act of placing the eligible depreciable asset into service or use, for the first time in a tax year, is of the taxpayer and it is inconsequential if the same asset/building was earlier put into service or use while it was in the hands of an earlier owner or proprietor. A taxpayer becomes entitled to deduction of initial allowance if he, through his own act, has placed an eligible depreciable asset into service for the first time in a tax year.

The above-mentioned view is fortified from the reading of subsection (5) of section 23 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 which defines "eligible depreciable asset" and specifically excludes a plant or machinery which has been used previously in Pakistan from the definition of "eligible depreciable asset". A previously used building has not been excluded and is therefore an eligible depreciable asset and if put to use by the taxpayer for the first time in the tax year, irrespective of its previous use, the taxpayer is entitled to deduction of initial allowance.

Manzoor Hussain, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Muhammad Idrees, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 1st February, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The controversy in this case revolves around the meaning and scope of section 23 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("ITO"). Briefly, the admitted facts between the parties give rise to the question: whether the respondent taxpayer can claim deduction of initial allowance for an eligible depreciable asset (building in this case) being put to use by the taxpayer for the first time in a tax year, irrespective of the fact that the said building had been in use in the past in the hands of other taxpayers.

2. It has been argued before us that the phrase "first time in a tax year" in section 23 means that the building must have been put to use for the first time in its life. And in the present case as the building has already been put to use earlier by its previous owner or proprietor, the use of the building by the respondent taxpayer is not for the first time, hence the respondent taxpayer is not entitled to deduct initial allowance regarding the said asset. Learned counsel for the respondent taxpayer has supported the judgment of the High Court.

3. The relevant portion of section 23 of ITO is reproduced hereunder for convenience:-

> 23. Initial allowance.---(1) A person who places an eligible depreciable asset into service in Pakistan for the first time in a tax year shall be allowed a deduction (hereinafter referred to as an "initial allowance") computed in accordance with subsection (2), provided the asset is used by the person for the purposes of his business for the first time or the tax year in which commercial production is commenced, whichever is later.

(2) ...

(3) ...

(4) ...

(5) In this section, "eligible depreciable asset" means a depreciable asset other than -

(a) any road transport vehicle unless the vehicle is plying for hire;

(b) any furniture, including fittings;

(c) any plant or machinery that has been used previously in Pakistan; or

(d)

The above provision states that "A person who places an eligible depreciable asset into service in Pakistan for the first time in a tax year." It means that the term "first time in a tax year" relates to the first time use of the building by the taxpayer and has no concern with the history of usage of the building prior to it falling in the hands of the taxpayer. The act of placing the eligible depreciable asset into service or use, for the first time in a tax year, is of the taxpayer and it is inconsequential if the same asset/building was earlier put into service or use while it was in the hands of an earlier owner or proprietor. A taxpayer becomes entitled to deduction of initial allowance if he, through his own act, has placed an eligible depreciable asset into service for the first time in a tax year.

4. This view is fortified from the reading of subsection (5) of section 23 which defines "eligible depreciable asset" and specifically excludes a plant or machinery which has been used previously in Pakistan from the definition of "eligible depreciable asset". A previously used building has not been excluded and is therefore an eligible depreciable asset and if put to use by the taxpayer for the first time in the tax year, irrespective of its previous use, the taxpayer is entitled to deduction of initial allowance.

5. In this case, admittedly, the asset (building) has been put into service/use by the respondent taxpayer for the first time in the tax year and, therefore, the respondent taxpayer is entitled to the deduction of the initial allowance in terms of section 23 of the ITO.

6. We, therefore, see no reason to interfere in the well reasoned judgment of the Islamabad High Court dated 19.5.2020. Leave is, therefore, declined and these petitions are dismissed.

MWA/C-9/SC Petitions dismissed.

2022 S C M R 1124

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM---Petitioner

Versus

FEDERATION OF PAKISTAN through DG NAB, Sindh---Respondent

Civil Petition No. 4599 of 2017, decided on 20th January, 2022.

(Against the judgment dated 23.11.2017 of the High Court of Sindh, Karachi passed in Constitution Petition No.D-881 of 2017)

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 498---National Accountability Ordinance (XVIII of 1999), S. 9(a)---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Ad-interim pre-arrest bail, confirmation of---Housing Society---Fraudulent transfer of plots of original allottees to fake persons and illegal sale of plots to builders---Record revealed that the accused was neither an original member of the Housing Society nor a subsequent fake member of the Society as no plot was transferred by the Society to him---Accused had no active role to play in the Managing Committee of the Society---Name of the accused appeared as a nominee of a co-accused, who was the actual transferee of the plots from the Society, and the accused held 25 plots as a sub-lessee of the co-accused---However, on finding out about the illegalities in the transfer of these plots, the accused surrendered the said 25 plots to the Society through a duly registered deed of surrender---Said plots were not transferred to the building project, hence the allegation in the Reference that the plots were illegally procured by the accused and sold for gain to the project was not supported by the record---No material was available on the record, at present stage, to connect the accused with the violations allegedly committed by the Society or with the alleged illegally elected Managing Committee---Petition for leave to appeal was converted into appeal and allowed, and ad-interim pre-arrest bail granted to the accused was confirmed.

(b) National Accountability Ordinance (XVIII of 1999)---

----Ss. 18(g), 18(e), 24(a) & 24(d)---National Accountability Bureau Reference---Arrest of accused---Pre-requisites---Permission of the Chairman National Accountability Bureau (NAB) or any officer of NAB duly authorized by the Chairman NAB must be obtained by the investigating officer before the accused can be arrested, and there must be reasonable grounds and substance on the basis of which permission to arrest is to be granted.

Under section 24(a) of the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ('the Ordinance'), the Chairman National Accountability Bureau (NAB) has the power, at any stage, of the inquiry or investigation under the Ordinance, to direct that the accused be arrested, while under section 24(d) of the Ordinance the officer making the arrest is under an obligation to inform the accused of the grounds and substance on the basis of which he is arrested. The proviso to section 18(e) of Ordinance mandates that no person shall be arrested without the permission of the Chairman NAB or any officer of NAB duly authorized by him. Collective reading of these provisions show that the permission of the Chairman NAB or any officer of NAB duly authorized by the Chairman NAB must be obtained by the investigating officer before the accused can be arrested, and there must be reasonable grounds and substance on the basis of which permission to arrest is to be granted. Mere filing of the Reference by the Chairman NAB or an officer of the NAB duly authorized by him, under section 18(g) of the Ordinance, against the accused does not carry an implied permission to arrest the accused. Arrest and filing of the Reference are two independent actions under the Ordinance. The permission to arrest must be express and based on reasonable grounds and substance.

Munir A. Malik, Senior Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner along with Petitioner.

Nasir Mehmood Mughal, Special Prosecutor for NAB.

Date of hearing: 20th January, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against order dated 23.11.2017 passed by the High Court of Sindh on his constitutional petition under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution"), whereby pre- arrest bail has been denied to him in NAB Reference No.6/2017 ("Reference").

2. The case set out in the Reference is that there were various complaints filed against the Management Committee of the Pak Punjab Cooperative Housing Society ("Society") with the allegations that they fraudulently transferred the plots of the original allottees to fake persons and also illegally sold plots to some builders. According to the Reference, the investigation in the matter revealed that the Society had 358 plots, which were allotted to the original/genuine members of the Society. However, with the connivance of Abrar Ahmed and Afzal Khan (co-accused), bogus share certificates were issued to enroll fake members, which were employees of the Sindh Workers Welfare Board ("SWWB"). Thereafter, a fraudulent Managing Committee was illegally elected under the supervision of Mirza Munir Baig and Mirza Afzal Baig, the other co- accused. The illegally elected Managing Committee approved a new layout plan in which all previous categories of residential plots were cancelled and converted into one category of plots measuring 120 sq. yards each in order to be sold further through fake allotment process. As a result, 541 plots in the name of employees of SWWB were allotted. The investigation further revealed that 100 such plots of the Society were transferred in the name of Messrs Falak Naz Golden Pebbles, 336 plots were transferred to a joint venture run and managed by Syed Amir Ali Shah, Muhammad Iqbal and Muhammad Arif (co-accused) who further transferred these plots for a building project namely, Premier Regency Villas ("Project").

3. The specific allegation against the petitioner in the Reference is that he was acting as a nominee of Muhammad Iqbal, the co-accused, and was holding 25 such plots as a sub-lessee and the said plots were subsequently transferred to the Project, hence he is alleged to be liable under section 9(a) of the National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 ("Ordinance").

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have gone through the record of the case. The record reveals that petitioner (accused No.19 in the Reference) was neither an original member of the Society nor a subsequent fake member of the Society as no plot was transferred by the Society to him. The name of the petitioner appears as a nominee of Muhammad Iqbal, who was the actual transferee of the plots from the Society, and the petitioner held 25 plots as a sub-lessee of Muhammed Iqbal. However, on finding out about the illegalities in the transfer of these plots, the petitioner surrendered the said 25 plots to the Society through a duly registered deed of surrender dated 12.3.2019. It is also observed that the said plots were not transferred to the Project, hence the allegation in the Reference that the plots were illegally procured by the petitioner and sold for gain to the Project is not supported by the record. Learned Prosecutor when confronted with this position of the case against the petitioner was unable to refer to any material available on record, at this stage, connecting the petitioner with the scam that allegedly took place in the Society. He also could not controvert that the said 25 plots were duly surrendered, and not transferred to the Project, by the petitioner.

5. In absence of such incriminating material, it needs examination, whether the NAB can lawfully arrest the petitioner. Under section 24(a) of the Ordinance, the Chairman NAB has the power, at any stage, of the inquiry or investigation under the Ordinance, to direct that the accused be arrested, while under section 24(d) of the Ordinance the officer making the arrest is under an obligation to inform the accused of the grounds and substance on the basis of which he is arrested. The proviso to section 18(e) of Ordinance mandates that no person shall be arrested without the permission of the Chairman NAB or any officer of NAB duly authorized by him. Collective reading of these provisions show that the permission of the Chairman NAB or any officer of NAB duly authorized by the Chairman NAB must be obtained by the investigating officer before the accused can be arrested, and there must be reasonable grounds and substance on the basis of which permission to arrest is to be granted. Mere filing of the Reference by the Chairman NAB or an officer of the NAB duly authorized by him, under section 18(g) of the Ordinance, against the accused does not carry an implied permission to arrest the accused. Arrest and filing of the Reference are two independent actions under the Ordinance. The permission to arrest must be express and based on reasonable grounds and substance. In this case, the NAB Prosecutor could not place before us any such permission to arrest the petitioner given by the Chairman NAB or any officer of NAB duly authorized by the Chairman NAB.

6. In this case, examination of the record available before us prima facie shows that the petitioner has no nexus with the Society as he is not a member of the Society nor has an active role to play in the Managing Committee of the Society. According to the record, no plot was transferred to the petitioner from the Society and only 25 plots were sub leased to him by Muhammad Iqbal, the co-accused, which were surrendered by him through the registered deed dated 12.3.2019, and no gain was thus made by the petitioner in the said transaction. There is also no material on the record, at this stage, connecting the petitioner with the violations allegedly committed by the Society or with the alleged illegally elected Managing Committee. Thus, there are no reasonable grounds and substance to believe that the petitioner is involved in the commission of the offence alleged.

7. We, therefore, convert this petition into appeal and allow the same. Consequently, the constitution petition of the petitioner is accepted and the ad-interim bail granted to the petitioner vide order dated 29.11.2017 is confirmed, subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rupees one million with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the learned Trial Court.

8. Foregoing are the reasons for our short order dated 20.01.2022, which is reproduced hereunder for sake of convenience and completion of record:

> For reasons to be recorded later, this petition is converted into appeal and allowed. The ad interim pre-arrest bail granted to the petitioner is confirmed subject to his furnishing bail bonds in the sum of Rupees One million with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the learned Trial Court.

MWA/M-31/SC Bail confirmed.

2022 S C M R 1135

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Muhammad Ali Mazhar, JJ

COMMISSIONER INLAND REVENUE, ZONE-IV, LAHORE---Petitioner

Versus

Messrs PANTHER SPORTS AND RUBBER INDUSTRIES (PVT.) LTD. and others---Respondents

Civil Petition No. 1691-L of 2018, decided on 21st September, 2021.

(Against the orders of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 05.03.2018 passed in W.P. No. 133023 of 2018)

Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----Ss. 161(1A), 165(2B) & 174(3)---Income Tax Rules, 2002, Rr. 29(4) & 44(4)---Books of account, documents and records to be maintained for a period of six years---Scope of section 174(3) of the Income Tax Ordinance 2001---Taxpayer is obliged to maintain the record under section 174(3) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 for a period of six years and the taxpayer cannot be compelled to produce the record for a tax year beyond the period of six years as stipulated in section 174(3) of the Ordinance---Supreme Court approved the view expressed by the Lahore High Court in the case reported as Maple Leaf Cement Factory Ltd v. Federal Board of Revenue 2016 PTD 2074.

Section 174 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('the Ordinance') creates an obligation on the taxpayer to maintain such accounts, documents and records as prescribed for a period of six years, except in case of pending proceedings, where the obligation of a taxpayer to maintain the record is till the final decision of the proceedings, while the same provision protects the taxpayer from being asked to produce the record beyond the said period. The tax department is under an obligation to be vigilant and efficient enough so as to proceed against a taxpayer within the statutory timeframe provided under section 174(3) of the Ordinance.

In the context of the present case even though there is no specific limitation for issuance of notices under section 161(1A) or 165(2B) of the Ordinance or Rule 44(4) of the Income Tax Rules, 2002 ('the Rules') but these provisions cannot be actualized or given effect to unless the record, available with the taxpayer, is examined and verified by the tax authorities. Since the said provisions of law require taxpayer to maintain record for a period of six years, hence notices beyond a period of six years cannot be given effect to. As the taxpayer is under no legal obligation to maintain tax records after the said statutory period, any such notices demanding the taxpayer to furnish such information are inconsistent with the clear provisions of the Ordinance and hence unlawful.

Even though notices under sections 161(1A), 165(2B) of the Ordinance and Rule 44(4) of the Rules have no prescribed period of limitation, the statutory timeframe kicks in the minute the time period under section 174(3) is exhausted rendering such notices ineffective and unenforceable, attracting no penal consequences for the taxpayer. It is however to be noted that the department is only restricted where it seeks record beyond the statutory period under section 174(3) from the taxpayer but is otherwise free to proceed if the action or proceedings under the Ordinance are based on the record already in possession of the department.

Supreme Court approved the view expressed in the case reported as Maple Leaf Cement Factory Ltd v. Federal Board of Revenue 2016 PTD 2074, whereas the view taken in the case reported as Habib Bank Limited v. Federation of Pakistan 2013 PTD 1659 was disapproved.

Habib Bank Limited v Federation of Pakistan 2013 PTD 1659 disapproved.

Maple Leaf Cement Factory Ltd. v. Federal Board of Revenue 2016 PTD 2074 approved.

Ch. Muhammad Zafar Iqbal, Advocate Supreme Court (video-link - Lahore) along with Naeem Hassan, Secy (Lit.) FBR for Petitioner.

Nemo for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 21st September, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against order dated 05.03.2018 of the High Court whereby the notices[1] issued to the respondent taxpayer in the years 2017 regarding tax years 2007 and 2009, seeking statements under section 165 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("Ordinance"), reconciliation statements under Rule 44(4) of the Income Tax Rules, 2002 ("Rules") and recovery under section 161(1A) of the Ordinance were set aside on the ground that a taxpayer cannot be asked to furnish record beyond the period of six years after the end of the tax year to which it relates, as provided under section 174(3) of the Ordinance.

2. The respondent challenged the said notices through a constitutional petition before the Lahore High Court. Relying on its earlier decision in Maple Leaf[2], the High Court allowed the petition and set aside the notices. The principle settled in Maple Leaf is that as the taxpayer is under no obligation to maintain records after a period of six years under section 174(3) of the Ordinance, therefore, any notice requiring a taxpayer to furnish records beyond the statutory period of six years is not lawful and no penal action could be taken against the taxpayer under such a notice.

3. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioner at length and perused the record. The respondent taxpayer was under an obligation to deduct tax from an amount to be paid to a recipient at the time and in the manner specified in section 158 of the Ordinance. Section 165 read with Rule 44(4) of the Rules requires a taxpayer, who deducts tax as aforesaid, to furnish a Statement/Reconciliation Statement giving details of the amount of tax deducted and collected from a recipient. The said Statement and Reconciliation Statement has to be prepared on the basis of the tax records maintained by the taxpayer under the law.[3] A taxpayer, under the law, is to retain tax records under section 174(3) of the Ordinance read with Rule 29(4) of the Rules for a period of six years after the end of the tax year to which they relate.

4. Section 174(1) binds a taxpayer to maintain such accounts, documents and records as may be prescribed. Rule 29(1) of the Rules provides a list of such records. Subsection (3) of section 174 makes the duty of the taxpayer to maintain the records for a period of six years. Rule 29(4) reiterates the same timeline. Time based obligation of maintaining records contemplated under the Ordinance and the Rules is a legislative mandate that promotes efficient and smart fiscal administration and governance. It is underlined that the Ordinance is largely structured around time-framed provisions in order to make the taxing mechanism certain and transparent and the tax administration and tax governance smarter and efficient. Reference, with advantage, can be conveniently made to sections 120 (assessment), 122 (amendment of assessment) and 221 (rectification of mistakes) of the Ordinance in this regard.

5. Reading of the Ordinance and the Rules envisages that any proceedings against a taxpayer that is based on the tax records maintained by the taxpayer should be initiated within a fixed timeframe. Section 174 creates an obligation on the taxpayer to maintain such accounts, documents and records as prescribed for a period of six years, except in case of pending proceedings, where the obligation of a taxpayer to maintain the record is till the final decision of the proceedings (exception is not attracted in the present case), while the same provision protects the taxpayer from being asked to produce the record beyond the said period. As notices under sections 161, 165 and Rule 44(4) can only be replied to on the basis of the record maintained by the taxpayer, joint reading of sections 161, 165 and Rule 44(4) and section 174(3) and Rule 29 establishes that the tax department is under an obligation to be vigilant and efficient enough so as to proceed against a taxpayer within the statutory timeframe provided under section 174(3). Even though there is no specific limitation for issuance of notices under section 161(1A) or 165(2B) or Rule 44(4) but these provisions cannot be actualized or given effect to unless the record, available with the taxpayer, is examined and verified by the tax authorities. Since the aforesaid provisions of law require taxpayer to maintain record for a period of six years, hence notices beyond a period of six years cannot be given effect to. As the taxpayer is under no legal obligation to maintain tax records after the said statutory period, any such notices demanding the taxpayer to furnish such information are inconsistent with the clear provisions of the Ordinance and hence unlawful. Harmonized reading of the statute requires that section 174(3) and sections 161, 165 and Rule 44(4) must complement each other so as to promote the purposes of the Ordinance and equally protect and safeguard the rights of both the tax manager and the taxpayer as envisaged under the Ordinance. Therefore, even though notices under sections 161(1A), 165(2B) and Rule 44(4) have no prescribed period of limitation, the statutory timeframe kicks in the minute the time period under section 174(3) is exhausted rendering such notices ineffective and unenforceable, attracting no penal consequences for the taxpayer. It is clarified that the department is only restricted where it seeks record beyond the statutory period under section 174(3) from the taxpayer but is otherwise free to proceed if the action or proceedings under the Ordinance are based on the record already in possession of the department.

6. We, therefore, endorse the view expressed in Maple Leaf[4] by the Lahore High Court, where a similar question had come up before the court. We have also examined Habib Bank[5] which holds that the department can override the timeframe under section 174(3) by justifying the delay in initiating the matter against the taxpayer. Section 174(3) of the Ordinance read with Rule 29(4) of the Rules is clear and leaves no room for any such departmental justification, which in any case cannot deprive the taxpayer of the statutory protection under section 174(3) of the Ordinance. We, therefore, do not support the view expressed in Habib Bank as we have not been able to find any statutory support for the conclusion arrived at in the said case.

7. It is also useful to draw attention to section 214A of the Ordinance which specifically deals with "condonation of time limit". Perusal of the said provision shows that it applies where there is a time limit provided in the provision, which is not so in the case of sections 161 and 165 of the Ordinance. Further section 214A deals with "any act or thing to be done" within a timeframe. Section 174(3) on the other hand does not require any act or thing to be done in a particular timeframe but quite on the contrary provides that after a lapse of a period of six years, the taxpayer shall not be obligated to maintain its tax records. Therefore, section 214A has no application to the present case and cannot be invoked to deprive the taxpayer of the statutory protection under section 174(3) of the Ordinance.

8. For the above reasons we hold that a taxpayer is obliged to maintain the record under section 174(3) of the Ordinance for a period of six years and the taxpayer cannot be compelled to produce the record for a tax year beyond the period of six years as stipulated in section 174(3) of the Ordinance. Hence notices issued under section 165(2B) or 161(1A) of the Ordinance being ineffective and unenforceable are set aside.

9. For the foregoing reasons, we take no exception to the impugned order. Leave is, therefore, declined and this petition is dismissed.

MWA/C-14/SC Petition dismissed.

2022 S C M R 1411

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

Raja ZAHOOR AHMED and others---Petitioners

Versus

CAPITAL DEVELOPMENT AUTHORITY through Chairman and others---Respondents

Civil Petitions Nos.3347 to 3351, 4229 and 4263 of 2021, decided on 20th May, 2022.

(Against the consolidated judgment of Islamabad High Court, Islamabad dated 16.02.2021, passed in W.Ps. Nos.4126 of 2015 and connected cases)

(a) Capital Development Authority Ordinance (XXIII of 1960)---

----Ss. 11, 12 & 13---Status of properties changed from residential to commercial---Legality---Violation of the Master Plan---Capital Development Authority ("CDA") has no discretionary power to give effect to any scheme or accord any permission for change of status or use of property in breach of the Master Plan---Board of Directors ("Board") in which vests the management of the CDA is not competent to allow any change in the character of any property in violation of the Master Plan---Master Plan is protected under the Capital Development Authority Ordinance, 1960 ('the Ordinance') and the Ordinance obliges the CDA to regulate the use of land pursuant to the Master Plan---Prohibition contained against the use of land for a purpose other than the one specified in the Master Plan is absolute.

The Board of Directors ("Board") of the Capital Development Authority ("CDA") took the decision dated 13-02-1995 ('earlier decision') to commercialize the residential properties of the petitioners. The Board soon realized that the decision dated 13-02-1995 would be in violation of the Master Plan of the city. Taking note of the fact that the decision dated 13-02-1995 had not till then been implemented as conversion rate could not be finalized, the Board through a fresh decision dated 05-10-1995 rescinded its earlier decision. Subsequently, the CDA issued notices to the petitioners for non-conforming use of their properties.

The properties owned by the petitioners did not fall within a commercial area as set out in the Master Plan or the Scheme prepared thereunder. They sought a change in the status of their properties from residential to commercial. However, such a change was not permissible under the Capital Development Authority Ordinance, 1960 ('the Ordinance') without a change in the Master Plan which could only be done with the approval of the Federal Government. Any scheme prepared relating to land use, zoning and land reservation, among other things, was required to be in pursuance of the Master Plan. The CDA had no discretionary power to give effect to any scheme or accord any permission for change of status or use of property in breach of the Master Plan. The Master Plan was protected under the Ordinance and the Ordinance obliges the CDA to regulate the use of land pursuant to the Master Plan. The prohibition contained against the use of land for a purpose other than the one specified in the Master Plan was absolute. There was, therefore, no escape from the conclusion that the earlier decision of the Board was taken without lawful authority. The Board itself realized that its earlier decision would be in violation of the Master Plan and, thus, rightly rescinded it through a fresh decision.

No vested rights could be created in favour of the petitioners under the earlier decision. The Board in which vests the management of the CDA was not competent to allow any change in the character of the properties of the petitioners in violation of the Master Plan. The Master Plan could only be amended with the approval of the Federal Government. The earlier decision was in breach of provisions of the Ordinance and in conflict with the Master Plan. It was taken without lawful authority and was rightly undone by the Board. Moreover, the CDA did not implement its earlier decision. It did not approve any change in the status of the properties owned by the petitioners during the period this decision remained in the field. The petitioners could not, in the given circumstances, claim to have taken any decisive steps in pursuance of the earlier decision. The doctrine of locus poenitentiae was not, therefore, attracted to their case.

Supreme Court directed that the CDA shall ensure to factor in adaptation, climate resiliency and sustainability into their plans, policies and decisions in order to protect the constitutional rights to life, dignity and property of the residents of the Capital City, in particular, and people of the country, in general. Petitions for leave to appeal were dismissed, and leave was refused.

(b) Environmental law---

----Urban planning and climate change---Adaptation, climate resiliency and sustainability---Urban development authorities---Factors to be considered by urban development authorities in Pakistan while making urban development plans stated.

The importance of regulating land use for orderly urban development cannot be understated. Planning and regulating building construction activity in urban environments is emphasized around the world in the interest of organized growth of cities. It is an exercise based on scientific research and experience which recommends in a comprehensive manner from social, economic, environmental, infrastructure capacity, aesthetic, and other relevant aspects, the best present and future uses of geographically specified land areas called zones. Zoning is a public welfare management tool employed in urban planning to serve the city's interests. Public welfare today would naturally encompass the pressing issues of the time i.e., climate change; environmental degradation; food and health safety; air pollution; water pollution; noise pollution; soil erosion; natural disasters; and desertification and flooding having an appreciable impact on public health, food safety, natural resource conservation, environmental protection, social equity, social choice, etc. Any initiative to revise land use regulations must be based on the said considerations in order to ensure that urban development standards stay relevant to current issues of the community.

Jerold S. Kayden, 'National Land-Use Planning in America: Something Whose Time Has Never Come' (2000) 3 WASH. U. J. L. & POL'Y 445, 446-447; Agins v. City of Tiburon 447 U.S. 255, 262 (1980); Keith H. Hirokawa, 'Making Sense of a "Misunderstanding of the Planning Process" (2012) 44 Urb. Law. 295 and D. G. Khan Cement Company Limited v. Government of Punjab 2021 SCMR 834 ref.

The necessity of planned urban development is accentuated in the vulnerable age of climate change. Climate change poses a series of interrelated challenges to the country's most densely populated places: its cities. Many cities depend on infrastructure, like water and sewage systems, roads, bridges, and power plants, that is aging and in need of repair or replacement. Rising sea levels, storm surges, heat waves, and extreme weather events will compound these issues, stressing or even overwhelming these essential services. Climate change and its impacts threaten the well-being of urban residents. Essential infrastructure systems such as water, energy supply, and transportation will increasingly be compromised by interrelated climate change impacts. The nation's economy, security, and culture all depend on the resilience of urban infrastructure systems. Direct and interacting effects of climate change will expose people who live in cities to multiple threats. Climate changes affect the built, natural, and social infrastructure of cities, from storm drains to urban waterways to the capacity of emergency responders. Climate change increases the risk, frequency, and intensity of certain extreme events like intense heat waves, heavy downpours, flooding from intense precipitation and coastal storm surges, and disease incidence related to temperature and precipitation changes. The vulnerability of urban dwellers multiplies when the effects of climate change interact with pre-existing urban stressors, such as deteriorating infrastructure, areas of intense poverty, and high population density.

https://nca2014.globalchange.gov/report/sectors/urban ref.

National response to climate change, inter alia, is to continuously evolve innovative and smart "adaptation" strategies. Adaptation climate change strategy requires that Pakistan and its public institutions make climate resilient policies and rest their decisions on sustainability. Infrastructures must be strong enough to withstand climate change e.g., heavy rains, floods, earthquakes and other extreme weather. Shutting eyes to the ominous signs of climate change will plunge the country into a world that may not be able to sustain fundamental human values. It could affect basic physical and larger social needs including harnessing and consuming energy, water and food as well as habitation, travelling and communication potentialities. It is doubtful that early town planners were driven by climate considerations. However, climate must, in the wake of climate change, form a basic determinant of urban planning and design. Climate-resilient development in cities of all sizes is crucial for improving the well-being of people and increasing the life opportunities of future generations. Any change in the Master Plan to an urban scheme without taking account of the climate factor would be detrimental.

Shelby D. Green, 'Zoning Neighborhoods for Resilience: Drivers, Tools and Impacts' (2016) 28 Fordham Envtl. Law Rev. 41 ref.

Urban development authorities need to ensure that their urban development plans consider and support adaptation, climate resiliency and sustainability. Before putting up a proposal for amendment or modification in the Master Plan or a scheme or before proposing a new development plan or scheme, the urban development authorities need to seriously consider the climate change angle. Any conversion of residential neighbourhoods to commercial zones is likely to lead to adverse environmental consequences on account of increased human and vehicular traffic and activity, and should not be permitted without proper investigation, forethought and remedial measures to control the soaring thermal environment. Urban planners should prioritize the climate factor in their development approaches to address the triple planetary crises of Climate Change, Air Pollution and Loss of Biodiversity.

(c) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 9, 14, 18 & 23---Environmental law---Climate change---Effect of climate change on Fundamental rights of people explained.

Effect of climate change on cities, affects its residents and their core fundamental rights to life, dignity and property guaranteed under Articles 9, 14, 18 and 23 of the Constitution. In an urban living, climate change can impair the quality of life of a person, offend his dignity and deprive him of his property or the right to fully enjoy his property. Incorporating adaptation, climate resilience and sustainability, in the policy decisions by the urban development authorities, are essential to actualize the fundamental rights of the people and therefore form an integral part of the fundamental human rights of the people of the country. In the face of the grave existential threat of climate change, adaptation, climate resilience and sustainability assume the role of a constitutional necessity and of an overarching constitutional obligation.

Mansoor Ahmed, Advocate Supreme Court and Ch. Akhtar Ali, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners (in C.Ps. Nos. 3347-3351 of 2021).

Syed Asghar Hussain Sabzwari, Senior Advocate Supreme Court and Mahmood A. Sh., Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners (in C.Ps. Nos. 4229 and 4263 of 2021).

Nemo for Respondents.

Hasan Riaz, Research Officer, SCRC for Research Assistance.

Date of hearing: 20th May, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The case stems from a decision of the Board of Directors ("Board") of the Capital Development Authority ("CDA") dated 13.02.1995 to commercialize the residential properties of the petitioners situated in front of the Industrial and Trading Centre, Sector G-9/4, Islamabad. The Board soon realized that the decision dated 13.02.1995 would be in violation of the Master Plan of Islamabad. Taking note of the fact that the decision dated 13.02.1995 had not till then been implemented as conversion rate could not be finalized, the Board through a fresh decision dated 05.10.1995 rescinded its earlier decision dated 13.02.1995. Subsequently, the CDA issued notices to the petitioners for non-conforming use of their properties. These notices were challenged by them, claiming in their writ petitions that their residential properties stood commercialized on the basis of the decision dated 13.02.1995. They also asserted that they could not be asked to pay conversion fee in lieu of such commercialization. Additionally, other petitioners filed civil suits seeking declaration that their properties had acquired commercial character. The applications under Order XXXIX, Rules 1 and 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure filed along with the suits were dismissed by the Trial Court; appeals also met the same fate; and, then, civil revisions were preferred before the High Court. The High Court through the impugned consolidated judgment dismissed the writ petitions and civil revisions filed by the petitioners. The petitioners now seek leave to appeal against said judgment of the High Court.

2. We consider in this case whether the decision of the Board dated 13.02.1995 was taken in the exercise of lawful authority and/or whether such decision had created any rights in favour of the petitioners. Also, the facts and circumstances of the case merit attention to the relationship between urban development and climate change, and the role of urban planning and development agencies.

3. The Capital Development Authority Ordinance 1960 ("Ordinance") was enacted to establish the CDA for the purpose of making all arrangements for the planning and development of Islamabad. The CDA was required to prepare a master plan and a phased master programme for the development of the 'Capital Site' and a similar plan and programme for the rest of the 'Specified Areas'.[1] All such plans and programmes were required to be submitted to the Federal Government for approval.[2] A Master Plan was prepared at the time of the inception of the city and subsequently different sectors were set up under different schemes. The Master Plan aimed at a rationalized reproduction of the attributes of the city by establishing the same sized and carefully organized spatial structures of the central facilities and public spaces as a coherent urban design scheme as evident in the detailed designs of different sectors.[3]

4. We see that the properties owned by the petitioners do not fall within the commercial area of Sector G-9 as set out in the Master Plan or the Scheme prepared thereunder. They seek a change in the status of their properties from residential to commercial. However, such a change is not permissible under the Ordinance without a change in the Master Plan which can only be done with the approval of the Federal Government. Any scheme prepared relating to land use, zoning and land reservation, among other things, is required to be in pursuance of the Master Plan.[4] We agree with the impugned judgment of the High Court that the CDA has no discretionary power to give effect to any scheme or accord any permission for change of status or use of property in breach of the Master Plan. The Master Plan is protected under the Ordinance and the Ordinance obliges the CDA to regulate the use of land pursuant to the Master Plan. The prohibition contained against the use of land for a purpose other than the one specified in the Master Plan is absolute. There is, therefore, no escape from the conclusion that the decision of the Board dated 13.02.1995 was taken without lawful authority. The Board itself realized that the decision dated 13.02.1995 would be in violation of the Master Plan of Islamabad and, thus, rightly rescinded it through the decision dated 05.10.1995.

5. We also agree with the High Court that no vested rights could be created under the decision dated 13.02.1995. The Board in which vests the management of the CDA was not competent to allow any change in the character of the properties of the petitioners in violation of the Master Plan. The Master Plan could only be amended with the approval of the Federal Government. The decision dated 13.02.1995 was in breach of provisions of the Ordinance and in conflict with the Master Plan. It was taken without lawful authority and was rightly undone by the Board. Moreover, the CDA did not implement the decision dated 13.02.1995. It did not approve any change in the status of the properties owned by the petitioners during the period this decision remained in the field. The petitioners cannot, in the given circumstances, claim to have taken any decisive steps in pursuance of the decision dated 13.02.1995. The doctrine of locus poenitentiae is not, therefore, attracted to their case.

Urban Planning, Climate Change and the role of the CDA and other Urban Development Authorities

6. The importance of regulating land use for orderly urban development cannot be understated. Planning and regulating building construction activity in urban environments is emphasized around the world in the interest of organized growth of cities. It is an exercise based on scientific research and experience which recommends in a comprehensive manner from social, economic, environmental, infrastructure capacity, aesthetic, and other relevant aspects, the best present and future uses of geographically specified land areas called zones.[5] Zoning is a public welfare management tool employed in urban planning to serve the city's interests.[6] Public welfare today would naturally encompass the pressing issues of the time i.e., climate change; environmental degradation; food and health safety; air pollution; water pollution; noise pollution; soil erosion; natural disasters; and desertification and flooding having an appreciable impact on public health, food safety, natural resource conservation, environmental protection, social equity, social choice, etc.[7] Any initiative to revise land use regulations must be based on the aforesaid considerations in order to ensure that urban development standards stay relevant to current issues of the community.

7. The necessity of planned urban development is accentuated in the vulnerable age of climate change. Climate change poses a series of interrelated challenges to the country's most densely populated places: its cities. Many cities depend on infrastructure, like water and sewage systems, roads, bridges, and power plants, that is aging and in need of repair or replacement. Rising sea levels, storm surges, heat waves, and extreme weather events will compound these issues, stressing or even overwhelming these essential services. Climate change and its impacts threaten the well-being of urban residents. Essential infrastructure systems such as water, energy supply, and transportation will increasingly be compromised by interrelated climate change impacts. The nation's economy, security, and culture all depend on the resilience of urban infrastructure systems. Direct and interacting effects of climate change will expose people who live in cities to multiple threats. Climate changes affect the built, natural, and social infrastructure of cities, from storm drains to urban waterways to the capacity of emergency responders. Climate change increases the risk, frequency, and intensity of certain extreme events like intense heat waves, heavy downpours, flooding from intense precipitation and coastal storm surges, and disease incidence related to temperature and precipitation changes. The vulnerability of urban dwellers multiplies when the effects of climate change interact with pre-existing urban stressors, such as deteriorating infrastructure, areas of intense poverty, and high population density.[8]

8. Pakistan falls amongst the most vulnerable countries and is seriously hit by climate change, even though it has negligible contribution towards greenhouse gases (GHGs). The National Climate Change Policy 2012 underlined the seriousness of this existential threat. Climate resilient development and adaptation[9] was the focus of this policy document though as a responsible member of the global community due importance was also accorded to mitigation[10] efforts. However, after Paris Climate Accord 2015, Pakistan has updated its climate policy and the focus of the National Climate Change Policy 2021 is equally placed on adaptation and mitigation with the major emphasis on nature-based solutions. Such solutions include vegetal cover expansion, coastal resource management, and mangrove and natural reef ecosystem protection. Infrastructure-based solutions comprise climate-proofing infrastructure, including storm drainage systems, water supply and treatment plants, as well as the protection or relocation of energy or solid waste management facilities. Some coastal cities may also need to plan for infrastructure development, protection and/or relocation related to a rise in sea level.[11]

9. Our national response to climate change, inter alia, is to continuously evolve innovative and smart "adaptation" strategies. Our adaptation climate change strategy requires that Pakistan and its public institutions make climate resilient policies and rest its decisions on sustainability. Our infrastructures must be strong enough to withstand climate change e.g., heavy rains, floods, earthquakes and other extreme weather. Shutting eyes to the ominous signs of climate change will plunge us into a world that may not be able to sustain fundamental human values. It could affect our basic physical and larger social needs including harnessing and consuming energy, water and food as well as habitation, travelling and communication potentialities. It is doubtful that our early town planners were driven by climate considerations. However, climate must, in the wake of climate change, form a basic determinant of urban planning and design.[12] Climate-resilient development in cities of all sizes is crucial for improving the well-being of people and increasing the life opportunities of future generations. Any change in the Master Plan to an urban scheme without taking account of the climate factor would be detrimental.

10. The concept of "the Right to the City"[13] has become a common framework for articulating alternative visions of the city and making a host of demands on issues related to urban equity and social justice. It has also been used for making urban governance, planning, and budgeting more participative and inclusive. The Right to the City is interdependent to all recognized international human rights; and its conception is based on an integral view, which includes civil, political, economic, social, cultural and environmental rights enshrined in the International Human Rights Treaties.[14]

11. Effect of climate change on cities, affects its residents and their core fundamental rights to life, dignity and property guaranteed under Articles 9, 14, 18 and 23 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973. In an urban living, climate change can impair the quality of life of a person, offend his dignity and deprive him of his property or the right to fully enjoy his property. Incorporating adaptation, climate resilience[15] and sustainability, in the policy decisions by the urban development authorities, are essential to actualize the fundamental rights of the people and therefore form an integral part of the fundamental human rights of the people of Pakistan. In the face of the grave existential threat of climate change, adaptation, climate resilience and sustainability assume the role of a constitutional necessity and of an overarching constitutional obligation.

12. Our urban development authorities need to ensure that their urban development plans consider and support adaptation, climate resiliency and sustainability. Before putting up a proposal for amendment or modification in the Master Plan or a scheme or before proposing a new development plan or scheme, the urban development authorities need to seriously consider the climate change angle. Any conversion of residential neighbourhoods to commercial zones is likely to lead to adverse environmental consequences on account of increased human and vehicular traffic and activity, and should not be permitted without proper investigation, forethought and remedial measures to control the soaring thermal environment. It is high time that our urban planners prioritize the climate factor in their development approaches to address the triple planetary crises of Climate Change, Air Pollution and Loss of Biodiversity. The CDA shall ensure to factor in adaptation, climate resiliency and sustainability into their plans, policies and decisions in order to protect the constitutional rights to life, dignity and property of the residents of Islamabad, in particular, and people of Pakistan, in general.

13. In view of the above, we do not take any exception to the judgment of the High Court. Consequently, leave is refused and the petitions are dismissed. Copy of this Order shall be dispatched to the Chairman, CDA for information, guidance and compliance.

MWA/Z-9/SC Petitions dismissed.

2022 S C M R 1691

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Sajjad Ali Shah,Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

HADAYAT ULLAH and others---Petitioners

Versus

FEDERATION OF PAKISTAN and others---Respondents

Civil Review Petitions Nos. 292 to 302, 351 to 432, 442 to 456 of 2021 along with C.M.As. Nos. 11812 to 11814, 11837, 11862 to 11864, 11902-11903, 11982-11983, 11987, 11679, 12017, 12019, 12020, 12024, 12025, 12028, 12029, 12031-12033, 12035, 12075, 11993, 12103-12104, 12161-12162, 12172-12173, 12403, 12372-12373 of 2021 along with Civil Misc. Appeals Nos. 168, 158 and 175 of 2021, decided on 17th December, 2021.

(For review of the judgment dated 17.08.2021 passed in C.A. No.491 of 2012 and others)

Per Umar Ata Bandial, J; Sajjad Ali Shah, Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ agreeing; Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J dissenting. (Majority view)

(a) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 188---Review jurisdiction of the Supreme Court---Scope---Review jurisdiction of the Court operates in a limited area---Review does not succeed merely because a material error has crept into the disputed judgment---Instead, a review is only allowed when the material error alters the outcome of the case thereby rendering the disputed judgment bad law.

Mukhtar Mai v. Abdul Khaliq 2019 SCMR 1302 ref.

(b) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 240 & 260(1)---Civil Servants Act (LXXI of 1973), S. 2(1)(b)---Terms "Service of Pakistan" and "Civil Servant"---Said terms were not synonymous, in fact, the phrase 'service of Pakistan' appeared to be of wider import---Although the terms 'civil service' and 'service of Pakistan' are not identical they do overlap in that the former is a sub-category of the latter.

Registrar, Supreme Court of Pakistan v. Wali Muhammad 1997 SCMR 141 and Muhammad Mubeen-us-Salam v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2006 SC 602 ref.

(c) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 260(1)---Term "Service of Pakistan"---Test for determining whether a person is in the 'service of Pakistan'---Test whether a person is in the service of Pakistan is whether he is performing functions in connection with the affairs of the Federation---For an entity (where a person is employed) to qualify as being in the service of Pakistan, it must fulfill three criteria; first, it must exercise public or sovereign power in some form; second, the government must retain effective/substantial control over its functioning; and third its activities must be mainly financed by the government.

Salahuddin v. Frontier Sugar Mills and Distillery Ltd. PLD 1975 SC 244 and Aitchison College v. Muhammad Zubair PLD 2002 SC 326 ref.

(d) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 240---Appointments to service of Pakistan---Principles of merit, non-discrimination, transparency and fairness---Article 240 of the Constitution is simply the bedrock on which appointments to the service of Pakistan are to be made; it is then the responsibility of the appointing authorities to ensure that appointments are made strictly in accordance with the relevant laws (including the applicable rules and regulations) that incorporate the principles of merit (selection through a competitive process), non-discrimination, transparency and fairness---Same principles apply to appointments on any post in public service since an organisation can only best serve the people when all its employees are qualified individuals who are selected through a fair and transparent process---In the absence of dedicated supporting staff, no senior officer sitting at the helm of affairs can succeed in guiding the nation towards prosperity---However, it is significant that said principles are not merely fruit of judge made law but they also emanate from the fundamental rights enshrined in the Constitution, especially Article 18 (freedom of trade, business or profession) for which reason they occupy an immutable character.

Mubashir Raza Jaffri v. Employees Old-Age Benefits Institutions 2014 SCMR 949; Mushtaq Ahmad Mohal v. Honourable Lahore High Court 1997 SCMR 1043; Munawar Khan v. Niaz Muhammad 1993 SCMR 1287 and Abdul Jabbar Memon: In re 1996 SCMR 1349 ref.

(e) Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act (XXII of 2010)---

----Ss. 2(d), 2(f)(vi), 4, 10, 11, 12 & 13 & Preamble---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 4, 9, 14, 18, 25, 184(3), 187, 188, 240 & 242---Supreme Court Rules, 1980, O. XXXIII, R. 6---[Per Umar Ata Bandial, J. (Majority view): Initial appointment of majority of the reinstated employees ('the beneficiary employees') was made without following the principles of merit, non-discrimination, transparency and fairness---Through operation of section 4 of the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 ('the 2010 Act') all beneficiary employees were ordered to be regularised (either on the same scale or on one-step higher scale) within a certain timeframe without complying any codal formalities and without regard to the nature of the post that they occupied prior to their dismissal, removal or termination from service---Furthermore the 2010 Act discriminated against similarly placed persons who were dismissed, removed or terminated from service in the periods prior to 01-11-1996 and subsequent to 12-10-1999---Such classification of the time period was neither reasonable nor based on any intelligible differentia---By giving leeway to the beneficiary employees and by placing them at the same (or in some cases better) footing in the organisational structure of the employers the fundamental rights of the regular employees were breached --- Act of 2010 was violative of the different provisions of the Constitution, specifically Articles 4, 9, 18, 25, 240 & 242, therefore the same was declared to be void with retrospective effect---Review petitions were dismissed with certain directions regarding services rendered by the re-instated employees of the "employers" [as defined in section 2(d) of the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010]---[Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. (Minority view): Vires of the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 ('the 2010 Act') enacted by the Parliament could not be examined and declared ultra vires, on the touchstone of Articles 4, 240 & 242 of the Constitution, as said Articles did not provide any criterion to test the vires of a law---Parliamentary debates relating to the objects and reasons of the enactment of the 2010 Act showed that the persons to be reinstated in service had suffered "political victimization" in the matter of their dismissal, removal or termination from service, at the hands of the Government during that period, and the object of the 2010 Act was to provide relief to such persons---Hence, persons reinstated formed a distinct class, and their classification was based on intelligible differentia, distinguishing them from those who had been left out, and it had a rational nexus to the object sought to be achieved by the 2010 Act, therefore, only their reinstatement and regularization under the 2010 Act as such did not offend the fundamental right to equal treatment under Article 25(1) of the Constitution---However, the issue of seniority that affected the right to 'status' enshrined in fundamental 'right to life' of the regular employees serving in the relevant departments, had arisen only in cases of employees reinstated and regularized on "one scale higher", under sections 4(a) & 10 of the 2010 Act---Such reinstatement and regularization was violative of the right to 'status' enshrined in fundamental 'right to life' of the regular employees serving in the relevant departments at the time of promulgation of the 2010 Act, and it was also violative of the 'right to dignity' and 'right to equality before law' as it gave an undue advantage to the reinstated employees to the disadvantage of the rights of the already working regular employees---Proper course, in such circumstances, was for the Court to declare (as ultra vires) only that part of the provisions of sections 4(a) & 10 of the 2010 Act that had the said offending effect, i.e., the reinstatement and regularization on "one scale higher" and this could have easily been done by reading out (severing) the words "one scale higher to" from the provisions of section 4(f) and the words "one scale higher than" from the provisions of section 10 of the 2010 Act---Furthermore sections 2(f)(vi), 11, 12 & 13, of the 2010 Act which dealt with and provided for reinstatement and regularization of such sacked employees who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service on account of absence from duty, misconduct, mis-appropriation of Government money or stock, or unfitness on medical grounds, and the determination of their guilt or medical unfitness had attained finality by being unchallenged or unsuccessfully challenged, were also ultra vires the Constitution].

Per Umar Ata Bandial, J. (Majority view):

The material on record in the present case, furnished by the relevant Ministries/Divisions, establishes that these principles of merit, non-discrimination, transparency and fairness were not followed in the vast majority of the initial appointments (from 01.11.1993 to 30.11.1996). Therefore, such defective appointments suffered from illegality and were void.

For the initial appointments of reinstated employees ('the beneficiary employees') that were illegal from the outset, it was not within the competence of Parliament to enact laws that firstly, bypassed the settled requirements enshrined in the Constitution for joining public employment and secondly, protected these unlawful appointments without curing their respective defects. Such contravention can be seen in section 4 of the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 ('the 2010 Act') where all beneficiary employees were ordered to be regularised (either on the same scale or on one-step higher scale) within a certain timeframe without complying any codal formalities and without regard to the nature of the post that they occupied prior to their dismissal, removal or termination from service.

State and public functionaries act as fiduciaries for and are responsible/accountable to the people of the country. They are duty bound to act in the furtherance of public interest. However, how the public interest was promoted by reinstating the beneficiary employees in question who had been inducted without complying with the duly prescribed procedure for appointment is neither determinable nor defensible.

In re: Suo Motu 2010 SCMR 885 ref.

The 2010 Act was enacted to achieve a specific object and purpose, namely, the reinstatement of those employees who had been initially appointed during tenure of a political party. The 2010 Act discriminates against similarly placed persons who were dismissed, removed or terminated from service in the periods prior to 01-11-1996 and subsequent to 12-10-1999. The Preamble of the 2010 Act coupled with its substantive provisions do not disclose the reason for reinstatement of only those employees who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service during the specific period of 01-11-1996 till 12-10-1999. Clearly then the Act's classification of the time period is neither reasonable nor based on any intelligible differentia. There is also no rational nexus with the object being sought to be achieved because if the intent of Parliament was to assist people who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service on account of political victimisation then there is no rhyme or reason as to why only the persons dismissed, removed or terminated between 01-11-1996 and 12-10-1999 were granted this relief. Surely such a classification ought to have been preceded by some study, data collection and analysis, however, the same are lacking. There must exist a plethora of people since independence of the country (till date) who have been unfairly removed from service on account of political victimisation yet no favour is extended to them by the 2010 Act.

Mobashir Hassan v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2010

SC 265 ref.

The reinstatements under the 2010 Act were carried out without following any proper procedure and without having regard to the nature of the posts occupied by the beneficiary employees during their initial appointments. On the other hand, the regular employees were inducted into service after fulfilling all the codal formalities. Therefore, by giving leeway to the beneficiary employees and by placing them at the same (or in some cases better) footing in the organisational structure of the employers the fundamental rights of the regular employees were breached, in particular Articles 4, 9 and 18 of the Constitution. Said three constitutional provisions envisage a State in which all aspects of a citizen's life, including his/her right to enter a profession, will be regulated by law. Nevertheless, the 2010 Act by reinstating the beneficiary employees whilst ignoring the applicable laws, rules and regulations, which detailed the process to be followed in making appointments, has flouted these guarantees of the Constitution. Therefore, the 2010 Act has directly impinged upon the fundamental rights of regular employees.

Argument that the judgment under review should have read down section 4 of the 2010 Act and preserved its watered-down version along with the other provisions of the Act that were not inconsistent with fundamental rights, fails to recognise two important aspects of section 4; firstly, section 4 as it stands does not suffer from just a singular defect. Instead, it is fundamentally flawed. It not only provides one-step higher regularisation in subsection (a) [which could potentially have been read down] but it also regularises all beneficiary employees regardless of the post they were occupying before their initial termination. This defect is so central to section 4 that to read it down would essentially require the Court to rewrite it which is not permissible as such an exercise would enter into the realm of legislation. Secondly, section 4 is the governing/primary provision of the 2010 Act. Therefore, once it is declared unconstitutional no substance is left in the 2010 Act as all other provisions are secondary to section 4 and cannot control the operation of the 2010 Act on their own. As a result, no purpose will be achieved in retaining the 2010 Act on the statute book when its effect will have been destroyed by the deletion of section

Zahid Iqbal v. Muhammad Adnan 2016 SCMR 430 ref.

Since the 2010 Act has been adjudged to be violative of the different provisions of the Constitution, specifically Articles 4, 9, 18, 25, 240 and 242, the judgment under review would have retrospective effect.

Ali Azhar Khan Baloch v. Province of Sindh 2015 SCMR 456 and Shahid Pervaiz v. Ejaz Ahmad 2017 SCMR 206 ref.

Supreme Court considered that having rendered a service of 10 years or more since their reinstatement under the 2010 Act (and Ordinances before that), the beneficiary employees, most of whom are nearing retirement and have minimal future job prospects, have dedicated a considerable period of their life to their employers and so deserve to be treated with leniency. More so, when through no fault of their own, the beneficiary employees were inducted and subsequently reinstated into the service of their employers without the fulfilment of the necessary codal formalities. Therefore, in exercise of its inherent power conferred under Order XXXIII, Rule 6 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 and in reliance of its power to do ex debito justitiae, the Supreme Court converted present review proceedings filed under Article 188 of the Constitution into proceedings under Article 184(3) read with Article 187 to grant the following relief to the beneficiary employees:

(i) The beneficiary employees who were holding posts for which no aptitude, scholastic or skill test was required at the time of initial termination (01-11-1996 to 12-10-1999) shall be restored to the same posts they were holding when they were terminated by the judgment under review;

(ii) All other beneficiary employees who were holding posts on their initial termination (01-11-1996 to 12-10-1999) which required the passing of an aptitude, scholastic or skill test shall be restored to the posts, on the same terms and conditions, they were occupying on the date of their initial termination. However, to remain appointed on these posts and to uphold the principles of merit, non-discrimination, transparency and fairness expected in the process of appointment to public institutions these beneficiary employees shall have to undergo the relevant test, applicable to their posts, conducted by the Federal Public Service Commission within 3 months from the date of receipt of this judgment;

(iii) The improvement in the terms and conditions of service of all the beneficiary employees shall be granted strictly in accordance with the applicable laws, rules and regulations;

(iv) The relief granted in sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) above shall not be granted to those beneficiary employees whose initial termination of service (01-11-1996 to 12-10-1999) was on grounds of absence from duty, misconduct, corruption, misappropriation of money/stock or unfitness on medical grounds if such termination was not set aside finally by a court of law. [pp. 1732, 1733, 1734] U, V, W, X & Y

Sher Alam Khan v. Abdul Munim PLD 2018 SC 449; Muhammad Akram v. Registrar, Islamabad High Court PLD 2016 SC 961 and Gul Taiz Khan Marwat v. Registrar, Peshawar High Court PLD 2021 SC 391 ref.

All review petitions were dismissed and all applications/appeals were disposed accordingly. [p. 1734] Z

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. (Minority view):

The vires of the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 ('the 2010 Act') enacted by the Parliament (Legislature) cannot be examined and declared ultra vires, on the touchstone of Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution as both these Articles only command for dealing with the matters specified therein by an Act of the Parliament, and provide for nothing more. Article 240 does not provide any criterion for judging the constitutionality of an Act of the Parliament, except that the Act of Parliament must relate to the appointments to and the conditions of service of persons in the service of Pakistan concerning the Federation, not concerning any Province other than All-Pakistan Service which is a service common to the Federation and the Provinces. Likewise, the constitutional limitation on the power of the Parliament to enact a law under Article 242 is that it can enact a law for the establishment of a Public Service Commission and prescribing its functions, in relation to the affairs of the Federation, not of any Province. Said aspect of the provisions of Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution was not presented by the parties before the Court, and the same thus escaped notice of the Court in applying the said Articles of the Constitution to judge the constitutional vires of the 2010 Act, in the judgment under review.

Fauji Foundation v. Shamimur Rehman PLD 1983 SC 457 and LDA v. Imrana Tiwana 2015 SCMR 1739 ref.

Similarly, Article 4 of the Constitution, which provides for a right to be dealt with in accordance with law, does not provide any criterion, and thus cannot be a touchstone, to test the vires of a law such as the 2010 Act. [p. 1763] $W_2$

Fauji Foundation v. Shamimur Rehman PLD 1983 SC 457 and LDA v. Imrana Tiwana 2015 SCMR 1739 ref.

Parts from the parliamentary debates relating to the objects and reasons of the enactment of the 2010 Act, made by the parliamentarians who were member(s) of the Standing Committee that had considered and approved the Bill as well as by the other parliamentarians who had supported the same, showed that the reason for choosing the persons appointed in and dismissed from service during the specified period, for the beneficial treatment of reinstatement and regularization in service notwithstanding any other law on the subject, was that they had suffered "political victimization" in the matter of their dismissal, removal or termination from service, at the hands of the Government (Executive) during that period, and the object of the enactment of the 2010 Act was that the Parliament (Legislature) intended to provide relief to such persons. Nobody disputed before the Supreme Court, the correctness of the factual statement regarding political victimization made by the parliamentarians, nor does such statement of fact appear to be inherently improbable; it is, rather, supported by the circumstance that a large number of employees, not a few, were sacked during the specified period. Therefore, the Court is to proceed on assuming that undisputed statement of fact to be correct.

After accepting the undisputed statement of fact that the persons going to be reinstated under the 2010 Act had suffered "political victimization", in the matter of their dismissal, removal or termination from service, there remains no difficulty to hold that they formed a distinct class, and their classification was based on intelligible differentia, distinguishing them from those who had been left out, and had a rational nexus to the object sought to be achieved by the 2010 Act. Therefore, only their reinstatement and regularization under the 2010 Act as such did not offend the fundamental right to equal treatment, guaranteed by Article 25(1) of the Constitution, of other employees sacked in other durations as well as of regular employees appointed under the general laws relating to the appointments to and terms of conditions of the service concerned.

Prabodh Verma v. State of U.P. AIR 1985 SC 167 and Amarendra Kumar v. State of Orissa AIR 2014 SC 1716 ref.

The issue of seniority that affected the right to 'status' enshrined in fundamental 'right to life' of the regular employees serving in the relevant departments, had arisen only in cases of employees reinstated and regularized on "one scale higher", under sections 4(a) and 10 of the 2010 Act. Their reinstatement and regularization on "one scale higher" had made them senior to those regular employees who were senior to them even as per their date of initial appointments and were serving in the same grade and post in which they had been appointed prior to the initial appointment of the reinstated employees, because of the slow channel of promotion. Therefore, to the extent of reinstatement and regularization of some sacked employees, under Sections 4(a) and 10, on "one scale higher", such reinstatement and regularization was violative of the right to 'status' enshrined in fundamental 'right to life' of the regular employees serving in the relevant departments at the time of promulgation of the 2010 Act, and it was also violative of the fundamental 'right to dignity' guaranteed under Article 14 and fundamental 'right to equality before law' guaranteed by Article 25 of the Constitution as it gave an undue advantage to the reinstated employees to the disadvantage of the rights of the already working regular employees. The proper course, in such circumstances, was that the Court should have declared (as ultra vires) only that part of the provisions of sections 4(a) and 10 of the 2010 Act that had the said offending effect, i.e., the reinstatement and regularization on "one scale higher". And this could have easily been done by reading out (severing) the words "one scale higher to" from the provisions of section 4(f) and the words "one scale higher than" from the provisions of section 10 of the 2010 Act, and reading down those provisions to mean that the sacked employees mentioned in those Sections were to be reinstated and regularized in the same or restructured, as the case may be, scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation from which they had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service, for the purpose of saving the constitutional validity of those provisions and construing them as constitution compliant.

Sections 2(f)(vi), 11, 12 and 13, of the 2010 Act which deal with and provide for reinstatement and regularization of such sacked employees who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service on account of absence from duty, misconduct, mis-appropriation of Government money or stock, or unfitness on medical grounds, and the determination of their guilt or medical unfitness had attained finality by being unchallenged or unsuccessfully challenged, had the effect of nullifying, or giving the power to the Executive to nullify, the judicial orders passed on charge of misconduct, inefficiency or unfitness that had attained finality. Such employees, even, do not fall within the class of the sacked employees who had suffered "political victimization," envisaged by the 2010 Act for a beneficial treatment. The said Sections of the 2010 are, therefore, ultra vires the Constitution.

All the employees terminated from service on the basis of the judgment under review, stand restored in the service with effect from the date they were so terminated, and shall be paid the pay of the intervening period treating the said period as an extraordinary leave with pay. The cases decided by the judgment under review, which now stands recalled, shall be deemed pending and decided on their own merits by the regular Bench(es) of the Supreme Court in accordance with the provisions of the 2010 Act, subject to the above declarations regarding vires of certain provisions of the 2010 Act.

Per Umar Ata Bandial, J (Majority view):

(f) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 25---Equality of citizens---Reasonable classification---Scope---Although Article 25 of the Constitution envisages equality amongst citizens, it also allows for differential treatment of persons who are not similarly placed under a reasonable classification---However, to justify this difference in treatment the reasonable classification needs to be based on intelligible differentia that has a rational nexus with the object being sought to be achieved'---Only if this test is satisfied can the distinct treatment meted out to a class of persons be sustained under Article 25 of the Constitution.

Commissioner Inland Revenue v. Tariq Mehmood 2021 SCMR 440 ref.

(g) Interpretation of statutes---

----Reference to legislative history---Scope---Reference to legislative history is permissible only as an aid to construction of legislation which is ambiguous or obscure or the literal meaning of which leads to an absurdity i.e. from the text of a statute, the court is unable to decipher the real intent of the Legislature.

Gulshan Bibi v. Muhammad Sadiq PLD 2016 SC 769 ref.

(h) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184 & 185--- Judgments/orders of the Supreme Court---Academic exercise---Ordinarily the Supreme Court does not enter into purely academic exercises.

Munawar Iqbal Gondal v. Nasira Iqbal 2014 SCMR 860 ref.

(i) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184 & 185--- Judgments of the Supreme Court---Prospective/retrospective effect---Scope---Judgments of the Supreme Court operate prospectively, however, they could operate retrospectively if so declared---Consequently, there is no binding rule that all judgments issued by the Court take effect only from the date of pronouncement.

Mobashir Hassan v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2010 SC 265 and Pakistan Medical and Dental Council v. Muhammad Fahad Malik 2018 SCMR 1956 ref.

(j) Locus poenitentiae, principle of---

----Applicability---Principle of locus poenitentiae would not be attracted in a case under which the benefit has been extended by a law which was violative of the provisions of the Constitution.

Azam Shah v. Federation of Pakistan 2022 SCMR 201 ref.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J; dissenting with Umar Ata Bandial, J.

(k) Separation of powers, doctrine of---

----Scope of the doctrine of Separation of powers in a constitutional democracy stated.

Separation of powers is the backbone of a constitutional system. The legislature, the executive and the judiciary have no authority beyond that granted to them under the Constitution. None of them is omnipotent.

Cooper v. Canada [1996] 3 S.C.R 854, 867 ref.

Separation of powers means reciprocal checks and balances between the different branches. It does not mean walls between the branches but rather bridges which balance and check. The concept of separation of powers is not to maximize efficiency but rather to maximize freedom. The principle of separation of powers has double meaning: First, it means distinguishing among different branches of government, giving each branch a central and primary function. Second, it means that different branches have reciprocal relationship in which each checks and balances over the other branches. Thus, for example, the legislature can change the rules of the game by amending the existing law or by enacting new law, but it must do so within the framework of the Constitution. On the other hand, the judiciary is authorized to interpret the Constitution and law but it is not authorized to create, amend or rewrite the Constitution or to enact a new law. Judiciary, like the other branches of the government, is also not invincible but is to function under the supreme law of the land i.e., the Constitution.

Myers v. United States 272 US 52, 293 (1926) and Responding to Imperfection: The Theory and Practice of Constitutional Amendments (Stanford Levison ed., 1995) and Aharon Barak, The Judge in Democracy ref.

The primary and central function of the legislative branch is to create laws and the courts must give weight to the purpose of the law remembering that legislation promotes social policy and is a tool for achieving a societal goal. This subjective purpose of the statute becomes a key factor in interpreting the statute. Therefore, in the first instance, the role of the courts is to safeguard and actualize these laws in the public interest. Judges should therefore give statutes a meaning that bridges the gap between the law and the social reality. Next is the objective purpose of the statute, where it honours and protects the constitutional values, and the fundamental rights of the people. It is only when the subjective or the objective purpose of the legislature outsteps the constitutional boundary that the courts interfere and set the course right by enforcing the constitutional limits. Even in that case when the courts rule that a statute is unconstitutional and invalidates it, it does not undermine the legislature or violate the separation of powers because it is the principle of separation of powers that informs us that legislative authority does not include the authority to pass unconstitutional laws. Hence, the principle of separation of powers is the very source of judicial review.

(l) Judicial review---

----Scope---Legislation is the manifestation of the will of the people and the collective wisdom of their chosen representatives in the Parliament---Courts must therefore tread carefully to judicially review the act of the legislature---First, efforts should be made by the Court to save the constitutionality of the legislation by exhausting the interpretative tools e.g. of "reading down" or "reading out" to make the legislation constitution compliant---Only when the legislation happens to be opposed to the constitutional values and the fundamental rights and allowing such a statute to remain on the statute book would be unconstitutional, should the courts interfere---Such freedom and respect is enjoyed by the branches of the government under a prosperous and a progressive constitutional democracy.

(m) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 188---Constitutional jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution---Scope---Original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution cannot be exercised as a parallel review jurisdiction, and a judgment or an order of the Supreme Court can never be challenged by virtue of filing independent proceedings under Article 184(3) of the Constitution---Such course is absolutely impermissible.

Shabbar Raza's case 2018 SCMR 514 ref.

(n) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O. XI, R. 1, Second proviso---Semper praesumitur pro negante, rule of---Scope---When the Judges of an appellate Court are equally divided in their opinion, the judgment of the Court below is affirmed and maintained, and the decision given pro negante is authoritative and binding as any other decision of the appellate Court---However, the said rule is not applicable to the final decision of a case by the Supreme Court in view of the second proviso to Rule 1 of Order XI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980, which provides that "if the Judges hearing a petition or an appeal are equally divided in opinion, the petition or appeal, as the case may be, shall, in the discretion of the Chief Justice, be placed for hearing and disposal either before another Judge or before a larger Bench to be nominated by the Chief Justice." Hence, the application of the rule of pro negante decision is restricted to the division of opinion on a point of law decided in the judgment of the Supreme Court, notwithstanding of which there is a majority of opinion on the final decision of the case.

Inland Revenue v. Scottish General Electric Power Co. (1931) UKHL 15 TC 761 ref.

(o) Judgment---

----Judgment in rem---Neither necessary nor the requirement of law that Court should issue a separate notice and offer an opportunity of hearing to each and every person who is likely to be affected, and bound, by judgment in rem---Meaning and scope of a judgment in rem stated.

A judgment in rem binds the parties and the nonparties alike. A judgment in rem settles the fate of the res by determining its status and thus operates directly on the res itself; it binds all persons claiming a right or interest in or under the res, even though pronounced in their absence.

Federation v. Qamar Hussain PLD 2004 SC 77 ref.

In actions in rem it is neither practicable nor is it the requirement of law that the Court should issue a separate notice and offer an opportunity of hearing to each and every person who is likely to be affected, and bound, by the judgment. However, for complying with the constitutional command of fair trial and due process to a possible extent in such cases, the Court may order, as it is usually done by the civil courts dealing with actions in rem, for service of the public notice of the case through its publication in the press or any other mode deemed appropriate, for the knowledge of the persons likely to be affected by the judgment, who may then appear before the Court and seek permission to intervene and argue in the proceedings.

Surinder Kumar v. Gian Chand 1958 SCR 548; SHCBA v. Federation PLD 2009 SC 879 and Justice Bhinder v. Federation PLD 2010 SC 483 ref.

(p) Interpretation of statutes---

----Aid to statutory interpretation---Parliamentary debates---Scope---Parliamentary debates, especially the speech made by the mover of the Bill or by the chairman or member(s) of the Standing Committee that considered the Bill, explaining the reason for introducing the Bill can be referred to for ascertaining the mischief sought to be remedied by the legislation and the object and purpose for which the legislation was enacted.

Mubeen-Us-Salam v. Federation PLD 2006 SC 602; Benazir Bhutto v. Federation PLD 1988 SC 416; Pepper v. Hart (UKHL) 1993 SCMR 1019 and K. P. Varghese v. ITO, Ernakulam AIR 1981 SC 1922 ref.

(q) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 25---Equality of citizens---Reasonable classification---Scope of reasonable classification stated.

Article 25(1) of the Constitution which declares, and guarantees as a fundamental right, that all citizens are equal before law and are entitled to equal protection of law, does not prohibit reasonable classification for equal treatment, that is, "equality among equals", which is based on intelligible differentia, distinguishing persons or things that are grouped together from those who are left out, and has a rational nexus to the object sought to be achieved by law. And a classification having a reasonable basis does not offend against fundamental right to equality, merely because it is not made with mathematical nicety or because in practice it results in some inequality. Further, when the classification made by a law is called in question, if any state of facts reasonably can be conceived that would sustain it, the existence of that state of facts at the time the law was enacted must be assumed, and the one who assails the classification must carry the burden of showing that it does not rest upon any reasonable basis but is essentially arbitrary.

Jibendra Kishore v. East Pakistan PLD 1957 SC 9; Fauji Foundation v. Shamimur Rehman PLD 1983 SC 457; I. A. Sharwani v. Government of Pakistan 1991 SCMR 1041; Government of Balochistan v. Azizullah Memon PLD 1993 SC 341; Schwartz, Constitution of the United States, Vol. II, p. 501 and Willis, Constitutional Law of the United States, pp. 579-580 approvingly cited in Fauji Foundation v. Shamimur Rehman PLD 1983 SC 457 ref.

(r) Vires of statute---

----Courts lean in favour of upholding the constitutionality of laws and are reluctant to strike them down---Cardinal principles of construction of statutes stated.

Two cardinal principles of construction of statutes are, (i) that there is always a presumption in favour of the constitutionality of a legislative enactment (a law); and (ii) that a law enacted by a competent legislature is to be construed in such a manner that its constitutional validity may be saved rather than destroyed. It is because of these principles that the courts lean in favour of upholding the constitutionality of laws and are reluctant to strike them down by declaring them as unconstitutional. The one who challenges the constitutionality of a law bears the burden to show that the law is violative of any of the constitutional provisions, and when two opinions as to the construction of a law are possible, the courts prefer to adopt that which upholds the constitutionality of the law, over that which does not. The courts, therefore, construe a law in such a manner that saves the law than destroys it, and declare it unconstitutional only when it clearly contravenes any constitutional provision and cannot be read as constitution compliant by applying any of the methods, techniques or tools of rule of constitution complaint construction, e.g., reading out or reading down. The primary purpose of applying these techniques, methods or tools, is to endeavor for saving the constitutional validity of the statute, to a possible extent, and the main reason for applying them in preference to declaring the law unconstitutional is that their application makes the process of judicial review of legislative actions less intrusive than invalidating the whole law, as the court should not strive officiously to kill a law to any extent greater than it is compelled to do. Declaring the law unconstitutional is thus one of the last resorts taken by the courts.

SSGCL v. Federation 2018 SCMR 802 and Dunkley v. Evans [1981] 1 W.L.R. 1522 ref.

(s) Vires of statute---

----'Reading out' (severance) and 'reading down' parts of a statute---Principles stated.

Courts apply the methods of "reading out" (severance) and "reading down", with certain conditions, for the purpose of construing the provisions of a law as constitution compliant and to save it, as much as possible, from being declared ultra vires the Constitution. The primary condition for applying these methods for a constitution compliant construction is to see whether the Legislature would have enacted the law in the form that remains or turns out to be after application of any of the said methods. Further, in case of applying the method of reading out (severance) the court is to see whether after reading out (severing) the invalid part, the remaining provisions of law would remain operative within the scope of the object of the law. Therefore, when confronting a constitutional flaw in a statute, court should try to limit the solution to the problem - severing the flawed portion while leaving the remainder intact. Because the unconstitutionality of a part of a statute does not necessarily defeat or affect the validity of its remaining provisions. If after severing the flawed part, the remaining provisions of law would remain fully operative, court must sustain those provisions unless it is evident that the Legislature would not have enacted those provisions independently of that which is invalid.

Haroon-Ur-Rashid v. LDA 2016 SCMR 931; Baz Muhammad Kakar v. Federation PLD 2012 SC 923; Province of Sindh v. M.Q.M. PLD 2014 SC 531 and Free Enterprise Fund v. Public Co. Accounting Oversight Board, (2010) 561 U.S. 477 ref.

In attendance:

Kh. Muhammad Arif, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 292, 388 of 2021), Muhammad Yousaf Khan (in C.R.P. 293 of 2021), Muhammad Tariq Asad, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 294 and C.M.A. 12033 of 2021), Khalid Javed Khan, Attorney General for Pakistan, Ayaz Shoukat, D.A.G. along with Ms. Maryam Rasheed and Usman Paracha, Advocates (in C.R.P. 295 of 2021), Muhammad Nawaz Abbasi (in person) (in C.R.Ps. 296 and 446 of 2021), S.A. Mehmood Khan Sadozai, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 297-300 and 416 of 2021), Muhammad Ilyas Siddiqui, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 301 of 2021), Hazrat Said (in C.R.P. 302 of 2021), S. Iftikhar Hussain Gillani, Senior Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 351 and 392 of 2021), Ms. Shireen Imran, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 252, 393, 394, 448 and C.M.A. 12104 of 2021), M. Safdar Shaheen Pirzada, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 253, 372 and 375 of 2021), Nisar A. Mujahid, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 354 of 2021), Raja Abdul Ghafoor, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 355, 374, C.M.As. 11982 and 12029 of 2021), Ch. Afrasiab Khan, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 356 of 2021), Mian Raza Rabbani, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, Saalim

Salam Ansari, Advocate Supreme Court assisted by Zeeshan Abdullan (in C.R.P. 357, C.M.As. 175, 12172 and 12173 of 2021), Shah Khawar, Advocate Supreme Court, Hassan Rashid Qamar, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 355, 378-381, 442, 455, 456, C.M.As. 12028 and 12162 of 2021), Zubair Hussain, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 359 and C.M.A. 11983 of 2021), Syed M. Iqbal Hashmi, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 360-363 of 2021), Mazullah Khan (in-person) (in C.R.P. 364 of 2021), Zulfikar Khalid Maluka, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 365 and 428 of 2021), Ghulam Sajjad Gopang, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 366 of 2021), Omer Farouk Adam, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 367 of 2021), Tariq Mehmood Mughal, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 368 of 2021), Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 369, 385, 420, C.M.As. 168, 12032 and 12035 of 2021), Muhammad Sharif Janjua, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 370, 386, 399, 400 and 423 of 2021), Saleem Ullah Ranazai, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 371 of 2021), Kamran Murtaza, Senior Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 373 and 377 of 2021), Waseem Sajjad, Senior Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 376 and 383 of 2021), Dr. Saeed Ahmed (in person) (in C.R.P. 382 of 2021), Aftab Alam Yasir, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 384 and C.M.A. 12020 of 2021), Abdul Razzaq Shar, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 387, 454 and C.M.A. 12024 of 2021), Jam Khursheed Ahmed, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 389 of 2021), Muhammad Sajid Khan, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 390, C.M.As. 12031 and 12161 of 2021), Hamid Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, M. Waqar Rana, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 391 of 2021), Liauqat Ali Karim, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 395 of 2021), Abid A. Zuberi, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 396 of 2021), Azhar Navid Shah, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 397 of 2021), Malik Faiz Rasool Rajwana, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 398 of 2021), Muhammad Umair Baloch, Advocate Supreme Court, Shoaib Shaheen, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 401-415, 418, 419 and C.M.A. 12372 of 2021), Muhammad Haseeb Jamali, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 417 of 2021), Malik Mansoor Hussain, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 421 of 2021), Ch. Aitzaz Ahsan, Advocate Supreme Court, Gohar Ali Khan, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 422 of 2021), Shakirullah (in-person) (in C.R.P. 424 of 2021), Muhammad Nawaz Rai, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 425 of 2021), Muddasar Khalid Abbasi, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 426 of 2021), Mrs. Kausar Iqbal Bhatti, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 427 of 2021), Khalid Javed (in-person) (in C.R.P. 429 of 2021), Abdul Latif Afridi, Senior Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 430-431 of 2021), S. Asghar Hussain Sabzwari, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, S. Qamar Hussain Shah Sabzwari, Advocate Supreme Court, S. Nayyar Hussain Bukhari, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 432 of 2021), Sh. Mehmood Ahmed, Advocate-on-Record (in C.M.A. 11812 of 2021), Sikandar Javed, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.As. 11813 and 11993 of 2021), Ms. Attiya Khanam (in-person) (in C.M.A. 11814 of 2021), Fazal e Rabbi (in-person) (in C.M.A. 11837 of 2021), Malik Muhammad Riaz, (in-person) (in C.M.A. 11862 of 2021), Arshad Ali Makhdoom, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. 11863 of 2021), Muhammad Ibrahim (in-person) (in C.M.A. 11864 of 2021), Faisal Siddiqui, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. 11902 of 2021), Anees M. Shahzad, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. 11903 of 2021), Mir Aurangzeb, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. 11987 of 2021), Jawaid Masood Tahir Bhatti, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. 11679 and C.M.A. 158 of 2021), Mir Shahzad Khan Talpur (in-person) (in C.M.A. 12017 of 2021), Malik Muhammad Munsif Awan, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. 12019 of 2021), Muhammad Afzal Khan (in C.M.A. 12025 of 2021), Tassawar Abbas Tanvir (in-person) (in C.R.P. 443 of 2021), Dr. Umar Farooq Siddiqui (in-person) (in C.R.P. 444 of 2021), Sardar M. Latif Khosa, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, Sardar M. Shahbaz Khosa, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 445 and 447 of 2021), Pervez Rauf, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. 449 and 452 of 2021), Mir Afzal Malik, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 450 of 2021), Malik Saleem Iqbal Awan, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. 453 of 2021), Raja Farakh Arif Bhatti, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. 12075 of 2021), Rai M. Nawaz Kharal, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. 12103 of 2021), Ch. M. Younas, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. 12403 of 2021), Shahid Anwar Bajwa, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. 12373 of 2021) and Niazullah Niazi, AG ICT.

Barrister Umer Aslam for SSGPL.

Syed Waqar Naqvi, Advocate Supreme Court for State Life.

Aftab Alam Yasir, Advocate Supreme Court for OPF.

Asad Jan, Advocate Supreme Court for SNGPL.

Dates of hearing: 1st, 6th to 9th, 13th to 17th December, 2021.

JUDGMENT

UMAR ATA BANDIAL, J.---By this judgment we are deciding 108 Review Petitions, 35 Civil Misc. Applications and 3 Civil Misc. Appeals filed against the judgment of this Court reported as Muhammad Afzal v. Secretary Establishment Division (2021 SCMR 1569) dated 17.08.2021 ("judgment under review").

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

2. In order to understand the objections raised, it is helpful to briefly traverse the history of the matter at hand. The genesis of these proceedings can be found in the critical period of 01.11.1993 to 30.11.1996 (the significance of this time frame will be explained shortly) when numerous appointments, running into the thousands, were made to various corporation and government services and autonomous/semi-autonomous bodies ("employers") by the political government of the time i.e., the Pakistan Peoples Party ("PPP"). However, over the course of the next 2-3 years the appointments so made were reversed by the different political governments who came into power. Eventually, when PPP won the General Elections in 2008, the persons who had been removed were reinstated en masse with the aid of Ordinances, the first of which was promulgated on 14.02.2009. It was termed the 'Sacked Employees (Reinstatement) Ordinance, 2009' ("Ordinance I"). The purpose of this Ordinance was laid down in its preamble, which reads as below:

"Whereas it is expedient for the purpose of providing relief to persons who were appointed in a corporation service or autonomous or semi-autonomous bodies or in Government service during the period from the 1st day of November, 1993 to the 30th day of November, 1996 and were dismissed, removed or terminated from service during the period from the 1st day of November, 1996, to the 31st day of December, 1998;"

(emphasis supplied)

3. It may be observed from the above-cited passage that the Ordinance was indeed enacted to grant the relief, inter alia, of reinstatement to a group of people ("beneficiary employees") who were appointed in the service of employers between 01.11.1993 and 30.11.1996 but were removed during the period 01.11.1996 to 31.12.1998. However, no grounds were specified in the Ordinance to justify the relief being granted to only this specific class of persons. Ordinance I was followed by a chain of Ordinances promulgated on 11.06.2009 ("Ordinance II"), 30.10.2009 ("Ordinance III") and 05.02.2010 ("Ordinance IV"), respectively. All three subsequent Ordinances were almost verbatim replicas of their predecessor Ordinance with some very minor changes that are not relevant for present purposes.

4. Ultimately PPP, perhaps to achieve finality in the matter and to provide permanent relief to the beneficiary employees, introduced the Sacked Employees Reinstatement Bill, 2010. The same was passed by Parliament and received the assent of the President on 06.12.2010 bearing the title of 'Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 ("Act"). The preamble to this Act reads:

"Whereas it is expedient for the purpose of providing relief to persons who were appointed in a corporation service or autonomous or semi-autonomous bodies or in Government service during the period from the 1st day of November, 1993 to the 30th day of November, 1996 (both days inclusive) and were dismissed, removed or terminated from service during the period from the 1st day of November, 1996 to the 12th day of October 1999 (both days inclusive);"

(emphasis supplied)

It becomes apparent from the preamble quoted hereinabove that whilst the object of the Act remained consistent with that of the Ordinances, the class of persons who were entitled to its benefit was enlarged. This was done by moving the last date of dismissal, removal or termination from service from 31.12.1998 to 12.10.1999. Again the Act failed to indicate the rationale for favouring only such affected persons with this extraordinary relief. Allegedly, thousands of beneficiary employees (the exact figure is disputed) were reinstated pursuant to the Ordinances and the Act. This act of reinstatement triggered a two-fold series of litigation:

i. By the regular employees of the employers whose seniority had been affected due to the reinstatement of the beneficiary employees; and

ii. By the employees who were eligible to receive the benefit of the Act but were not granted the same by the employers.

5. These cases, decided primarily over a period of 2-4 years by the various High Courts, eventually arrived in the Supreme Court. They pertained to the employees of 10 employers, namely:

i. Intelligence Bureau ("IB");

ii. Commissioner Afghan Refugees, KPK ("CAR");

iii. National Highway Authority ("NHA");

iv. Pakistan Telecommunication Company Ltd. ("PTCL");

v. Overseas Pakistani Foundation ("OPF");

vi. State Life Insurance Corporation ("SLIC");

vii. Civil Aviation Authority ("CAA");

viii. Water and Power Development Authority ("WAPDA");

ix. Sui Southern Gas Company Ltd ("SSGC"); and

x. Trading Corporation of Pakistan ("TCP").

6. After hearing the parties, the judgment under review held that the Act had violated Articles 4, 9 and 25 of the Constitution by granting backdated seniority to the beneficiary employees; and it had contravened Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution by overlooking the relevant framework established by the aforesaid provisions for regulating appointments to the civil service/service of Pakistan. Consequently, the following pronouncements were made in respect of the Act and the benefits extended under it to the beneficiary employees:

"59. Therefore, in light of the discussion above, the Act of 2010 is hereby declared to be ultra vires of the Constitution. The effect of such a declaration is that any/all the benefits accrued to the beneficiaries are to be ceased with immediate effect.

60. This Court, in light of Shahid Pervaiz (supra), is empowered/mandated to examine the benefits accruing to each recipient and undo the same if it is not a past and closed transaction. Therefore, the cases of employees who have retired and/or passed away are past and closed transactions as we do not find it appropriate to interfere in their cases as it will be an exercise in futility.

61. Whereas, the beneficiaries of the Act of 2010, who are still in service, will go back to their previous positions, i.e. to the date when the operation of the Act of 2010 has taken effect. However, it would be inequitable to reverse any monetary benefits received by them under the Act of 2010 for the period they have served and those shall remain intact as they were granted against service. However, the lump sum received by such 'sacked employees' upon reinstatement shall be reversed."

(emphasis supplied)

7. As a result of this decision, thousands of beneficiary employees who had rendered service of 10 years or more after their reinstatement under the Ordinances or Act were removed by their respective employers. Feeling aggrieved by this decision, many beneficiary employees and the Federation filed review petitions against the judgment under review.

ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL

8. Mainly the contentions of learned counsel representing the beneficiary employees and the learned Attorney General can be summarised as follows:

i. No notice under Order XXVII-A of C.P.C. was issued to the Attorney General before the judgment under review was released;

ii. The non-obstante clause contained in section 4 of the Act did not have any bearing on the vires of the Act as a whole;

iii. The reinstatement of the beneficiary employees has not infringed the fundamental rights of any regular employee;

iv. The application of Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution to the facts of the present case was misconceived as the beneficiary employees were not civil servants;

v. The beneficiary employees granted relief under the Act constituted a distinct class based on reasonable classification;

vi. Some of the beneficiary employees were dismissed, removed or terminated by the caretaker government which was not legally permissible;

vii. Instead of declaring the Act void as whole, the judgment under review should have read down its unconstitutional provisions, if any; and viii. Even if the Act was ultra vires the Constitution, such declaration should have been prospective in effect.

9. After hearing the petitions, applications and appeals over the course of 10 days, the Court by a majority of 4-1 dismissed the review petitions vide short order dated 17.12.2021:

"O R D E R

For reasons to be recorded later, these review petitions are dismissed. The impugned legislation, namely, the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 ("Act") is held to be violative of, inter alia, Articles 25, 18, 9 and 4 of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") and therefore void under the provisions of Article 8 of the Constitution.

2. However, in exercise of the Court's jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution read with Article 187, we have taken into consideration the services rendered by the re-instated employees of the "employers" [as defined in section 2(d) of the Act] and hereby order that:

i. Employees who were holding posts that on the date of their initial termination of service (from 01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) did not require any aptitude or scholastic or skill test, for appointment thereon, shall be restored from the date of the judgment under review to the posts they were holding on the same terms and conditions of service applicable on the date of their termination pursuant to the judgment under review.

ii. Such other employees who were holding posts that on the date of their initial termination of service (from 01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) required the passing of any aptitude or scholastic or skill test, for appointment thereon shall from the date of the judgment under review be restored to their said posts on the same terms and conditions of service applicable on the date of their initial termination.

iii. Any improvement in the terms and conditions of service of all the restored employees shall be granted strictly in accordance with the laws and rules applicable to their service or employment and in the absence thereof by regulations laid down for this purpose by their respective employers.

iv. The relief granted in sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) above shall not be granted to employees whose initial termination of service (from 01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) was on grounds of absence from duty, misconduct, corruption, misappropriation of money/ stock or unfitness on medical grounds if such termination was not set aside finally by a Court of law.

Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J. Parliamentary sovereignty or legislative supremacy is the cornerstone of a strong democracy. We must, therefore, recognize the central role of the legislature. Undermining the legislature undermines democracy. Both the legislature and the judicature must play their role in a spirit of profound respect for the other and within the limits set out in the Constitution. Rule of law is not merely public order, it is social justice based on public order. The law exists to ensure proper social life by balancing the needs of the society and the individual. The courts must protect this rich concept of rule of law. Under Article 8 of the Constitution, any law enacted by the legislature is void only to the extent it takes away or abridges fundamental rights of the people.

2. For the reasons to be recorded later and subject to ancillary and incidental declarations and orders (if any) to be made in the detailed judgment, I allow these review petitions in the following terms:

i. The judgment under review is recalled;

ii. The following Sections and part of Sections of the Sacked Employees Reinstatement Act 2010 are declared ultra vires the Constitution:

(a) Sections 4(a) and 10 to the extent of reinstatement and regularization on "one scale higher", which give an undue advantage to the reinstated employees to the detriment of the rights of the already working regular employees and thus violate their fundamental rights. The provisions of the said Sections, except the words "one scale higher", shall however remain operative with effect from the date of enactment of the Act, and be read to mean the reinstatement and regularization in the same or restructured, as the case may be, scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation.

(b) Sections 2(f)(vi), 11, 12 and 13, which deal with and provide for reinstatement and regularization of such sacked employees who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service on account of absence from duty, misconduct, mis-appropriation of Government money or stock, or unfitness on medical grounds, and the determination of their guilt or medical unfitness attained finality by being unchallenged or unsuccessfully challenged. Such employees fall outside the class of sacked employees who suffered "political victimization," envisaged by the Act for a beneficial treatment, and they by themselves do not constitute a distinct class having an intelligible differentia, which bears a reasonable relation to the object and purpose of the Act.

iii. All the employees terminated from service on the basis of the judgment under review, stand restored in the service with effect from the date they were so terminated, and shall be paid the pay of the intervening period treating the said period as an extraordinary leave with pay; and

iv. The cases decided by the judgment under review, which now stands recalled, shall be deemed pending and decided on their own merits by the regular Bench(es) of this Court in accordance with the provisions of the Sacked Employees Reinstatement Act, 2010, subject to the declaration made at No. ii above.

ORDER OF THE BENCH

For reasons to be recorded later, by a majority of four to one (Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah dissenting), these review petitions are dismissed."

SCOPE OF REVIEW

10. Before setting out our detailed reasons for upholding the judgment under review dated 17.08.2021, we consider it appropriate to briefly specify the scope of review jurisdiction that has been conferred on this Court in terms of Article 188 of the Constitution. A succinct yet comprehensive explanation of this power can be found in the case of Mukhtar Mai v. Abdul Khaliq (2019 SCMR 1302):

"5. ... A review... will [not] be warranted merely because the conclusion drawn is wrong or erroneous but is limited to eventualities where something obvious has been overlooked or where there is a glaring omission or patent mistake of fact or law, which is self-evident, manifest and floating on the surface, materially affecting the outcome of the adjudicatory process..."

(emphasis supplied)

What becomes clear from the above-mentioned passage is that the review jurisdiction of the Court operates in a limited area. A review does not succeed merely because a material error has crept into the disputed judgment. Instead, a review is only allowed when the material error alters the outcome of the case thereby rendering the disputed judgment bad law. Therefore, it is against this test that the decision arrived at in the judgment under review shall now be examined.

OBJECTIONS TO THE JUDGMENT UNDER REVIEW

A. Notice to Attorney General under Order XXVII-A, C.P.C.

11. One of the main objections raised by learned counsel against the judgment under review was the failure of the Court to issue a notice to the Attorney General even though the matter at hand involved a 'substantial question as to the interpretation of constitutional law.' Reliance was placed on two judgments of this Court reported as Federation of Pakistan v. Aftab Ahmad Khan Sherpao (PLD 1992 SC 723) and Federal Public Service Commission v. Muhammad Afaq (PLD 2002 SC 167).

12. In our view, there may have been weight in learned counsel' arguments if no notice had actually been served on the learned Attorney General. However, the record suggests otherwise. In the leave granting order dated 18.05.2012, passed in the main Civil Appeal No.491 of 2012 titled Muhammad Afzal v. Secretary Establishment Division, notice was specifically issued to the learned Attorney General (pg.61).

Therefore, when compliance was made with Order XXVII-A of the C.P.C., no ground for review is made out in this regard.

B. Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution

13. The next argument of learned counsel was that the judgment under review had wrongly held Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution to be applicable to the reinstatement process of the beneficiary employees under the Act when none of them were in fact civil servants.

14. To better understand the proposition put forward by learned counsel, Articles 240 and 242 are being produced below:

"240. Appointments to service of Pakistan and conditions of service. Subject to the Constitution, the appointments to and the conditions of service of persons in the service of Pakistan shall be determined-

(a) in the case of the services of the Federation, posts in connection with the affairs of the Federation and All-Pakistan Services, by or under Act of [Majlis-e -Shoora (Parliament)];

. . .

242. Public Service Commission. (1) [Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament)] in relation to the affairs of the Federation, and the Provincial Assembly of a Province in relation to affairs of a Province may, by law provide for the establishment and constitution of a Public Service Commission."

It may be observed from the text of Articles 240 and 242 that the two govern/regulate appointments to the service of Pakistan and not the civil service as argued by learned counsel. The term 'civil service' has been defined in the Civil Servants Act, 1973:

"2. Definitions.---(1) In this act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,--

. . .

(b) "civil servant" means a person who is a member of an All-Pakistan Service or of a civil service of the Federation, or who holds a civil post in connection with the affairs of the Federation, including any such post connected with defence,..."

(emphasis supplied)

On the other hand, the phrase 'service of Pakistan' has been explained in Article 260 of the Constitution as follows:

"260. Definitions (1) In the Constitution, unless the context otherwise requires, the following expressions have the meaning hereby respectively assigned to them, that is to say,-

. . .

"service of Pakistan" means any service, post or office in connection with the affairs of the Federation or of a Province, and includes an All-Pakistan Service, service in the Armed Forces and any other service declared to be a service of Pakistan by or under Act of [Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament)] or of a Provincial Assembly..."

(emphasis supplied)

15. It may be observed from the meanings assigned to the two terms that they are not synonymous. In fact, the phrase 'service of Pakistan' appears to be of wider import, a fact which was confirmed by the Court in Registrar, Supreme Court of Pakistan v. Wali Muhammad (1997 SCMR 141):

"...The expression 'service of Pakistan' used in Article 260 of the Constitution has a much wider connotation than the term 'Civil Servant' employed in the Civil Servants Act. While a 'Civil Servant' is included in the expression 'service of Pakistan', the vice versa is not true. 'Civil Servant' as defined in the Civil Servants Act, 1973 is just a category of service of Pakistan mentioned in Article 260 of the Constitution..."

(emphasis supplied)

This dictum was later cited with approval by the Court in the case of Muhammad Mubeen-us-Salam v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2006 SC 602) at para 35. These definitions and declarations of the Court show that although the terms 'civil service' and 'service of Pakistan' are not identical they do overlap in that the former is a sub-category of the latter. Consequently, the argument of learned counsel that Articles 240 and 242 do not apply because the beneficiary employees helped by the Act are not civil servants is a tenuous one. It may very well be possible that these employees fall within the category of service of Pakistan.

16. The test whether a person is in the service of Pakistan is whether he is performing functions in connection with the affairs of the Federation. In the judgment reported as Salahuddin v. Frontier Sugar Mills and Distillery Ltd. (PLD 1975 SC 244) the Court elaborated this function test as follows:

"Now, what is meant by the phrase "performing functions in connection with the affairs of the Federation or a Province." It is clear that the reference is to governmental or state functions, involving, in one form or another, an element of exercise of public power. The functions may be the traditional police functions of the State, involving the maintenance of law and order and other regulatory activities; or they may comprise functions pertaining to economic development, social welfare, education, public utility services and other State enterprises of an industrial or commercial nature. Ordinarily, these functions would be performed by persons or agencies directly appointed, controlled and financed by the State, i.e. by the Federal Government or a Provincial Government. However, in recent years, there has been manifest a growing tendency on the part of Governments to create statutory corporations for undertaking many such functions, particularly in the industrial and commercial spheres, in the belief that free from the inhibiting effect of red-tapism, these semi-autonomous bodies may prove more effective, flexible and also profitable. Inevitably, Government retains effective control over their functioning by appointing the heads and other senior officers of these corporations, by regulating their composition and procedures by appropriate statutes, and by finding funds for financing their activities.

...The primary test must always be whether the functions entrusted to the organization or person concerned are indeed functions of the State involving same exercise of sovereign or public power; whether the control of the organization vests in a substantial manner in the hands of Government; and whether the bulk of the funds is provided by the State. If these conditions are fulfilled, then the person, including a body politic or body corporate, may indeed be regarded as a person performing functions in connection with the affairs of the Federation or a Province; otherwise not."

(emphasis supplied)

Therefore, in essence for an entity (where a person is employed) to qualify as being in the service of Pakistan, it must fulfill three criteria:

i. It must exercise public or sovereign power in some form;

ii. The government must retain effective/ substantial control over its functioning; and

iii. Its activities must be mainly financed by the government.

The application of this test was duly explained in Aitchison College v. Muhammad Zubair (PLD 2002 SC 326):

"Applying the above test (laid down in Frontier Sugar Mills) on the facts of instant cases, we feel no hesitation in drawing inference that the Board of Governors, Aitchison College, Lahore headed by the Governor of the Province as its President along with other officers i.e. Secretaries Education, Finance and General Officer Commanding as well as unofficial Members are involved in providing education which is one of the responsibility of the State and by taking over its management and control the Board, exercises sovereign powers as well as public powers being a statutory functionary of Government... and even if for sake of arguments if it is presumed that no financial aid is being provided to the College from the Provincial Public exchequer, even then, the College remains in dominating control of the Provincial Government through Board of Governors. Therefore, the above test stands fully satisfied and we are persuaded to hold that organization of the Aitchison College, Lahore falls within the definition of a person."

(emphasis supplied)

17. We have already noted in para 5 above that the present matter pertains (primarily) to 10 employers, namely: IB; CAR; NHA; PTCL; OPF; SLIC; CAA; WAPDA; SSGC and TCP. Except for IB, which is a civilian intelligence agency, all other 9 employers are attached departments/ corporations of Ministries/ Divisions:

| Sr No. | Employers | Ministry/ Division | Functions |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | CAR | Ministry of States and Frontier Regions | Facilitation of Afghan Refugees crossing the border into Pakistan. |
| 2 | NHA | Ministry of Communications | Planning, development, operation, repair and |

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | | | maintenance of National Highways and Strategic Roads. |
| 3 | PTCL | Ministry of Information Technology and Tele-communication | Provision of domestic and international tele-communication and related services. |
| 4 | OPF | Ministry of Overseas Pakistani and Human Resource Development | Welfare of overseas Pakistanis and their families. |
| 5 | SLIC | Ministry of Commerce | Life Insurance Business. |
| 6 | CAA | Cabinet Secretariat Aviation Division | Regulation and control of civil aviation activities within Pakistan. |
| 7 | WAPDA | Ministry of Water Resources | Development of water and hydropower resources in an efficient manner. |
| 8 | SSGC | Ministry of Energy | Transmission and distribution of natural gas. |
| 9 | TCP | Ministry of Commerce | Public sector trade house i.e., export of agricultural and consumer goods and import of essential commodities. |

18. On an examination of the data listed above, it becomes clear that the vast majority of the employers involved in the litigation before us are performing functions which fall within the exclusive domain of the State. Equally, their affairs are also substantially controlled by the Federal Government:

| Sr. No. | Employers | Administrative Control |
|---|---|---|
| 1 | CAR | All Chief Commissionerates and Commissioners work under the Ministry of States and Frontier Regions (http://kpkcar.org/about/introduction). |
| 2 | NHA | 6 of the 7 members of the National Highway Council are either representatives of the Federal Government or are nominated by the President [Section 5(1) of the National Highway Authority Act, 1991]. |
| 3 | PTCL | The Federal Government owns majority of the shares of PTCL (SRO 453(I)/2006 dated 09.05.2006). |
| 4 | OPF | Board of Governors is comprised of the relevant Minister and such other members as the Government nominates [Rule 2(gg) of the Emigration Rules, 1979]. All operations of OPF are managed by the Board of Governors taking into account the policy directions issued by the Government (https://www.opf.org.pk/about/). |
| 5 | SLIC | Directors are appointed by the Federal Government and Chairman of SLIC is also nominated by the Federal Government from amongst the Directors [Article 12(1) of Life Insurance (Nationalisation) Order, 1972]. |
| 6 | CAA | 5 of the 6 members of the Board are either representatives of the Federal Government or are nominated by it [Sections 4(2) |

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| | | and 14(1) of the Pakistan Civil Aviation Authority Ordinance, 2021 ("2021 Ordinance")]. Additionally, the directives issued by the Federal Government on matters of policy are binding on CAA [Section 28(1) of the 2021 Ordinance]. |
| 7 | WAPDA | The appointment and removal of the Chairman and members of WAPDA are under the control of the Government [Sections 4(1) and 6 of Pakistan Water and Power Development Authority Act, 1958]. |
| 8 | SSGC | Government of Pakistan directly and indirectly owns majority of the shareholding of SSGC (https://www.ssgc.com.pk/web/?page_id=68). |
| 9 | TCP | Directors of TCP are appointed by, and hold office during, the pleasure of the Federal Government (Article 92 of Memorandum and Articles of Association of TCP). Shares of TCP are owned by the Ministry of Commerce (https://tcp.gov.pk/page-page-aboutus). |

19. In view of the above information, it is clear that nearly all of the employers before us are involved in the service of Pakistan (except employees of IB who are civil servants) and so there employees are squarely covered by the provisions of Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution.

20. Learned counsel then argued that Article 240 merely specifies that appointments to the service of Pakistan must be governed by Federal legislation. It does not lay down any specific conditions for compliance by the appointing authorities during the appointment process. We consider that the said argument is best addressed by the judgment of this Court in Mubashir Raza Jaffri v. Employees Old-Age Benefits Institutions (2014 SCMR 949):

"22. In the 1st case of Muhammad Yasin [PLD 2012 SC 132] (supra) the appointment of Chairman Oil and Gas Regulatory Authority (OGRA) was declared illegal. In the 2nd case of Muhammad Ashraf Tiwana [2013 SCMR 1159] (supra) the appointment of the Chairman Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan (SECP) was held to be in contravention to statutory requirements. Both these cases reiterated the principle that appointments made in a statutory body or Corporation under the control of Provincial or Federal Government in an arbitrary and capricious manner cannot be allowed to hold the field. In the 3rd case of Tariq Aziz-ud-Din [2010 SCMR 1301] (supra) this Court underscored the integral link between good governance and a strong and honest bureaucracy. It was stated that this could only come about if appointments made were based on a clear merit criterion, in accordance with the relevant laws and rules as opposed to favouritism and nepotism... All the cases discussed above reveal that the jurisdiction of this Court has been clear and consistent with regard to the manner in which appointments to public offices are to be made strictly in accordance with applicable rules and regulations, without any discrimination and in a transparent manner. Thus, it is essential that all appointments to public institutions must be based on a process that is palpably and tangibly fair and within the parameters of its applicable rules, regulations and bye-laws..."

(emphasis supplied)

21. It may be noticed from the dictum cited that Article 240 is simply the bedrock on which appointments to the service of Pakistan are to be made. It is then the responsibility of the appointing authorities to ensure that appointments are made strictly in accordance with the relevant laws (including the applicable rules and regulations) that incorporate the principles of merit (selection through a competitive process), non-discrimination, transparency and fairness. Whilst the cases just cited were primarily concerned with appointments to the senior most posts in an organisation, in our considered view the same principles apply to appointments on any post in public service since an organisation can only best serve the people of Pakistan when all its employees are qualified individuals who are selected through a fair and transparent process. In the absence of dedicated supporting staff, no senior officer sitting at the helm of affairs can succeed in guiding the nation towards prosperity. However, it is significant that these cherished principles are not merely fruit of judge made law but they also emanate from the fundamental rights enshrined in the Constitution, especially Article 18 (freedom of trade, business or profession) wherefor they occupy an immutable character. This is confirmed by the Court in Mushtaq Ahmad Mohal v. Honourable Lahore High Court (1997 SCMR 1043):

"16. ...It may be observed that even otherwise, the Constitutional requirement, inter alia, enshrined in Article 18 of the Constitution... includes the right of a citizen to compete and participate for appointment to a post in any Federal or a Provincial Government department or an attached department or autonomous bodies/corporations etc. on the basis of open competition, which right he cannot exercise unless the process of appointment is transparent, fair, just and free from any complaint as to its transparency and fairness..."

(emphasis supplied)

The above enunciation of law reiterates principles laid down by the Court in Munawar Khan v. Niaz Muhammad (1993 SCMR 1287) at para 6 and Abdul Jabbar Memon: In re (1996 SCMR 1349). However, the material on record in the present case, furnished by the relevant Ministries/ Divisions, establishes that these principles of merit, non-discrimination, transparency and fairness were not followed in the vast majority of the initial appointments (from 01.11.1993 to 30.11.1996). Therefore, such defective appointments suffered from illegality and were void.

| Sr. No. | Employer | Violations |
|---|---|---|
| 1 | IB | Appointed without advertisement and test and/or interview. FST and Hon'ble Supreme Court dismissed their appeals/petitions before their reinstatement under the Act. |
| 2 | NHA | Appointed without advertisement and competitive process. |
| 3 | OPF | Some employees were appointed on contract without observing codal formalities. Others were terminated on competition of respective projects. 01 was terminated after disciplinary proceedings. |
| 4 | SLIC | Appointed without following codal formalities. |
| 5 | CAA | Appointed without advertisement and rules. |
| 6 | WAPDA | Employees were terminated as they were irregularly appointed. |
| 7 | SSGC | Employees were hired on special projects on temporary assignments and were declared redundant after competition of projects. |
| 8 | TCP | Employees were terminated on winding up of their organizations (which subsequently merged with TCP). |

22. For the initial appointments of beneficiary employees that were illegal from the outset, it was not within the competence of Parliament to enact laws that firstly, bypassed the settled requirements enshrined in the Constitution for joining public employment and secondly, protected these unlawful appointments without curing their respective defects. Such contravention can be seen in section 4 of the Act where all beneficiary employees were ordered to be regularised (either on the same scale or on one-step higher scale) within a certain timeframe without complying any codal formalities and without regard to the nature of the post that they occupied prior to their dismissal, removal or termination from service. A few examples of the types of employees who were required to be regularised under the Act are listed below for reference:

i. Employees appointed on permanent, temporary, regular or ad hoc basis or otherwise against a regular or temporary post [section 4(a)];

ii. Employees appointed on contract basis against a regular or temporary post [section 4(b)]; and

iii. Employees appointed as any type of trainee [section 4(d)].

23. It is an established principle of law that State and public functionaries act as fiduciaries for and are responsible/accountable to the people of Pakistan. They are duty bound to act in the furtherance of public interest [In re: Suo Motu (2010 SCMR 885) at para 63]. However, how the public interest was promoted by reinstating these beneficiary employees who had been inducted without complying with the duly prescribed procedure for appointment is neither determinable nor defensible. Consequently, this ground raised by the review petitioners fails to satisfy the test of 'error apparent on the face of the record.'

C. Beneficiary Employees Constitute a Distinct Class

24. In the alternate to provide constitutional protection to the Ordinances and Act, learned counsel for the parties vehemently argued that these pieces of legislation were promulgated and enacted to redress the grievous wrong committed by the unlawful dismissal, removal or termination of the beneficiary employees. It was emphasised that the beneficiary employees had been appointed during PPP's rule which is why they were later removed by the caretaker government. Reference was made to the Debates of the Senate from the relevant time period by the learned Attorney General to demonstrate that the Act was indeed passed to provide relief to the beneficiary employees as causalities of political victimisation. Therefore, the learned counsel argued that the beneficiary employees formed a distinct class founded on reasonable classification so their reinstatement did not violate the command in Article 25 for equal treatment.

25. It is by now settled law that although Article 25 of the Constitution envisages equality amongst citizens, it also allows for differential treatment of persons who are not similarly placed under a reasonable classification. However, to justify this difference in treatment the reasonable classification needs to be 'based on intelligible differentia that has a rational nexus with the object being sought to be achieved' [Commissioner Inland Revenue v. Tariq Mehmood (2021 SCMR 440) at para 14]. Only if this test is satisfied can the distinct treatment meted out to a class of persons be sustained under Article 25. Consequently, it needs to be examined whether the beneficiary employees formed members of a class on the basis of reasonable classification in order to be entitled to the relief granted by the Act.

26. As great emphasis was laid by learned counsel on political victimisation, it would be appropriate to consider that point first. A similar matter of this nature, albeit in the context of criminal prosecution for offences, came up in Mobashir Hassan v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2010 SC 265). In that case the constitutionality of the National Reconciliation Ordinance, 2007 ("2007 Ordinance") was challenged before this Court. Whilst many objections were raised against the 2007 Ordinance, the only provision pertinent for our present attention is section 2 ibid which provided:

"2. Amendment of section 494, Act V of 1898.---

In the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Act V of 1898), section 494 shall be renumbered as subsection (1) thereof and after sub section (1) renumbered as aforesaid, the following subsections (2) and (3) shall be added, namely:-

(2) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in subsection (1), the Federal Government or a Provincial Government may, before the judgment is pronounced by a trial court, withdraw from the prosecution of any person including an absconding accused who is found to be falsely involved for political reasons or through political victimization in any case initiated between 1st day of January, 1986 to 12th day of October, 1999..." (emphasis supplied)

27. The Court, whilst examining the vires of section 2 observed:

"64. The amendment in section 494 Cr.P.C .... had also created discrimination with the accused, who were facing trial prior to 1st January, 1986 or had been charged for the offence after 12th October, 1999. The preamble of the NRO, 2007 coupled with any of its substantive part, had not disclosed the reasons, calling for so-called `national reconciliation' in between this period, presuming that an accused, facing charge entailing major penalty of death, is not entitled for discharge, by means of extra judicial forum, or for the same treatment, if he has committed the crime after 13th October, 1999, and up till now. We have posed a question to ourselves i.e. whether there had been no political victimization after 12th October, 1999 uptill now, on account of which accused persons were involved falsely in the commission of the offence but we could not succeed in getting the answer of the same except observing that specific dates were incorporated in the NRO, 2007 for achieving specific object as well as the specific purpose...

. . .

66. Above discussion... persuades us to hold that the classification amongst the accused persons, facing trial during the specific period i.e. 1st January 1986 to 12th October 1999, is based on arbitrariness and no reasons have been disclosed in the NRO, 2007 for entering into so-called `reconciliation' with particular group of accused persons, except in the name of `national reconciliation' on the pretext that the cases were politically motivated against them... Similarly on the basis of intelligible differentia for reasonable classification, the differentiation has not been understood logically and it seems that for specific purpose, an artificial grouping was made, causing injustice to the accused persons, who were placed in the same position and instead of achieving the `national reconciliation' the NRO, 2007 had served the purpose of `individual reconciliation'." (emphasis supplied)

28. The extracts produced hereinabove make it clear that the features of section 2 that persuaded the Court, inter alia, to declare the 2007 Ordinance ultra vires the Constitution also exist in the present case. These are as follows:

i. The Act discriminates against similarly placed persons who were dismissed, removed or terminated from service in the periods prior to 01.11.1996 and subsequent to 12.10.1999;

ii. The preamble of the Act coupled with its substantive provisions do not disclose the reason for reinstatement of only those employees who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service during the specific period of 01.11.1996 till 12.10.1999; and

iii. The Act was enacted to achieve a specific object and purpose, namely, the reinstatement of those employees who had been initially appointed during PPP's tenure.

29. Clearly then the Act's classification of the time period is neither reasonable nor based on any intelligible differentia. There is also no rational nexus with the object being sought to be achieved because if the intent of Parliament was to assist people who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service on account of political victimisation then there is no rhyme or reason as to why only the persons dismissed, removed or terminated between 01.11.1996 and 12.10.1999 were granted this relief. Surely such a classification ought to have been preceded by some study, data collection and analysis, however, the same are lacking. In our view there must exist a plethora of people since 1947 (till date) who have been unfairly removed from service on account of political victimisation yet no favour is extended to them by the Act. Even the Debates of the Senate are of no help to the review petitioners because it is well-established 'that reference to legislative history is permissible only as an aid to construction of legislation which is ambiguous or obscure or the literal meaning of which leads to an absurdity i.e. from the text of a statute, the court is unable to decipher the real intent of the Legislature' [Gulshan Bibi v. Muhammad Sadiq (PLD 2016 SC 769) at para 6]. However, no such absurdity or obscurity exists in the present case because the Act categorically omits to mention any reason for only reinstating the beneficiary employees who were initially appointed during the relevant period (between 01.11.1993 and 30.11.1996). In this way, the Act is on an even worse footing than the 2007 Ordinance which at least referred to political victimisation in section 2 to justify its chosen time period. As a result, this contention of learned counsel also does not satisfy the test of review.

D. Caretaker Government had no Power to Dismiss, Remove or Terminate the Beneficiary Employees

30. To sustain the validity of the legislation, learned counsel next submitted that the beneficiary employees were removed by the caretaker government even though the latter possessed no such power. However, even if for the sake of argument we were to accept this contention of learned counsel, the issue arises that the time period (from 01.11.1996 till 12.10.1999) for which relief has been granted by the Act significantly exceeds the tenure of the caretaker government of the time (from 05.11.1996 till 17.02.1997). If indeed the purpose of reinstating the beneficiary employees was solely to redress this illegality then it needs to be pondered why the Act granted relief to beneficiary employees who had been dismissed, removed or terminated prior to 05.11.1996 and subsequent to 17.02.1997 when no caretaker government was in office. In fact, a substantial portion of the time period fixed by the Act (during which the allegedly illegal dismissals, removals or terminations took place) overlaps with the tenure of constitutionally elected governments which enjoyed the power to dismiss, remove or terminate persons from service. Therefore, this argument of learned counsel has no relevance to the facts of the present case.

E. Fundamental Rights of the Regular Employees

31. Learned counsel then submitted that by the reinstatement of the beneficiary employees, no fundamental rights of any regular employee had been violated. Specifically, it was argued that if at all there was some disadvantage suffered by the regular employees it was limited only to the extent of seniority/promotion which in any event was not a right, let alone a fundamental right.

32. We respectfully disagree with this contention put forward by learned counsel. We have already observed in paras 21 and 22 that the reinstatements under the Act were carried out without following any proper procedure and without having regard to the nature of the posts occupied by the beneficiary employees during their initial appointments. On the other hand, the regular employees were inducted into service after fulfilling all the codal formalities. Therefore, by giving leeway to the beneficiary employees and by placing them at the same (or in some cases better) footing in the organisational structure of the employers the fundamental rights of the regular employees were breached, in particular Articles 4, 9 and 18 of the Constitution, which read:

"4. Right of individuals to be dealt with in accordance with law, etc. (1) To enjoy the protection of law and to be treated in accordance with law is the inalienable right of every citizen, wherever he may be, and of every other person for the time being within Pakistan.

. . .

9. Security of person. No person shall be deprived of life or liberty save in accordance with law.

. . .

18. Freedom of trade, business or profession. Subject to such qualifications, if any, as may be prescribed by law, every citizen shall have the right to enter upon any lawful profession or occupation, and to conduct any lawful trade or business:"

(emphasis supplied)

33. All three constitutional provisions envisage a State in which all aspects of a citizen's life, including his/her right to enter a profession, will be regulated by law. Nevertheless, the Act by reinstating the beneficiary employees whilst ignoring the applicable laws, rules and regulations, which detailed the process to be followed in making appointments, has flouted these guarantees of the Constitution. Therefore, the Act has directly impinged upon the fundamental rights of regular employees. Consequently, no exception can be taken to the finding recorded in the judgment under review in this regard.

F. Non-Obstante Clause

34. Learned counsel then submitted that the judgment under review attached undue weightage to the non - obstante clause contained in Section 4 of the Act. It was argued that it was within the legislative competence of Parliament to nullify a Judgment of the Supreme Court, therefore, the judgment under review could not hold that the 'non-obstante clause has failed abysmally to provide unfettered protection to the Act of 2010' (refer to para 23 of the judgment under review).

35. As already pointed out in para 5, the cases before us are chiefly concerned with the beneficiary employees of 10 employers. These employees run into the thousands and in many cases employees of the same employer are represented by different counsel. During arguments, it was argued by counsel and became clear to us that of the beneficiary employees before us only some had challenged their removal, dismissal or termination before the relevant fora whereas the rest had not pursued any legal action (this is also the case with beneficiary employees who have worked for the same employer). In light of these unusual circumstances and our findings recorded above, we consider it best not to delve deeper into this issue as it will purely be an academic exercise which this Court does not ordinarily enter into [Munawar Iqbal Gondal v. Nasira Iqbal (2014 SCMR 860) at para 4]. We are solidified in our view by the fact that this ground was primarily used in the judgment under review not as a reason to strike down the Act but to simply hold that the non-obstante clause did not prevent judicial scrutiny of the Act on the constitutional plane. Therefore, not much substance, if any, is left in determining what the implication of the non-obstante clause is.

G. Reading Down of the Act

36. The next challenge thrown to the decision in the judgment under review by learned counsel was that it exceeded the mandate of Article 8(1) of the Constitution. For ease of reference, this provision is produced below:

"8. Laws inconsistent with or in derogation of fundamental rights to be void. (1) Any law, or any custom or usage having the force of law, in so far as it is inconsistent with the rights conferred by this Chapter, shall, to the extent of such inconsistency, be void."

(emphasis supplied)

Learned counsel argued that in deference to Article 8(1) of the Constitution, the judgment under review should have read down section 4 of the Act and preserved its watered-down version along with the other provisions of the Act that were not inconsistent with fundamental rights. However, such contention of learned counsel fails to recognise two important aspects of section 4:

i. Firstly, section 4 as it stands does not suffer from just a singular defect. Instead, it is fundamentally flawed. It not only provides one-step higher regularisation in subsection (a) [which could potentially have been read down] but it also, as already observed in para 22, regularises all beneficiary employees regardless of the post they were occupying before their initial termination. This defect is so central to section 4 that to read it down would essentially require this Court to re write it which is not permissible as such an exercise would enter into the realm of legislation [Zahid Iqbal v. Muhammad Adnan (2016 SCMR 430) at para 14]; and

ii. Secondly, section 4 is the governing/primary provision of the Act. Therefore, once it is declared unconstitutional no substance is left in the Act as all other provisions are secondary to section 4 and cannot control the operation of the Act on their own. As a result, no purpose will be achieved in retaining the Act on the statute book when its effect will have been destroyed by the deletion of section 4.

H. Prospective Application of Judgment Under Review

37. Learned counsel finally argued that even if the Act was ultra vires the Constitution, the declaration in the judgment under review should have applied prospectively, in accordance with law settled by this Court, thereby protecting the benefits accorded to the beneficiary employees.

38. In our considered opinion, the proposition put forward by learned counsel does not fully understand the true import of the judgments of this Court on the effect of a declaration made by it. In Pakistan Medical and Dental Council v. Muhammad Fahad Malik (2018 SCMR 1956) the Court acknowledged that judgments of the Court operate prospectively, however, it qualified the said finding by holding that the judgments of this Court could operate retrospectively if so declared [para 24(k)]. Consequently, there is no binding rule that all judgments issued by the Court take effect only from the date of pronouncement. An example of this can be seen in the Mobashir Hassan case (supra) wherein the Court observed:

"171. We... have come to the conclusion that the NRO, 2007 as a whole, particularly its sections 2, 6 and 7, is declared void ab initio being ultra vires and violative of Articles 4, 8, 12, 13, 25, 62(f), 63(1)(h), 63(1)(p), 89, 175, 227 of the Constitution, therefore, it shall be deemed non est from the day of its promulgation i.e. 5th October 2007 as a consequence whereof all steps taken, actions suffered, and all orders passed by whatever authority, any orders passed by the Courts of law including the orders of discharge and acquittals recorded in favour of accused persons, are also declared never to have existed in the eyes of law and resultantly of no legal effect."

(emphasis supplied)

39. In the instant case, we are also faced with a similar situation since the Act has been adjudged to be violative of the different provisions of the Constitution, specifically Articles 4, 9, 18, 25, 240 and 242. The judgment under review has placed reliance on two other judgments of this Court reported as Ali Azhar Khan Baloch v. Province of Sindh (2015 SCMR 456) and Shahid Pervaiz v. Ejaz Ahmad (2017 SCMR 206) [refer to paras 54-56 of the judgment under review] to arrive at the same decision. We have perused these judgments and find no cavil with what has been stated therein. Even the principle of locus poenitentiae is of no help to learned counsel since the consistent stance of this Court has been that the said principle 'would not be attracted in a case under which the benefit has been extended by a law which was violative of the provisions of the Constitution' [Azam Shah v. Federation of Pakistan (2022 SCMR 201) at para 13]. As a result, no ground for review is made out on this front.

CONCLUSION

40. For the detailed reasons set out above, we dismiss the 108 review petitions. The 35 Civil Misc. Applications and 3 Civil Misc. Appeals are disposed of as having become infructuous.

41. However, we consider that having rendered a service of 10 years or more since their reinstatement under the Ordinances and the Act the beneficiary employees, most of whom are nearing retirement and have minimal future job prospects, have dedicated a considerable period of their life to their employers and so deserve to be treated with leniency. More so, when through no fault of their own, the beneficiary employees were inducted and subsequently reinstated into the service of their employers without the fulfilment of the necessary codal formalities. Therefore, in exercise of our inherent power conferred under Order XXXIII, Rule 6 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 and in reliance on our power to do ex debito justitiae, as elaborated in the judgment reported as Sher Alam Khan v. Abdul Munim (PLD 2018 SC 449):

"20. We are aware that in the instant case, the lis has reached this Court not by invoking Article 184(3) of the Constitution (though the learned High Court was exercising its Constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199). Be that as it may, this Court is not precluded from converting one type of proceedings into another type, including the existing proceedings under Article 185(3) of the Constitution and exercising our jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution so as to adjudicate upon disqualification or lack of qualification of Respondent No.l. This Court in the judgment reported as Muhammad Akram v. DCO, Rahim Yar Khan and others (2017 SCMR 56) held as follows:

"7. The Courts are sanctuaries of justice, and in exercise of authority to do ex debito justitiae, that is to say remedy a wrong and to suppress a mischief to which a litigant is entitled. No fetters or bar could be placed on the High Court and or this court to convert and treat one type of proceeding into another type and proceed to decide the matter either itself provided it has jurisdiction over the lis before it in exercise of another jurisdiction vested in the very court... Courts have been treating and or converting appeal into revisions and vice versa and Constitution Petitions into appeal or revision and vice versa.'"

we convert these review proceedings filed under Article 188 of the Constitution into proceedings under Article 184(3) read with Article 187 ibid to grant the following relief to the beneficiary employees:

i. Following the principle set out in Muhammad Akram v. Registrar, Islamabad High Court (PLD 2016 SC 961) at para 79 [we note that this judgment was subsequently overruled in Gul Taiz Khan Marwat v. Registrar, Peshawar High Court (PLD 2021 SC 391), however, that declaration was only to the extent that the administrative orders of a Chief Justice of a High Court are not amenable to writ jurisdiction], we hold that the beneficiary employees who were holding posts for which no aptitude, scholastic or skill test was required at the time of initial termination (01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) shall be restored to the same posts they were holding when they were terminated by the judgment under review;

ii. All other beneficiary employees who were holding posts on their initial termination (01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) which required the passing of an aptitude, scholastic or skill test shall be restored to the posts, on the same terms and conditions, they were occupying on the date of their initial termination. However, to remain appointed on these posts and to uphold the cherished principles of merit, non-discrimination, transparency and fairness expected in the process of appointment to public institutions these beneficiary employees shall have to undergo the relevant test, applicable to their posts, conducted by the Federal Public Service Commission within 3 months from the date of receipt of this judgment;

iii. The improvement in the terms and conditions of service of all the beneficiary employees shall be granted strictly in accordance with the applicable laws, rules and regulations; and

iv. The relief granted in sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) shall not be granted to those beneficiary employees whose initial termination of service (01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) was on grounds of absence from duty, misconduct, corruption, misappropriation of money/stock or unfitness on medical grounds if such termination was not set aside finally by a court of law.

42. Copies of this judgment shall be sent to the concerned employers, the Ministry of Law and Justice and the Establishment Division for appropriate action. Consequently, all review petitions are dismissed and all applications/appeals are disposed of in the above terms.

| | |
|---|---|
| Sd/- Umar Ata Bandial, J Sd/- Sajjad Ali Shah, J | Sd/- Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, J Sd/- Amin-ud-Din Khan, J |

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---

Table of Contents

Preface ..... 1735
Reasons for Dissent 1736
Enactment of the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 and its salient features 1738
Disputes under the Re-instatement Act in the cases decided by the judgment under review 1739
Contentions of the petitioners 1740
Constitution of larger bench for hearing review petitions 1741
Short Order..... 1741
Discussion and decision on the contentions of the petitioners 1742
(i) Question of vires of the Re-instatement Act, not raised in the forums below..... 1742
(ii) Omission to give notice to Attorney-General for Pakistan, under Rule 1 of Order XXVII-A of the C.P.C. 1743
(iii) Non-issuing notice to and non-hearing of the persons likely to be affected by the decision of the Court..... 1745
(iv) All employees dealt with by the Re-instatement Act, not either "civil servants" or persons in the "service of Pakistan"..... 1747
(v) Misconstruction and misapplication of Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution..... 1747
(vi) Employees reinstated under the Reinstatement Act, whether belong to a distinct class and their reinstatement does not offend Article 25 of the Constitution..... 1750
(vii) Application of the principles of reading out and reading down, to uphold the constitutionality of the Re-instatement Act..... 1756
Providing equal opportunity to all citizens and ensuring transparency in the process for appointment to the public employment..... 1764

Preface

"Unless we protect democracy, democracy cannot protect us."[1] One of the foundations of democracy is a legislature elected freely and periodically by the people. This dissent recognizes the central role of legislature and the principle of separation of powers in a constitutional democracy. Justice McLachlin[2] has rightly said that in democracies, "the elected legislators, the executive and the courts all have their role to play. Each must play that role in a spirit of profound respect for the other. We are not adversaries. We are all in the justice business, together." Separation of powers is the backbone of a constitutional system.[3] The legislature, the executive and the judiciary have no authority beyond that granted to them under the Constitution. None of them is omnipotent.

2. Separation of powers means reciprocal checks and balances between the different branches. It does not mean walls between the branches but rather bridges which balance and check.[4] Montesquieu put freedom at the core of separation of powers.[5] The concept of separation of powers is not to maximize efficiency but rather to maximize freedom.[6] The principle of separation of powers has double meaning: First, it means distinguishing among different branches of government, giving each branch a central and primary function. Second, it means that different branches have reciprocal relationship in which each checks and balances over the other branches. Thus, for example, the legislature can change the rules of the game by amending the existing law or by enacting new law, but it must do so within the framework of the Constitution. On the other hand, the judiciary is authorized to interpret the Constitution and law but it is not authorized to create, amend or rewrite the Constitution or to enact a new law.[7] Judiciary, like the other branches of the government, is also not invincible but is to function under the supreme law of the land i.e., the Constitution.

3. The primary and central function of the legislative branch is to create laws and the courts must give weight to the purpose of the law remembering that legislation promotes social policy and is a tool for achieving a societal goal. This subjective purpose of the statute becomes a key factor in interpreting the statute. Therefore, in the first instance, the role of the courts is to safeguard and actualize these laws in the public interest. Judges should therefore give statutes a meaning that bridges the gap between the law and the social reality. Next is the objective purpose of the statute, where it honours and protects the constitutional values, and the fundamental rights ofthe people. It is only when the subjective or the objective purpose of the legislature outsteps the constitutional boundary that the courts interfere and set the course right by enforcing the constitutional limits. Even in that case when the courts rule that a statute is unconstitutional and invalidates it, it does not undermine the legislature or violate the separation of powers because it is the principle of separation of powers that informs us that legislative authority does not include the authority to pass unconstitutional laws. Hence, the principle of separation of powers is the very source of judicial review.

Reasons for Dissent

4. As I have differed with the view of all my learned colleagues on this Bench, I owe an obligation to explain why I remained unable to subscribe to their opinion.

5. First and foremost, I hold the principles of separation of powers and legislative supremacy, subject to the overarching constitutional limitations, to be the bedrock of a constitutional democracy. The courts must remember that the legislation is the manifestation of the will of the people and the collective wisdom of their chosen representatives in the Parliament. Courts must therefore tread carefully to judicially review the act of the legislature. First, efforts should be made by the Court to save the constitutionality of the legislation by exhausting the interpretative tools e.g. of "reading down" or "reading out" to make the legislation constitution compliant. Only when the legislation happens to be opposed to the constitutional values and the fundamental rights and allowing such a statute to remain on the statute book would be unconstitutional, should the courts interfere. Such freedom and respect is enjoyed by the branches of the government under a prosperous and a progressive constitutional democracy. Instead of adopting this route the majority struck down the legislation and granted similar relief to the sacked employees, already granted by the legislation, in the first place. I found myself in minority in subscribing to this constitutional construct.

6. Secondly, I could not sidestep the decision of a 7-Member Bench of this Court in Shabbar Raza[8] which was overlooked by the majority. Needless to mention that the declaration of law made in Shabbar Raza by a larger Bench of 7-Members is binding on the present 5-Member Bench. Shabbar Raza categorically and authoritatively holds that the original jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution "cannot be exercised as a parallel review jurisdiction", and a judgment or an order of this Court "can never be challenged by virtue of filing independent proceedings under Article 184(3) of the Constitution". Such course has been held to be "absolutely impermissible". In utmost humility, I am at loss to comprehend how the majority after dismissing all the review petitions, and other miscellaneous applications, could go ahead and convert the proceedings of the same review petitions into proceedings under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. After dismissal of the review petitions, there remain no proceedings that can be converted into some other proceedings. I also regret my inability to understand how a judgment of this Court can be modified in exercise of the jurisdiction under Article 184(3), after the dismissal of the review petitions which also prayed for similar modification.

7. Thirdly, the initial appointments of the review petitioners were not challenged either before us or before the Bench that originally heard these cases. In this background, the assumption of jurisdiction regarding appointments by the majority on its own without specifying the jurisdiction under which it has such power to do so, in my humble view, was a jurisdictional overstepping to which I could not be a party. Further, the expression of adverse remarks against a political party in making appointments of the petitioners through executive actions and in making their reinstatement through legislative actions, without impleading that political party in the present proceedings and without providing the political party an opportunity of hearing, appears to me to be negation of the elementary principle of natural justice. Without impleading the political party, in my view, the Court could only discuss the appointment of the petitioners as an executive action of the Government and their reinstatement as a legislative action of the Parliament, and not of a particular political party.

Enactment of the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act 2010 and its salient features

8. The Parliament of Pakistan enacted the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 ("Re-instatement Act"), on 8 December 2010, "for the purpose of providing relief to persons who were appointed in a corporation service or autonomous or semi-autonomous bodies or in Government service during the period from the 1st day of November, 1993 to the 30th day of November, 1996 (both days inclusive) and were dismissed, removed or terminated from service during the period from the 1st day of November, 1996 to the 12th day of October, 1999 (both days inclusive)."[9] Earlier to the enactment of the Re-instatement Act, the President of Pakistan, on the advice of the Federal Cabinet, had promulgated four Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Ordinances for the same purpose: Ordinance No. II of 2009 promulgated on 14 February 2009, Ordinance No. XI of 2009 promulgated on 11 June 2009, Ordinance No. XIII of 2009 promulgated on 30 October 2009[10] and Ordinance No. XII of 2010 promulgated on 5 February 2010.

9. Under the Re-instatement Act, the persons of the specified class were to be reinstated and regularized in service, mostly in the same scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation from which they were dismissed, removed or terminated.[11] Only two categories of the persons, namely, (i) the persons who had earlier been appointed on permanent or temporary basis, or regular or ad hoc basis,[12] and (ii) the persons the structure of whose posts had been changed meanwhile,[13] were to be reinstated and regularized in service on one scale higher than the scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation from which they were dismissed, removed or terminated. The persons who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service on any charges or allegations were also classified into two categories: (i) the persons who were proved not guilty of those charges or allegations in enquiry conducted on directions of any administrative authority or of any court or tribunal,[14] and (ii) the persons the determination of whose guilt was either unchallenged or unsuccessfully challenged. For reinstatement and regularization of persons belonging to category (ii), a Review Board was established.[15] The Review Board was to make, on the review petitions of such employees,[16] a fresh enquiry into facts and pass an order of reinstatement and regularization if it was satisfied that they were not guilty of the charges or allegations.[17] As to the date of regularization and seniority of the reinstated employees, the Re-instatement Act provided that an employee reinstated under the Act in a post, scale, grade, cadre, group or designation would be regularized as a permanent employee in that post, scale, grade, cadre, group or designation with effect from the day of enactment of the Act and would be placed at the bottom of the seniority list effective as on the date of enactment of the Act.[18]

Disputes under the Re-instatement Act in the cases decided by the judgment under review

10. In the course of implementation of the Re-instatement Act, the disputes started arising between the persons claiming their reinstatement and regularization under the Re-instatement Act and persons working as regular employees at the time of enactment of the Re instatement Act, in Government departments, corporations or bodies. The disputes between the former were regarding the entitlement of such persons to the relief provided under the Re-instatement Act, while the disputes between the latter were regarding the issue of seniority arising from the reinstatement and regularization of such persons on one scale higher than the scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation from which they had been dismissed, removed or terminated. These two types of disputes also arose in the cases decided by the judgment under review, and were stated in para 2 of the judgment:

2. There are a number of groups of cases, in which appellants/petitioners have impugned the appointments/ promotions under the Sacked Employees (Reinstatement) Ordinance Act, 2010 ... Those groups can be divided into two categories, i.e. (i) those employees who were the regular employees of the organizations/ departments, whose seniority has been affected by the employees inducted under the Act of 2010; and (ii) those persons who have not been extended the benefit of the Act of 2010.

It was in the backdrop of these disputes that this Court took up and decided the question of constitutional vires of the Re-instatement Act. The Court, by the judgment under review, held that the Re-instatement Act is ultra vires the Constitution with the following findings:

52 ... The Act has extended undue advantage to a certain class of citizens thereby violating the fundamental rights under Articles 4, 9, and 25 of the employees in the Service of Pakistan and being [sic - is] void under Article 8 of the Constitution.

53. The Legislature also lacked the legislative competence to enact The Act of 2010 as it has wrongfully attempted to circumvent the jurisprudence of this Court and Article 240 and Article 242 of the Constitution for which reason we are inclined to hold the Act to be ultra vires of the Constitution.

Contentions of the petitioners

11. To persuade the Court to recall its judgment under review, the learned Attorney-General for Pakistan and other learned counsel for the petitioners made the following main contentions: (i) that the question of vires of the Re-instatement Act had neither been raised before, nor decided by, the forums below, therefore, the Court should not have taken up and decided the said question, for the first time in the appeals/ petitions filed against the judgments of the forums below; (ii) that the substantial question as to the interpretation of constitutional law that concerns the Federal Government was involved in the cases decided by the judgment under review, therefore, the Court could not have proceeded to determine the question without giving notice to the Attorney-General for Pakistan, as mandated by Rule 1 of Order XXVII-A of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 ("C.P.C."); (iii) that the persons likely to be affected by the decision of the Court on the question of constitutionality of the Reinstatement Act were neither issued notice nor heard before passing the judgment under review, thus, the Court breached their right of hearing guaranteed by the principles of natural justice; (iv) that the Court wrongly held that the "sacked employees", as per the definition given in section 2(f), fell into the definition of either a "civil servant" or a person in the "service of Pakistan", for major portion of the reinstated employees were employees of the corporations and other autonomous or semi-autonomous bodies, thus, they did not fall under either of the said two categories: (v) that the Court misconstrued and misapplied Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution for judging the constitutionality of the Reinstatement Act; (vi) that the Court overlooked the important aspect of the case that the employees reinstated under the Reinstatement Act belonged to a distinct class of employees who suffered "political victimization", in the matter of their dismissal, removal or termination during the relevant period, and the Parliament (Legislature) had enacted the Reinstatement Act for the benefit of this distinct class of employees, therefore, the said Act did not offend Article 25 of the Constitution; and (vii) that the Court instead of declaring the whole Reinstatement Act to be ultra vires the Constitution may have declared only those provisions of the Reinstatement Act which infringed the fundamental rights to 'status' of the regular employees, guaranteed under Article 9 of the Constitution, by applying the rules of severance and reading down.

12. No one appeared before us to oppose the review petitions, and defend the judgment under review that has declared the Reinstatement Act to be ultra vires the Constitution. The Court, however, cannot decide the questions of law either way by consent of parties or on concession made at the Bar, or on the ground that there is no contesting respondent before it. We, therefore, must proceed to determine the questions arising out of the contentions of the petitioners on their merits irrespective of no-contest.

Constitution of larger bench for hearing review petitions

13. It would be pertinent to mention here that it was because of the importance of the contentions/questions (ii), (iii), (iv), (v) and (viii) raised by the learned Attorney-General, noted in order dated 11.11.2021, that the three member Bench hearing these review petitions referred the matter to the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan for constitution of a larger Bench, and this larger Bench of five members was thus constituted.

Short Order

14. After hearing and considering the contentions of the petitioners, I allowed the review petitions vide my short order dated 17 December 2021, in the following terms:

i. The judgment under review is recalled;

ii. The following Sections and part of Sections of the Sacked Employees Reinstatement Act 2010 are declared ultra vires the Constitution:

(a) Sections 4(a) and 10 to the extent of reinstatement and regularization on "one scale higher", which give an undue advantage to the reinstated employees to the detriment of the rights of the already working regular employees and thus violate their fundamental rights. The provisions of the said Sections, except the words "one scale higher", shall however remain operative with effect from the date of enactment of the Act, and be read to mean the reinstatement and regularization in the same or restructured, as the case may be, scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation.

(b) Sections 2(f)(vi), 11, 12 and 13, which deal with and provide for reinstatement and regularization of such sacked employees who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service on account of absence from duty, misconduct, mis-appropriation of Government money or stock, or unfitness on medical grounds, and the determination of their guilt or medical unfitness attained finality by being unchallenged or unsuccessfully challenged. Such employees fall outside the class of sacked employees who suffered "political victimization," envisaged by the Act for a beneficial treatment, and they by themselves do not constitute a distinct class having an intelligible differentia, which bears a reasonable relation to the object and purpose of the Act.

iii. All the employees terminated from service on the basis of the judgment under review, stand restored in the service with effect from the date they were so terminated, and shall be paid the pay of the intervening period treating the said period as an extraordinary leave with pay; and

iv. The cases decided by the judgment under review, which now stands recalled, shall be deemed pending and decided on their own merits by the regular Bench(es) of this Court in accordance with the provisions of the Sacked Employees Re-instatement Act, 2010, subject to the declaration made at No. ii above.

In this discourse, I proceed to deal with the contentions of the petitioners and record my reasons for the above short order.

Discussion and decision on the contentions of the petitioners

(i) Question of vires of the Re-instatement Act, not raised in the forums below

15. So for as the contention that the Court should not have taken up and decided the question of constitutional vires of the Re instatement Act as the said question had neither been raised before nor decided by the forums below, is concerned, it is true that in petitions filed for leave to appeal under Article 185(3) of the Constitution, this Court generally does not permit to raise those questions of law that have not been urged before the forum below.[19] In the present case, the leave granting Benches of this Court permitted to raise the question of constitutional vires of the Re-instatement Act and granted the leaves to appeal to consider the same, despite that the question had neither been raised before nor decided by the forums below, i.e., High Courts and Service Tribunal, and that too without explaining the circumstances that justified departure from the general practice of the Court. However, none of the respondents in those petitions filed any review petition to recall that leave granting order(s), nor was any such objection raised before the Bench that heard the appeals and decided the question. It is now too late in the day to make such contention before this Bench hearing review petitions against the judgment that decided the question, and not hearing the review petitions against the orders that granted the leaves to appeal to consider the question. The contention is, therefore, now untenable.

(ii) Omission to give notice to Attorney-General for Pakistan, under Rule 1 of Order XXVII-A of the C.P.C.

16. Much was argued on the point that the substantial question as to the interpretation of constitutional law that concerns the Federal Government was involved in the cases decided by the judgment under review, therefore, the Court could not have determined the question without giving notice to the Attorney-General for Pakistan, as mandated by Rule 1 of Order XXVII-A of the C.P.C. The reliance, in this regard, was placed on Federation v. Aftab Sherpao,[20] the judgment of a twelve-member Bench of this Court.

17. Careful reading of the cited case shows that the learned Judges in this case were equally divided by six to six, on the point of requirement of issuing a formal notice to the Attorney-General under Rule 1 of Order XXVII-A of the C.P.C. and effect of its non-issuance in the circumstances of the case. The ancient rule of the common law - semper praesumitur pro negante, means that presumption always exists in favor of one who denies or that the presumption is always in favour of the negative. So when the Judges of an appellate Court are equally divided in their opinion, the judgment of the Court below is affirmed and maintained,[21] and the decision given pro negante is authoritative and binding as any other decision of the appellate Court.[22] However, the said rule is not applicable to the final decision of a case by this Court in view of the second proviso to Rule 1 of Order XI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980, which provides that "if the Judges hearing a petition or an appeal are equally divided in opinion, the petition or appeal, as the case may be, shall, in the discretion of the Chief Justice, be placed for hearing and disposal either before another Judge or before a larger Bench to be nominated by the Chief Justice." Hence, the application of the rule of pro negante decision is restricted to the division of opinion on a point of law decided in the judgment of this Court, notwithstanding of which there is a majority of opinion on the final decision of the case. Exactly, this happened in the Aftab Sherpao case. Although the learned Judges were equally divided 6 to 6 in their opinion on the point of notice under Rule 1 of Order XXVII-A of the C.P.C., but there was a clear majority of 8 to 4 in the final decision of the appeals, viz, in allowing the appeals. Thus, the rule of pro negante decision was applicable to the point of notice under Rule 1 of Order XXVII-A of the C.P.C., and it was the decision of the High Court on this point that became the pro negante decision of this Court, having the authority and binding effect of a decision of a twelve-member Bench of this Court.

18. We, therefore, need to ascertain what was decided by the High Court on this point, which because of equal division of opinion in appeal became the pro negante decision of this Court. The decision of the High Court on this point has been reproduced in the leading judgment authored by Justice Shafiur Rahman in the Aftab Sherpao case. The relevant portions of the decision of the High Court on the point are reproduced here also for ready reference:

As the Federation of Pakistan is a party to these proceedings, no separate notice under the law is required to be issued to the Attorney-General and if he so chooses, he may represent the Federation in this case.

The Federation is already a party in this petition and there was no hindrance in the way of the Attorney-General of Pakistan to appear and argue the case on behalf of the applicant during the hearing of this matter.

Furthermore, Order XXVIIA, Rule 1, C.P.C. would normally deal with a situation where suit is filed before the Court wherein the Federation or the Province is not a party but a substantial question of Constitutional interpretation is involved concerning the Federal Government or the Provincial Government as the case may be. In such a situation it is quite obvious that either the Advocate-General of the Province or the Attorney-General of Pakistan shall assist the Court concerned. Here before us both the Province and the Federation are arraigned as parties. Due notice has been received by them. The Provincial Government has engaged a private counsel along with the Advocate-General of the Province to whom notice was issued by the Court on 22-8-1990. Similarly the Federal Government has decided to engage a counsel who represented it before us. If the Attorney-General had decided to represent the Federation we would, have been too happy to hear him as well. But we do not find it incumbent on us in the circumstances of the case to needlessly issue him a notice while he is busy in arguing similar cases before other High Courts and we were requested to wait for the conclusion of those cases in order to hear him.

In terms of the above observations of the High Court, the pro negante decision of a twelve-member Bench of this Court on the point was that Rule 1 of Order XXVII-A of the C.P.C. deals with a situation where the Federation of Pakistan or the Province concerned is not a party to the proceedings but a substantial question as to the interpretation of constitutional law is involved in those proceedings, concerning the Federal Government or the Provincial Government, as the case may be. However, in cases where the Federation of Pakistan or the Province concerned is already a party to the proceedings, no separate notice under the said Rule is required to be given to the Attorney-General for Pakistan or the Advocate-General of the Province, as the case may be.

19. In some of the cases decided by the judgment under review, the Federation of Pakistan was a party and represented before the Court by Mr. Sajid Ilyas Bhatti, Additional Attorney-General, and Mr. Sohail Mehmood, Deputy Attorney-General; therefore, no separate notice under Rule 1 of Order XXVII-A of the C.P.C. was required to be given to the Attorney-General for Pakistan. The contention that the Court could not have determined the question of constitutional vires of the Re instatement Act without giving notice to the Attorney-General for Pakistan under Rule 1 of Order XXVII-A of the C.P.C., thus does not hold water and is accordingly rejected. However, it may be brought on record that the Court did issue the notice to the Attorney-General for Pakistan in the main case, i.e., Muhamad Afzal v. Secretary Establishment (C.A. 491/2012) wherein leave to appeal was granted to consider the question of vires of section 4 of the Reinstatement Act.

(iii) Non-issuing notice to and non-hearing of the persons likely to be affected by the decision of the Court

20. So far as the next contention that the persons likely to be affected by the decision of the Court on the question of constitutionality of the Reinstatement Act were neither issued notice nor heard before passing the judgment under review, thus, the Court breached their right of hearing guaranteed by the principles of natural justice, is concerned, it does not detain us long in view of the principle of law enunciated by a fourteen-member Bench of this Court, in the case of Justice Bhinder v. Federation[23].

21. In Bhinder, the Court had held in the judgment sought to be reviewed,[24] the Proclamation of Emergency, the Provisional Constitution Order and the Oath of Office (Judges) Order of 2007 to be ultra vires the Constitution and also passed some consequential orders, including the order as to unconstitutionality of the appointments of certain Judges. Some of such Judges, in their applications seeking permission to file review against that judgment, contended that they had not been issued notice nor had they been heard before making the adverse order as to their appointments, therefore, the judgment to that extent was not sustainable. The Court repelled that contention observing that a judgment in rem binds parties and non-parties alike as opposed to a judgment in personam which only affects the parties to a lis, and that a judgment in rem apply to all regardless of whether they were parties or not and a judgment in personam does not bind non-parties. The Court went on to hold that the judgment sought to be reviewed was a judgment in rem enunciating a legal principle; it, therefore, had the status of conclusiveness and finality, and no person could be allowed to challenge it merely for the reason that he was not a party in the case and had not been heard.

22. The same principle applies to the judgment that is under review in the present case. The judgment under review was also a judgment in rem[25] as it decided the status of the Re-instatement Act, that is, its constitutional vires; it, therefore, binds the parties and the non -parties alike. A judgment in rem settles the fate of the res by determining its status and thus operates directly on the res itself; it binds all persons claiming a right or interest in or under the res, even though pronounced in their absence. It is true that the actions (cases) brought before this Court were not originally in rem rather were in personam agitating the individual grievances, but the Court by granting leave to appeal to consider the status, i.e., the constitutional vires, of the Re-instatement Act, converted them into actions in rem and thus the consequent judgment under review was also delivered in rem. Needless to mention that in actions in rem it is neither practicable nor is it the requirement of law that the Court should issue a separate notice and offer an opportunity of hearing to each and every person who is likely to be affected, and bound, by the judgment. The objection that some or most of the persons affected by the judgment under review were neither issued notices nor heard before passing the judgment is, therefore, not sustainable because of the nature of the judgment under review[26] and cannot be accepted as a ground for recalling that judgment.

23. But, I must add, for complying with the constitutional command of fair trial and due process to a possible extent in such cases, the Court may order, as it is usually done by the civil courts dealing with actions in rem, for service of the public notice of the case through its publication in the press or any other mode deemed appropriate, for the knowledge of the persons likely to be affected by the judgment, who may then appear before the Court and seek permission to intervene and argue in the proceedings.[27] In fact, in the present case though no such public notice was served, some persons who thought them likely to be affected by the judgment on the question of vires of the Re-instatement Act did intervene and were allowed the opportunity of hearing; as they by themselves became aware of the pendency of the matter since it remained pending in the Court for a considerable period of about seven years from 2012 to 2019 for hearing.

(iv) All employees dealt with by the Re-instatement Act, not either "civil servants" or persons in the "service of Pakistan"

24. Next contention of the petitioners is that the Court wrongly held in para 44 of the judgment under review that the "sacked employees", as per the definition given in section 2(f) of the Re instatement Act, fell into the definition of either "civil servants" or persons in the "service of Pakistan", for major portion of the reinstated employees being employees of the corporations and other autonomous or semi-autonomous bodies did not fall under either of the said two categories. I find the contention correct, as not all the employees of the corporations and other autonomous or semi-autonomous bodies established by or under a Federal law, or owned or controlled by the Federal Government, falls within the definition of persons in the "service of Pakistan".[28] However, nothing turns on this point as to the legality of the judgment under review.

(v) Misconstruction and misapplication of Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution

25. The petitioners have contended that the Court misconstrued and misapplied Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution for judging the constitutionality of the Reinstatement Act. To appreciate this contention, we need to see what these Articles of the Constitution provide for in relation to the service of Pakistan concerning the Federation, as the Re instatement Act partly relates thereto, and what the Court has held in the judgment under review as regards thereto.

26. In relation to the service of Pakistan concerning the Federation, Article 240 of the Constitution provides that subject to the Constitution, the appointments to and the conditions of service of persons in the service of Pakistan shall be determined, "in the case of the services of the Federation, posts in connection with the affairs of the Federation and All-Pakistan Services, by or under Act of Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament)"; while Article 242 provides that "Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament) in relation to the affairs of the Federation... may, by law, provide for the establishment and constitution of a Public Service Commission" and the "Public Service Commission shall perform such functions as may be prescribed by law".

27. The Court has observed in the judgment under review that the Constitutional framework under Article 240 clearly envisions that any appointments in the service of Pakistan for the Federation shall be made under the Act of Parliament, and that in pursuance to Article 240 of the Constitution, the Parliament has enacted the Civil Servants Act, 1973. The Court has further observed that Article 240 of the Constitution is supplemented by Article 242, which envisions the creation of a Public Service Commission that is intended to be the supervisory body to oversee the process of recruitments. The Court, with the said observation, has held that the legislature, by enacting the Re -instatement Act, circumvented the constitutional process envisioned under Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution, for which reason also the Re-instatement Act is ultra vires the Constitution.[29]

28. No doubt, the appointments to and the conditions of service of persons in the service of Pakistan concerning the Federation, as per the constitutional mandate of Article 240, are to be determined by or under Act of Parliament. The Parliament (Legislature) is, thus, the only repository of the constitutional power in relation to the appointments to and the conditions of such service; the Executive has no direct and independent power in this regard and exercises such power delegated to it by or under an Act of the Parliament (Legislature).[30] However, the Parliament is not required, or bound, under Article 240, to enact only one Act for this purpose. The enactment of the Civil Servants Act, 1973, therefore, does not make the Parliament functus officio, or divest it of its legislative power, to enact another Act on the subject of appointment to and conditions of such service or a part of such service, and to give that Act an overriding effect against the provisions of the Civil Servants Act, 1973.

29. As for selection and recruitment of persons for appointment in the service of Pakistan concerning the Federation to be made through the Federal Public Service Commission ("FPSC"), Article 242 of the Constitution by itself neither establishes the FPSC nor prescribes the functions thereof, rather leaves these matters to be done by the Parliament by enacting law. The law enacted by the Parliament on these matters, is the Federal Public Service Commission Ordinance, 1977. The FPSC has been established under section 3 of the Ordinance, and its main functions, as prescribed under section 7 of the Ordinance, are: (a) to conduct tests and examinations for recruitment of persons to All- Pakistan Services, the civil services of the Federation and civil posts in connection with the affairs of the Federation in basic pay scales 16 and above or equivalent; and (b) to advise the President of Pakistan on matters relating to qualifications for and methods of recruitment to, the said services and posts. The status of the FPSC established under the law, not under the Constitution, is thus of a statutory body not constitutional one, and its functions are also statutory not constitutional.[31]

30. In view of the above constitutional position, the vires of one law, i.e., the Re-instatement Act, enacted by the Parliament (Legislature) cannot be examined on the touchstone of another law, i.e., the FPSC Ordinance 1977, made by the same Legislature, especially when the law enacted later in time has been given an overriding effect against all other laws on the subject, nor can the same be examined, and declared ultra vires, on the touchstone of Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution as both these Articles only command for dealing with the matters specified therein by an Act of the Parliament, and provide for nothing more.[32] Article 240 does not provide any criterion for judging the constitutionality of an Act of the Parliament, except that the Act of Parliament must relate to the appointments to and the conditions of service of persons in the service of Pakistan concerning the Federation, not concerning any Province other than All-Pakistan Service which is a service common to the Federation and the Provinces. Likewise, the constitutional limitation on the power of the Parliament to enact a law under Article 242 is that it can enact a law for the establishment of a Public Service Commission and prescribing its functions, in relation to the affairs of the Federation, not of any Province. I find that the said aspect of the provisions of Articles 240 and 242 of the Constitution was not presented by the parties before the Court, and the same thus escaped notice of the Court in applying the said Articles of the Constitution to judge the constitutional vires of the Reinstatement Act, in the judgment under review. The contention of the petitioners in this regard, therefore, sustains.

(vi) Employees reinstated under the Reinstatement Act, whether belong to a distinct class and their reinstatement does not offend Article 25 of the Constitution

31. Next comes one of the main contentions of the petitioners, that the Court overlooked the important aspect of the case that the employees reinstated under the Reinstatement Act belonged to a distinct class of employees who suffered "political victimization", in the matter of their dismissal, removal or termination during the relevant period, and that the Parliament (Legislature) had enacted the Reinstatement Act for the benefit of this distinct class of employees, therefore, the said Act did not offend Article 25 of the Constitution.

32. The Preamble to the Re-instatement Act simply states that the Act is enacted "for the purpose of providing relief to persons who were appointed in a corporation service or autonomous or semi autonomous bodies or in Government service during the period from the 1st day of November, 1993 to the 30th day of November, 1996 (both days inclusive) and were dismissed, removed or terminated from service during the period from the 1st day of November, 1996 to the 12th day of October, 1999 (both days inclusive)." It does not specifically mention that the said persons have suffered "political victimization" in the matter of their dismissal, removal or termination from service. Nor any statement of objects and reasons for enactment of the Re-instatement Act has been presented by any of the petitioners before us; we, therefore, assume that there is no such statement. To show that the said persons had suffered "political victimization" and the Re-instatement Act was enacted by the Parliament for the purpose of providing relief to them, learned counsel for some of the petitioners have referred to certain parliamentary debates made by the parliamentarians who had presented the Bill for enactment of the Re-instatement Act in two Houses (National Assembly and Senate) of the Parliament and who had supported the same.

33. It hardly needs reiterating that the parliamentary debates, especially the speech made by the mover of the Bill or by the chairman or member(s) of the Standing Committee that considered the Bill, explaining the reason for introducing the Bill can be referred to for ascertaining the mischief sought to be remedied by the legislation and the object and purpose for which the legislation was enacted.[33] Therefore, it would be expedient to quote here some parts from the parliamentary debates relating to the objects and reasons of the enactment of the Re instatement Act, made by the parliamentarians who were member(s) of the Standing Committee that had considered and approved the Bill as well as by the other parliamentarians who had supported the same:

Debates in the National Assembly of Pakistan (25th Session) dated 7 October 2010[34]

Syed Khurshid Ahmad Shah:

English Translation: This was our commitment that we would reinstate the persons who had suffered victimization..... If the Opposition thinks that it was their Government that sacked these persons, therefore, they have to oppose it, then it is unjust..... It is the problem of nine thousand families of persons who had been sacked. They do not belong only to Sindh, Punjab, Pakhtunkhwa or Balochistan; they belong to whole Pakistan. They all do not belong to Peoples Party .... I say it with great regret that these persons were sacked in the regime of Mian Nawaz Sharif.... You are adamant to oppose it as these nine thousand persons reinstated by us were sacked by the Government of Mian Nawaz Sharif...They are not just nine thousand persons, they are ninety thousand families: Nine families are linked with one family.

Iqbal Muhammd Ali Khan:

English Translation: Those who had been given gold medals and performance certificates in banking, were given letter [of their termination] one morning; it was a victimization at that time.

Riaz Fatiana:

English Translation: It has been a culture in this country that when one Government comes and other goes, all persons recruited [in one Government] are sacked.

Mian Riaz Hussain Pirzada:

English Translation: There have been traditions of sacking the persons employed in a Government, at the end of term of that Government.

Rahmat Ullah Kakar:

English Translation: All the coalition partners were committed on this that the persons who had been deprived of their livelihood on political victimization [were to be reinstated]... for this purpose a Committee had been constituted, which had fulfilled the promise of reinstatement of such employees by its hard work day and night in nine months on merits.

Debates in the Senate of Pakistan (65th Session) dated 10 November 2010[35]

Senator Mian Raza Rabbani:

English Translation: During that period for which this bill has been introduced, all orders [of termination] without exception were made without issuing show cause notice to those persons, nor were any explanation called from them. A blanket order was handed over to them on one morning [stating] that because your appointment have been made in the period of Pakistan Peoples party, you are therefore being terminated; because you have been appointed on political grounds, and this is a matter of record.
Senator Colonel (R) Syed Tahir Hussain Mash'hidi:

English Translation: Their only fault was that they had unfortunately been employed during the period of Pakistan Peoples Party. It is not my party; therefore, I am making statement with all honesty. It was their only fault that they had got jobs during the period of Pakistan Peoples Party. And when the Government of Pakistan Muslim League (N) came in power, they were sacked without investigating whether who had political affiliation, who had got job on reference or not, whether they got the job on merit. They were sacked on because they had got job during the period of Pakistan Peoples Party. You can say, it was a political victimization.
Senator Molana Gul Naseeb Khan:

English Translation: We have lived in such period in the history of Pakistan when political parties used to pursue vindictive politics, and for this reason they used to indulge in activities against each other and also against each other's Government... The employees sacked in the year 1997 were also sacked because of that vindictiveness ... Earlier to that period some individual incident [of this kind] had happened, and had been happening; but if any general action had been taken that is only this which is before us.
Senator Syed Nayyer Hussain Bokhari:

English Translation: The basic thing is that there was victimization in this, and I think which irritates somebody is probably the period, which is specific, during which the persons sacked from their employments were politically victimized.
The above extracts from the parliamentary debates that took place on the floor of the two Houses of the Parliament provide a valuable insights into the objects and reasons for which the Bill for enactment of the Re instatement Act was introduced. A plain reading of the extracts of the debates supports the contention of the petitioners and makes it clear that the reason for choosing the persons appointed in and dismissed from service during the specified period, for the beneficial treatment of reinstatement and regularization in service notwithstanding any other law on the subject, was that they had suffered "political victimization" in the matter of their dismissal, removal or termination from service, at the hands of the Government (Executive) during that period, and the object of the enactment of the Re-instatement Act was that the Parliament (Legislature) intended to provide relief to such persons, statedly nine thousands.
34. I fully recognize that there is a distinction between the fact that a particular statement was made by a parliamentarian, which narrates certain objects and reasons for enactment of an Act of the Parliament, and the truth of any matter of fact stated in that statement. The former is itself a fact relevant for ascertaining the objects and reasons for enactment of an Act of the Parliament and need no further proof other than the authentic record of such statement; while the latter, if disputed, is to be proved aliunde, that is, by evidence apart from the fact that a statement about it was made in the parliamentary debates.[36] In the present case, it is a question of fact whether or not the persons going to be reinstated under the Re-instatement Act had suffered "political victimization", in the matter of their dismissal, removal or termination from service; the correctness of which, if disputed, is to be proved by evidence other than the above quoted statements of the parliamentarians. However, nobody has disputed, before us, the correctness of that factual statement made by the parliamentarians, nor does that statement of fact appear to be inherently improbable; it is, rather, supported by the circumstance that a large number of employees, not a few, were sacked during the specified period. Therefore, the Court is to proceed on assuming that undisputed statement of fact to be correct.

35. Needless to mention that Article 25(1) of the Constitution which declares, and guarantees as a fundamental right, that all citizens are equal before law and are entitled to equal protection of law, does not prohibit reasonable classification for equal treatment, that is, "equality among equals", which is based on intelligible differentia, distinguishing persons or things that are grouped together from those who are left out, and has a rational nexus to the object sought to be achieved by law.[37] And a classification having a reasonable basis does not offend against fundamental right to equality, merely because it is not made with mathematical nicety or because in practice it results in some inequality. Further, when the classification made by a law is called in question, if any state of facts reasonably can be conceived that would sustain it, the existence of that state of facts at the time the law was enacted must be assumed, and the one who assails the classification must carry the burden of showing that it does not rest upon any reasonable basis but is essentially arbitrary.[38]

36. In the present case, after accepting the undisputed statement of fact that the persons going to be reinstated under the Re instatement Act had suffered "political victimization", in the matter of their dismissal, removal or termination from service, there remains no difficulty to hold that they formed a distinct class, and their classification was based on intelligible differentia, distinguishing them from those who had been left out, and had a rational nexus to the object sought to be achieved by the Re-instatement Act. Therefore, only their reinstatement and regularization under the Re-instatement Act as such did not offend the fundamental right to equal treatment, guaranteed by Article 25(1) of the Constitution, of other employees sacked in other durations as well as of regular employees appointed under the general laws relating to the appointments to and terms of conditions of the service concerned.[39] This aspect of the Re-instatement Act, it appears, escaped notice of the Court at the time of passing the judgment under review. The contention of the petitioners in this regard, therefore, sustains.

(vii) Application of the principles of reading out and reading down, to uphold the constitutionality of the Re-instatement Act

37. The next main contention of the petitioners is that instead of declaring the whole Reinstatement Act to be ultra vires the Constitution, the Court may have declared only those provisions of the Reinstatement Act which had infringed the fundamental right to 'status' of the regular employees, guaranteed under Article 9 of the Constitution, by applying the rules of severance (reading out) and reading down.

38. To begin with on this contention of the petitioners, I would cite here the two cardinal principles of construction of statutes: (i) that there is always a presumption in favour of the constitutionality of a legislative enactment (a law); and (ii) that a law enacted by a competent legislature is to be construed in such a manner that its constitutional validity may be saved rather than destroyed.[40] It is because of these principles that the courts lean in favour of upholding the constitutionality of laws and are reluctant to strike them down by declaring them as unconstitutional. The one who challenges the constitutionality of a law bears the burden to show that the law is violative of any of the constitutional provisions, and when two opinions as to the construction of a law are possible, the courts prefer to adopt that which upholds the constitutionality of the law, over that which does not. The courts, therefore, construe a law in such a manner that saves the law than destroys it, and declare it unconstitutional only when it clearly contravenes any constitutional provision and cannot be read as constitution compliant by applying any of the methods, techniques or tools of rule of constitution complaint construction, e.g., reading out or reading down. Declaring the law unconstitutional is thus one of the last resorts taken by the courts.

39. The primary purpose of applying these techniques, methods or tools, like, reading out or reading down, is to endeavor for saving the constitutional validity of the statute, to a possible extent, and the main reason for applying them in preference to declaring the law unconstitutional is that their application makes the process of judicial review of legislative actions less intrusive than invalidating the whole law, as "the court should not strive officiously to kill [a law] to any extent greater than it is compelled to do"[41]. The principle of constitutional compliant construction of laws has been recognized by our Constitution itself in its Article 268(6), and this Court has been applying the methods of "reading out" (severance)[42] and "reading down"[43], with certain conditions, for the purpose of construing the provisions of a law as constitution compliant and to save it, as much as possible, from being declared ultra vires the Constitution. The primary condition for applying these methods for a constitution compliant construction is to see whether the Legislature would have enacted the law in the form that remains or turns out to be after application of any of the said methods. Further, in case of applying the method of reading out (severance) the court is to see whether after reading out (severing) the invalid part, the remaining provisions of law would remain operative within the scope of the object of the law.[44] Therefore, when confronting a constitutional flaw in a statute, court should try to limit the solution to the problem - severing the flawed portion while leaving the remainder intact. Because the unconstitutionality of a part of a statute does not necessarily defeat or affect the validity of its remaining provisions. If after severing the flawed part, the remaining provisions of law would remain fully operative, court must sustain those provisions unless it is evident that the Legislature would not have enacted those provisions independently of that which is invalid.

40. In the light of the above principles of statutory interpretation, I proceed to examine the contention of the petitioners as to declaring the Re-instatement Act invalid partially, instead of as a whole.

41. In the judgment under review,[46] the Court formulated the proposition for decision on the question of constitutional vires of the Re instatement Act, thus:

Whether the law [i.e., the Re-instatement Act] has placed the regular employees, who remained in service, at a disadvantageous position in terms of seniority and other benefits to reinstated employees. If so, then the [re-instatement] Act of 2010 would be violative of right enshrined under Article 9 and Article 25 of the Constitution, of the regular employees.

And for answering the question in affirmative, the Court reasoned:[47]

The legislature has, through the operation of The [Re-instatement] Act of 2010, attempted to extend undue benefit to a limited class of employees. This legislation has a direct correlation to the right enshrined under Article 9 of the Constitution for employees currently serving in the departments falling under section 2(d) of The [Re-instatement] Act of 2010. Under Article 9 of the Constitution, a civil servant has been extended the right to 'status' and 'reputation'. The right to 'status' and 'reputation' are not mutually exclusive and are encompassed by the wider umbrella of Article 9 of the Constitution. Upon the 'reinstatement' of the 'sacked employees', the 'status' of the employees currently in service is violated as the reinstated employees are granted seniority over them. This is an absurd proposition to consider as the legislature has, through legal fiction, deemed that employees from a certain time period are reinstated and regularized without due consideration to how the fundamental rights of the people currently serving would be affected.

(Underlined for emphasis)

A careful reading of the above quoted observations of the Court shows that the Court declared the Re-instatement Act to be violative of the right to 'status' enshrined in fundamental 'right to life', guaranteed under Article 9 of the Constitution, of the regular employees serving in the relevant departments at the time of promulgation of the Re-instatement Act, for the only reason that "Upon the 'reinstatement'... the reinstated employees are granted seniority over them." While the Court did not specify the relevant provisions of the Re-instatement Act, in the judgment under review, which grants the seniority to the reinstated employees over the then working regular employees, those provisions are that of sections 4(a) and 10 which provide for reinstatement of certain categories of sacked employees and their regularization on "one scale higher" than the scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation from which they were dismissed, removed or terminated. Both these Sections are reproduced here for ready reference:

Section 4(a): a sacked employee appointed on permanent or temporary basis or regular or ad hoc basis or otherwise in any corporation or Government service against a regular or temporary post shall be reinstated and regularized in regular service of the employer on one scale higher to his substantive scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation, whatever the case may be, held by the sacked employee at the time of his dismissal, removal or termination from service or at the time forced golden hand shake was given to the sacked employee;

Section 10: In cases where any change in structure of any scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation, whatever the case may be, has been made by the competent authority or employer after the 1st day of November, 1996, the sacked employee on re-instatement shall be placed in service of the employer on one scale higher than the scale, grade, cadre, group or designation, whatever the case may be, from which he was dismissed, removed or terminated from service or given forced golden hand shake.

It is very pertinent to mention here that only the above two categories of the sacked employees were to be reinstatement and regularized on "one scale higher", while all the rest of the categories of the sacked employees, i.e., contract employees [section 4(b)], employees found not guilty in enquiry [section 4(c)], trainee employees [section 4(d)] and employees given forced golden hand shake [section 4(e)], were to be reinstated and regularized against a regular post of the same scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation, whatever the case may be, from which they had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service or given forced golden hand shake. And as per section 4(f), all the employees Re-instated under the Re-instatement Act were to be regularized from the day of enactment of the Re-instatement Act (not from the date of their initial appointment) and were to be placed at the bottom of the seniority list effective on the date of enactment of the Re-instatement Act. Section 4(f) is also reproduced here for ease of reference:

Section 4(f): a sacked employee re-instated under this Act shall be regularized in the service of the employer in post, scale, grade, cadre, group or designation, whatever the case may be, on which he is re instated under the Act, as a permanent and a regular employee, with effect from the day of enactment of this Act, at par with other regular employees of the employer concerned and shall be placed at bottom of the seniority list, effective as on the date of enactment of this Act, for scale, grade, cadre, post, group or designation, whatever the case may be, in which the sacked employee is re-instated in accordance with the provisions of this Act;

It is thus evident that the issue of seniority that affected the right to 'status' enshrined in fundamental 'right to life' of the regular employees serving in the relevant departments, had arisen only in cases of employees reinstated and regularized on "one scale higher", under sections 4(a) and 10. Their reinstatement and regularization on "one scale higher" had made them senior to those regular employees who were senior to them even as per their date of initial appointments and were serving in the same grade and post in which they had been appointed prior to the initial appointment of the reinstated employees, because of the slow channel of promotion.[48] Therefore, to the extent of reinstatement and regularization of some sacked employees, under sections 4(a) and 10, on "one scale higher", I fully agree with, and reaffirm, the observation made in the judgment under review that such reinstatement and regularization was violative of the right to 'status' enshrined in fundamental 'right to life' of the regular employees serving in the relevant departments at the time of promulgation of the Re-instatement Act, and add that it was also violative of the fundamental 'right to dignity' guaranteed under Article 14 and fundamental 'right to equality before law' guaranteed by Article 25 of the Constitution as it gave an undue advantage to the reinstated employees to the disadvantage of the rights of the already working regular employees.

42. The proper course, however, in my humble view was that the Court should have declared only that part of the provisions of sections 4(a) and 10 of the Re-instatement Act that had the said offending effect, i.e., the reinstatement and regularization on "one scale higher". And this could have easily been done by reading out (severing) the words "one scale higher to" from the provisions of section 4(f) and the words "one scale higher than" from the provisions of section 10 of the Re instatement Act, and reading down those provisions to mean that the sacked employees mentioned in those Sections were to be reinstated and regularized in the same or restructured, as the case may be, scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation from which they had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service, for the purpose of saving the constitutional validity of those provisions and construing them as constitution compliant. Because from the reasons and objects of the enactment of the Re-instatement Act, it is more than clear: (i) that the Legislature would have enacted the law, i.e., sections 4(a) and 10, in the form that remains or turns out to be after application of methods of reading out and reading down, (ii) that it cannot be said that the Legislature would not have enacted those provisions independently of the part that is invalid, and (iii) that after reading out (severing) the invalid part, the remaining provisions of the law, i.e., sections 4(a) and 10, remains operative within the scope of the object of the law, i.e., providing relief to persons who had suffered "political victimization".

43. The next reason that prevailed with the Court, in the judgment under review,[49] for declaring the Re-instatement Act ultra vires the Constitution was that the sacked employees had not opted for remedy available to them under the law upon their termination from service within the limitation-period provided therefor, thus, they had forgone their right to be reinstated by availing the due process of law. I am afraid, this reason was not plausible. It escaped the notice of the Court that the sacked employees were seeking their reinstatement, under a new law, i.e. the Re-instatement Act, enacted by a competent Legislature, and not under the laws that were in force at the time of their termination form service. Therefore, the question of forgoing the right to be reinstated by not availing the remedy under the laws in force at the time of orders of their termination from service and of expiry of limitation-period under those laws, was not relevant.

44. It could also not be appreciated in the judgment under review that the administrative orders of termination from service passed without any charge of misconduct, inefficiency or unfitness and the judicial orders passed on such a charge, under the relevant law, have different bearing on the legislative power of the Legislature: the former can be undone by the Legislature by any means, but the effect of the latter can only be neutralized by changing the relevant law, with retrospective effect, on the basis of which they have been passed[50]. Thus, only those provisions of the Re-instatement Act that have the effect of nullifying, or give the power to the Executive to nullify, the judicial orders passed on charge of misconduct, inefficiency or unfitness that had attained finality by being unchallenged or unsuccessfully challenged, and that too without changing the law under which those orders had been passed, would have the effect of interference into the functioning and independence of the judicial organ of the State, and thus be violative of the provisions of Articles 175 and 212 of the Constitution. A careful reading of the Re-instatement Act identifies that sections 2 (f) (vi), 11, 12 and 13, which deal with and provide for reinstatement and regularization of such sacked employees who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service on account of absence from duty, misconduct, mis-appropriation of Government money or stock, or unfitness on medical grounds, and the determination of their guilt or medical unfitness had attained finality by being unchallenged or unsuccessfully challenged, have such effect. Such employees, even, do not fall within the class of the sacked employees who had suffered "political victimization," envisaged by the Act for a beneficial treatment. The said Sections of the Re-instatement Act are, therefore, ultra vires the Constitution.

45. The Court, in the judgment under review, has inadvertently relied upon Article 4 of the Constitution also to declare the Re instatement Act to be ultra vires the Constitution, as the attention of the Court was not invited to its previous judgments in the cases of Fauji Foundation v. Shamimur Rehman[51] and LDA v. Imrana Tiwana[52], wherein it has been held of Article 4 of the Constitution, which provides for a right to be dealt with in accordance with law, that this Article does not provide any criterion, and thus cannot be a touchstone, to test the vires of a law.

46. The Court, in the judgment under review,[53] has declared the Re-instatement Act to be ultra vires the Constitution mainly on the touchstone of Articles 4, 9 and 25 of the Constitution, as discussed above, and quoted[54] those Articles of the Constitution and discussed[55] the rights guaranteed thereunder, but neither cited nor discussed the specific provisions of the Re-instatement Act which had, in view of the Court, violated those rights. The attention of the Court was not invited, nor did it adhere, to the principle, as based upon in LDA v. Imrana Tiwana,[56] that a Court examining the constitutional vires of a law is to put down the provisions of the law under examination next to the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution and state why the two cannot be reconciled, before striking them down. I find that the attention of the Court was not invited to the methods of "reading out" and "reading down" for construing the ex facie invalid provisions of the Re-instatement Act as constitution complaint, and the same thus escaped notice of the Court. I am sure that had this aspect been considered by the Court, the decision would have been otherwise.

47. The contention of the petitioner as to upholding the constitutionality of the Re-instatement Act by applying the methods of constitution complaint construction, i.e., reading out (severance) and reading down, to the ex facie unconstitutional provisions of that Act is therefore accepted as a valid ground for making review of the judgment under review. For misconstruction of law,[57] and non-consideration of an important aspect of the matter which if had been considered the decision would have been otherwise,[58] amount to errors apparent on the face of the record and are thus well-established grounds for making review of a judgment or order.

48. These are my reasons for the above-cited short order.

Providing equal opportunity to all citizens and ensuring transparency in the process for appointment to the public employment

49. However, before parting with the judgment, I think it appropriate to underline that I have taken the above view on the premise that there was no violation of Articles 25 and 27 of the Constitution, in the process of initial appointments of the sacked employees, as no one has alleged before us, and produced any evidence, of such violation, nor was the initial appointment of the sacked employees was under challenge before the Court in the cases decided by the judgment under review.

50. Article 25 of the Constitution, which commands for ensuring equality of all citizens before law and their entitlement to equal protection of law, by necessary implication forbids the State, its organs and instrumentalities, to deny to any citizen such equality and equal protection. This constitutional guarantee is of very wide import and amplitude, encompassing within its comprehensive scope different shades, facets and implications as 'equality' is a dynamic concept with many aspects and dimensions. Equality is antithetic to discrimination and arbitrariness. Article 27 of the Constitution, which safeguards against discrimination in appointments in the 'service of Pakistan', also guarantees 'equality' to all citizens in respect of such appointments; it is therefore an instance of the application of 'equality' commanded by Article 25, in respect of appointments in the 'service of Pakistan'. The appointments to the posts or services in any organ or instrumentality of the State (such as, corporations, organizations, or bodies established under law or controlled by Government) that do not fall within the 'service of Pakistan', as defined in Article 260 of the Constitution, are covered under the wide import and amplitude of 'equality' guaranteed under Article 25 of the Constitution. Therefore, such appointments are also to be made by providing equal opportunity to all citizens by public advertisement and ensuring maximum transparency in the selection process to dispel any impression of favouritism and nepotism.

Sd/- Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J

MWA/H-4/SC Order accordingly.

2022 S C M R 1787

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, C.J. and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J

FARRUKH RAZA SHEIKH---Petitioner

Versus

The APPELLATE TRIBUNAL INLAND REVENUE and others---Respondents

Civil Petition No. 1417 of 2022, decided on 28th July, 2022.

(Against the judgment of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 03.03.2022, passed in W.P. No. 55044 of 2021)

(a) Interpretation of statutes---

----Rules made under an Act or Ordinance---Subservient to the parent Act/Ordinance---Rules being subordinate or delegated legislation, are framed under the authority of the parent statute, and are therefore subservient to the primary legislation---Rules cannot contradict, override or add to the clear provisions of the parent statute---Rules are to carry out the purposes of the parent statute and cannot offend, oppose or be inconsistent with the provisions of the parent statute---Any rule, to the extent of any inconsistency with the parent statute is, therefore, ultra vires of the parent statute.

N S Bindra's - Interpretation of Statutes 12th Edition, p.108; Suo Motu Case No. 11 of 2011, PLD 2014 SC 389 and Suo Motu Case No. 13 of 2009 PLD 2011 SC 619 ref.

(b) Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----S. 132(2)---Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue Rules, 2010, R. 22(1)---Appeal before the Appellate Tribunal (Inland Revenue)---Appeal dismissed in default i.e. due to absence of party without sufficient cause---Rule 22(1) of the Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue Rules, 2010, vires of---Rule 22(1) of the Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue Rules, 2010 ("Rules") is ultra vires section 132(2) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("Ordinance") to the extent where the Rule allows that the tax appeal before the Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue ("Tribunal") can also be dismissed in default---Section 132(2) of the Ordinance clearly provides that the Tribunal shall afford an opportunity of hearing to the parties to the appeal and in case of default by any of the party on the date of hearing, the Tribunal may proceed ex-parte to decide the appeal on the basis of available record.

Walayat Flour Mills Lyallpur v. Commissioner of Income-Tax Rawalpindi 1973 PTD 530; Chenniappa Mudaliar v. Commissioner of Income-Tax, (1964) 53 ITR 323 and Income-Tax Commissioner, Madras v. S. Chenniappa AIR 1969 SC 1068 ref.

Ahsan Mehmood, Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioner.

Ch. Muhammad Shakeel, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 28th July, 2022.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question before us is whether Rule 22(1) of the Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue Rules, 2010 ("Rules") is ultra vires section 132(2) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("Ordinance") to the extent where the Rule allows that the tax appeal before the Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue ("Tribunal") can also be dismissed in default, whereas section 132(2) of the Ordinance clearly provides that the Tribunal shall afford an opportunity of hearing to the parties to the appeal and in case of default by any of the party on the date of hearing, the Tribunal may proceed ex parte to decide the appeal on the basis of available record.

2. The facts giving rise to the above question are that the petitioner taxpayer challenged the amendment in the assessment order passed against him under section 122(1) of the Ordinance before the CIR (Appeals), Lahore. Remaining unsuccessful he challenged the order passed by the CIR (Appeals) before the Tribunal. The appeal of the petitioner was dismissed for non-prosecution vide order dated 09.2.2021 and thereafter the applications for restoration of the same were also dismissed for non-prosecution vide order dated 17.6.2021. The petitioner challenged both the orders through a constitutional petition challenging the vires of Rule 22(1) of the Rules before the High Court. The said petition was dismissed through the impugned order dated 03.03.2022.

3. The contention of the petitioner is that the appeal of the petitioner pending before the Tribunal could not have been dismissed for non-prosecution and could only have been decided on merits by proceeding ex-parte on the basis of the available record. He referred to section 132(2) of the Ordinance in this respect and submits that dismissal of appeal on the ground of default provided in Rule 22(1) of the Rules is, therefore, ultra vires to the provisions of the Ordinance. Learned counsel for the respondent Department supported the judgment of the High Court and reiterated that the Rules are not ultra vires the Ordinance. He also pointed out that the petitioner instead of filing a Tax Reference under the Ordinance filed a constitutional petition. Learned counsel for the petitioner replying to the said objection contented that the order passed by the Tribunal is not envisaged under the Ordinance and therefore Reference could not be maintained against it. Besides the vires of the Rules was under question therefore the petitioner opted for a constitutional petition. He further contended that no such objection by the respondent Department was taken before the High Court.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties and have examined the law on the subject and the record of the case. At the outset we do not wish to go into the question whether tax reference was maintainable before the High Court against the order of dismissal of appeal in default passed by the Tribunal. It is enough for us to note that this objection was not raised before the High Court by the respondent Department and remanding the matter at this stage will unnecessary delay the adjudication of an important issue involving the vires of the Rules which affect a large number of cases pending at various Tribunals in the country. Therefore, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, we find it appropriate and in the interest of justice, to proceed with the merits of the case.

5. Section 132(2) of the Ordinance and Rule 22(1) of the Rules, are reproduced hereunder for convenience:-

Section 132(2) of the Ordinance:

132. Disposal of appeals by the Appellate Tribunal.- (1) ...

(2) The Appellate Tribunal shall afford an opportunity of being heard to the parties to the appeal and, in case of default by any of the party on the date of hearing, the Tribunal may proceed ex parte to decide the appeal on the basis of the available record.

Rule 22(1) of the Rules:

22. Ex parte decision and recall of order.- (1) Where on the date fixed for hearing or any day to which the hearing is adjourned, any or both the parties fail to appear when the appeal or application is called for hearing, the Tribunal may if it deems fit, dismiss the appeal or application in default or may proceed ex parte to decide the appeal or application on the basis of the available record.

The present section 132(2) of the Ordinance was last amended through Finance Act, 2011 when the words "may, if it deems fit, dismiss the appeal in default or..." were omitted from the said sub section. It appears that no corresponding amendment was made in the Rules, which were promulgated in 2010[1] and continue to retain the above words as reproduced above.

6. It is important to underline that the Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue established under section 130 of the Ordinance is one and the same under the Sales Tax Act, 1990[2] and the Federal Excise Act, 2005[3] and follows the same procedure[4] as laid down in sections 131 and 132 of the Ordinance. Therefore the implication of Rule 22(1), under discussion in this case, is not only limited to the Ordinance but also extends to the appeals before the Tribunal arising under the Sales Tax Act, 1990 and Federal Excise Act, 2005.

7. These Rules were notified in exercise of powers available in section 130(12) of the Ordinance, prior to amendment vide Tax Laws (Amendment) Act, 2020 and are saved in terms of amended section 130(6) of the Ordinance. Section 130(12) of the Ordinance provided that "Subject to the Ordinance, the Appellate Tribunal shall have the power to regulate its own procedure...." In the year 2011 section 132(2) was amended and the portion dealing with appeal being dismissed in default was deleted. These Rules are "subject to the Ordinance" under section 130(12) and therefore cannot offend or contradict the substantive provisions of the Ordinance. Even otherwise, it is axiomatic that Rules being subordinate or delegated legislation, are framed under the authority of the parent statute, and are therefore subservient to the primary legislation. Rules cannot contradict or add to the clear provisions of the parent statute. Section 132(2) of the Ordinance provides that the Tribunal shall provide an opportunity of being heard to the parties to the appeal, however, in case any one of the parties is in default on the date of hearing, the Tribunal may proceed ex-parte and decide the appeal on the basis of available record. Section 132(2) no more provides for dismissal in default as was the case prior to the amendment brought about in section 132(2) in the year 2011 (supra). Rule 22(1) of the Rules, inter alia, provides that if the parties fail to appear before the Tribunal on the date of hearing, the appeal can also be dismissed in default. This part of Rule 22(1) clearly contradicts the parent statute i.e., Section 132(2) of the Ordinance. It is trite law that Rules cannot override the specific provisions of the parent statute. The Rules are to carry out the purposes of the Ordinance and cannot offend, oppose or be inconsistent with the provisions of the parent statute (Ordinance in this case).[5] Any rule, to the extent of any inconsistency with the parent statute is, therefore, ultra vires of the parent statute.

8. It is important, as well as, interesting to record that the tax jurisprudence evolved over the years in the sub-continent, interpreting the powers and procedure of hearing an appeal by the Appellate Tax Tribunal under the Income Tax law has repeatedly held that the Tribunal is to decide the tax controversy before it in an appeal on merits and not to dismiss the appeal in default. This view was expressed by the courts when the language of the corresponding section 33(4) of the Income Tax Act, 1922 was not as explicit as that of section 132(2) of the Ordinance. In Walayat Flour Mills[6] the Appellate Tribunal Rules, 1948[7] were examined on the touchstone of the then Income Tax Act, 1922.[8] Section 33(4) of the said Act provided as follows:

The Appellate Tribunal may, after giving both parties to the appeal an opportunity of being heard, pass such order thereon as it thinks fit, and shall communicate any such orders to the assessee and to the Commissioner.

Relying on Chenniappa,[9] a decision of the Madras High Court (India) on the same provision, it was held that under section 33(4) the Tribunal can only decide on merits and therefore cannot dismiss the appeal in default. In Chenniappa the High Court while discussing the scope of section 33(4) of the Income Tax Act, 1922 (as reproduced above) held that the word 'thereon" in the said provision lays down that the power of the Tribunal is confined to dealing with the subject-matter of the appeal; that the order of the Tribunal is correlated to the actual subject-matter in the controversy and dismissal for default of appearance has nothing to do with the matter in controversy as it puts an end to the appeal; that section 33(4) obliges the Tribunal to decide the appeal after giving an opportunity to the parties to put forward their case; the fact that the opportunity had not been availed by any party cannot obviously discharge the obligation cast on the Tribunal of passing orders on the merits of the appeal; that there can be no decision on its merits if the matter is to be dismissed for default of appearance of parties; that adjudication on the merits of the case is essential to enable the High Court to perform its statutory duty of hearing the tax reference on a question of law arising out the of decision of the Tribunal. Chenniappa was later on upheld by the Supreme Court of India[10] where the court held that 'thus looking at the substantive provisions of the Act there is no escape from the conclusion that under section 33(4) the Appellate Tribunal has to dispose of the appeal on the merits and cannot short-circuit the same by dismissing it for default of appearance." There has been consistent jurisprudence over the years from our High Courts and from the constitutional courts in the subcontinent empowering the tax Tribunal to decide the appeal on merits.[11] The jurisprudence under the Income Tax Act, 1922, discussed above, highlights the judicial sagacity of the court in realizing the importance of good tax governance for the country. The Courts applied purposive interpretation of the taxing statute to curb protracted litigation and help disentangle the taxpayer from extended litigative process.

9. Section 132(2) of the Ordinance is far more detailed, explicit, direct and clear compared to Section 33(4) of the Income Tax Act, 1922. It is therefore underlined that the logic and rationale behind section 132(2) of the Ordinance and the consistent jurisprudence evolved over the years around Section 33(4) of the erstwhile tax law is to promote and support an efficient tax administration and encourage smart tax governance in the country. Re-engineering the litigative process and procedure by removing dilatory steps in the dispute resolution mechanism is a welcome development. The order of dismissal of appeal on the ground of default, gives rise to a new set of litigation on a technical issue totally unrelated to the tax controversy in hand. Any further proceedings against the order of dismissal is a futile exercise for a tax collector, as well as, the tax payer, as the real tax dispute goes unattended till such time that the parties settle the issue of dismissal in default from the highest court in the land. The parties if successful have to start all over again before the Tribunal on merits. Section 132(2) avoids this double exercise and mandates that the appeal be decided on merits so that any further proceedings before a higher forum lead to a decision on merits. These unnecessary delays in tax dispute resolution seriously impair the overall tax governance in the country, which rests on efficient tax management and speedy tax collection. Section 132(2) of the Ordinance has no appetite for delays and penalizes the indolent party by empowering the Tribunal to proceed ex-parte on the basis of the available record. It is also to be noted that section 132(2) does not encourage adjournments by the parties. The Tribunal can proceed ex-parte if any of the parties is in default on the date of hearing. "In default" means absence of a party without a sufficient cause on any date fixed for hearing.

10. For the reasons elaborated above, we hold and declare that Rule 22(1) of the Rules to the extent whereby it allows the Tribunal to dismiss an appeal in default is ultra vires section 132(2) of the Ordinance and is, therefore, struck down to that extent. Consequently, the appeal of the petitioner shall be deemed to be pending before the Tribunal and shall be decided by the Tribunal within a period of three months from the receipt of this judgment.

11. This petition is converted into appeal and allowed in the above terms as a consequence the impugned judgment dated 03.03.2022 of the High Court is set aside.

12. Office shall dispatch copies of the judgment to the Federal Government through Secretary, Ministry of Finance, Revenue Division, Islamabad and to the Federal Board of Revenue, through its Chairman, for information and compliance.

MWA/F-12/SC Appeal allowed.

2022 S C M R 1923

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, C.J. and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

PAKISTAN ELECTRONIC MEDIA REGULATORY AUTHORITY and others---Petitioners

Versus

ARY COMMUNICATIONS LTD. and others---Respondents

Civil Petitions Nos. 1716 to 1724 of 2022, decided on 25th July, 2022.

(Against the consolidated order of High Court of Sindh, Karachi dated 08.02.2022, passed in C.Ps. Nos. D-2795, D-2796, D-2797, D-3308, D-3312, D 3313, D-3314 of 2018, C.Ps. Nos.D-6644 and D-6645 of 2017)

Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance (XIII of 2002)---

----S. 26---Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Council of Complaints) Rules 2010, R. 3---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 25 & 27---Honorary appointments to public offices---Appointment process---Chairperson and Members of the Council of Complaints ("COC"), Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority ("PEMRA")---Appointments to honorary public offices, such as the COC, are to be made through an open and competitive process including advertisement---Offices of the COC are associated with important roles and are required to be filled with the most meritorious candidates---Although neither the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ('the Ordinance') nor the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Council of Complaints) Rules 2010 ("Rules"), expressly require the public advertisement of the COC slots, however, the Ordinance, and also the Rules, require that the Chairperson and Members of the COC shall be citizens of eminence---Equally true that "citizens of eminence" may not themselves come forward to apply for these honorary positions, rather, the Government itself needs to spot such individuals through a process of headhunt---Relevant directions issued by the Supreme Court for filling places available on the COC stated.

Appointees to the Council of Complaints ("COC") play an important role in public life relating to the issue of public complaints in the realm of regulation of electronic media in the country. Obviously, the process of making such public appointments should be designed and conducted in a way to ensure that the best people, from the widest possible pool of candidates, are considered and appointed to these positions.

Sir Gerry Grimstone, 'Better Public Appointments - A Review of the Public Appointments Process' (Cabinet Office Whitehall 2016) ref.

Open selection process allows for unexpected expressions of interest. It prioritizes competition and helps discovering best possible candidates. The process, in turn, improves the governance and performance of the organization. In addition, such transparent process wins public confidence that appointees are selected on merit from a wide and inclusive pool of applicants. On the other hand, a closed selection approach limited to a headhunt itself conducted by the Government may prevent the organization from tapping in best available talent. Many outstanding candidates of whom the Government is unaware can be missed. Headhunting selectors have been observed to be looking for people like themselves and thus limiting the prospect of diversity. Besides, public appointments made behind closed doors raise eyebrows because the door of partisan intervention and patronage remains open.

Elena Doldor, Susan Vinnicombe, Mary Gaughan and Ruth Sealy, 'Gender Diversity on Boards: The Appointment Process and the Role of Executive Search Firms' (Equality and Human Rights Commission Research Report 85, International Centre for Women Leaders, Cranfield School of Management Cranfield University 2012) ref.

Making appointment to a public office is a sacred trust which is to be discharged justly and fairly in the best interest of the public, based on a process that is fair, transparent and nondiscriminatory. Highest standards of diligence, transparency and probity are to be observed so that a qualified, eligible and most deserving person is selected for a post. The constitutional guarantee of equality and safeguard against discrimination is not limited to paid services or jobs but extends to all appointments to public offices, honorary or otherwise.

Chief Secretary Punjab v. Abdul Raoof Dasti 2006 SCMR 1876; Syed Mubashir Raza Jaffri v. Employees Old Age Benefits Institutions (EOBI) 2014 SCMR 949; Muhammad Ashraf Tiwana v. Pakistan 2013 SCMR 1159 and Muhammad Yasin v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2012 SC 132 ref.

There cannot be agreement with the argument that COC appointments being of honorary nature do not need to go through the requirements associated with other appointments' selection process. It is as if to suggest that honorary appointments are not important enough to merit a selection process based on competitive transparency. Such a notion is belied by the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance, 2002 ('the Ordinance') which requires that only eminent citizens could be given a place on the COC. The words "citizens of eminence" show that seeking the best person for the job becomes the only consideration before the appointing authority. COC offices are associated with important roles and are required to be filled with the most meritorious candidates. The honorary nature of COC appointments is significant and a step in the direction to attract eminent persons willing to take up the job of independently settling complaints against electronic media without any pecuniary strings attached to the terms and conditions of their offices. This further accentuates the need that COC membership should consist of the finest and most accomplished persons.

Hadayat Ullah v. Federation of Pakistan 2022 SCP 242 (Syed Mansoor Ali Shah J) and Moinuddin v. State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1960 All 484 ref.

Although neither the Ordinance nor the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Council of Complaints) Rules 2010 ("Rules"), expressly require the public advertisement of the COC slots, however, the Ordinance, and also the Rules, require that the Chairperson and Members of the COC shall be citizens of eminence. The idea is that the composition of the COC shall consist of respected, qualified and experienced members of society who shall work independently under facilitation of PEMRA and take action on the complaints received against broadcast media and distribution service providers. The search for such an array of individuals must begin with a transparent call for candidates. Only then can optimum utilization of talent be achieved and ensured and purpose behind the provision of sending the citizens of eminence to the COC be realized.

It is also true that advertising may leave out some high-caliber candidates who would have accepted a direct appointment but would prefer not to join an open competition. It was possible that "citizens of eminence" may not themselves come forward to apply for these honorary positions, rather, the Government itself needs to spot such individuals through a process of headhunt.

Supreme Court directed that alongside the process initiated with the advertisement of the places available on the COC, the Government may carry out its own search of finding the best possible candidates for the job; that any suitable candidates identified in this executive search may be approached with the prospective offer of serving on the COC; that consent of such candidates to such offer may be treated as their application for the available positions, and such candidatures shall be added to the group of applications received in response to the public advertisement; that all candidates, whether identified in Government search or those who themselves choose to apply in response to advertisement, shall be assessed against an objective criteria which may relate to conduct, reputation, credibility, integrity, professional excellence etc., and that the most eligible candidates shall be selected out of the consolidated pool.

Moinuddin v. State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1960 All 484; Danielle Wood, Kate Griffiths and Anika Stobart, 'New politics: A better process for public appointments' (Report No. 2022-09, Grattan Institute 2022) 16 ref.

Haroon Dugal, Advocate Supreme Court (video-link Lahore) along with Mohsin Hameed Dohar, Dir. PEMRA and Jalal Haider, Law Officer for Petitioners.

Ayan Mustafa Memon, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 25th July, 2022.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---We consider in this case whether honorary appointments to public offices like the Chairperson and Members of the Council of Complaints ("COC"), Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority ("PEMRA") need to be made after advertising the positions or the Government could itself headhunt and fill these slots.

2. Brief facts of the case are that a number of television broadcasting companies and a private citizen filed separate constitutional petitions in the High Court of Sindh for issuance of the writ of quo warranto against the individuals then holding the offices of the Chairperson and Members of the COC Sindh, PEMRA on the ground that they were not fit, eligible and qualified to hold said offices. The High Court dismissed the constitutional petitions and observed that the appointments in question did not seem to suffer from any inherent defect under the law. However, the High Court directed that "in the future, the appointment of Chairperson and Members of the COC PEMRA is required to be made after advertising the positions" and it is against this direction that present petitions for leave to appeal have been filed by PEMRA.

3. It has been contended by the learned counsel for the petitioners that the Chairperson and Members of the COC are appointed on honorary basis for a period of two years. There is no prevalent statutory provision, he argues, which calls for advertisement of the positions of the Chairperson and Members of the COC and, therefore, there is no such requirement. The learned counsel says that the High Court failed to appreciate the fact that the Chairperson and Members of the COC neither fall in the category of civil servant nor are permanent posts so as to require advertisement. Additionally, he submits that the PEMRA Ordinance 2002 ("Ordinance") requires that the Chairperson and Members of the COC must be "citizens of eminence" and that persons of such stature do not usually feel inclined to themselves come forward and apply for honorary positions. He maintains that the Government would be hard-pressed to find citizens of eminence if said honorary offices are to be necessarily filled after inviting applications.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the petitioners at length and perused the record. The question before us is whether appointments to honorary public offices are to be made through an open and competitive process or the Government could itself pick and choose the suitable individuals to occupy such positions. PEMRA is envisaged, in the Ordinance, as an independent statutory body that would regulate electronic media in Pakistan. The Ordinance hands out a distinct legal personality and operational autonomy to PEMRA. One of the objects identified in the preamble is to "improve the standards of information, education and entertainment". Thus, the COC is established under section 26 of the Ordinance to address public complaints against any aspects of programmes broadcast or distributed by electronic media.

5. For the regulation of electronic media in the country, the COC evidently holds an important adjudicatory-cum -recommendatory position vis- -vis review of public complaints. The COC is required to receive and review complaints made by persons or organizations from the general public against any aspects of programmes broadcast or distributed by a station established through a licence issued by PEMRA.[1] The COC has powers to summon a licensee against whom a complaint has been made and call for explanation regarding any matter relating to their operation.[2] The COC is supposed to render opinions on such complaints.[3] Finally, in case of violation of the codes of programme content and advertisements, the COC may recommend appropriate action of censure or fine to PEMRA.[4] It thus appears that appointees to the COC are to play an important role in public life relating to the issue of public complaints in the realm of regulation of electronic media in the country. Obviously, the process of making such public appointments should be designed and conducted in a way to ensure that the best people, from the widest possible pool of candidates, are considered and appointed to these positions. It is said that a competition is as good as the competitors who take part in it.[5]

6. Open selection process allows for unexpected expressions of interest. It prioritizes competition and helps discovering best possible candidates. The process, in turn, improves the governance and performance of the organization. In addition, such transparent process wins public confidence that appointees are selected on merit from a wide and inclusive pool of applicants. On the other hand, a closed selection approach limited to a headhunt itself conducted by the Government may prevent the organization from tapping in best available talent. Many outstanding candidates of whom the Government is unaware can be missed. Headhunting selectors have been observed to be looking for people like themselves and thus limiting the prospect of diversity.[6] Besides, public appointments made behind closed doors raise eyebrows because the door of partisan intervention and patronage remains open.

7. Making appointment to a public office is a sacred trust which is to be discharged justly and fairly in the best interest of the public[7], based on a process that is fair, transparent and non -discriminatory.[8] Highest standards of diligence, transparency and probity are to be observed so that a qualified, eligible and most deserving person is selected for a post.[9] Article 25 of the Constitution guarantees equality of status to all citizens of Pakistan. Article 27 of the Constitution which is an instance of the application of 'equality' commanded by Article 25, in respect of appointments in the service of Pakistan, safeguards against discrimination in respect of such appointments.[10] The constitutional guarantee of equality and safeguard against discrimination is not limited to paid services or jobs but extends to all appointments to public offices, honorary or otherwise.[11]

8. We do not agree with the argument that COC appointments being of honorary nature do not need to go through the requirements associated with other appointments' selection process. It is as if to suggest that honorary appointments are not important enough to merit a selection process based on competitive transparency. Such a notion is belied by the Ordinance which requires that only eminent citizens could be given a place on the COC. The words "citizens of eminence" show that seeking the best person for the job becomes the only consideration before the appointing authority. COC offices are associated with important roles and are required to be filled with the most meritorious candidates. We see that an individual is nominated to an honorary position in recognition of his or her individual standing and professional reputation. Some offices, though honorary or unpaid, may be highly coveted by citizens. They do not carry any salary or emoluments but they may be offices of prestige, status and dignity.[12] The honorary nature of COC appointments is significant and a step in the direction to attract eminent persons willing to take up the job of independently settling complaints against electronic media without any pecuniary strings attached to the terms and conditions of their offices. This further accentuates the need that COC membership should consist of the finest and most accomplished persons.

9. It is correct that neither the Ordinance nor the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Council of Complaints) Rules, 2010 ("Rules"), framed in exercise of the powers conferred by section 26(4) read with section 39 of the Ordinance, expressly require the public advertisement of the COC slots. Notable, however, is the fact that the Ordinance, and also the Rules, require that the Chairperson and Members of the COC shall be citizens of eminence. The idea is that the composition of the COC shall consist of respected, qualified and experienced members of society who shall work independently under facilitation of PEMRA and take action on the complaints received against broadcast media and distribution service providers.[13] The important thing here is to see as to how to fulfil legislative will and find the citizens of eminence to sit on the COC. The search for such an array of individuals must begin with a transparent call for candidates. Only then can optimum utilization of talent be achieved and ensured and purpose behind the provision of sending the citizens of eminence to the COC be realized.

10. We do recognize that advertising may leave out some high-caliber candidates who would have accepted a direct appointment but would prefer not to join an open competition. However, meritocracy does not obviate the need for transparency nor should it devolve into elitism with limited opportunities for less privileged.[14] The constitutional imperative of equality and non -discrimination demands that public sector appointments be made in an open and competitive process with equal opportunity for all. Appointing authorities must factor in transparency to the design and planning of public appointments processes. The overall standard of selections to be made in an open selection would be higher than the current uncompetitive approach. We do not entirely disagree with the argument of learned counsel for the petitioners that "citizens of eminence" may not themselves come forward to apply for these honorary positions, rather, the Government itself needs to spot such individuals through a process of headhunt. Rather, we point out that the Government is missing out on the fact that advertising doesn't preclude running a headhunting process in parallel.[15] Alongside the process initiated with the advertisement of the places available on the COC, the Government may carry out its own search of finding the best possible candidates for the job. Any suitable candidates identified in this executive search may be approached with the prospective offer of serving on the COC. Consent of such candidates to such offer may be treated as their application for the available positions. Such candidatures shall be added to the group of applications received in response to the public advertisement. All candidates, whether identified in Government search or those who themselves choose to apply in response to advertisement, shall be assessed against an objective criteria which may relate to conduct, reputation, credibility, integrity, professional excellence etc. The most eligible candidates shall be selected out of the consolidated pool.

11. For the above reasons, we are not persuaded that the COC slots should not be advertised. Consequently, the impugned consolidated order is upheld, subject to clarifications/elaborations/ observations given in paragraph 10.

12. These petitions are disposed of in the above terms.

MWA/P-21/SC Order accordingly.

2022 S C M R 1943

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Qazi Faez Isa and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

Messrs KOHINOOR SPINNING MILLS LTD.---Petitioner

Versus

COMMISSIONER INLAND REVENUE---Respondent

Civil Petition No. 2006 of 2022, decided on 23rd August, 2022.

(Against the order of Lahore High Court, Lahore dated 21.04.2022 passed in PTR No. 209 of 2012)

(a) Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----Ss. 131 & 133---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Questions of law not raised before the Tribunal or High Court---Supreme Court is not a forum to raise fresh questions of law which have not been examined by the Tribunal or the High Court or do not even arise from the decision of the Tribunal---In numerous cases, a totally new question of law, which has not been raised earlier is agitated before the Supreme Court for the first time without disclosing that it has not been raised earlier---Supreme Court deprecated such practice and observed that the parties must restrict themselves to the questions of law raised and decided by the High Court and desist from introducing a new question of law by giving an impression that the same was not addressed by the forums below.

(b) Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001)---

----S. 21(e)---Income from business, computation of---Deductions not allowed---Contributions made by tax-payer company to an unapproved gratuity fund---Section 21(e) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 clearly stipulates that the contributions to an unapproved gratuity fund cannot be deducted while computing the income tax of a person under the head "Income from Business"---Admittedly, in the present case, the gratuity fund has not been approved---Contention of the counsel for the tax payer that once the contribution is made to a gratuity fund, section 21(e) is not applicable, is an absurd argument and totally negates the purpose and object of the statutory requirement of an approved gratuity fund---If the argument of the counsel were to hold true, the requirement of an approved gratuity fund is rendered totally meaningless, if the taxpayer simply states making the contribution to an unapproved gratuity fund and thereafter seeks deduction from the income from business---Such an interpretation is not only absurd but is also unsustainable in law---Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed and leave was refused.

Faiz Rasool Jalbani, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner (video link Lahore).

Ibrar Ahmed, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondent.

Date of hearing: 23rd August, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The question of law raised in the Tax Reference filed before the High Court was whether the learned Appellate Tribunal Inland Revenue ("Tribunal") was justified in holding that the contributions made by the petitioner to an unapproved gratuity fund were not allowed to be deducted while computing the income of a person under the head "income from business" under section 21(e) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("Ordinance"). The view of the Tribunal was affirmed in the Tax Reference through the impugned order dated 21.4.2022.

2. Learned counsel for the petitioner submits that once the contributions have been made by the petitioner company to the gratuity fund, section 21(e) of the Ordinance is no more applicable. In addition to this argument, he also submitted that the petitioner enjoyed exemption under clause 33 of Part-II of Second Schedule of the Ordinance.

3. As to the latter submission regarding exemption, we note that this contention has not been raised by the petitioner before any fora below. The learned counsel has raised this question before us for the first time in this case. This Court in the instant petition is to examine the judgment passed by the High Court in a tax reference. We have to see if the questions of law raised before the High Court were decided in accordance with the law. This is not a forum to raise fresh questions of law which have not been examined by the Tribunal or the High Court or do not even arise from the decision of the Tribunal. We have also noticed that in number of other cases, a totally new question of law, which has not been raised earlier is agitated before this Court for the first time without disclosing that it has not been raised earlier. Such a practice is deprecated. Learned counsel for the parties must restrict themselves to the questions of law raised and decided by the High Court and desist from introducing a new question of law by giving an impression that the same was not addressed by the forums below. Even otherwise, on merits, the said exemption is nor available to the petitioner, as it applies to the beneficiaries of said fund and not to a person who is making a contribution to a gratuity fund.

4. Coming to the legal question raised in the Reference, section 21(e) is reproduced hereunder for convenience:

21. Deductions not allowed.---Except as otherwise provided in this Ordinance, no deduction shall be allowed in computing the income of a person under the head Income from Business" for-

(a) - (d)

(c) any contribution made by the person to a fund that is not a recognized provident fund, approved pension fund, approved superannuation fund or approved gratuity fund;

The above provision clearly stipulates that the contributions to an unapproved gratuity fund cannot be deducted while computing the income tax of a person under the head "Income from Business". Admittedly, in this case, the gratuity fund has not been approved. The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that once the contribution is made to a gratuity fund, section 21(e) is not applicable, is an absurd argument and totally negates the purpose and object of the statutory requirement of an approved gratuity fund. If the argument of the learned counsel were to hold true, the requirement of an approved gratuity fund is rendered totally meaningless, if the taxpayer simply states making the contribution to an unapproved gratuity fund and thereafter seeks deduction from the income from business. Such an interpretation is not only absurd but is also unsustainable in law.

5. In view of the above, we see no reason to interfere in the well-reasoned impugned order. Leave is, therefore, declined and this petition is dismissed.

MWA/K-15/SC Petition dismissed.

2022 S C M R 1950

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Qazi Faez Isa and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

Mst. FURSAN---Petitioner

Versus

The STATE---Respondent

Criminal Petition No. 994 of 2022, decided on 26th August, 2022.

(Against the judgment of Peshawar High Court, Peshawar, dated 06.07.2022 passed in Criminal Miscellaneous B.A. No.2023-P of 2022)

(a) Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXXI of 2019)---

----S. 26---Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), Ss. 497 & 498---Provisions of sections 497 & 498, Cr.P.C. that deal with grant of bail in non-bailable offences apply to the offences under the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Control of Narcotics Substances Act, 2019 ('the Act'), by virtue of the general provisions of section 26 of the Act, according to which the provisions of the Cr.P.C. apply to trials and appeals under the Act, except as otherwise provided in the Act.

(b) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497(1), first proviso & 497(2)---Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Control of Narcotic Substances Act (XXXI of 2019), S. 11(c)---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 185(3)---Female accused found in possession of 1005 grams of methamphetamine---Likelihood of repeating the offence---Bail, refusal of---Offence alleged against the accused fell within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C.---Accused was arrested red handed on the spot and a considerable quantity of contraband ICE (methamphetamine) was recovered from her personal possession, but no plausible explanation had been offered by her in respect of the narcotics substance---Recovery memo was duly supported by marginal witnesses who were present on the spot with the seizing officer---No ill-will or mala fide had been shown by the accused on the part of police to falsely implicate her in the present case---Accused has thus not been able to make out a case of further inquiry for grant of bail in an offence of prohibitory clause, under section 497(2), Cr.P.C.---Examining the case of the accused under the first proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C., as she was a woman, there were three settled exceptions to the rule of granting bail under the said proviso i.e. the likelihood of the accused to abscond to escape the trial; to tamper with the prosecution evidence, which included influencing the prosecution witnesses; or to repeat the offence---Offences relating to narcotic drugs were of such a nature that did indicate the likelihood of the repetition of the offence by the accused---Dealing in narcotic drugs was usually the business of the persons involved therein, and was not a spontaneous or one time act, and the women were often involved in it as carriers for the transportation, supply and sale of narcotic drugs---Likelihood of such an offence being repeated by the accused could not, therefore, be ruled out---Case of the accused thus came within the scope of the exception of likelihood of repeating the offence---Accused was not found entitled to the relief of bail under the first proviso to section 479(1), Cr.P.C. also---Petition for leave to appeal was dismissed.

Tahira Batool v. State 2022 SCP 247 - Citation from the SCP website distinguished.

M. Amjad Iqbal Qureshi, Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioner.

Mian Shafaqat Jan, Additional A.G., Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Niaz Muhammad DSP and Noor Muhammad, SI for the State.

Date of hearing: 26th August, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The principles of the law of bail have been developed gradually by courts, in their effort to maintain a right balance between the two competing factors: the rights of the accused and the interests of the society. The accused enjoys the right to be presumed innocent until he is proven guilty and the bail cannot be denied to punish him before he is convicted by a court of law. On the other hand, it is in the interest of the society that the accused does not avoid trial and frustrate the process of law, and be a risk to the public in the meanwhile. Thus, when there is a likelihood of the accused to escape trial or tamper with the prosecution evidence or repeat the offence, the public interest trumps the rights of the accused, who is detained till the conclusion of his trial. The bail is thus declined to him as a preventive measure, and not as a punishment.[1]

2. In the present case, the petitioner who has been denied bail by the courts below seeks intervention of this Court for her release on bail pending conclusion of her trial in case FIR No. 1230 of 2022 registered at Police Station Pishtakhara, Peshawar for the offence punishable under section 11(c) of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Control of Narcotic Substances Act 2019 ("Act"). The allegation against her is that the Police caught her and her co-accused each carrying 1005 grams of "methamphetamine"[2], a psychotropic substance, also referred to as "ice"[3] under the schedule.

3. Besides his submissions on the insufficiency of the incriminating material to connect the petitioner with the commission of the alleged offence, learned counsel for the petitioner, has contended that the petitioner being a woman is entitled to be released on bail under the first proviso to section 497(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898 ("Cr.P.C.") and in support of the contention, has placed reliance on the case of Tahira Batool v. State[4]. Opposing his contention, the learned counsel for the State has referred to the exceptions mentioned in paragraph 6 of the order in Tahira Batool case and submitted that in view of the nature of the offence there is a likelihood of repeating the same by the petitioner if released on bail.

4. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties, read the cited case and perused the record.

5. Although section 20 of the Act provides that all the offences under the Act shall be cognizable and non-bailable, there is no other provision in the Act on the subject of bail nor is there any provision that bars application of the provisions of Cr.P.C. in regard to bail in non-bailable offences. Therefore, the provisions of sections 497 and 498, Cr.P.C. that deal with grant of bail in non-bailable offences apply to the offences under the Act, by virtue of the general provisions of section 26 of the Act, according to which the provisions of the Cr.P.C. apply to trials and appeals under the Act, except as otherwise provided in the Act.

6. The offence alleged against the petitioner is punishable with death, imprisonment for life or imprisonment upto fourteen years, and thus falls within the prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. Perusal of record would reveal that the accused-petitioners have been arrested red handed on the spot and a considerable quantity of contraband ICE was recovered from her personal possession, but no plausible explanation has been offered by the accused in respect of the narcotics substance. The recovery memo is duly supported by marginal witnesses who were present on the spot with the seizing officer. No ill-will or mala fide has been shown by the petitioner on the part of police to have been implicated falsely in the instant case. The two courts below, therefore, formed an opinion, though tentative, that there was sufficient incriminating material available on record of the case that prima facie connected the petitioner with the commission of the alleged offence. We do not find their concurrent opinion to be perverse or arbitrary, which could have justified interference by this Court. The petitioner has thus not been able to make out a case of further inquiry for grant of bail in an offence of prohibitory clause, under section 497(2), Cr.P.C. However, the petitioner being a woman her prayer for post arrest bail should also have been examined under the first proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C., if she was not found entitled to bail under section 497(2), Cr.P.C., as held by this Court in Tahira Batool case. The courts below have not adverted to it. We therefore proceed to examine the prayer of the petitioner for bail under the said proviso, in the interest of justice.

7. Under the first proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C., grant of bail is a rule and refusal an exception, as held in Tahira Batool case, in a case where the accused is a minor under the age of sixteen years, a woman, or a sick or infirm person, even in a non-bailable offence of prohibitory clause, in the same manner as bail is granted or refused in offences of non-prohibitory clause of section 497(1), Cr.P.C. Thus, we are to only examine, whether the case of the petitioner falls within any of the three settled exceptions to the rule of granting bail, which are the likelihood of the accused: (a) to abscond to escape the trial; (b) to tamper with the prosecution evidence, which includes influencing the prosecution witnesses; or (c) to repeat the offence.

8. The learned counsel for the State has, in the present case, pressed only the third exception, i.e., the likelihood of the petitioner to repeat the offence, on the basis of nature of the offence. This Court has described three circumstances in the Tahira Batool case that may be considered for deciding, whether or not there is a likelihood of repeating the offence by the accused, which are: (i) his previous criminal record, (ii) nature of the offence, or (iii) manner of committing the offence. These circumstances are, as held by this Court in Iftikhar Ahmad v. State[5], only illustrative in character, and not exhaustive, and the courts may take into consideration "some other striking circumstance that impinges on the proceedings of the trial, or poses a threat or danger to the society" and thus brings the case of an accused within any of the said three settled exceptions to the rule.

9. While examining the applicability of the third exception, relied upon by the learned counsel for the State, as to the likelihood of the repetition of the offence by the petitioner, we find that the offences relating to narcotic drugs are of such a nature that do indicate the likelihood of the repetition of the offence by the accused. Dealing in narcotic drugs is usually the business of the persons involved therein, and is not a spontaneous or one time act, and the women are often involved in it as carriers for the transportation, supply and sale of narcotic drugs.[6] The likelihood of such an offence being repeated by the petitioner cannot, therefore, be ruled out. The case of the petitioner thus comes within the scope of the exception of likelihood of repeating the offence. The reliance of the learned counsel for the petitioner on Tahira Batool case is misconceived, as in the said case also the Court observed that "the persons involved in the commission of offences of robbery or dacoity are usually the professional criminals and there is a likelihood that they would repeat the offence if enlarged on bail", and distinguished the case of Tahira Batool, the women accused in the case, because she was employed in the house of the complainant as a maid. Had this distinguishing fact not been there, her case might also have fallen within the exception of likelihood of repeating the offence because of the nature of the offence of robbery.

10. In view of the above factual and legal position, the petitioner is not found entitled to the relief of bail under the first proviso to section 479(1), Cr.P.C. also. We therefore maintain the impugned order and dismiss the petition. However, the learned trial court is directed to proceed with and conclude the trial expeditiously.

MWA/F-14/SC Bail refused.

2022 S C M R 2006

[Supreme Court of Pakistan]

Present: Umar Ata Bandial and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

ZAFAR IQBAL and others---Appellants

Versus

NASEER AHMED and others---Respondents

C.A. No. 775 of 2015, decided on 1st October, 2021.

(Against the judgment dated 12.11.2014 and decree dated 22.06.2015 of Lahore High Court, Lahore passed in R.S.A. No. 19 of 2006)

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908)---

----S. 100---Second appeal---Scope of jurisdiction of High Courts in second appeal under section 100, C.P.C. and of the expression "contrary to law" used therein stated.

Under section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 ("C.P.C."), a second appeal to the High Court lies only on any of the following grounds: (a) the decision being contrary to law or usage having the force of law; (b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law; and (c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by C.P.C. or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon merits. The scope of second appeal is thus restricted and limited to these grounds, as section 101 of C.P.C. expressly mandates that no second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in section 100. Notwithstanding such clear provisions on the scope of second appeal, sometimes the High Courts deal with and decide second appeals as if those were first appeals; they thus assume and exercise a jurisdiction which the High Courts do not possess, and thereby also contribute for unjustified prolongation of litigation process which is already chocked with high pendency of cases.

No doubt, the expression "law" used in the phrase "the decision being contrary to law" in the ground (a) mentioned in section 100 of the C.P.C. is not confined to "statutory law" only, but also includes the "principles of law" enunciated by the constitutional courts, which have the binding force of law. And, it is an elementary principle of law that a court is to make a decision on an issue of fact on the basis of legally relevant and admissible evidence available on record of the case. The decision of a court is, therefore, considered "contrary to law" when it is made by ignoring the relevant and duly proved facts, or by considering the irrelevant or not duly proved facts. The expressions "relevant evidence" and "admissible evidence" are often used interchangeably, in legal parlance, with "relevant facts" and "duly proved facts" respectively, and a decision is said to be "contrary to law" and is open to examination by the High Courts in second appeal when: (i) it is based no evidence, or (ii) it is based on irrelevant or inadmissible evidence, or (iii) it is based on non-reading or misreading of the relevant and admissible evidence. A decision on an issue of fact that is based on correct reading of relevant and admissible evidence cannot be termed to be "contrary to law"; therefore, it is immune from scrutiny in second appeal. A High Court cannot, in such case, enter into the exercise of re-reading and re-appraisal of evidence, in second appeal, and reverse the findings of facts of the first appellate court, much less the concurrent findings of facts reached by the trial court as well as the first appellate court. It has, in second appeal, no jurisdiction to go into the question relating to weightage to be attached to the statements of witnesses, or believing or disbelieving their testimony, or reversing the findings of the courts below just because the other view can also be formed on the basis of evidence available on record of the case.

Rafiul Qadre v. Safia Sultana 2009 SCMR 254; Nazeer Ahmed v. Maqsood Ahmed 2008 SCMR 190; Amjad Sharif v. Salim Ullah PLD 2006 SC 777; Mussarat Sultana v. Muhammad Saeed 1997 SCMR 1866; Abdul Rashid v. Bashiran 1996 SCMR 808; Muhammad Amir v. Khan Bahadur PLD 1996 SC 267; Sultan Ahmad v. Naeem Raza 1996 SCMR 1729 and Keramat Ali v. Muhammad Yunus PLD 1963 SC 191 ref.

Barrister Umer Aslam, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellants.

Moulvi Anwar-ul-Haq, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents Nos. 1 - 3.

Ex parte: Respondents Nos. 4 - 8.

Date of hearing: 1st October, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The appellants have filed this appeal, as of right, under Article 185(2)(d) of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 against the judgment dated 12.11.2014 and decree dated 22.06.2015[1] of the Lahore High Court passed in Regular Second Appeal No. 19 of 2006 of respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

2. The High Court has, by the impugned judgment, set aside the judgment of the first appellate court, whereby that court had upheld the judgment of the trial Court, with minor modification, decreeing the recovery of the paid advance consideration amount instead of specific performance of the agreement to sell prayed for by respondents Nos. 1 to 3 in their suit.

3. The facts of the case, briefly stated, are that one Waryam, the predecessor-in-interest of respondents Nos. 1 to 3 ("vendee"), instituted a suit for specific performance of an agreement to sell dated 15.01.1984 ("agreement") against Mirza Abdul Rashid ("vendor") and his wife Noor Begum ("wife of vendor"), the predecessors-in-interest of respondents Nos. 4 to 8, and for cancellation of sale deed dated 21.02.1985 executed by the vendor in favour of the present appellants ("subsequent purchasers"). He asserted that the vendor agreed to sell his land as well as land of his wife measuring 10 acres ("suit land") to him by the agreement against a consideration of Rs.40,000/- per acre; but despite having received partial consideration amount Rs.2,79,000/- from him, the vendor transferred land measuring 6 acres out of the suit land to the subsequent purchasers, to defeat the fulfillment of the agreement.

4. The vendor, the wife of the vendor, and the subsequent purchasers contested the suit by filling their written statements separately. The vendor admitted the execution of the agreement to the extent of his land, but denied to have agreed to sell the land owned by his wife. He further asserted that the vendee failed to make payment of the balance consideration amount till the agreed date, therefore, the agreement stood cancelled. The wife of the vendor asserted that she was not a party to the agreement and also denied to have given any authority to her husband to sell her land. The subsequent purchasers claimed themselves to be the bona fide purchasers of 6-acre land out of the suit land.

5. The trial court came to the conclusion that the wife of the vendor was not party to the agreement, therefore, the agreement could not be operative to the extent of her land, and that the subsequent purchasers were bona fide purchasers for value without notice. In view of these findings, the trial court rejected the prayer of the vendee for specific performance of the agreement, but granted him the relief of recovery of the paid consideration amount of Rs.2,79,000/- against the vendor. The vendee being not satisfied of the relief granted appealed in the District Court. As the vendor had not appealed against the decree passed by the trial court against him for recovery of the paid consideration amount, the appellate court only examined the issue on the assertion of the subsequent purchasers to be the bona fide purchasers, in detail, and affirmed the findings of the trial court thereon. The appellate court thus dismissed the first appeal of the vendee, maintaining the judgment of the trial court with a minor modification in the terms that the vendee was held entitled to receive 10% markup also on the paid consideration amount from the date of payment till its recovery.

6. The vendee still being not content with the relief granted to him by the appellate court, filed a second appeal in the High Court, pressing for the grant of relief of specific performance of the agreement and challenging the concurrent findings of fact on the issue of claim of the subsequent purchasers to be the bona fide purchasers. The High Court allowed the second appeal: set aside the concurrent findings of fact of the two courts below on that issue, and decreed partially the claim of the vendee for specific performance of the agreement to the extent of 6-acre land owned by the vendor, which had been purchased by the subsequent purchasers, as well as 5-kanal land owned by the wife of the vendor. Hence, the subsequent purchasers have filed the present appeal.

7. We have heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties and gone through the record of the case with their assistance.

8. At the very outset, we observe that the High Court hearing a second appeal, in the present case, has re-read and re appraised the evidence of the parties in the way a first appellate court does, without realizing the distinction between the scope of the first appeal and the second appeal. Under section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 ("C.P.C."), a second appeal to the High Court lies only on any of the following grounds: (a) the decision being contrary to law or usage having the force of law; (b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law; and (c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by C.P.C. or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon merits. The scope of second appeal is thus restricted and limited to these grounds, as section 101 expressly mandates that no second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in section 100. But we have noticed that notwithstanding such clear provisions on the scope of second appeal, sometimes the High Courts deal with and decide second appeals as if those were first appeals; they thus assume and exercise a jurisdiction which the High Courts do not possess, and thereby also contribute for unjustified prolongation of litigation process which is already chocked with high pendency of cases.

9. No doubt, the expression "law" used in the phrase "the decision being contrary to law" in the ground (a) mentioned in section 100 of the C.P.C. is not confined to "statutory law" only, but also includes the "principles of law" enunciated by the constitutional courts, which have the binding force of law under Articles 189 and 201 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973. And, it is an elementary principle of law that a court is to make a decision on an issue of fact on the basis of legally relevant and admissible evidence available on record of the case, which principle is also incorporated in the statutory law, that is, the first proviso to Article 161 of the Qanun-e-Shahadat Order 1984. The said proviso states in unequivocal terms that a judgment must be based upon facts declared by the Qanun-e- Shahadat Order to be relevant and duly proved.

10. The decision of a court is, therefore, considered "contrary to law" when it is made by ignoring the relevant and duly proved facts, or by considering the irrelevant or not duly proved facts. The expressions "relevant evidence" and "admissible evidence" are often used interchangeably, in legal parlance, with "relevant facts" and "duly proved facts" respectively, and a decision is said to be "contrary to law" and is open to examination by the High Courts in second appeal when: (i) it is based no evidence, or (ii) it is based on irrelevant or inadmissible evidence, or (iii) it is based on non-reading or misreading of the relevant and admissible evidence. A decision on an issue of fact that is based on correct reading of relevant and admissible evidence cannot be termed to be "contrary to law"; therefore, it is immune from scrutiny in second appeal. A High Court cannot, in such case, enter into the exercise of re-reading and re-appraisal of evidence, in second appeal, and reverse the findings of facts of the first appellate court, much less the concurrent findings of facts reached by the trial court as well as the first appellate court. It has, in second appeal, no jurisdiction to go into the question relating to weightage to be attached to the statements of witnesses, or believing or disbelieving their testimony, or reversing the findings of the courts below just because the other view can also be formed on the basis of evidence available on record of the case.[2]

11. In the present case, the trial court and the appellate court after reading and appraising all the relevant and admissible evidence adduced by the parties in support of their respective assertions, recorded the findings that the vendee could not prove his assertion that two of the subsequent purchasers were present at the time of execution of the agreement and he had also informed them about the agreement after execution thereof, while the subsequent purchasers proved their stance of having purchased 6 acre of land out of the suit land with payment of consideration amount Rs.300,000/- in good faith and without notice of the agreement between the vendor and vendee. The said courts underlined the facts that the vendee was not put in possession of the suit land in pursuance of the agreement, rather the subsequent purchasers were in possession of the suit land as tenants before as well as at the time of purchasing land measuring 6 acre, and that the agreement between the vendor and vendee was entered between them in a city other than that where the suit land was situate; therefore, they held that the subsequent purchasers could not be presumed to have knowledge of the agreement prior to purchasing 6 acres of land. The appellate court also believed the stance of the subsequent purchasers that they had purchased the land after inquiry (poochh guchh) from the residents of the village.

12. The High Court, in the second appeal, without pointing out non-reading or misreading of relevant and admissible evidence by the trial court and the appellate court, proceeded to re-appraise the evidence and came to the conclusion that the sale transaction between the vendor and the vendee was "the talk of the town", and the subsequent purchasers had also not inspected the revenue record regarding title of the vendor before purchasing land. With this view formed on the basis of re-appraising the evidence, the High Court set aside the concurrent findings of the two courts below. We have observed that it was nobody's case that the copy of his ownership record for selling out the suit land (fard malkiat barai bai) was obtained by the vendor from the revenue officials before execution of the agreement in favour of the vendee with an entry of issuance of that copy in the revenue record, i.e., the daily dairy (roznamcha), or that the fact of execution of the agreement was reported by the vendor or vendee to the revenue officials for entering the same in the daily dairy (roznamcha); therefore, the emphasis of the High Court on the fact that the subsequent purchasers did not enquire from the revenue officials and inspect the revenue record before purchasing the land is totally misconceived. Nor was there any such overwhelming evidence on the basis of which it could be held that the agreement of the vendee to purchase the suit land was "the talk of the town." The High Court also fell into error by reversing the finding of the trial court that the wife of the vendor was not party to the agreement therefore the agreement was not operative to the extent of the wife of the vendor.

13. The argument of the learned counsel for respondents Nos. 1 to 3 regarding grant of partial performance of the agreement under section 14 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877 pales into insignificance after the categorical finding that the appellants were bona fide purchasers for value without notice.

14. The decision rendered by the two courts below was in no way based on no evidence, or on irrelevant or inadmissible evidence, or on non-reading or misreading of the relevant and admissible evidence. The High Court wrongly interfered with their concurrent findings of fact and in so doing exceeded its jurisdiction under section 100 of the C.P.C. We, therefore, allow this appeal: set aside the judgment of the High Court and restore that of the first appellate court.

MWA/Z-10/SC Appeal allowed.

P L D 2022 Supreme Court 7

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Sajjad Ali Shah and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

HASNAIN RAZA and another---Petitioners

Versus

LAHORE HIGH COURT, LAHORE and others (in both cases)---Respondents

C.P.L.As. Nos.1862-L and 1863-L of 2021, decided on 9th November, 2021.

(Against the strictures passed by the Lahore High Court, in its judgment dated 22.6.2021 delivered in F.A.O. No.28948 of 2019)

(a) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 202 & 203---Judicial strictures recorded against a judge of district/subordinate judiciary by the High Court/Appellate Court---Improper---Principles for warning or proceeding against a judge of the subordinate judiciary for grave inefficiency or misconduct stated.

Following are the principles for warning or proceeding against a judge of the subordinate judiciary for incompetence or misconduct:

i. An appellate court should not pass strictures in its judgment against the judge of the lower court whose judgment or order was impugned before it, relating to his efficiency or conduct;

ii. An appellate court should not summon in court the judge of the lower court whose judgment or order was impugned before it, to explain why and how he or she has made that judgment or order;

iii. An appellate court, if notices such procedural errors or irregularities in the proceedings conducted by the lower court which, it thinks, should not be repeated in other cases, may bring the same to the notice of the judge concerned through a confidential note separate from its judgment; and

iv. An appellate court, if is of the considered but tentative view supported by reasonable grounds that the judge of the lower court has exhibited grave inefficiency or has committed serious misconduct in discharge of his judicial duty that warrants disciplinary action, may inform the competent authority or the officer appointed by the competent authority to deal with such complaints, through a confidential report. The authority or the officer concerned was to deal with such confidential report and proceed with it further as per the relevant service laws, rules and instructions, notwithstanding the view of the appellate court, in the same manner as it or he dealt with other such complaints.

Nusrat Yasmin v. Registrar, PHC PLD 2019 SC 719 and Aijaz Ahmed v. State PLD 2021 SC 752 ref.

(b) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 202 & 203---Judicial strictures recorded by the High Court/Appellate Court against a judge of district/subordinate judiciary relating to his or her efficiency or conduct---Propriety---Public reprimand of a judge of the lower court regarding his judicial conduct by an appellate court while sitting in judgment over his or her judicial decision, either by recording a stricture or a censorious remark in its appellate judgment or by summoning the judge and reproaching him orally in open court, did not behove the judiciary of a constitutional democracy which boasted of the independence of judiciary as its salient pillar---Any such public condemnation of a judge lowered the public trust in the judicial institution, besides the harmful effect it had on the morale and confidence of the judge concerned as well as of his colleagues---While examining the decision of a court below, the higher court was to assess the reasoning and the legality of the decision challenged before it and not the ability or conduct of the author judge---Latter was the function of the disciplinary authority---Higher court, if so decided, could refer the matter to the disciplinary authority, in the manner elucidated in the judgment reported as Nusrat Yasmin v. Registrar, PHC (PLD 2019 SC 719), only on the administrative side.

Nusrat Yasmin v. Registrar, PHC PLD 2019 SC 719 ref.

(c) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 189 & 201---Vertical and horizontal precedents---Distinction and binding effect---Judicial effrontery---Effect---Judicial precedents may be classified into two categories: vertical and horizontal precedents---Vertical precedents meant the decisions of a higher court, and horizontal precedents meant the decisions of the same or coordinate court---All courts were absolutely bound by the vertical precedents of a higher court---Such binding tie was often said to be a matter of owing obedience---Articles 189 & 201 of the Constitution also reinforced the binding effect of the vertical precedents---Judges were therefore obliged to follow a vertical precedent even when they disagreed with it; this ensured a degree of national uniformity in judicial decisions---Judges had little room to decide how much weight or value was to be given by them to that precedent---Precedent of the apex Court of the country must be followed by all other courts of the country who owed unflinching fealty to its decisions under the Constitution---Ignoring or refusing to follow the controlling precedent of the Supreme Court amounted to judicial effrontery, offended the constitutional mandate, and weakened the public confidence in the decisions of the apex Court of the country---Furthermore a higher court generally adhered to horizontal precedents - its own earlier decisions - but it may depart from or overrule any of its own decisions by sitting as a larger bench if there was a compelling justification to do so.

Garner et al., The Law of Judicial Precedent, p. 27 (2016); Gately v. Massachusetts, 2 F.3d 1221 (1st Cir. 1993); Hutto v. Davis, 454 U.S. 370 (1982); Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 443 (1953) and Garner et al., The Law of Judicial Precedent, p. 35 (2016). ref.

Shahid Shaukat Ch. Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioners along with Petitioner in person.

Nemo for Respondents.

Date of hearing: 9th November, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---"Every judge of the courts of this land - from the highest to the lowest - should be protected to the same degree, and liable to the same degree. If the reason underlying this immunity is to ensure that they may be free in thought and independent in judgment, it applies to every judge, whatever his rank."1

2. Two judges of the District Judiciary of Punjab have approached this Court for redressal of their grievance against the stricture and direction passed against them by the Lahore High Court in para 23 of its judgment dated 22.06.2021 while deciding appeals against their judicial orders. They have prayed that the said stricture and direction, having been passed against them in derogation of the principles enunciated by this Court in Nusrat Yasmin v. Registrar, PHC (PLD 2019 SC 719) and Aijaz Ahmed v. State (PLD 2021 SC 752), may be expunged. The impugned stricture and direction are as follows:

> 23. Before parting with this order, it is observed that the conduct of Messrs Hasnain Raza and Nazia Ali, the then Civil Judges, Sheikhupura, while holding proceedings in the suit for specific performance as well as application under section 12(2) C.P.C., filed by the first vendee, prima facie, seems to be dubious. In this backdrop, let the Office to put the matter before the Hon'ble Chief Justice for initiation of regular inquiry against the said Judicial Officers.

The facts of the appeals, relating to the dispute between the parties thereto, are not relevant for deciding the grievance agitated before us in the present petitions; they are, therefore, not being stated here.

3. We have considered the submissions of the petitioners and read the cases cited by them. The question involved in the present case is: whether a High Court, or any other appellate court, can record in its judgment a stricture against the judge of the lower court whose judgment or order is impugned before it, relating to his or her efficiency or conduct. This question has been considered in depth and answered authoritatively, in the light of relevant provisions of the Constitution and law, by a three member Bench of this Court in the Nusrat Yasmin case. The decision made in the Nusrat Yasmin case on the said question of law was later-on endorsed and followed by another Bench of this Court in the Aijaz Ahmed case, relied upon by the petitioners. We, therefore, think it unnecessary to re-consider the same question again, especially when we find ourselves in agreement with what was decided in the Nusrat Yasmin case. What we consider appropriate to do is to recapitulate the principles enunciated therein for clear understanding of, and strict compliance by, all the appellate courts including the High Courts:

i. An appellate court should not pass strictures in its judgment against the judge of the lower court whose judgment or order is impugned before it, relating to his efficiency or conduct;

ii. An appellate court should not summon in court the judge of the lower court whose judgment or order is impugned before it, to explain why and how he or she has made that judgment or order;

iii. An appellate court, if notices such procedural errors or irregularities in the proceedings conducted by the lower court which, it thinks, should not be repeated in other cases, may bring the same to the notice of the judge concerned through a confidential note separate from its judgment;

iv. An appellate court, if is of the considered but tentative view supported by reasonable grounds that the judge of the lower court has exhibited grave inefficiency or has committed serious misconduct in discharge of his judicial duty that warrants disciplinary action, may inform the competent authority or the officer appointed by the competent authority to deal with such complaints, through a confidential report. The authority or the officer concerned is to deal with such confidential report and proceed with it further as per the relevant service laws, rules and instructions, notwithstanding the view of the appellate court, in the same manner as it or he deals with other such complaints.

Public reprimand of a judge of the lower court regarding his judicial conduct by an appellate court while sitting in judgment over his or her judicial decision, either by recording a stricture or a censorious remark in its appellate judgment or by summoning the judge and reproaching him orally in open court, does not behove the judiciary of a constitutional democracy which boasts of the independence of judiciary as its salient pillar. Any such public condemnation of a judge lowers the public trust in the judicial institution, besides the harmful effect it has on the morale and confidence of the judge concerned as well as of his colleagues.

4. The District Judiciary is the backbone of our judicial system, and the judges of the District Judiciary perform the onerous task of dispensing justice at the frontline by dealing with a large number of cases in a difficult and demanding environment. The judges of the higher courts must appreciate the stressful and challenging conditions in which these judges perform. Our judicial system acknowledges the fallibility of judges, and hence provides for appeals and revisions. Higher courts everyday come across orders of the lower courts which are not justified either in law or in fact and modify or set them aside; that is the function of an appellate court. It is often said that a judge who has not committed an error is yet to be born. This applies to all judges, no matter how high or low in rank they may be. The intemperate or extravagant criticism on the ability of a person having a contrary view is often founded on one's sense of his own infallibility. This must be avoided, and the judicial approach should always be based on the consciousness that everyone may make a mistake. While examining the decision of a court below, the higher court is to assess the reasoning and the legality of the decision challenged before it and not the ability or conduct of the author judge. The latter is the function of the disciplinary authority. The higher court, if so decides, can refer the matter to the disciplinary authority, in the manner elucidated in Nurat Yasmin case, only on the administrative side.

5. The Nusrat Yasmin case enunciated important principles of law for dealing with the matters like the present one, and it was therefore circulated amongst all the Hon'ble Judges of all the High Courts of the country for their information. And those principles were reiterated by this Court in the Aijaz Ahmed case. Needless to mention that a decision of this Court, to the extent it decides a question of law or enunciates a principle of law, is binding on all other courts of the country including the High Courts, under the mandate of Article 189 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution"). Similar is the binding effect of such a decision of a High Court, under Article 201 of the Constitution, on all courts subordinate to that High Court. To appreciate the scope and extent of the binding force and authority of judicial precedents, they may be classified into two categories: vertical and horizontal precedents.2 Vertical precedents mean the decisions of a higher court, and horizontal precedents mean the decisions of the same or coordinate court. All courts are absolutely bound by the vertical precedents of a higher court. This binding tie is often said to be a matter of "owing obedience".3 Articles 189 and 201 of our Constitution also reinforces the binding effect of the vertical precedents. Judges are therefore obliged to follow a vertical precedent even when they disagree with it; this ensures a degree of national uniformity in judicial decisions. The judges have little room to decide how much weight or value is to be given by them to that precedent. Unless we wish anarchy to prevail within the judicial system, a precedent of the apex Court of the country must be followed by all other courts of the country who owe unflinching fealty to its decisions under the Constitution.4 Ignoring or refusing to follow the controlling precedent of this Court amounts to judicial effrontery, offends the constitutional mandate, and weakens the public confidence in the decisions of the apex Court of the country. As Jackson J. said, humbly but firmly, of the Supreme Court: "we are not final because we are infallible, but we are infallible only because we are final."5 A higher court generally adheres to horizontal precedents - its own earlier decisions - but it may depart from or overrule any of its own decisions by sitting as a larger bench if there is a compelling justification to do so.6

6. For the above reasons, these petitions are converted into appeals and allowed: the impugned stricture and direction are expunged. The learned Judge of the High Court may, if deems it proper and necessary, act in accordance with the principles settled in the cited precedents, and recapitulated above. Office shall dispatch a copy of this judgment to the Registrar, Lahore High Court to be placed before the learned Judge concerned.

MWA/H-14/SC Petitions allowed.

---

1 Lord Denning, The Due Process of Law, p. 65 (1993) quoting from Sirros v. Moore 1974 3 All ER 776.

2 Not until the early 1980s did scholarly commentators first use the antonyms horizontal and vertical in reference to precedents. Before that time, the phrase stare decisis was often ambiguous. It could refer to a court's standing by its own earlier decisions or to a court's following or distinguishing the precedent of a higher court. The vertical/horizontal terminology promotes clearer thinking by avoiding the ambiguity. See Garner et al., The Law of Judicial Precedent, p. 27 (2016).

3 Gately v. Massachusetts, 2 F.3d 1221 (1 st Cir. 1993).

4 Hutto v. Davis, 454 U.S. 370 (1982).

5 Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 443 (1953).

6 Garner et al., The Law of Judicial Precedent, p. 35 (2016).

P L D 2022 Supreme Court 27

Present: Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Jamal Khan Mandokhail, JJ

MUHAMMAD AMJAD KHAN AFRIDI and others---Appellants

Versus

SHAD MUHAMMAD and others---Respondents

Civil Appeal No. 263 of 2014, decided on 17th November, 2021.

(Against the judgment dated 13.05.2013 passed by the Peshawar High Court, Peshawar in C.R. No. 1414 of 2021)

(a) Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908)---

----O.XXXII, R. 11---Guardian for the suit (guardian ad litem) appointed for minors to represent and defend them in the suit---Guardian s failure to appear before the court and defend the suit resulting in ex-parte proceedings against the minors---Effect---Where the guardian for the suit did not do his duty, the Court was to remove him and appoint a new guardian in his place---Failure of a guardian ad litem to appear in Court to defend the minor was by itself a clear proof of the fact that he had failed to do his duty of protecting the interests of the minor---Court, in such circumstance, must act in accordance with R.11 of O. XXXII of the C.P.C., remove that guardian, and appoint a new guardian in his place, for the protection of the interests of the minor---Order XXXII of the C.P.C., visualized no such occasion where a minor defendant could be proceeded against ex parte---In the present case Courts below fell into error by not allowing the application for setting aside the ex-parte decree to the extent of the two minors (defendants) at the time of institution of suit as well as at the time of passing of the ex parte decree---Appeal to the extent of the minors was allowed, consequently application for setting aside the ex parte order and ex parte decree, to their extent was accepted and the Trial Court was directed to proceed with the suit against the minors from the stage where it was when the order of proceeding ex parte was made against them.

Fauzia Parveen v. Sahib Khatoon 1988 SCMR 552 ref.

(b) Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908)---

----O.XXXII, Rr. 4, 7 & 11---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 25(3)---Guardian for the suit (guardian ad litem) appointed for minors to represent and defend them in the suit---Court, duty of---Scope---Provisions of O. XXXII of the C.P.C., which advanced the mandate of Art. 25(3) of the Constitution, were to be interpreted and applied with a dynamic and progressive approach to achieve the object for which they had been made, that is, the protection of the rights and interests of the minors---Courts were to realize that a minor litigant was considered to be under their protection, and primarily it was their duty to watch over his interests and ensure that he was duly represented and defended in the proceedings before them---Despite appointment of a guardian ad litem, no agreement or compromise could be entered into on behalf of the minor by that guardian without leave of the Court---Court was to see vigilantly the conduct of the guardian ad litem in representing and defending the minor, and to remove him if he failed to do his duty by acting in a manner that was detrimental to the interests of the minor---Where there was no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the minor, the Court was to appoint any of its officers to be such a guardian.

Amar Chand v. Nem Chand AIR 1942 All 150 ref.

Muhammad Ikram Ch., Advocate Supreme Court and Ijaz Khan Sabi, Advocate Supreme Court for Appellants.

Abdul Sattar Khan, Advocate Supreme Court for Respondents Nos. 1-6.

Date of hearing: 17th November, 2021.

JUDGMENT

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The facts necessary to state for decision of the present appeal are quite simple: The predecessor of the respondents instituted a suit for possession through pre-emption against the appellants and respondent No. 7, who is also father of appellants Nos. 1 and 2 and husband of appellant No.3. Appellants Nos.1 and 2 were minors at that time, therefore, the trial court appointed respondent No. 7, their father, as their guardian for the suit (guardian ad litem) to represent and defend them in the suit. All four of them filed a joint written statement, contesting the claim made in the suit, and the trial court framed the issues for trial. On 16.04.2009 when the suit was fixed for evidence of the plaintiff, no one appeared on behalf of the defendants (appellants and respondent No.7); so, the trial court made order of proceeding against them ex parte. The evidence of the plaintiff was recorded ex parte on the next dates of hearing, and ultimately the suit was decreed ex parte on 30.05.2009.

2. The appellants, on 10.07.2009, filed an application in the trial court for setting aside the order dated 16.04.2009, whereby they had been proceeded against ex parte, as well as the ex parte decree dated 30.05.2009. Their said application was dismissed by the trial court vide its order dated 08.06.2010. The appellants appealed in the District Court, but it also failed on 02.06.2011. They then filed revision petition in the Peshawar High Court, which was dismissed vide the impugned judgment dated 13.05.2013. The appellants, as a last resort, knocked at the doors of this Court by filing a petition for leave to appeal, and this Court granted them the leave to examine the following question:

> Whether the learned forums below fell into error by not allowing the application filed by the Petitioners [appellants] for setting aside the ex-parte decree particularly in view of the fact that Petitioners [appellants] Nos. 1 and 2 were at that time minors.

3. We have heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties on the said question and perused the record of the case with their assistance.

4. The answer to the above question lies in the provisions of Rule 11 of Order XXXII of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 ("C.P.C."), which is reproduced below for ready reference:

> 11. Retirement, removal or death of guardian for the suit-
>
> (1) Where the guardian for the suit desires to retire or does not do his duty, or where other sufficient ground is made to appear, the Court may permit such guardian to retire or may remove him, and may make such order as to costs as it thinks fit.
>
> (2) Where the guardian for the suit retires, dies or is removed by the Court during the pendency of the suit the Court shall appoint a new guardian in his place. (emphasis supplied)

Reading of the above Rule leaves little room to speculate as to what a Court is to do if the guardian ad litem appointed by it does not do his duty. As per the said Rule, where the guardian for the suit does not do his duty, the Court is to remove him and appoint a new guardian in his place. The failure of a guardian ad litem to appear in Court to defend the minor is by itself a clear proof of the fact that he has failed to do his duty of protecting the interests of the minor. The Court, in such circumstance, must act in accordance with Rule 11 of Order XXXII of the C.P.C., remove that guardian, and appoint a new guardian in his place, for the protection of the interests of the minor.

5. Justice Henry Brand, speaking for the Allahabad High Court, said in Amar Chand v. Nem Chand (AIR 1942 All 150) that the Court had inherent power, derived from the Crown as parens patriae, to protect the interests of minors. Similarly, the State of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan is also a parens patriae1 for its own minor citizens and for all its vulnerable and marginalized citizens. Reference may be made to the preambular constitutional values of social justice and equality, of protecting the legitimate interest of the backward and depressed classes. Article 25(3) of the Constitution authorizes the State to make special provision for the protection of women and children and Article 35 lays down the principle of policy for the protection of the child.

6. The provisions of Order XXXII of the C.P.C., which advance the mandate of Article 25(3) of the Constitution, are to be interpreted and applied with a dynamic and progressive approach to achieve the object for which they have been made, that is, the protection of the rights and interests of the minors. The Courts are to realize that a minor litigant is considered to be under their protection, and primarily it is their duty to watch over his interests and ensure that he is duly represented and defended in the proceedings before them. That is why, despite appointment of a guardian ad litem, no agreement or compromise can be entered into on behalf of the minor by that guardian without leave of the Court.2 The Court is to see vigilantly the conduct of the guardian ad litem in representing and defending the minor, and to remove him if he fails to do his duty by acting in a manner that is detrimental to the interests of the minor.3 Where there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the minor, the Court is to appoint any of its officers to be such a guardian.[4] Order XXXII of the C.P.C., thus, visualizes no such occasion where a minor defendant can be proceeded against ex parte.

7. In Fauzia Parveen case,[5] a four member Bench of this Court while maintaining the orders of the courts below setting aside an ex parte decree passed against the minors, observed:

> A fact noted by the District Judge as well as by the High Court which was by itself considered sufficient to set aside the ex parte decree was the fact that respondents 3 and 4 were admittedly minors at the relevant time. They were proceeded against in the litigation through their guardian Mst. Musarrat Begum respondent No.2 who was their mother. It is also an admitted fact that Mst. Musarrat Begum had defaulted in putting in appearance on her own behalf and on behalf of these minor respondents whom she was required to represent under the orders of the Court. It was, therefore, a case where the guardian had been negligent and had defaulted in representing and protecting the interest of the minors. Rule 11, Order XXXII, C.P.C. requires that "where the guardian for the suit desires to retire or does not do his duty, or where other sufficient ground is made to appear, the Court may permit such guardian to retire or may remove him, and may make such order as to costs as it thinks fit." The same rule goes beyond further to prescribe "where the guardian for the suit retires, dies or is removed by the Court during the pendency of the suit, the Court shall appoint a new guardian in his place".
>
> In this case, the guardian had failed to do her duty and was liable to be removed and substituted by the Court. As the Court happens to be the custodian of the interest of the minors it has to be watchful whether a party discharges its duty or not. We are therefore, in agreement with the view taken by the two Courts at this omission to ensure proper representation of the minors was material factor to be taken note of while considering the application for setting aside the ex parte decree.

We find that these observations fully answer the question raised in this case. In view of what has been discussed above, we answer the question by holding that the Courts below fell into error by not allowing the application for setting aside the ex parte decree to the extent of appellants Nos. 1 and 2, who were minors at the time of institution of suit as well as at the time of passing of the ex parte decree. However, the orders to the extent of appellant No.3 (mother), who was not suffering from any legal disability to pursue and defend the suit against her, do not suffer from any legal error.

8. We, therefore, dismiss the present appeal to the extent of appellant No.3 and accept it to the extent of appellants Nos. 1 and 2, setting aside the impugned judgments and orders, and accepting the application for setting aside the ex parte order and ex parte decree, to their extent. The trial court shall proceed with the suit against appellants Nos. 1 and 2 from the stage where it was on 16.04.2009 when the order of proceeding ex parte was made against them and shall decide the same as early as possible and not later than six months from the receipt of the copy of this judgment.

MWA/M-77/SC Order accordingly.

---

1 The monarch, or any other authority, regarded as the legal protector of citizens unable to protect themselves.

2 Rule 7 of Order XXXII of the C.P.C.

3 Rule 11 of Order XXXII of the C.P.C.

4 Rule 4 of Order XXXII of the C.P.C.

5 Fauzia Parveen v. Sahib Khatoon (1988 SCMR 552)

P L D 2022 Supreme Court 64

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Sajjad Ali Shah, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

HADAYAT ULLAH and others---Petitioners

Versus

FEDERATION OF PAKISTAN and others---Respondents

Civil Review Petitions Nos. 292 to 302 of 2021 and Civil Review Petitions Nos. 351 to 432 of 2021 and Civil Review Petitions Nos. 442 to 456 of 2021 along with C.M.As. Nos. 11812 to 11814 of 2021, C.M.As. Nos. 11837, 11862 to 11864 of 2021, C.M.As. Nos. 11902-11903, 11982-11983 of 2021, C.M.A. No. 11987 of 2021, C.M.As. Nos. 11679, 12017, 12019, 12020, 12024 of 2021, C.M.As. Nos. 12025, 12028, 12029, 12031-12033 of 2021, C.M.As. Nos. 12035, 12075, 11993, 12103-12104 of 2021, C.M.As. Nos. 12161-12162, 12172-12173, 12403 of 2021 and C.M.As. Nos. 12372-12373 of 2021 and along with Civil Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 168, 158 and 175 of 2021, decided on 17th December, 2021.

(For review of the judgment dated 17.08.2021 passed in C.A. No.491 of 2012, etc.).

Per Umar Ata Bandial, J; Sajjad Ali Shah, Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ agreeing; Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J dissenting.

(a) Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act (XXII of 2010)---

----Ss. 2(d) & 4 & Preamble---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 4, 8, 9, 18, 25, 184(3) & 187---Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010, ( Act of 2010 ), vires of---Said Act of 2010 was violative of, inter alia, Arts. 25, 18, 9 & 4 of the Constitution and therefore void under the provisions of Art. 8 of the Constitution---Review petitions were dismissed with certain directions regarding services rendered by the re-instated employees of the employers [as defined in S.2(d) of the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010]. [Majority view]

Supreme Court declared the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 as violative of the Constitution and thus void. However, in exercise of the Court s jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution read with Article 187, the Court took into consideration the services rendered by the re-instated employees of the employers [as defined in section 2(d) of the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010], and passed the following directions:

(i) Employees who were holding posts that on the date of their initial termination of service (from 01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) did not require any aptitude or scholastic or skill test, for appointment thereon, shall be restored from the date of the judgment under review to the posts they were holding on the same terms and conditions of service applicable on the date of their termination pursuant to the judgment under review;

(ii) Such other employees who were holding posts that on the date of their initial termination of service (from 01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) required the passing of any aptitude or scholastic or skill test, for appointment thereon shall from the date of the judgment under review be restored to their said posts on the same terms and conditions of service applicable on the date of their initial termination;

(iii) Any improvement in the terms and conditions of service of all the restored employees shall be granted strictly in accordance with the laws and rules applicable to their service or employment and in the absence thereof by regulations laid down for this purpose by their respective employers; and

(iv) The relief granted in sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) above shall not be granted to employees whose initial termination of service (from 01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) was on grounds of absence from duty, misconduct, corruption, misappropriation of money/stock or unfitness on medical grounds if such termination was not set aside finally by a Court of law.

Per Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, J; dissenting with Umar Ata Bandial, J. [Minority view]

(b) Parliamentary sovereignty, principle of---

----Scope---Parliamentary sovereignty or legislative supremacy was the cornerstone of a strong democracy---Courts must, therefore, recognize the central role of the legislature---Undermining the legislature undermined democracy---Both the legislature and the judicature must play their role in a spirit of profound respect for the other and within the limits set out in the Constitution.

(c) Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act (XXII of 2010)---

----Ss. 2(f)(vi), 4(a), 10, 11, 12 & 13 & Preamble---Constitution of Pakistan, Arts. 4, 9 & 25---Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010, ( Act of 2010 ), vires of---By way of judgment under review the Supreme Court held that the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 violated Arts. 4, 9 & 25 of the Constitution and was thus void and ultra vires the Constitution---Held, that judgment under review was to be recalled---His Lordship declared that only certain sections, and parts of sections of the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 were ultra vires the Constitution and passed certain directions regarding restoration in service of employees terminated from service on basis of judgment under review. [Minority view]

(i) Only certain sections and part of sections of the Sacked Employees Reinstatement Act, 2010 ( the 2010 Act ) were ultra vires the Constitution: firstly, sections 4(a) and 10 to the extent of reinstatement and regularization on one scale higher , which gave an undue advantage to the reinstated employees to the detriment of the rights of the already working regular employees and thus violated their fundamental rights. The provisions of the said sections, except the words one scale higher , shall however remain operative with effect from the date of enactment of the 2010 Act, and be read to mean the reinstatement and regularization in the same or restructured, as the case may be, scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation; secondly, sections 2(f)(vi), 11, 12 and 13, which dealt with and provided for reinstatement and regularization of such sacked employees who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service on account of absence from duty, misconduct, mis-appropriation of Government money or stock, or unfitness on medical grounds, and the determination of their guilt or medical unfitness attained finality by being unchallenged or unsuccessfully challenged. Such employees fell outside the class of sacked employees who suffered political victimization, envisaged by the 2010 Act for a beneficial treatment, and they by themselves did not constitute a distinct class having an intelligible differentia, which bore a reasonable relation to the object and purpose of the 2010 Act;

(ii) All the employees terminated from service on the basis of the judgment under review, stood restored in the service with effect from the date they were so terminated, and shall be paid the pay of the intervening period treating the said period as an extraordinary leave with pay; and

(iii) The cases decided by the judgment under review, which now stood recalled, shall be deemed pending and decided on their own merits by the regular Bench(es) of the Supreme Court in accordance with the provisions of the Sacked Employees Reinstatement Act 2010, subject to the declaration made at para (i) above.

In attendance:

Kh. Muhammad Arif, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. Nos. 292 and 388 of 2021).

Muhammad Yousaf Khan, (in C.R.P. No. 293 of 2021).

Muhammad Tariq Asad, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 294 and C.M.A. 12033 of 2021).

Khalid Javed Khan, Attorney General for Pakistan

Ayaz Shoukat, D.A.G. along with Ms. Maryam Rasheed and Usman Paracha, Advocates (in C.R.P. No. 295 of 2021)

Muhammad Nawaz Abbasi (in person) (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 296 and 446 of 2021)

S.A. Mehmood Khan Sadozai, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 297-300 and 416 of 2021).

Muhammad Ilyas Siddiqui, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 301 of 2021).

Hazrat Said (in C.R.P. No. 302 of 2021).

S. Iftikhar Hussain Gillani, Sr. Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 351 and 392 of 2021)

Ms. Shireen Imran, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 252, 393, 394, 448 and C.M.A. No. 12104 of 2021).

M. Safdar Shaheen Pirzada, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 253, 372 and 375 of 2021).

Nisar A. Mujahid, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 354 of 2021).

Raja Abdul Ghafoor, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 355, 374, C.M.As. Nos. 11982 and 12029 of 2021).

Ch. Afrasiab Khan, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 356 of 2021).

Mian Raza Rabbani, Senior Advocate Supreme Court,

Saalim Salam Ansari, Advocate Supreme Court assisted by Zeeshan Abdullah (in C.R.P. No. 357, C.M.Apl. No. 175, C.M.As. Nos. 12172 and 12173 of 2021)

Shah Khawar, Advocate Supreme Court and

Hassan Rashid Qamar, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 355, 378-381, 442, 455, 456, C.M.As. Nos. 12028 and 12162 of 2021).

Zubair Hussain, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 359 and C.M.A. No. 11983 of 2021).

Syed M. Iqbal Hashmi, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 360-363 of 2021).

Mazullah Khan (in-person) (in C.R.P. No. 364 of 2021).

Zulfikar Khalid Maluka, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 365 and 428 of 2021).

Ghulam Sajjad Gopang, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 366 of 2021).

Omer Farouk Adam, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 367 of 2021).

Tariq Mehmood Mughal, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 368 of 2021).

Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 369, 385, 420, C.M.Apl. No. 168, C.M.As. Nos. 12032 and 12035 of 2021).

Muhammad Sharif Janjua, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 370, 386, 399, 400 and 423 of 2021).

Saleem Ullah Ranazai, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 371 of 2021).

Kamran Murtaza, Senior Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 373 and 377 of 2021).

Waseem Sajjad, Senior Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 376 and 383 of 2021).

Dr. Saeed Ahmed (in person) (in C.R.P. No. 382 of 2021).

Aftab Alam Yasir, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 384 and C.M.A. No. 12020 of 2021).

Abdul Razzaq Shar, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 387, 454 and C.M.A. No. 12024 of 2021).

Jam Khursheed Ahmed, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 389 of 2021).

Muhammad Sajid Khan, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 390, C.M.As. Nos. 12031 and 12161 of 2021).

Hamid Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court and M. Waqar Rana, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 391 of 2021).

Liauqat Ali Karim, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 395 of 2021).

Abid A. Zuberi, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 396 of 2021).

Azhar Navid Shah, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 397 of 2021).

Malik Faiz Rasool Rajwana, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 398 of 2021)

Muhammad Umair Baloch, Advocate Supreme Court and Shoaib Shaheen, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 401-415, 418, 419 and C.M.A. No. 12372 of 2021).

Muhammad Haseeb Jamali, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 417 of 2021).

Malik Mansoor Hussain, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 421 of 2021).

Ch. Aitzaz Ahsan, Advocate Supreme Court and Gohar Ali Khan, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 422 of 2021).

Shakirullah (in-person) (in C.R.P. No. 424 of 2021).

Muhammad Nawaz Rai, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 425 of 2021).

Muddasar Khalid Abbasi, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 426 of 2021).

Mrs. Kausar Iqbal Bhatti, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 427 of 2021).

Khalid Javed (in-person) (in C.R.P. No. 429 of 2021).

Abdul Latif Afridi, Sr. Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 430-431 of 2021).

S. Asghar Hussain Sabzwari, Senior Advocate Supreme Court, S. Qamar Hussain Shah Sabzwari, Advocate Supreme Court and S. Nayyar Hussain Bukhari, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 432 of 2021).

Sh. Mehmood Ahmed, Advocate-on-Record (in C.M.A. No. 11812 of 2021).

Sikandar Javed, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.As. Nos. 11813 and 11993 of 2021).

Ms. Attiya Khanam (in-person) (in C.M.A. No. 11814 of 2021).

Fazal e Rabbi (in-person) (in C.M.A. No. 11837 of 2021).

Malik Muhammad Riaz, (in-person) (in C.M.A. No. 11862 of 2021).

Arshad Ali Makhdoom, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. No. 11863 of 2021).

Muhammad Ibrahim (in-person) (in C.M.A. No. 11864 of 2021).

Faisal Siddiqui, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. No. 11902 of 2021).

Anees M. Shahzad, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. No. 11903 of 2021).

Mir Aurangzeb, Advocate-on-Record/Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. No. 11987 of 2021).

Jawaid Masood Tahir Bhatti, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. No. 11679 and C.M.Apl. No. 158 of 2021).

Mir Shahzad Khan Talpur (in-person) (in C.M.A. No. 12017 of 2021).

Malik Muhammad Munsif Awan, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. No. 12019 of 2021).

Muhammad Afzal Khan (in C.M.A. No. 12025 of 2021).

Tassawar Abbas Tanvir (in-person) (in C.R.P. No. 443 of 2021).

Dr. Umar Farooq Siddiqui (in-person) (in C.R.P. No. 444 of 2021).

Sardar M. Latif Khosa, Sr. Advocate Supreme Court and Sardar M. Shahbaz Khosa, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 445, 447 of 2021).

Pervez Rauf, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 449, 452 of 2021).

Mir Afzal Malik, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 450 of 2021).

Malik Saleem Iqbal Awan, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.R.P. No. 453 of 2021).

Raja Farakh Arif Bhatti, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. No. 12075 of 2021).

Rai M. Nawaz Kharal, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. No. 12103 of 2021).

Ch. M. Younas, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. No. 12403 of 2021).

Shahid Anwar Bajwa, Advocate Supreme Court (in C.M.A. No. 12373 of 2021).

Niazullah Niazi, AG ICT

SSGPL

Barrister Umer Aslam

State Life

Syed Waqar Naqvi, Advocate Supreme Court.

OPF

Aftab Alam Yasir, Advocate Supreme Court.

SNGPL

Asad Jan, Advocate Supreme Court.

Dates of hearing: 1st, 6th, 9th, 13th and 17th December, 2021.

ORDER

For reasons to be recorded later, these review petitions are dismissed. The impugned legislation, namely, the Sacked Employees (Re-instatement) Act, 2010 ("Act") is held to be violative of, inter alia, Articles 25, 18, 9 and 4 of the Constitution of Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") and therefore void under the provisions of Article 8 of the Constitution.

2. However, in exercise of the Court's jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution read with Article 187, we have taken into consideration the services rendered by the re-instated employees of the "employers" [as defined in Section 2(d) of the Act] and hereby order that:

i. Employees who were holding posts that on the date of their initial termination of service (from 01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) did not require any aptitude or scholastic or skill test, for appointment thereon, shall be restored from the date of the judgment under review to the posts they were holding on the same terms and conditions of service applicable on the date of their termination pursuant to the judgment under review.

ii. Such other employees who were holding posts that on the date of their initial termination of service (from 01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) required the passing of any aptitude or scholastic or skill test, for appointment thereon shall from the date of the judgment under review be restored to their said posts on the same terms and conditions of service applicable on the date of their initial termination.

iii. Any improvement in the terms and conditions of service of all the restored employees shall be granted strictly in accordance with the laws and rules applicable to their service or employment and in the absence thereof by regulations laid down for this purpose by their respective employers.

iv. The relief granted in sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) above shall not be granted to employees whose initial termination of service (from 01.11.1996 to 12.10.1999) was on grounds of absence from duty, misconduct, corruption, misappropriation of money/stock or unfitness on medical grounds if such termination was not set aside finally by a Court of law.

Sd/-
Judge
Sd/-
Judge

I have attached my dissenting short order.

Sd/-
Judge
Sd/-
Judge
Sd/-
Judge
Sd/-
J(1)

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Parliamentary sovereignty or legislative supremacy is the cornerstone of a strong democracy. We must, therefore, recognize the central role of the legislature. Undermining the legislature undermines democracy. Both the legislature and the judicature must play their role in a spirit of profound respect for the other and within the limits set out in the Constitution. Rule of law is not merely public order, it is social justice based on public order. The law exists to ensure proper social life by balancing the needs of the society and the individual. The courts must protect this rich concept of rule of law. Under Article 8 of the Constitution, any law enacted by the legislature is void only to the extent it takes away or abridges fundamental rights of the people.

2. For the reasons to be recorded later and subject to ancillary and incidental declarations and orders (if any) to be made in the detailed judgment, I allow these review petitions in the following terms:

i. The judgment under review is recalled;

ii. The following Sections and part of Sections of the Sacked Employees Reinstatement Act 2010 are declared ultra vires the Constitution:

a) Sections 4(a) and 10 to the extent of reinstatement and regularization on "one scale higher", which give an undue advantage to the reinstated employees to the detriment of the rights of the already working regular employees and thus violate their fundamental rights. The provisions of the said Sections, except the words "one scale higher", shall however remain operative with effect from the date of enactment of the Act, and be read to mean the reinstatement and regularization in the same or restructured, as the case may be, scale, grade, cadre, group, post or designation.

b) Sections 2(f)(vi), 11, 12 and 13, which deal with and provide for reinstatement and regularization of such sacked employees who had been dismissed, removed or terminated from service on account of absence from duty, misconduct, mis-appropriation of Government money or stock, or unfitness on medical grounds, and the determination of their guilt or medical unfitness attained finality by being unchallenged or unsuccessfully challenged. Such employees fall outside the class of sacked employees who suffered "political victimization," envisaged by the Act for a beneficial treatment, and they by themselves do not constitute a distinct class having an intelligible differentia, which bears a reasonable relation to the object and purpose of the Act.

iii. All the employees terminated from service on the basis of the judgment under review, stand restored in the service with effect from the date they were so terminated, and shall be paid the pay of the intervening period treating the said period as an extraordinary leave with pay; and

iv. The cases decided by the judgment under review, which now stands recalled, shall be deemed pending and decided on their own merits by the regular Bench(es) of this Court in accordance with the provisions of the Sacked Employees Reinstatement Act 2010, subject to the declaration made at No. ii above.

Sd/-
Judge

ORDER OF THE BENCH

For reasons to be recorded later, by a majority of four to one (Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah dissenting), these review petitions are dismissed.

Sd/-
Judge
Sd/-
Judge
Sd/-
Judge
Sd/-
Judge
Sd/-
Judge

MWA/H-16/SC Petitions dismissed.

P L D 2022 Supreme Court 92

Present: Sardar Tariq Masood, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ

KHYBER MEDICAL UNIVERSITY and others---Petitioners

Versus

AIMAL KHAN and others---Respondents

Civil Petition No. 3429 of 2021, decided on 4th January, 2022.

(Against the order dated 25.3.2021 of the Peshawar High Court, Peshawar, passed in Writ Petition No. 1189-P of 2021).

(a) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 199 & 185(3)---Educational institution---Internal governance and disciplinary policies---Courts should sparingly interfere in university matters and academic freedom and institutional autonomy---Democracy, human rights and the rule of law cannot become and remain a reality unless higher education institutions, and staff and students, enjoy academic freedom and institutional autonomy---Academic, administrative and disciplinary autonomy of a university must be therefore, respected.

Courts must sparingly interfere in the internal governance and affairs of educational institutions. It is simply prudent that the courts keep their hands off educational matters and avoid dislodging decisions of the university authorities, who possess technical expertise and experience of actual day to day workings of the educational institutions. Every university has the right to set out its disciplinary and other policies in accordance with law, and unless any such policy offends the fundamental rights of the students or violates any law, interference by the courts results in disrupting the smooth functioning and governance of the university. It is, therefore, best to leave the disciplinary, administrative and policy matters of the universities or educational institutions to the professional expertise of the people running them, unless of course there is a violation of any of the fundamental rights or any law.

Khyber Medical College v. Raza Hassan 1999 SCMR 965; Muhammad Ilyas v. Bahauddin Zakariya University 2005 SCMR 961; Muhammad Arif v. University of Balochistan PLD 2006 SC 564; Secretary Economic Affairs Division, v. Anwarul Haq Ahmed 2013 SCMR 1687; J.P. Kulshreshtha v. Allahabad University AIR 1980 SC 2141; Maharashtra State BS&HSE. v. Paritosh Bhupeshkumar AIR 1984 SC 1543 and Hindi Hitrakshak Samiti v. Union of India AIR 1990 SC 851 ref.

This self-restraint by the courts in matter of educational institutions is based on the wisdom that academic freedom and institutional autonomy of the universities must be protected and safeguarded. Academic freedom is not merely liberty from restraints on thought, expression, and association in the university, but also that the university should have the freedom to make decisions about the educational matters including disciplinary matters. As it is the business of a university to provide that atmosphere which is most conducive to speculation, experiment and creation. It is an atmosphere in which there prevail the four essential freedoms of a university; who may teach, what may be taught, how it shall be taught and who may be admitted to study.

University of Wisconsin System v. Scott Harold Southworth 151 F.3d 717 ref.

Democracy, human rights and the rule of law cannot become and remain a reality unless higher education institutions, and staff and students, enjoy academic freedom and institutional autonomy. Conversely, one cannot have genuine democracy unless the higher education and research community is able to enquire freely. Higher education institutions are places that have to be imbued with democratic culture, and that, in turn, helps to promote democratic values in the wider society. Universities are the playgrounds of democracy and the more freedom and independence they enjoy, the more free thinkers and leaders they will produce. The academic, administrative and disciplinary autonomy of a university must be therefore, respected.

Academic Freedom, Institutional Autonomy and the Future of Democracy, Council of Europe Higher Education Series No. 24, United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization ref.

Raison d etre of courts is to settle disputes, which come before them. It is not the constitutional mandate of the courts to run and manage public or private institutions or to mirco-manage them or to interfere in their policy and administrative internal matters. Courts neither enjoy such jurisdiction nor possess the requisite technical expertise in this regard. Courts should step in only when there arise justiciable disputes or causes of action between the parties involving violation of the Constitution or the law.

(b) Administration of justice---

----Relief granted on basis of compassion or hardship---Scope---Judges are to decide disputes before them in accordance with the Constitution and the law, not on the basis of their whims, likes and dislikes or personal feelings---Compassion and hardship, therefore, may be considered by courts for providing relief to an aggrieved person, but only when there is scope in the relevant law to do so, not in breach of the law.

Constitutional democracy was run by laws and not by men. Judges are to decide disputes before them in accordance with the Constitution and the law, not on the basis of their whims, likes and dislikes or personal feelings. A good judge intelligently balances law and equity to ensure that justice is tempered with mercy but never at the expense of overriding the letter of the law. Compassion, which may be said to be a shade of, and have nexus to, the rules of equity cannot be given precedence and superseding effect over the clear mandate of law. Compassion and hardship, therefore, may be considered by courts for providing relief to an aggrieved person, but only when there is scope in the relevant law to do so, not in breach of the law.

D.G., National Savings v. Balqees Begum PLD 2013 SC 174 ref.

The reduction of a penalty such as disqualification-period by the Court, in contravention of the relevant law, is an example of judicial overreach or judicial overstepping, where law is ignored or modified by the court to give way to personal emotions and sense of compassion. Such exercise of judicial power is not permissible.

Wood v. Strickland 420 U.S. 308. (1975) and MEPCO v. Muhammed Ilyas 2021 SCMR 775 ref.

Abdul Munim Khan, Advocate Supreme Court and Sharif Janjua, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners.

Respondent No. 1 in person.

Date of hearing: 4th January, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---Respondent No. 1, a medical student of 4th Semester, BS-Paramedics (Dental Technology) at the Ahmed Medical Institute, Peshawar, was apprehended while impersonating a female student and appearing on her behalf in the examination paper of Human Physiology (2nd Semester) of the Khyber Medical University ("University"). Proceedings were initiated under Regulation 32(c) of the Khyber Medical University Examination Regulations, 2017 ("Regulations") and after giving a hearing to the respondent No.1 he was disqualified for three years by the Unfair Means (UFM) Committee of the University vide its decision dated 16.12.2020. The said decision was maintained, on appeal of respondent No. 1, by the UFM Appellate Committee of the University vide its decision dated 03.2.2021. Respondent No.1 impugned both these decisions before the High Court in its constitutional jurisdiction under Article 199 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution") and vide the impugned judgment dated 25.3.2021 the High Court, while accepting the position that respondent No.1 was caught red-handed by impersonating another student in an examination, reduced the penalty under Regulation 32(c) from three years to one year by taking a 'lenient view' and holding that the penalty was a "little bit harsh and liable to rectification".

2. Learned counsel for the petitioners submits that impugned judgment is against the law as under Regulation 32(c) the penalty imposed is for a period of three years; therefore, the High Court has erred in reducing the said penalty. He further submits that the University has not granted any such concession to any other student who has violated Regulation 32(c) and the impugned judgment by interfering in the internal working of the University and by ignoring the Regulations has disrupted the disciplinary and regulatory control of the University over its students. Respondent No.1 has appeared in person and submits that he wishes to argue the case himself. His only submission is that while he admits his mistake i.e., the act of impersonation, he may be dealt with leniently.

3. We have heard the parties and gone through the record of the case. We note that respondent No.1, has admitted in writing, before the University authorities, his act of impersonation and appearing in the examination of Human Physiology (2nd Semester) on behalf of another student. He, however, repeatedly requested to be forgiven for his mistake. The relevant law on the issue, i.e., Regulation 32(c) of the Regulations, is reproduced hereunder, for ready reference:

32. USE OF UNFAIR MEANS:

(c) Any candidate found guilty of impersonation, which impersonates such candidate and is on the rolls of an affiliated College, shall be, disqualified, i.e. both candidate and impersonator, for a period of three years.

(Emphasis supplied)

The above Regulation clearly states that in case a student is found guilty of impersonation, he (along with the candidate) shall be disqualified for a period of three years; it gives no discretion to the decision-making authority to fix the period of disqualification as it provides only one period, i.e., three years. Had the expression used been "for a period up to three years", the decision-making authority would have got the discretion to fix the period of disqualification for any period up to three years, but the law does not so provide; therefore, the decision-making authority (UFM Committee) or the appellate authority (UFM Appellate Committee) could not fix the period of disqualification for Respondent No.1 to a period less than three years. The UFM Committee and the UFM Appellate Committee of the University, after considering that the respondent No.1 was caught red-handed, who had also admitted his guilt in writing, found him liable and hence disqualified him for a period of three years as provided in Regulation 32(c). The High Court, however, has reduced the penalty of disqualification of the respondent No.1 from three years to one year on the ground of 'leniency', in disregard of the Regulation. The High Court has failed to appreciate that it cannot ignore the relevant law as everyone is to be treated in accordance with law under the constitutional command of Article 4 of the Constitution, and that under Article 199 (1) (a) (ii) of the Constitution it can declare only such act or proceeding of a public functionary to have no legal effect, which has been done or taken without lawful authority. In the present case, without finding that the public functionaries, i.e., the UFM Committee and the UFM Appellate Committee of the University, had acted without lawful authority in making their decisions dated 16.12.2020 and 03.02.2021, the High Court could not have interfered with and modified those decisions.

4. It has been time and again held by this Court1 that courts must sparingly interfere in the internal governance and affairs of educational institutions. It is simply prudent that the courts keep their hands off educational matters and avoid dislodging decisions of the university authorities, who possess technical expertise and experience of actual day to day workings of the educational institutions. Every university has the right to set out its disciplinary and other policies in accordance with law, and unless any such policy offends the fundamental rights of the students or violates any law, interference by the courts results in disrupting the smooth functioning and governance of the university.2 It is, therefore, best to leave the disciplinary, administrative and policy matters of the universities or educational institutions to the professional expertise of the people running them, unless of course there is a violation of any of the fundamental rights or any law.

5. This self-restraint by the courts in matter of educational institutions is based on the wisdom that academic freedom and institutional autonomy of the universities must be protected and safeguarded. Academic freedom is not merely liberty from restraints on thought, expression, and association in the university, but also that the university should have the freedom to make decisions about the educational matters including disciplinary matters. As "it is the business of a university to provide that atmosphere which is most conducive to speculation, experiment and creation. It is an atmosphere in which there prevail 'the four essential freedoms' of a university; who may teach, what may be taught, how it shall be taught and who may be admitted to study."3

6. Democracy, human rights and the rule of law cannot become and remain a reality unless higher education institutions, and staff and students, enjoy academic freedom and institutional autonomy.

Conversely, we cannot have genuine democracy unless the higher education and research community is able to enquire freely. Higher education institutions are places that have to be imbued with democratic culture, and that, in turn, helps to promote democratic values in the wider society.4 Universities are the playgrounds of democracy and the more freedom and independence they enjoy, the more free thinkers and leaders they will produce. The academic, administrative and disciplinary autonomy of a university must be therefore, respected.

7. Raison d'etre of courts is to settle disputes, which come before them. It is not the constitutional mandate of the courts to run and manage public or private institutions or to mirco-manage them or to interfere in their policy and administrative internal matters. Courts neither enjoy such jurisdiction nor possess the requisite technical expertise in this regard. Courts should step in only when there arise justiciable disputes or causes of action between the parties involving violation of the Constitution or the law.

8. Our constitutional democracy is run by laws and not by men. Judges are to decide disputes before them in accordance with the Constitution and the law, not on the basis of their whims, likes and dislikes or personal feelings. A good judge intelligently balances law and equity to ensure that justice is tempered with mercy but never at the expense of overriding the letter of the law. Compassion, which may be said to be a shade of, and have nexus to, the rules of equity cannot be given precedence and superseding effect over the clear mandate of law. Compassion and hardship, therefore, may be considered by courts for providing relief to an aggrieved person, but only when there is scope in the relevant law to do so, not in breach of the law.5 Regulation 32(c), made by the University under its delegated legislative power, is a law within the scope of the term "law" as used in Article 4 of the Constitution; it fixes a penalty of three years and allows no discretion to the decision-making authority for it to be reduced. There is thus no scope, in the relevant law, to grant relief of reducing the disqualification-period to the respondent No.1 on the ground of compassion or hardship6. The reduction of the disqualification-period by the High Court, in contravention of the relevant law, is an example of judicial overreach7 or judicial overstepping, where law is ignored or modified by the court to give way to personal emotions and sense of compassion. Such exercise of judicial power is not permissible.

9. For the above reasons, the impugned judgment is set-aside and the decisions dated 16.12.2020 and 03.02.2021 of the UFM Committee and the UFM Appellate Committee of the University respectively, are restored. This petition is converted into an appeal and allowed in these terms.

MWA/K-1/SC Appeal allowed.

---

1 Khyber Medical College v. Raza Hassan 1999 SCMR 965; Muhammad Ilyas v. Bahauddin Zakariya University 2005 SCMR 961; Muhammad Arif v. University of Balochistan PLD 2006 SC 564 and Secretary Economic Affairs Division v. Anwarul Haq Ahmed 2013 SCMR 1687.

2 J.P. Kulshreshtha v. Allahabad University AIR 1980 SC 2141; Maharashtra State BS&HSE. v. Paritosh Bhupeshkumar AIR 1984 SC 1543 and Hindi Hitrakshak Samiti v. Union of India AIR 1990 SC 851.

3 University of Wisconsin System v. Scott Harold Southworth 151 F.3d 717.

4 Academic Freedom, Institutional Autonomy And The Future of Democracy, Council of Europe Higher Education Series No. 24, United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

5 D.G., National Savings v. Balqees Begum PLD 2013 SC 174.

6 Wood v. Strickland 420 U.S. 308. (1975)

7 See MEPCO v. Muhammed Ilyas 2021 SCMR 775.

P L D 2022 Supreme Court 112

Present: Sardar Tariq Masood, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Jamal Khan Mandokhail, JJ

NADEEM SAMSON---Appellant

Versus

The STATE and others---Respondents

Criminal Petition No. 1016-L of 2021, decided on 6th January, 2022.

(Against the order dated 08.06.2021 passed by the Lahore High Court in Criminal Miscellaneous No.20944-B of 2021).

(a) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497---Withdrawal of first bail petition without any arguments---Second bail petition, filing of---Fresh grounds---Scope---Withdrawal of an earlier bail petition before addressing any argument on the merits of the case, does not preclude filing of a subsequent bail petition for the same relief on the same grounds before the same court.

Nazir Ahmed v. State PLD 2014 SC 241 ref.

(b) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497---First bail petition before the High Court dismissed as withdrawn with direction to the Trial Court for expeditious conclusion of the trial---Second bail petition, filing of---Fresh grounds---Scope---Non-compliance by the Trial Court of the direction to conclude the trial within the specified period per se is not a fresh ground for bail only to the extent that an accused cannot, claim bail on this ground as a matter of right, but it is certainly a fresh ground to be assessed and examined by the court for exercise of its discretion in either way, in the overall facts and circumstances of the case.

Talat Ishaq v. National Accountability Bureau PLD 2019 SC 112 ref.

(c) Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898)---

----S. 497(1), third and fourth provisos---Bail---Delay in conclusion of the trial---Scope of statutory bail under third proviso to S.497(1), Cr.P.C explained.

(i) The purpose and object of the third proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. is to ensure that the trial of an accused is conducted and concluded expeditiously, and that the pre-conviction detention of an accused does not extend beyond the period of two years in cases involving an offence punishable with death, or one year in other cases;

(ii) The period of one year or two years, as the case may be, for the conclusion of the trial begins from the date of the detention of the accused in the case, not from the date when the charge is framed and trial commenced;

(iii) A statutory right to be released on bail accrues in favour of the accused if his trial is not concluded within the specified period, i.e., exceeding one year or two years as the case may be, from the date of his detention;

(iv) This statutory right of the accused to be released on bail is, however, subject to two exceptions: one is embodied in the 3rd proviso itself and the second is provided in the 4th proviso, which are: (a) the delay in conclusion of the trial is occasioned by an act or omission of the accused or by any other person acting on his behalf, and (b) the accused is a convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life, or is in the opinion of the court a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, or is accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life;

(v) The act or omission on the part of the accused to delay the timely conclusion of the trial must be the result of a visible concerted effort orchestrated by the accused. Merely some adjournments sought by the counsel for the accused cannot be counted as an act or omission on behalf of the accused to delay the conclusion of the trial, unless the adjournments are sought without any sufficient cause on crucial hearings, i.e., the hearings fixed for examination or cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, or the adjournments are repetitive reflecting a design or pattern to consciously delay the conclusion of the trial;

(vi) Any delay attributable to the accused after the expiry of the periods stipulated under the 3rd proviso to section 497(1) Cr.P.C. is not relevant for determining his right to be released on bail on the statutory ground; and

(vii) The phrase a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal denotes an accused who is likely to seriously injure and hurt others without caring for the consequences of his violent act and will pose a serious threat to the society if set free on bail. Such tentative finding as to character of the accused must be based upon careful examination of the facts and circumstances of the case, supported by sufficient incriminating material.

Saif-ul-Malook, Advocate Supreme Court for Petitioner.

Syed Nayab Hasan Gardezi, D.A.G. for the State.

Date of hearing: 6th January, 2022.

ORDER

SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH, J.---The petitioner seeks leave to appeal against the order dated 08.06.2021 passed by the Lahore High Court, whereby the post-arrest bail, on the statutory ground of delay of over two years in the conclusion of the trial since his detention, has been denied to him in case FIR No. 123/2017 registered for offences punishable under sections 3, 4, 11, 13, 16 and 20 of the Prevention of Electronic Crimes Act 2016. ("PECA") and sections 295A, 295C, 298A, 419, 420, 468, 471 and 109 of the Pakistan Penal Code 1860 ("P.P.C.").

2. The allegations against the petitioner, briefly stated, are that he created a fake Facebook account in the name of complainant (respondent No.3) and posted blasphemous material on the said account. The case FIR No. 123/2017 was registered against him on 23.11.2017, and he was also arrested on the same date. Since that date, he is detained and his trial has not yet been concluded.

3. As a background, the petitioner moved a post arrest bail petition[1], among others, on the ground of statutorily delay under the 3rd proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. on 27.02.2020, which was dismissed by the trial court on 10.06.2020. The petitioner approached the High Court praying for the same relief; however, on the date of hearing, counsel for the petitioner, instead of arguing the petition on merits, withdrew the petition praying for a direction to the trial court to conclude the trial within a period of three months, which was accordingly passed by the High Court. The trial could not be concluded within the direction period, and the petitioner once again approached the High Court through a fresh bail petition[2] mainly agitating the ground of statutory delay in conclusion of the trial. The High Court dismissed the bail petition vide the impugned order dated 08.06.2021, by considering the conduct of the petitioner in the trial proceedings during the direction period of three months. The High Court found that it was the petitioner who had failed to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses during the said period; therefore, the delay was attributable to him. With this finding, the High Court denied the relief of post arrest bail to the petitioner. Hence this petition.

4. Learned counsel for the petitioner has submitted that the first bail petition before the High Court had not been argued on merits and was simply withdrawn availing the option of a direction to the trial court for expeditious conclusion of the trial within the specified period. Therefore, the second bail petition was as good as the first bail petition and had to be heard on merits. He argued that the petitioner was arrested on 24.11.2017 and the first prosecution witness was recorded on 27.02.2020 after over a period of two years and during that period, except the framing of the charge on 03.04.2018, no proceedings took place; therefore, the right to be released on bail on the basis of the lapse of the statutory period of two years from the date of detention had accrued to the petitioner on 25.11.2019 and any conduct of the petitioner after that date was not relevant. He has, in this regard, relied upon the judgment of this Court passed in Shakeel Shah v. State[3].

5. Learned Deputy Attorney General, appearing for the State, has submitted that after the dismissal of the first bail petition with a direction to the trial court for expeditious conclusion of the trial, the second bail petition could have been filed by the petitioner only on any fresh ground which was not available at the time of the first bail petition, and that the statutory ground of delay in conclusion of the trial was available to the petitioner at the time of the first bail petition, therefore it was not a fresh ground for the second bail petition, nor could the non-compliance with the said direction constitute a fresh ground for maintaining a second bail petition. He has placed reliance upon the Talat Ishaq case[4] and Nazir Ahmed case[5], in support of his submissions.

6. We have considered the arguments of the parties, read the cases cited by them and examined the record of the case.

7. There is no mention of arguments made by the counsel for the petitioner in the order of the High Court whereby the first bail petition of the petitioner had been dismissed as withdrawn with direction to the trial court for expeditious conclusion of the trial. As the presumption is always in favour of the negative (semper praesumitur pro negante), we are to assume, and proceed on that assumption, that arguments had not been advanced by the counsel for the petitioner before the High Court in that bail petition. Withdrawal of an earlier bail petition before addressing any argument on the merits of the case, as held by this Court in the Nazir Ahmed case, does not preclude filing of a subsequent bail petition for the same relief on the same grounds before the same court. Therefore, we see no bar on the petitioner to agitate statutory ground of delay in conclusion of his trial, which was available to him at the time of withdrawal of first bail petition, before the High Court in the second bail petition. While the second submission of the counsel for the State that the non-compliance of the direction to conclude the trial within the specified period per se is not a fresh ground for bail is correct only to the extent that an accused cannot, as held by this Court in the Talat Ishaq case, claim bail on this ground as a matter of right, but it is certainly a fresh ground to be assessed and examined by the court for exercise of its discretion in either way, in the overall facts and circumstances of the case. Before us, however, the counsel for the petitioner has not pressed non-compliance of the direction as a ground for grant of bail to the petitioner, he instead has argued for right of the petitioner to be released on bail on the statutory ground of delay within the scope of the 3rd proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C.

8. The scope of the 3rd proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. has recently been expounded by this Court in the Shakeel Shah case, cited by the counsel for the petitioner, by examining and interpreting its provisions as well as the provisions of the related 4th proviso, in detail. We, therefore, think it unnecessary to re-examine the scope of those provisos again in this case, especially when we find ourselves in agreement with what has been held in that case. What we consider appropriate to do is to recapitulate the main principles enunciated therein, as to the meaning, extent and scope of the 3rd proviso, for clear understanding of, and compliance by, all the other courts in the country in terms of Article 189 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973. They are:

(i) The purpose and object of the 3rd proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. is to ensure that the trial of an accused is conducted and concluded expeditiously, and that the pre-conviction detention of an accused does not extend beyond the period of two years in cases involving an offence punishable with death, or one year in other cases;

(ii) The period of one year or two years, as the case may be, for the conclusion of the trial begins from the date of the detention of the accused in the case, not from the date when the charge is framed and trial commenced;

(iii) A statutory right to be released on bail accrues in favour of the accused if his trial is not concluded within the specified period, i.e., exceeding one year or two years as the case may be, from the date of his detention;

(iv) This statutory right of the accused to be released on bail is, however, subject to two exceptions: one is embodied in the 3rd proviso itself and the second is provided in the 4th proviso, which are: (a) the delay in conclusion of the trial is occasioned by an act or omission of the accused or by any other person acting on his behalf, and (b) the accused is a convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life, or is in the opinion of the court a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, or is accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

(v) The act or omission on the part of the accused to delay the timely conclusion of the trial must be the result of a visible concerted effort orchestrated by the accused. Merely some adjournments sought by the counsel for the accused cannot be counted as an act or omission on behalf of the accused to delay the conclusion of the trial, unless the adjournments are sought without any sufficient cause on crucial hearings, i.e., the hearings fixed for examination or cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, or the adjournments are repetitive reflecting a design or pattern to consciously delay the conclusion of the trial; and

(vi) The phrase "a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal" denotes an accused who is likely to seriously injure and hurt others without caring for the consequences of his violent act and will pose a serious threat to the society if set free on bail. Such tentative finding as to character of the accused must be based upon careful examination of the facts and circumstances of the case, supported by sufficient incriminating material.

In the light of the above principles, we proceed to appreciate the statutory ground of delay in conclusion of the trial pleaded by the counsel for the petitioner, for grant of bail to the petitioner.

9. The petitioner was arrested and detained, in this case, on 24.11.2017. The charge against the petitioner was framed on 03.04.2018. Two prosecution witnesses were recorded on 27.02.2020. Till that date, a continuous period of exceeding two years since the detention of the petitioner in the case had lapsed without conclusion of the trial; therefore, a right to be released on bail had prima facie accrued to the petitioner, which could have been denied to the petition only if his case fell into any of the above-stated two exceptions: (a) if the delay in conclusion of the trial had been occasioned by an act or omission of the petitioner or by any other person acting on his behalf, and (b) if the petitioner was found to be a convicted offender for an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life, or was in the opinion of the court a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal, or was accused of an act of terrorism punishable with death or imprisonment for life.

10. We have examined the record of the case and found that there is no delay in conclusion of the trial till expiry of the two year period of detention of the petitioner on 25.11.2019, which can be attributed to the petitioner or to any person acting on his behalf reflecting a design or pattern to consciously delay the conclusion of the trial. Any delay attributable to the petitioner after the expiry of the said period is not relevant for determining his right to be released on bail on the statutory ground provided in the 3rd proviso to Section 497(1), Cr.P.C. Nor he appears, in the facts and circumstances of the case, to be a hardened, desperate or dangerous criminal" who is likely to seriously injure and hurt others without caring for the consequences of his violent act and will thus pose a serious threat to the society if set free on bail. The petitioner is, therefore, entitled to be released on bail as a matter of right, not as a concession. The delay in conclusion of the trial, noted by the High Court, attributable to the counsel for the petitioner representing him before the trial court, relates to the period after expiry of the continuous two year period since detention of the petitioner in the case; therefore, it could not have been considered by the High Court for determining the right of the petitioner to be released on bail under the 3rd proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C.

11. The High Court has thus failed to correctly appreciate the scope of the 3rd proviso to section 497(1), Cr.P.C. This petition is, therefore, converted into appeal and allowed: the impugned order is set aside, the bail petition of the petitioner is accepted and he is admitted to post-arrest bail subject to his furnishing bail bond in the sum of Rs.500,000/- with two sureties in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial court.

MWA/N-1/SC Bail granted.

---

1 Criminal Miscellaneous No. 42206/B/2020.

2 Criminal Miscellaneous No. 20944/B/2021

3 Criminal Petition No. 1072/2021 decided on 04.10.2021, available online at https://www.supremecourt.gov.pk/downloads_judgements/crl.p._1072_2021.pdf

4 Talat Ishaq v. National Accountability Bureau PLD 2019 SC 112.

5 Nazir Ahmed v. State PLD 2014 SC 241.

P L D 2022 Supreme Court 119

Present: Umar Ata Bandial, Maqbool Baqar, Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Sajjad Ali Shah, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, Munib Akhtar, Yahya Afridi, Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ

Justice QAZI FAEZ ISA and others---Petitioners

Versus

PRESIDENT OF PAKISTAN and others---Respondents

Civil Review Petitions Nos.296 to 301, 308, 309 and 509 of 2020 and C.M.A. No. 4533 of 2020, decided on 29th January, 2022.

(Against the short order dated 19.06.2020 and the detailed judgment dated 23.10.2020 passed by this court in Const. Petition. 17 of 2019, etc.)

Per Maqbool Baqar, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ; Manzoor Ahmed Malik, J. agreeing; Yahya Afridi, J. also agreeing but with his own reasons; Umar Ata Bandial, Sajjad Ali Shah, Munib Akhtar and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ. dissenting.

(a) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 4(1)---Right to be dealt with in accordance with law---Scope---No one, including a Judge of the highest court in the land, is above the law---At the same time, no one, including a Judge of the highest court in the land, can be denied his right to be dealt with in accordance with law; it matters little if the citizen happens to hold a high public office, he is equally subject to and entitled to the protection of law.

(b) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XXVI, R. 8---Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. XLVII, R.1---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 188---Review petition, hearing of---Constitution of Bench---Scope---Judicial power to be exercised by the dissenting Judges in review jurisdiction---Dissenting Judges on the Bench that heard the case, subject to their availability, are necessary members of the Bench constituted to hear review petition filed against the majority judgment, i.e., judgment of the Court, in particular, when the Bench that first heard the case was a specially constituted Bench for hearing that case---Dissenting Judges, subject to their availability, being necessary members of the review Bench possess the same judicial power as that of the other members of the Bench.

As the judgment of the Court is considered to be the judgment of all the members of that Bench, irrespective of its being majority judgment or unanimous judgment, there can be no difference in judicial powers of the members who earlier delivered the majority or minority judgment while hearing the review petition, under Article 188 of the Constitution, against the judgment of the Court, i.e., the majority judgment. This is because the judgment of the Court is under review and not the view of the majority judges. There is nothing in the Constitution or the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 that restricts the judicial power of dissenting Judges in review jurisdiction in comparison to that of the Judges who delivered the majority judgment. The dissenting Judges, subject to their availability, being necessary members of the review Bench possess the same judicial power as that of the other members of the Bench. The Judge whose opinion remained the minority view in the main case is as empowered to review the judgment of the Court, as can a Judge who delivered the majority opinion. This is because under the review jurisdiction the Judges enjoy the flexibility to change their view, they might continue to hold or reverse their earlier view and thus subscribe to either the earlier majority or minority view. Adjudication is a deliberative process and the power of review, within its limited scope, allows the Judge to reconsider his earlier opinion.

Zulfikar Ali Bhutto v. State PLD 1979 SC 741 ref.

Justice Qazi Faez Isa v. President of Pakistan PLD 2021 SC 639 and Cherat Cement Co. v. Federation PLD 2021 SC 327 endorsed.

In case of review of its own judgment by a Bench of the Supreme Court, the review Bench with the same Judges, if available, and with the same numeric strength can review, within the scope of its review jurisdiction, any part of its judgment including any principle of law enunciated therein.

(c) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XXVI, R. 1---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 188---Split decision of Supreme Court in its review jurisdiction---Majority and minority judgments---Scope---In case of a split decision (where there is dissent by one or more members of the Bench), the majority judgment is the judgment of the Supreme Court in terms of Art. 188 of the Constitution---While the majority and minority views of the judgment become part of the jurisprudence, to be read, analyzed and applied in future, it is the majority view, at the time, that attains the status of the judgment of the Court---Judgment of the Court is characterized as the judgment of the entire Bench, rather than of the majority Judges---Entire Bench means the full numeric strength of the Bench, including the dissenting Judges---For instance, if a case is decided by a 4-3 majority of a 7 member Bench, the judgment of the majority of 4 members, which becomes the judgment of the Court, is considered to be the judgment of a 7 member Bench of the Court, and not of a 4 member Bench.

(d) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XI---Principles of law settled in unanimous and split judgments of the Supreme Court---Numerical strength of Bench required for overruling such principles---Where a case is decided by a 4-3 majority of a 7 member Bench, the judgment of the majority of 4 members, which becomes the judgment of the Court, is considered to be the judgment of a 7 member Bench of the Court, and not of a 4 member Bench---Any principle of law enunciated in such majority judgment of 4 members cannot be overruled in any other case by a unanimous decision of a 5, 6, or even 7 member Bench; this can be done only by a Bench larger than a 7 member Bench---Conversely, any principle of law enunciated in the unanimous judgment of a 5 member Bench can be overruled by majority of only 4 members sitting in a 6 or 7 member Bench---Extent of the judicial power of the members of a Bench in this regard is thus dependent upon the total numeric strength of the Bench.

Cherat Cement Co. v. Federation PLD 2021 SC 327 and Shanti Fragrances v. Union of India (2018) 11 SCC 305 ref.

(e) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 25, 184(3), 187(1), 188, 209(5)(b) & 211---Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001), Ss.11(5), 111, 116(1)(b), 121, 122, 198, 199, 209 & 216---Review petitions before the Supreme Court challenging the directions given to the tax authorities by the Supreme Court to conduct an inquiry into the foreign assets of a Supreme Court Judge's family members and submit a report to the Supreme Judicial Council despite quashing of Presidential reference against the Judge---By way of the impugned directions contained in paras 4 to 11 of the short order [reported as (PLD 2020 SC 346)], along with supporting detailed reasons given in the majority judgment (reported as PLD 2021 SC 1), the Supreme Court directed the Commissioner, Inland Revenue and Federal Board of Revenue to inquire into and seek explanation from the spouse and children of the judge as to the nature and source of the funds whereby the properties in a foreign country were acquired in their names, and also send a report in such regard to the Supreme Judicial Council, which, it was held had the powers to, if it considered justified, to commence proceedings against the judge in exercise of its suo motu jurisdiction---[Per Maqbool Baqar, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ. [Majority view]: Impugned directions contained in paras 4 to 11 of the short order [reported as (PLD 2020 SC 346)], and other connected matters along with supporting detailed reasons given in the majority judgment [reported as (PLD 2021 SC 1)], of the same date were recalled and set-aside---All the subsequent proceedings, actions, orders, information and reports in pursuance of the directions contained in the short order [reported as (PLD 2020 SC 346)], and the detailed reasons thereof [reported as (PLD 2021 SC 1)], were declared to be illegal and without any legal effect---Resultantly, the Supreme Court directed that any such proceedings, actions, orders or reports could not be considered or acted upon and pursued any further by any forum or authority including the Supreme Judicial Council]---[Per Yahya Afridi, J, agreeing with the Majority view but with his own reasons: Impugned directions contained in paragraphs Nos. 4 to 11 of the short order [reported as (PLD 2020 SC 346)] had been made without appropriately considering the scope of the ouster clause of Art. 211 of the Constitution and the relevant provisions of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("the 2001 Ordinance")---Said two crucial omissions were marked and distinct "errors apparent on the face of the record" and thus, warranted the positive exercise of the review jurisdiction of the Supreme Court---Directions contained in paragraphs Nos. 4 to 11 of the short order [reported as (PLD 2020 SC 346)], and the detailed judgment [reported as (PLD 2021 SC 1)], and other connected petitions were recalled---Consequently, all the subsequent proceedings, actions, orders and reports made in pursuance to the said directions were declared to be of no legal effect and/or consequences]---[Per Umar Ata Bandial, J. dissenting [Minority view]: Being in the Service of Pakistan, the petitioner-Judge remained answerable for the unaccounted assets of his spouse---Two out of the three foreign properties were purchased while the petitioner-Judge was holding the public office of Chief Justice of the High Court and the said properties were undeclared in his wealth statements and that of his wife---No fundamental right of either the petitioner-Judge or his wife had been infringed by the impugned direction to the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) to investigate the nature and source of funding of the foreign properties because there was no fundamental right granted in the Constitution to public servants/citizens to be immune from investigations into their financial affairs---Judge's wife herself demanded why FBR had not approached her regarding the foreign properties, which is why she could not subsequently take the contradictory plea that a direction to the FBR to such effect was contrary to law---Impugned direction to the FBR to commence proceedings against the Judge's wife did not affect the person, property or any other right of the wife, instead, it only asked the FBR to initiate proceedings to verify her sources of funding the foreign properties---In no way did the impugned direction to the FBR determine or influence the outcome of the proceedings which were to be conducted under the 2001 Ordinance by a Commissioner, Inland Revenue (CIR)---Essential ingredients of the right to be heard, namely, prior notice of the subject-matter and opportunity of hearing to articulate plea of the Judge's wife, were complied with in the present case---Documents produced by the Bank revealed the connection of the petitioner-Judge with the Foreign Currency Account of his wife, that was statedly used for purchasing the foreign properties---In the present case, there was material that called for an explanation before the Council which must be provided to protect the petitioner-Judge and the (Supreme) Court from aspersions cast on their integrity]---[Per Munib Akhtar, J. dissenting (Minority view) : Four Member Judgment authored by Maqbool Baqar, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan JJ, had purportedly also been signed by a retired Judge i.e. Manzoor Ahmad Malik, J---Said retired Judge was a signatory to one of the short orders dated 26-04-2021 but he retired on 30.04.2021---Therefore, he could not, as a matter of law, have signed the judgment---Judge who has already retired, cannot thereafter give, make or sign any judgment, order or decree---Short order passed by Maqbool Baqar, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan JJ, and the short order of Yahya Afridi, J, did not have commonality between them and hence lacked the support of the majority i.e. six judges---For such reason the short order was not operative in and of itself---Neither the Four Member Judgment nor that of Yahya Afridi, J, nor such reasoning or ratio as may be common between them had any binding precedential effect or value]---Detailed reasons for allowing the review petitions and recalling the impugned directions stated.

Per Maqbool Baqar, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ [Majority view]:

The foreign properties were purchased, in the present case, by the petitioner (wife of the Judge of the Supreme Court) and her children in the years 2004 and 2013; their income and sources to purchase those properties obviously relate to those years or the years prior thereto. When the Supreme Court made the impugned directions to the Tax Commissioner on 19 June 2020, a period of more than five years had lapsed since the end of those tax years to which their income and sources of fund for purchase of those properties relate. The bar of time-limit within which an assessment can be amended under Section 122 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('the 2001 Ordinance') is a statutory recognition of the protection against arbitrary power of reopening or amending a tax assessment after the expiry of the prescribed period. This statutory bar vests a right in the taxpayer that after efflux of the prescribed period, his tax assessment will not be reopened or amended. Therefore, the impugned directions, prima facie, affected the vested right of the petitioner, as after the expiry of the statutory period a vested right accrues to the taxpayer that his assessment will not be reopened.

Taxation Officer v. Rupafil 2018 SCMR 1131; Assistant Collector v. Khyber Electric Lamps 2001 SCMR 838; Federation v. Ibrahim Textile Mills 1992 SCMR 1898; Commissioner v. Eastern Federal Union Insurance Co. PLD 1982 SC 247; Nagina Silk Mill v. Income-Tax Officer PLD 1963 SC 322 and Commissioner of Income Tax v. Eli Lilly Ltd. 2009 SCMR 1279 ref.

The impugned directions did not leave any option with the Tax Commissioner to consider his legal authority before initiating proceedings in the tax matter of the petitioner. Further, it was admittedly the Tax Commissioner, Karachi who had the jurisdiction, under section 209 of the 2001 Ordinance, to proceed in respect of the income tax returns filed by the petitioner, but the impugned directions mandated the Tax Commissioner, Islamabad to proceed in the matter. And it was only after the impugned directions that the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) transferred the cases of the petitioner and of her children to the Tax Commissioner, Islamabad vide its order dated 25-06-2020. The impugned directions have, thus, affected the vested right of the petitioner which have accrued to her after lapse of the period prescribed under sections 121 and 122 of the 2001 Ordinance for issuing, or making amendment in, the tax assessment order and have the effect of causing "material disadvantage" to the petitioner. Therefore, it was necessary to provide her a fair and "meaningful hearing" before making the impugned directions.

A day before the impugned directions were passed the petitioner addressed the Supreme Court through video link and made her statement. Perusal of the transcript of her statement as well as of the observations made by the Senior Member of the Bench showed that neither said Member nor any other Member of the Bench asked her whether she had anything to say if the Court would direct the tax authorities to inquire into her sources of fund whereby she had purchased the foreign properties, and to conduct proceedings for determining her tax liability regarding those properties under the 2001 Ordinance. She was not informed of the action the Court was contemplating to take, nor was she given a chance to state her stance on that. Thus, she was not given "notice of the case to be met", nor was she provided with an "opportunity to explain" why the Court should not make such directions. Both the essential requirements of right of hearing were not complied with before making the impugned directions. Hearing the petitioner on 18th June 2020 by the Court on video-link before making the impugned directions on 19th June 2020, therefore, cannot be said to be a fair and "meaningful hearing" in the context of making the impugned directions. While the independent, adult and married children of the petitioner (her son and daughter) were not heard at all, before making the impugned directions that related to and affected them also. The petitioner, in the present case, was deprived of her vested right by the impugned directions, without providing her an opportunity of fair and meaningful hearing, i.e., by giving her notice of the contemplated action (the impugned directions) and opportunity to explain why such action (the impugned directions) should not be made. The impugned directions are, therefore, vitiated on this ground. Furthermore, non- hearing of petitioner is an error on the face of record meriting interference in review jurisdiction.

Federation v. Nawaz Sharif PLD 2009 SC 644 ref.

The petitioner and her children being private citizens, their tax matters had no nexus with the essential pre-requisite for invoking and maintaining any proceedings in the original jurisdiction of the Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, and were thus not amenable to the jurisdiction that was invoked and exercised thereunder through the short order dated 19-06-2020 [reported as (PLD 2020 SC 346)]. Further, the tax matter of the petitioner could not have been referred to the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') as the role and jurisdiction of the Council is limited to the matters relating to the conduct and capability of the superior Court Judges. It is not mandated to delve into the affairs of someone who is not a Judge of a superior Court. The impugned directions tend to stretch the scope of jurisdiction of the Council beyond the constitutional mandate and vest in the Council the jurisdiction and authority not granted to it by the Constitution.

The impugned directions also create an anomalous situation as they provide that the proceedings before the Council, as contemplated thereby, shall not be effected by the filing or pendency of any appeal under the 2001 Ordinance against the order/report of the Tax Commissioner, or against any order made or decision taken at any appellate stage. If in the event the Council, on the basis of the report submitted by the Chairman FBR in pursuance of the impugned directions, recommends removal of the Judge, but subsequently his wife i.e. the petitioner, succeeds in her challenge to the order of the Tax Commissioner, and the said order is found not sustainable, the time for the retrieval may have passed as by then Judge may have reached the age of superannuation. The injury inflicted upon the Judge and the damage suffered by this institution will thus be irretrievable. In a reverse scenario where the Council may not agree with the findings of the Tax Commissioner, but such findings are upheld by the forums, including the Supreme Court, before which the Tax Commissioner's findings are amenable to correction, an anomalous and embarrassing situation may occur. [p. 166] $U_1$

Another aspect of referring the matter to the Council by the Supreme Court for exercise of its suo motu power is that it infringes the independence of the Council. Therefore, asking the Council, by the impugned directions, to conduct "proceedings" to decide whether or not it will inquire into the matter of alleged misconduct by the Judge in exercise of its suo motu powers is also tantamount to interference into the independent functioning of the Council and, thus, against the spirit of the provisions of Articles 209 and 211 of the Constitution.

Ikram Chaudhry v. Federation PLD 1998 SC 103 ref.

The impugned directions to the Chairman, FBR to submit report to the Council and asking the Council to consider that report for deciding to take any action thereon against the Judge have the effect of directing the Chairman, FBR to file a complaint in the Council against the Judge, in the form of report. The impugned directions have thus authorized the Chairman, FBR to do that which he cannot do under the Constitution and the law. He being an officer subordinate to the Federal Government cannot make any complaint against a constitutional court Judge directly to the Council; only the Federal Government can do so and that too by the constitutional process of acting through the President. If the officers of the Federal or Provincial Governments or of the autonomous bodies or authorities under the control of such Governments are allowed or empowered to file complaints concerning or emanating from their official actions against Judges of the constitutional courts who, in exercise of their constitutional jurisdiction, make judicial review of official actions and inactions of such officers, there would be disastrous consequences for the independence of judiciary.

The impugned directions singled out the petitioner and her husband-Judge for special treatment by directing initiation of proceedings into their matters by the tax authorities and the Council in accordance with a procedure that was not provided by the law and the Constitution; their fundamental right to equality before the law and equal protection of law guaranteed by Article 25 of the Constitution was thus infringed by the impugned directions.

The impugned directions were in no way a relief consequential or incidental to the matter adjudicated upon by the Court, i.e., the constitutionality and legality of the Reference filed against the Judge, or to the relief prayed for by the parties, i.e., the quashing of the Reference or dismissal of the constitutional petitions. The impugned directions must have come as a surprise to the parties being unexpected, as they were beyond the scope of the case before the Court, on a matter that was not debated in the course of the hearing.

The impugned directions having been made without providing a fair and meaningful hearing to the petitioner, thus violating the principles of natural justice, and without adverting to, and in contravention of, the relevant provisions of law and the Constitution, definitely fall within the scope of the well-established ground of review, namely, "error apparent on the face of the record"; thus they can be recalled by the Supreme Court in exercise of its review jurisdiction under Article 188 of the Constitution read with Rule 1 of Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980.

Review petitions were allowed and the impugned directions contained in paras 4 to 11 of the impugned short order dated 19-06-2020 [reported as (PLD 2020 SC 346)]and other connected matters, along with supporting detailed reasons given in the majority judgment of the same date [reported as (PLD 2021 SC

1)], were recalled and set-aside. All the subsequent proceedings, actions, orders, information and reports in pursuance of the directions contained in the short order dated 19-6-2020 [reported as (PLD 2020 SC 346)] and the detailed reasons thereof[reported as (PLD 2021 SC 1)],were declared to be illegal and without any legal effect. Resultantly, any such proceedings, actions, orders or reports cannot be considered or acted upon and pursued any further by any forum or authority including the Supreme Judicial Council.

Per Yahya Afridi, J.;agreeing with the Majority view but with his own reasons [Majority view]:

The Supreme Court has wide-ranging power vested in it under Article 184(3) or Article 187(1) of the Constitution, to issue appropriate directions, while disposing of a case. However, where the Constitution under Article 211 expressly forbids all courts, including the Supreme Court, not to interfere in the proceedings of the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council'), then the authority of the Supreme Court under Article 184(3), or, for that matter, under any other Article of the Constitution, has to yield to such definite ouster. The very essence of the ouster clause provided in Article 211 of the Constitution is to curtail the jurisdiction of the courts, including the Supreme Court, to protect and preserve the autonomy and supremacy of the "proceedings" of the Council against judicial interference. The decision on the question, whether to commence an inquiry or otherwise, is a matter that is within the exclusive domain of the Council. The Supreme Court, or for that matter any other Court, lacks the jurisdiction to restrict this vast authority vested in the Council by the Constitution. And unless the very proceedings of the Council to proceed against a Judge of the Superior Judiciary is positively adjudged to be coram non judice, mala fide or without jurisdiction, Courts are to jealously maintain the constitutional independence of the Council.

Any directions of the Supreme Court setting steps for the Council, and for that matter, for its Chairman and Secretary, to follow or to refrain from following and that too, without first adjudging its actions or inactions to be coram non judice, mala fide or without jurisdiction would amount to excessive exercise of jurisdiction by the Supreme Court under Article 184(3) and Article 187(1) of the Consti-tution. Such directions of the Court amount to usurping the exclusive constitutional jurisdiction vested in the Council under Article 209 and protected under Article 211 of the Constitution.

The impugned directions of the Supreme Court to the Council to consider the report of the tax officials amounts to judicial interference in the "proceedings before the Council", and thus violates the autonomy and supremacy of the "proceedings" of the Council against judicial interference envisaged under Article 211 of the Constitution.

The Supreme Court did not have the jurisdiction to issue the impugned directions to the Council to consider initiating, or otherwise, an inquiry against the Judge based on the "information" received from the tax officials of the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR). Even if the instructions of the Court to the Council to consider the report of the tax officials, are not strictly considered or taken as "directions" to the Council, even then the same has the effect of making the Supreme Court a "complainant", and not the "adjudicator" in the matter. Similarly, if the Supreme Court issues directions to the contrary, that is, refraining the Council from considering "information" obtained, the Supreme Court would then too be exceeding its mandated constitutional jurisdiction.

The Supreme Court has, in the judgment under review, passed binding directions to the tax officials to proceed in a set manner, overlooking the provisions of the 2001 Ordinance relating to taking cognizance of "definite information", scrutiny of information and assessment of income tax returns, and territorial jurisdiction. Moreover, in making the impugned directions, the Court also lost sight of the procedure provided in the 2001 Ordinance, as to how tax officials are: (i) to proceed against a tax filer that has undeclared income and assets or mis-declared the same and within what time period; (ii) to determine the source of funds for purchasing the undeclared assets, whether generated in Pakistan or in some foreign country; and (iii) above all, to which tax year the undeclared local assets or source of funds and the undeclared foreign assets and source of funds are to be added to and assessed.

In the circumstances of the case, the matter of probe against the spouse and children of the Judge should best have been left to the concerned tax authorities to proceed under the 2001 Ordinance, without any specific directions. By giving directions to the tax authorities to proceed with the matter on the basis of a procedure and timeline foreign to the 2001 Ordinance, the Supreme Court has ultimately subdued the procedure prescribed under the 2001 Ordinance by expanding its role, inadvertently, as 'legislator' rather than 'adjudicator'.

Another error that crept in while making the impugned directions is the distraction from the fundamental issue of alleged misconduct of the Judge qua the non-disclosure of foreign assets of his spouse, in his wealth statement, filed with the income tax returns under section 116 of the 2001 Ordinance. Though this was the main controversy, the impugned directions directed the tax officials to proceed against the spouse and children of the Judge regarding the subject foreign properties, instead of directing the tax officials to proceed against the Judge to determine his liability, if any, in accordance with the 2001 Ordinance. In case the spouse and children of the Judge fail to adequately justify the sources of fund for purchasing the foreign assets, the same would be deemed even then, under the 2001 Ordinance, to be owned by them, and not by the Judge. In the constitutional petitions, wherein the impugned directions have been given, the concern of the Supreme Court was with respect to the independence of the judiciary and the accountability of the judges in the context of alleged misconduct of the Judge, which has been detracted from, by making the impugned directions against his family members.

The impugned directions affecting the rights of the Judge's wife, her son and daughter, have been passed by the Supreme Court in excess of jurisdiction, and are, therefore, recalled. Consequently, the "superstructure" of subsequent proceedings, actions, orders and reports built on the legally faulty "foundation" of the impugned directions would fall and have no legal effect on the rights and obligations of the Judge's wife, her son and daughter.

His Lordship observed that the tax officials are competent to proceed against any Judge of the Superior Judiciary, serving or retired, his spouse or/and children, without fear or favour, in relation to his or her tax affairs only in accordance with the provisions of the 2001 Ordinance and not otherwise on the basis of unlawful directions; that section 216 of the 2001 Ordinance, commands confidentiality of the information of a tax filer, and breach thereof exposes the delinquent to penal consequences under sections 198 and 199 of the 2001 Ordinance; that such consequences are attracted in the present case to those giving the unlawful directions, namely, Chairman, Assets Recovery Unit (ARU), with the concurrence of the Federal Law Minister, the tax officials executing the unlawful directions in breach of section 216 of the 2001 Ordinance, and finally, the Prime Minister, who despite clear and unanimous finding of misdoings of the said delinquents by the Supreme Court, retained them in positions of authority, thereby blatantly exposed himself to complicity in the commission of the said violation.

Per Umar Ata Bandial; Sajjad Ali Shah, Munib Akhtar and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ. agreeing [Minority view]

In the present case, it is admitted that the three foreign Properties belong to the Judge's wife and children; that two of the properties were purchased in the year 2013 when the petitioner-Judge was holding the public office of Chief Justice of a High Court; and that the said properties were undeclared in the wealth statements of the petitioner-Judge and his wife. In these circumstances, the non-disclosure of the properties causes suspicion and trepidation. More so when one views sections 11(5) and 111(1)(d) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ('the 2001 Ordinance') which mandate since the promulgation of the Ordinance [in the case of section 11(5)] and since 2011 [in the case of Section 111(1)(d)] that the income of a resident person includes both his domestic and foreign income and the failure to disclose the same renders a resident person liable to pay the tax evaded. Therefore, in such circumstances a question to the petitioner-Judge about the source of funding of the properties is natural, relevant and lawful, notwithstanding any procedural lapses committed in the preparation of the Reference against him. That question must not be bypassed because being in the Service of Pakistan, the petitioner-Judge remains answerable for the unaccounted assets of his spouse. No satisfactory reasoning was put forward by any review petitioner on why no standards of accountability or separate or lower ones should apply to Judges (who also fall in the category of public servants) and why the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') should wait for a final determination by the relevant statutory authorities before processing an information received against a Judge on this score.

It is of vital importance that public office holders, particularly Judges of the Superior Courts, serving the people of Pakistan remain answerable before their relevant forums to safeguard the integrity and credibility of their person as well as of their Court. Courts try people and hold them accountable according to the Constitution and the law. Their judicial orders are accepted and obeyed by the people for their trust in the Courts' moral authority which is dependent upon the personal rectitude of the Judges. If aspersions cast against Judges on the basis of admitted facts are not dispelled, the said moral authority of the Courts is eroded and the execution of their primary function, namely, to decide the peoples' rights and obligations in accordance with the Constitution and the law becomes severely undermined.

Corruption in Hajj Arrangements in 2010's case PLD 2011 SC 963 ref.

When a Judge and/or his spouse admit to acquiring undisclosed foreign assets and there is an element of indiscretion in their omission to declare the said assets, namely, a violation of the duty under Section 111 of the 2001 Ordinance and a failure to live up to the standard of propriety expected of Judges and their spouses under the Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts ('the Code of Conduct'), an inquiry into the source of acquisition of the undeclared foreign assets serves the public interest and right which according to settled jurisprudence can prevail over the private rights of individuals.

Pakistan Muslim League (N) v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2007 SC 642 and Mohammad Imran v. Province of Sindh 2019 SCMR 1753 ref.

In the present case no fundamental right of either the petitioner-Judge or his wife has been infringed by the impugned direction to the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) to investigate the nature and source of funding of the foreign properties. This is because there is no fundamental right granted in the Constitution to public servants/citizens to be immune from investigations into their financial affairs. In fact, section 216(3)(p) of the 2001 Ordinance specifically allows such investigations.

In issuing the impugned direction to the FBR to commence proceedings in respect of the foreign properties, the Court was moved by two factors: firstly, that the Judge's wife be given an opportunity to explain the source of funding of the properties so that any stigma surrounding them is erased from the person of the Judge and the Court; and secondly, to redress the wife's complaint as expressed in her video link statement made before the Court that she should have, but had not, been asked about the properties from the beginning. Consequently, having herself demanded why the FBR had not approached her regarding the properties, the Judge's wife cannot now take the contradictory plea that a direction to the FBR to this effect is contrary to law.

The impugned directions contained in the short order [reported as (PLD 2020 SC 346)] had been misconstrued. No direction of any nature was issued to the Council. In fact, the essence of the short order is that the Judge's wife be given the opportunity to explain the facts to the FBR and the factual findings thereon be placed for the perusal of the Council. Such process was meant to allay the disquiet of the petitioner-Judge and his wife by securing a finding that settled the allegations levelled against the former. This is precisely why the short order simply notes that the Secretary of the Council will place the report of the Chairman FBR before the Chairman of the Council for the perusal of the Council. Thereafter, it was for the Council to act as it deemed appropriate in the matter. Therefore, it is wrong to suggest that the Court has bound the Council to investigate the petitioner-Judge.

A strong grievance was voiced by the review petitioners against the short order [reported as (PLD 2020 SC 346)] for allegedly exposing the Judge's wife to scrutiny by a tax forum without giving her a hearing. Such a plea is legally unsound because on the facts of the present case, the allegation that the Judge's wife was not given a hearing (or was given an inadequate hearing) is inconsequential. This is because the short order is not adverse in nature. It did not affect the person, property or any other right of the Judge's wife. Instead, it only asked the FBR to initiate proceedings to verify her sources of funding the foreign properties. Hence, any right to be heard that accrued to the Judge's wife was in the FBR proceedings because the outcome thereof could have either exonerated her or adversely affected her property and reputation.

University of Dacca v. Zakir Ahmed PLD 1965 SC 90 ref.

The controversy in the present case is about the consequences of non-declaration of foreign assets by the Judge's wife. Therefore, referring her case to the FBR for verification and scrutiny was wholly in accordance with the scheme of the 2001 Ordinance. In no way did the impugned direction to the FBR determine or influence the outcome of the proceedings which were to be conducted under the 2001 Ordinance by a Commissioner, Inland Revenue (CIR) who was duly authorised. Such proceedings before a statutory authority were completely independent and separate from the proceedings held before the (Supreme) Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution.

During the hearing of the judgment under review, the Judge's wife made an oral statement through video link that presented her version of the sources of funds used for purchasing the foreign properties. She was informed at the outset that her statement will be recorded. She displayed before the camera documents that allegedly explained her sources of funding the properties. The Court allowed her to address the Bench for roughly 30 minutes but declined to consider her plea and documents on the ground that jurisdiction to ascertain the facts about the funds used for acquiring the properties lay with two fora in her case, namely, FBR (in her capacity as a taxpayer) and the Council (as a witness) both of which were available to her to do. Her statement clearly reflected her knowledge of the crucial issue, namely, her means for acquiring the properties and her plea on the subject i.e., her independent means for purchasing the same and her willingness to substantiate this claim. After hearing her, the Court decided to refer her to a competent forum, the FBR, to explain the nature and source of the funds utilised for buying the properties. By following this process, the essential ingredients of the right to be heard, namely, prior notice of the subject-matter and opportunity of hearing to articulate her plea, were complied with. As a result, the due process requirements of Art. 10A of the Constitution were fulfilled Ali Muhammad v. State PLD 2010 SC 623 and Michael Francis Hamilton v. Peter Charles Forrest [1981] AC 1038 ref.

In the present case, new material has surfaced during the proceedings of Commissioner, Inland Revenue (CIR). Documents including the Procuration and Delegation Form and the cheques issued by the former (law firm) partner of the Judge existed on the day the short order [reported as (PLD 2020 SC 346)] was passed. However, as these were confidential documents of the Judge's wife they were not in the knowledge of the other parties. It was only when the direction to the FBR was issued vide the short orderto proceed with the verification of the funding of the foreign properties owned by the Judge's wife that the CIRmade a request for information to her Banks under the 2001 Ordinance. The documents produced by the Bank revealed the connection of the petitioner-Judge with the ForeignCurrency Account of his wife. Resultantly, the perusal of and reliance on these documents in review jurisdiction is competent, relevant and critical for verifying the propriety of the Supreme Court's impugned direction to the FBR. Their contents are also crucial for arriving at an informed decision in the present review petitions.

By accepting the present review petitions and seeking to prevent a consideration of the freshly discovered relevant and genuine information, the Majority view has created an anomalous situation whereby a process of the Supreme Court in aid of justice has been turned into a process shrouding the truth under legal niceties. An unsatisfactory state of affairs, therefore, exists which unless explained casts an impression that the Court has adopted a different standard for one of its own. Judges occupy an exalted position in society as dispensers of justice. They are amongst the elites in society. Therefore, neglecting their duty to search and confront the truth goes against the express command of Almighty Allah who has warned against providing preferential treatment to privileged persons.

Surah Al-Isra, Verse 16 ref.

Judges, like all other persons in the Service of Pakistan and holding public office, are answerable for their errors and omissions. In the present case there is material that calls for an explanation before the Council which must be provided to protect the petitioner-Judge and the (Supreme) Court from aspersions cast on their integrity.

Per Munib Akhtar, J; Umar Ata Bandial, Sajjad Ali Shah and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ. agreeing [Minority view]:

The Four Member Judgment (authored by Justice Maqbool Baqar, Justice Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Justice Amin-ud-Din Khan) has purportedly also been signed by a former Supreme Court Judge i.e. Justice (R) Manzoor Ahmad Malik, who has expressed his agreement with the same. Said former Judge was of course a signatory to one of the short orders dated 26.04.2021 but he retired on 30-04-2021. He could not, as a matter of law, have signed the judgment.

Al-Jehad Trust v. Federation PLD 1996 SC 324 and CJP Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan PLD 2010 SC 61 distinguished.

Once a Judge of the Supreme Court has retired he cannot thereafter give, make or sign any judgment, order or decree, and certainly not in such manner as has, or can have, operative effect. Upon retirement he has left office and thereafter cannot, as it were, return to service, whether of his own volition or at the request of any Judge(s) on the Court, unless the Constitution itself so allows. The former Judge i.e. Justice (R) Manzoor Ahmad Malik had retired by efflux of time and hence could not have signed the Four Member Judgment. His purported act of doing so, and expression of agreement, are in law non est and of no legal consequence, effect or operation. The Four Member Judgment remains precisely that: a judgment that has the support of only four of the Judges who heard and decided the review petitions.

Present review petitions were heard and decided by a 10-member Bench. The majority therefore had to comprise of at least six Judges. Three short orders were made in total. The short order made by Justice Umar Ata Bandial, Justice Sajjad Ali Shah, Justice Munib Akhtar and Justice Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, had the support of only four Judges and can be put to one side. When the remaining two are considered it is seen that one commanded the support of five Judges (Justice Maqbool Baqar, Justice Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Justice Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Justice Amin-ud-Din Khan) while the other was made by one Judge (Justice Yahya Afridi). Neither of these short orders had the support of six Judges and hence was not operative in and of itself. Rather, the two orders had to be considered in conjunction. What had operative effect was only that which was common between them. This was because it was only the commonality that commanded the support of a bare majority (i.e., six Judges) and therefore, and for that reason alone, had operative effect.

In the short order of Justice Maqbool Baqar, Justice Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Justice Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Justice Amin-ud-Din Khan it was directed that "Resultantly, any such proceedings, actions, orders or reports cannot be considered or acted upon and pursued any further by any forum or authority including the Supreme Judicial Council." Said direction was not common in the short order passed by Justice Yahya Afridi, therefore said direction did not command the support of the majority, but only of, at most, a plurality (i.e., five Judges).Since even the commonality does not command the support of the majority it is not the judgment or ratio of the Court. Said direction therefore did not have operative effect. Any relevant forum or authority including the Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council') is therefore not precluded or prevented from considering, acting upon or pursuing any information or material contained in or to be obtained from "any such proceedings, actions, orders or reports".

There is no operative reasoning or ratio of the Court. Of course, there is an operative order in the field which is that what was common between the two short orders. It is not therefore the situation that the decision is bereft of any legal effect at all. Rather, the result is that the legally operative "short order" (i.e., the commonality) is not supported by any operative judgment (i.e., reasoning or ratio). There is nothing that commands the support of even a bare majority. There is no ratio or reasoning that has operative effect as being that of the Court. It therefore necessarily follows that neither the Four Member Judgment nor that of Justice Yahya Afridi nor such reasoning or ratio as may be common between them have any binding precedential effect or value.

Per Maqbool Baqar, Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel, Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Amin-ud-Din Khan, JJ [Majority view]

(f) Administration of justice---

----Courts cannot and should not create any right, liability or obligation that is not founded in law.

Yousaf Rerolling Mills v. Collector of Customs PLD 1973 SC 49 ref.

(g) Maxim: Audi alteram partem, principle of---

----Fair hearing, right of---Essential constituents of a fair hearing---To ensure the principle of fairness embedded in the right of hearing, the person sought to be affected must at least be made aware of the allegations made against him, upon which basis the decision is to follow, (i.e., notice of the case to be met) and, second, be given a fair opportunity to make any relevant statement putting forward his own case, and to correct or controvert any relevant statement brought forward to his prejudice (i.e., opportunity to explain)---In order to act justly and to reach at just ends by just means, a deciding authority is to comply with and implement, in all circumstances, these elementary and essential requirements of principle of fairness and right of hearing.

Kanada v. Government of Malaya (1962) AC 322; Ridge v. Baldwin (1964) AC 40; Pakistan v. Public at large PLD 1987 SC 304; Swadeshi Cotton Mills v. Union of India AIR 1981 SC 818 and University of Dacca v. Zakir Ahmed PLD 1965 SC 90 ref.

(h) Maxim: Audi alteram partem, principle of---

----Scope---Even in absence of any express provision in the statute, the principle of audi alteram partem is to be read into the relevant provision and applies in proceedings where adverse action is being considered to be taken against a person or if the contemplated action is going to affect any of his vested rights---Violation of this principle vitiates the proceedings and makes the action taken therein to be illegal, as the violation of said principle is considered as a violation of law.

Ali Muhammad v. State PLD 2010 SC 623; Asim Khan v. Zahir Shah 2007 SCMR 1451; PIA v. Nasir Jamal 2001 SCMR 934; Hazara Improvement Trust v. Qaisra Elahi 2005 SCMR 678; Anisa Rehman v. P.I.A.C. 1994 SCMR 2232 and Lilaram v. Ghulam Ali 1991 SCMR 932 ref.

(i) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 187(1) & Pt. II, Chap. 1---"Power of the Supreme Court to issue such directions, orders or decrees as may be necessary for doing complete justice in any case or matter pending before it"---Scope---Under Art. 187(1) of the Constitution, the Supreme Court can pass any order to do complete justice between the parties; however, it cannot make an order inconsistent with the fundamental rights or in contravention of any constitutional provision or any relevant statutory law.

Dossani Travels v. Travels Shop PLD 2014 SC 1 and Prem Chand v. Excise Commissioner AIR 1963 SC 996 ref.

(j) Jurisdiction---

----Scope---Where an authority has no jurisdiction in the matter under the law, jurisdiction cannot be conferred on that authority by an order of the Court.

Badshah Begum v. Additional Commissioner 2003 SCMR 629 ref.

(k) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 209(8)---Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Courts ('the Code of Conduct')---Spouses and children of Judges---No law or clause in the Code of Conduct prescribed for Judges of superior Courts makes the Judges liable to account for the alleged tax-evasion (if any) by his or her independent spouse---Nothing is present in any law or in the Code of Conduct which could possibly be stretched to hold a Judge liable for the conduct of his spouse and children, or for that matter of anybody else, without there being any evidence to connect him with, and hold him responsible for such conduct.

Messrs Avia International v. Assistant Collector of Customs 2004 PTD 997 ref.

(l) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XXVI, R. 1---Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. XLVII, R.1---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 188---Review jurisdiction of the Supreme Court---Expression 'error apparent on the face of the record'---Meaning---Said expression cannot be defined with precision or exhaustiveness, and there would always remain an element of indefiniteness inherent in its very nature---Meaning of said expression is to be determined in each case on the basis of its own peculiar facts.

Anwar Husain v. Province of East Pakistan PLD 1961 Dacca 155 ref.

(m) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 10A---Right to fair trial and due process---Scope---After recognition of the right to fair trial and due process as a fundamental right by insertion of Art. 10A in the Constitution, violation of the principles of natural justice, which are the necessary components of the right to fair trial and due process, is now to be taken as a violation of the said fundamental right as well.

(n) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XXVI, R. 1---Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. XLVII, R.1---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 188---Review jurisdiction of the Supreme Court---Expression 'error apparent on the face of the record'---Scope---Any judgment pronounced or order made without adverting to, and in contravention of, the relevant provisions of law or Constitution is to be treated as an error apparent on the face of the record that warrants the review of that judgment or order.

Muhammad Amir v. Controller of Estate Duty PLD 1962 SC 335; Zulfikar Ali Bhutto v. State PLD 1979 SC 741; Suba v. Fatima Bibi 1996 SCMR 158 and Abdul Ghaffar v. Asghar Ali PLD 1998 SC 363 ref.

(o) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

---O.XXVI, R. 1---Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. XLVII, R. 1---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 188---Review jurisdiction of the Supreme Court---Scope---Whenever Judges of the Supreme Court find that their judgment or order of which review is sought was pronounced or made without adverting to, and in contravention of, any provision of law or the Constitution, they must correct the error considering it their inviolable constitutional obligation and duty, not a favour or concession to the party seeking review---Judge, therefore, should not hesitate to review his/her decision if it is established not to be right.

(p) Administration of justice---

----When the basic order is without lawful authority, then the entire superstructure built on it falls on to the ground automatically.

Yousaf Ali v. Muhammad Aslam PLD 1958 SC 104; Executive District Officer v. Muhammad Younas 2007 SCMR 1835; Atta-ur-Rehman v. Umar Farooq PLD 2008 SC 663 and Province of Punjab v. Border Area Committee PLD 2011 SC 550 ref.

(q) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art.4---Right to be dealt with in accordance with law---Scope---Constitutional guarantee of the right to be dealt with in accordance with law, under Art. 4 of the Constitution, is available not only to every citizen of the country but also to every other person for the time being within Pakistan---Said constitutional guarantee cannot be curtailed or limited in the case or matter of any person whosoever he may be and whatever the allegations against him may be.

Naveed Asghar v. State PLD 2021 SC 600 ref.

(r) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 209(5) & 209(6) & Preamble---'Independence of judiciary' and 'rule of law' importance of---Rule of law---Scope---Edifice of the judicial independence rests on the assumption that every Judge besides being fair and impartial is fiercely independent and is free to uphold his judicial views---Such judicial freedom is fundamental to the concept of the rule of law---Any attempt to muffle judicial independence or to stifle dissent shakes the foundation of a free and impartial judicial system, thus eroding public confidence on which the entire edifice of judicature stands---Judge whose decisions are dictated not by the fidelity to the letter and spirit of the law but based on what he deems to be palatable to the Government would cause irretrievable damage to the public confidence in the judiciary, and consequently jeopardize its credibility and moral authority---Rule of law and the independence of judiciary are conceptually interwoven---Without an independent judiciary, expecting the rule of law is a sheer farce---Rule of law and the independence of the judiciary are the only guarantee to the maintenance and preservation of a thriving democracy.

Per Yahya Afridi, J.;agreeing with the Majority view but with his own reasons [Majority view]

(s) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XXVI, R. 1---Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. XLVII, R.1---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 188---Review jurisdiction of the Supreme Court---Expression 'error apparent on the face of the record'---Scope---Judgment passed on an erroneous assumption of material facts, or without adverting to a provision of law or Constitution, or without noticing an undisputed construction of law and Constitution amounts to an error apparent on the face of the record, and thus justifies positive exercise of the review jurisdiction.

Muhammad Boota v. Member (Revenue) BOR 2010 SCMR 1049 ref.

(t) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 209(5)---Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council'), powers of---Expression 'information from any source' used in Art. 209(5) of the Constitution---Scope---Clause (5) of Art. 209 of the Constitution, clearly provides that "information from any source" can form the basis of an inquiry by the Council against a Judge of the Superior judiciary---Legal significance and practical implication of the insertion of the word "any" prefixing the word "source" in clause (5) of Art. 209 of the Constitution has, in fact, expanded the pool from which the Council may obtain "information" to initiate an inquiry into the conduct or capacity of a Judge of the Superior judiciary---To interpret the word "any" used in clause (5) of Art. 209 of the Constitution in a manner that would dilute the authority of the Council and restrict the information it can or cannot consider would amount to defeating the very command of the Constitution, therefore, the Council, "on information" emanating from "any source" can proceed, on its own motion, with an inquiry into the capacity or conduct of any Judge of the Superior judiciary.

(u) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3), 188, 209(5)(b) & 209(8)---Income Tax Ordinance (XLIX of 2001), S. 116(1)(b)---Review petition before the Supreme Court challenging the directions given to the tax authorities by the Supreme Court to conduct an inquiry into the foreign assets of petitioner-Judge's family members and submit a report to the Supreme Judicial Council despite quashing of Presidential reference against the Judge---Maintainability---Said review petition was not maintainable as the locus standi of the petitioner-Judge to invoke the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Art. 184(3) of the Constitution, as well as the review jurisdiction therein, stands eclipsed till he holds the office of a Judge of the Supreme Court; for he owes an obligation under clause (8) of Art. 209 of the Constitution to observe the Code of Conduct issued by the Council for Judges of the Superior judiciary, that, inter alia, requires him to avoid being involved in litigation, for himself or even on behalf of others, which includes public interest litigation under Art. 184(3) of the Constitution---Object is to avert any chance of a Judge of the Superior judiciary being placed in a position, where his conduct may be seen as unbecoming of a Judge, glimpses of which were seen during the proceedings of the present review petitions---Review petition filed by the petitioner-Judge was held to be not maintainable. [Minority view]

Per Umar Ata Bandial; Sajjad Ali Shah, Munib Akhtar and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ. agreeing [Minority view]

(v) Supreme Court Rules, 1980---

----O.XXVI, R. 8---Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. XLVII, R.1---Constitution of Pakistan, Art. 188---Review jurisdiction of the Supreme Court---Guiding principles of review jurisdiction stated.

Following are the guiding principles of review jurisdiction:

(i) Every judgment pronounced by the Court is to be considered a solemn and final decision on all points arising out of the case;

(ii) An error must be obvious and must not require an elaborate discussion to be detected;

(iii) An error should not only be significant but should also have a material effect on the outcome of the case in that it must change the decision of the case. Review jurisdiction is limited in nature and a review will only succeed if it can be shown that an error in the judgment has changed the outcome of the case, whether partially or entirely;

(iv) A review cannot be sustained merely on the ground that a different decision could have been taken by the Court; and

(v) A review is not an appeal or a rehearing.

Abdul Ghaffar-Abdul Rehman v. Asghar Ali PLD 1998 SC 363; Ghulam Murtaza v. Abdul Salam Shah 2010 SCMR 1883; Majid Mahmood v. Muhammad Shafi 2008 SCMR 554; Wajihul Hassan Zaidi v. Government of the Punjab PLD 2004 SC 801; Rashid Ali Channa v. Muhammad Junaid Farooqui 2017 SCMR 1519; Mukhtar Mai v. Abdul Khaliq 2019 SCMR 1302; Shireen Raza v. Federation of Pakistan 2002 SCMR 1218; Federation of Pakistan v. Muhammad Nawaz Sharif PLD 2009 SC 644 and Fida Hussain v. The Secretary, Kashmir Affairs and Northern Affairs Division PLD 1995 SC 701 ref.

(w) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 187(1)---Supreme Court issuing directions in its jurisdiction under Arts.184(3) & 187(1) of the Constitution---Scope---When the Supreme Court acts under the said two Articles of the Constitution it can issue directions which travel beyond the pleas/ pleadings of the parties---In its original jurisdiction under Art. 184(3) of the Constitution the Supreme Court can mould the relief in accordance with the facts and the circumstances that come to light during the proceedings.

Muhammad Hanif Abbasi v. Imran Khan Niazi PLD 2018 SC 189; Zulfiqar Ali Babu v. Government of the Punjab PLD 1997 SC 11 and Muhammad Asghar Khan v. Mirza Aslam Baig PLD 2013 SC 1 ref.

(x) Constitution of Pakistan---

---Arts. 176, 192(1) & 209(5)(b)---Judges of Superior Courts, accountability of---Financial affairs of the spouse and other family members of a Judge---Necessary corollary which flows from the nature of Judges' work and the unique position they occupy in society is that they, like other public servants, are expected to make reasonable efforts to keep themselves informed about the financial affairs of their spouse and other family members who are either dependent on them or with whom they have financial dealings---Although Judges may be protected from the ordinary processes of law, they are not subject to separate or lower legal standards of accountability compared to other public servants; they are answerable at the bare minimum against the same benchmarks applied to ordinary public servants; this includes being accountable for the unexplained assets of their spouses and family members---Only difference is that a Judge of a Superior Court is answerable before a specialised forum (i.e. the Supreme Judicial Council) created specifically for determining complaints of misconduct received against Judges.

(y) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 176, 192(1) & 209(5)(b)---National Accountability Ordinance (XVIII of 1999), S. 9(a)(v)---Prevention of Corruption Act (II of 1947), S. 5(1)(e)---Judges of Superior Courts, accountability of---National Accountability Ordinance, 1999 and Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 are not applicable to Superior Court Judges, nevertheless, the legal tests and standards applied to other holders of public office/public servants under said laws can be utilised by the Supreme Judicial Council to evaluate the conduct of Judges.

Khan Asfandyar Wali v. Federation of Pakistan PLD 2001 SC 607; The State v. Mr. Justice Akhlaque Hussain PLD 1960 SC (Pak) 26 and The President v. Mr. Justice Shaukat Ali PLD 1971 SC 585 ref.

(z) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 176 & 192(1)---Judges of the High Courts and the Supreme Court---Said Judges are public servants and also in the Service of Pakistan; they occupy an office 'in connection with the affairs of the Federation'.

Muhammad Asghar Khan v. Mirza Aslam Baig PLD 2013 SC 1 and Salahuddin v. Frontier Sugar Mills and Distillery Ltd. PLD 1975 SC 244 ref.

(aa) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 184(3) & 187(1)---Power of Supreme Court to issue any directions necessary to do complete justice---Scope---Existence and exercise of the (Supreme) Court's power under the Constitution to issue directions is not dependent on express invocation of such power in its order---Not invoking the correct provision of law or citing an incorrect one for sustaining an order is of no consequence if the Court has jurisdiction under the law to pass that very order.

Olas Khan v. Chairman NAB PLD 2018 SC 40 ref.

(bb) Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908)---

----O. XLVII, R. 1---Review---Scope---In review proceedings the Court can examine only those events which existed at the time when the order was passed.

Rajah Kotagiri Venkata Subbamma Rao v. Rajah Vellanki Venkateama Rao (1900) LR 27 IA 197 and W.B. v. Kamal Sengupta [(2008) 8 SCC 612 ref.

(cc) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Preamble---Self-executory provisions of the Constitution---Meaning---When the Constitution intends any of its provisions to be immediately operational so that the right which it grants may be enjoyed and protected, or the duty which it imposes may be enforced without the aid of a legislative enactment, such provisions are termed self-executory.

Hakim Khan v. Government of Pakistan PLD 1992 SC 595 ref.

(dd) Functus officio, doctrine of---

----Scope---Body (or an authorised person) only becomes functus officio once it has passed an order or made a decision which is final so that no power is left with the said body to take any further action.

Black's Law Dictionary (10th Edn); Jowitt's Dictionary of English Law (5th Edn); Stroud's Judicial Dictionary (10th Edn) and Iqbal Pervaiz v. Harsan 2018 SCMR 359 ref.

(ee) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Arts. 209(5)(b) & 210---Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council'), jurisdiction of---Jurisdiction of the Council under Art. 209(5) of the Constitution is limited to inquiring into matters concerning a Judge of the Superior Courts---Only to the extent that the financial matters and activities of the family are intertwined with the affairs of a Judge, does such information become cognizable by the Council---Otherwise, the Council does not have jurisdiction to investigate into the affairs of a Judge's family members---Whilst the Council only has jurisdiction to examine the conduct and/or capacity of Judges of the Superior Courts, it may secure the attendance of any relevant person or the discovery/ production of any document whilst conducting an inquiry against a Judge---In exercise of such power the Council may yet examine persons, who are not Judges, or their record for understanding or deciding a pending information.

(ff) Interpretation of statutes---

----Ordinary and natural meaning---Scope---Words are generally to be given their ordinary and natural meaning except when such construction gives rise to absurdity or renders certain words meaningless.

Federation of Pakistan v. Durrani Ceramics 2014 SCMR 1630 ref.

(gg) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 209(5)---Supreme Judicial Council ('the Council')---Information from 'any' source against a Judge---Scope---Supreme Court can be a source of such information under Art. 209(5) of the Constitution---Since the legislature itself consciously chose to keep the source of information in Art. 209 of the Constitution open ended, it will be contrary to the spirit of the provision to hold otherwise and prevent the Superior Courts from taking judicial notice of information and/or from forwarding the same for perusal and consideration of the Council when no such restriction exists in Art. 209(5) itself.

(hh) Qanun-e-Shahadat (10 of 1984)---

----Art. 18---Evidence Act (I of 1872), S. 5 (since repealed)---Illegally collected evidence---Survey of case-law and rules set therein regulating admissibility of illegally collected evidence in jurisdictions of Pakistan, India, United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and the United States of America stated.

Bisvil Spinners (Pvt) Ltd v. Pakistan PLD 1992 SC 96; Kuruma v. The Queen [ 1955] AC 197; R.M. Malkani v. State of Maharashtra AIR 1973 SC 157; Pooran Mal v. Director of Inspection (Investigation), New Delhi AIR 1974 SC 348; R v. Sang [ 1979] 2 All ER 1222; R v. Grant 2009 SCC 32; Weeks v. United States 232 US 383 (1914); United States v. Janis 428 US 433 (1976); INS v. Lopez-Mendoza 468 US 1032 (1984); Pennsylvania Board of Probation and Parole v Scott 524 US 357 (1998); Silverthorne Lumber Co, Inc v United States 251 US 385 (1920); Nix v. Williams (467 US 431 (1984); Brown v Illinois (422 US 590 (1975); United States v Leon (468 US 897 (1984) and Walder v. United States (347 US 62 (1954)) ref.

Per Munib Akhtar, J; Umar Ata Bandial; Sajjad Ali Shah and Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed, JJ. agreeing [Minority view]

(ii) Constitution of Pakistan---

----Art. 189---Multi-member Bench of the Supreme Court---Majority/ minority judgments---Operative decision---Scope---In any case heard by a multi-member Bench (i.e., a Bench comprising of more than one Judge, whether of even or odd numbered strength) the operative decision (whether judgment, decree or order) must have the support of a majority---Even fifty percent is not enough: that is only a plurality---Majority threshold must be crossed---"General" rule is that there must be at least a majority---If there is no majority then there is no operative order or decree, or in the case of a judgment no ratio decidendi of the Court, although there is of course a ratio of such judgment(s) as may have been delivered---Secondly, if there are multiple judgments or orders (short or otherwise) it is only the one which commands the support of the majority that has operative effect as the decision of the Court---If there be no such single judgment then it is the commonality (if any) between them such as commands the support of the majority that has operative effect---Anything (whether determination or decision on a legal point in issue, enunciation of any rule or principle of law or order) that falls short of such mark (i.e., is outside or beyond that what is common) is not the decision of the Court and has no operative effect.

Justice Qazi Faez Isa (in-person) Assisted by Barrister Kabir Hashmi for Petitioners (in C.R.Ps. Nos. 296 of 2020 and C.M.A. No. 3457 of 2021).

Mrs. Sarina Faez Isa (in-person) for Petitioner (in C.R.P. No. 298 of 2020 and Cr.O.Ps. Nos. 10-11 of 2021).

Hamid Khan, Senior Advocate Supreme Court and Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners (in C.R.Ps. Nos.299, 300, 301 and 308 of 2020).

Rasheed A. Rizvi, Senior Advocate Supreme Court (through Video Link from Karachi) for Petitioners (in C.R.Ps. Nos.297 and 309 of 2020).

Nemo for Petitioner (in C.M.A. No. 4533 of 2020).

Syed Rifaqat Hussain Shah, Advocate-on-Record for Petitioners (in C.R.P. No. 509 of 2020).

Ch. Aamir Rehman, Addl. A.G.P. for Federation of Pakistan.

Sohail Mahmood, Addl. A.G.P. for President, PM and AGP.

Dates of hearing: 15th 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd and 26th April, 2021.

JUDGMENT

MAQBOOL BAQAR, MAZHAR ALAM KHAN MIANKHEL, SYED MANSOOR ALI SHAH AND AMIN-UD-DIN KHAN, JJ.---

Preface

This judgment must announce loud and clear that no one, including a Judge of the highest court in the land, is above the law. At the same time, no one, including a Judge of the highest court in the land, can be denied his right to be dealt with in accordance with law. Every citizen of Pakistan, notwithstanding his status or position, is entitled to due process of law in any action detrimental to his life, liberty, body, reputation or property under Article 4 of the Constitution and safeguarding of his fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 9 to 28 of the Constitution. It matters little if the citizen happens to hold a high public office, he is equally subject to and entitled to the protection of law.

2. While judicial accountability is the cornerstone of judicial independence, it does not mean that accountability of a judge is bereft of due process of law and fair trial guaranteed under the Constitution. An open court-house is no less than a glass house, yet the judges boldly and courageously uphold the law even against the mightiest in the land, without fear and favour, in full public gaze. In doing so, they step on many a toes and rattle many a skeleton. This may at times, invite efforts to discredit them by creating doubts about their personal integrity. Since judges have no public platform to clarify, respond or defend themselves, such efforts go beyond the person of the judge and undermine public trust and public confidence in the judicial institution. Constitutional safeguard of due process to enjoy the protection of law and to be treated in accordance with law, therefore, assumes even greater significance in the case where integrity of a judge is in question.

Facts

3. The President of Pakistan, on advice of the Prime Minister of Pakistan, filed a Reference under Article 209 of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan 1973 ("Constitution") against Mr. Justice Qazi Faez Isa ("Justice Isa"), a Judge of the Supreme Court of Pakistan, in the Supreme Judicial Council of Pakistan ("Council") to conduct inquiry against him, alleging the commission of misconduct by Justice Isa mainly on the basis of his non-disclosure of three foreign properties of his family members - spouse and children - in the declaration of his assets filed with the annual income tax returns under section 116 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("ITO"). The Council commenced inquiry-proceedings against Justice Isa, in the said Reference. Justice Isa and, among others, many Bar Councils and Bar Associations of the country, challenged the action of filing the Reference by the President and also the proceedings commenced on the basis thereof before the Council by invoking the original jurisdiction of this Court through constitution petitions filed under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. The constitution petitions were allowed by this Court vide order dated 19 June 2020, detailed reasons whereof were delivered on 23 October 2020. The Court quashed the Reference filed against the petitioner and held that the process adopted in preparing the Reference was fraught with illegalities of such scale and degree that amounted to mala fide in law[1] and declared that the proceedings initiated by the Council on the basis of that Reference, stood abated.[2] The Court left the matter of its alleged violation of section 116(1)(b) of the I.T.O. by Justice Isa to be determined in the first instance by the hierarchy of the concerned legal forums specified under the ITO. However, the Court, on its own, went on and directed the Commissioner of Inland Revenue, Islamabad ("Tax Commissioner") to initiate proceedings against the family members of Justice Isa [but not against Justice Isa], under the ITO and directed the Chairman, Federal Board of Revenue ("FBR"), to submit a report regarding the determination made in those proceedings by the Tax Commissioner to the Secretary, Council. The Secretary, Council was directed to place the said report before the Chairman, Council and the Chairman, Council to lay it before the Council, and the Council was asked to consider it in the matter of Justice Isa, in exercise of its suo motu powers, as it may deem appropriate. A strict time-frame was also given for immediate compliance of each step of the impugned directions. The impugned directions are reproduced here for ready reference:

Impugned directions

4. Within 7 days of this Order, the concerned Commissioner of Inland Revenue shall himself (and not some other officer exercising delegated powers) issue appropriate notices under the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("2001 Ordinance") to the spouse and children of the Petitioner to offer an explanation regarding the nature and source of the funds (separately for each property) whereby the three properties in the United Kingdom (viz., No. 40, Oakdale Road, London E11 4DL; No. 90, Adelaide Road, London E10 5NW; and No. 50, Coniston Court, Kendal Street, London W2 2AN) that are in the names of the spouse and the children were acquired. For purposes of this Order the Commissioner Inland Revenue having jurisdiction over the spouse of the Petitioner (who must be a Commissioner exercising jurisdiction and performing functions at Islamabad) shall be deemed also to be the Commissioner having jurisdiction over the children. (The spouse and children are herein after referred to as "the respondents".) Any notices issued or proceedings taken (or proposed to be issued or taken) under the 2001 Ordinance in relation to any of the respondents in respect, or on account, of the properties aforesaid prior to the date of this Order stand terminated forthwith.
5. The notices shall be served at the official residence of the Petitioner at Islamabad through courier service and such other means as may be considered appropriate and shall be deemed served on the respondents when received at the said address.
6. The respondents shall furnish their replies to the notices along with such material and record as is deemed appropriate. In case any of them is outside the country, it shall be the responsibility of such person to timely file a response, and the proceedings before the Commissioner shall not be adjourned or delayed for the reason of nonavailability in Pakistan of such person.
7. Upon receipt of the replies (and of such additional material/ record as may be filed in response to such clarification or explanation, if any, as the Commissioner may, in writing, have sought), the Commissioner shall give an opportunity of hearing to the respondents in person or through an authorized representative/ counsel and shall thereupon make an order in accordance with the 2001 Ordinance.

8. The proceedings shall be concluded before the Commissioner within 60 days of the date of receipt of the notices as aforesaid, and the order shall be issued by him within 75 days of the said date of receipt, and no adjournment or extension in time whatso-ever shall be given as affects or extends the aforesaid periods.

9. Within 7 days of the issuance of the order by the Commissioner, the Chairman, Federal Board of Revenue ("FBR") shall submit a report (to be personally signed by him) to the Council through its Secretary (i.e., the Registrar of the Supreme Court) regarding the proceedings as aforesaid, appending thereto the entire record of the said proceedings. The Secretary shall forthwith place such report before the Chairman of the Council (i.e., the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan) who shall, in such manner as is deemed appropriate, have the report laid before the Council for such perusal, consideration, action, order or proceedings, if any, in relation to the Petitioner as the Council may determine. The receipt of the report, the laying of it before the Council and the action/ proceedings, if any, or orders or directions, if any, as may be taken, made or given by the Council thereon shall be deemed, for purposes of Article 209 of the Constitution, to be in exercise of the suo motu jurisdiction as is conferred by that Article on the Council.

10. If, within 100 days from the date of this Order, no report as aforesaid is received by the Secretary from the Chairman, FBR, he shall inform the Chairman of the Council accordingly and shall, if so directed by him, write to the Chairman, FBR requiring an explanation as to why the report has not been received. If in reply the report is filed, then the matter shall proceed in terms of para 9 herein above. If a reply is received without the report or no reply is received, then the Secretary shall bring such fact to the attention of the Chairman of the Council who may direct that the matter be placed before the Council for such perusal, consideration, action, order or proceedings, if any, in relation to the Petitioner (or any other person as deemed appropriate) as the Council may determine. The action/ proceedings, if any, or orders or directions, if any, as may be taken, made or given by the Council shall be deemed, for purposes of Article 209 of the Constitution, to be in exercise of the suo motu jurisdiction as is conferred by that Article on the Council. Without prejudice to the foregoing, if at any stage the report is received from the Chairman, FBR, then the matter shall in any case proceed (or be deemed to proceed, as the case may be) in terms of para 9 herein above.

11. For the removal of any doubts, it is clarified that any of the proceedings under the 2001 Ordinance as herein contemplated on the one hand, and before the Council in terms of paras 9 or 10 herein above on the other, are distinct and separate from each other. Accordingly, nothing contained in this Order shall affect or prejudice the right(s) of appeal of any of the respondents under the 2001 Ordinance, if they feel aggrieved by the order made by the Commissioner or (as the case may be) any order made or decision taken at any appellate stage. Any such appeal(s) shall be decided on the merits, in accordance with the 2001 Ordinance. At the same time (and needless to say), the consideration by the Council of any matter placed before it under either paras 9 or 10 herein above shall not be affected by the filing or pendency of any appeal as aforesaid. But the Council may, if it deems appropriate, notice such appellate proceedings or orders/ decisions and may (for purposes only of the matter before it) make such orders or give such directions in relation thereto as it deems appropriate.

It is against these directions of the Court that Mrs. Isa ("petitioner"), the spouse of Justice Isa and other petitioners, namely, Justice Isa, the Bar Councils, Bar Associations and others, in whose constitution petitions these directions were made, have filed the present review petitions. It may be important to mention that we have treated Mrs. Isa as the main petitioner in the present review proceedings, because the contentions made, during arguments before us, mainly related to the contravention of her rights under the Constitution, law, and principles of natural justice, fair trial and due process.

Contentions of the parties

4. The petitioners, Mrs. Isa and Justice Isa, have appeared and argued in person, while the other petitioners have been represented through their learned counsel. They have mainly contended that: (i) the impugned directions have been made in contravention of the provisions of the ITO, particularly that of section 122 thereof, thereby infringing rights vested in the petitioner after lapse of the prescribed time-period for making amendment in the tax assessment order; (ii) the Tax Commissioner, Islamabad has no jurisdiction to proceed in the tax matter of the petitioner; (iii) the impugned directions have conferred such power and jurisdiction on the Tax Commissioner which are not vested in him by law; (iii) the impugned directions have been made in violation of the right of the petitioner to be heard before taking any adverse action against her - a basic principle of natural justice; (iv) the impugned directions have been made in breach of her fundamental right to fair trial and due process guaranteed by Article 10A of the Constitution and of her constitutional right to be dealt in accordance with law guaranteed by Article 4 of the Constitution; (v) the impugned directions have referred the tax matter of the petitioner, an independent person, to the Council for action against her spouse, Justice Isa, without his having any concern in her tax matters: Justice Isa cannot be held liable to account for alleged tax-evasion (if any) by her independent spouse, under any law of the land or under any clause in the Code of Conduct prescribed for Judges of the constitutional courts; (vi) this Court could not have issued any direction to the Council to exercise its suo motu jurisdiction; (vii) the impugned directions have been made against the Constitution, law and principles of natural justice, and are therefore liable to be recalled in exercise of review jurisdiction; and (vi) any proceedings taken and order passed by the Tax Commissioner and any action made by the Chairman FBR, of preparing and sending any report to the Council being a superstructure built on illegal and void impugned directions are also liable to be quashed.

5. Two learned Additional Attorneys-General have appeared before the Court on behalf of some of the respondents, namely, President of Pakistan, Federal Government, Prime Minister of Pakistan and Attorney-General for Pakistan ("contesting respondents") and opposed the review petitions, supporting the impugned directions. Rest of the respondents have not opted to appear and oppose the review petitions. Learned Additional Attorneys-General, to rebut the contentions of the petitioners, have submitted that: (i) the impugned directions do not comprise any adverse order against the petitioner, Mrs. Isa; therefore, there was no legal necessity to give her a hearing, as the Court has directed the Tax Commissioner to proceed against her in accordance with the law, i.e., the ITO; (ii) the Court has not, by the impugned directions, determined any civil right and obligation or any criminal charge against the petitioner; therefore, her fundamental right to fair trial and due process guaranteed by Article 10A of the Constitution has not been infringed by the impugned directions; (iii) the petitioner was provided with hearing on 18 June 2020 when the Court heard her on video link, before making the impugned directions on 19 June 2020; therefore, there has not been any violation of the principle of natural justice; (iv) the Court has directed the Tax Commissioner to proceed against the petitioner in accordance with law; therefore, constitutional right of the petitioner to be dealt in accordance with law guaranteed by Article 4 of the Constitution has not thereby been violated; (v) the public servants, including the Judges, are answerable to their disciplinary authorities for the unaccounted for assets of their spouses and children; therefore, the Court has legally and properly ordered for reporting the results of the proceedings to be conducted by the Tax Commissioner regarding the foreign properties of the petitioner, to the Council; (vi) the Court has not directed the Council to proceed against Justice Isa necessarily, rather has left it to the discretion of the Council to take such action or proceedings as deemed appropriate by the Council; (vii) the impugned directions have lawfully been made by the Court in exercise of its powers under Article 187 of the Constitution for doing complete justice; (viii) there is no apparent error in the impugned directions; therefore, they cannot be recalled within the limited scope of the review jurisdiction; and (ix) the Tax Commissioner could have, on his own, taken all such proceedings against the petitioner which have been directed to be taken by the Court in the impugned directions; therefore, the proceedings conducted and order made by the Tax Commissioner under the ITO against the petitioner cannot be quashed even if the impugned directions are recalled.

6. We have considered the arguments of the parties, gone through the case law referred and perused the record of the case minutely.

Judicial power of dissenting Judges in review jurisdiction

7. As two of us (Maqbool Baqar and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ.) and our learned brother, Yahya Afridi, J., earlier delivered dissenting opinions to the extent of making the impugned directions, we consider it appropriate to briefly state, at the very outset, our understanding of the judicial power to be exercised by the dissenting Judges in review jurisdiction. Needless to mention that the dissenting Judges on the Bench that heard the case, subject to their availability, are necessary members of the Bench constituted to hear review petition filed against the majority judgment, i.e., judgment of the Court,[3] in particular, when the Bench that first heard the case was a specially constituted Bench for hearing that case.

8. Review jurisdiction is conferred on this Court by Article 188 of the Constitution, which states that the "Supreme Court shall have power, subject to the provisions of any Act of Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament) and of any rules made by the Supreme Court, to review any judgment pronounced or any order made by it." The phrase "any judgment pronounced or any order made by it" used in the Article unambiguously means "judgment or order of the Court." In case of a split decision (where there is dissent by one or more members of the Bench), the majority judgment is the judgment of the Supreme Court in terms of Article 188. While the majority and minority views of the judgment become part of the jurisprudence, to be read, analyzed and applied in future, it is the majority view, at the time, that attains the status of the judgment of the Court.

9. The Judgment of the Court is characterized as the judgment of the entire Bench, rather than of the majority judges. The entire Bench means the full numeric strength of the Bench, including the dissenting judges. For instance, if a case is decided by a 4-3 majority of a 7 member Bench, the judgment of the majority of 4 members, which becomes the judgment of the Court, is considered to be the judgment of a 7 member Bench of the Court, and not of a 4 member Bench. Any principle of law enunciated in such majority judgment of 4 members cannot be overruled in any other case by a unanimous decision of a 5, 6, or even 7 member Bench; this can be done only by a Bench larger than a 7 member Bench. Conversely, any principle of law enunciated in the unanimous judgment of a 5 member Bench can be overruled by majority of only 4 members sitting in a 6 or 7 member Bench. The extent of the judicial power of the members of a Bench in this regard is thus dependent upon the total numeric strength of the Bench.[4] In the present case, irrespective of the dissenting opinions of three members of the Bench, on the impugned directions, the majority judgment of the Court is to be considered to be a 10-member Bench judgment. For the purpose of exercising review jurisdiction under Article 188, the judgment of the Court (10-member Bench judgment) is under review, and the internal difference of opinion between members of the Bench in majority and minority is not relevant.

10. As the judgment of the Court is considered to be the judgment of all the members of that Bench, irrespective of its being majority judgment or unanimous judgment, there can be no difference in judicial powers of the members who earlier delivered the majority or minority judgment while hearing the review petition, under Article 188 of the Constitution, against the judgment of the Court, i.e., the majority judgment. This is because the judgment of the Court is under review and not the view of the majority judges. There is nothing in the Constitution or the Supreme Court Rules 1980 that restricts the judicial power of dissenting Judges in review jurisdiction in comparison to that of the Judges who delivered the majority judgment. The dissenting Judges, subject to their availability, being necessary members of the review Bench possess the same judicial power as that of the other members of the Bench.[5] The Judge whose opinion remained the minority view in the main case is as empowered to review the judgment of the Court, as can a Judge who delivered the majority opinion. This is because under the review jurisdiction the judges enjoy the flexibility to change their view, they might continue to hold or reverse their earlier view and thus subscribe to either the earlier majority or minority view. Adjudication is a deliberative process and the power of review, within its limited scope, allows the judge to reconsider his earlier opinion. Hence, there can be no fetters on the exercise of his judicial power as that would offend the fundamental constitutional value of independence of the judiciary.

11. We may, however, underline the distinction between the revisiting of a principle of law enunciated in a judgment delivered in one case by a larger Bench of this Court in any other case and the review of its own judgment by a Bench of this Court in the same case: in the latter situation, the review Bench with the same Judges, if available, and with the same numeric strength can review, within the scope of its review jurisdiction, any part of its judgment including any principle of law enunciated therein.

Grounds of review

12. Rule 1 of Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 provides that subject to the law and the practice of the Court, the Court may review its judgment or order in a Civil proceeding on grounds similar to those mentioned in Order XLVII, Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 and in a criminal proceeding on the ground of an error apparent on the face of the record. Under Order XLVII, Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, there are three grounds of review: (i) the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within knowledge of the applicant or could not be produced by him at the time when the judgment was pronounced or order made, (ii) some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, and (iii) any other sufficient reason. These grounds of review are, in fact, limitations on the power of review of this Court.

13. With this understanding that all members of the Bench (10 members) enjoy equal judicial power in review jurisdiction, we approach the three core questions involved in the present review petitions, in the light of the respective contentions of the parties.

Questions for determination

14. The core questions that arise out of the contentions of the parties, for our determination are:

i. Whether the directions contained in paragraphs 4 to 11 of the order dated 19 June 2020[6] ("impugned directions"), supported by the detailed reasons of the majority judgment delivered on 23 October 2020,[7] ("judgment under review") have been made by the Court without adhering to the principles of natural justice, fair trial and due process and by contravening the relevant provisions of the law and the Constitution;

ii. If the impugned directions are found to have been so made, whether they can be recalled in exercise, and within the scope, of review jurisdiction; and

iii. If the impugned directions are recalled, what will be the legal status and effect of any proceedings taken, orders passed or actions made in pursuance of those directions?

Question (i) as to constitutionality and legality of the impugned directions

15. This Court as back as in the year 1959 held in Chief Commissioner v. Dina Sohrab[8] that "it cannot be disputed that it is a principle of natural justice that no one should be dealt with to his material disadvantage or deprived of liberty or property without having an opportunity of being heard and making his defence", and later observed in Aman Ullah v. Federal Government[9] that "whenever a hearing has been provided it has to be meaningful." We are, therefore, to determine whether, in the present case, the impugned directions have the effect of causing any "material disadvantage" to the petitioner, Mrs. Isa, and whether a fair and "meaningful hearing" was given to her before making the impugned directions.

(a) Direction for tax proceedings against the petitioner and "material disadvantage" to her

14(sic). The petitioner has argued that the impugned directions affected her rights that had vested in her after lapse of the period prescribed under the ITO for issuing, or making amendment in, the tax assessment order; therefore, such directions could not have been issued without giving her an opportunity of fair hearing to put forth and explain her case against the issuance of such directions. She has submitted that under the ITO, the Tax Commissioner could not have issued any notice to her to explain her income, and make any assessment order for payment of tax against her, after lapse of a period of five years from the end of the tax year to which that income relates. The learned Additional Attorneys-General, opposing the contentions of the petitioners, submitted that the Court has, by the impugned directions, directed the Tax Commissioner to proceed against the petitioner in accordance with the law, i.e., the ITO, and has not made any adverse order against the petitioner; therefore, it was not necessary to provide an opportunity of hearing to the petitioner before making the impugned directions.

16. A plain reading of the relevant provisions of the ITO, i.e., sections 114, 116, 120, 121 and 122, shows that section 114 of the ITO requires certain specified persons to furnish a return of their income for a tax year, accompanied with, inter alia, evidence of payment of tax due as per return of income and a wealth statement as required under Section 116. It also authorizes the Tax Commissioner to require, by notice in writing, any person who, in his opinion, is required to file a return of income for a tax year but who has failed to do so, to furnish a return of income for that year, in respect of one or more of the last five completed tax years. The Tax Commissioner can, under Section 120, make any adjustment in the income tax return filed by a taxpayer within six months of filing of return, or issue notice to the taxpayer informing him of the deficiencies in the tax return and directing him to provide any information, particulars, statement or documents till the expiry of one hundred and eighty days from the end of the financial year (six months) in which return was furnished. If no such adjustment is made or no such notice is issued within the prescribed period (six months), the income tax return filed by the taxpayer is treated to be complete and the assessment of due tax made by the taxpayer is deemed to be the assessment made by the Tax Commissioner. Under Section 121, the Tax Commissioner can by himself issue the tax assessment order for a tax year within a period of five years after the end of that tax year if the taxpayer has not filed the income tax return of that year. While under Section 122, he can amend a tax assessment order treated as such under Section 120 or a tax assessment order issued under Section 121 within a period of five years from the end of the financial year in which he has issued or treated to have issued the tax assessment order to the taxpayer.

17. The foreign properties were purchased, in the present case, by the petitioner and her children in the years 2004 and 2013; their income and sources to purchase those properties obviously relate to those years or the years prior thereto. When this Court made the impugned directions to the Tax Commissioner on 19 June 2020, a period of more than five years had lapsed since the end of those tax years to which their income and sources of fund for purchase of those properties relate. Therefore, the impugned directions, prima facie, affected the vested right of the petitioner, as this Court has, in several cases,[10] held that after the expiry of the statutory period a vested right accrues to the taxpayer that his assessment will not be reopened.

18. The bar of time-limit within which an assessment can be amended under Section 122 of the ITO, as held by this Court in Commissioner of Income Tax v. Eli Lilly Ltd.,[11] is a statutory recognition of the protection against arbitrary power of reopening or amending a tax assessment after the expiry of the prescribed period. This statutory bar vests a right in the taxpayer that after efflux of the prescribed period, his tax assessment will not be reopened or amended. The power conferred by Section 122 on the Tax Commissioner, having the potential of adding to the tax liability of the taxpayer, is more substantive than procedural; therefore, even any legislative amendment in the time-period prescribed in that Section cannot be applied retrospectively unless the Legislature gives that amendment retrospective effect by express words or necessary implication. Thus, there cannot be any cavil to the proposition that the Court cannot undo the statutory bar of time-limit provided in Section 122 of the ITO by its order or direction. The submission of the contesting respondents that the impugned directions cannot be termed as an adverse order against the petitioner is, therefore, not valid.

19. This Court has persistently reiterated the well-established principle that the courts cannot and should not create any right, liability or obligation that is not founded in law. One may refer to the case of the State v. Ziaur Rehman[12], in this regard. This principle is applied in the realm of taxation with even greater force, and thus while construing taxing statutes the language used, as held in Yousaf Rerolling Mills v. Collector of Customs,[13] is not to be either stretched in favour of the State, or narrowed in favour of the taxpayer. While interpreting tax laws Courts must look to the words of the statute and interpret it in light of what is clearly expressed and, in the words of Rowlett J. in Brady Syndicate v. Land Revenue Commissioner[14] quoted by Hamoodur Rehman, J. in Nawabzada Amir Khan v. Collector of Estate Duty[15],

"in a taxing Act, one has to look merely at what is clearly said. There is no room for any intendment. There is no equity about a tax. There is no presumption as to a tax. Nothing is to be read in, nothing is to be implied. One can only look fairly at the language used."

20. The submission of the contesting respondents that the Court directed the Tax Commissioner to proceed against the petitioner in accordance with the provisions of the ITO, and not otherwise, also appears incorrect. Had the Court directed the Tax Commissioner to issue notice to the petitioner after ascertaining his authority to do so under the ITO with the expression that "the Tax Commissioner shall, subject to the provisions of the ITO, issue notice to the petitioner", the submission of the contesting respondents might have carried weight. But the impugned directions did not leave any option with the Tax Commissioner to consider his legal authority before initiating proceedings in the tax matter of the petitioner. Further, it was admittedly the Tax Commissioner, Karachi who had the jurisdiction, under Section 209 of the ITO, to proceed in respect of the income tax returns filed by the petitioner, but the impugned directions mandated the Tax Commissioner, Islamabad to proceed in the matter. And it was only after the impugned directions that the FBR transferred the cases of the petitioner and of her children to the Tax Commissioner, Islamabad vide its order dated 25-06-2020. The impugned directions have, thus, affected the vested right of the petitioner which have accrued to her after lapse of the period prescribed under Sections 121 and 122 of the ITO for issuing, or making amendment in, the tax assessment order and have the effect of causing "material disadvantage" to the petitioner. Therefore, it was necessary to provide her a fair and "meaningful hearing" before making the impugned directions. Whether she was provided with such a "hearing" is the question, which we address hereunder.

(b) Hearing of the petitioner on video-link and the right of hearing.

21. The contesting respondents have submitted that the petitioner was provided with a hearing on 18 June 2020 when the Court heard her via video-link from her residence, before making the impugned directions on 19 June 2020, while the petitioner has argued that her voluntary statement made through video-link does not constitute a "meaningful hearing" that justifies the making of the impugned directions against her. To decide whether a fair and meaningful hearing was given to the petitioner before making the impugned directions, it is necessary to know: What does a fair hearing envisage? And what are the necessary requirements so that a hearing may be said to be fair and meaningful?

(c) Essential constituents of a fair hearing

22. The right of hearing is one of the basic principles of natural justice, expressed in the maxim audi alteram partem, i.e., no one is to be condemned unheard (right to be heard). The principles of natural justice aim to secure justice or to prevent miscarriage of justice. Lord Denning, speaking for the Privy Council in Kanada v. Government of Malaya,[16] described the two necessary characteristics of the right of hearing thus: "If the right to be heard is to be a real right which is worth anything, it must carry with it a right in the accused man to know the case which is made against him. He must know what evidence is given and what statements have been made affecting him; and then he must be given a fair opportunity to correct or contradict them...It follows, of course, that the Judge or whoever has to adjudicate must not hear evidence or receive representations from one side behind the back of the other." Lord Morris reiterated and re-emphasized these essential requirements of the right of hearing in Ridge v. Baldwin.[17] His lordship said: "It is well-established that the essential requirements of natural justice at least include that before someone is condemned he is to have an opportunity of defending himself and in order that he may do so that he is to be made aware of the charges or allegations or suggestions which he has to meet... here is something which is basic to our system: the importance of upholding it far transcend the significance of any particular case."

23. Justice Muhammad Afzal Zullah, speaking for this Court in Pakistan v. Public at large[18] referred to various injunctions of Islam and instances contained in the Holy Quran and Sunnah of the Holy Prophet (PBUH) and observed: "Right to property and honour, in addition to life, were also declared sacred which means: not only that their violation is to be punished and/or compensated but also that it is to be prevented... All this cannot be possible without a notice and opportunity of hearing. The denial of these safeguards for doing justice would amount to Zulm [injustice] and Ziaditi [wrong doing] against oneself as also the victim... Command [of hearing the arguments of both parties] is specific to the effect that when a public authority is to be exercised for resolving a controversy regarding rights and liabilities, the decision would not be rendered without proceedings in which the person affected is also afforded an opportunity of hearing...It is common principle which governs the administration of justice in Islam that in case of liability with penal or quasi-penal consequences and/or deprivation of basic rights a notice as well as an opportunity of hearing, are of absolute necessity. This by itself has to be recognized as a basic right."[19]

24. Justice Sarkaria of the Indian Supreme Court also described these two facets of the rule as to right of hearing as "universally respected" in Swadeshi Cotton Mills v. Union of India.[20] He observed that the "maxim audi alteram partem has many facets. Two of them are: (a) notice of the case to be met; and (b) opportunity to explain. This rule is universally respected and duty to afford a fair hearing in Lord Loreburn's oft-quoted language, is 'a duty lying upon everyone who decides something', in the exercise of legal power. The rule cannot be sacrificed at the altar of administrative convenience or celerity; for, 'convenience and justice' -as Lord Atkin felicitously put it- 'are often not on speaking terms'."[21]

25. Thus, the general consensus of judicial opinions, as noted by this Court in University of Dacca v. Zakir Ahmed,[22] seems to be that to ensure the principle of fairness embedded in the right of hearing, the person sought to be affected must at least: (i) be made aware of the allegations made against him, upon which basis the decision is to follow, (i.e., notice of the case to be met) and (ii) be given a fair opportunity to make any relevant statement putting forward his own case, and to correct or controvert any relevant statement brought forward to his prejudice (i.e., opportunity to explain). In other words, in order to act justly and to reach at just ends by just means, a deciding authority is to comply with and implement, in all circumstances, these elementary and essential requirements of principle of fairness and right of hearing. As Lawton, L.J. said in Maxwell v. Department of Trade[23] that "doing what is right may still result in unfairness if it is done in the wrong way".

(d) Status of hearing petitioner on video-link before making impugned directions

26. In the light of the elementary and essential requirements for the fulfillment of the right of hearing, namely, (i) notice of the case to be met and (ii) opportunity to explain, we proceed to examine whether, in the present case, these essential requirements of right of hearing were complied with by providing the petitioner an opportunity of hearing on video-link, before making the impugned directions.

27. The Constitution Petition No. 17 of 2019 wherein the impugned directions have been made was filed by Justice Isa on 7 August 2019 and decided by the Court on 19 June 2020. On 17 June 2020, when concluding arguments of the respondents were being heard, Justice Isa appeared in person, for the first time, in Court and verbally conveyed the request of his spouse desiring to make a statement in Court on video link. The said request was allowed by the Court on 18 June 2020, and on the same day at 4:00 p.m. she addressed the Court via video-link from her residence and made her statement. The recording of her said statement was made and the transcript thereof was also prepared only for perusal of the Members of the Bench under order of the Hon'ble Senior Member of the Bench, the master and in-charge of the orderly conduct of court-proceedings. On the next day, i.e., 19 June 2020, the constitution petitions were decided and the impugned directions were made in the short order of the Court.

28. We have very carefully read the transcript of her statement as well as of the observations made by the Hon'ble Senior Member of the Bench. We do not find in it that his lordship or any other Hon'ble Member of the Bench asked her whether she had anything to say if the Court would direct the tax authorities to inquire into her sources of fund whereby she had purchased the foreign properties, and to conduct proceedings for determining her tax liability regarding those properties under the ITO. She was not informed of the action the Court was contemplating to take, nor was she given a chance to state her stance on that. Thus, she was not given "notice of the case to be met", nor was she provided with an "opportunity to explain" why the Court should not make such directions. Both the very essential requirements of right of hearing were not complied with before making the impugned directions. Hearing the petitioner on 18 June 2020 by the Court on video-link before making the impugned directions on 19 June 2020, therefore, cannot be said to be a fair and "meaningful hearing" in the context of making the impugned directions. While the independent, adult and married children of the petitioner (her son and daughter) were not heard at all, before making the impugned directions that related to and affected them also. The impugned directions must have come as a surprise to the petitioner and her children.

(e) Effect of violation of right of hearing (principle of audi alteram partem)

29. This Court has time and again reiterated[24] that even in absence of any express provision in the statute, the principle of audi alteram partem is to be read into the relevant provision and applies in proceedings where adverse action is being considered to be taken against a person or if the contemplated action is going to affect any of his vested rights. The violation of this principle vitiates the proceedings and makes the action taken therein to be illegal, as the violation of this principle is considered as a violation of law.[25]

(f) Right of hearing and Article 10A of the Constitution

30. It may be pertinent to highlight here that after the insertion of Article 10A in the Constitution, "right of hearing" being a necessary component of "fair trial" and "due process" has become a fundamental right and is now to be read into every statute enacted by the Legislature by force of the constitutional provision, which was earlier so read because of the judicial pronouncements. Article 10A is cited here for ready reference:

10A-Right to fair trial

For the determination of his civil rights and obligations or in any criminal charge against him a person shall be entitled to a fair trial and due process.

The expression "civil rights and obligations" used in Article 10A is of wide and expansive amplitude: it covers everything that has civil consequences. And "civil consequences", in the words of Lord Denning,[26] "cover infraction of not merely property or personal rights but of civil liberties, material deprivations and non-pecuniary damages. In its comprehensive connotation, everything that affects a citizen in his civil life inflicts a civil consequence." The petitioner, in the present case, was deprived of her vested right by the impugned directions, without providing her an opportunity of fair and meaningful hearing, i.e., by giving her notice of the contemplated action (the impugned directions) and opportunity to explain why such action (the impugned directions) should not be made. The impugned directions are, therefore, vitiated on this ground.

(g) Right of petitioner (spouse of a Judge) to be dealt with in accordance with law

31. We feel constrained to observe that the petitioner cannot be penalized and deprived of her constitutional right to be dealt with in accordance with law merely because she is the spouse of a Judge and action against her would establish the impartiality of the Court. We believe that public confidence in the impartiality and fairness of the court-process can be achieved only when Judges decide the matters presented before them against all persons, whosoever they may be, in accordance with law without fear or favour. Judges are under oath to discharge their duties and perform their functions, honestly to the best of their ability and faithfully in accordance with the Constitution and the law, and to do in all circumstances, right to all manner of people according to law without fear or favor, affection or ill-will. They cannot deviate from their solemn oath even if any popular action taken otherwise than in accordance with law helps paint the image of the Court in better light. Judges are to decide in accordance with law and protect the fundamental rights rather than sacrifice these constitutional rights at the altar of expediency and image building of the Court.

(h) Scope of the powers under Article 187(1) of the Constitution

32. The learned Additional Attorneys-General have attempted to support the impugned directions by making reference to the provision of Article 187(1) of the Constitution also. They have submitted that this Court, under the said constitutional provision, can issue any direction for doing complete justice. The petitioners have opposed it with the contention that no reference to Article 187(1) of the Constitution was made by the Court for making the impugned directions, therefore, the same cannot be treated to have been issued under that provision of the Constitution. They have further submitted that even under the said

Article, the Court could not have made the impugned directions in breach of the right of hearing of the petitioner, Mrs. Isa, and conferred such authority and jurisdiction on the Tax Commissioner which he did not have under the ITO.

33. So far as the contention of the petitioners that no reference to Article 187(1) of the Constitution was made by the Court for issuing the impugned directions, therefore, the same cannot be treated to have been issued under the said Article is concerned, we do not find it tenable. If this Court is found to have power to issue the impugned directions under Article 187(1) of the Constitution, the express mentioning of that Article while making the impugned directions was not necessary. We are, therefore, to see only whether this Court could have issued the impugned directions under Article 187(1) of the Constitution. We consider it proper to reproduce the provisions of Article 187(1) of the Constitution, for ease of reference, before appreciating the respective submissions of the parties on it:

Article 187(1):

Subject to clause (2) of Article 175, the Supreme Court shall have power to issue such directions, orders or decrees as may be necessary for doing complete justice in any case or matter pending before it, including an order for the purpose of securing the attendance of any person or the discovery or production of any document.

No doubt, this Court has been conferred, under Article 187(1) of the Constitution, very vast power to issue "such directions, orders or decrees as may be necessary for doing complete justice in any case or matter pending before it", but the Court ordinarily issues such directions, orders or decrees, under Article 187, which are consequential or incidental to the matter adjudicated upon by the Court or to the relief prayed for by the parties.

34. The question that needs consideration, in the present case, however is whether the Court can issue any direction, order or decree against a person, under this Article, in contravention of provisions of some law. After deep deliberation, we find that the Court cannot do so. The main reason for our reaching this conclusion is that as per Article 4 of the Constitution, to enjoy the protection of law and to be treated in accordance with law is the inalienable right of every person, and no action detrimental to the life, liberty, body, reputation or property of any person can be taken except in accordance with law. The right to be dealt with in accordance with law assured by Article 4 of the Constitution stands at a high pedestal and even outshines fundamental rights guaranteed by Articles 9 to 28 of the Constitution, as this right cannot be suspended during the proclamation and imposition of Emergency under Article 233 of the Constitution.[27] Article 4 of the Constitution is the bedrock of the rule of law, and antithesis to the rule of men, in our country. It is a restraint on the executive and judicial organs of the State to abide by the rule of law.[28] No person, authority, tribunal or court exercising executive or judicial powers can take any action against any person in contravention of any law. There is no exception to this principle, which equally applies to this Court exercising its judicial powers, including the power under Article 187(1) of the Constitution. Under the said Article, the Court can pass any order to do complete justice between the parties; however, it cannot make an order inconsistent with the fundamental rights or in contravention of any constitutional provision or any relevant statutory law.[29]

35. The Tax Commissioner, Islamabad had no territorial jurisdiction under Section 209 of the ITO and no authority and power to issue a tax assessment order under Section 121 or to amend a tax assessment order under Section 122 for a tax year after lapse of a period of five years from the end of that tax year, against the petitioner. The impugned directions mandated him to do that which he could not have done under the law, i.e., the ITO. Needless to mention, that if an Authority has no jurisdiction in the matter under the law, the jurisdiction cannot be conferred on that Authority by an order of the Court;[30] but the impugned directions had the effect of doing so. The Tax Commissioner could not have proceeded after lapse of the statutory period, against any other person; the petitioner has, it appears, been discriminated and deprived of her fundamental right to equality before law and equal protection of law guaranteed under Article 25 of the Constitution, by the impugned directions, in addition to negation of her right of hearing enshrined in fundamental right to "fair trial" and "due process" guaranteed under Article 10A and constitutional right to be dealt with in accordance with law guaranteed by Article 4 of the Constitution. We, therefore, find that the impugned directions could not have been made by this Court in exercise of its power under Article 187(1) of the Constitution.

(i) Constitutionality of referring the matter to the Supreme Judicial Council for exercise of its suo motu power

36. As to referring the result of tax proceedings to be conducted against the petitioner, through report of the Chairman FBR, to the Council for considering suo motu action against Justice Isa, the petitioners have contended that the tax matter of the petitioner, an independent person, could not have been referred to the Council for action against her spouse, Justice Isa, without his having any concern in her tax matters; that Justice Isa cannot be held liable to account for alleged tax-evasion (if any) by her independent spouse, under any law of the land or under any clause in the Code of Conduct prescribed for Judges of superior Courts; and that this Court could not have issued any direction to the Council to exercise its suo motu jurisdiction. On the other hand, the contesting respondents have submitted that the public servants, including the Judges, are answerable to their disciplinary authorities for the unaccounted for assets of their spouses and children, therefore, the Court has legally and properly ordered for reporting the results of the proceedings to be conducted by the Tax Commissioner regarding the foreign properties of the petitioner, to the Council; and that the Court has not directed the Council to proceed against Justice Isa necessarily, rather has left it to the discretion of the Council to take such action as deemed appropriate by it.

37. We have considered the respective contentions of the parties on this point carefully. We agree with the submission of the contesting respondents that this Court did not direct the Council to proceed against Justice Isa necessarily, rather left it to the discretion of the Council to take such action as deemed appropriate by the Council, but the question is whether any law or any clause in the Code of Conduct prescribed for Judges of superior Courts makes the Judges liable to account for the alleged tax-evasion (if any) by his or her independent spouse. No such law or clause in the Code of Conduct has been referred to us, during arguments. We, therefore, find the answer to the said question clearly in the negative.

38. The petitioner, Mrs. Isa, and her children being private citizens, their tax matters had no nexus with the essential pre-requisite for invoking and maintaining any proceedings in the original jurisdiction of the Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, and were thus not amenable to the jurisdiction that was invoked and exercised thereunder through the short order dated 19.06.2020. Further, the tax matter of the petitioner, Mrs. Isa, could not have been referred to the Council as the role and jurisdiction of the Council is limited to the matters relating to the conduct and capability of the superior Court Judges. It is not mandated to delve into the affairs of someone who is not a judge of a superior Court. The impugned directions tend to stretch the scope of jurisdiction of the Council beyond the constitutional mandate and vest in the Council the jurisdiction and authority not granted to it by the Constitution.

39. The impugned directions also create an anomalous situation as they provide that the proceedings before the Council, as contemplated thereby, shall not be effected by the filing or pendency of any appeal under the ITO against the order/report of the Tax Commissioner, or against any order made or decision taken at any appellate stage. If in the event the Council, on the basis of the report submitted by the Chairman FBR in pursuance of the impugned directions, recommends removal of Justice Isa, but subsequently Mrs Isa, succeeds in her challenge to the order of the Tax Commissioner, and the said order is found not sustainable, the time for the retrieval may have passed as by then Justice Isa may have reached the age of superannuation. The injury inflicted upon Justice Isa and the damage suffered by this institution will thus be irretrievable. In a reverse scenario where the Council may not agree with the findings of the Tax Commissioner, but such findings are upheld by the forums, including this Court, before which the Tax Commissioner's findings are amenable to correction, an anomalous and embarrassing situation may occur.

(j) Obligation of a Judge as to the knowledge of financial matters of his or her financially independent family members.

40. So far as the submission of the contesting respondents is concerned, that the public servants, including the Judges, are answerable to their disciplinary authorities for the unaccounted for assets of their spouses and children. Nothing is there in any law or in the Judges' Code of Conduct which could possibly be stretched to hold a Judge liable for the conduct of his spouse and children, or for that matter of anybody else, without there being any evidence to connect him with, and hold him responsible for such conduct. Needless to remind the salutary principle of law that everybody is responsible for his own deeds or misdeeds, acts and omissions, and nobody incurs any liability on account of any wrong committed by any other person.[31]

(k) Infringement of the Independence of the Supreme Judicial Council

41. Another aspect of referring the matter to the Council by this Court for exercise of its suo motu power is that it infringes the independence of the Council. Provisions of Articles 209 and 211 of the Constitution ensure the independence of the Council: only the President of Pakistan, acting in accordance with the constitutional procedure prescribed under Article 209 read with Article 48(1), can direct the Council to inquire into the matter of alleged misconduct or incapacity of Judges of the constitutional courts, and the proceedings before the Council cannot be called in question in any court including this Court as provided in Article 211 of the Constitution except when the Council acts with mala fide (in fact or in law), without jurisdiction or coram non judice. No one before us had argued that the Council with mala fide (in fact or in law) was not performing its constitutional duty under Article 209 of the Constitution; therefore, there was no occasion for this Court to direct the Chairman, Council to place the report of the Chairman, FBR regarding decision of the Tax Commissioner in the tax matter of Mrs. Isa and ask the Council to even conduct "proceedings" to decide whether or not it will inquire into the matter of alleged misconduct against Justice Isa in exercise of its suo motu powers. To uphold the independence of judiciary and to protect the Judges of constitutional courts against unwarranted harassment and oppression, the Constitution has established and constituted the Council to proceed and inquire into the allegations of incapacity or misconduct against such Judges independent of any extraneous influence, on direction of the President or in exercise its suo motu powers. In Ikram Chaudhry v. Federation,[32] Chief Justice Ajmal Mian, a distinguished Judge of this Court, speaking for a five member Bench of this Court held:

> [Clause (5) of Article 209 of the Constitution] does not admit filing of a Constitutional petition for a direction to the Supreme Judicial Council or to the President to initiate proceedings of a judicial misconduct against a Judge of a superior Court ... This Court or a High Court cannot take upon itself the exercise to record even a tentative finding that a particular Judge has committed misconduct warranting filing of a reference against him under Article 209 of the Constitution.

Therefore, asking the Council, by the impugned directions, to conduct "proceedings" to decide whether or not it will inquire into the matter of alleged misconduct by Justice Isa in exercise of its suo motu powers is also tantamount to interference into the independent functioning of the Council and, thus, against the spirit of the provisions of Articles 209 and 211 of the Constitution.

(l) Government Servants cannot file complaints against judges directly

42. Further, we note that the impugned direction to the Chairman, FBR to submit report to the Council and asking the Council to consider that report for deciding to take any action thereon against Justice Isa have the effect of directing the Chairman, FBR to file a complaint in the Council against Justice Isa, in the form of report. The impugned directions have thus authorized the Chairman, FBR to do that which he cannot do under the Constitution and the law. He being an officer subordinate to the Federal Government cannot make any complaint against a constitutional court Judge directly to the Council; only the Federal Government can do so and that too by the constitutional process of acting through the President. If the officers of the Federal or Provincial Governments or of the autonomous bodies or authorities under the control of such Governments are allowed or empowered to file complaints concerning or emanating from their official actions against Judges of the constitutional courts who, in exercise of their constitutional jurisdiction, make judicial review of official actions and inactions of such officers, there would be disastrous consequences for the independence of judiciary. This crucial aspect could not be noticed at the time of making the impugned directions, and it vitiates that direction of the Court being against the very fundamental right of the public for which enforcement this Court entertained the constitution petitions in the present matter, i.e., the independence of judiciary.

Conclusion on question (i)

43. The above discussion, thus, leads us to conclude and answer question (i) in affirmative: the impugned directions are found to have been made by this Court without adhering to the principle of natural justice, fair trial and due process, i.e., the petitioner's right of hearing, guaranteed under Article 10A of the Constitution and without adverting to, and in contravention of, the relevant provisions of the law, i.e., Sections 114-122 and 209 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 and the scope of Article 187 in the context of Article 4 of the Constitution.

Question (ii) as to recalling impugned directions in review jurisdiction

44. It would not take long to answer this question as the extent and scope of the review jurisdiction of this Court, in the light of the relevant provisions of the Constitution and the Supreme Court Rules, is well-settled by various pronouncements of this Court. Briefly stating, the review jurisdiction is vested in this Court by Article 188 of the Constitution and is subject to the provisions of any Act of Parliament and of any rules made by this Court. The Parliament has not so far passed any Act on this subject; this Court has, however, made rules to regulate its power of review, which are contained in Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980. The relevant Rule, for present purposes, is Rule 1 of Order XXVI which states:

> Subject to the law and the practice of the Court, the Court may review its judgment or order in a civil proceeding on grounds similar to those mentioned in Order XLVII, Rule 1 of the Code [of Civil Procedure, 1908] and in a criminal proceeding on the ground of an error apparent on the face of the record.

This Rule has, subject to the law and the practice of the Court, limited the review jurisdiction of this Court in criminal proceedings to one ground only, viz, an error apparent on the face of the record, while has made reference for review in civil proceedings to the grounds mentioned in rule 1 of Order XLVII of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 which provides three grounds for review: (1) discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within knowledge of, or could not be produced by, the party seeking review at the time when the decree was passed or order made; (2) some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record; (3) or any other sufficient reason. The third ground has been interpreted by the courts to be read ejusdem generis in the context of two preceding grounds. It is notable that the ground, "error apparent on the face of the record", is common for review in both civil and criminal proceedings. In the present case, it is this ground which has been agitated for praying review of the order of the Court that contains the impugned directions. Therefore, the simple question before the Court is whether the errors identified above in making the impugned directions can be said to be the errors apparent on the face of the record.

45. The expression, "error apparent on the face of the record", as observed by Hamoodur Rehman, J. in Anwar Husain v. Province of East Pakistan[33], cannot be defined with precision or exhaustiveness, and there would always remain an element of indefiniteness inherent in its very nature. It is to be determined in each case on the basis of its own peculiar facts. Therefore, we would not attempt to define the said expression exhaustively either, and restrict ourselves to examine: whether any judgment pronounced or order made without providing a fair and meaningful hearing to the person affected thereby or without adverting to, and in contravention of, relevant provisions of law and the Constitution can be termed "an error apparent on the face of the record".

46. The Federal Court of British India held in Raja Prithwi Chand v. Sukhraj Rai[34] that the "indulgence by way of review is granted mainly owing to the natural desire to prevent irremediable injustice being done by a Court of last resort as where by some accident, without any blame, the party has not been heard and an order has been inadvertently made as if the party had been heard." We find these observations of the Federal Court very relevant to the circumstances of the present case. In the present case, we acted on the assumption that we had heard the petitioner, Mrs. Isa, on video-link on 18 June 2020 before making the impugned directions, but it has been revealed to us during hearing of the present review petitions that the said hearing did not meet even the very elementary and essential requirements of the right of hearing. This Court has held in Anisa Rehman v. P.I.A.C.[35] that the violation of principles of natural justice is equated with the violation of a provision of law, as they are to be read into the relevant provision of every statute even if not expressly incorporated therein. We may add that after recognition of the right to fair trial and due process as a fundamental right by insertion of Article 10A in the Constitution, violation of the principles of natural justice, which are the necessary components of the right to fair trial and due process, is now to be taken as a violation of the fundamental right as well. In Federation v. Nawaz Sharif,[36] this Court held that "non- hearing of petitioners is an error on the face of record meriting interference in review jurisdiction."

47. So far as any judgment pronounced or order made without adverting to, and in contravention of, the relevant provisions of law or Constitution is concerned, there is plethora of judicial opinions[37] enunciated by this Court on treating it as an error apparent on the face of the record that warrants the review of that judgment or order. We do not want to burden this judgment with reproduction of extracts from all such opinions, however, would like to narrate briefly the principles of law on which they are based, viz, their ratio decidendi.

48. The obedience to the Constitution and law is, under Article 5(2) of the Constitution, the inviolable obligation of every citizen, including the persons holding posts in the legislative, judicial or executive organs of the State. This obligation of the Judges of the constitutional courts is further emphasized by the oath they take before assuming charge of their posts, to discharge their duties and perform their functions in accordance with the Constitution and law, and to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution. Moreover, the persons whose matters are presented before them for determination also have a constitutional right to be treated in accordance with the law, guaranteed to them by Article 4 of the Constitution. Therefore, whenever Judges of these courts are pointed out, in review jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution or law, something in their judgment or order to be in conflict with the Constitution or any law of the land, it becomes their duty to unhesitatingly correct that error. Duty of the Judges of the apex Court of the country is more thoughtful and profound in this regard, as there is no other court which can correct their error, and the principles of law enunciated in their judgments are, under Article 189 of the Constitution, binding on all other courts in the country. Therefore, whenever they find that their judgment or order of which review is sought was pronounced or made without adverting to, and in contravention of, any provision of law or the Constitution, they must correct the error considering it their inviolable constitutional obligation and duty, not a favour or concession to the party seeking review.

49. In the present case, although this Court made the impugned directions in good faith to ensure the accountability of a constitutional court Judge and to uphold the public trust in the impartiality of the Court, but as these directions were made by the Court, on its own, without putting to the parties on notice, without informing them what the Court was contemplating to do and without inviting and hearing their arguments on the matters dealt with therein, the above-noted legal and constitutional aspects of the impugned directions with their ramifications were not present in the mind of the Court while making the impugned directions. If the Court had heard the arguments on the matters dealt with in the impugned directions and the legal position relating thereto had been debated and appropriately placed before it, the Court would not have made the said directions as the Court never intends to act contrary to law.

50. The impugned directions were in no way a relief consequential or incidental to the matter adjudicated upon by the Court, i.e., the constitutionality and legality of the Reference filed against Justice Isa, or to the relief prayed for by the parties, i.e., the quashing of the Reference or dismissal of the constitution petitions. The impugned directions must have come as a surprise to the parties being unexpected, as they were beyond the scope of the case before the Court, on a matter that was not debated in the course of the hearing.

51. Likewise, directing for speedier proceedings in the tax matter of Mrs. Isa to be conducted by a Tax Commissioner who had no jurisdiction to proceed in her tax matters under the law was unwarranted. The impugned directions singled out Mrs. Isa and Justice Isa for special treatment by directing initiation of proceedings into their matters by the tax authorities and the Council in accordance with a procedure that was not provided by the law and the Constitution; their fundamental right to equality before the law and equal protection of law guaranteed by Article 25 of the Constitution was thus infringed by the impugned directions.

52. This Court, in its concern to enable the early resolution of the matter, made the impugned directions without noticing the relevant provisions of the ITO and without considering the consequences of ensuring accountability of a constitutional court Judge through a procedure that is not envisioned by Article 209 of the Constitution. "To seek to be wiser than the law is the very thing by good laws forbidden."[38] However, to err is human; Judges presiding courts including the apex one are no exception. Courts are, therefore, as much human institutions as any other and share all human susceptibilities to error. Owning his mistake on realization does not diminish one's prestige or ability; it perhaps enhances both. A Judge, therefore, should not hesitate to review his decision if it is established not to be right. Because it is better to return to what is right than to clinging onto what is wrong.[39]

Conclusion on question (ii)

53. We, therefore, find no difficulty to conclude and answer question (ii) in affirmative: the impugned directions having been made without providing a fair and meaningful hearing to the petitioner, Mrs. Isa, thus violating the principle of natural justice, and without adverting to, and in contravention of, the relevant provisions of law and the Constitution, definitely fall within the scope of the well-established ground of review, namely, "error apparent on the face of the record"; thus they can be recalled by this Court in exercise of its review jurisdiction under Article 188 of the Constitution read with rule 1 of Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980. Exercising that jurisdiction, we recall the impugned directions.

Question (iii) as to legal status of actions made in pursuance of impugned directions, and conclusion on this question

54. The question is quite simple and has an easy answer. We are of the view that the answer to this question lies in the same principle on the basis of which this Court, in the judgment under review[40], declared the proceedings initiated by the Council to stand abated on quashing of the Reference filed by the President. This Court held that the show cause notice issued by the Council derived its substance from the quashed Reference and without the Reference the show cause notice was just a blank piece of paper which could not become the basis for any subsequent inquiry against the petitioner, Justice Isa. No one has disputed the said decision of this Court, in the present review proceedings. Actually, the moment the foundation is removed, the entire structure collapses. The principle, having been enunciated by this Court in many cases,[41] is now well-settled that when the basic order is without lawful authority, then the entire superstructure built on it falls on to the ground automatically. Thus, any proceedings taken, orders passed or actions made in pursuance of the impugned directions being a superstructure built on those directions loses their legal status and effect, when their very foundation, viz, the impugned directions, is found to have been laid without lawful authority. They have, therefore, no legal status and effect.

55. These are the reasons for our short order dated 26 April 2021, which is reproduced below for completion of the record:

> For the reasons to be recorded later, captioned Review Petitions are allowed and the directions contained in paras 4 to 11 of the impugned short order dated 19.06.2020 passed in Const. Petition No. 17/2019 and other connected matters, along with supporting detailed reasons given in the majority judgment of the same date, are recalled and set-aside. All the subsequent proceedings, actions, orders, information and reports in pursuance of the directions contained in the short order dated 19.6.2020 and the detailed reasons thereof, are declared to be illegal and without any legal effect. Resultantly, any such proceedings, actions, orders or reports cannot be considered or acted upon and pursued any further by any forum or authority including the Supreme Judicial Council.

Our learned brother, Manzoor Ahmed Malik, J., (who has since retired) was a signatory to the above short order; therefore, following the precedents of Al-Jehad Trust v. Federation (PLD 1996 SC 324) and CJP Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan (PLD 2010 SC 61), the office is directed to place these detailed reasons recorded in support of that order before his lordship, for his consideration whether he agrees with the detailed reasons.

Right of a Judge to be dealt with in accordance with law in the matter of his accountability

56. Before parting with the judgment, we consider it appropriate to re-emphasize that we strongly believe that judicial independence and judicial accountability are two sides of the same coin and one cannot exist without the other - to compromise on judicial accountability is to compromise on independence of judiciary - but our only concern in the present matter is that a constitutional court Judge in the matter of his accountability, or for that matter his spouse, must be dealt with in accordance with the law. As it is said that injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere; whatever affects one directly, affects all indirectly,[42] so would the accountability of one Judge in a manner not provided by the Constitution have adverse impact upon the independence of all Judges, and thus destroy the independence of the judiciary as an institution. The constitutional guarantee of the right to be dealt with in accordance with law, under Article 4 of our Constitution, is available not only to every citizen of the country but also to every other person for the time being within Pakistan. We are clear and firm in our view that this constitutional guarantee cannot be curtailed or limited in the case or matter of any person whosoever he may be and whatever the allegations against him may be. We think it would not be out of place to cite some observations which were recently made in Naveed Asghar[43] case by two of us (Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ) and our learned brother Manzoor Ahmed Malik, J.:

> An accused person cannot be deprived of his constitutional right to be dealt with in accordance with law, merely because he is alleged to have committed a gruesome and heinous offence. The zeal to punish an offender even in derogation or violation of the law would blur the distinction between arbitrary decisions and lawful judgments. No doubt, duty of the courts is to administer justice; but this duty is to be performed in accordance with the law and not otherwise. The mandatory requirements of law cannot be ignored by labelling them as technicalities in pursuit of the subjective administration of justice. One guilty person should not be taken to task at the sacrifice of the very basis of a democratic and civilised society, i.e., the rule of law. Tolerating acquittal of some guilty whose guilt is not proved under the law is the price which the society is to pay for the protection of their invaluable constitutional right to be treated in accordance with the law. Otherwise, every person will have to bear peril of being dealt with under the personal whims of the persons sitting in executive or judicial offices, which they in their own wisdom and subjective assessment consider good for the society.

This was our approach towards the rule of law in case of persons who were alleged to have committed a gruesome and heinous offence; we cannot deal with the case of a Judge any differently, who because of his unblemished character and honest performance of his duties both at the Bar and on the Bench during a life-long period of about forty years, enjoys great respect in the legal fraternity. The members of almost all the Bar Associations across the country hold Justice Isa as an honest, independent and impartial judge, with impeccable integrity. It may also be noted here that the various petitioners who earlier challenged the filing of Reference against Justice Isa, and now the impugned directions, include the premier Bar bodies like Supreme Court Bar Association, Pakistan Bar Council, all the four provincial Bar Councils and High Court Bar Association Quetta, Quetta Bar Association, Sindh High Court Bar Association, Karachi Bar Association, Peshawar High Court Bar Association, and Senior Lawyers like Mr. Abid Hassan Minto. All the above are the main stake-holders in the judicial system and are best suited to form and express their opinion about the integrity and ability of a Judge. In addition to those named above, Pakistan Federal Union of Journalists is also a petitioner; they certainly are the people who have their fingers on the pulse of the people of this country.

57. We are fully conscious of the fact that it is the impeccable integrity and high standard of ethics and transparency that engenders the public's confidence in the judiciary. It is in order to achieve and maintain the public confidence, trust and perception about the independence, impartiality and integrity of the superior Court Judges, that our Constitution has provided an elaborate scheme, for the accountability of the Judges under Article 209, which needs to be adhered to strictly as rightly observed in the judgment under review,[44] that "infringements of Article 209 erode the independence of the judiciary." But unfortunately our chequered history has seen numerous attempts to trample upon judicial independence during both, civilian as well as military governments. Nonetheless, we must not become prisoner of our past and must now obviate any attempt to damage the judiciary.

58. History is witness to the fact that the fundamental rights, particularly of those who are the most vulnerable, becomes the first causality in societies where the judiciary comprises those who were compromised and thus susceptible to being influenced from those wielding power and influence. The edifice of the judicial independence rests on the assumption that every Judge besides being fair and impartial is fiercely independent and is free to uphold his judicial views. This judicial freedom is fundamental to the concept of the rule of law. Any attempt to muffle judicial independence or to stifle dissent shakes the foundation of a free and impartial judicial system, thus eroding public confidence on which the entire edifice of judicature stands. Public confidence is the most precious asset of this organ of the state, which controls neither the sword nor the purse. A judge whose decisions are dictated not by the fidelity to the letter and spirit of the law but based on what he deems to be palatable to the Government would cause irretrievable damage to the public confidence in the judiciary, and consequently jeopardize its credibility and moral authority. Judges should not be, in the words of Lord Denning, "diverted from their duty by any extraneous influence, nor by hope of reward nor by fear of penalties, nor by flattering praise, nor by indignant approach".

59. We believe that the rule of law and the independence of judiciary are conceptually interwoven: without an independent judiciary, expecting the rule of law is a sheer farce. And the rule of law and the independence of the judiciary are the only guarantee to the maintenance and preservation of a thriving democracy. We reiterate what two of us (Maqbool Baqar and Syed Mansoor Ali Shah, JJ.) and our learned brother, Yahya Afridi, J., said in their order of 19 June 2020 while disposing of the constitution petitions in the present matter:

> One of our pivotal Constitutional values is that the independence of judiciary shall be fully secured. The same Constitution also ordains that to enjoy the protection of law and to be treated in accordance with law is the inalienable right of every citizen. Therefore, it is reiterated that in our constitutional democracy, neither the petitioner judge, nor any other judge, or any individual or any institution, is above the law. The doors of the constitutional forum i.e., Supreme Judicial Council are always open, either on its own motion or for anyone who has a genuine and a bona fide grievance, amenable to the jurisdiction of the Council against a Judge of the Constitutional Court. At the same time, it is equally important, that a Judge like any other citizen of Pakistan enjoys the inalienable constitutional right to be treated in accordance with law. These fundamental values are to be protected at all cost in order to uphold the majesty and supremacy of the Constitution and to honour the people of Pakistan who have adopted and given to themselves this Constitution.

We proclaim that no one is above the law, but at the same time declare that no one can be denied his right to be dealt with in accordance with the law. If Mrs. Isa, or a spouse of any other Judge, does not comply with the tax law, she must be dealt with in accordance with the law, and if Justice Isa, or any other Judge, breaches any clause of the Code of Conduct prescribed for Judges of the constitutional courts, he also must be proceeded against but only in accordance with law and not otherwise.

Sd/-
(Maqbool Baqar)
Judge

I agree.

Sd/- (Manzoor Ahmad Malik)
Judge

Sd/-
(Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel)
Judge
Sd/-
(Syed Mansoor Ali Shah)
Judge

Apart from Civil Review Petition No.296 of 2020, all other Civil Review Petitions are allowed and the reasons for the same are recorded in my separate note.

Sd/-
(Yahya Afridi)
Judge
Sd/- (Amin-ud-Din Khan)
Judge

YAHYA AFRIDI, J.---Every judgment pronounced by the Supreme Court of Pakistan is a considered, solemn and final pronouncement on all points raised and decided in the case.[45] However, under Article 188 of the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 ("Constitution") read with Rule 1 of Order XXVI of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("Rules") this Court is vested with the jurisdiction to review its judgment, in certain circumstances. The judicial consensus of this Court is that a judgment passed on an erroneous assumption of material facts, or without adverting to a provision of law or Constitution, or without noticing an undisputed construction of law and Constitution amounts to an error apparent on the face of the record, and thus justifies positive exercise of the review jurisdiction.[46]

2. After careful and cautious consideration of the directions of this Court to the officials of the Federal Board of Revenue ("FBR"), the Hon'ble Chairman and learned Secretary of the Supreme Judicial Council ("Council"), contained in paragraphs Nos. 4 to 11 of the short order dated 19.06.2020 ("impugned directions"), I find that the same have been made by us without appropriately considering the scope of the ouster clause of Article 211 of the Constitution and the relevant provisions of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("Ordinance"). These two crucial omissions on our part are the marked and distinct "errors apparent on the face of the record" and thus, warrant the positive exercise of the review jurisdiction of this Court.

3. To start with, we need to appreciate the exclusivity of the constitutional domain of the Council secured under Article 211 of the Constitution, which expressly commands all courts, including this Court, not to interfere in the proceedings of the Council. The said ouster provision reads:

> 211. Bar of Jurisdiction.
>
> The proceedings before the Council, its report to the President and the removal of a Judge under clause (6) of Article 209 shall not be called in question in any court.

No one can doubt the wide-ranging power vested in this Court under Article 184(3) or Article 187(1) of the Constitution, to issue appropriate directions, while disposing of a case. However, where the Constitution under Article 211 expressly forbids all courts, including this Court, not to interfere in the proceedings of the Council, then the authority of this Court under Article 184(3) or, for that matter, under any other Article of the Constitution, has to yield to such definite ouster.

4. The very essence of the ouster clause provided in Article 211 is to curtail the jurisdiction of the courts, including this Court, to protect and preserve the autonomy and supremacy of the "proceedings" of the Council against judicial interference. The term "proceedings" as used in Article 211, has been astutely elaborated in the case of Iftikhar Muhammad Chaudhry v. President of Pakistan[47], wherein it was observed that the word "proceedings" does not stand alone or is unqualified in the said provision but stands restricted and qualified by three other words, "before the council".[48] Accordingly, the ouster of this Court's jurisdiction applies to all proceedings that may take place before the Council. If the Council is to decide on whether or not it should exercise its suo motu powers, such a decision would be a "proceeding" before the Council and thus protected under Article 211 against any judicial intrusion. This constitutional protection exalts the position of the Council and establishes its legally lofted supremacy in matters relating to initiating and proceeding with inquiries against the Judges of the Superior Judiciary. And unless the very proceedings of the Council to proceed against a Judge of the Superior Judiciary is positively adjudged to be coram non judice, mala fide or without jurisdiction, Courts are to jealously maintain the constitutional independence of the Council.

5. In view of this constitutional mandate, any directions of this Court setting steps for the Council, and for that matter, for its Hon'ble Chairman and learned Secretary, to follow or to refrain from following and that too, without first adjudging its actions or inactions to be coram non judice, mala fide or without jurisdiction would amount to excessive exercise of jurisdiction by this Court under Article 184(3) and Article 187(1) of the Constitution. Such directions of the Court amount to usurping the exclusive constitutional jurisdiction vested in the Council under Article 209 and protected under Article 211 of the Constitution.

6. To sum up, it would be safe to state that this Court did not have the jurisdiction to issue the impugned directions to the Council to consider initiating, or otherwise, an inquiry against the Petitioner Judge based on the "information" received from the tax officials of the FBR. If the instructions of the Court to the Council to consider the report of the tax officials, as vehemently argued by the contesting respondents, are not strictly considered or taken as "directions" to the Council, even then the same has the effect of making this Court a "complainant", and not the "adjudicator" in the matter. Similarly, if this Court issues directions to the contrary, that is, refraining the Council from considering "information" obtained, this Court would then too be exceeding its mandated constitutional jurisdiction.

7. Another important aspect that escaped the notice of this Court, while issuing the impugned directions to the tax officials was that the impugned directions, in effect, created a parallel regime alien to the scheme envisaged under the Ordinance. The Ordinance provides an intricate mechanism for the tax authorities to proceed in various matters relating to taxpayers, which range from procedural guidelines, specific timelines and jurisdiction available to the concerned authorities, while at the same time, it also provides protection to the person being assessed, adhering to the settled principles of 'due process' and 'natural justice'.

8. This Court has, in the judgment under review, passed binding directions to the tax officials to proceed in a set manner, overlooking the provisions of the Ordinance relating to taking cognisance of "definite information"; scrutiny of information and assessment of income tax returns; and territorial jurisdiction.[49] Moreover, in making the impugned directions, we also lost sight of the procedure provided in the Ordinance, as to how tax officials are: (i) to proceed against a tax filer that has undeclared income and assets or mis-declared the same and within what time period; (ii) to determine the source of funds for purchasing the undeclared assets, whether generated in Pakistan or in some foreign country; and (iii) above all, to which tax year the undeclared local assets or source of funds and the undeclared foreign assets and source of funds are to be added to and assessed.[50]

9. With the force and guidance of the impugned directions of this Court, and that too, against persons not party in the constitution petitions, expecting the probe by the tax authorities to abide by the "due process" provided under the Ordinance, would be a far cry. In the circumstances of the case, the matter of probe against the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge should, I think, best have been left to the concerned tax authorities to proceed under the Ordinance, without any specific directions. By giving directions to the tax authorities to proceed with the matter on the basis of a procedure and timeline foreign to the Ordinance, this Court has ultimately subdued the procedure prescribed under the Ordinance by expanding its role, inadvertently, as 'legislator' rather than 'adjudicator'.

10. Much was argued from both sides about whether Mrs. Sarina Faez Isa, who was not a party to the proceedings, was provided with a fair "hearing" befitting the bare threshold to suffice the principles of natural justice, before her case was referred to the tax authorities. One should not expect a consensus of a ten-member Bench on this factual controversy, as to whether Mrs. Sarina Faez Isa was provided with a fair "hearing", and that too, based solely on her informal statement made while addressing the Court via video link on 18.06.2020. Therefore, in these review proceedings, it would be appropriate to remain focused on the core issues involved in the constitution petitions, and not be distracted by the factual controversy, as to whether Mrs. Sarina Faez Isa was provided with a fair and adequate opportunity to be heard before directing the tax officials to scrutinise her foreign assets. For, when a Court sits to review its own judgment or order, it does not hear a new case but only reconsiders its decision on the issues involved in the case already heard and decided, within the limits of its review jurisdiction.

11. Another error that crept in while making the impugned directions is the distraction from the fundamental issue of alleged misconduct of the Petitioner Judge qua the non-disclosure of foreign assets of his spouse, in his wealth statement, filed with the income tax returns under Section 116 of the Ordinance. Though this was the main controversy, the impugned directions directed the tax officials to proceed against the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge regarding the subject foreign properties, instead of directing the tax officials to proceed against the Petitioner Judge to determine his liability, if any, in accordance with the Ordinance. Under the Ordinance,[51] when a tax filer fails to furnish adequate justification for an asset, the same is then deemed as the tax filer's asset procured through unexplained income chargeable to tax, and the tax is charged accordingly by adding that income under the head "Income from other Sources". Thus, in case the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge fail to adequately justify the sources of fund for purchasing the foreign assets, the same would be deemed even then, under the Ordinance, to be owned by them, and not by the Petitioner Judge. Our concern, in the constitution petitions, wherein the impugned directions have been given, was with respect to the independence of the judiciary and the accountability of the judges in the context of alleged misconduct of the Petitioner Judge, which has, in my opinion, been detracted from, by making the impugned directions against his family members.

12. In view of the above deliberations, I find that the impugned directions affecting the rights of Mrs. Sarina Faez Isa, her son and daughter, have been passed by this Court in excess of jurisdiction, and are, therefore, recalled. Consequently, the "superstructure" of subsequent proceedings, actions, orders and reports built on the legally faulty "foundation" of the impugned directions would fall and have no legal effect on the rights and obligations of Mrs. Sarina Faez Isa, her son and daughter.

13. As for the effect of the above declaration qua the allegation of misconduct against the Petitioner Judge, suffice it to state that it does not diminish or dilute the constitutional authority of the Council to consider, on its own motion, an "information" received from "any source", whatever it may be, including the "information" contained in the report received from the tax official, for deciding to initiate an inquiry, or otherwise, into the conduct of the Petitioner Judge. In this regard, we should not lose sight of clause (5) of Article 209 of the Constitution, which clearly provides that "information from any source" can form the basis of an inquiry by the Council against a Judge of the Superior Judiciary. The legal significance and practical implication of the insertion of the word "any" prefixing the word "source" in clause (5) of Article 209 of the Constitution has, in fact, expanded the pool from which the Council may obtain "information" to initiate an inquiry into the conduct or capacity of a Judge of the Superior Judiciary. To interpret the word "any" used in clause (5) of Article 209 of the Constitution in a manner that would dilute the authority of the Council and restrict the information it can or cannot consider would amount to defeating the very command of the Constitution. Therefore, the Council, "on information" emanating from "any source" can proceed, on its own motion, with an inquiry into the capacity or conduct of any Judge of the Superior Judiciary. The decision on the question, whether to commence the inquiry or otherwise, is a matter that is within the exclusive domain of the Council. This Court, or for that matter any other Court, lacks the jurisdiction to restrict this vast authority vested in the Council by the Constitution - the supreme law of the land.

14. Before concluding, I think it is proper to make clear that the present order, by no means, seeks to curtail the lawful authority of the President, the Council and the tax officials to proceed against any Judge of the Superior Judiciary, including the Petitioner Judge, in accordance with law as mandated by Article 4 of the Constitution. We cannot champion the rule of law if we breed complacency in judicial accountability, a feature that seeks to uphold and bolster the rule of law. Thus, it is important to ensure that there are no artificial impediments to ensuring accountability of judges, provided accountability is pursued in accordance with law. This exposition of authority, in particular, of the tax officials, however, should in no way detract them from their statutory duty to remain steadfast in ensuring the confidentiality of the information of a tax filer as mandated under section 216 of the Ordinance which, as noted in the judgment under review, was blatantly breached in the case of Mrs. Sarina Faez Isa: the tax officials on the unlawful directions issued by the Chairman ARU, Barrister Shahzad Akbar with the concurrence of the Federal Law Minister, Dr. Farogh Naseem, breached the statutory confidentiality of Mrs. Sarina Faez Isa's tax returns. I feel constrained to observe that allowing the said delinquents to continue in such important positions of authority by the worthy Prime Minister, and that too after this Court has unanimously declared their actions to be in violation of the Constitution and law, particularly the provisions of section 216 of the Ordinance entailing penal consequences,[52] belies the most elementary principles of "good governance", and expose the worthy Prime Minister's complicity in the commission of the said violations.

15. As far as Civil Review Petition No.296 of 2020 is concerned, that is, in my view,[53] not maintainable, as the locus standi of the Petitioner Judge to invoke the original jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3), as well the review jurisdiction therein, stands eclipsed till he holds the office of a Judge of the Supreme Court of Pakistan; for he owes an obligation under clause (8) of Article 209 of the Constitution to observe the Code of Conduct issued by the Council for Judges of the Superior Judiciary, that, inter alia, requires him to avoid being involved in litigation, for himself or even on behalf of others, which includes public interest litigation under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. The object is to avert any chance of a Judge of the Superior Judiciary being placed in a position, where his conduct may be seen as unbecoming of a Judge, glimpses of which were seen during the proceedings of the present review petitions.

16. In summation of the above discourse, my considered opinion on the essential issues raised in the present review petitions are that:

i. This Court cannot pass any direction that would, in essence, prompt or pre-empt the Council to proceed in a certain manner or refrain it to proceed in any manner as it would, in fact, amount to judicial intervention in the "proceedings before the Council", and thereby offend the express mandate of Article 211 of the Constitution, unless the very "proceedings" are determined to be coram non judice, mala fide or without jurisdiction, which has not been established in the case in hand;

ii. The impugned directions of this Court to the Council to consider the Report of the tax officials amounts to judicial interference in the "proceedings before the Council", and thus violates the autonomy and supremacy of the "proceedings" of the Council against judicial interference envisaged under Article 211 of the Constitution;

iii. The Council is, however, on its own motion, competent to consider or refuse to consider "information" received from "any" source, be it the Report of the tax officials, to determine whether to inquire or not inquire into the conduct of the Petitioner Judge or otherwise;

iv. The impugned directions to the tax officials to inquire into the affairs of the spouse and children of the Petitioner Judge, setting out the manner and the timeframe in which they are to proceed, violate and are alien to, the provisions of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001, and have subdued the procedure prescribed thereunder;

v. The President and the Council have the authority, and are free to proceed against any Judge of the Superior Judiciary, including the Petitioner Judge for alleged misconduct, in accordance with Article 209 of the Constitution;

vi. The tax officials are competent to proceed against the Petitioner Judge or any other Judge of the Superior Judiciary, serving or retired, his spouse or/and children, without fear or favour, in relation to his or her tax affairs only in accordance with the provisions of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 and not otherwise on the basis of unlawful directions;

vii. Section 216 of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001, commands confidentiality of the information of a tax filer, and breach thereof exposes the delinquent to penal consequences under sections 198 and 199 of the Ordinance. Such consequences are attracted in the present case to those giving the unlawful directions, namely, Chairman ARU, Barrister Mirza Shahzad Akbar with the concurrence of the Federal Law Minister, Dr. Farogh Naseem; the tax officials executing the unlawful directions in breach of section 216 of the Ordinance; and finally, the worthy Prime Minister, who despite clear and unanimous finding of misdoings of the named delinquents by this Court, retained them in positions of authority, thereby blatantly exposed himself to complicity in the commission of the said violation.

viii. The Petitioner Judge or any other serving Judge of the Superior Judiciary lacks the locus standi to invoke the original jurisdiction of this Court under Article 184(3), as well as the review jurisdiction therein, as their right to invoke the same stands eclipsed, till they hold the office of a Judge of the Superior Judiciary, essentially to avert a position where their conduct may be seen as unbecoming of a Judge, as ordained in Code of Conduct issued by the Council for Judges of the Superior Judiciary.

17. These are the detailed reasons for my short order dated 26.04.2021, which read:

For the reasons to be recorded later, all review petitions except C.R.P. No. 296 of 2020, are allowed and the directions contained in paragraphs Nos. 4 to 11 of the order dated 19.06.2020 and detail judgment dated 23.10.2020 passed in Constitution Petition No. 17 of 2019 and other connected petitions are recalled. Consequently, all the subsequent proceedings, actions, orders and reports made in pursuance of the said directions are declared to be of no legal effect and/or consequences.

Sd/-

Judge

UMAR ATA BANDIAL, J.---

786

"Surah An-Nisa, Verse 135

Believers! Be upholders of justice, and bearers of witness to truth for the sake of Allah, even though it may either be against yourselves or against your parents and kinsmen, or the rich or the poor: for Allah is more concerned with their well-being than you are. Do not, then, follow your own desires lest you keep away from justice. If you twist or turn away from (the truth), know that Allah is well aware of all that you do."

Translation by Abul Ala Maududi

(emphasis supplied)

The essence of the controversy in the instant review petitions is whether justice can be dispensed by a court of law by ignoring the truth. The answer to this pivotal question in these proceedings will decide the fate of substantive justice in our legal system.

Factual Background

2. The facts leading up to this long-drawn litigation can be found in paras 3-8 of the Detailed Reasons issued on 23.10.2020 reported as Justice Qazi Faez Isa v. President of Pakistan (PLD 2021 SC 1). However, for ease of reference they are being briefly recapitulated hereinbelow. On 10.04.2019, the Chairman Assets Recovery Unit ("ARU"), situated in PM Secretariat, Islamabad, received a complaint in the form of a letter which alleged that Justice Qazi Faez Isa ("the learned petitioner"), who was appointed Chief Justice of the Balochistan High Court on 05.08.2009, owned certain Properties ("London Properties") in the United Kingdom in the name of his wife ("Mrs. Isa") which had not been declared by him. The particulars of these Properties are:

i. 50 Coniston Court: originally leased to Mrs. Isa in 2004 for a sum of 236,000. The lease was later renewed in October 2011 with Mrs. Isa's daughter added as a co-lessee;

ii. 40 Oakdale Road: purchased by Mrs. Isa and her daughter on 27.03.2013 for a sum of 245,000; and

iii. 90 Adelaide Road: purchased by Mrs. Isa and her son on 28.06.2013 for a sum of 270,000.

3. On 16.04.2019, the Law Minister authorised the ARU to inquire into the London Properties, two of which were acquired when the learned petitioner was Chief Justice of the Balochistan High Court. The investigation spearheaded by ARU confirmed, vide a letter written by the Commissioner, Inland Revenue ("CIR") on 10.05.2019, that neither the learned petitioner nor Mrs. Isa had declared the London Properties in their wealth statements. Ultimately this led to the President filing Reference No.1 of 2019 ("the Reference") against the learned petitioner in the Supreme Judicial Council ("SJC") on 23.05.2019. The Reference mainly alleged that the learned petitioner had violated Section 116(1)(b) of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("the Ordinance") by failing to declare the London Properties owned by his wife and children. However, during the pendency of the Reference before the SJC, the learned petitioner filed a Constitution Petition before this Court on 07.08.2019 praying for the quashment of the Reference and for restraining the SJC from proceeding in the said matter. Thereafter the matter was heard for ten months by the Full Court during which period the learned petitioner adopted (and maintained) the stance that he was not associated whatsoever with the London Properties that belonged to his financially independent wife.

4. On 19.06.2020 the Short Order reported as (Mr.) Justice Qazi Faez Isa v. President of Pakistan (PLD 2020 SC 346) was announced by a majority of 7-3. Both the Majority and the Minority quashed the Reference for suffering from legal and jurisdictional defects. However, the Minority also declared the Reference void for being tainted with malice in fact. This led to their different treatment of the fact that the London Properties owned by Mrs. Isa had neither been declared in her wealth statements nor in the wealth statements of the learned petitioner ("admitted information"). The Majority (comprised of the seven Judges, including the four signatories to this opinion) was of the view that the allegations levelled against the learned petitioner being based on true information were of a serious nature. Therefore, a probe by the Federal Board of Revenue ("FBR") into the source of funds used for purchasing the London Properties was necessary to ensure that any aspersions cast on the learned petitioner and the Court were dispelled. On the contrary, the Minority (comprised of the three Judges), with the exception of Justice Yahya Afridi, considered the excesses of the Executive to be so serious that they declared the admitted information to have lost all its evidentiary worth. This resulted in strong dissents advocating for the initiation of criminal/ disciplinary action against the different public functionaries involved in the preparation of the Reference.

5. Dissatisfied with this result, the learned petitioner and Mrs. Isa, along with the other review petitioners, filed nine Review Petitions (296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 308, 309 and 509 of 2020) before this Court challenging paras 4-11 of the Short Order dated 19.06.2020 and the Detailed Reasons ("Majority Judgment") issued in support thereof on 23.10.2020. The disputed paras are produced below:

> "4. Within 7 days of this Order, the concerned Commissioner of Inland Revenue shall himself (and not some other officer exercising delegated powers) issue appropriate notices under the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("2001 Ordinance") to the spouse and children of the Petitioner to offer an explanation regarding the nature and source of the funds (separately for each property) whereby the three properties in the United Kingdom (viz., No.40, Oakdale Road, London E11 4DL; No.90, Adelaide Road, London E10 5NW; and No. 50, Coniston Court, Kendal Street, London W2 2AN) that are in the names of the spouse and the children were acquired. For purposes of this Order the Commissioner Inland Revenue having jurisdiction over the spouse of the Petitioner (who must be a Commissioner exercising jurisdiction and performing functions at Islamabad) shall be deemed also to be the Commissioner having jurisdiction over the children. (The spouse and children are herein after referred to as "the respondents".) Any notices issued or proceedings taken (or proposed to be issued or taken) under the 2001 Ordinance in relation to any of the respondents in respect, or on account, of the properties aforesaid prior to the date of this Order stand terminated forthwith.
>
> 5. The notices shall be served at the official residence of the Petitioner at Islamabad through courier service and such other means as may be considered appropriate and shall be deemed served on the respondents when received at the said address.
>
> 6. The respondents shall furnish their replies to the notices along with such material and record as is deemed appropriate. In case any of them is outside the country, it shall be the responsibility of such person to timely file a response, and the proceedings before the Commissioner shall not be adjourned or delayed for the reason of non-availability in Pakistan of such person.

7. Upon receipt of the replies (and of such additional material/ record as may be filed in response to such clarification or explanation, if any, as the Commissioner may, in writing, have sought), the Commissioner shall give an opportunity of hearing to the respondents in person or through an authorized representative/counsel and shall thereupon make an order in accordance with the 2001 Ordinance.
8. The proceedings shall be concluded before the Commissioner within 60 days of the date of receipt of the notices as aforesaid, and the order shall be issued by him within 75 days of the said date of receipt, and no adjournment or extension in time whatsoever shall be given as affects or extends the aforesaid periods.
9. Within 7 days of the issuance of the order by the Commissioner, the Chairman, Federal Board of Revenue ("FBR") shall submit a report (to be personally signed by him) to the Council through its Secretary (i.e., the Registrar of the Supreme Court) regarding the proceedings as aforesaid, appending thereto the entire record of the said proceedings. The Secretary shall forthwith place such report before the Chairman of the Council (i.e., the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Pakistan) who shall, in such manner as is deemed appropriate, have the report laid before the Council for such perusal, consideration, action, order or proceedings, if any, in relation to the Petitioner as the Council may determine. The receipt of the report, the laying of it before the Council and the action/ proceedings, if any, or orders or directions, if any, as may be taken, made or given by the Council thereon shall be deemed, for purposes of Article 209 of the Constitution, to be in exercise of the suo motu jurisdiction as is conferred by that Article on the Council.
10. If, within 100 days from the date of this Order, no report as aforesaid is received by the Secretary from the Chairman, FBR, he shall inform the Chairman of the Council accordingly and shall, if so directed by him, write to the Chairman, FBR requiring an explanation as to why the report has not been received. If in reply the report is filed, then the matter shall proceed in terms of para 9 herein above. If a reply is received without the report or no reply is received, then the Secretary shall bring such fact to the attention of the Chairman of the Council who may direct that the matter be placed before the Council for such perusal, consideration, action, order or proceedings, if any, in relation to the Petitioner (or any other person as deemed appropriate) as the Council may determine. The action/ proceedings, if any, or orders or directions, if any, as may be taken, made or given by the Council shall be deemed, for purposes of Article 209 of the Constitution, to be in exercise of the suo motu jurisdiction as is conferred by that Article on the Council. Without prejudice to the foregoing, if at any stage the report is received from the Chairman, FBR, then the matter shall in any case proceed (or be deemed to proceed, as the case may be) in terms of para 9 herein above.
11. For the removal of any doubts, it is clarified that any of the proceedings under the 2001 Ordinance as herein contemplated on the one hand, and before the Council in terms of para 9 or 10 herein above on the other, are distinct and separate from each other. Accordingly, nothing contained in this Order shall affect or prejudice the right(s) of appeal of any of the respondents under the 2001 Ordinance, if they feel aggrieved by the order made by the Commissioner or (as the case may be) any order made or decision taken at any appellate stage. Any such appeal(s) shall be decided on the merits, in accordance with the 2001 Ordinance. At the same time (and needless to say), the consideration by the Council of any matter placed before it under either para 9 or 10 herein above shall not be affected by the filing or pendency of any appeal as aforesaid. But the Council may, if it deems appropriate, notice such appellate proceedings or orders/ decisions and may (for purposes only of the matter before it) make such orders or give such directions in relation thereto as it deems appropriate."

6. Since all review petitioners were primarily aggrieved by paras 4-11 of the Short Order, these petitions were initially placed on 28.10.2020 before a seven member bench (comprised of the seven Judges who were signatories to these paras of the Short Order and the Detailed Reasons). However, the matter was adjourned to 16.11.2020 to allow time to the learned counsel to peruse the Detailed Reasons of the Majority Judgment which had been released on 23.10.2020.

7. On the next date of hearing, 16.11.2020, the review petitioners raised a preliminary objection to the composition of the review Bench on account of the exclusion of the three learned Minority Judges. Nevertheless, the matter could not proceed further and was adjourned as Mr. Munir A. Malik, Sr. ASC, counsel for the learned petitioner was unavailable on account of the COVID-19 pandemic. It was after this hearing and before any arguments on this issue had commenced that the learned petitioner and Mrs. Isa filed Additional Reasons in support of their review petitions (Mrs. Isa filed hers on 01.12.2020 whereas the learned petitioner filed his on 04.12.2020) in which they for the first time disputed the dissenting judgments authored by the three learned Minority Judges (the learned petitioner only challenged the judgment authored by Justice Yahya Afridi). The Additional Reasons did not explain the delay of six months in challenging the dissenting judgments. However, their rationale for belatedly questioning these judgments was to bolster the stance of the review petitioners that the three learned Minority Judges (who had struck down the admitted information) should be a part of the Bench hearing the review petitions. Accordingly, on 08.12.2020 and 10. 12.2020 when substantive arguments were made on the composition of the review Bench, Mrs. Isa specifically sought the inclusion of the three learned Minority Judges in the Bench for the reason that she had impugned their judgments while Mr. Munir A. Malik, Sr. ASC for the learned petitioner after expressing some initial doubts conceded that in certain situations dissenting judgments could be reviewed.

8. The decision in that matter i.e., composition of review Benches is reported as Justice Qazi Faez Isa v. President of Pakistan (PLD 2021 SC 639). It held that: It is the prerogative of the Hon'ble Chief Justice ("HCJ") to constitute Benches; ordinarily the strength of a review Bench should be equal to the number of Judges who heard the original matter; the review Bench should comprise the author Judge (if available). In his absence any Judge who agreed with the author Judge should be included in the Bench; and a review is contemplated only against judgments of this Court i.e., unanimous and majority verdicts. This decision also emphasised the restraint and quietude that must be exercised and maintained by a dissenting Judge (or any other Judge not part of the original Bench) sitting in a review Bench (paras 28-30) as review jurisdiction is not akin to appellate jurisdiction. Therefore, any disagreement with the decision of the Majority that falls short of the test of review should not qualify to set aside a judgment that is otherwise based on correct factual and legal premises. However, as will become clear later in the judgment, this basic principle was disregarded by the learned Minority Judges when the HCJ included them in the review Bench after our aforementioned decision.

9. Subsequently, when hearings resumed before the reconstituted review Bench the learned petitioner obtained leave of the Court on 02.03.2021 to argue his review himself as his counsel could not appear due to poor health and COVID-19 restrictions. At this juncture, instead of commencing his submissions in the review the learned petitioner surprisingly pressed a fresh application (C.M.A. No. 1243 of 2021) filed by him which sought public broadcast of the hearings in the review petitions. Pro and contra arguments on this application were heard over the course of five hearings (02, 03, 08, 17 and 18 March 2021) and the application was ultimately dismissed by a short order dated 13.04.2021 with a majority of 6-4 (the detailed reasons are recorded in a separate order).

10. Consequently, it was only on 15.04.2021 that hearings in the review petitions began. By this date only fifteen days were left till the retirement of Justice Manzoor Ahmad Malik, one of the learned members of the Bench, on 30.04.2021. The learned petitioner and Mrs. Isa made their substantive arguments in person over the course of three days. Perhaps due to their personal involvement in the case and paucity of time both were erratic and emotional whilst addressing the Court. The charged behaviour of the two review petitioners along with the interruptions by a learned Minority Judge, reminding specifically the learned Additional AG to shorten his submissions hindered the latter from arguing the matter freely whilst also disrupting the Court decorum. The resulting tension caused awkwardness and difficulties in the hearings of the review petitions.

Grounds of Review

11. Be that as it may, we have perused the arguments of the learned petitioner and Mrs. Isa presented before us. From these submissions we have gathered the alleged defects in the Majority Judgment that according to them call for its review. These are:

i. The Court lacked jurisdiction to issue directions to the FBR to commence proceedings against Mrs. Isa and her children;

ii. The Court encroached on the jurisdiction of the SJC by issuing a direction to its Secretary to place the Report of the Chairman FBR before the Chairman SJC for the SJC to consider whether to proceed against the learned petitioner;

iii. The directions issued by the Court to the FBR and SJC were invalid as these failed to satisfy the jurisdictional test under Article 184(3) of the Constitution, namely, the violation of a fundamental right which affects the public at large;

iv. The Court did not give Mrs. Isa a hearing before ordering the FBR to initiate proceedings against her thereby violating the principles of natural justice;

v. The Court's finding that the respondents' actions against the learned petitioner were not motivated by malice in fact suffers from an error apparent on the face of the record;

vi. The Court having unanimously observed that Mrs. Isa's Regional Tax Officer ("RTO") was in Karachi could not later, by a smaller majority, permit proceedings to be conducted in Islamabad; and

vii. The Court passed the Short Order without hearing the counsel of the learned petitioner on phase II of the arguments, namely, the mala fides of SJC.

12. Mr. Hamid Khan, Sr. ASC, (C.R.Ps. Nos.299, 300, 301 and 308 of 2020) also addressed the Court. Some of the points argued by him overlapped with those raised by the learned petitioner and Mrs. Isa while a few were concerned with minor procedural technicalities which had no bearing on the review. However, he also emphasised the following issues which had hitherto been untouched:

i. After the Short Order dated 19.06.2020 quashed the Reference, the SJC became functus officio and so could not entertain the Report of Chairman FBR on the same information which had formed the basis of the Reference;

ii. SJC under Article 209 of the Constitution is only competent to hear and decide disciplinary matters pertaining to the Superior Judiciary. It has no jurisdiction over the family members of Superior Court Judges;

iii. A direction/order of this Court cannot form the basis of an information for initiating an inquiry against a Superior Court Judge;

iv. The Report of Chairman FBR cannot be an information under Article 209(5) ibid because it contains a tentative opinion based only on the decision of the CIR; and

v. The direction to the FBR is tantamount to the Court passing person specific legislation.

Mr. Rasheed A. Rizvi, Sr. ASC, (C.R.Ps. Nos. 297 and 309 of 2020) adopted the arguments of Mr. Hamid Khan, Sr. ASC.

13. In reply, the learned Additional AG's main contention was that once the Court had reached a conscious and deliberate decision, its judgment could not be set aside unless there was an error apparent on the face of the record [ref: Engineers Study Forum v. Federation of Pakistan (2016 SCMR 1961) at para 6]. Since the review petitioners had not been able to point out such an error, the review petitions were not maintainable. To fortify his stance, he also made the following submissions:

i. This Court has vast powers under Article 184(3) of the Constitution read with Article 187 ibid to issue directions of any nature in a case to do complete justice;

ii. Mrs. Isa was afforded a hearing before the Majority Judgment was issued and in any case the inadequacy of a hearing cannot be a ground of review;

iii. Once SJC had received the Report of the Chairman FBR, it could not be restrained from examining the information provided in the said report, save in exceptional circumstances;

iv. If a ruling is set aside that does not necessarily efface the directions issued in the said judgment; and

v. No direction was issued by the Court to the SJC.

Decision

14. After extensively hearing all the sides, the review Bench vide short order dated 26.04.2021 allowed the review petitions by a majority of 6-4 (however, the Bench was evenly split 5-5 on the learned petitioner's review petition). This order is produced below:

"O R D E R

For reasons to be recorded later, these review petitions are dismissed.

ORDER OF THE BENCH

By majority of six to four (Justice Umar Ata Bandial, Justice Sajjad Ali Shah, Justice Munib Akhtar and Justice Qazi Muhammad Amin Ahmed dissenting), these review petitions, except as mentioned below, are allowed.

2. Civil Review Petition No.296 of 2020 titled Justice Qazi Faez Isa v. The President of Pakistan and others) is allowed by five and dismissed by five Hon'ble members of the Bench.

SHORT ORDER

For the reasons to be recorded later, captioned Review Petitions are allowed and the directions contained in paras 4 to 11 of the impugned short order dated 19.06.2020 passed in Const. Petition No.17/2019 and other connected matters, along with supporting detailed reasons given in the majority judgment of the same date, are recalled and set-aside. All the subsequent proceedings, actions, orders, information and reports in pursuance of the directions contained in the short order dated 19.6.2020 and the detailed reasons thereof, are declared to be illegal and without any legal effect. Resultantly, any such proceedings, actions, orders or reports cannot be considered or acted upon and pursued any further by any forum or authority including the Supreme Judicial Council.

Yahya Afridi, J. For the reasons to be recorded later, all review petitions except C.R.P. No. 296 of 2020, are allowed and the directions contained in paragraphs Nos. 4 to 11 of the order dated 19.06.2020 and detail judgment dated 23.10.2020 passed in Constitution Petition No. 17 of 2019 and other connected petitions are recalled. Consequently, all the subsequent proceedings, actions, orders and reports made in pursuance to the said directions are declared to be of no legal effect and/or consequences."

It is clear from the foregoing short orders that the learned Judges who had been in the minority (i.e., Justice Maqbool Baqar, Justice Syed Mansoor Ali Shah and Justice Yahya Afridi) were now joined by three Judges who had earlier been part of the majority (Justice Manzoor Ahmad Malik, Justice Mazhar Alam Khan Miankhel and Justice Amin-ud-Din Khan, who had replaced Justice Faisal Arab on the review Bench after the latter's retirement). Justice Yahya Afridi on the one hand and the other five learned Judges on the other made their own respective short orders. An examination of these short orders shows that there was some, but by no means complete, commonality between them. There was therefore a review majority (in relation only to that which was common between these short orders and nothing else), but only to a limited extent.

Test for Review

15. Before analysing the substantive arguments of the parties, we consider it appropriate to briefly state at the outset the settled parameters of the remedy of review laid down by Article 188 of the Constitution read with Order XXVI, Rule 1 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1980 ("SCR") which stipulate that a review in a civil matter will proceed on grounds similar to those mentioned in Order XLVII, Rule 1 of the C.P.C. This latter Rule lays down three grounds for review, namely:

i. Discovery of new and important matter or evidence which after the exercise of due diligence was not within the knowledge of the aggrieved person or could not be produced by him/her at the time when the decree was passed or order was made;

ii. A mistake or error apparent on the face of the record; or

iii. Any other sufficient reason.

16. In the present review petitions, only the second principle was urged by the review petitioners. The Court has on numerous occasions dilated upon the expression 'mistake or error apparent on the face of the record.' However, the judgment in Abdul Ghaffar-Abdul Rehman v. Asghar Ali (PLD 1998 SC 363) after conducting a detailed survey of the law on the guiding principles of review jurisdiction has explained the phrase comprehensively. These principles have later been followed in and expanded by subsequent cases. For ease of reference, a summary of the principles is produced below:

i. Every judgment pronounced by the Court is to be considered a solemn and final decision on all points arising out of the case [ref: Ghulam Murtaza v. Abdul Salam Shah (2010 SCMR 1883)];

ii. An error must be obvious and must not require an elaborate discussion to be detected [ref: Majid Mahmood v. Muhammad Shafi (2008 SCMR 554)];

iii. An error should not only be significant but should also have a material effect on the outcome of the case in that it must change the decision of the case [ref: Wajihul Hassan Zaidi v. Government of the Punjab (PLD 2004 SC 801)];

iv. A review cannot be sustained merely on the ground that a different decision could have been taken by the Court [ref: Rashid Ali Channa v. Muhammad Junaid Farooqui (2017 SCMR 1519)]; and

v. A review is not an appeal or a rehearing [ref: Mukhtar Mai v. Abdul Khaliq (2019 SCMR 1302)].

17. These principles underline the key point that review jurisdiction is limited in nature and a review will only succeed if it can be shown that an error in the judgment has changed the outcome of the case, whether partially [ref: Shireen Raza v. Federation of Pakistan (2002 SCMR 1218) and Abdul Ghaffar's case (supra)] or entirely [ref: Federation of Pakistan v. Muhammad Nawaz Sharif (PLD 2009 SC 644) and Fida Hussain v. The Secretary, Kashmir Affairs and Northern Affairs Division (PLD 1995 SC 701)]. It is in this context that the objections urged against the Majority Judgment by the learned petitioner and Mrs. Isa need to be examined.

Objections of the Review Petitioners

C.R.Ps. Nos.296 and 298 of 2020

A. Directions to FBR and SJC

18. The principal issue highlighted by both the learned petitioner and Mrs. Isa was the lack of jurisdiction of this Court to issue directions to the FBR and the SJC (stated in points i, ii, iii and vi of para 11) . It was argued that under Article 175(2) of the Constitution, the Courts of Pakistan can only exercise jurisdiction which is conferred on them by the Constitution and/or the law. Even Article 184(3), it was stated, was of no help as the two basic requirements, namely, the breach of a fundamental right which affects the people at large and is of public importance, were not satisfied. In simple words, it was maintained that the tax affairs of a private person/citizen could not involve the public interest and therefore trigger Article 184(3). Finally, it was submitted that the Court only had the power to allow or dismiss Const. P. No. 17 of 2019 (or grant any of the other prayers) and it could not in its original jurisdiction issue directions to non-parties.

19. There is no cavil with the petitioners' proposition that Courts only have that jurisdiction which is conferred on them by the Constitution and the law. However, whilst deciding Const. P. No.17 of 2019, filed by the learned petitioner, the Court exercised its original jurisdiction conferred under Article 184(3) of the Constitution and its complete justice power under Article 187 thereof. It is by now well-settled that when this Court acts under these provisions it can issue directions which travel beyond the pleas/ pleadings of the parties. Reference is made to the decision in Muhammad Hanif Abbasi v. Imran Khan Niazi (PLD 2018 SC 189):

"(106)sic. The whole process entails queries being posed by the Court and directions being issued to persons to produce evidence on record that is relevant to the matters under scrutiny. The queries or directions emanating from the Court may travel beyond the pleas set out in the pleadings of the parties because their answers are necessary to resolve a controversy pending before the Court. Therefore, such queries and directions cannot always be anticipated by the persons who are asked to provide evidence or information. It is this feature of the inquisitorial jurisdiction under Article 184(3) of the Constitution that justifies considerable indulgence representing a fair and generous opportunity being granted to a party or person to answer a query or comply a direction that was otherwise unexpected or for which it was unprepared."

(emphasis supplied)

Similarly, in Zulfiqar Ali Babu v. Government of the Punjab (PLD 1997 SC 11) the Court held:

"9 ...once this Court is seized of a lis competently under the relevant law, its power to grant appropriate relief [under Article 187 of the Constitution] is not controlled by the technicalities of the pleadings or otherwise..."

It is also trite law that in its original jurisdiction the Court can mould the relief 'in accordance with the facts and the circumstances that come to light during the proceedings.' [ref: Muhammad Asghar Khan v. Mirza Aslam Baig (PLD 2013 SC 1) at para 38]. Therefore, in light of these oft-confirmed principles defining the extent of the Court's original jurisdiction and its complete justice power, the claim of the petitioners that this Court only has the power to grant the relief sought in a petition is devoid of force.

20. Even the argument that the tax affairs of private citizens does not attract Article 184(3) of the Constitution has failed to impress us. The submission may have carried weight if the petitioners involved in the matter were actually private persons. However, the present case is concerned with the financial affairs of the spouse of a Judge of the Supreme Court. A necessary corollary which flows from the nature of Judges' work and the unique position they occupy in society is that they, like other public servants, are expected to make reasonable efforts to keep themselves informed about the financial affairs of their spouse and other family members who are either dependent on them or with whom they have financial dealings (ref: para 38 of the Detailed Reasons):

"38. At first glance an obligation to remain informed about the financial affairs of one's family members seems archaic because modern jurisprudence emphasises the protection of the rights of the individual against the State and society. However, to understand the rationale behind the obligation on Judges to make reasonable efforts to be informed about or to watch over the financial affairs of their family members, one has to understand the nexus of this obligation with the nature of Judges work and the position they occupy in society. As has been held above, Judges exercise pre-eminent authority under the law. They adjudicate disputes between litigants, hold parties appearing before them accountable and impose liabilities and grant relief to such parties. With their authority comes an even greater responsibility to decide cases fairly, independently and in accordance with law. In such a situation, it is imperative for a Judge that he should make reasonable efforts to be informed about the financial interests of his family members for the simple reason that if a case comes before him which directly or indirectly involves the pecuniary, proprietary or other personal interests of any of his family members, he can recuse himself...

However, this is not the only object behind imposing such a burdensome obligation on Judges. Another equally, if not more, important reason for requiring Judges to be aware of the financial interests of their family members is that the law's intent is to prevent a Judge's family from becoming a conduit to discreetly influence his opinions and views. This assures the Judges independence and integrity apart from safeguarding the institution of the judiciary."

(emphasis supplied)

21. This obligation on Judges to be aware of and/or accountable for the financial affairs of their family members can also be found in the laws of Pakistan that govern the realm of unaccounted/unexplained wealth of public servants. For instance, the State Bank of Pakistan ("SBP") in exercise of its powers under Section 41 of the Banking Companies Ordinance, 1962 has framed the Anti-Money Laundering and Combating the Financing of Terrorism (AML/CFT) Regulations for Banks and DFIs ("Regulations") (revised and issued on 13.09.2012). These Regulations, inter alia, aim to establish the source of wealth/funds of certain specific persons who are customers of Banks and DFIs and include Politically Exposed Persons ("PEPs"), a term that is defined to include Judges:

"PART - A

DEFINITIONS

For the purposes of these regulations-

..

27) "Politically Exposed Persons or PEPs" are individuals who are entrusted with prominent public functions either domestically or by a foreign country, or in an international organization, for example Heads of State or of government, senior politicians, senior government, judicial or military officials, senior executives of state owned corporations/ departments/autonomous bodies."

(emphasis supplied)

Regulation 1(30) of Part B requires Banks and DFIs to undertake enhanced precautionary measures in relation to PEPs and their family members. For ease of reference, this provision is produced hereinbelow:

"PART-B

REGULATIONS

.

Politically Exposed Persons (PEPs)

30. In relation to PEPs and their close associates or family members, banks/DFIs shall:

(a) implement appropriate internal policies, procedures and controls to determine if a customer or beneficial owner is a PEP;

(b) obtain approval from the bank's senior management to establish or continue business relations where the customer or a beneficial owner is a PEP or subsequently becomes a PEP;

(c) establish, by appropriate means, the sources of wealth or beneficial ownership of funds; including obtaining a self-declaration to this effect; and

(d) conduct during the course of business relations, enhanced monitoring of business relations with the customer."

(emphasis supplied)

Since the scope of the term 'family member' was vague and required clarification, the same was subsequently defined in the Regulations (updated version dated 30.09.2020):

"PART - B

DEFINITIONS

For the purposes of these regulations-

.

28) "Family member of a PEP" includes-

(a) spouse of the PEP; and

(b) lineal descendants and ascendants of the PEP and siblings of PEP."

(emphasis supplied)

22. The rationale behind treating family members as PEPs and subjecting them to the same enhanced precautionary measures can be gathered from the Financial Action Task Force Guidance for PEPs (June 2013):

"52. The FATF Recommendations require that family members and close associates of PEPs should be determined to be PEPs because of the potential for abuse of the relationship for the purpose of moving the proceeds... or facilitating their placement..."

The fiduciary obligations cast upon public office holders/public servants are also enshrined since long in the Federal and Provincial laws of the country. These make public servants liable for the unexplained assets of their family members. The earliest extant law on the subject is the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 ("PCA 1947"). Section 5(1) (e) of the said Act sets out the nature and extent of substantive obligations imposed on public servants vis a vis their dependent family members:

"5. (1) A public servant is said to commit the offence of criminal misconduct[:]

...

(e) If he, or any of his dependants, is in possession, for which the public servant cannot reasonably account, of pecuniary resources or of property disproportionate to his known sources of income.

Explanation: In this clause, "dependant" in relation to a public servant, means, his wife, children and step-children, parents, sisters and minor brothers residing with and wholly dependent on him."

(emphasis supplied)

Similar liability is also attached to public office holders in respect of their dependents or benamidars in the National Accountability Bureau Ordinance, 1999 ("NAB Ordinance"). The relevant portion is produced below:

"9. A holder of a public office, or any other person, is said to commit or to have committed the offence of corruption and corrupt practices:-

.

(v) If he or any of his dependents or benamidars owns, possesses, or has or has acquired right or title in any assets or holds irrevocable power of attorney in respect of any assets or pecuniary resources disproportionate to his known sources of income, which he cannot reasonably account for or maintains a standard of living beyond that which is commensurate with his sources of income;..."

(emphasis supplied)

23. The NAB Ordinance and PCA 1947 are not applicable to Superior Court Judges by virtue of the judgment in Khan Asfandyar Wali v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2001 SC 607). Nevertheless, the legal tests and standards applied to other holders of public office/public servants under these laws can be utilised by the SJC to evaluate the conduct of Judges. In fact, previous removal proceedings conducted against Judges confirm this approach. Reference is made to the decision in The State v. Mr. Justice Akhlaque Hussain (PLD 1960 SC (Pak) 26) in which this Court adjudicated on a charge of tax evasion levelled against a High Court Judge and recommended his removal thereon. Likewise, in The President v. Mr. Justice Shaukat Ali (PLD 1971 SC 585) the SJC applied the principles of Company Law to recommend the removal of a High Court Judge in respect of allegations that he was involved in activities of trade and industry. Similar examples are also available in foreign jurisdictions such as India and Canada:

i. Justice Soumitra Sen of Calcutta High Court was charged with appropriating around Rs.33 lacs as a Court appointed receiver in 1993. He was found guilty by an Inquiry Committee constituted by the Chairman of Rajya Sabha on 10.09.2010. He later resigned.

(<https://rajyasabha.nic.in/rsnew/judges_inquiry/> report_judges_enqury_english.pdf)

ii Justice Michel Girouard of the Superior Court of Quebec was charged with (amongst other allegations) allegedly purchasing approximately one kilo of cocaine between the years 1987-1992. While he was cleared of this charge on 18.11.2015 ("First Inquiry") by the Inquiry Committee, he was on 20.02.2018, in a Second Inquiry, recommended for removal by both the Inquiry Committee and the Canadian Judicial Council for giving false and deceitful evidence in the First Inquiry (ref: Canadian Judicial Council website). He later resigned.

24. It becomes clear from these illustrations that although Judges may be protected from the ordinary processes of law, they are not subject to separate or lower legal standards of accountability compared to other public servants. They are answerable at the bare minimum against the same benchmarks applied to ordinary public servants. This includes being accountable for the unexplained assets of their spouses and family members. The only difference is that a Judge of a Superior Court is answerable before a specialised forum created specifically for determining complaints of misconduct received against Judges. That SJC is one such forum was affirmed in the Khan Asfandyar Wali case (supra):

" ...The Supreme Judicial Council is a unique institution, which comprises the senior most Judges in judicial hierarchy and [is] entrusted with the onerous responsibility of deciding complaints [against Judges] that are referred to it... As held in the case of Zafar Ali Shah (supra), the Judges of the Superior Courts are not immune from accountability. They are accountable only in the manner laid down under Article 209 of the Constitution."

(emphasis supplied)

To treat, at the very least, Superior Court Judges on par with other public servants is not exceptional. In the Asghar Khan case (supra) Judges were declared to be in the Service of Pakistan (para 78). This is because Judges occupy an office 'in connection with the affairs of the Federation,' a phrase which has been defined by the Court in Salahuddin v. Frontier Sugar Mills and Distillery Ltd.(PLD 1975 SC 244) to mean:

> "Now, what is meant by the phrase "performing functions in connection with the affairs of the Federation or a Province." It is clear that the reference is to governmental or state functions, involving, in one form or another, an element of exercise of public power..."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

25. Taking this analysis a step further, the Detailed Reasons also examined the features of public office and held that Judges in addition to being in the Service of Pakistan were also public servants:

> "83. ...there are five main ingredients present in the office of a public servant. These are:
>
> a. The office is a trust conferred for a public purpose;
>
> b. The functions of the office are conferred by law;
>
> c. The office involves the exercise of a portion of the sovereign functions of Government whether that be executive, legislative or judicial;
>
> d. The term and tenure of the office are determined by law; and
>
> e. Remuneration is paid from public funds.
>
> 84. When the office of a Judge of the Supreme Court is scrutinised against these ingredients, it becomes obvious that Judges of this Court are indeed public servants. Their office is created by the Constitution and so are the jurisdiction and powers that they possess. They perform an essential governmental function: the administration of justice for the benefit of the public at large. They have a fixed tenure, prescribed by Article 179 of the Constitution and their emoluments are paid from the Federal Consolidated Fund under Article 81 of the Constitution. As a result, there is no doubt that a Judge of the Supreme Court is a public servant for the purposes of Section 216(3)(p) of the [Income Tax] Ordinance..."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

26. In the present case, it is admitted that the three London Properties belong to Mrs. Isa and her children; that two of the Properties, namely, 40 Oakdale Road and 90 Adelaide Road, were purchased in 2013 when the learned petitioner was holding the public office of Chief Justice of the Balochistan High Court; and that the said Properties were undeclared in the wealth statements of Mrs. Isa and the learned petitioner. In these circumstances, the non-disclosure of the London Properties causes suspicion and trepidation. More so when one views Sections 11(5) and 111(1)(d) of the Ordinance which mandate since the promulgation of the Ordinance [in the case of Section 11(5)] and 2011 [in the case of Section 111(1)(d)] that the income of a resident person includes both his domestic and foreign income and the failure to disclose the same renders a resident person liable to pay the tax evaded:

> "11. Heads of Income.--
>
> ....
>
> (5) The income of a resident person under a head of income shall be computed by taking into account amounts that are Pakistan-source income and amounts that are foreign-source income.
>
> 111. Unexplained Income or Assets.---(1) Where--
>
> (a) ...
>
> (b) a person has made any investment or is the owner of any money or valuable article;
>
> (c) ...
>
> (d) any person has concealed income or furnished inaccurate particulars of income including...
>
> and the person offers no explanation about the nature and source of the... investment, money, valuable article... suppression of... any amount chargeable to tax and of any item of receipt liable to tax or the explanation offered by the person is not, in the Commissioner's opinion, satisfactory the... value of the investment, money, value of the article... or any amount chargeable to tax or of any item of receipt liable to tax shall be included in the person's income chargeable to tax under head "Income from Other Sources to the extent it is not adequately explained."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

27. Therefore, in such circumstances a question to the learned petitioner about the source of funding of these Properties is natural, relevant and lawful, notwithstanding any procedural lapses committed by the respondents in the preparation of the Reference. That question must not be bypassed because being in the Service of Pakistan, the learned petitioner remains answerable for the unaccounted assets of his spouse. No satisfactory reasoning was put forward by any review petitioner on why no standards of accountability or separate or lower ones should apply to Judges (who also fall in the category of public servants) and why the SJC should wait for a final determination by the relevant statutory authorities before processing an information received against a Judge on this score.

28. Indeed, it is of vital importance that public office holders, particularly Judges of the Superior Courts, serving the people of Pakistan remain answerable before their relevant forums to safeguard the integrity and credibility of their person as well as of their Court. As custodians of the Constitution and the guardian of peoples' fundamental rights [ref: Corruption in Hajj Arrangements in 2010 (PLD 2011 SC 963) at para 20] the Courts try people and hold them accountable according to the Constitution and the law. Their judicial orders are accepted and obeyed by the people for their trust in the Courts' moral authority which is dependent upon the personal rectitude of the Judges. If aspersions cast against Judges on the basis of admitted facts are not dispelled, the said moral authority of the Courts is eroded and the execution of their primary function, namely, to decide the peoples' rights and obligations in accordance with the Constitution and the law becomes severely undermined.

29. The obligation on Judges to be transparent in their conduct is also exemplified in the Code of Conduct for Judges of the Supreme Court and High Court ("CoC") issued by the SJC under Article 209(8) of the Constitution which calls upon Superior Court Judges 'to present before the public an image of justice of the nation.' It is further provided that a Judge must possess 'the highest qualities of intellect and character' and 'keep his conduct in all things, official and private, free from impropriety.' Recalling para 38 of the Detailed Reasons (reproduced above in para 20) it is only fair that Judges conduct themselves in a manner that demonstrates exemplary behaviour for the people to emulate. Consequently, when a Judge and/or his spouse admit to acquiring undisclosed foreign assets and there is an element of indiscretion in their omission to declare the said assets, namely, a violation of the duty under Section 111 of the Ordinance and a failure to live up to the standard of propriety expected of Judges and their spouses under the CoC, an inquiry into the source of acquisition of the undeclared foreign assets serves the public interest and right which according to settled jurisprudence can prevail over the private rights of individuals. Reference is made to the decision in Pakistan Muslim League (N) v. Federation of Pakistan (PLD 2007 SC 642):

> "28. ...while "interpreting Fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution, a cardinal principle has always to be borne in mind that these guarantees to individuals are subject to the overriding necessity or interest of community. A balance has to be struck between these rights of individuals and the interests of the community. If in serving the interests of the community, an individual or number of individuals have to be put to some inconvenience and loss by placing restrictions on some of their rights guaranteed by the Constitution, the restrictions can never be considered to be unreasonable"..."
>
> (emphasis supplied)

30. This dictum was subsequently approved in Mohammad Imran v. Province of Sindh (2019 SCMR 1753) at para 49. Whilst these observations were made in the context of balancing the fundamental rights of individuals on the one hand and the interests of the community on the other, they apply with even greater force in the instant case as no fundamental right of either the learned petitioner or Mrs. Isa has been infringed by our direction to the FBR to investigate the nature and source of funding of the London Properties. This is because there is no fundamental right granted in the Constitution to public servants/ citizens to be immune from investigations into their financial affairs. In fact, Section 216(3)(p) of the Ordinance specifically allows such investigations. The only provision which is somewhat relevant to and applicable in the present scenario is Article 4(2)(a) of the Constitution which reads:

> "4. Right of Individuals to be dealt with in accordance with law, etc.

...

(2) In particular-

(a) no action detrimental to the... reputation or property of any person shall be taken except in accordance with law;"

However, as will be discussed later in the judgment our direction to the FBR to commence proceedings against Mrs. Isa does not adversely affect either her reputation or her property. Therefore, Article 4 ibid is not attracted to the facts of the instant case.

31. Further, during the hearing of Const. P. No. 17 of 2019, the learned petitioner himself on 17.06.2020 made an oral request on behalf of Mrs. Isa for addressing the Court. The request was granted. Thereafter, in her video link statement on 18.06.2020 (a transcript of which is available with the order sheet), Mrs. Isa expressly asked why she had not been questioned by the tax authorities when the Reference alleged her London Properties to be shrouded in controversy. The assertion that she could fully explain the source of funding of the Properties was implicit in her statement. Equally her stand acknowledged an obligation to justify the same. She also referred to her sources of income that apparently financed the purchase of the London Properties. This indicated that she was prepared for and inclined to answer questions about the London Properties. Therefore, in issuing the direction to the FBR to commence proceedings in respect of the London Properties, the Court was moved by two factors: firstly, that Mrs. Isa be given an opportunity to explain the source of funding of the London Properties so that any stigma surrounding them is erased from the person of the learned petitioner and the Court; and secondly, to redress Mrs. Isa's complaint as expressed in her video link statement of 18.06.2020 made before the Court that she should have, but had not, been asked about the Properties from the beginning:

"Judge: ...We understand and we can notice and realize you have a great deal of record showing accrual of income and transfer from your own account to your foreign account and then the purchase of foreign property... We have a little problem; we cannot look at the merits of the case. There are two forums available. Your Hon'ble husband has in his pleadings indicated that this is a matter which should go to the tax authorities but it is a matter concerning your interest and your records; that is one option; and this is something we told the parties two days ago. The second thing is that another forum which is competent to hear you; and I assure you, you will be given a most sympathetic hearing, each and every document you say, will be considered, preserved... And that is the Supreme Judicial Council; you can make the statement there...

Mrs. Isa: Why has no one asked me this from the beginning? Why has the FBR not contacted me: I have waited and waited; 13 months of hell they have put us through; my family and I... I have requested as my husband has, please ask us from the beginning[.] Why after 13 months are you then saying then there are these two forum? Why were we not asked at the beginning...

Judge: We understand what you are saying but even this plea is on the merits. We cannot consider it... but now we will make sure that they will attend to you, they will not be derisory as your husband complained yesterday; they will respect you; they will consider all the documents you have and all this issue of limitation etc. that is something which has to be dealt with in accordance with law...

Judge: ... The point is Madam that we do not have jurisdiction to hear the dispute on merits; and for the Courts of law, jurisdiction is fundamental... Now we don't, we cannot give a finding that you have adequate funds or inadequate funds. These are matters which have to be decided by competent authorities so we are grateful that you came before us."

(emphasis supplied)

32. The above-quoted extracts demonstrate that it was made clear to Mrs. Isa that the Court could not decide her case on merits and that the competent authority, whether it be the FBR or the SJC, had the jurisdiction to determine the factual issue of source of funding along with all other ancillary matters. Ultimately, the decision was made to refer the matter to the FBR for reasons already set out in the Majority Judgment:

"138. ...Our decision to take such a step was primarily based on two grounds: to establish that Judges of the Superior Court are answerable for allegations casting aspersions not only on their personal integrity but also on the integrity of the institution; and to honour the petitioner's plea that the allegation of absence of source of funds and money laundering must be first put to Mrs. Isa who is an independent taxpayer.

...

142. Rather than allowing the disturbing allegation against the petitioner and his family to circulate and attract innuendos thereby injuring the reputation and integrity of both the petitioner and this Court, we adopted the fair, impartial and transparent route of allowing Mrs. Isa and her children to disclose the source of their funds to the relevant authorities, namely, the FBR. Such a transparent course of action is consistent with the CoC, the maintenance of institutional integrity and the image of Judges as the neutral and independent arbiters of law and justice... every public office holder including Judges of the Superior Courts, officers of the armed forces, elected representatives and public servants are accountable under the law. Indeed, neither the institution of the judiciary nor the other institutions of Pakistan can tolerate a contrary perception...

143. It may be mentioned here that our decision to refer the matter for verification to the FBR grants the petitioner's plea from the very start of the proceedings that his wife and children should be asked about their source of funds for the acquisition of the London Properties. This was reiterated by learned counsel for the petitioner during arguments. He submitted that a determination by the tax authorities was essential to ensure that the due process rights of the petitioner and his family under Article 10A of the Constitution were not violated. Mrs. Isa also adopted a similar stance in her statement, given through video link, on 18.06.2020 to the Court. To our minds the FBR being the premier tax authority in Pakistan is the most well equipped to deal with questions of a financial nature. It not only maintains the complete tax records of taxpayers, including those of Mrs. Isa's, but also employs personnel who are well-versed in comprehending and analysing financial and tax records."

(emphasis supplied)

Consequently, having herself demanded why the FBR had not approached her regarding the London Properties, Mrs. Isa cannot now take the contradictory plea that a direction to the FBR to this effect is contrary to law.

33. The next issue which was briefly touched upon during arguments was whether the FBR was even competent to inquire into the London Properties since a period of five years and more had elapsed from the date of purchase of the London Properties. Since this matter directly pertains to the application of the Ordinance to the merits of this case the Court cannot examine it (refer to previous para). This plea therefore also fails.

34. A jurisdictional objection was then raised by Mrs. Isa. She specifically questioned how CIR, Islamabad could proceed against her when her Regional Tax Officer ("RTO") had been relocated to Karachi, as evidenced by the Court's order dated 03.02.2020. To understand why the order dated 03.02.2020 was passed and what it observed, the events that transpired on the previous day of hearing i.e., 29.01.2020 as recorded in the order sheet of that hearing may be examined first:

"...During the course of his [Mr. Salman Akram Raja's] submissions, it was pointed out that according to the newspaper reports Mrs.Faez Isa had recently approached the FBR in order to obtain information about her Income Tax file which had been transferred from Karachi to Islamabad. The FBR authorities did not lend any assistance in the matter...

...

3. In view of the above situation, we have asked the learned Additional Attorney General to verify the above from the FBR and to report on the next date of hearing."

It was against this background that the order dated 03.02.2020 made the following observation:

"2. In pursuance of our earlier order dated 29.01.2020... He [Attorney General] states that vide Notification No.F.No.7(l) Jurisdiction/2018-11922-R dated 30th January 2020, the FBR has redressed her [Mrs. Isa's] grievance and transferred back her RTO from Islamabad to Karachi. This order has been conveyed to the tax advisor of Mrs.Faez Isa."

35. It becomes clear from these two orders that the Court on 03.02.2020 did not decide the question of jurisdiction nor issued any direction in relation to the RTO who has jurisdiction to assess Mrs. Isa's tax matters. Instead, it merely noted the statement made by the then AG that the FBR had by executive action transferred Mrs. Isa's RTO back to Karachi from Islamabad. This was done to address her grievance. In the absence of a lawful determination by this Court that Mrs. Isa's RTO should be situated in Karachi, the Short Order dated 19.06.2020 cannot be criticised for contravening the order dated 03.02.2020. In any event, Mrs. Isa and her daughter are currently residing in Islamabad. However, there is some confusion regarding the correct home address of Mrs. Isa in Karachi (there appear to be two addresses on record but Mr. Munir A. Malik, counsel for the learned petitioner, submitted during arguments in Const. P. No. 17 of 2019 that one of the properties was sold off in 1997). Therefore, it was for their convenience and for the expeditious finalisation of the Chairman FBR's Report that the proceedings were ordered to be conducted in Islamabad. It may also be noted that the direction to CIR, Islamabad is consistent with Section 209(2) of the Ordinance. This provision authorises, inter alia, the FBR to confer on any Officer of the Inland Revenue the powers and functions of a Commissioner in respect of any person or classes of persons or areas.

36. Further, the Short Order makes it obvious that CIR, Islamabad has only been granted power to act for the limited purpose of enquiring about the London Properties and the source of funds used for purchasing the same:

"4. ...the concerned Commissioner of Inland Revenue shall himself... issue appropriate notices under the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 ("2001 Ordinance") to the spouse and children of the Petitioner to offer an explanation regarding the nature and source of the funds (separately for each property) whereby the three properties in the United Kingdom... were acquired. For purposes of this Order the Commissioner Inland Revenue having jurisdiction over the spouse of the Petitioner (who must be a Commissioner exercising jurisdiction and performing functions at Islamabad) shall be deemed also to be the Commissioner having jurisdiction over the children..."

(emphasis supplied)

Whether such a direction could have been issued is answered by Article 184(3) read with Article 187 of the Constitution. These Articles empower this Court to issue any directions necessary to do complete justice in a matter. It is settled law that the existence and exercise of the Court's power under the Constitution to issue directions is not dependent on express invocation of such power in its order. Not invoking the correct provision of law or citing an incorrect one for sustaining an order is of no consequence if the Court has jurisdiction under the law to pass that very order [ref: Olas Khan v. Chairman NAB (PLD 2018 SC 40) at para 10].

37. Finally, issue was taken with a presumed direction given to the SJC in the Short Order on account of the instruction to Secretary SJC to place the Chairman FBR's Report before the SJC. It was argued that the jurisdiction of the SJC had been infringed by taking away its discretion in deciding whether to initiate an inquiry against the learned petitioner. However, it seems that our Short Order has been misconstrued. No direction of any nature is issued to the SJC. In fact, the essence of the Short Order is that Mrs. Isa be given the opportunity to explain the facts to the FBR and the factual findings thereon be placed for the perusal of the SJC. Such process was meant to allay the disquiet of the learned petitioner and Mrs. Isa by securing a finding that settled the allegations levelled against the former. This is precisely why the Short Order simply notes that the Secretary SJC will place the Report of the Chairman FBR before the Chairman SJC for the perusal of SJC. Thereafter, it was for the SJC to act as it deemed appropriate in the matter. Therefore, it is wrong to suggest that the Court has bound the SJC to investigate the learned petitioner. This was also made clear in para 145 of the Detailed Reasons:

"145. ...However, it is reiterated that our short order dated 19.06.2020 merely issues a direction to the Chairman FBR and in no way obliges the SJC to take any action based on the report. The SJC may do so of its own volition if it considers that the report justifies any action against the petitioner. But it may also file the report if it finds that the same contains no substance/merit..."

(emphasis supplied)

Therefore, the objection regarding encroachment on the SJC's jurisdiction is unfounded. Moreover, it fails to disclose any error apparent on the face of the record justifying interference with the Majority Judgment.

B. No Hearing given to Mrs. Isa

38. A strong grievance was next voiced by the review petitioners against the Short Order dated 19.06.2020 for allegedly exposing Mrs. Isa to scrutiny by a tax forum without giving her a hearing. At the very outset such a plea is legally unsound because on the facts of the present case, the allegation that Mrs. Isa was not given a hearing (or was given an inadequate hearing) is inconsequential. This is because the Short Order is not adverse in nature. It did not affect the person, property or any other right of Mrs. Isa. Instead, it only asked the FBR to initiate proceedings to verify her sources of funding the London Properties. Indeed, it has always been the case of the learned petitioner that before the SJC can commence any proceedings against him for alleged misconduct, Mrs. Isa should in the first instance be asked to explain her independent source of funds used for acquiring the London Properties. We accepted this proposition of the learned petitioner and observed in the Detailed Reasons that:

"120. ...However, to establish the source of funds for the acquisition of the London Properties, the requirements of due process under Article 4 and Article 10A of the Constitution mandate that the first person concerned, namely, Mrs. Isa ought to be given an opportunity to explain her sources of funding for the London Properties and the reasons for not declaring such properties in her wealth statement. Without granting such opportunity, the framing of the Reference against the petitioner was premature, hypothetical and impulsive. Accordingly, even this allegation against the petitioner is entirely presumptive."

(emphasis supplied)

39. Hence, any right to be heard that accrued to Mrs. Isa was in the FBR proceedings because the outcome thereof could have either exonerated her or adversely affected her property and reputation [ref: University of Dacca v. Zakir Ahmed (PLD 1965 SC 90) at pg. 103]. The only scenario in which the review petitioners' demand for a comprehensive hearing by the Court would have carried weight was if our Short Order had been dispositive of the merits or substantially affected the outcome of the proceedings before the FBR [Regina (G) v. Governors of X School ([2012] 1 AC 167) at para 69]. The same view has been reiterated in Halsbury's Laws of England (Volume 61A, 2018):

"40. ...The rule [to be heard] generally applies, at least with full force, only to conduct leading directly to a final act or decision, and not to the making of a preliminary decision or to an investigation designed to obtain information for the purpose of a report or a recommendation on which a subsequent decision may be founded. However, the nature of an inquiry or a provisional decision may be such as to give rise to a reasonable expectation that persons prejudicially affected should be afforded an opportunity to put their case at that stage; and it may be unfair not to require the inquiry to be conducted in a judicial spirit if its outcome is likely to expose a person to a legal hazard or other substantial prejudice."

(emphasis supplied)

Even this Court, after reviewing the relevant case-law, held in Commissioner of Income Tax v. Media Network (PLD 2006 SC 787):

"26. The rules of natural justice are not inflexible. They yield to and change with the exigencies of different situations. They do not apply in the same manner to situations which are not alike. These rules are not cast in a rigid mould nor can they be put in a legal strait-jacket. They are not immutable but flexible... Depending upon the facts and circumstances of each case, there is no mandatory requirement of natural justice that in every case the other side must be given a notice before > preliminary steps are taken. It might suffice if reasonable opportunity of hearing is granted to a person before an adverse action or decision is taken against him. However, it is not possible to lay down an absolute rule of universal application governing all situations as to the exclusion or otherwise of the audi alteram partem rule during the course of preliminary inquiries or investigations."

>
> (emphasis supplied)

40. It is restated that the heart of the controversy in the present case is about the consequences of Mrs. Isa's non-declaration of her foreign assets. Therefore, referring her case to the FBR for verification and scrutiny was wholly in accordance with the scheme of the Ordinance (refer to Section 111 (1) of the Ordinance, reproduced in para 26). In no way did the direction to the FBR determine or influence the outcome of the proceedings which were to be conducted under the Ordinance by a CIR who was duly authorised. Such proceedings before a statutory authority were completely independent and separate from the proceedings held before the Court under Article 184(3) of the Constitution. Therefore, the contention of the review petitioners that Mrs. Isa was not granted a hearing by the Court is baseless and does not disclose any error apparent on the face of the record.

